Hand-book for travellers in France. Being a guide to Normandy, Brittany, the rivers Loire, Seine, Rhone and Garonne, the French Alps, Dauphiné, Provence and the Pyrenees : with descriptions of the principal routes, railways, the approaches to Italy, the chief watering places, etc / [Anon].

Contributors

John Murray (Firm)
Murray, John, 1808-1892.

Publication/Creation

London : J. Murray, 1843.

Persistent URL

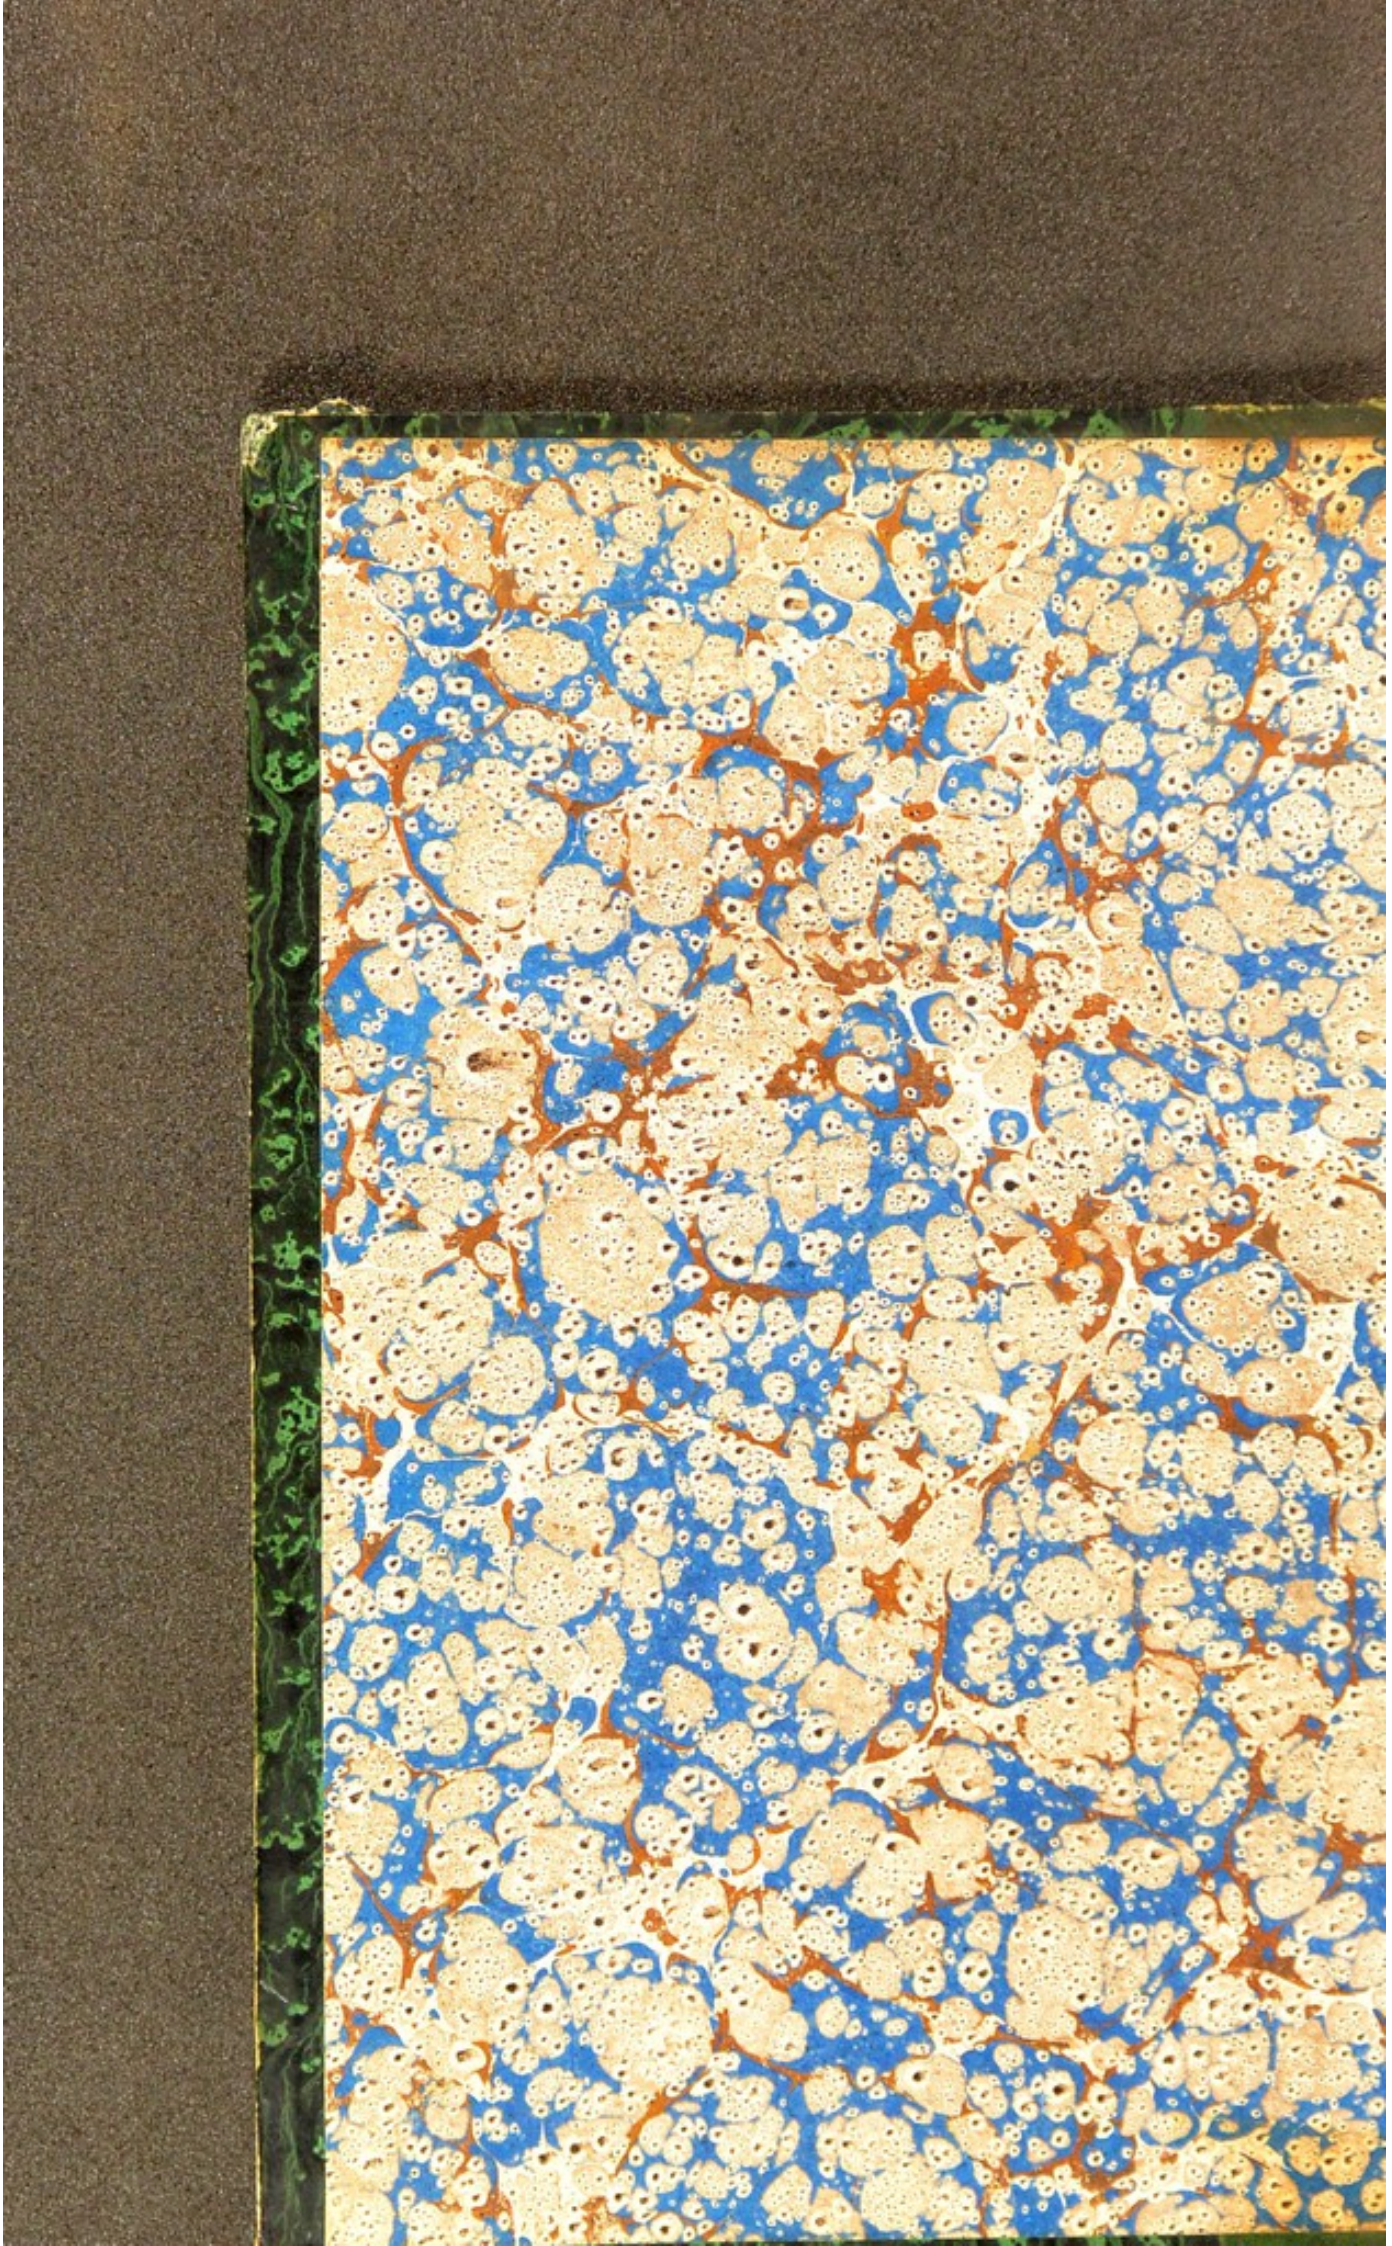
https://wellcomecollection.org/works/f65bs5ee

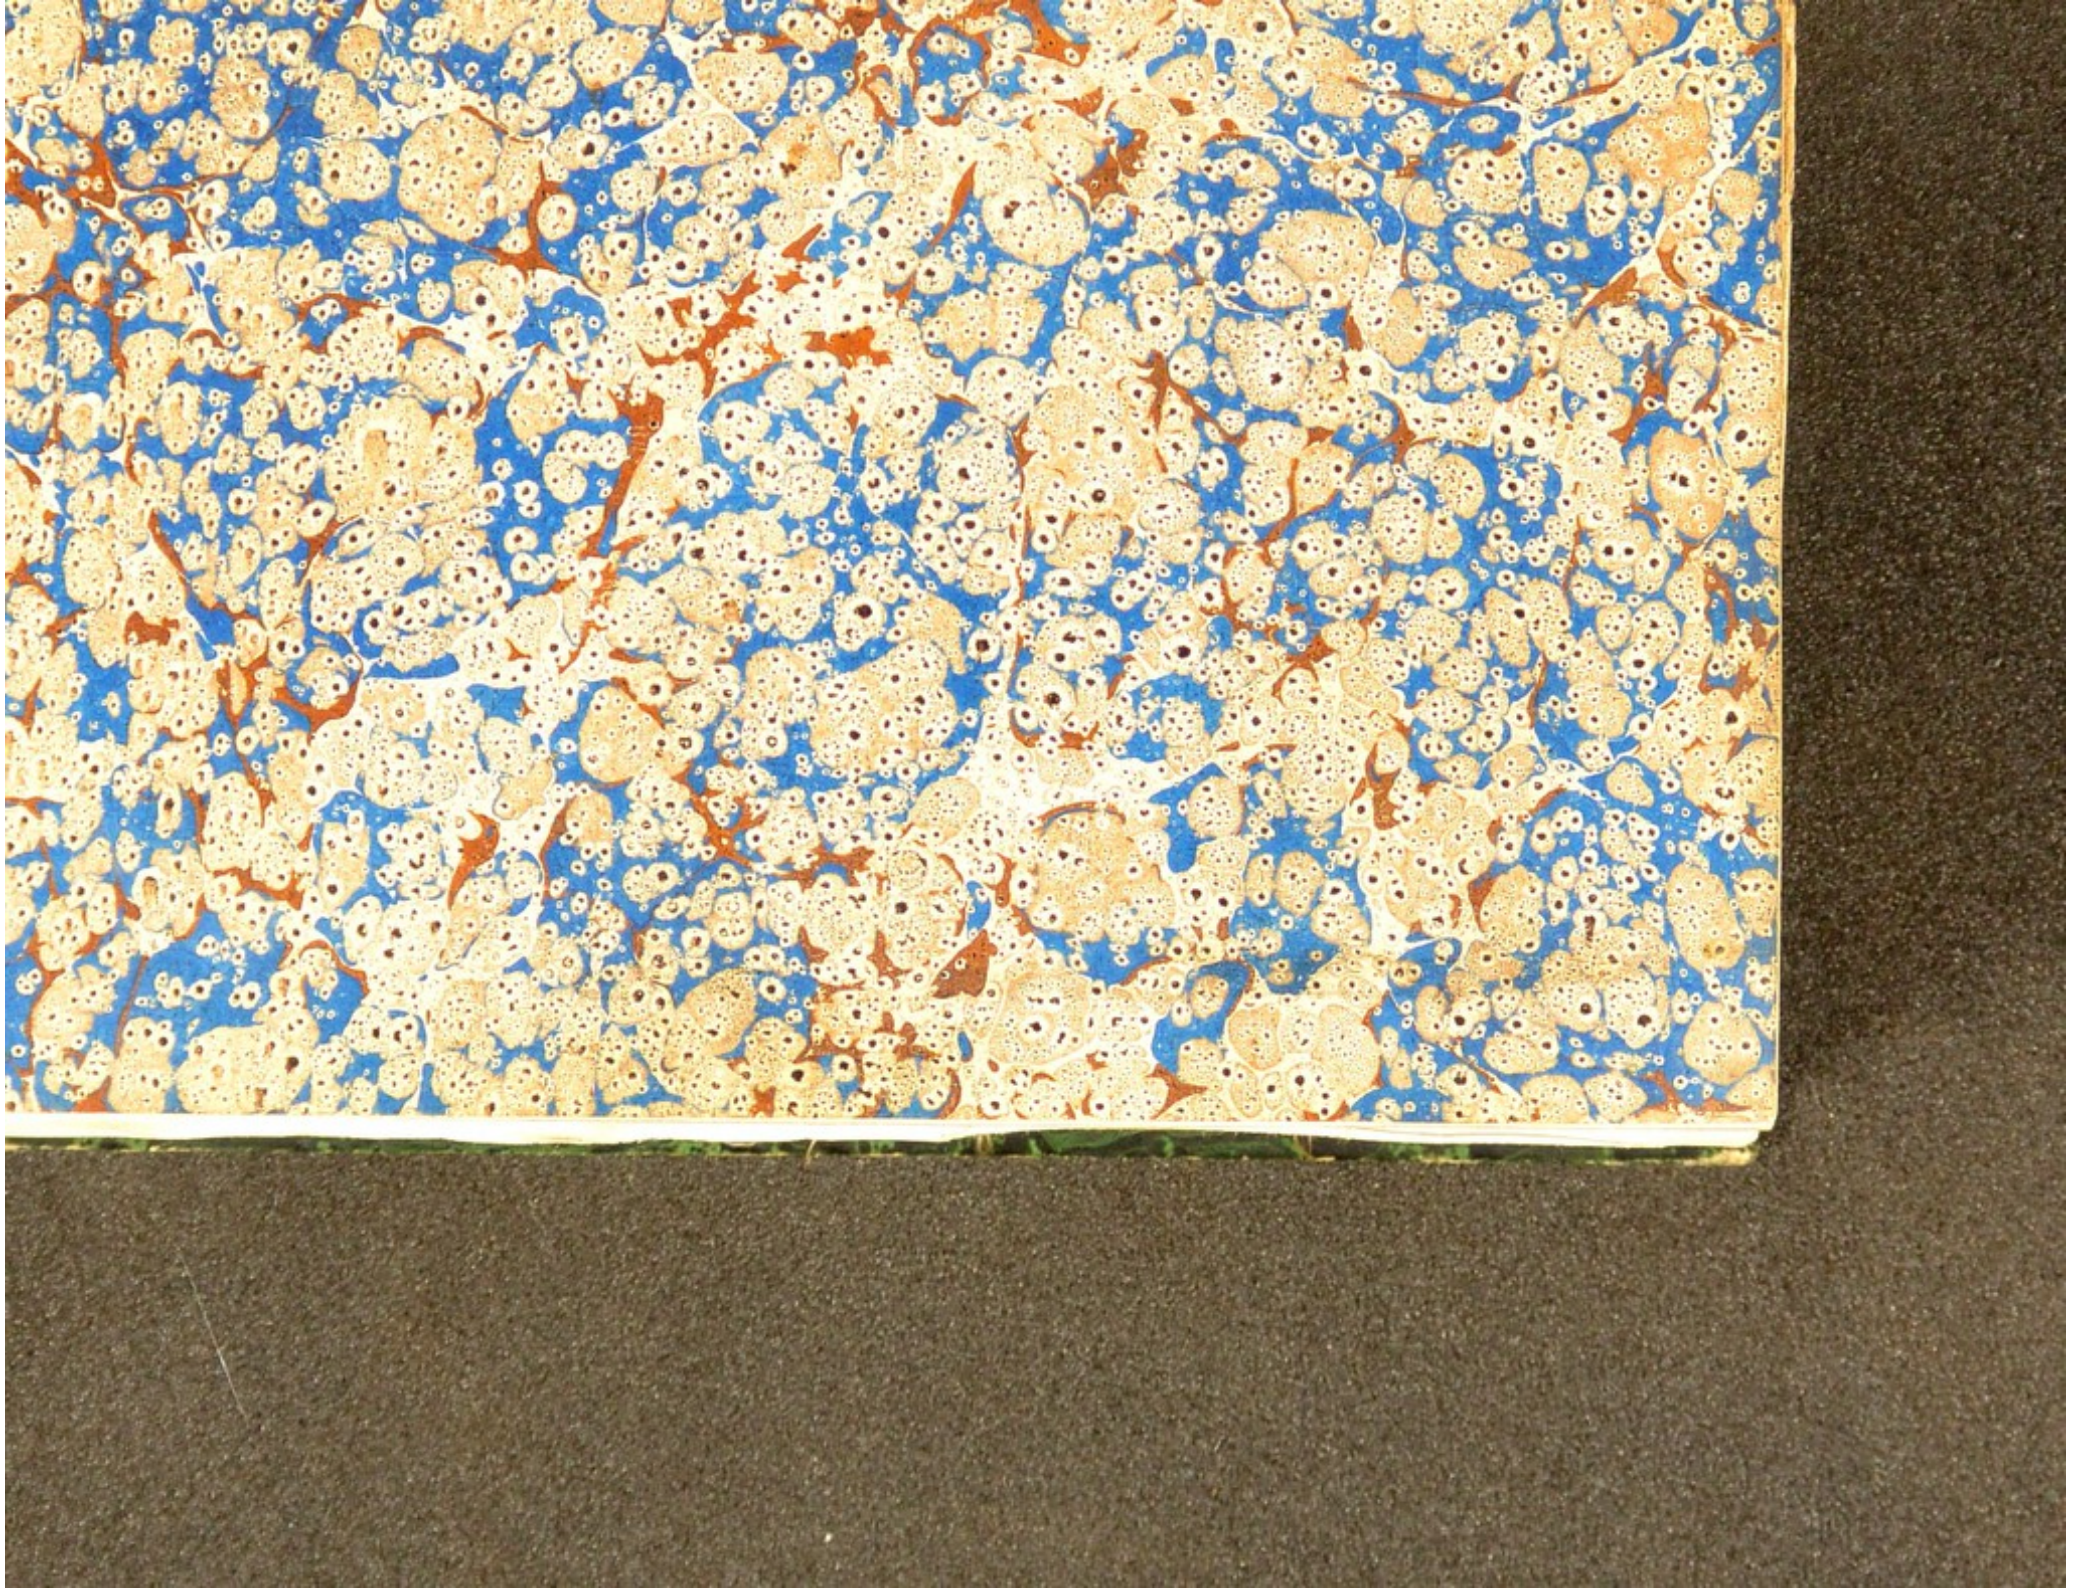
License and attribution

This work has been identified as being free of known restrictions under copyright law, including all related and neighbouring rights and is being made available under the Creative Commons, Public Domain Mark.

You can copy, modify, distribute and perform the work, even for commercial purposes, without asking permission.

Wellcome Collection
183 Euston Road
London NW1 2BE UK
T +44 (0)20 7611 8722
E library@wellcomecollection.org
https://wellcomecollection.org





38111/A

A

HAND-BOOK

FOR

TRAVELLERS IN FRANCE.

NOTICE TO THIS EDITION.

The Editor of the Hand-book for Travellers in France requests that travellers who may, in the use of the Work, detect any faults or omissions which they can correct from personal knowledge, will have the kindness to mark them down on the spot and communicate to him a notice of the same, favouring him at the same time with their names—addressed to the care of Mr. Murray, Albemarle Street. They may be reminded that by such communications they are not merely furnishing the means of improving the Hand-book, but are contributing to the benefit, information, and comfort of future travellers in general.

 No attention can be paid to letters from innkeepers in praise of their own houses; and the postage of them is so onerous that they cannot be received.

Caution to Travellers. — By a recent Act of Parliament, the introduction into England of foreign pirated Editions of the works of British authors, in which the copyright subsists, is totally prohibited. Travellers will therefore bear in mind that even a single copy is contraband, and is liable to seizure at the English Custom-house.

Caution to Innkeepers and others.—The Editor of the Hand-books has learned from various quarters that a person or persons have of late been extorting money from innkeepers, tradespeople, artists, and others, on the Continent, under pretext of procuring recommendations and favourable notices of them and their establishments in the Hand-books for Travellers. The Editor, therefore, thinks proper to warn all whom it may concern, that recommendations in the Hand-books are not to be obtained by purchase, and that the persons alluded to are not only unauthorised by him, but are totally unknown to him. All those, therefore, who put confidence in such promises, may rest assured that they will be defrauded of their money without attaining their object.—1843.

London:—Printed by A. Spottiswoode, New-Street-Square.

A. E. White 79035.
1844

HAND-BOOK

FOR

TRAVELLERS IN FRANCE:

BEING

A GUIDE

TO

NORMANDY, BRITTANY;

THE RIVERS LOIRE, SEINE, RHONE, AND GARONNE;

THE FRENCH ALPS, DAUPHINÉ, PROVENCE,

AND THE PYRENEES:

WITH

DESCRIPTIONS OF THE PRINCIPAL ROUTES, RAILWAYS, THE APPROACHES TO ITALY,
THE CHIEF WATERING PLACES, ETC.

WITH FIVE TRAVELLING MAPS.

LONDON:
JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.
A. & W. GALIGNANI & CO., STASSIN AND XAVIER, PARIS.
LONGMAN, LEIPSIG.

1843.

THE ENGLISH EDITIONS OF THE HAND-BOOKS FOR TRAVELLERS ARE PUBLISHED

In France, at

AMIENS	BY CARON.
AVRANCHES	. . LANCHARD LESJARDINS.
BAYONNE	. . JAYMEBON.
BORDEAUX	. . CHAUMAS; LAWALLE.
BOULOGNE	. . WATEL.
BREST	. . HEBERT.
CAEN	. . AVONDE; MANCEL.
CALAIS	. . LEROY.
DIEPPE	. . MARAIS.
DINANT	. . COSTE.
DUNKERQUE	. . LEYSCHOCHART.
GRENOBLE	. . VELLOT ET COMP.
HAVRE	. . HONDAILLE.
LILLE	. . LEFORT.
LYONS	. . BOHAIRE.
MARSEILLES	. . CAMOIN; MASVERT; CHAIX.
METZ	. . WARION.
MONTPELLIER	BY LEVALLE.
NANCI	. . GRIMBLOT & RAYBOIS.
NANTES	. . BUROLEAU; SEBE`RE.
ORLEANS	. . GATINEAU; RESTY.
PARIS	. . GALIGNANI; STASSIN & XAVIER.
PAU	. . MARKHAM.
PERPIGNAN	. . JULIA FRE`RES.
REIMS	. . BRESSART PERSON.
ROUEN	. . LEBRUMENT.
ST. MALO	. . HUE.
STRASBURG	. . LEVRAULT; LAGIER.
TOULON	. . MONGE ET VILLAME'S.
TOULOUSE	. . GALLON; H. LEBON.
TOURS	. . AIGRE; BONTE'.
TROYES	. . LALOY.

In Germany, Holland, and Belgium, at

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE	BY I. D. MAYER, L. KOHNEN.
AMSTERDAM	. . J. MULLER.
BADEN-BADEN	. . D. R. MARX.
BERLIN	. . A. DUNCKER.
BRUSSELS	. . C. MUQUARDT.
CARLSRUHE	. . CREUZBAUER & CO., AND A. BIELEFELD.
COBLENTZ	. . BAEDEKER.
COLOGNE	. . L. KOHNEN.
DRESDEN	. . ARNOLD.
FRANKFURT	. . C. JUGEL; F. WILMANS.
GRATZ	. . DAMIAN & SORGE.
HAMBURG	. . PERTHES, BESSER, & MAUKE.
HEIDELBERG	. . J. C. B. MOHR.
LEIPZIG	. . T. O. WEIGEL.
MANNHEIM	BY ARTARIA & FONTAINE.
MAYENCE	. . V. ZABERN.
MILAN	. . TENDLER & SCHAEFER.
MUNICH	. . LITERARISCH-ARTISTISCHE ANSTALT & I. PALM.
NURNBERG	. . CAMPE.
PESTH	. . HARTLEBEN & G. HECKENAST.
PRAGUE	. . CALVE.
ROTTERDAM	. . A. BAEDEKER; MRS. KRAP.
STUTTGART	. . P. NEFF.
TURIN	. . GIANNINI & FIORI; J. BOCCA.
VIENNA	. . BRAUMULLER & SEIDEL; C. GEROLD; P. ROHRMAN; SCHAUMBURG & CO.

In Italy, at

ANCONA	BY
BOLOGNA	. . M. RUSCONI, FRE`RES.
BERGAMO	. .
BRESCIA	. .
FLORENCE	. . JOS. MOLINI.
GENOA	. . ANTOINE BEUT.
LEGHORN	. . NICHOLAS NICHOLAI GAMBA.
LUCCA	. . F. BARON.
MALTA	. . MURE.
MANTUA	. . MM. NEGRETTI, FRE`RES.
MILAN	. . ARTARIA F. FUSI, MM. DUMOLARD & FILS.
MODENA	. . VINCENZI & ROSSI.
NICE	BY SOCIE'TE' TYPOGRAPHIQUE.
NAPLES	. . CARLO BATELLI & CO.
PALERMO	. . M. CHARLES BEUT.
PARMA	. . J. ZANGHIERI.
PISA	. . NISTRI, FRE`RES; JOS. VANNUCCHI.
PERUGIA	. . VINCENZ. BARTELLI.
ROME	. . VENANZIO MONALDINI, M. MERLE.
SIENNA	. . ONORATO TORRI.
TURIN	. . GIANNINI & FIORI, J. BOCCA.
VENICE	. . ANTOINE BARZARINI. Libreria Giustinianea.

In Switzerland, at

AARAU	BY SAUERLAENDER.
BASLE	. . SCHREIBER & WATZ.
BERN	. . HUBER & CO.
CONSTANCE	. . GLUCKER.
FREIBURG	. . HERDER.
ST. GALLEN	. . HUBER.
GENEVA	. . BIRD; KESSMANN.
LAUSANNE	. . GERS.
LUCERNE	. . MEYER.
MÜHLHAUSEN	BY ENGELMANN.
ROTWEIL	. . HERDER.
SCHAFFHAUSEN	. . HURTER.
SOLEURE	. . REUTER.
STRASBURG	. . TREUTTELL & WURTZ.
THUR	. . GRUBENMANN.
WINTERTHUR	. . STEINER.
ZURICH	. . H. FÜSSLI & CO.

WELLCOME HISTORICAL MEDICAL LIBRARY

PREFACE

THE Hand-book for France is the resu nies undertaken at different times betwe the editor has covered the ground wit described from personal observation, e to St. Jean de Luz; from Toulon and Grenoble and the Grande Chartreuse
Aurillac to the Port de Venasque; a
Mt. St. Michel to Briançon and En almost entire circuit of France. But intensities have been left to be fill information; and that so meagre in dant and scattered in others, that t ing of the materials has been a work
The materials, indeed, for describing a far more scanty than those which pr many and Switzerland, and the write has, in the following pages, laid down ought is to be found in French guides mit to mention the admirable guides which he has derived essential infor extend to nearly twenty volumes, the part of France, and only portions of th to interest English travellers. For th glish; and if any French readers th must not be surprised to find many d and doubtless many errors, not a few discernible by the Editor's own coun the statement of facts he has avoid that he has set down nought in such

WELLCOME HISTORICAL MEDICAL LIBRARY

PREFACE.

THE Hand-book for France is the result of four or five journies undertaken at different times between 1830 and 1841, and the editor has covered the ground with a network of routes described from personal observation, extending from Dunkirk to St. Jean de Luz; from Toulon and Hyères to Brest; from Grenoble and the Grande Chartreuse through Aubenas and Aurillac to the Port de Venasque; and from Cherbourg and Mt. St. Michel to Briançon and Embrun, and including the almost entire circuit of France. But in so vast a field many interstices have been left to be filled up by the best printed information; and that so meagre in some respects, so abundant and scattered in others, that the collecting and arranging of the materials has been a work of very serious labour. The materials, indeed, for describing a large part of France are far more scanty than those which present themselves for Germany and Switzerland, and the writer may fairly say, that he has, in the following pages, laid down routes of which no account is to be found in French guides. It would be unjust to omit to mention the admirable guides of Vaysse de Villiers, from which he has derived essential information; but though they extend to nearly twenty volumes, they comprise only a small part of France, and only portions of their contents are calculated to interest English travellers. For their use this volume is compiled; and if any French readers think fit to take it up, they must not be surprised to find many details well known to them, and doubtless many errors, not a few of which will be equally discernible by the Editor's own countrymen. He trusts that in the statement of facts he has avoided invidious comparisons, that he has set down nought in such a light as to cause prejudice against the French, or to encourage or perpetuate estrangement between the two nations.

The chapters into which the book is divided are arranged according to the ancient provinces, as being less minute, more historical, and better understood by English than the more intricate subdivisions of departments. Though the latter are universally used by the French themselves, some centuries must elapse before Champagne and Burgundy cease to be remembered for their wines, Périgord for its pies, and Provence for its oil; nor will it be easy to obliterate the recollection of William of Normandy, Margaret of Anjou, and Henri of Navarre.

This volume contains no description of Paris, because to have included the capital would have extended this book to nearly double its present size, and because the "Paris Guide of Galignanis" is a very good one, and renders the preparation of another for the present, at least, unnecessary.

CONTENTS.

Page

INTRODUCTORY INFORMATION - - - - - ix

SECT. I.

PICARDY. — ILE DE FRANCE. — NORMANDY.

Introductory Information - - - - - - 1

Routes - - - - - - - - 3

SECT. II.

BRITTANY.

Introductory Information - - - - - - 104

Routes - - - - - - - 109

SECT. III.

ORLEANOIS. — TOURAINE. — RIVER LOIRE. — LA VENDE'E — POITOU. — SAINTONGE.

Introductory Sketch of the Country - - - - 168

Routes - - - - - - - - 170

SECT. IV.

LIMOUSIN. — GASCONY. — GUIENNE. — THE PYRENEES. — NAVARRE — BEARN — LANGUEDOC. — ROUSILLON.

Preliminary Information - - - - - - 228

Routes - - - - - - - - 240

SECT. V.

CENTRAL FRANCE. — BERRI. — AUVERGNE. — VIVARAIS. — ARDECHE. — CANTAL. — BOURBONNAIS. — LYONNAIS. — THE CEVENNES.

General View of the Country - - - - - 346

Routes - - - - - - - - 350

SECT. VI.

PROVENCE AND LANGUEDOC.

General View of the Country - - - - - 429

Routes - - - - - - - - 432

Page

SECT. VII.

DAUPHINE'.

Introduction. — Sketch of the Country - - - - 491
Routes - - - - - - - - - 492

SECT. VIII.

BURGUNDY. — FRANCHE COMTE'.

Routes - - - - - - - - - 513

SECT. IX.

CHAMPAGNE. — LORRAINE. — ALSACE. — THE VOSGES MOUNTAINS.

Routes - - - - - - - - - 534

SECT. X.

ILE DE FRANCE. — FLANDRES. — ARTOIS.

Routes - - - - - - - - - 571
INDEX - - - - - - - - - 585

HAND-BOOK

FOR

TRAVELLERS IN FRANCE.

INTRODUCTORY INFORMATION.

CONTENTS.

		Page
a.	MONEY — TABLE OF FRENCH FRANCS REDUCED TO £ s. d.	x
b.	TABLES OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES . .	xii
	FRENCH FEET REDUCED TO ENGLISH FEET .	xiii
	,, MÈTRES — DO. .	xiv
	,, KILOMÈTRES, MYRIAMÈTRES — ENGLISH MILES AND FURLONGS	xiv
	,, LIEUES DE POSTE — DO. . .	xv
	,, TOISES — ENGLISH FEET .	xv
	,, KILOGRAMMES — ENGLISH POUNDS .	xvi
	,, POUNDS — DO. . .	xvi
	,, HECTARES — ENGLISH ACRES .	xvi
	,, "AUNES DE PARIS" — ENGLISH YARDS .	xvi
c.	PASSPORTS AND POLICE	xvi
d.	THE DIFFERENT ROUTES BETWEEN LONDON AND PARIS COMPARED	xix
e.	MODES OF TRAVELLING — POSTING AND TRAVELLING CARRIAGE .	xxi
f.	MALLE POSTES	xxiv
g.	DILIGENCES	xxv
h.	RAILROADS	xxvii
i.	STEAM-BOATS	xxviii
k.	INNS — TABLES-D'HÔTE, &c.	xxix
l.	CAFÉS	xxxi
m.	A TRAVELLER'S GENERAL VIEW OF FRANCE — POINTS OF INTEREST — SCENERY — ARCHITECTURE . .	xxxii
n.	LIST OF THE 86 DEPARTMENTS INTO WHICH FRANCE IS DIVIDED, AND OF THE 33 ANCIENT PROVINCES COMPOSING THEM	xxxvi
o.	THE ENGLISH ABROAD	xxxvii
p.	SKELETON TOUR THROUGH FRANCE . . .	xxxviii
q.	ROUTE AND TIME FROM LONDON TO MARSEILLES .	xxxix

a. MONEY.

In France, accounts are kept in francs and centimes (or hundred parts) the coinage being arranged on the decimal system, 1 franc contains 10 decimes (or sous), and each decime 10 centimes.

FRENCH MONEY.

		£	s.	d.
Silver Coins : —
1 franc = 100 centimes = 20 sous	=	0	0	$9\frac{1}{2}$	to 10*d.* English.
$\frac{1}{4}$ franc = 25 ditto -	=	0	0	$2\frac{7}{8}$	$\frac{1}{8}$
$\frac{1}{2}$ ditto = 50 ditto -	=	0	0	$4\frac{3}{4}$
5 francs = 500 ditto = 100 sous	=	0	4	0

Worn pieces of money, like our old shillings, but composed of silver and copper, are also current, and bear the value of 75 centimes (15 sous), and 1 franc 50 centimes (30 sous), but they will soon be called in.

		£	s.	d.
Gold Coins : —
Louis d'or = 24 fr. -	=	0	19	0	English.
Napoleon, or 20-franc piece	=	0	15	10
Double Napoleon, or 40-franc piece	=	1	11	8
Copper Coins : —
Decime, or 2-sous piece -	=	0	0	1
5 centimes = 1 sous -	=	0	0	$0\frac{1}{2}$
1 centime - - -	=	0	0	$0\frac{1}{10}$

N. B. To find the value of centimes remember that the Tens are all pennies, and the Fives halfpennies, thus $75c. = 7\frac{1}{2}d.$: $25c. = 2\frac{1}{2}d$ — $15\ c. = 1\frac{1}{2}$, within a fraction, but near enough for all practical purposes.

To reduce French francs to English money for common purposes, where minute exactness is not required, it is only necessary to divide the amount of francs by 25, or to substitute 4 for 100, thus : —

Francs.		£
100	=	4
1,000	=	40
10,000	=	400
100,000	=	4,000
1,000,000	=	40,000

The Bank of France issues notes, but for no sum under 500 fr., and they are difficult to change out of Paris, not being received in the provinces without paying an agio.

FOREIGN COINS REDUCED TO THEIR VALUE IN FRENCH CURRENCY.

		fr.	c.
English sovereign - -	=	25	50	to 25 fr. 20 c. at par.
crown - - -	=	6	25
shilling - - -	=	1	25
Dutch Willem = 10 guilders -	=	21	30
guilder - - -	=	2	15
Prussian dollar - - -	=	9	75
Frederick d'or - -	=	21	0
Bavarian florin = 20 pence English	=	2	15
Kron thaler - -	=	5	81
Austrian florin = 2 shillings English	=	2	57

FRENCH FRANCS AND CENTIMES REDUCED TO THEIR VALUE IN ENGLISH POUNDS, SHILLINGS, AND PENCE.

	£	s.	d.
5 cents.	0	0	0¼ 2/10
10	0	0	0¾ 8/10
15	0	0	1¼ 7/10
20	0	0	1¾ 6/10
25	0	0	2¼ 5/10
30	0	0	2¾ 4/10
35	0	0	3¼ 3/10
40	0	0	3¾ 2/10
45	0	0	4¼ 1/10
50	0	0	4¾
55	0	0	5- 9/10
60	0	0	5½ 8/10
65	0	0	6- 7/10
70	0	0	6½ 6/10
75	0	0	7- 5/10
80	0	0	7½ 4/10
85	0	0	8- 3/10
90	0	0	8½ 2/10
95	0	0	9- 1/10
1 franc.	0	0	9½
2	0	1	7
3	0	2	4½
4	0	3	2
5	0	3	11½
6	0	4	9
7	0	5	6½
8	0	6	4
9	0	7	1½

	£	s.	d.
10 francs.	0	7	11
11	0	8	8½
12	0	9	6
13	0	10	3¾
14	0	11	1¼
15	0	11	10¾
16	0	12	8½
17	0	13	5¾
18	0	14	3¼
19	0	15	0¾
20	0	15	10¼
30	1	3	9½
40	1	11	8¾
50	1	19	8
60	2	7	7
70	2	15	6¼
80	3	3	5½
90	3	11	4¾
100	3	19	4
200	7	18	8
300	11	18	0
400	15	17	4
500	19	16	8
750	29	15	0
1,000	39	13	4
5,000	198	6	8
10,000	396	13	4

ENGLISH MONEY REDUCED TO ITS VALUE IN FRENCH FRANCS AND CENTIMES.

	Fr.	Cts.
1 penny.	0	10½
2	0	21
3	0	31½
4	0	42
5	0	52½
6	0	63
7	0	73½
8	0	84
9	0	94½
10	1	5
11	1	15
1 shilling.	1	26
2	2	52
3	3	78
4	5	4
5	6	30
6	7	56
7	8	82
8	10	8
9	11	34
10	12	60
11	13	86

	Fr.	Cts.
12 shillings.	15	12
13	16	38
14	17	64
15	18	90
16	20	16
17	21	42
18	22	68
19	23	94
1 £ sterl.	25	20
2	50	40
3	75	60
4	100	80
5	126	0
6	151	20
7	176	40
8	201	60
9	226	80
10	252	0
11	277	20
12	302	40
13	327	60
14	352	80

	Fr.	Cts
15 £ sterl.	378	0
16	403	20
17	428	40
18	453	60
19	478	80
20	504	0
30	756	0
40	1008	0
50	1260	0
60	1512	0
70	1764	0
80	2016	0
90	2268	0
100	2520	0
200	5040	0
300	7560	0
400	10,080	0
500	12,600	0
1000	25,200	0
5000	126,000	0
10,000	252,000	0

b. WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

An uniform decimal system of coins, weights and measures, was introduced into France in 1790; and since 1840 takes the place of all others.

In this new system all the measures of length, superficies and solidity, the unit of weight, and the unit of money, are connected together, and are derived from one fundamental unit, deduced from the size of the earth, by means of geometrical and physical data, and each is capable of being verified at all times and in all places. This fundamental unit is called MÈTRE, and is equal to the ten-millionth part (0·0000001) of the distance from the pole to the equator.

The prefixes which express multiples are Greek.

	Myria	Kilo	Hecto	Deca,
represented by the capital letters	M	K	H	D, expressing the numbers	10,000	1,000	100	10.

The prefixes which express sub-multiples are Latin.

	Deci	Centi	Milli,	Deci-milli	Cent-milli, represented by	d	c	m	d-m	c-m, expressing the fractions	0·1	0·01	0·001	0·0001	0·00001.

By means of this system, with a small number of words, the division can be carried almost ad infinitum.

The measures of length are all either decimal multiples, or sub-multiples of the mètre, thus: —

Myria- —	M.-m.	= 10·000	Mètres.
Kilo- —	K.-m.	= 1·000	,,
Hecto- —	H.-m.	= 100	,,
Deca- —	D.-m.	= 10	,,
	m.	= 1	Mètre.
Deci- —	D.-m.	= 0·1	,,
Centi- —	C.-m.	= 0·01	,,
Milli- —	M.-m.	= 0·001	,,

One great advantage of the decimal system of subdivision is, that, by the simple movement of a comma, any one number of units is transformed into an equivalent number of superior or inferior units, thus: — m 489·365 = D*m* 48·9365 = M*m* 0·489365 = C*m* 48936·5.

TABLES OF FRENCH MEASURES

TABLE A.—FRENCH FEET REDUCED TO

French Feet.	English Feet and Decimal Parts.	French Feet.	English Feet and Decimal Parts.
1	1·066	40	42·631
2	2·132	41	43·696
3	3·197	42	44·762
4	4·263	43	45·828
5	5·329	44	46·894
6	6·395	45	47·959
7	7·460	46	49·025
8	8·526	47	50·091
9	9·592	48	51·157
10	10·658	49	52·222
11	11·723	50	53·288
12	12·789	51	54·354
13	13·855	52	55·420
14	14·921	53	56·486
15	15·986	54	57·551
16	17·052	55	58·617
17	18·118	56	59·683
18	19·184	57	60·749
19	20·250	58	61·814
20	21·315	59	62·880
21	22·381	60	63·946
22	23·447	61	65·012
23	24·513	62	66·077
24	25·578	63	67·143
25	26·644	64	68·209
26	27·710	65	69·275
27	28·776	66	70·341
28	29·841	67	71·406
29	30·907	68	72·472
30	31·973	69	73·538
31	33·039	70	74·604
32	34·104	71	75·669
33	35·170	72	76·735
34	36·236	73	77·801
35	37·302	74	78·867
36	38·368	75	79·932
37	39·433	76	80·998
38	40·499	77	82·064
39	41·565	78	83·130

1 French Foot. = 1·0657654
1 English Foot = 0·9382927

* Tables A, B, and E are abridged from Lieut Linear Measures.

TABLES OF FRENCH MEASURES AND WEIGHTS.

TABLE A. — FRENCH FEET REDUCED TO ENGLISH FEET. *

French Feet.	English Feet and Decimal Parts.	French Feet.	English Feet and Decimal Parts.	French Feet.	English Feet and Decimal Parts.
1	1·066	40	42·631	79	84·195
2	2·132	41	43·696	80	85·261
3	3·197	42	44·762	81	86·327
4	4·263	43	45·828	82	87·393
5	5·329	44	46·894	83	88·459
6	6·395	45	47·959	84	89·524
7	7·460	46	49·025	85	90·590
8	8·526	47	50·091	86	91·656
9	9·592	48	51·157	87	92·722
10	10·658	49	52·222	88	93·787
11	11·723	50	53·288	89	94·853
12	12·789	51	54·354	90	95·919
13	13·855	52	55·420	91	96·985
14	14·921	53	56·486	92	98·050
15	15·986	54	57·551	93	99·116
16	17·052	55	58·617	94	100·182
17	18·118	56	59·683	95	101·248
18	19·184	57	60·749	96	102·313
19	20·250	58	61·814	97	103·379
20	21·315	59	62·880	98	104·445
21	22·381	60	63·946	99	105·511
22	23·447	61	65·012	100	106·577
23	24·513	62	66·077	150	159·865
24	25·578	63	67·143	200	213·153
25	26·644	64	68·209	250	266·441
26	27·710	65	69·275	300	319·730
27	28·776	66	70·341	350	373·018
28	29·841	67	71·406	400	426·306
29	30·907	68	72·472	450	479·594
30	31·973	69	73·538	500	532·883
31	33·039	70	74·604	550	586·171
32	34·104	71	75·669	600	639·460
33	35·170	72	76·735	650	692·747
34	36·236	73	77·801	700	746·036
35	37·302	74	78·867	750	799·324
36	38·368	75	79·932	800	852·612
37	39·433	76	80·998	850	905·901
38	40·499	77	82·064	900	959·189
39	41·565	78	83·130	1000	1065·765

1 French Foot = 1·06576543 English Foot.
1 English Foot = 0·93829277 French Foot.

* Tables A, B, and E, are abridged from Lieut. Becher's accurate work on Foreign Linear Measures.

TABLE B.—FRENCH METRES REDUCED TO ENGLISH FEET.

Mètres.	English Feet and Decimal Parts.	Mètres.	English Feet and Decimal Parts.	Mètres.	English Feet and Decimal Parts.
1	3·281	38	124·674	75	246·067
2	6·562	39	127·955	76	249·348
3	9·843	40	131·236	77	252·629
4	13·123	41	134·517	78	255·910
5	16·404	42	137·798	79	259·191
6	19·685	43	141·079	80	262·472
7	22·966	44	144·359	81	265·753
8	26·247	45	147·640	82	269·034
9	29·528	46	150·921	83	272·315
10	32·809	47	154·202	84	275·595
11	36·090	48	157·483	85	278·876
12	39·371	49	160·764	86	282·157
13	42·652	50	164·045	87	285·438
14	45·932	51	167·326	88	288·719
15	49·213	52	170·607	89	292·000
16	52·494	53	173·888	90	295·281
17	55·775	54	177·168	91	298·562
18	59·056	55	180·449	92	301·843
19	62·337	56	183·730	93	305·124
20	65·618	57	187·011	94	308·404
21	68·899	58	190·292	95	311·685
22	72·180	59	193·573	96	314·966
23	75·461	60	196·854	97	318·247
24	78·741	61	200·135	98	321·528
25	82·022	62	203·416	99	324·809
26	85·303	63	206·697	100	328·090
27	88·584	64	209·977	200	656·180
28	91·865	65	213·258	300	984·270
29	95·146	66	216·539	400	1312·360
30	98·427	67	219·820	500	1640·450
31	101·708	68	223·101	600	1968·539
32	104·989	69	226·382	700	2296·629
33	108·270	70	229·663	800	2624·719
34	111·550	71	232·944	900	2952·809
35	114·831	72	236·225	1000	3280·899
36	118·112	73	239·506
37	121·393	74	242·786

1 French metre = 3·2808992 English Feet.

TABLE C. — FRENCH KILOMÈTRES AND MYRIAMÈTRES INTO ENGLISH MILES, ETC.

Kilom.	Eng. Miles.	Fur-longs.	Yds.	Kilom.	Eng. Miles.	Fur-longs.	Yds.
1	0	4	213	8	4	7	164
2	1	1	206	9	5	4	157
3	1	6	199	1 myria.	6	1	156
4	2	3	192	2	12	3	92
5	3	0	185	3	18	5	10
6	3	5	178	4	24	6	160
7	4	2	171	5	31	0	90

Table D. — French Lieues de Poste into English Miles and Yards.

L.	Mls.	Yds.	L.	Mls.	Yds.	L.	Mls.	Yds.	L.	Mls.	Yds.
1	2	743·061	11	26	1,133·671	30	72	1,171·832	400	968	1,544·428
2	4	1,486·122	12	29	116·732	40	96	1,562·443	500	1,211	170·535
3	7	469·183	13	31	859·794	50	121	193·053	600	1,453	556·642
4	9	1,212·244	14	33	1,602·855	60	145	583·664	700	1,695	942·749
5	12	195·305	15	36	585·916	70	169	974·275	800	1,937	1,328·856
6	14	938·366	16	38	1,328·977	80	193	1,364·886	900	2,179	1,714·963
7	16	1,681·427	17	41	312·038	90	217	1,755·496	1,000	2,422	341·070
8	19	664·488	18	43	1,055·099	100	242	386·107	2,000	4,844	682·140
9	21	1,407·549	19	46	38·160	200	484	772·214	3,000	7,266	1,023·210
10	24	390·610	20	48	781·221	330	726	1,158·321	5,000	12,110	1,705·350

Table E. — French Toises reduced to English Feet.

Toises.	English Feet and Decimal Parts.	Toises.	English Feet and Decimal Parts.	Toises.	English Feet and Decimal Parts.
1	6·395	38	243·095	74	473·200
2	12·789	39	249·389	75	479·594
3	19·184	40	255·784	76	485·989
4	25·578	41	262·178	77	492·384
5	31·973	42	268·573	78	498·778
6	38·368	43	274·967	79	505·173
7	44·762	44	281·362	80	511·567
8	51·157	45	287·757	81	517·962
9	57·551	46	294·151	82	524·357
10	63·946	47	300·546	83	530·751
11	70·340	48	306·940	84	537·146
12	76·735	49	313·335	85	543·540
13	83·130	50	319·730	86	549·935
14	89·524	51	326·124	87	556·330
15	95·919	52	332·519	88	562·724
16	102·313	53	338·913	89	569·119
17	108·708	54	345·308	90	575·513
18	115·103	55	351·703	91	581·908
19	121·497	56	358·097	92	588·303
20	127·892	57	364·492	93	594·697
21	134·286	58	370·886	94	601·092
22	140·681	59	377·281	95	607·486
23	147·076	60	383·676	96	613·881
24	153·470	61	390·070	97	620·275
25	159·865	62	396·465	98	626·670
26	166·259	63	402·859	99	633·065
27	172·654	64	409·254	100	639·459
28	179·049	65	415·649	200	1278·918
29	185·443	66	422·043	300	1918·378
30	191·838	67	428·438	400	2557·837
31	198·232	68	434·832	500	3197·296
32	204·627	69	441·227	600	3836·756
33	211·022	70	447·621	700	4476·215
34	217·416	71	454·016	800	5115·674
35	223·811	72	460·411	900	5755·133
36	230·205	73	466·805	1000	6394·593
37	236·600

1 French toise = 6·39459259 English feet.
1 English foot = 0·15638212 French toise.

TABLE F. — FRENCH KILOGRAMMES INTO ENGLISH POUNDS (AVOIRDUPOIS).

Kil.	E. Pds.	Kil.	E. Pds.	Kil.	E. Pds.	Kil.	E. Pds.	Kil.	Eng. Pds.
1	2·606	14	30·880	27	59·554	40	88·228	300	661·714
2	4·411	15	33·086	28	61·760	41	90·434	400	882·286
3	6·617	16	35·291	29	63·996	42	92·640	500	1,102·857
4	8·823	17	37·497	30	66·171	43	94·846	1,000	2,205·714
5	11·028	18	39·703	31	68·377	44	97·051	2,000	4,411·429
6	13·234	19	41·908	32	70·583	45	99·257	3,000	6,617·143
7	15·440	20	44·114	33	72·788	46	101·463	4,000	8,822·857
8	17·646	21	46·320	34	74·994	47	103·668	5,000	11,028·471
9	19·851	22	48·526	35	77·200	48	105·874	10,000	22,057·143
10	22·057	23	50·731	36	79·405	49	108·080	20,000	44,114·286
11	24·263	24	52·937	37	81·611	50	110·286	30,000	66,171·429
12	26·468	25	55·143	38	83·817	100	220·571	40,000	88,228·572
13	28·674	26	57·348	39	86·023	200	441·143	50,000	110,285·715

TABLE G. — FRENCH POUNDS INTO ENGLISH POUNDS (AVOIRDUPOIS).

Fr. Pds.	Eng. Pds.	Fr. Pds.	Eng. Pds.	Fr. Pds.	Eng. Pds.	Fr. Pds.	Eng. Pds.	Fr. Pds.	Eng. Pds.
1	1·080	14	15·116	27	29·152	40	43·188	300	323·913
2	2·159	15	16·196	28	30·232	41	44·268	400	431·884
3	3·239	16	17·275	29	31·312	42	45·348	500	539·855
4	4·319	17	18·355	30	32·391	43	46·427	1,000	1,079·710
5	5·398	18	19·435	31	33·471	44	47·507	2,000	2,159·420
6	6·478	19	20·514	32	34·551	45	48·587	3,000	3,239·130
7	7·558	20	21·594	33	35·630	46	49·666	4,000	4,318·840
8	8·638	21	22·674	34	36·710	47	50·746	5,000	5,398·550
9	9·717	22	23·754	35	37·790	48	51·826	10,000	10,797·100
10	10·797	23	24·833	36	38·869	49	52·906	20,000	21,594·200
11	11·877	24	25·913	37	39·949	50	53·985	30,000	32,391·300
12	12·956	25	26·993	38	41·029	100	107·971	40,000	43,188·400
13	14·036	26	28·072	39	42·109	200	215·942	50,000	53,985·500

TABLE H. — FRENCH HECTARES INTO ENGLISH ACRES.

Hect.	Acres.	Hect.	Acres.	Hect.	Acres.	Hect.	Acres.	Hect.	Acres.
1	2·471	8	19·769	15	37·067	40	98·846	200	494·229
2	4·942	9	22·240	16	39·538	50	123·557	300	741·343
3	7·413	10	24·711	17	42·009	60	148·268	400	988·457
4	9·884	11	27·182	18	44·480	70	172·980	500	1,235·571
5	12·356	12	29·654	19	46·952	80	197·691	1,000	2,471·143
6	14·827	13	32·125	20	49·423	90	222·403	2,000	4,942·286
7	17·298	14	34·596	30	74·134	100	247·114	5,000	12,355·715

TABLE I. — FRENCH "AUNES DE PARIS" INTO ENGLISH YARDS.

Aun.	Yds.	Aun.	Yds.	Aun.	Yds.	Aun.	Yds.	Aun.	Yds.
1	1·300	7	9·098	13	16·896	19	24·695	70	90·981
2	2·599	8	10·398	14	18·196	20	25·994	80	103·978
3	3·899	9	11·697	15	19·496	30	38·992	90	116·975
4	5·199	10	12·997	16	20·795	40	51·989	100	129·972
5	6·499	11	14·297	17	22·095	50	64·986	200	259·945
6	7·799	12	15·597	18	23·395	60	77·983	500	649·862

c. PASSPORTS AND POLICE.

A passport is indispensable to enable a stranger to travel in France. It may be procured gratis in London, at the French Passport Office, 6. Poland Street, open from 1 to 3 daily. It is necessary to apply for it verbally, or by letter, a day or two in advance (one day will suffice), when a printed form is delivered to the applicant to be filled up with his name, age, profession, &c. Rentier, or independent man, is a convenient designation for those who travel for recreation. On returning this paper personally to the office, the passport is at once made out from it; and after a description of the person of the bearer has been inserted in it, and his own signature (which should be written legibly) has been attached to it, will be delivered to him. The description of his person, or signalement, should on no account be omitted in any passport for France: the want of it may, in remote parts of the country, lead to the bearer's detention or arrest; and it is the more necessary to dwell on this point, because the officials of English ministers and consuls abroad, in making out passports for their countrymen, are apt to slur it over to save trouble.

Passports may be also obtained on payment of 5*s.* from French consuls residing at British sea-ports. The virtues of a Foreign Office passport, which costs 2*l.* 7*s.*, appear to be much exaggerated: it is liable to be taken away at the French frontier like any other.

In cases of hasty departure from England, when a traveller has not time to apply one day in advance, he may obtain a passport at any place in France, where an English consul resides, on payment of 5 francs. It is far better, however, to secure one in England. The consul's passport may be exchanged at Paris for one from the British ambassador.

The passport which a traveller brings with him into France is not valid for travelling through the country, nor for quitting it, until it has received the signature of the Minister of the Interior. It is therefore taken away from the traveller at the sea-port where he lands, or the frontier town where he enters France, and is forwarded by the police to Paris, while a temporary passport, Passe Provisoire, is given him to carry him on to Paris, and 2 francs must be paid for it.

Until the traveller reaches Paris the Passe Provisoire will carry him through all parts of France, but not out of the country. He cannot depart until he has exchanged it either for his original passport, visé by the minister of the interior, or for the passport of the British minister or consul.

The first care of the traveller after landing at a French sea-port, if he does not wish to be detained there, should be to obtain his passe provisoire, which is often a tedious business, owing to the number of applicants all eager to secure their papers in time to start by diligences or steam-boats. If he be desirous of passing rapidly through France, viâ Paris, on his way to another country, such as Italy, India, &c. and does not wish to stop in Paris, he ought to impress this upon the agent at the passport office, and request him to forward the original passport to Paris by the same day's post, in order that it may arrive as soon as its owner. When this is neglected, an annoying delay of several days is often caused. In cases of urgent haste, where the traveller cannot wait for the arrival in Paris of his original passport, the British ambassador will give him one in exchange for the Passe Provisoire.

On reaching Paris, the "Passe Provisoire" must be taken or sent to the Préfecture of police, where the original will be given in exchange for it. It is better to send a valet de place or commissionnaire for it than to go for it: the commissionnaire being known to the officials is more likely to be attended to than a stranger, speaking French perhaps scarcely intelligible. The commissionnaire may, it is true, play false, and declare that the passport is not arrived, in the hope of detaining the traveller at his hotel; and the best way to prevent this is to promise him an extra douceur in the event of his securing the passport at once. The traveller must give his signature, and his personal attendance at the police-office is not required.

To secure personally the necessary visas of French and foreign ministers to a passport to enable the bearer to enter Austria or Italy, is not to be done under two days. The stranger who undertakes to do this for himself will find it a very disagreeable and tiresome business, the passport offices being open only at fixed hours, being situated in distant parts of the town, and being beset by crowds of applicants. In all the respectable Paris hotels (Meurice, Bristol, &c.), a commissionnaire is appointed to attend to the passports, for which a fixed charge (4 or 5 francs) is made, and this saves the traveller a couple of days' running about from office to office. The signature of the Papal nuncio is essential for travellers going to Rome, and can only be obtained at Paris.

If the stranger is not going to Paris, but only to cross a part of France, on his way to another country, for instance, from Calais to Lille, on his way to Belgium, the passport which he brings with him is visé at the frontier and returned to him. If he wishes merely to make a short stay at the place where he has landed (Boulogne for instance), or in a contiguous department, and the period of his stay do not exceed one month, the local authorities deliver to him a limited passport, retaining the original in their hands.

The traveller may have his original passport sent after him to any town in France where there is a prefecture or sous-prefecture; but if there is danger of delay in transmitting it to the capital, there is greater in sending it to a provincial place.

In France, more than in any other country in Europe at the present time, the passport is liable to be demanded at all times and places, and should always be carried about the person. The gens-d'armes are authorized to call for it not only in frontier and fortified towns, but in remote villages: they may stop you on the highway, or waylay you as you descend from the diligence, may force themselves into the salle à manger, or enter your bed-room, to demand a sight of this precious document. It is needless to expatiate on this restraint so inconsistent with the freedom which an Englishman enjoys at home, or to show that the police are a pest to the harmless and well conducted, without being a terror to evil doers; it is the custom of the country, and the stranger must conform, or has no business to set his foot in it. It must be allowed that the police perform their duty with civility so as to render it as little vexatious as possible. They cannot enter a private house without a warrant.

Those who lose their passports, leave them behind, or do not take care to have them "en règle," are liable to be marched off to the juge de paix or préfet, often a distance of 10, 15, 20 miles, on foot, unless they choose to pay for a carriage for their escort as well as themselves, and if no satisfactory explanation can be given may be at last deposited in prison.

Before embarking at a French port, a permis d'embarquement must be obtained: it is given gratis at all hours on exhibiting the passport en règle or properly visé, and is received by an officer of police as the traveller goes on board the packet.

The duties of rural police are performed by Gens-d'armes, a fine body of men chosen from the line, handsomely dressed, better mounted than any other cavalry corps. Being settled in their native country, and not moved from place to place, they know every body and all the localities. Their salary amounts to 80*l.* a-year, out of which they have to provide their horse and uniform.

d. THE DIFFERENT ROUTES BETWEEN LONDON AND PARIS COMPARED.

By Dover and Calais.

	Miles.	Hours.	Fares.
			s.	d.
London to Dover (per Railway), when finished	86	5	23	0
Dover to Calais (per Steamer) - -	25	3	10	0
Calais to Paris (per Diligence) - -	178	24	33	6
Total - - -	289	32	66	6

By Dover and Boulogne.

	Miles.	Hours.	Fares.
			s.	d.
London to Dover (per Railway) - -	86	5	23	0
Dover to Boulogne (per Steamer) - -	28	4	10	6
Boulogne to Paris (per Diligence) - -	156	21	33	0
Total - - -	270	30	66	6

By crossing from Dover to Boulogne, 22 m. of land journey between Calais and Boulogne are saved, but the sea voyage is an hour longer than to Calais. The passage from Dover to Boulogne is not to be recommended, as, from the prevalence of westerly winds in the Channel, on an average eight or nine months in the year, the vessels are constantly retarded or detained; but, in returning from France to England, the passage from Boulogne to Dover is preferable. It is generally performed in as short a time as that from Calais to Dover. The passage to or from London is performed in nearly the same time to both places.

London to Paris by the Thames to Boulogne.

	Miles.	Hours.	Fares. s.	Fares. d.
London to Boulogne (per Steamer) - -	110	12	15	0
Boulogne to Paris (per Diligence) - -	156	21	33	0
Total - - -	266	33	48	0

This route is very economical, and least fatiguing, the sea part of the voyage in general not exceeding 5 hours.

By Southampton and Havre.

	Miles.	Hours.	Fares. s.	Fares. d.
London to Southampton (per Railway) -	78	3½	21	0
Southampton to Havre (per Steamer)* -	122	12	24	0
Havre to Paris (per Diligence, and Railway from Rouen †) - - - -	132	13	31	0
Total - - -	332	28½	76	0

By Brighton and Dieppe.

	Miles.	Hours.	Fares. s.	Fares. d.
London to Brighton (per Railway) - -	50½	2	14	6
Brighton to Shoreham Harbour (per Railway)	5	0¼	1	0
Shoreham Harbour to Dieppe (per Steamer) -	83	7½	20	0
Dieppe to Paris (per Diligence and Railway from Rouen) - - - -	104	11	23	0
Total - - -	242½	20¾	58	6
The shortest route of all, being almost a straight line.

By Brighton and Havre.

	Miles.	Hours.	Fares. s.	Fares. d.
London to Brighton (per Railway) - -	50½	2	14	6
Brighton to Shoreham Harbour (per Railway)	5	0¼	1	0
Shoreham Harbour to Havre (per Steamer)	94	9	20	0
Havre to Paris (per Diligence and Railway) -	132	13	31	0
Total - - -	281½	24¼	66	6

* The fare per steamer has of late been frequently reduced to 5*s.*, there being an opposition on this line.

† This is the most agreeable of all the roads to Paris in point of scenery and curiosities. The voyage down the Seine from Paris or Rouen to Havre is most agreeable, and is rapidly performed by steam-boats daily. All these circumstances render this the most eligible route, at least in returning from Paris to London, except to those to whom a long sea voyage is a serious objection.

By Havre.

	Miles.	Hours.	Fares.
			s. d.
London to Havre (per Steamer) - -		26	42 0
Havre to Paris (per Diligence) - -	132	13	31 0
Total - - -		39	73 0

Recapitulation.

	Miles.	Hours.	Fares.
			s. d.
Viâ Brighton and Dieppe - - -	242½	20¾	58 6
— Brighton and Havre - - -	281½	24¼	66 6
— London and Havre, by Steam - -	-	39	73 0
— Dover and Calais - - -	289	32	66 6
— Southampton and Havre - - -	332	28½	76 0

e. POSTING.

The French Post Book (Livre de Poste) published under the authority of the government, is almost indispensable for persons travelling post: it may be had in all towns, and even at the post-houses.

By a law enforced throughout France since the 1st Jan. 1840, distances are no longer calculated by "postes," but by kilomètres and myriamètres. 1 kilomètre (i. e. 1000 mètres) = nearly 5 furlongs or $\frac{5}{8}$ths of an English mile; 1 myriamètre = 10 kilom. = nearly 6¼ Eng. m. (or 6 m. 1 fur. 156 yds.)

The postmaster's authorized charge is,

For each horse, 2 francs or 40 sous per myriamètre, or 20 centimes per kilom.

The Postillion is entitled by the law to demand only 1 franc per myriamètre or 10 centimes per kilom.; but it is customary to pay him 2 francs per myriam., or at the rate of a horse, unless he has misconducted himself, when he may be punished by limiting his pay to the tariff. He is bound by the law to drive the myriamètre within 46 and 58 minutes. The English, who generally want to go faster, are too often in the habit of giving him 50 sous per myriam. or 5 per kilom., which is at the rate of more than 4*d.* an English mile; i. e. more than a post-boy in England gets.

This extravagant remuneration is contrary to the express injunction of the French "Livre de Poste," which says, p. 42. "Les voyageurs conservent donc la faculté de restreindre le prix des guides à 1 franc, à titre de punition; et ils seront invités par les maîtres de poste, et dans l'intérêt du service, à ne jamais dépasser la rétribution de 2 fr. par myriamètre."

The average rate of posting does not much exceed a myriamètre per hour, including stoppages.

In fixing the number of horses to be attached, the postmaster takes into account the nature, size, and weight of the carriage, and the quantity of luggage; a landau or berlin always requires 3 horses at least, generally 4; a chariot will require 3, while a britzka holding the same number of persons will need only 2.

To facilitate this, carriages are divided into 3 classes: —

1. Cabriolets and light calèches without a front seat, or having one narrower than the back seat, must have 2 horses.

2. Limonières, heavier carriages, chariots (coupées); to these the postmaster may attach 3 horses, even when they contain only 2 persons.

3. The heaviest kind of carriages, berlines, landaus, barouches, whether closed or not, but having a front seat as wide as the back, 4 horses.

The posting regulations allot one horse to each person in a carriage; but allow the traveller, at his option, and provided the postmaster agrees, either to take the full complement of horses, at the rate of 40 sous each, or to take 2 or 3 at 40 sous, and to pay for the rest at 30 sous, without taking them. Thus a party of 4 persons in a light britzka may be drawn by 2 horses, paying 30 sous each for a third and fourth horse, which they are liable to take, or 3 francs extra for the 2 persons above the number of horses, thus compounding with the postmasters along the whole line of road. Where the carriage is so light as not to require as many horses as there are passengers, it is, of course, a saving of 10 sous a myriam. for each horse, to dispense with them.

The limitation of the number of horses on first setting out on a journey is of importance, because you are obliged to take on from every post station (except in the case of supplemental horses) the same number of horses that brought you to the relay.

One postillion may drive 4 horses, "aux grandes guides;" — where 3 horses are required, they may be harnessed one in front of the others, or à l'arbalète. Formerly, in France, 3 horses required to be yoked abreast; and for this purpose, shafts must be put to the carriage; but this rule is not now enforced, and there is no difficulty in travelling with 3 horses and a pole, as in Belgium and Germany.

On certain hilly stages one or more extra horses (cheval de supplément) are required to be attached to carriages, and at the entry into and departure from certain large towns the postmaster is allowed to charge for a number of kilomètres exceeding the real distance of the stage, called "distances de faveur or supplémentaires," formerly "postes royales." For example, 8 kilomètres beyond the real distance are charged on entering and quitting Paris. These privileges are defined by the "Livre de Poste." Those who merely pass through towns, changing horses but not stopping, are exempted from this extra charge.

The furnishing of post-horses does not, as in England, include a post chaise, and those who mean to post in France must have a carriage of their own. It is true the French postmasters are obliged to keep a cabriolet or small calèche for hire, but it is usually a rickety vehicle holding only 2 persons, and no more baggage than a sac de nuit, and is therefore seldom resorted to. The charge for it is the same as for a single horse, i. e. 40 sous per myriam.

Postillions are not allowed to pass another carriage on the road, unless the one in advance be drawn by fewer horses, or has been stopped by some accident. Travellers are supplied with horses in the order in which they and their couriers arrive; the malle postes and government estafettes alone having a right of precedence.

A register is kept at every posthouse, in which the traveller may enter complaints against the postmaster or his servants in that or the neighbouring relays. These registers are inspected at stated times by proper authorities, and the charges are investigated.

Carriages.

Duty on Carriages.—English travellers, on entering France by sea with a carriage, are called upon to deposit one-third of an ad valorem duty for it; usually 1200 francs for a barouche or chariot, and 2000 francs for a landau or coach. Travellers should be aware of this, in order that they may take with them ready money to meet this charge. A receipt, with an order upon the Bureau des Douanes, is given to the owner, entitling him to receive back $\frac{2}{3}$ths of this one-third, if the same carriage be taken out of France within 3 years. This order describes very particularly the carriage, and on presenting it at the frontier, the money deposited is repaid, except $\frac{1}{3}$th (i. e. $\frac{1}{12}$th of the value of the carriage), which is all the duty paid.

Carriages landed in France, and taken out of the country within six days, are exempted from the duty of a third of their value, formerly levied on all carriages without exception. This remission of duty, however, can only be obtained on condition that some respectable French householder will guarantee that the carriage shall quit France within the six days specified. The landlord of the inn at which the traveller puts up in Calais will effect this arrangement for him: but as he subjects himself to a penalty of a very large amount in case the above condition is not complied with, he requires the traveller to sign an undertaking to indemnify and hold him harmless in case of failure. An order to procure this remission of duty, issued by the French custom-house, and called "acquit à caution," costs 5 fr., and must be delivered up on passing the French frontier.

Owing to the inferiority of the post chaises in France (alluded to above), those who intend to travel post and are not furnished with a carriage of their own, must buy or hire one.

A travelling carriage, strong and tolerably good-looking, may be hired at Calais, or Paris, or Boulogne, from one of the innkeepers, for 350 or 400 fr. (16*l.*) for two months, and 8 fr. a day after the expiration of that time; the owner to pay for all necessary repairs. Thus the expense of crossing and recrossing the Channel, of shipping and unshipping, is spared.

The hire of a carriage to go from Calais to Paris varies from 100 to 150 francs.

Hired Carriages, Voitures à volonté.

It is difficult to fix a fair scale of prices to pay for the hire of a carriage and horses in different parts of France; the best guide is to calculate it at one-half or two thirds the posting price for the same distance, exclusive of the carriage.

The carriage usually to be met with for hire is the cabriolet, a heavy, lumbering and jolting vehicle: the charge for it is commonly 8 or 9 fr. a day, exclusive of a small fee or pourboire to the driver. They have neither the neatness nor the lightness of the gigs furnished at a country inn in England, but are necessarily clumsily built to stand the terrible cross roads of France.

In out-of-the-way places often no other vehicle is to be found than a patache, a rustic cab, verging towards the taxed cart, without its easy motion. He who rides in a patache, must prepare to be jolted to pieces.

f. MALLE POSTES,

Equivalent to the English mail coaches, and kept up at the expense of government, travel along the following great roads of France to carry the mail, and are allowed to take 2 or 3 passengers.

First Section—from Paris to

	Hours.	Fares.		Hours.	Fares.
Calais	18	48fr. 65c.	Moulins and St. Etienne	36	82fr. 42c.
Lille	18	44 10	Limoges	28	68 60
Valenciennes (no passenger)	13		Bordeaux	37	100 62
Sedan	20	46 90	Nantes	28	71 58
Forbach	28	68 43	Brest	44	107 63
Strasbourg	36	82 60	Cherbourg	24	63 43
Besançon	33	72 80	Havre	13	39 38
Lyons	34	84 0

The above 15 malle postes start from Paris every evening at 6 p. m., and arrive there between 4 and 6 a. m. The following 12 set out from the places where those of the 1st section stop, or from intermediate places.

Second Section.

	Hours.	Fares.		Hours.	Fares.
Bordeaux to Bayonne	18	49fr. 78c.	Lyons to Strasbourg	36	83fr. 65c.
Nantes	25	61 60	Moulins to Clermont and Montpellier	35	81 3
Toulouse	16	45 85	St. Etienne to Marseilles	27	58 45
Limoges to Pau	28	71 93	Toulouse to Bayonne	21	51 63
Toulouse	25	54 60	Marseilles	36	79 28
Lyons to Avignon (No passengers taken)	15		Troyes to Mulhausen	24	55 83

The mails of the 1st section contain two or more places; and those of the 2d one, except those from Paris to Valenciennes, and from Lyons to Avignon, which take no passengers.

The inside passengers, it must be confessed, have not very much room, and he that sits by the side of the conductor in the cabriolet is liable to be annoyed at every post town by his companion's horn, in his efforts to rouse the postmasters, and by his bustle in the delivery and receipt of the letter bags.

The mails consist of a stoutly-built barouche which holds comfortably inside 2 or 3 passengers; painted of a light red colour, drawn by 4 horses with tolerable harness, with a seat in front for the postillion, and one behind for the conductor. Their rate of travelling exceeds that of the diligence on almost all the roads, equalling at least 9 or 10 Eng. m. an hour, sometimes 12 m.

The price of places is nearly double that of the diligence, being 1 fr. 75 cent. per myriam. = to nearly 3*d.* a mile, the outside fare on an English mail.

The malle postes are very much resorted to, especially from Paris; and as they take so few passengers, the only chance of obtaining a place, generally speaking, is to secure it some days before hand. Places are taken at the post offices in Paris and in the provincial towns where the malle poste passes. The passport must be shown if required before the name can be entered, and half the fair must be paid at once, the remainder before starting.

Baggage of passengers is restricted in weight to 25 kilogram. or 55 lbs.; all above that weight must be paid for. No portmanteau, or sac de nuit, of dimensions exceeding the following measurement can be admitted into a malle poste.

In length	- 0^{m}, 70 decim.	= 26 pouces	= 27 English inches.
breadth	- 0^{m}, 40	= 14	= 15
height	- 0^{m}, 35	= 13	= 13

There is room, however, for a writing-case or hat-box inside. These regulations are strictly enforced, so that it is vain for those who travel with much baggage to think of availing themselves of the malle poste.

The stoppages on the road are very short, only to change horses, which does not occupy 5 minutes, and to take in the bags, and once only for about half an hour for dinner. It is therefore advisable to take a small store of cold provisions on a long journey, especially between Paris and Marseilles, and Bordeaux.

The fare includes all charges; nothing is to be given to the postillions: the conductor generally receives a small douceur, varying from 5 to 10 fr. according to the length of the journey, at the good will of the passenger.

Places cannot be secured except for three fourths of the entire distance which the mail travels; nor are passengers taken for short distances unless they are without baggage.

g. DILIGENCES.

The French stage coach or diligence is a huge, heavy, lofty, lumbering machine, something between an English stage and a broad-wheeled waggon. It is composed of 3 parts or bodies joined together: 1. the front division called, Coupée, shaped like a chariot or post chaise, holding 3 persons, quite distinct from the rest of the passengers, so that ladies may resort to it without inconvenience, and by securing all 3 places to themselves, travel nearly as comfortably as in a private carriage. The fare is more expensive than in the other part of the vehicle.

2. Next to it comes the Intérieur, or inside, holding 6 persons, and oppressively warm in summer.

3. Behind this is attached the Rotonde, "the receptacle of dust, dirt, and bad company," the least desirable part of the diligence, and the cheapest except

The Banquette, or Impériale, an outside seat on the roof of the coupé, tolerably well protected from rain and cold by a hood or head, and leather apron, but somewhat difficult of access until you are accustomed to climb up into it. It affords a comfortable and roomy seat by the side of the conductor, with the advantages of fresh air and the best view of the country from its great elevation, and greater freedom from the dust than those enjoy who sit below. It is true you may sometimes meet rough and low-bred companions, for the French do not like to travel outside; and few persons of the better class resort to it, except English, and they for the most part prefer it to all others. It is not suited to females, owing to the difficulty of clambering up to it. The diligence is more roomy and easy, and therefore less fatiguing, than an English stage; but the pace is slow, rarely exceeding 6 or 7 m. an hour, and in bad weather, when roads are heavy, falling below that. Nevertheless, the diligences have undergone considerable improvement within the last 15 or 20 years; the horses are changed more rapidly; strips of hide have taken the place of rope harness; and, on one or two lines of road, the rate of travelling is accelerated to 8, or even 10 m. an hour.

The coach and its contents are placed in charge of the Conducteur, a sort of guard who takes care of the passengers, the luggage, the way bill, and the méchanique, or leverage, by which the wheel is locked. He is paid by the administration, and expects nothing from the passengers, unless he obliges them by some extra service. He is generally an intelligent person, often an old soldier, and the traveller may pick up some information from him.

The large 1st class, three-bodied, diligences carry 15 passengers inside, and 4 out, including the conductor, and weigh when loaded 11,000 lbs., about 5 tons. They are drawn by 5 or 6 horses, driven by a post-boy from the box, instead of the saddle, as was formerly the case. Besides passengers, the diligence carries a great deal of heavy merchandize, such as in England would be sent by the waggon or canal boat.

The places in the diligence are all numbered, and are given out to passengers in the order in which they book themselves, the corner seats first; and it comports very much with the traveller's comfort to secure one of them, especially in long journeys. Before starting, the passengers' names are called over, and to each is assigned his proper place. The average rate of the fares may be calculated at 45 or 50 centimes for 2 leagues, equivalent to 1*d.* a mile English, except for the coupé, which is somewhat higher.

Two great companies, whose head-quarters are at Paris, the Messageries Royales, and Messageries Générales (Laffitte, Caillard et Comp^ie^.), furnish diligences on all the great roads from the capital, and correspond with provincial companies who "coach" the more distant and cross roads, so that there is no want of means of conveyance in any part of France between places of moderate consequence. In many cases, however, the "turn-out" from provincial towns is of the worst kind, and the organisation is throughout inferior to the stage-coaching of England.

The two chief messageries are equally good, and, generally speaking, superior to any of the minor companies; indeed, they manage to keep down their rivals, probably by a mutual understanding with each other.

During the month of August, the diligences on all the great roads are thronged with school-boys, and collegians, with their parents and masters, in consequence of the breaking up of the establishments of education in Paris, all hurrying home at once into the provinces. It not unfrequently happens that, for a fortnight together, every place is taken. The vacations at the public offices occur about the same time, and contribute largely to swell the crowd of travellers in August.

h. RAILROADS.

France has allowed herself to be outstripped by her neighbours, not only by England, but also by Belgium, Prussia and Austria, in these means of extending national resources and civilisation, which the country more especially stands in need of. She has, however, for the present, laid out her money in fortifications, and has none to spare for lines of communication. This, however, is not the sole reason: it lies in the want of confidence between man and man, and in the absence of the spirit of association, by means of which all great public works are executed in England by private enterprise, but which does not exist in France. The only railroads as yet completed in France, are,

	Eng. Miles.
Paris to Versailles (right bank) - - -	14
(left bank) - - - -	11¼
Corbeil - - - - -	19
(Pont d'Asnières) St. Germains - -	9(?)
Orleans - - - - -	75
Rouen - - - - -	84
Strasburg to Basle - - - - -	90
Lyons to St. Etienne - - - - -	35
St. Etienne to Roanne (tramway) - - -	40
Nismes to Alais and Beaucaire - - - -	59

	Eng. Miles.
Nismes to Montpellier and Cette	16½
Bordeaux to La Teste	31½

LINES IN PROGRESS.

	Miles.
Paris to the Belgian frontier, to be opened in part in 1844
Paris to Havre
Orleans to Tours

In 1842 the French chambers passed a law laying down the following lines of railway, ramifying in different directions through France; but it will probably be some years before they make any appearance, except upon paper.

Paris to Belgium, by Amiens, Lille, Valenciennes, and to the Channel opposite England, in progress.

Paris to the German frontier, by Nancy, Strasburg, — Strasburg to Hommarting in progress.

Paris to the Mediterranean, by Lyons and Marseilles, Cette, between Dijon and Châlons, in progress (common to Mediterranean and Rhine line), also between Avignon and Marseilles.

Paris to the Spanish frontier, by Tours, Angoulême, Poitiers, Bordeaux, Bayonne, between Orleans and Tours in progress.

Paris to the Atlantic, by Tours and Nantes.

Paris to the centre of France, by Bourges, Nevers, and Clermont. (From Orleans to Vierzon, to be begun 1843.)

Mediterranean to the Rhine, by Lyons, Dijon, and Mulhausen.

i. STEAM-BOATS.

The use of steam is now very general in France, all the great rivers being traversed by steamers.

Inland Steam Navigation.

The Seine, from Havre to St. Germains, from Paris to Fontainbleau, and Montereau.

The Oise, to Compiègne.

The Loire, from Nantes to Orleans and Gien.

The Aulne, Brest, to Châteaulin.

The Charente, Rochefort, to Saintes and Angoulême.

The Garonne, Bordeaux, to Agen.

The Gironde, Bordeaux, to the sea.

The Rhone, from Arles to Lyons and Seyssel, and between Arles and Marseilles by merchant steamers.

The Saône, from Lyons to Châlons.

The Moselle, from Treves to Thionville

The Rhine, from Strasburg to Bâle.

In almost all cases the engineers employed on these vessels are Englishmen, and the French do not seem to have aptitude for this duty. The rivers of France, however, are more liable than those of Britain to rise and fall, and a sudden elevation caused by rains, or a want of water owing to drought, has equally the effect of arresting the navigation; the last by withdrawing the necessary depth of water, the first by filling the arches of the bridges so as to leave no room for the steamers to pass under them.

There are also a great number of coasting steamers; but the traveller should be cautious in trusting himself to them, unless the character of the captains and engineers be well ascertained to be of tried experience, as accidents not unfrequently happen, and even the French themselves do not place unlimited confidence in coasting steamers.

k. INNS — TABLES-D'HÔTE, ETC.

On the whole, the inns of France are very inferior to those of Germany and Switzerland, in the want of general comfort, and above all of cleanliness—their greatest drawback. There is an exception to this, however, in the bed and table linen. Even the filthy cabaret, whose kitchen and salon are scarcely endurable to look at, commonly affords napkins and table-cloths of the purest white, though coarse, and beds with unsullied sheets and white draperies, together with well-stuffed mattresses and pillows, which put German cribs and feather-beds to shame. Many of the most important essentials, on the other hand, are utterly disregarded, and evince a state of grossness and barbarism hardly to be expected in a civilised country; the provisions for personal ablution are very defective, the washing of floors, whether of timber or tile, seems unknown. In the better hotels, indeed, the floors are polished as tables are in England, with brushes attached to the feet instead of hands; but in most cases they are black with the accumulated filth of years, a little water being sprinkled on them from time to time to lay the dust and increase the dark crust of dirt.

French inns may be divided into two classes; a. Those which make some pretension to study English tastes and habits (and many of them have some claim to be considered comfortable), and, being frequented by Englishmen, are very exorbitant in their charges. Such are met with along the great roads to Paris, and thence to Geneva, Lyons, and Marseilles. b. Those in remote situations, not yet spoiled by the English and their couriers, where the traveller who can conform with the customs of the country is treated fairly, and charged no higher than a Frenchman. The expense of living in these country inns is moderate, 6 francs a-day board and lodging, and 10 sous to the servants.

In one respect the inns of France are more accommodating than those of Germany, that they will furnish at almost any hour of the day, at 10 minutes, or ¼ hour's notice, a well dressed dinner of 8 or 10 dishes at a cost not greatly exceeding that of the table-d'hôte. When ordering dinner in private, the traveller should specify the price at which he chooses to be served, fixing the sum cries of waiters hurrying to and fro, the gingling of dominoes, and tinkling bell of the mistress who presides at the bar, alone prevail over the harsh din of many voices, while the splendour of mirrored walls and velvet seats is eclipsed behind a cloud of unfragrant tobacco smoke — such is the picture of a French café!

A large cup of coffee (café au lait), with bread and butter, and an egg for breakfast, costs about 20 or 24 sous. A demi-tasse, or small cup in the afternoon, 8 or 10 sous; a petit verre de cognac, 5 sous. The waiter usually receives 2 sous.

m. A TRAVELLER'S GENERAL VIEW OF FRANCE.

It has been the custom of the English, who traverse France on their way to Italy or Switzerland, to complain of the tiresome and monotonous features of the country, and to ridicule the epithet "La Belle France," which the French, who, it must be confessed, have in general no true feeling for the beauties of nature, are wont to apply to it. By a "beautiful" country, a Frenchman generally understands one richly fertile and fully cultivated; and in this point of view the epithet is justly applied to France. It is also most fortunate in its climate. Many of its vineyards, the most valuable spots in the country, occupy tracks of poor, barren and waste land, which in our climate would be absolutely unprofitable. But in truth our countrymen are unjust in forming their opinion from the routes between Calais and Paris, and thence to Lyons, Strasburg, and Dijon, perhaps the least varied part of the kingdom, and at least no fair sample of its beauties. To this district, and to a large part of the province of Champagne, the descriptions of "wearisome expanse of tillage, unvaried by hill or dale, and extent of corn land or pasture, without enclosures, supremely tiresome," are almost exclusively applicable. Throughout nearly one half of France, especially in Lower Normandy, Brittany, a great part of the country S. of the Loire, the vicinity of the Pyrenees, Limousin, Auvergne and Dauphiné, enclosures and hedge-rows are almost as common as in England, and the variety of surface in some of these districts is far greater. Our own island, indeed, presents as it were a miniature of other lands, a concentration, within a small area, of scenery, varying from flat fen, and rolling down, to mountains and precipices. In France, the features of nature are broad and expanded, and you must often traverse 50 or 100 miles to encounter those pleasing changes which, in Britain, succeed one another almost every 10 miles. If the English had confined themselves less to the beaten track in their way from the Channel to the Mediterranean, they would have verified the truth of this assertion.

More than 50 years ago, Arthur Young advised those "who know no more of France than just once passing through it to Italy, that, if they would see some of the finest parts of the kingdom, they should land at Havre — follow the Seine up to Paris, then take the great road to Moulins, and there quit it for Auvergne, and so to the Rhone at Valence or Viviers, such a variation from the common road, though it demand more time, would repay them by the sight of a much finer and more singular country than the road by Dijon." The traveller may at present farther vary his route by going from Paris by railway to Orleans, and thence by Bourges to Clermont in Auvergne.

The districts of France which chiefly recommend themselves by their beauty and variety of scenery are, in the north, Normandy, the banks of the Seine—the finest of the great rivers of France, the valleys round Vire, Mortain, and Avranches, the wild coast scenery of Brittany, and the course of the Rance, and of other streams near Quimper; in the centre, the Loire below Tours, and parts of Limousin; Auvergne, the Cantal and Ardèche, the Rhone, by some preferred to the Rhine, on account of its more extended prospects; in the east, the hills of the Jura, the mountains and valleys of Dauphiné, especially the vale of the Gresivaudan, the gorges of the Grande Chartreuse, and the savage magnificence of peak and glacier around the Mont Pelvoux, a region which may be styled the Chamouni or Grindelwald of France. Among the Vosges and Ardennes are many soberly romantic scenes which have as yet attracted but little notice from travellers; in the south, Provence, with its sunny sky, is too arid to deserve general praise, excepting that favoured terrace at the foot of the Alps along the shore of the Mediterranean, intervening between Toulon and Nice. The Pyrenees, however, without doubt, include the finest scenery in France, and, except in the want of lakes, are scarcely inferior to the Alps of Switzerland and Savoy.

This slight enumeration of the chief points of interest is filled up in ampler details in the introductions to the different sections into which this Hand-book is divided, with the view of enabling the traveller to lay down for himself the plan of a tour, embracing as many of these points as his time or inclination will permit.

"Bretagne, Maine, and Anjou have the appearance of deserts. The fertile territories of Flanders, Artois, and Alsace are distinguished by their utility. Picardy is uninteresting. Champagne, in general, where I saw it, ugly, almost as much so as Poitou. Lorraine, Franche Comté, and Bourgogne are sombre in the wooded districts, and want cheerfulness in the open ones. Berry and La Marche may be ranked in the same class."—Arthur Young.

On the other hand, these districts, which are not interesting in point of scenery, have a compensating recommendation in their architectural remains, and relics of antiquity. The heaths of Brittany are studded with extraordinary Celtic remains, and abound in most beautiful churches. Out of the midst of the monotonous plain of La Beauce rises the wondrous fabric of Chartres cathedral; that of Bourges (colossal pile) overlooks the dull plain of Berri, as the spire of Strasburg surmounts the flat valley of the Rhine. Rheims, Troyes, Laon, &c. give an interest to the otherwise tiresome journey through Champagne; the sight of Amiens, Beauvais, and Abbeville, make one forget the length of the way through Picardy and Artois; and the Roman remains of Nismes, Arles, St. Remy, Orange, and Antibes, equal to almost any in Italy, would alone compensate for a journey to Provence, even had it no other claims to interest. France, however, is particularly rich in architectural remains, especially in Gothic architecture*, of which it possesses some of the noblest specimens existing, viz. the cathedrals above enumerated; to which must be added those of Metz, and 3 churches at Rouen.

These glorious monuments of architectural skill and lavish devotion, are far more stupendous in their proportions than the cathedrals of England, but have this peculiarity, that scarcely one of them is finished: thus, Beauvais has no nave, Amiens is incomplete in its towers, Abbeville has no choir, St. Ouen no front. It has been said that a perfect cathedral might be made of the portal of Rheims, the nave of Amiens, the choir of Beauvais, and the tower of Chartres.

The rose or wheel windows are both more frequent and of larger dimensions than in English cathedrals, and contribute greatly to the beauty of those of France, where it is not uncommon to find three in one church. The quantity, variety, and richness of the painted glass which the ecclesiastical edifices still retain, in spite of Huguenot Iconoclasts and Revolutionary destructives, is quite marvellous: we have nothing to compare with it in England.

The churches in the N. of France are closed from 12 to 6, except the cathedrals, which re-open at 4. In the S. they remain open all day. The choir, its aisles and side chapels, are usually closed by an iron grating, and to obtain admittance one must apply to the suisse, or beadle, who struts about in cocked hat, sword, and laced livery.

The finest provincial cities are, Lyons, Rouen, Bordeaux, Marseilles, and Nantes, all more or less distinguished for commerce, manufactures, and fine edifices. The minor provincial towns have a certain number of features in common which will not fail to draw the traveller's observation: such are the formal walk near the entrance or on the outskirts, often a mere platform, planted with rows of stunted trees, and the resort of nursery maids, washerwomen, and recruits undergoing drill, except on Sundays or fête days, when the dusty and gritty platform is crowded with a gay throng, to whom the sight of bright ribbons, shawls and new bonnets, compensates for the want of other prospect. A walk into the country and across the fields is never thought of by the French artizan or shopkeeper, nor indeed are there any field paths, green shady lanes, or pretty villas, or neat cottages with gardens on the outskirts of the towns, to invite him to sally forth.

Every town of a certain size is surrounded with a wall or barrier for the purpose of levying the octroi or town duties on all articles for eating and drinking brought into it, and which go to the municipal caisse or funds. All carts and carriages, public and private, are stopped at the gates in consequence, by douaniers, who search them and the baggage contained in them, to ascertain that no comestibles are concealed, in order to evade this tax. The space outside the gates usually swarms with low cabarets, guinguettes, &c. where the poor man may eat and drink at a cheaper rate than within the walls.

* It is to be hoped that Mr. Gally Knight will be induced to publish his rich and copious collection of careful drawings of the churches of France, as a companion to his beautiful work on Italy. The French themselves have no work containing such valuable and accurate illustrations of their national monuments, as these drawings of Mr. Knight.

Arrived within the town, the traveller will commonly find narrow streets, with no pavement at the sides, but a huge gutter in the centre, neither clean nor sweet, lighted at night by lamps (réverbères) swinging from ropes attached to the houses on either side. After passing one or more barracks, the number of which and of soldiers is striking every where, the barrack being often a sequestrated convent or church, he will reach the grand Place or square. On one side of it, or in some other conspicuous situation, appears a large white-washed building, graced probably with a portico in front, guarded by a sentinel, surmounted by a tricolor flag, and fenced round by a tall iron railing tipped with gilt spear-heads. This is the préfecture or sous-préfecture.

There are many institutions and establishments in French towns deserving high commendation and general imitation in England: such are the abattoirs, or slaughter-houses, always in the outskirts; the public cemeteries, always removed beyond the walls; even the public walks to be found in every French town, though not suited altogether to English ideas of recreation, yet show an attention to the health and enjoyment of the people which is worthy of imitation north of the Channel.

In all the larger towns there is a museum of natural history, and generally of paintings, which, although for the most part of inferior merit, are commendable as institutions for public recreation.

Still more commendable are the public libraries and reading rooms, arranged in convenient apartments with salaried librarians, common in all French provincial towns. An amiable traveller observes, "I could not visit these libraries without wishing that similar institutions could be introduced into England, where the easy access to books in every part of the kingdom could not but prove at once agreeable and beneficial. The encouragement of such an object would be a wise application of the public money."—Mr. Gally Knight's Tour in Normandy.

There are three authors whose works should be perused before entering France: Cæsar, for its ancient history; Froissart, for its feudal history; and Arthur Young, for the picture of France before the revolution: his vivid local descriptions hold good to the present day.

To those who would attain some insight into the French character, previously to any personal intercourse with the people, no more agreeable or useful work can be recommended than "A Comparative View of the Social Condition of England and France," by the Editor of Madame du Deffand's Letters, the author of which has studied the national character through the double medium of long personal intercourse with the highest classes of society—and of an intimate acquaintance with the history of the country.

n. LIST OF THE 86 DEPARTMENTS INTO WHICH FRANCE IS DIVIDED, AND OF THE 33 ANCIENT PROVINCES COMPOSING THEM.

Provinces.	Départemens.	Chefs-Lieux.
Ile de France, with la Brie, &c.	Seine.	Paris.
	Seine-et-Oise.	Versailles.
	Seine-et-Marne.	Melun.
	Oise.	Beauvais.
	Aisne.	Laon.
Picardie.	Somme.	Amiens.
Artois and Boulonnais.	Pas-de-Calais.	Arras.
Flandre and Hainault Français,	Nord.	Lille.
Normandie.	Seine-Inférieure.	Rouen.
	Eure.	Evreux.
	Calvados.	Caen.
	Orne.	Alençon.
	Manche	Saint-Lô.
Bretagne.	Ille-et-Vilaine.	Rennes.
	Côtes-du-Nord.	Saint-Brieux.
	Finisterre.	Quimper.
	Morbihan.	Vannes.
	Loire-Inférieure.	Nantes.
Orléanois.	Loiret.	Orléans.
	Loir-et-Cher.	Blois.
Beauce and Pays Chartrain.	Eure-et-Loire.	Chartres.
Maine.	Sarthe.	Le Mans
	Mayenne.	Laval.
Anjou.	Maine-et-Loire.	Angers.
Touraine.	Indre-et-Loire.	Tours.
Poitou.	Vendée.	Bourbon-Vendée.
	Deux-Sèvres.	Niort.
	Vienne.	Poitiers.
Berri.	Indre.	Châteauroux.
	Cher.	Bourges.
Marche.	Creuze.	Gueret.
Limousin.	Haute-Vienne.	Limoges.
	Corrèze.	Tulle.
Angoumois.	Charente.	Angoulême.
Saintonge and Aunis.	Charente-Inférieure.	La Rochelle.
Périgord.	Dordogne.	Périgueux.
Guyenne.	Gironde.	Bordeaux.
	Lot-et-Garonne.	Agen.
	Lot.	Cahors.
	Tarn-et-Garonne.	Montauban.
	Aveyron.	Rhodez.
Armagnac (part of Gascogne).	Gers.	Auch.
Bigorre (part of Gascogne).	Hautes-Pyrénées.	Tarbes.
Gascogne.	Landes	Mont-de-Marsan.

Provinces.	Départemens.	Chefs-Lieux.
Bearn and French Navarre.	Basses-Pyrénées.	Pau.
Comté de Foix.	Arriége.	Foix.
Roussillon.	Pyrénées-Orientales.	Perpignan
Languedoc	Haute-Garonne.	Toulouse.
	Tarn.	Alby.
	Aude.	Carcassone.
	Hérault.	Montpellier.
	Gard.	Nismes.
Vivarais.	Ardèche.	Privas.
Gévaudan.	Lozère.	Mende.
Velay.	Haute-Loire.	Le Puy.
Comtat Venaissin, Orange, &c.	Vaucluse.	Avignon.
Provence.	Bouches-du-Rhône.	Marseille.
	Var.	Draguignan.
	Basses-Alpes.	Digne.
Dauphiné.	Isère.	Grenoble.
	Drôme.	Valence.
	Hautes-Alpes.	Gap.
Lyonnois and Beaujolois.	Rhône.	Lyon.
Forez.	Loire.	Montbrison.
Auvergne.	Puy-de-Dôme.	Clermont.
	Cantal.	Aurillac.
Bourbonnois.	Allier.	Moulins.
Nivernois.	Nièvre.	Nevers.
Bresse, Bugey, &c.	Ain.	Bourg.
Bourgogne (duché)	Saône-et-Loire.	Mâcon.
	Côte-d'Or.	Dijon.
	Yonne.	Auxerre.
Comté de Bourgogne, or Franche-Comté.	Doubs.	Besançon.
	Jura.	Lons-le-Saulnier.
	Haute-Saône.	Vesoul.
Champagne.	Aube.	Troyes.
	Marne.	Châlons-sur-Marne.
	Haute-Marne.	Chaumont.
	Ardennes.	Mezières.
Lorraine.	Meurthe.	Nancy.
	Meuse.	Bar-le-Duc.
	Moselle.	Metz.
	Vosges.	Epinal.
Alsace.	Bas-Rhin.	Strasburg.
	Haut-Rhin.	Colmar.
Corsica.	Corse.	Ajaccio.

o. THE ENGLISH ABROAD.

It may not be amiss here briefly to consider the causes which render the English so unpopular on the Continent; as to the fact of their being so, it is to be feared there can be no doubt. In the first place, it arises from the number of ill-conditioned persons (mauvais sujets) who, not being in condition to face the world at home, scatter themselves over foreign lands, and bring no little discredit upon their country. But in addition to these, there are many respectable and wealthy persons, who, through inattention, unguardedness, wanton expenditure in some cases, niggardly parsimony in others, but, above all, from an unwillingness to accommodate themselves to the feelings of the people they are among, contribute not a little to bring their own nation into disrepute. The Englishman abroad too often forgets that he is the representative of his country, and that his countrymen will be judged by his own conduct; that by affability, moderation, and being easily pleased, he will conciliate; whereas by caprice, extravagant squandering, or ill-timed niggardness, he affects the reception of the next comer.

There are many points, however, in which our character is misunderstood by foreigners. The morose sullenness attributed by them to the Englishman is, in perhaps nine cases out of ten, nothing more than involuntary silence, arising from his ignorance of foreign languages, or at least from his want of sufficient fluency to make himself readily understood, which thus prevents his enjoying society. If an Englishman were fully aware how much it encreases the pleasure and profit of travelling to have made some progress in foreign languages before they set foot on the Continent, no one would think of quitting home until he had devoted at least some months to hard labour with grammars and dictionaries.

Englishmen and Protestants, admitted into Roman Catholic churches, at times are often inconsiderate in talking loud, laughing, and stamping with their feet while the service is going on: a moment's reflection should point out to them that they should regard the feelings of those around them who are engaged in their devotions. Above all, they should avoid as much as possible turning their backs upon the altar.

Our countrymen have a reputation for pugnacity in France: let them therefore be especially cautious not to make use of their fists, however great the provocation, otherwise they will rue it. No French magistrate or judge will listen to any plea of provocation; fine and imprisonment are the offender's inevitable portion.

p. SKELETON TOUR THROUGH FRANCE, TO EMBRACE THE PRINCIPAL OBJECTS OF CURIOSITY, AND TO OCCUPY FIVE OR SIX MONTHS.

Havre — By land up the N. bank of the Seine, halting to explore its beauties and curiosities.
Rouen (to Paris by railway).
Andelys.
Descend the Seine by steamer to Honfleur.
Caen.
Bayeux (Cherbourg).
Vire.
Avranches and Mont St. Michel.
St. Malo.
Dinant (Brest and Quimper).
Vannes and Carnac.
Nantes — Clisson.
Ascent of the Loire to Angers.
Saumur.
Chinon.
Tours.
Loches — Chenonceaux.
Amboise.
Blois — Chambord.
Orleans.
Bourges.
Clermont — Puy de Dôme.
Mont Dore.

Cantal.
Le Puy.
St. Etienne.
Lyons.
Descent of Rhone — Valence.
Montelimart — Aubenas — Ardèche.
Viviers on the Rhone.
Orange.
Avignon — Pont du Gard.
Nismes.
Montpellier.
Narbonne.
Toulouse.
Descent of the Garonne.
Bordeaux.
Bayonne.
Pau.
Tour of the W. Pyrenees.
St. Gaudens.
Tour of the E. Pyrenees.
Perpignan.
Narbonne.
Montpellier.
Arles — Aix.
Marseilles.
Toulon.
Cannes.
Digne.
Sisteron.
Gap.
Embrun — Val Queiras.
Briançon.
Pass of Lauteret — Mont Pelvoux.
Bourg d'Oysans.
Grenoble — Vale of Gresivaudan.
Grande Chartreuse.
Bourg.
Châlons-sur-Saône.
Dijon.
Besançon.
Colmar.
Strasburg.
Nancy.
Troyes.
Châlons-sur-Marne.
Rheims.
Soissons.
Amiens.
Boulogne.

q. ROUTE AND TIME FROM LONDON TO MARSEILLES TO MEET THE OVERLAND MAIL AT MALTA, SECURING BEFOREHAND PLACES IN THE MALLE POSTE.

	Hours.
London to Brighton and Dieppe - - -	11
Dieppe to Paris by Rouen (Railway) - - -	13
(say 32¾ hours from London to Paris.)
In Paris - - - - -	12 or 36
Paris to Marseilles (Malle poste) - - - -	66
(3 nights, 2½ days.)

You arrive at Marseilles at 6 A. M.; the government steamers start at 5 P. M. from Marseilles to Malta, the 1st, 11th, and 21st of every month.

In order to be enabled to remain in England till the last moment, it is necessary to write to a correspondent at Paris to secure a place in the 2 malle postes by payment a week beforehand, or even a fortnight, to make sure. Start from London on the evening of the 4th.

At Marseilles it is necessary to get the passport visé by the British consul, the local police (and the Neapolitan consul, if you intend to land at Naples); also a bill of health, and a permis d'embarquement.

Persons wishing to travel more leisurely, and to avoid fatigue, should start on the first of the month or earlier, take the diligence from Paris to Châlons, whence they may proceed by water down the Saône and Rhone to Avignon or Arles, within 50 m. of Marseilles.

A place in the coupé of the diligence from Paris to Marseilles costs 4l. 5s.

ABBREVIATIONS, &c. USED IN THE HAND-BOOK.

The points of the Compass are often marked simply by the letters N. S. E. W.

(rt.) right, (l.) left, — applied to the banks of a river. The right bank is that which lies on the right hand of a person whose back is turned towards the source or the quarter from which the current descends.

kilom. for kilomètre.	Cent. for Century.
m. for mile.	R. Rte. for Route.
Dept. for Department.	p. for page.
Inhab. for Inhabitants.	St. Stat. for Railway Station.

The names of Inns precede the description of every place, (often in a parenthesis,) because the first information needed by a traveller is where to lodge. The best Inns, as far as they can be determined, are placed first.

Instead of designating a town by the vague words "large" or "small," the amount of the population, according to the latest census, is almost invariably stated, as presenting a more exact scale of the importance and size of the place.

Every Route has a number, corresponding with the figures attached to the Route on the General Map of France, which thus serves as an index to the Book; at the same time that it presents a tolerably exact view of the great high roads of France, and of the course of public conveyances.

DIRECTIONS FOR PLACING THE MAPS.

The Seine, and Railways to Rouen, to face page - - - 27
The Loire - - - - - - - 179
The Pyrenees - - - - - - - 273
The Rhone — Lyons to Marseilles - - - - 433
Index Map of France at the end.

HAND-BOOK

FOR

TRAVELLERS IN FRANCE.

SECTION I.

PICARDY. — ILE DE FRANCE. — NORMANDY.

Introductory Information.

OBJECTS OF INTEREST. — COUNTRY OF NORMANDY. — ARCHITECTURAL REMAINS. — SKELETON TOUR.

ROUTES.

 The names of places are printed in italics only in those routes where the places are described.

ROUTE		PAGE
1	Calais to Paris, by St. Omer, Amiens, and Chantilly	3
2	Calais to Paris, by Boulogne, Abbeville, Beauvais, and St. Denis	9
5	Dieppe to Paris, by Gisors and Pontoise	22
6	Dieppe to Rouen	27
8	Paris to Rouen (RAILROAD)	27
9	Paris to Rouen. — Lower Road, by St. Germain, Mantes, and Louviers	28
10	Paris to Rouen. — Upper Road, by Gisors, or Magny	44
11	THE SEINE. (A.) — St. Germain to Rouen. — Roche Guion. — Château Gaillard	46
12	THE SEINE. (B.) — Rouen to Havre	51
13	Rouen to Havre. — Lower Road, by St. Georges Boscherville, Jumièges, Caudebec, and Lillebonne	55
14	Rouen to Havre. — Upper Road, by Yvetot and Bolbec	63
18	Havre to Dieppe and Abbeville, by Fécamp and Eu	64
21	Rouen to Alençon, by Bernay, Broglie, and Séez	68
23	Rouen to Caen, by Brionne or by Honfleur	69
24	Havre to Caen	70
25	Paris to Caen, by Evereux and Lisieux	70
26	Caen to Cherbourg, by Bayeux	78
27	Cherbourg to St. Malo, by Coutances. — Granville. — Avranches. — Mont St. Michel, and Dol	87
29	Caen to Tours, by Falaise. — Alençon	98
31	Caen to Rennes by Vire, Mortain, and Fougères	100
32	Bayeux to St. Lo and Avranches	102

PICARDY and Ile de France, through which lie the routes to Paris from Calais and Boulogne, present no attractions of picturesqueness, but some interesting historical associations to Englishmen, and a few fine examples of Gothic architecture, the chief of which are the cathedrals of Amiens, Beauvais, Abbeville.

Normandy, on the other hand, is full of interest in many respects : — it is remarkable for varied outline of swelling hills waving with corn ; for beautiful valleys abounding in orchards, and in rich pasturages, on which large herds of cattle are reared, and traversed by winding rivers; for richness and careful cultivation; and, above all, for remains of antiquity; venerable cities, the delight of the painter; noble cathedrals, abbeys, and churches, not confined merely to the larger towns, but scattered over the country, so that every little village in some parts possesses a fine specimen of Gothic architecture. Normandy is decidedly among the most attractive portions of France. Parts of the upper country are certainly flat, bare, monotonous tableland; but in its joyous sunny slopes and winding dales, in its hedgerows, orchards, thatched cottages with gardens, in the general character of the landscape of La Basse Normandie, especially in its verdure, frequent village spires, and white chalk cliffs, an Englishman recognises with pleasure the features of his own Fatherland, which no other part of the Continent affords. He may also take pleasure in remembering that this was the cradle whence came the wise and hardy bands of conquerors from whose possession of England that country dates her rising prosperity and greatness.

To those who are fond of Gothic architecture, especially to the architect and antiquary, Normandy will afford a rich treat. Rouen, a city possessing much of the old Teutonic character in its edifices, and containing not only a magnificent cathedral, but, if possible, a still finer church in St. Ouen, is certainly one of the most interesting places in France, and will alone furnish occupation for many days.

Caen is also interesting, but in a less degree; but in its vicinity are a great number of curious village churches. The ruined abbeys, Boscherville, Jumièges, &c., on the N. bank of the Seine, are remarkable examples of genuine Norman architecture; and the scenery of the river on whose banks and peninsulas they lie, — the great water highway connecting Paris with its port of Havre, is so very pleasing that it deserves to be seen both from land and water. The cathedrals of Bayeux (famed for its tapestry) and of Coutances also are noble edifices.

Normandy abounds in old castles; of which the most interesting, both in a historical and picturesque point of view, are Château Gaillard, the favourite stronghold of Richard Cœur de Lion, Falaise, the birth-place of William the Conqueror, and many others, the cradles of our English noblesse, whence they derive their titles; and, above all, Mont St. Michel, which possesses a triple interest as an historical fortress, a remarkable ecclesiastical edifice, and a most grand and striking object.

The Roman theatre at Lillebonne deserves mention as an interesting example of an edifice of the kind, and almost the only one existing in Northern Europe.

The most picturesque parts of Normandy are the banks of the Seine, from St. Germains to Havre, and especially from Rouen to Havre, though its innumerable islands, planted with rows of poplars and willows, are often monotonous; the vicinity of Vire and of Avranches charmingly posted on a hill top, whence the view extending to the Mont St. Michel, rising out of the sea, is peculiarly imposing.

The Dock-yard and Break-water of Cherbourg, at the extremity of the promontory called the Cotentin, which deserves to be explored for its geological peculiarities, and the Château d'Eu, the summer residence of H. M. Louis Philippe, must not be omitted among the curiosities of Normandy.

 In going from Paris to Rouen and Havre, and vice versâ, the traveller should by all means choose the lower roads, along the banks of the Seine, which are highly picturesque, in preference to the upper roads, which, though shorter, are dull and tiresome.

Skeleton Tour of 3 Weeks through Normandy.

Southampton to 1 Havre.
Tancarville.
3 Lillebonne.
Caudebec.
Jumièges.
4 St. Geo. Boscherville.
7 Rouen.
Château Gaillard.
Descent of the Seine to Honfleur (or to Havre, and by another steamer to)
8 Caen.
10 Falaise and back.
11 Bayeux.
12 Valonges.
13 Cherbourg.
14 Coutances.
St. Lo.
15 Vire.
Mortain.
16 Avranches.
Mt. St. Michel.
17 Dol.
18 Dinant.
19 St. Malo, by steamer.
21 Jersey and Southampton.

The best account of the architectural remains of Normandy will be found in Mr. Gally Knight's "Tour in Normandy;" Whewell's "Notes on German and French Churches;" Dawson Turner's "Tour in Normandy," one of the earliest descriptions of the country published in England or France; Cotman and Pugin's "Illustrative Plates;" and Caumont's "Histoire Sommaire de l'Architecture du Moyen Age." Also Miss Costello's "Bocages and Vines."

ROUTE 1.

CALAIS TO PARIS BY ST. OMER AND AMIENS.

281 kilom. = 174 Eng. m.

This route, 6 m. longer than that by Beauvais, will be preferred by those who wish to visit the noble cathedral of Amiens. The Lille malle-poste follows the route from Paris as far as Doullens.

Diligence daily in 28 hours.

CALAIS, in R. 2. p. 9.

The country about Calais, and for some distance inland, is low and wet, intersected by scummy ditches, and traversed by rows of pollard willows. The villages are composed chiefly of mud cottages. The peasants, men as well as women, are frequently seen mounted on very high pattens to avoid the dirt. The road crosses the Pont Sans Pareil, thrown over the two canals from St. Omer to Calais, and from Ardres to Gravelines, at the point where they cut each other at right angles, 3 m. before reaching 16 Ardres, a small fortress. The plain between this place and Guisnes, a little to the W. of the road, is the Field of the Cloth of Gold, the scene of the meeting between Henry VIII. and Francis I., 1520, called Le Champ du Drap d'Or, from the cloth of gold with which the tents and pavillons of the monarchs and their suites, of 5696 persons with 4325 horses, were covered.

8 La Recousse.

18 St. Omer. — Inns: L'Ancienne Poste best; Grande Ste. Catherine.

This is a third-rate fortress, whose means of defence lie less in its actual fortifications than in the marshes which surround it, and the facility afforded by the river Aa, on which it stands, of flooding the land round about, so as to leave only ¼ of its circuit unprotected by the waters. Although it contains a population of 19,344 souls, it is a very dull place. There are, however, two ecclesiastical edifices worthy of notice.

The Cathedral, at the upper end of the Rue St. Bertin, is a fine building, showing the transition from the round to the pointed style. The E. end is a good example of the polygonal termination of churches, with projecting chapels, so common on the Continent. The interior is good;—the small Lady Chapel has been recently decorated.

At the opposite extremity of the same street stand the scanty remains of the famous Abbey Church of St. Bertin, at one time the noblest Gothic monument of French Flanders — in its present state a disgrace to the town, and a reproach to the government. For be it known that its destruction has been perpetrated since 1830! At the outbreak of the great Revolution the monastery was suppressed; the Convention spared it; and though under the Directory it was sold for the materials, unroofed, and stripped of its woodwork and metal, yet its walls remained comparatively uninjured until the magistrates, a few years ago, barbarously pulled it down to afford employment to some labourers out of work! The fragment remaining consists of a stately tower built in the 15th century (1431—1461), displaying the ornaments of the florid Gothic in the mutilated panelling on its walls, and bits of tracery in its windows; a small portion of the nave remains attached to it. The tower, threatening to fall, has been propped by an ugly, ill-contrived buttress of masonry; there is some talk of converting it into a museum. The town is well seen from its top, but there is nothing else of interest in the view. Within the walls of the Abbey of St. Bertin the feeble Childeric III., the last king of the first race, ended his days; here also Becket sought refuge when a fugitive from England.

A Seminary for the education of English and Irish Catholics exists here: it has succeeded the celebrated Jesuit's College founded by Father Parsons for the education of young Englishmen. Daniel O'Connell was brought up here for the priesthood; and several of the conspirators engaged in the Gunpowder Plot were pupils of the same school. There are not more than 15 or 20 students at present.

The road to Lille and Brussels (Route 188) turns off here. Diligences daily. A diligence runs daily to Boulogne.

19 Aire, another small fortress of 3rd class, contains a Gothic Church, St. Paul's, and a belfry built in the 18th century, rising above the public square. Mallebranche was born here.

13 Lillers.

11 Pernes.

13 St. Pol.

15 miles NW. of this, and 2 miles S. of the post station, Fruges, is Azincour (1415), a village of dirty farms and poor cottages, uninteresting but for its battle-field. Only the foundations remain of the castle mentioned by Shakespear "that stands hard by." Azincour lies on the l. of the high road from St. Omer to Abbeville, which passes through the village of Ruisseauville, mentioned in all the accounts of the battle. The hottest of the fight raged between Azincour and the commune of Tramecour, where a wood still exists corresponding with that in which Henry posted his archers, who contributed so much to the victory, each armed with an iron-pointed stake, to fix in the ground before him and serve the purpose of the modern bayonet.

Henry, like his great-grandfather Edward III., previous to Crecy, had marched with a force of only 9000 men at the utmost, through a hostile country, from Harfleur on his way to Calais. On reaching the Somme below Abbeville he found the ford by which Edward had crossed staked, and was obliged to continue up the l. bank, finding every passage fortified and every bridge broken, until he arrived above Amiens, where he gained the rt. bank by a ford which had been left open. The French army, though more than six times the number of the English, retreated before him beyond St. Pol, and there drew up across the road to Calais to dispute his passage. There is thus a considerable similarity in the events attending the victories of Crecy and Azincour, and these two famous battle-fields are not more than 20 miles apart (see p. 16.)

13 Frevent.

14 Doullens, chef-lieu of an arrondissement in the department of the Somme, has a Citadel built by Vauban, now a state prison where political offenders are confined. St. Martin's Church is said to be remarkable for the lightness of the pillars which support it.

14 Talmas.

16 AMIENS. — Inn: H. de France et d'Angleterre, good.'

Amiens is an industrious manufacturing town of 46,129 inhabitants, formerly capital of Picardy, now chef-lieu of the department of the Somme, and situated on that river, which passes through the town split into eleven branches, and renders essential service in turning the water-wheels of many of the numerous manufactories, whose tall chimneys are seen rising above the other buildings, and are clustered around the outskirts. The weaving of cotton velvets, chiefly for Spanish consumption, and the spinning of cotton and woollen yarn, are the principal branches of industry. Amiens is the cradle of the cotton manufacture of France, which dates no farther back than 1773.

The object which deservedly concentrates the attention of travellers at Amiens is the Cathedral, one of the noblest Gothic edifices in Europe. It was begun 1220, only two years later than Salisbury, though in a much more mature style than that edifice. It was designed and begun by the architect Robert De Lusarche, but continued and completed 1269 by Thomas and Regnault de Cormont, except the W. front, not finished until the end of the 14th century. Three vast and deeply recessed portals lead into it; the arches supported by a long array of statues in niches instead of pillars, while rows of statuettes supply the place of mouldings, so that the whole forms one mass of sculpture; an arrangement of constant occurrence in French Gothic, though rare in English. The sculpture of these porches merits attention; over the centre door the bas relief represents the Last Judgment; the statues are those of the 12 Apostles. Over the rt. hand porch are the Death and Assumption of the Virgin; over that on the l. is the legend of St. Firmin, the apostle of Picardy. Above the portals runs a colossal line of French kings, behind which appears a noble wheel window; and the whole is flanked by two stately but unfinished towers.

"The interior is one of the most magnificent spectacles that architectural skill can ever have produced. The mind is filled and elevated by its enormous height (140 feet), its lofty and many-coloured clerestory, its grand proportions, its noble simplicity. The proportion of height to breadth is almost double that to which we are accustomed in English cathedrals; the lofty, solid piers, which bear up this height, are far more massive in their plan than the light and graceful clusters of our English churches, each of them being a cylinder with 4 engaged columns. The polygonal E. apse is a feature which we seldom see, and no where so exhibited and on such a scale; and the peculiar French arrangement which puts the walls at the outside edge of the buttresses, and thus forms interior chapels all round, in addition to the aisles, gives a vast multiplicity of perspective below, which fills out the idea produced by the gigantic height of the centre.

Such terms will not be considered extravagant when it is recollected that the vault is half as high again as the roof of Westminster Abbey." — Whewell.

The entire length is 442 feet. The general character of the architecture is that of the early English, except the geometric tracery of the windows. The triforium is glazed, which gives great lightness to the interior. Just within the central porch are two fine brass effigies of bishops; that on the l. as you enter is Evrard de Fouilly, who laid the first stone of the church; that on the rt. Geoffroi d' Eu, "learned," as his epitaph tells us, "in medicine as well as theology." The splendid pulpit, the work of an artist of Amiens, Dupuis, is supported by statues of Faith, Hope, and Charity.

Placed at the crossing of the transept, the spectator may admire the three magnificent rose windows, all of elaborate tracery and varied patterns, filled with rich stained glass, each nearly 100 feet in circumference, which form a great ornament to this church, and surpass every thing of the sort which England can produce. The font in the N. transept is an oblong trough of stone, probably of the 10th or 11th century.

Round the wall which separates the choir from its aisles run a series of curious sculptures, in high relief, representing on the S. side the legend of St. Firmin, and on the N. the acts and death of John the Baptist. They date from the end of the 15th century.

The head of St. John the Baptist, brought from Constantinople at the time of the Crusades, has always been considered, and still remains, the most valuable relic possessed by this church. It is deposited in the side chapel dedicated to St. John. Several other heads of St. John existed before the Revolution in other churches of France, and one, indeed, in the neighbouring abbey of St. Acheul; but this, it was maintained, was the genuine one. Since the Revolution, the skull has been reduced to the frontal bone and upper jaw.

Attached to a monument of Canon Lucas, at the back of the high altar, and facing the Lady Chapel, is a weeping angel, which has received more praise than it seems to deserve on the score of art; it is known as l'enfant pleureur. Blasset is the sculptor's name.

The choir, terminating in a semicircular E. end, the elegantly groined roof resting on compressed lancet-pointed arches, yields in beauty to no part of the church. It is also especially distinguished for the elaborately carved woodwork of its 116 stalls: in variety of invention and delicacy of execution there is nothing finer of the kind in Europe. The intricate details of the tabernacles and lace-like parapets, the bold drawing, and effective though coarse expression in the bas reliefs, representing subjects from Holy Writ, the Life of the Virgin, &c., and the close imitation of nature in the twining tendrils and playful foliage of the vine and other plants, deserve minute attention. The carvers were Arnoult Boullin and Alex. Huet, menuisiers of Amiens: the work was finished in 1520. The diapering of fleur-de-lis at the back of the seats was effaced by order of the government in 1830. To appreciate the vast proportions and examine the details of this cathedral, the visitor ought to ascend to the triforium gallery; thence he may mount the tower and enjoy the view over the vale of the Somme, remarking in his ascent the turret with the stone table, where Henri IV. posted himself to watch the retreat of the Spaniards in 1597. The roof is a wonderful piece of carpentry, 46 feet high; a forest of oak and chestnut must be contained in it.

Within the cathedral of Amiens, Edward III. did homage for Guienne to Philippe of Valois, 1329; and here, in 1385, Isabel of Bavaria was married to the idiot king Charles VI.

The other buildings in the town possess comparatively slight interest. The deserted Château of St. Remi, now a stable, was a rich specimen of the latest florid Gothic, the beauty of which is destroyed by mutilations. In the Hotel de Ville, a building of 1600, the treaty of "the Peace of Amiens" was signed, 1802, by the plenipotentiaries, Joseph Buonaparte for France, Lord Cornwallis for England, Chevalier Azara for Spain, and M. Schimmelpenninck for Holland. The hall is hung with pictures of the modern French school, of slight merit. There is a Museum, containing some antiquities, paintings, &c.

A Boulevard surrounds the town, occupying the site of the ancient ramparts, and, being planted with trees, forms an agreeable promenade. A Citadel, however, remains, built on the rt. bank of the Somme by Henri IV., and strengthened by modern works. The Spaniards, in 1597, gained the city, which had claimed the privilege of exemption from a military garrison, through the stratagem of one Hernando Tello de Porto Carrero, Spanish governor of Doullens, who, disguising himself and a band of companions as peasants, entered the town at early dawn, along with the market folk, driving a waggon laden with fruit, which he halted under the gateway. In passing the gate it was contrived that a sack of walnuts should burst; and while the unsuspecting guards were occupied on all-fours scrambling for its scattered contents, the Spaniards fell on them and put them to the sword. In vain the portcullis was hastily lowered; the waggon had been drawn up so as to catch it as it fell, leaving a passage by which a party of armed Spaniards, in ambush outside, gained easy admittance.

Henri IV., not yet firmly fixed in his throne, felt the loss of Amiens as a severe blow, and hastened to recover it. He was aided in the siege and capture of the town, 1598, by a body of 4000 Englishmen, under Sir Arthur Savage, furnished by Queen Elizabeth.

Amiens was the Samarobriva of the Romans; and the Ambiani, the Gallic inhabitants of the district (whence the name Amiens), are mentioned by Cæsar. Here Merovée was proclaimed king by being raised on the shield of his victorious soldiers.

The following eminent persons were born in the town or its vicinity: — Peter the Hermit, preacher of the first crusade; Gabrielle d'Estrées, the cherished mistress of Henri IV.; Ducange, author of the "Glossarium ad Scriptores mediæ et infimæ Latinitates;" Gresset the poet, author of "Vertvert;" Delambre, the astronomer.

Amiens is celebrated among gourmands for its pâtés de canard.

Diligences go daily to Lille by Arras, to Beauvais, and to Abbeville (see p. 17.), as well as to Paris and Calais.

There is a coche d'eau, or small steamer on the Somme to Abbeville.

The Abbey of St. Acheul, on the outskirts of the town, was converted into a Jesuit's college under the Restoration.

19 Flers.

13 Breteuil. — Inns: Ange, not good; D'Angleterre.

The Abbey of Ste. Marie is an ancient Gothic building.

A road stretches hence through Noiremont, 12 k., to Beauvais (p. 17.), (16 k.).

18 St. Just.

The park and château of Fitzjames are passed on the right, shortly before reaching 16 Clermont sur Oise (Inn, Croissant, tolerable), a prettily situated town on the slopes of a hill, surmounted by the Castle, which is now converted into a penitentiary for women, and so augmented by modern constructions that its antiquity would scarcely be suspected. It was, however, an important fortress from the 10th to the 16th century; taken by the English, 1359, and 1434, and by Henri IV. from the troops of the League, 1595. The elder Condé, disgusted with the court, retired hither, 1615, and fortified himself against attacks.

From the agreeable promenade du Chatellier, which surrounds its walls, jutting out over the valley, a beautiful view of its winding stream is obtained. Cassini, the astronomer and geographer, was a native of Clermont.

10 Laigneville.

The river Oise is crossed at Creil, a town of 1500 inhabitants, on its l. bank. Only the foundations of a tower remain of the old Castle in which Charles VI. was shut up during his madness. It stood on the island below the bridge, but was destroyed at the Revolution.

There is a large delft manufactory at or near Creil.

A monotonously straight road through an avenue of trees, partly skirting the forest, leads to 12 Chantilly (Inns: H. du Bourbon Condé, not good; H. d'Angleterre), a town of 2524 inhabitants. The splendid château built by the great Condé, where he spent his latter years, after retiring from military life, in the society of Racine, Boileau, Bossuet, and the other literary men of his age, was levelled by the mob at the Revolution. The stables remain —a splendid pile, capable of lodging 180 horses.

He took great pride in this beautiful retreat, and pleasure in embellishing it; and when Louis XIV., who had a claim on it, indicated a desire to obtain possession, he said, "Vous êtes le mâitre: mais j'ai une grace à demander à V. M., c'est de me laisser à Chantilly comme votre concierge;" and the king had the moderation not to interfere. His affairs were never in a more desperate condition than at the moment when he was honoured by a visit from his cousin and sovereign, 1671; nevertheless, nothing could exceed the magnificence of the entertainment, rendered memorable by the suicide of le Grand Vatel, the cook, who ran himself through with his sword in despair because the fish did not arrive in time for dinner.*

In spite of the devastation of the Revolution, Chantilly is by no means stripped of interest, nor of souvenirs of its most distinguished owner. A noble author†, who visited it in 1841, has touchingly described its vast natural forest, its limpid and purling streams, its green Arbele poplars, which have taken root in the ruins of the Grand Château, and now quite overshadow them, its green turf drives, and its hedges of hawthorn. The Petit Château still existing, is full of memorials of Condé; and its gardens, restored in excellent taste, are once more perfumed by the blossoms of its beautiful orange grove, and glittering with the most brilliant flowers. Since the mysterious death of its late owner, the Duc de Bourbon, the last of the line of Condé, Chantilly has become the property of the Duc d'Aumale, fourth son of Louis Philippe. An Hospital, built and endowed by the deceased Prince de Condé, remains a monument of his munificence to the town.

The park and grounds are very beautiful, and, as well as the château and stable, are readily shown to strangers. The forest adjoining them has an extent of 6700 acres. Races are held here in the month of May.

The body of the aged Admiral Coligny, the noblest victim of the massacre of St. Bartholomew, after having been hung up by the heels on the gallows of Montfaucon, was secretly brought hither by Montmorency, and buried in the parish church, without the head, which was conveyed to Catherine de Medicis.

Chantilly is famed for its silk lace

* See Mad. de Sevigné.

† La Vie du Grand Condé, par le Vicomte de Mahon. 1842.

(blonde, so called from the light colour,) made here, to a less extent in the town itself than in the 20 or 30 neighbouring communes, the artificers being women and children. The manufacture was originally established 1710, by M. Moreau. There are now 7 large establishments; but they only give out the patterns and materials: the work is executed at the homes of the lace-makers.

In the midst of the forest of Chantilly, not far from the Etangs de Commelle, is a pretty little Gothic building, flanked by 4 towers at the corners, called Château de la Loge de Viarmes, built, it is said, by Queen Blanche of Castille, mother of St. Louis, in the style of the Sainte Chapelle, and at the same time. Its carved ornaments of snakes, frogs, lizards, snails, intermixed with foliage composed of water plants, are appropriate to the aquatic site: it was probably built for a fishing house. It was restored carefully in 1826. Not far from this is the ruined Cistercian Abbey of Rayaumont, founded by St. Louis, and now converted into a cotton mill. The valley of the Oise in this vicinity is very rich and fine.

10 Luzarches. Remains of an ancient castle of the French kings are said to exist here.

10 Ecouen. The chief building is the château of the Montmorency family, built in the reign of Francis I., now the property of the Duc d'Aumale, and converted into a maison succursale to the legion of honour.

Soon after leaving Ecouen, a fine view of Paris presents itself.

9 St. Denis, in Route 2.

9 PARIS. See Galignani's Guide to Paris, and p. 22.

ROUTE 2.

CALAIS TO PARIS BY BOULOGNE, ABBEVILLE, BEAUVAIS, AND ST. DENIS.

270 kilom. = 167¼ Eng. m.

Malleposte daily in 18 hours; takes 2 passengers. 2 diligences daily from Calais; 2 more diligences from Boulogne. It takes 25 hours to post from Calais to Paris, exclusive of stoppages.

CALAIS. — Inns: H. Dessin; very good. The bed-room in which the author of the Sentimental Journey slept is still marked Sterne's Room; and that occupied by Sir Walter Scott is also ticketed with his respected name. Quillac's Hotel. Hotel Meurice; no connection with the house of the same name at Paris, but tolerably good and clean. The preference generally given to Boulogne begins to diminish the custom of the hotel-keepers; and this circumstance leads them to seek to indemnify themselves by an increase of prices. 10 francs is the common charge for landing or shipping a 4-wheeled carriage.

For useful information on landing in France, see INTRODUCTION.

Calais has 12,508 inhabitants; it is a fortress of the 2nd class, situated in a most barren and unpicturesque district, with sandhills raised by the wind and sea on the one side, and morasses on the other, contributing considerably to its military strength, but by no means to the beauty of its position. An English traveller of the time of James I. described it as "a beggarly, extorting town; monstrous dear and sluttish." In the opinion of many, this description holds good down to the present time.

The harbour is not so deep as that of Boulogne. Passengers must sometimes land in boats, and wait for their baggage until the steamer can enter.

Except to an Englishman setting his foot for the first time on the Continent, to whom every thing is novel, Calais has little that is remarkable to show. After an hour or two it becomes tiresome, and a traveller will do well to quit it as soon as he has cleared his baggage from the custom-house, and procured the signature of the police to his passport, which, if he be pressed for time, will be done almost at any hour of the day or night, so as not to delay his departure. It is necessary to be aware of this, as the commissionaires of the hotels will sometimes endeavour to detain a stranger, under pretence of not being able to get his passport signed. The owner of the passport must repair to the police office himself to have it visé. Travellers not intending to go to Paris, but merely passing through the country, on the way to Ostend, Brussels, or Marseilles, are not compelled to exchange their passport for a passe provisoire. See Passports : Introduction. Persons unprovided with a passport may procure one from the British Consul for 4*s*. 6*d*.

Calais has of late become a manufacturing town ; the bobbin-net (tulle) trade flourishes in rivalry of that of England ; numerous mills have sprung up ; steam-engines are multiplying, and the inner ramparts have been removed, to make way for factories. The gates remain open all night. Water is scarce here, and throughout Artois. 55 millions of eggs are exported hence to England annually.

The Pier of Calais is an agreeable promenade, nearly ¾ mile long. It is decorated with a pillar, raised to commemorate the return of Louis XVIII. to France, which originally bore this inscription : —

" Le 24 Avril, 1814, S. M. Louis XVIII. débarqua vis-à-vis de cette colonne, et fut enfin rendu à l'amour des Français ; pour en perpétuer le souvenir, la ville de Calais a élevé ce monument."

" As an additional means of perpetuating this remembrance, a brazen plate had been let into the pavement, upon the precise spot where his foot first touched the soil. It was the left ; and an English traveller noticed it in his journal as a sinistrous omen, that when Louis le Désiré, after his exile, stepped on France, he did not put the right foot foremost." — Quarterly Review. At the revolution of July, both inscription and footmark were at once obliterated by the mob ; and the pillar now stands a monument merely of the mutability of French opinions and dynasties.

The principal gate leading from the sea-side into the town is that introduced by Hogarth into his well-known picture. It was built by Cardinal Richelieu, 1685.

No one needs to be reminded of the interesting incidents of the Siege of Calais by Edward III., which lasted 11 months, and of the heroic devotion of Eustace de St. Pierre and his 5 companions. Few, perhaps, are aware that the heroes of Calais not only went unrewarded by their own king and countrymen, but were compelled to beg their bread in misery through France. Calais remained in the hands of the English more than 200 years, from 1347 to 1558, when it was taken by the Duke de Guise. It was the last relic of the Gallic dominions of the Plantagenets, which, at one time, comprehended the half of France. Calais was dear to the English as the prize of the valour of their forefathers, rather than from any real value it possessed.

The English traveller should look at the Hôtel de Guise, originally the guildhall of the mayor and aldermen of the " staple of wool" established here by Edward III., 1363. It has many vestiges of English Tudor architecture. Henry VIII. used to lodge in it.

In the great Market Place stands the Hotel de Ville (Town Hall). In it are situated the police offices. In front of it are placed busts of St. Pierre ; of the Duc de Guise, surnamed Balafré, who conquered the town from the English ; and of the Cardinal de Richelieu, who built the Citadel on the W. of the town : above it rises a belfry, containing the chimes. In the same square is a tower, which serves as a land-mark by day and a light-house by night, to point out to sailors the entrance of the harbour.

The principal Church was built at the time when the English were masters of Calais. It is handsome, and surmounted by a stately tower and short steeple, which merit notice.

Lady Hamilton (Nelson's Emma) is buried in the public cemetery outside the town, on the road to Boulogne; she died here in great misery.

The walls round the town, and the pier jutting out nearly ¾ mile from the shore, are admirable promenades, and command a distinct view of the white cliffs of England, — a tantalising sight to the English exiles, fugitives from creditors, or compelled from other causes to leave their homes; a numerous class, both here and at Boulogne. There are many of our countrymen besides, who reside merely for the purpose of economising; so that the place is half Anglicised, and our language is generally spoken.

There is a small theatre here.

Calais is one of those places where the fraternity of Couriers have a station. Travellers should be cautioned not to engage one unless the landlord of an hotel, or some other respectable and responsible person, give him a character derived from personal knowledge; as many of these couriers remain at Calais only because some previous act of misconduct prevents them showing their faces on the opposite side of the Channel. The inn yards are generally well stocked with carriages to be let or sold; they are mostly old and rickety vehicles, and the hire demanded for them nearly equals that for which an excellent carriage may be obtained in London.

Steam boats 2 every day to Dover. The French vessel on the arrival of the Paris mail, about 10 a. m.; the English according to the tide. The average passage is 3½ hours. Fare, 10*s*. 6*d*. Carriages, 2*l*. 2*s*. Steamers go direct to London several times a week, in 10½ or 12 hours.

Malleposte daily to Paris (see p. 9.).

Diligences daily to Paris and Boulogne—to Lille, Tournay, and Brussels — to Lille and Courtrai, to meet the Belgian Railway—to Dunkirk—to St. Omer.

To the flat land immediately about Calais succeeds a hilly tract, unenclosed and uninteresting, which continues as far as Boulogne.

13 Haut Buisson.

The poor village Wissant, on the sea shore, about 4 m. N. of this, is supposed to be the Portus Itius of the Romans, the spot where Julius Cæsar embarked for the conquest of Great Britain. Roman remains are found in the neighbourhood. The harbour has long since been blocked up with sand.

8 Marquise, a town of 2000 inhabitants, having in its neighbourhood mines of coal and iron of no great importance, and quarries of a coarse grey marble.

Ambleteuse, another poor village on the coast, deserves mention only as the spot where James II. disembarked, Jan. 5. 1689. In the churchyard of Wimille, at the road side, 3 miles from Boulogne, the two unfortunate aëronauts Pilâtre de Rosier and Romain are buried; the balloon in which they had ascended from Boulogne (1785), intending to cross the channel, caught fire at an elevation of 3,600 ft. above the ground, and they were miserably dashed to pieces. An obelisk has been erected to their memory.

Prince Louis Buonaparte landed at Wimereux, August, 1840, on his foolish attempt upon Boulogne.

The road, previous to descending from the open high ground, passes close to a fort thrown up by Napoleon in 1804; beyond which, about 200 yards on the rt., rises the Napoleon column (see p. 15.)

A rapid descent leads under the walls of the old town into the lower or new town of 13 BOULOGNE. — Inns: Hôtel des Bains, situated close to the port, comfortable; a good cuisine and table d'hôte at 4 fr. Hôtel du Nord, also good. Hôtel d'Angleterre, moderate. H. de Londres. H. de la Marne.

Boulogne sur Mer is a sea-port in the channel or Pas de Calais, on the estuary of a small stream, the Liane, which forms a tide harbour, flanked on either side by wooden piers stretching out as far as low-water mark. It was the Roman GESSORIACUM. The old town occupies the summit of a hill, on which it was built for security in ancient times, and it is still encircled by its feudal ramparts, and entered by cavernous gateways. The new, or Basse Ville, stretching down the slopes of the hills which border the harbour, and under the brown cliffs which partly line it, is the chief seat of commerce, and contains the best hotels, streets, and shops.

The number of inhabitants is 29,145, among whom are at least 5,000 permanent English residents; indeed Boulogne, having the advantage of being within 12 hours of London, has become, since the peace, one of the chief British colonies abroad; and, by a singular reciprocity, on the very spot whence Napoleon proposed the invasion of our shores, his intended victims have quietly taken possession and settled themselves down. The town is enriched by English money; warmed, lighted, and smoked by English coal; English signs and advertisements decorate every other shop door, inn, tavern, and lodging-house; and almost every third person you meet is either a countryman or speaking our language; while the outskirts of the town are enlivened by villas and country-houses, somewhat in the style and taste of those on the opposite side of the channel. There are at least 120 boarding-schools (pensionnats) for youth of both sexes, many of them under English managers.

Le Port. The margin of the harbour concentrates the chief bustle and business; here is the landing place of the packets, and the Douane, whither passengers are first conveyed on their arrival to deliver their passports, and to be visited by the custom-house officers.

Almost all the 1300 vessels belonging to Boulogne are engaged in fishery, and the arrival and departure of the boats collects a crowd of fishermen and fisherwives in their singular and picturesque costume, such as the pencils of Prout and Stanfield are wont to portray. These people occupy a distinct quarter of the town on the North side of the harbour, the streets of which are draped with nets hung out from the fronts of the houses to dry, and in dress and manners are distinct from the rest of the inhabitants, speaking a peculiar patois, and rarely intermarrying. They are an industrious and very hard-working race, especially the women, and very religious; the perils and vicissitudes of their hard life reminding them more nearly than other classes of their dependence on Providence. The Boulogne fishing boats are the largest and best worked in the channel. A great number repair annually to the coast of Scotland for the herring fishery, and some go as far as Shetland and Iceland.

The depth of water at high tides varies between 16 and 24 feet. The present entrance to the harbour was formed 1829 somewhat to the W. of the old, and allows the packets to enter 1½ hour earlier and later than in the old. It is flanked on either side by wooden piers, that which projects from the end of the quay forming a pleasant walk when the tide is in. The number of persons who disembark here annually amounts to 56,000 or 60,000, and hence the chief source of the prosperity of Boulogne.

On one side of the harbour, on the margin of a fine sandy beach, is the Etablissement des Bains, a showy building, fronted with colonnades, containing subscription, ball, and reading rooms. In front is drawn up in long array a number of genuine bathing machines (voitures baignoires), the only ones of the sort to be found in France. Boulogne is much resorted to in summer as a watering-place, both by the Parisians and English, on account of sea-bathing, for which it is well adapted, having a fine sandy beach.

On the opposite (l.) side of the harbour is a semicircular basin, dug out of the sand by Napoleon, to contain the celebrated flotilla of flat-bottomed boats intended by him to transport an invading French army to the coasts of England, but happily not destined to reach our shores.

The Rue de l'Ecu, running parallel with the Liane, and the Grande Rue, ascending the hill towards the upper town, contain some of the best shops. About half-way up the Grande Rue is the Museum (in a building which was previous to the Revolution the Grande Séminaire). It deservedly ranks amongst the best provincial collections in France, is highly creditable to the town, and owes a large part of its contents to private donations. The series of arms, dresses, implements, weapons, &c. of various nations, including the full dress of a Lapland lady given by Admiral Rosamel, is very extensive. Here is an imaginary model of the Tower of Caligula, which stood on the heights above the town; also engravings of the siege of Boulogne under Henry VIII.; a curfew of earthenware; some curious fragments of sculpture of the 15th and 16th centuries from churches, &c.; a Last Judgment, a bas-relief carved in wood very elaborately; an extensive series of medals,—among them that celebrated one, which took too much for granted, struck by Napoleon 1804, and bearing the inscription "Descente en Angleterre," "Frappé à Londres," of which three impressions alone are said to exist, the die having been destroyed. The quantity of Roman antiquities, of pottery, glass, bronzes, coins, utensils of various kinds, found in and about the town by excavations, is very remarkable, as well as their good preservation. In digging the foundations of the Abbattoir on the road to Paris, a multitude of vases and other objects, with more than 1300 medals, relics of the Roman Bononia or Gessoriacum, came to light, and have been deposited here. A collection of siege pieces, or coins struck in haste in besieged towns, is curious, as well as a series of French Assignats, or paper money issued at the Revolution. The museum possesses a mummy pronounced by Champollion one of the finest in Europe, for the number and brilliancy of its paintings, &c.; it was brought from Biban el Molouk by Denon.

Persons interested in natural history will find collections in all departments, by no means contemptible in extent or preservation. The geology of the district is illustrated by a large series of specimens, including the ironstone of the Boulonnois, the marble of Marquise (lower oolite), and the coal. Of the Picture Gallery much cannot be said, but there are one or two tolerable modern paintings; a good sea piece by De la Croix.

The museum is open to the public Thursday, Saturday, and Sunday, from 10 to 4; strangers may obtain admission on other days by giving a small fee to the concièrge. Under the same roof is the Public Library, containing 22,000 volumes and 3000 MSS., many of them rare and richly illuminated.

The Old Town of Boulogne, on the summit of the hill, retains its three arched gateways, and the ancient ramparts which defended it in the 15th century, but offered a vain resistance to the assaults and cannonading of the army of Henry VIII. The town was restored, however, to Henri II. of France by the English (1550), in the the reign of Edward VI., by treaty, upon payment of 40,000 livres. In consideration of this a bronze bust of Henri (by David) decorates the esplanade outside the gate Des Dunes. The Ramparts form an airy and agreeable walk, running uninterruptedly round the town, and commanding views in all directions, over the sea and port, over the high ground to the E., occupied in turn by the camps of Caligula, Henry VIII., and Napoleon, and along the roads to Calais and Paris. In one corner of the walls is the old Citadelle, flanked by high round towers, and divided from the town by a fosse, but now much modernised externally, and converted into a barrack. In the midst of the old town, behind the Hotel de Ville, rises the antique tower of the Beffroi.

The Cathedral, a large modern building of Grecian architecture, has been in progress since 1827, being built by subscription, on the site of a Gothic one pulled down at the Revolution. Two ranges of curious stunted pillars, dating probably from the 11th century, which belonged to a crypt under the old church, have recently been discovered beneath the new one.

There are several Nunneries in the old town; that of the Ursulines is at No. 2. Rue de la Paille. The sisters, 40 or 50 in number, instruct a pension for young ladies. The Sœurs de Bon Secours (Rue St. Martin, No. 20.) devote themselves to attend on the sick, and their services are much esteemed by the poor.

Le Sage, the author of Gil Blas, who repaired to Boulogne in the latter years of his life to stay with his son, a canon of the cathedral, died 1747, in a house, No. 3. Rue du Château, as an inscription over the door points out. The existing building, however, is of much more recent date, and only occupies the site of the original house. Churchill the poet also died at Boulogne, whither he had come on a visit to John Wilkes, then a voluntary exile from England. Attempts made by the priests to obtain access to the dying man, in order to convert him to popery, were stoutly repelled by Wilkes.

There are 2 English Chapels here;—in the Rue St. Martin in the Haute Ville, and in the Rue du Temple; the latter, built by subscription of the English (1828), is capable of containing 1000 persons: — service at 11 and 3 on Sundays.

The Poste aux Lettres is at No. 28. Rue des Vieillards; it is open from 8 A. M. to 8 P. M. The British Consul resides in Rue des Vieillards.

Stubbs, Rue de l'Ecu, has an English reading room and circulating library.

The office for passports is open from 10 to 2; but passports are countersigned at later hours, in case of urgency.

On the very edge of the cliff, just above the sea-baths, a little to the E. of the port, are the scanty remains of solid brick walls known as La Tour d' Ordre (Turris Ardens, i.e. light tower) supposed to be the foundations of a tower built by Caligula the Roman emperor, A. D. 40, when he marched to the shore of the Channel with an army of 100,000 men, boasting that he intended to invade the opposite coast of Britain, but contenting himself with gathering a few shells, which he called the spoils of the ocean. The tower is supposed to have been intended for a lighthouse, but the remains are very scanty, and from the falling of the cliff even these are likely soon to disappear.

On the same heights, 18 centuries later, another emperor — Napoleon — encamped an army of more than 180,000 men, designed to invade England, and placed under the command of Soult, Ney, Davoust, and Victor. Buonaparte himself, during his visits to the camp, occupied a temporary barraque, which was raised within a few yards of the Roman tower. Thence he could survey his flotilla of 2,400 transports and flat-bottomed boats, and the shore on either side of the town, both under the cliff and upon the heights, bristling with batteries of cannon and mortars; while, in the distance, the vigilant fleets of England hovered incessantly. In one instance Nelson approached near enough to bombard the town and sink two of the floating batteries. "Boulogne," he writes, "was certainly not a pleasant place that morning; but it is not my wish to injure the poor inhabitants and the town is spared as much as the service will admit." It is stated, however, that most of the bombs fell short, and that in excavating the new harbour many tons of them were dug out. He afterwards made an unsuccessful attempt with the boats of his squadron to cut out the flotilla in the teeth of the batteries, and burn it. Another attempt, in 1804, to burn the flotilla with fire-ships, made by Lord Keith, was attended with no better result.

The flotilla of Boulogne formed only part of the deeply laid scheme of Napoleon for the destruction of England. He designed to collect together the combined fleets of France, Spain, and Holland, which for years previously he had been constructing in the harbours of Antwerp, Brest, Cadiz, and the Mediterranean, and with a squadron of 70 ships of the line to sweep the channel of the British. Under cover of this vast armament he intended to have crossed over with the army of Boulogne, expecting to reach London in 5 days, where he designed to have proclaimed parliamentary reform, abolishing the monarchy, and the house of peers, and substituting a republic!! The troops of the Boulogne expedition were so nicely drilled, and every man so accurately informed of the boat which was to transport him, that in 10½ minutes 25,000 were embarked;—and relanded and drawn up on the shore again in 13 minutes more. The whole of these projects and combinations, however, were scattered to the winds; the fleet of England, under Sir Robt. Calder, prevented the junction of those of the enemy, and Nelson finally annihilated them at Trafalgar.

A conspicuous memorial of this projected, but unaccomplished invasion, exists at the distance of nearly a mile from the town in the Colonne Napoléon, which surmounts the heights traversed by the road to Calais. It was begun by the grand army assembled for the invasion of England, as a monument to their leader and emperor. The first stone was laid by Marshal Soult, 1804; but its construction was discontinued after the departure of the troops, and the withdrawal of the subscriptions which they contributed out of their pay. Under Louis XVIII. it was resumed, with the ostensible design of commemorating the restoration of the Bourbons. In consequence, however, of the revolution of July it has resumed its original destination; and having been purged of carved fleurs-de-lis and royalist inscriptions, was dedicated, 1841, as a monument to Buonaparte, and surmounted by a bronze statue of him in his coronation robes by Bosio, and one of that sculptor's best works, while bronze bas-reliefs are destined to decorate the base. The pillar is of the Doric order, and 50 mètres = 164 ft. high, exclusive of the statue 16 ft., and is constructed of marble from the quarries of Marquise. A winding stair leads up to the top, whence a view may be had of the white cliffs of England.

¾ m. further, on the coast, a monument of marble commemorates the distribution of the order of the Legion of honour by Buonaparte to his troops, during one of his visits to the camp. Nearer at hand, attached to a small hamlet or group of houses down in the hollow, is the chapel of Jésus Flagellé; curious, because it exhibits an instance of the practice so common in the Romish church of making votive offerings. It is resorted to by the fishermen of Boulogne and their families before they go out to sea; and they have lined its walls with votive pictures, or even lithographs, and hung its roof with models of their barks, each to commemorate some rescue from the perils of the great deep. The chapel, a humble modern edifice, is about 1½ m. distant from Boulogne.

Steamers. To Dovor daily in 3 hours.

N. B. The passage is very little longer than from Calais to Dovor, and 24 m. of tedious land journey are saved.

———. To London; in summer almost daily; in winter two or three times a week, in 10 or 12 hours.

Diligences. 3 or 4 to Paris, in 20 hours, by Beauvais; 3 at 9 A. M. Diligences also pass through from Calais at 1 and 5 P. M.; but places cannot be secured by them. Diligences run to St. Omer, 2; to Abbeville; to Calais; to Samer; to Lille and Arras.

Landing and embarking at Boulogne (see INTRODUCTION). The porter's tariff for conveying luggage from the steam-boat to the custom-house, and thence to the hotel, or to the owner's residence, is fixed according to weight.

Fr.	Cents.
0	70	for 15 kilos (= 33 lbs.) or under.
1	0	for 15 to 100 kilos (= 220 lbs.)
1	50	for 100 kilos and upwards.

For excursions in the neighbourhood jackasses (baudets) are much in vogue.

The road to Paris, now macadamized nearly all the way, is destitute of interest, if we except the churches at Abbeville and Beauvais. These two towns are the best resting places.

On quitting Boulogne the road commands, from an eminence which it ascends, a view into the valley of the Liane — thenceforth it is monotonous and dull.

15 Samer (ruins of an abbey near this). Inn, Tête de Bœuf.

8 Cormont.

13 Montreuil sur Mer. Inns: Hôtel de l'Europe; Hôtel de France et d'Angleterre; Cour de France.

A second-rate fortress, on a hill rising out of the marshy valley of the Cache. It has a tall flamboyant church, with a fine W. doorway under the towers.

14 Nampont is situated within the department of the Somme which anciently formed the province of Picardy.

9 Bernay (La Poste comfortable— J. B. P.). The little seaport St. Valery is visible from the heights traversed by the road.

The wood seen on the l., at a little distance from the road, is a part of the forest of Crecy, the name of a village 12 m. from Abbeville; obscure in itself, but renowned for a victory gained in its precincts, August 26th, 1346, by Edward III. and 40,000 men over the French army of Philip of Valois 100,000 strong, commanded by the Count d'Alençon, which still, after the lapse of ages, remains one of the most brilliant in English annals. Here, upon that memorable day, to the winning of which the cannon, used according to some, for the first time, contributed less than the clothyard shafts of the English yeomen, there fell, on the side of the French, the Kings of Bohemia and Majorca, the Duke of Lorraine, the Count d'Alençon, the king's brother, with 1200 knights, 1500 gentlemen, 5000 men at arms, and 30,000 infantry. Here it was that the Black Prince gained his spurs, and the feathers which the princes of Wales bear to this day.

7 Nouvion. An extensive manufactory of beet-root sugar is seen on the left, 2 miles before reaching Abbeville.

The most pleasing view on the whole road is that of Abbeville, and of the fertile vale of the Somme, in which it is situated, from the summit of the long and steep descent which leads down to it.

13 Abbeville. — Inns: Hôtel de l'Europe, table-d'hôte dinner, 3 fr.; Tête de Bœuf: both very good.

An industrious manufacturing town, of 17,582 inhabitants, which, from its situation on the Somme, here a wide river, is accessible for vessels of 150 tons. Those who will penetrate into its narrow and filthy streets will find some quaint specimens of ancient domestic architecture, timber houses, &c.; but the chief object of interest which really ought to be seen is

The Cathedral of St. Wolfram. The W. front, and 5 first arches of the nave, are a portion of a magnificent design, never carried out, commenced in the reign of Louis XII., under the Cardinal George d'Amboise. The façade is a splendid example of the flamboyant style, consisting of three gorgeous portals surmounted by a pediment, and flanked by two towers; the whole covered with the richest flowing tracery, or panelling; the niches being filled with statues. The central door is curiously carved. The remainder of the church is a mean continuation of the first plan.

Diligences go from Abbeville to Eu and Dieppe (R. 18.), to Rouen and to Amiens.

St. Valery, at the mouth of the Somme, 12 m. below Abbeville, was the port whence the fleet of William the Conqueror set sail to invade England. It is partially resorted to as a watering place. A steamer runs at times between the port and London.

About 6 m. E. of Abbeville (bad road) is the Abbey Church of St. Riquier, a very splendid and interesting Gothic edifice, having a beautiful flamboyant W. front, in the centre of which rises an elegant tower; while beneath it opens the main portal, having statues in its top and sides. "The details of the front are exquisite, well arranged, and well executed." The interior is also fine; the nave flamboyant, the choir apparently earlier. On the walls of the treasury are curious and ancient frescoes; one in the style of the "Dance of Death."

The admirer of Gothic architecture may be disposed to proceed from Abbeville to Amiens, in order to visit its cathedral, one of the noblest Gothic edifices of France. (See Route 1.) A coche d'eau runs up the Somme in summer, but it is tedious.

The road thither passes through 13 Ailly le Haut Clocher, so named from its church, in a style resembling early English. The road runs nearly parallel with the Somme, which is canalised all the way to Amiens.

The Abbaye du Gard is occupied by monks of the order of La Trappe.

The Somme is crossed before reaching 20 Picquigny. The château, with its terraces, mentioned by Mde. de Sevigné in her letters, was built at the end of the 15th century. The place gives its name to a treaty signed 1475, between Edward IV. and Louis XI. The two monarchs met on the bridge; but so distrustful of each other that a barrier of stout pallisades and wooden bars, "such as the cages of lions are made of," says De Comines, was raised to divide them, leaving space between the bars only wide enough to allow them to shake hands.

13 AMIENS. (p. 5. Route 1.)

It is a journey of 16 hours from Abbeville to Paris, posting.

The Somme is crossed by two bridges on quitting Abbeville.

19 Airaines. Inn, La Poste.

10 Camps.

13 Poix (Amiennois), which gives the title to the chief of the Noailles family. The road from Amiens to Rouen passes through this place.

14 Grandvilliers. Hôtel d'Angleterre.

10 Marseille (Oise). During this stage the scenery is rather more interesting. Vineyards first appear a little to the N. of 19 Beauvais. — Inns: Ecu de France, good; Hôtel d'Angleterre.

This is the chief town of the department of l'Oise : it has 13,082 inhabitants ; the central portion (la Cité) is very ancient, still enclosed by its old walls, and many of the houses are of wood ; the more modern quarter is surrounded by a boulevard planted with trees, occupying the site of former fortifications. The most conspicuous edifice, and the principal object of curiosity here, is the Cathedral. At a distance it appears a heavy and uncouth mass, overtopping the rest of the town with its prominent roof, which is supported by 3 rows of flying buttresses, surmounted by double ranges of pinnacles rising from broad buttress walls. It was commenced 1225, and the design of its founders and architects, excited to emulation by the splendour of Amiens, which had been begun 5 years earlier, seems to have been to surpass in vastness and magnificence all other Gothic edifices. They miscalculated, however, the resources both of their art and their treasury, and the result was repeated failure and final defeat; for the progress of the edifice was arrested when it was only half finished, and it remains a mere gigantic choir with transepts. As it is, however, this choir is the loftiest in the world, the elevation of the roof above the pavement being 153 ft., 13 ft. higher than that of Amiens; but though more extraordinary, it is less pleasing than it. "The extension of its dimensions upward is carried to a degree which strikes the spectator as exaggeration. Amiens is a giant in repose; Beauvais a tall man on tiptoe."— W. To increase the wonder of the building, the architect designed to support it on half the number of piers employed at present; but in spite of the iron braces used to hold the piers in their places, the walls bulged out, and the roof fell twice. The only means, then, of supporting it was by inserting intermediate piers in the wide spaces left between the original ones. The transepts begun 1500, under the Bishop Villiers de l'Ile Adam (who, as well as his brother the Grand Master St. John of Jerusalem, was a Beauvoisin), by the architects Jean Waast and Martin Cambiches, and finished 1555, are a fine example of the flamboyant style.

One compartment of the nave was actually begun when the architects (moved, it is said, by a vain ambition to rival the height of St. Peter's dome, and M. Angelo's masterpiece) abandoned it to raise a tower 455 ft. high, which lasted only 5 years, having tumbled down 1573. The choir, "though raised to a loftiness that strikes the beholder with awe and astonishment, displays the space between the tall and slender pillars so entirely filled with glass, that the whole range of windows only appears like a single zone of light, supported and separated by nothing but narrow mullions situated at wide intervals."— Hope.

In the interior the effect of the admirable painted glass, executed in the best period of the art, is very rich. That in the N. and S. rose windows is attributed to Nicholas Lepot, and that in some of the side chapels to Augrand Leprince, both celebrated as artists in this line in the 16th century. In the choir are hung 8 of the tapestries for the manufacture of which Beauvais was celebrated, and which preceded by 3 years that of Gobelins. The monument, in the N. aisle of the choir, of Cardinal Forbin de Janson surmounted by his kneeling effigy, is by Nicholas Coustou, and of good workmanship.

The entrances to the Cathedral are by the transepts: the portal at the extremity of the S. transept is loaded with flamboyant decorations, though from the fury of iconoclasts it has lost the statues which filled the niches. It is surmounted by a noble rose window, very rich tracery. The façade of the N. transept has very much the character of English perpendicular Gothic; its portal, deeply recessed, with feathered mouldings to the arches, retains its original carved doors, which are surmounted by a bas-relief in the tympanum of a genealogical tree; the escutcheons suspended from the branches.

One of the best views of the cathedral is obtained in the market-place from the side of a corner house, conspicuously distinguished by the three curiously carved stone pillars, probably of the 11th or 12th century, which support it.

A ruinous building, called the Basse Œuvre, on the W. of the cathedral, occupying part of the space which the nave would have covered, is curious as one of the most ancient buildings in France (8th or 9th century). The lower part of the outer walls displays masonry with bonds of tiles, and tiled arches in the manner of Roman edifices. The superstructure served as a church in the 10th century; in its interior square piers support plain round arches. It seems never to have had a stone roof.

St. Stephen's Church. The nave exhibits the transition from Romanesque to Gothic; it is very plain, with round pier arches, and round-headed clerestory windows. The W. front resembles a plain early English front of our own country. The painted glass is very excellent. The entrance to the Bishop's palace is flanked by ancient Tourelles.

The most remarkable event in the annals of Beauvais is its siege by Charles the Bold in 1472, when, being destitute of garrison, it might have fallen by a coup de main, had not its citizens boldly closed their gates in the face of an army of 80,000 Burgundians, and maintained an obstinate resistance until succour arrived from Paris. The peculiar feature in this defence was the part which the wives and daughters of the townsfolk took in it, guarding the walls, and sharing in all the perils of the men. The chief heroine, Jeanne Hachette, appeared upon the breach at the moment of the fiercest assaults, seized a Burgundian standard which a soldier was endeavouring to plant on the walls, and hurling the bearer to the bottom bore it off in triumph into the town. Louis XI. rewarded the valour of the citizens by releasing them from taxes, and complimented the ladies by an ordonnance authorising them to take precedence of the men in the procession of St. Angadrème instituted to commemorate the raising of the siege. This procession is still kept up, on the Sunday nearest the 14th October; the females lead the way, bearing in triumph the banner so valorously acquired by Jeanne Hachette.

At an earlier period (1357) Beauvais was the centre of the revolt of the serfs against their tyrannic lords, called Jacquerie, from Jacques Bonhomme (Goodman James), the familiar sobriquet of the peasantry. It extended over several provinces before it was put down by the armed force of the seigneurs banded together, and with fearful cruelty. Froissart thus describes an instance of wholesale vengeance performed upon the rebellious peasants by the Duke of Orleans, the Count of Foix, and the Captal de Buch. "They set fire to the town and burned it clean, and all the villagers of the town that they could close therein."

15 Noailles.

13 Puiseux.

10 Beaumont-sur-Oise (Hôtel du Paon), prettily situated on the l. bank of the Oise. Here vineyards first appear.

Before reaching Moiselles, a paved road, bordered with trees, strikes off to Viarmes; the Abbey of Rergaumont and Chantilly.

12 Moiselles. On the rt. lies the forest of Montmorency, and on the left that of Ecouen, with its immense château.

The road is carried through one of the Forts forming part of the outworks of the new fortifications of Paris, before entering 13 St. Denis.

The Abbey Church has been the burial-place of the kings of France from the time of Dagobert (580), and is a building of great interest, in spite of the wanton dilapidations of revolutionary violence, which the restorations carried on under Napoleon, the Bourbons, and Louis Philippe have not yet entirely repaired, and can never atone for. The W. front, flanked and surmounted by 2 towers of unequal height, is in the simple early pointed style, having been raised by Abbot Suger 1134. It was in the porch of St. Denis that Henri IV. abjured the Protestant faith. Over the central portal, which is semicircular, is a bas-relief of the Last Judgment. A vestibule, crowded with piers to support the towers, leads into the nave, which was built 1281, and is of remarkable width, considering that the roof is of stone. The choir, dating from the earlier period of Abbot Suger, is like that of Canterbury, much narrower than the nave.

On the l. hand, as you enter the nave, is the monument of Dagobert, a singular Gothic structure, raised to his memory by St. Louis. The bas-reliefs on it represent the pretended vision of a hermit, who reported that he had seen Dagobert in a boat pursued and scourged by devils, but defended by St. Denis, St. Martin, and St. Maurice. On the same side are the splendid monuments, in the style of the Renaissance, of Louis XII. and Anne of Brittany, whose recumbent effigies in marble are surrounded by 12 small statues, in niches, of the Apostles, admirable for design, attitude, and execution. The bas-reliefs round the base represent the battle of Agnadel and the entry of Louis into Milan. This monument is the work of Paulo Poncio. That beside it of Henri II., and Catherine of Medicis his queen, is said to have been designed by Philip Delorme and executed by Germain Pilon. The royal effigies are repeated twice; below recumbent as dead, above kneeling: at the four corners are the cardinal virtues in bronze!

On the S. side of the nave is the cenotaph of Francis I., and Claude his queen, erected 1550, from designs of Primaticcio. The recumbent effigies are by the skilful hand of Jean Goujon, as well as the elegant arabesques which decorate the canopy. The frieze running round the base of the monument represents, in a series of marble bas-reliefs of good execution, the battles of Cerisol and of Marignano. The canopy is surmounted by duplicate statues of Francis and his queen, with their three children.

In the N. transept are placed monumental columns to Henri III., assassinated by Jacques Clement 1589, and to Francis II. husband of Mary Queen of Scots, its base surrounded by weeping angels. In the S. transept is a pillar in memory of Henri IV. The effigy of the Breton knight Dugueselin, whose valour and renown procured him burial in the company of kings, but availed not to save his ashes from sacrilegious dispersion by the republicans, is remarkable for its diminutive size. The choir and its side chapels, elevated considerably above the nave, are brilliant with modern decorations in painting and gilding, which rivals heraldic blazonry in gaudy colours, laid on perhaps too indiscriminately, and not yet completed. There is no lack of modern painted glass, a very small portion of the old having escaped the fury of the Revolution. Some fragments of that with which Abbot Suger decorated the building in 1140 are regarded as the oldest in France. A red flag suspended behind the altar supplies the place of the once venerated Oriflamme, the standard of the realm of France, but not used in battle since the time of Charles VII. It was originally the church flag of the Abbey of St. Denis, which was delivered by the abbot to the military guardian of the church whenever he went forth to fight its battles.

A flight of steps on either side of the choir leads down into the crypt beneath it. Here, along the aisle, are arranged chronologically the monuments of the kings of France from the time of Clovis. The statues called Clovis, king of the Franks, and his queen Clothilda, were brought from the portal of the church at Corbeil on the Seine at the Revolution. They are supposed to be works of the 11th or 12th century, and are curious specimens of royal costume: the filletting of the queen's long hair is worth notice. Those of kings preceding the 13th century consist of rudely sculptured effigies executed by order of St. Louis. His own bust and that of his queen, with statues of his two sons painted and gilt, follow next in a separate chapel. The more modern statues of the sovereigns of the house of Valois and Bourbon are of white marble. The series is closed with those of Louis XVI., Marie Antoinette, the Duc de Berri, &c., executed for the Monument Expiatoire, destined for the spot where the Duc de Berri was assassinated, but removed to the darkest corner of the crypt in consequence of the July revolution: in conception and execution they appear nearly the worst of the whole.

This long range of Royal tombs is now quite empty: a decree of the Convention of 1793 ordered the destruction of the tombs of the ci-devant kings at St. Denis. In the course of 3 days 51 tombs were opened, rifled, and demolished; and the bodies of kings, queens, and princes, in every stage of decay, cast out in one indiscriminate heap into two trenches, hastily dug without the walls of the church, after being subjected to every species of brutal indignity. A soldier with his sabre cut the beard from the nearly perfect corpse of Henri IV. to wear it as a moustache on his own lip; and the valiant Turenne's body, so little injured by time that the likeness to his portrait was still recognised, was stuck into a glass case, and made a show to gratify idle curiosity. The broken monuments were conveyed along with relics of saints and church-plate to Paris, and owe their preservation and restoration to the praiseworthy zeal and care of M. Le Noir, founder of the Musée des Petits Augustins. For 12 years after this sacrilege the Abbey Church of St. Denis, stripped of its lead to furnish bullets, remained roofless; having first been offered for sale for the value of the building materials, and next used as a market-house. Napoleon, however, undertook its restoration, and caused the desecrated sepulchral vaults of the Bourbons to be fitted up as a mausoleum for his own family! His design, however, was frustrated by the restoration. At present the central vaults below the high altar contain the confused mass of royal bones, withdrawn by order of Louis XVIII. from the ditch into which they had been cast, together with the burnt remains of Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette, the coffins of Louis XVIII. and others of his family. In an obscure corner lies the last Condé, father of the Duc d'Enghien, who died so miserably by his own hand at St. Leu.

Omnibuses run at all hours from St. Denis to Paris, where their station is the Porte St. Denis.

Travellers bound for the W. end of Paris turn to the rt. on quitting St. Denis, pass one of the new barracks for the garrison atta che to the fortifications, and, leaving Montmartre on the l., traverse the Faubourg des Batignolles, up to the Barrière de Clichy. The route followed by the diligences is drawn in a perfectly straight line from St. Denis to the Barrière St. Denis, keeping the heights of Montmartre on the rt. It crosses the canal which unites the Seine at St. Denis with the Canal de l'Ourcq, and cuts off a bend of the Seine. Further to the rt., and near the Seine, is the villa of the Prince de Craon, where Louis XVIII. signed the Charter in 1814.

9 PARIS. Galignani's Paris Guide appears so good as to relieve the Editor from the necessity of entering into any description at present of the French Capital. The following pieces of information, however, may not be unacceptable to strangers.

Inns : — Hôtel Bristol, Place Vendôme, is the Mivart's or Clarendon of Paris; expensive, but good : capital cuisine. H. des Princes, Rue de Richelieu, well spoken of: a capital table-d'hôte, very well served, at 6 fr.; also expensive.

Hôtel Meurice, Rue Rivoli — a comfortable and well-managed house, under the direction of M. Caillez. The traveller will find in the coffee-room of the Hôtel Meurice all the best English and French newspapers, and a smoking room attached to it. Lacquais de place 5 fr., and a carriage 25 fr.

Charges : — Bed-room, 3 fr. per day. Breakfast, tea and coffee, with eggs, 2 fr. Dinner at table-d'hôte, one of the best served on the Continent, without wine, 4½ fr. Servants all round 1 fr. a day, but less in proportion for family. Lawson's Hotel more moderate in charges.

Boarding House — Madame Guilhom's Pension, 5. Rue des Champs Elisées; a very respectable establishment.

Galignani's reading-room, Rue Vivienne, in a court, is a great resource to the Englishman in Paris: here he will find all the best newspapers of all the world; here he will meet with his friends, a list of his countrymen visiting or residing in Paris being kept here, and may supply himself with books, or subscribe to the circulating library. Galignani's Messenger is a capital paper, condensing all the news of the English papers without reference to politics. It is a comfort to have it sent after the traveller from place to place as he moves about France, which MM. G. will undertake to do.

Public and private carriages are stopped at the outer gate or barrier of Paris by the officers of the Octroi, whose duty it is to levy a tax upon all provisions, wines, &c. Baggage is liable to be searched by them; and one of them accompanies the diligence to the coach office, where passengers are obliged to open their baggage before him, as at a custom-house.

ROUTE 5.

DIEPPE TO PARIS BY GISORS.

168 kilom. = 104 Eng. m.

Steamboats go from Brighton on Wednesday and Saturday, and from Dieppe Monday and Thursday, making the passage in 8 hours.

See "Hints on Landing in France." (§ c. Introduction.)

Dieppe.—Inns: Hôtel Royal, facing the sea: Hôtel de Londres, on the quay: Taylor's Hotel: none. very good.

The sea-port town of Dieppe (16,016 inhabitants) is situated in a depression, between two high ranges of the chalk cliffs which here line the coast, as white and tall as those of England. Through this gap the small river Arques flows into the sea, making an abrupt bend round the tongue of flat land upon which a part of the town is built, and forming a tolerable tide harbour fit for vessels of 500 tons, which is lined with quays, and cleared from mud by sluices. It is one of the chief fishing ports in France, equipping annually 60 vessels of 9,000 tons for the cod fishery, and many more for that of the herring. It is frequented as a sea-bathing place in summer; but less so now than during the reign of the old Bourbons, when Dieppe was favoured by the presence and patronage of the Duchesse de Berri.

The streets of Dieppe are regular, and display few specimens of antiquity, in consequence of the bombardment of the town by the English who, returning from an unsuccessful attack on Brest, 1694, revenged themselves by laying this town in ruins, —a reckless and inglorious exploit. The principal street runs parallel with the sea from the harbour to the castle, and contains some tolerable shops. The market-place, especially on market day, will display samples of the picturesque dresses and strange high caps of Normandy; perhaps one of those towering, helmet-like head-dresses, once the common head gear of the women of the Pays de Caux (cauchoise), may present themselves. The Faubourg de Pollet, however, on the W., inhabited almost exclusively by fishermen, is that in which the most character and peculiarity of costume is observable. This quarter can be reached now only by making the circuit of the harbour, the old bridge having been pulled down in order not to check the force of the waters discharged from the bassin de retenue behind.

In the town itself there is little to merit the stranger's attention.

The Church of St. Jacques, in the square a little to the W. of the harbour, is worth a visit. The body of the building is much hidden behind the flying buttresses, some of them consisting of open screen-work tracery with 8 mullions. The anti-Gothic cupola, however, above the cross, does not add to its beauty. The interior also is disfigured by yellow wash and wooden screens. The transepts are the oldest part, built in the 13th century, as well as perhaps the arches of the choir: the nave is a little later, and the roof and many of the side chapels are not older than the 15th. The screens and curious carvings in the side aisles, especially that before the sacristy or tresor—a confusion of the Gothic and Italian styles—and that in the chapel of St. Yves, deserve notice as examples of French florid Gothic of the 15th and 16th centuries. "The Lady Chapel is perhaps one of the latest specimens of Gothic art. The bosses of the groined roof are of the most delicate filagree work, and the vaulting is also ornamented with knots pendant from the ribs." Here is one of those strange representations of the Holy Sepulchre surrounded by figures of the 3 Maries and other holy personages, executed in a very inferior style, so common in Romish churches abroad.

The Castle, rising on the tall cliff at the W. end of the town, is now a barrack, and much modernised, so that it contains nothing remarkable. It is, however, a picturesque object, viewed from certain points, with its group of quaint cone-headed towers, its high bridge and draw-bridge spanning a chasm which runs down to the sea; and it possesses historical associations of great interest. Within these walls Henri IV., retreating before the army of the League, found shelter among his "bons Dieppois," as he called them, who had been the first to acknowledge his right to the throne, before the battle of Arques. He made choice of Dieppe from the attachment of its inhabitants, the fidelity of its governor, and the advantage of an open communication by sea with England. While here he received from Queen Elizabeth a reinforcement of 1000 Scotch and 4,500 English soldiers.

In 1650, the famous Duchesse de Longueville, so prominent among the the leaders of the party of the Fronde, defying the royal authority, was compelled to take refuge in the castle; but being pursued even hither by the vengeance of Mazerin and Anne of Austria, she with difficulty at length escaped hence by night, and making her way amidst storm and tempest, after innumerable escapes and adventures, embarked alone from the coast in an English vessel dressed as a man, and at length succeeded in reaching Rotterdam.

Dieppe at present, in its nearly empty port and lifeless streets, gives little token of its former celebrity and prosperity. Yet 3 centuries ago it was the most flourishing seaport of France, and one of the first in Europe. The fleets of its adventurous merchants traversed every sea: one of them, indeed (Ango), riding in the Tagus with his merchant squadron, bearded the king of Portugal in his own capital; another captured the Canaries. Its skilful and hardy sailors distinguished themselves by their geographical discoveries and early settlements in the 15th and 16th centuries. Claims are put forth for their having found out the passage round the Cape of Good Hope before the Portuguese If it were so, they certainly kept the secret so close that they have lost the credit of it. They were among the first visitors of the New World, explored Florida, opening the fur trade in Canada, and establishing the earliest European colony in Senegal; whence, as well as from the East Indies, they drew the costliest gums, gems, precious stones, metals and tissues, with which they for a long time exclusively supplied their luxurious countrymen. The importation of elephant's teeth from Africa is said to have given rise to the pretty manufacture of carved ivory, which still exists here, and is almost peculiar to Dieppe. The rivalry of the Port of Havre, and its superior advantages in internal communication up the Seine, were the ruin of Dieppe. The Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, and the English bombardment, were severe blows in addition; and although the extensive equipment of vessels for the fisheries of cod in Newfoundland, and of the herring, have long contributed largely to the support of the town, yet they are much fallen off at present, and are insufficient to revive its pristine importance.

The Etablissement des Bains is situated on the beach, nearly under the castle. There are, however, no proper bathing machines; and the bottom is a mass of flint shingle, without sand. A series of little huts are erected at the sea side, from which ladies issue in robes resembling those of nuns, and gentlemen in wide trousers, and thus bathe in public. By the police regulations, ladies are prohibited bathing unless assisted by male dippers appointed for this service. There are also hot baths near the beach.

Diligences — to Paris twice a day by Rouen and the railway in 11 hours, and in summer daily by Gisors — to Havre and to Abbeville. (R. 20.)

The Environs of Dieppe present several interesting excursions. About 2 m. to the E., on the cliffs above the sea, is a camp capable of holding many thousand men, once attributed to Cæsar, but now supposed to be Gallic, and called la Cité des Limes. It is triangular in form, defended on the the land side by a rampart in places more than 50 ft. high. It is near the road to Eu (Route 18.), 18¾ m. distant, where the Château of Louis Philippe and the Church deserve a visit.

The most delightful walk, however, in the neighbourhood of Dieppe, is to the ruins of the Castle of Arques, which are far more interesting than the Cité des Limes. They are situated in the valley of the Bethune, at its junction with the Arques, less than 4 m. S.E. of Dieppe, and are celebrated for the momentous victory gained beneath the walls by Henri IV. and his devoted band of 4000 Protestants, over the army of the League, 30,000 strong, under the Duc de Mayenne, which decided the fate of the Béarnais prince. The artillery from its walls contributed not a little to the result of that day. "Il en fut tirée," says Sully in his Memoirs, "une volée de quatre pièces, qui fit quatres belles rues dans leurs escadrons et bataillons." Three or four more discharges not only checked their advance, but drove them behind a bend of the valley to shelter themselves from the cannonade, and from this check they never recovered. The king, expecting the Leaguers to debouche down the valley to attack him, had disposed and intrenched his little band accordingly, when he suddenly found the advanced guard of the Duc de Mayenne in his rear, pushing forward to cut him off from his stronghold, Dieppe. Henri, with great quickness and dexterity, changed his front, threw up fresh ramparts to protect his flanks, and managed still to keep up his communication with Dieppe. Among the heroic traits of Henri on that anxious and hard-fought day, are his words to M. de Belin, an officer of the League, who scornfully inquired where Henri's forces were to oppose so large an army; "Vous ne les voyez pas toutes, car vous ne comptez pas Dieu et le bon droit, qui m'assistent." A rude obelisk, raised on the brow of the hill, marks the spot where the deadliest struggle occurred.

The Castle, a fine object at a distance, occupies a commanding position on a tongue of high land between two valleys, and covers a large area with its ruins; but its shattered condition, arising less from the hazards of war and the effects of time than the dilapidations of man, has robbed it of much of its picturesqueness. For a series of years, down to the end of the last century, the government allowed it to be pulled to pieces as a mere quarry of building materials. It is difficult to fix the age of its shapeless walls, deprived of their casing of masonry; but it is probable that the oldest parts, viz. the Donjon and its enclosure, date from the time of our Henry II., who rebuilt the castle at the end of the 12th century: other portions are not older than the 16th century. The English, under Talbot and Warwick, again obtained possession of it in 1419, and kept it for 30 years, down to the capitulation of Rouen, by which it was yielded to Charles VII.

The main entrance remains flanked by 2 massive towers of immense size; and portions of the piers of the drawbridge which led to it are still standing, but "the 3 successive arches of the gateway are torn into nearly shapeless rents." — D. T.

"There is yet another attraction within the compass of a pleasant walk from Dieppe — the really pretty but scattered village of Varengeville, which contains the château of one illustrious among the Dieppois, — the celebrated merchant Ango, — the host and friend of François Premier. Though now converted into a farmhouse, so little of its external form is defaced that the eye can readily trace all the richness of decoration which distinguished the style of the Renaissance, when it was built.

"The walls are principally constructed of black hewn flint, which, alternating with a white stone, produce a very beautiful mosaic. They retain all the sharpness of their original construction; and the sculptures with which they are enriched are of the most classical and graceful form. A number of large medallions above the grand entrance, and along the façade of the principal corps de bâtiment, are remarkable; and Ango was too good a courtier not to include amongst them the portraits of François Premier and Diane de Poitiers. In the interior are some finely sculptured fireplaces and the remains of a large fresco; but they are only to be discovered by groping amongst the greniers, into which the apartments once so splendid have since been changed." — Miss Costello.

The following direct road from Dieppe to Paris by Gisors, leaving Rouen altogether on one side, saves

8 or 10 miles, but few would omit visiting that highly interesting city. (Routes 6 and 9.) Besides, the railway now renders the route by Rouen the quickest of the two. A diligence runs daily in summer by the Gisors road, which strikes off to the l., 3 m. beyond Dieppe.

12 Bois Robert.

17 Pommerèval.

4 or 5 m. on the l. of our road lies Neufchâtel, famed for its excellent cylindrical cream cheeses.

24 Forges les Eaux. A village and watering-place, possessing chalybeate springs once of some repute, but neglected at present. They are three in number,— La Reinette, La Royale, and Cardinale; the two last named from Louis XIII. and Cardinal Richelieu, who visited Forges to drink the waters in 1632, the period of their highest celebrity, in consequence of Anne of Austria, after living childless for 18 years, here becoming enceinte with Louis XIV.;—an event which was attributed to a course of these waters!

21 Gournay, famed for its butter, is situated in the district anciently called Pays de Bray.

The Church of St. Hildebert was begun in the 11th century, but not finished until the 13th, and its W. front, with pointed arches, is perhaps of the latter date. In the interior, very massive round piers support semicircular arches inclining to the horseshoe form. The sculptured ornaments of the capitals are very remarkable for variety of pattern. Herring-bone masonry occurs in the E. end.

12 Talmoutiers.

14 Gisors. — Inn: H. de l'Ecu. An ancient town of 3,500 inhab. prettily situated on the Epte. Its venerable ramparts are converted into agreeable promenades, whose plantations encircle the ruins of its commanding Castle, once the bulwark of Normandy on the side of France, and still retaining many interesting characteristics of a feudal fortress of the middle ages. The octagonal Donjon especially, and its enclosure, crowning the top of a high artificial conical mound, are of the most solid construction, and are works of the 12th century, built by our Henry II. The earlier castle of William Rufus is no longer to be traced. At an interview which took place here between Henry and Louis VII., the two monarchs agreed to assume the cross for the recovery of Jerusalem.

The Parish Church, dedicated to St. Gervaise and Protais, presents a singular combination of styles, and an abundance of uncouth sculptures; it has a choir built in the 13th century by Blanche of Castille (it is said); the nave and remainder of the church is of a later period. The portal, richly carved, is of the latest style of French florid Gothic, and much overladen with ornament. The organ-loft, and an emaciated monumental effigy, attributed to Jean Goujon (?), merit notice. In the S. aisle is a singular twisted column, surrounded by spiral bands of tracery.

Gisors is on the high road from Paris to Rouen (R. 10.).

19 Chars.

18 Pontoise, a town of 5400 inhabitants, occupies a steep slope on the river Oise, here traversed by a bridge, whence its name. It is famous for calves and flour, and supplies Paris with these two articles. The Vionne, which here joins the Oise, turns 30 corn mills.

It is a place of some historical notoriety. St. Louis, attacked by a violent illness, was here warned by a voice from heaven to assume the cross — 1244. During the hard winter of 1437, when the ground was covered with snow, the English took the town by surprise, through the ingenious ruse of Talbot, who clothed his soldiers in white, under cover of which, in the obscurity of the night, they reached the foot of the walls unobserved by the garrison.

A steamer in summer ascends the Oise from Paris.

Fécamp
Criquebeuf
St Léonard
Vattetot sur Mer
Benouville
Maniquerville
Gerville
Etretat
St Clair
Criquetot l'Esneval la Poterie
Brunneval
Gonneville
St Jouin
Vergetot
Heauqueville
Cauville
Epouville
Montivilliers
Octeville
Fontaine
Bleville
Harfleur
Sanvic
Lighthouse
Ingouville
Ste Adresse
HAVRE Canal
Lazaret
ENGLISH CHANNEL
MOUTH OF THE SEINE
Chapelle de N.D. de Grace
Vasouy
Honfleur
Ste Austreberthe
Blacqueville
Ste Marguerite
Lendin
Gueneville
Bourgac
Rougemontier
Flancourt
Touville
Baville
Appetot
le Bec
Brionne
R. Seine

10 Herblay. Here the road bifurcates: the l. hand branch leads to Paris by St. Denis (see Route 2.); that on the rt. proceeds by Besons, where it crosses the Seine and

12 Courbevoie, to the Barrière de Neuilly, entering

9 PARIS by the Arc de l'Etoile. See GALIGNANI'S GUIDE, and p. 22.

ROUTE 6.

DIEPPE TO ROUEN.

57 kilom. = 35 Eng. m.

Diligences go twice a day, in 6 hrs.

In the outskirts of Dieppe, we leave on the rt. the road to Havre (Route 18.), and 3 m. farther on the l. that to Paris direct (Route 5.). Our road lies through a country pleasing when it enters the valleys, but bare and monotonous as long as it lies along the high table land of the Pays de Caux. The land produces abundant crops of corn, and from the number of hedges is not unlike parts of England. "During the whole ride there is not one object to excite curiosity." The way is enlivened here and there at long intervals by villas or châteaux, without any claim to beauty.

15 Omonville.

The numerous orchards are one of the characteristic features of Normandy, which is a cider, not wine-drinking province.

13 Tôtes. The spinning and weaving of cotton already begin to furnish employment to the inhabitants; mills and factories increase in number as we approach Rouen, the great centre of the cotton manufacture in France.

12 Cambres. We now enter the pretty, industrious, and populous vale of the Cailly, a stream which furnishes motive power to the numerous mills, and has given rise to a chain of populous villages along its banks.

The line of houses, factories, and chimneys, interspersed with villas, orchards, and gardens, almost uninterrupted, from Malaunay to Rouen, may remind an Englishman of the clothing district of the W. of England.

Before reaching the barrier, a pretty view is obtained of the blue hills which border the Seine; nor is the atmosphere thickened with so dense an envelope of smoke as hovers over the great manufacturing centres of England. A great part of the coal here used comes from England; the department Du Nord furnishes also its supplies.

17 ROUEN (in Route 9.).

ROUTE 8.

PARIS TO ROUEN — RAILROAD.

136 kilom. = 84 Eng. m.

Trains 6 times a day, in about 5 hours. Terminus in Paris, Rue St. Lazare, No. 110. Fares, 16, 13, and 10 francs. The places mentioned are noticed in detail in Routes 9 and 10.

This railroad was commenced in 1841, and opened May 1843. Its engineer is an Englishman, Mr. Locke, who executed the London and Southampton railway; the greater number of the shareholders are English capitalists of Lancashire; the contractors for executing the works, and even most of the workmen, are also English. A considerable number of experienced "navigators," as they are called, having been transported across the Channel, worked on it harmoniously with their French brethren, showing them the mode of operation. The rails are of French iron, which is much dearer than English; but the locomotives though made in France (at Rouen) are executed by an English company, who have established themselves there expressly to supply the demands of this railroad. The minute subdivision of property in France, and the great number of landholders with whom the company had to deal, occasioned some difficulty in obtaining the land over which the railway passes, and caused the number of contracts to be multiplied enormously; but the demands of the proprietors were by no means so exorbitant as in England.

The Rouen railway branches off from that to St. Germain a little beyond Asnières (p. 30.), 4 m. from Paris; it proceeds by Colombe to Beyzons, where it crosses the Seine by a bridge of 10 flat timber arches, each 100 feet span, supported on stone piers. From this an embankment extends nearly a mile to a cutting at Houille, which is also about a mile. Beyond this the embankment continues to the Seine, which is traversed for the second time by a bridge like the former, conducting to 17 Maisons (stat. p. 47.)

It proceeds, hence in a cutting, across the forest of St. Germain, and follows the l. bank of the Seine by

9 Poissy (stat. p. 31.)

14 Treil St. Meulan (stat. Meulan, p. 32.) is on the opposite bank of the Seine.

Epone St.

It runs in a cutting to the W. of the town of 16 Mantes (stat. p. 32.)

Rosny St. The village and Sully's Château (p. 33.) are passed a little on the rt.

A great projecting buttress of chalk now intervenes, over which the high road is carried by a steep ascent and descent, and round which the Seine winds in a widely circuitous curve. The railway is carried through this by a Tunnel about 2480 yards long — driven through the chalk and a flinty conglomerate very hard to penetrate, commencing at Rolleboise, about 5 miles from Mantes, and terminating on the W. at a short distance from 13 Bonnières (stat. p. 33.), the railway having been previously carried over the high road by a bridge. Hence it runs under the high ground close to the river as far as

10 Vernon (stat. p. 33.)

13 Gaillon (stat. p. 33.) is the station nearest the town of Andelys, and hence an excursion may be made to the interesting castle of Château Gaillard (p. 48.). Near le Grand Villers, two Tunnels are driven through the mass of a projecting promontory of chalk hill. The first or easternmost of Le Roule is a mile long, and the second of Venables 470 yards long.

13 St. Pierre de Vauvray (stat.) The manufacturing town of Louviers is within 3 or 4 miles of this station (p. 34.)

The Seine is traversed obliquely for the 3d time by a bridge at Le Manoir just above the confluence of the Eure, and the railway proceeds along the rt. bank of the Seine for a short distance to 14 Pont de l'Arche, stat. at the extremity of the bridge leading to that town (p. 34.). It next passes through the hill of Tourville by a short Tunnel of about 500 yards, and crosses the Seine, here divided into two arms, for the 4th time, by a bridge resting on the Isle des Bœuf to

Tourville is the station for the populous and industrious town of Elbœuf (p. 50.). Hence it proceeds onwards along the l. bank of the Seine through St. Etienne de Louvray and Sotteville to its termination in the Faubourg St. Sever of the great city of 12 Rouen, Terminus. Rouen is described in R. 9. p. 35.

ROUTE 9.

PARIS TO ROUEN (LOWER ROAD), BY ST. GERMAIN AND LOUVIERS.

137 kilom = 85 English miles.

The malleposte takes the upper road by Gisors. (R. 10.)

Diligences, in 10 or 12 hours; but they are nearly superseded by the railway. Route 8.

The railroad from Paris to St. Germain was finished 1841 (see p. 30.), and the continuation of the line from Asnières to Rouen was opened 1843, so that the high road is nearly deserted.

This road to Rouen is far more generally interesting and more picturesque in scenery than the upper one, through Gisors, but is nearly 7 miles longer than it. It is carried down the valley of the Seine, quitting the bank of the river only to avoid its excessive windings. The high road from Paris to St. Germain commences at the "star," or radiation of routes which gives a name to the Arc de Triumph de l'Etoile, the largest triumphal arch in the world, and the finest entrance into the French capital. Yet the eye scarcely appreciates its vastness; few would suspect that it was as wide and lofty as the façade of Nôtre Dame, or that the aperture of the arch equalled that of its nave. The road skirts on the l. the Bois de Boulogne, famous for promenades, duels, and suicides, now shorn of its proportions to form a glacis for the new fortifications.

It next passes on the rt. the château de Neuilly, the most frequented residence of King Louis Philippe; and beyond that village crosses the Seine by the celebrated bridge of 5 arches, each of 120 ft. span, the masterpiece of the architect Perronet, built 1772. Henri IV. and his queen were dragged into the water here in their cumbrous state coach, and narrowly escaped drowning; an accident which caused the ferry to be superseded by a bridge of wood. The park of Neuilly extends for some distance down the rt. bank of the Seine, and into the islands which here divide its stream. On the l. bank is seen the village and large barrack of 9 Courbevoie. A little beyond the post house, our road, a perfectly straight line hitherto, separating from the Route d'en haut (Route 10.), bends to the l. and passes the Versailles railroad (rive droite). Mont Valérien, on the l., recently converted into the citadel of the fortifications of Paris, is not more than 1½ m. distant from the château of Neuilly. The hill was once called Mont Calvaire, from a Calvary established on it before the Revolution; an exact representation of the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem contained in the church. Madame de Genlis, the preceptress of the present king, was buried in the cemetery. The aqueduct of Marly and château of St. Germain are now seen in the distance. The large barrack at Ruel, on the l. of the road, was occupied in the time of the elder Bourbons by the Swiss guard. In the little church of the village, built 1584 from the designs of Lemercier, is buried the Empress Josephine. A simple monument bearing her statue kneeling, by Cartellier, has been erected by her children, Prince Eugene (Duc of Leuchtenberg), and Hortense Beauharnois (ex-queen of Holland). She died, May 1814, at her favourite villa, hard by Ruel, Malmaison, which, having been sold since her death, has lost much of its beauty. Her pleasure grounds have been cut up to be sold in lots: her conservatoire and menageries in which she took much delight, and the Swiss dairy and Merino farm, are swept away. The house itself is now occupied by the Queen Christina of Spain. It must be confessed that the spot seems to have owed its charms chiefly to art; the soil is very sterile. Buonaparte spent 5 days here in June 1815, between his second abdication and his final departure for Rochefort, having been sent out of Paris by Fouché and the provisional government.

The road skirts the enclosing wall of Malmaison for some distance, and soon after reaching the l. bank of the Seine passes La Chaussée, where La Belle Gabrielle had a house, and Marly la Machine, so called from the cumbrous pile of wooden scaffolding and wheels constructed to raise the water of the Seine 300 feet to supply Versailles, but now partly replaced by a steam engine. The Aqueduct of 36 arches, the loftiest 70 feet high, by which the water is conveyed, is a conspicuous and fine object rising against the hill. The Château de Marly, built by Mansard for Louis XIV., was destroyed at the Revolution, having been purchased by a speculator who pulled it down to sell the materials, and nothing now remains to mark the scene of a monarch's extravagance and magnificence. St. Simon, describing its construction, relates that whole forests of full-grown trees were brought from Compiègne, ¾ths of which died and were replaced by others; large tracts of wood were suddenly converted in sheets of water, and back again to shady groves; and all to adorn a small villa in a contracted valley without view, in which Louis might pass 3 or 4 nights in the course of the year.

The pavillon of Luciennes, on the brow of the hill above Marly, was the last residence of the notorious Madame Du Barry, mistress of Louis XV.

Le Pecq is a suburb of St. Germain, stretching down the hill on whose summit that town is built to the margin of the Seine. It is the point of departure of the steamers which go to Rouen (R. 9.) and the terminus of the railway.

14 St. Germain en Laye (see below).

Railroad — Paris to St. Germain. The length of the line to Pecq is 18½ kilom., about 11 English miles. The distance is performed in less than 30 minutes. Trains (convois) go every hour: but see the printed bills. The terminus (embarcadère) in Paris is in Rue St. Lazare, No. 120.

The railway after passing on a bridge over the Rue de Stockholm, and through 2 tunnels under the Place d'Europe and other streets, quits Paris by the Faubourg des Batignolles. The village of Clichy is passed on the rt. hand, and the Seine is crossed by a bridge of 5 arches before reaching the village 4½ Asnières (stat.) on the l. bank of the Seine, here crossed by another bridge below that of the Chemin de Fer. The Versailles railroad (rive droite) here branches off to the l., and the Rouen railway to the rt.

At Colombes, a small village, Henrietta Maria, widow of Charles I. and daughter of Henri IV., died in great poverty, 1669. The château which she inhabited no longer exists.

The high road from Paris to Rouen is crossed within a short distance of 7 Nanterre (stat.), a village celebrated as the birthplace of St. Geneviève, the patron saint of Paris, who preserved it by her prayers, according to the legend, from the invasion of Attila. The chapel of the saint at which Anne of Austria came to pray for an heir, 1636, who was born 2 years after, no longer exists. Nanterre is famed for cakes.

An omnibus runs from this station to Ruel (p. 29.).

The Seine is crossed for the second time shortly before arriving at the station of 3½ Chatou, by 2 bridges resting on an island, which here divides the river. The village of Chatou lies on the rt. hand of the railway, and rt. bank of the Seine.

The St. Germain railroad stops short on the l. bank of the river at 3½ Le Pecq (stat.), opposite the village of Le Pecq, which is in fact a suburb of St. Germain, and is connected with the railway terminus by a bridge of stone, erected 1835, in the place of one of wood by which, in 1815, the Prussian army under Blücher crossed the river on their march upon Paris.

Omnibuses convey passengers to and from the terminus into St. Germain; the distance is not ½ a mile. The steep ascent, leading from the bridge up to the town, is now easily surmounted by a fine broad road carried up a series of gradual slopes in zigzag, while a flight of stone steps affords a readier access for the pedestrian to the Terrace which runs along the brow of the hill.

St. Germain-en-Laye. — Inns: H. d'Angleterre — de Toulouse — de la Chasse Royale. There is a Restaurant on the slope of the hill, au Pavillon de Henri IV. ; the best, but all dear. This deserted residence of kings is interesting from historical recollections, and pleasing from the grandeur of its site ; but although it contains 12,000 inhabitants, it has a melancholy air of abandonment, in its grass-grown streets and straggling edifices. The huge gloomy pile of the Royal Château itself, the favourite residence of Marguerite de Valois, Henri II., Henri IV., Francis I., and the birthplace of Charles IX. and of Louis XIV., having been gutted at the Revolution, has nothing but its souvenirs to recommend it. It looks like a prison, and is actually converted into a military penitentiary, and surrounded by a wall for security. Those who will take the trouble to seek an order of admission from the commandant (which is not readily granted) may see the chapel, the oldest part and the least impaired, the hall of Francis I., the bed-chamber of Madame de la Vallière, and the trap-door by which the youthful Louis gained entrance into it after his mother had caused the door of the backstair to be walled up; also the Oratory of James II., and the chamber in which he died, 1701. This palace was assigned to him as a residence by his host Louis XIV., who was tired of the place himself, having taken an aversion to it, because it commanded a view of his destined resting-place St. Denis. James resided here 12 years, holding the semblance of a court. Part of his body, "une portion de la chair et des parties nobles du corps," was buried in the parish church, recently rebuilt and faced with a Doric portico, where a monument was erected to his memory by George IV.

The only real attraction in St. Germain at present is its beautiful Terrace, stretching along the brow of the hill for more than a mile, and commanding a delightful prospect over the valley of the Seine and its windings, with the aqueduct of Marly, on the rt., Château of Maisons on the l., the railways and the Arc de Triomphe de l'Etoile, with the spires of St. Denis rising against the horizon in front.

The Forest of St. Germain, one of the largest in France, having a circuit of 21 miles, occupies a promontory formed by a sweeping bend of the river Seine. It is intersected by roads offering agreeable rides and walks in all directions. In the midst of it is the Pavillon de la Meute begun by Francis I.

Deer and roes are found in the remote parts.

The name St. Germain-en-Laye comes from a chapel and monastery of St. Germanus, built in the reign of King Robert, in the midst of the forest then called Silva Ledia.

Many English have taken up their residence here, on account of the cheapness of living, the pure air, and the fine forest.

The Steamboats for Rouen start from Pecq near the bridge. The descent of the Seine is described in Route 11.

There are 2 roads from St. Germain to Mantes; the one called Chemin de Quarante Sous, keeping on the S. side of the Seine, is the most direct, being the shorter by about 5 miles, but more hilly ; the other, the post road, and traversed by the diligences, cuts across the S. extremity of the forest to Poissy, a small town on the l. bank of the Seine, the birthplace of St. Louis (1215), who was wont to sign himself by the modest style of Louis of Poissy. The abbey and church built by his son on the site of his birthplace were swept away at the Revolution, and their place is now occupied by a jail and house of correction. The font at which he was baptized is still shown in the parish church, a Gothic building.

The conference of Poissy was held 1561, with the hope of adjusting differences between the Popish and Calvinistic churches; Beza with a train of doctors appearing for the one party, and the papal legate Cardinal Ippolito d' Este for the other; and Charles IX. attended the first meeting with his mother Catherine de Medicis. But the controversialists soon separated without having approached to a reconciliation, each side believing it had the best of the argument.

A dirty and inconveniently narrow street leads to the long bridge of Poissy over the Seine, of 37 arches of different sizes, including the approaches, built, it is said, by St. Louis. The 3 timber arches, now supplied by timber, were blown up in 1815 to prevent the passage of the allies; or, as some say, so long ago as in 1589, by Mayenne, the general of the League, to secure a safe retreat for his army from the pursuit of Maréchal de Biron, who had sacked Poissy because it refused to deliver its keys to the kings Henri III. and IV.

The greatest cattle market in France is held here every Thursday for the supply of Paris with meat.

The road descends the rt. bank of the river henceforth as far as Mantes, through 11 Triel. In the church is an Adoration of the Shepherds, said to be an original, by Poussin, and some good painted glass. Here and at Vaux are extensive plaster quarries.

8 Meulan is partly built on the slope of the hill, partly on an island in the middle of the river joined to the banks by an old stone bridge in two divisions.

The railroad is carried along the l. bank of the Seine, and passes in the rear of Mantes, where is a station.

The scenery of the valley is very pleasing, though the chalky white of the rocks is an eyesore. The banks of the river are enlivened with country houses. The post road runs at some distance from the river until it reaches Limay, the faubourg of Mantes, where it crosses from the rt. to the l. bank by the bridge.

15 Mantes. — Inns: Cheval Blanc; — Grand Cerf. This town is prettily situated on the margin of the Seine, whence it has gained the epithet La Jolie.

The chief building is the Church of Nôtre Dame, standing a little way above the bridge, and conspicuous by reason of its 2 towers from a long distance. It is a fine Gothic building; the body supported by flying buttresses, the roof covered with coloured tiles. The portals are pointed; the sculpture which adorns them is sadly mutilated. The interior, in the early pointed style, is very pleasing; its most remarkable feature being the height of the triforium gallery formed of triple arches, which being carried quite round the E. end, and lighted by windows behind, gives a cheerful character to the church. The towers at the W. end open into the nave. It was built for Blanche of Castille and her son St. Louis by the architect Eudes de Montreuil.

The solitary Tower of St. Maclou is the sole remnant of another church, built in 1344 with the toll dues exacted for leave to tow barges through the bridge on Sundays and holydays. It is deservedly preserved as a fine light Gothic structure.

It was among the glowing embers of the houses and monasteries of Mantes, which he had remorselessly caused to be burnt, that William the Conqueror received the injury in his corpulent person, caused by his horse starting, which proved mortal a few days after at Rouen. The castle of the French kings, where Henri IV. held the conferences with the Romish clergy which preceded his abjurance of the Protestant faith, was destroyed by the Regent Duke of Orleans.

Coaches daily to St. Germain by the road on the left bank of the Seine. Mantes is a station on the railway.

About half way between Mantes and Bonnieres we pass Rosny, a dirty little village, contiguous to which, between it and the Seine, stands the Château, the birthplace of Sully, where he was frequently visited by his friend and master Henri IV., who slept here the night after his victory at Ivry. The king having overtaken Sully on the road desperately wounded carried on a litter, accompanied by his squires in a like plight, fell on his neck and affectionately embraced him. The château is a plain, solid building of red brick, with stone quoins and a high tent roof, surrounded by a deep ditch; it was rebuilt by Sully at the beginning of the 17th century. It is destitute of architectural beauty externally, and within has been modernised, although one room is still called Chambre de Sully. From 1818 down to the Revolution of 1830, Rosny was the favourite residence of the Duchesse de Berri, who erected here a chapel to contain the heart of her husband. The château has since changed hands repeatedly, and its present proprietor (1841) is pulling down the wings, which were modern, and added by the duchess. The grounds extend for some distance along the margin of the river, to which they owe their sole charm, the ground being perfectly flat, and traversed by long formal avenues.

In skirting the forest of Rosny, contiguous to the village, we are reminded of the sacrifice made by Sully, in felling in it at one time timber to the amount of 100,000 francs to pay his master's debts.

The railway is carried on a lofty terrace, side by side with the high road as far as Rolleboise, where it penetrates in a tunnel through a hill which the road surmounts by a steep ascent. (See p. 28.) An abrupt curve of the river, here sweeping round by the château La Roche Guyon (p. 48.), is thus avoided. The farther extremity of the tunnel opens out close to 13 Bonnières.

About 1½ m. beyond this the road to Caen and Cherburg by Evreux (Route 25.) separates on the l. from that to Rouen, which under a shady avenue of walnut and ash trees skirts the margin of the Seine. A small rivulet flowing into it from the S., crossed by our road, was the boundary of the ancient province of Normandy, as it now is of the department of the Eure; and 2 m. farther on we reach 11 Vernon. — Inn: Grand Cerf.

This town, which, like many others in Normandy, gives a name to a noble English family, is prettily situated, and its interior retains a venerable air of antiquity in its timber-framed houses; but its narrow streets, however picturesque, are by no means convenient on a great highway of traffic. There is preserved an ancient tower, tall and massive; and a Gothic church, the choir of the 13th, the nave of the 16th century, in which one monument only among many escaped the Revolution, — that of a lady of the family Maignard, — consisting of a kneeling effigy in marble (date 1610).

The Château de Bizy, approached by a fine avenue, on the outskirts of the town, once one of the finest seats in Normandy, the property of the Counts of Eu, and afterwards of the Duc de Penthievre, was destroyed at the Revolution, and is now replaced by a plain country house belonging to Louis Philippe. Vernon is connected by a wooden bridge (on stone piers) with the suburb Vernonet.

There is another post road from Vernon along the rt. bank of the Seine, by Andelys (22 kilom), and Château Gaillard (Route 11.), Pont St. Pierre (19 kilom), Le Forge Féret (10 kilom), to Rouen (11 kilom), but it is longer by 3¾ m. than the following:

14 Gaillon. A huge penitentiary occupies the place, and in part the remains, of the château of the archbishops of Rouen. It was sold at the Revolution to a speculator, and partly pulled down; fortunately the façade built by the Cardinal d'Amboise, a splendid example of the style of the renaissance, was rescued by M. Lenoir and transported to Paris, where it has been reconstructed in front of the Ecole des Beaux Arts. The 4 Gothic towers, and part of the terrace incorporated in the new building, are fragments of the palace.

In the distance is seen the imposing ruin of Château Gaillard, the pet castle of Richard Cœur de Lion (Route 11.), rising on a lofty rock washed by the Seine, but 5 or 6 m. N. of our road; so great is the circuit which the river here again makes.

The isthmus of the peninsula formed by this curve is traversed by the railway in a tunnel (p. 28.).

The post road quits the borders of the Seine before reaching Gaillon, and does not rejoin it until Pont de l'Arche is reached.

At the village Heudebouville the road to Andelys and Château Gaillard (6 m. distant) strikes off to the rt. Here also the road to Rouen divides into 2 branches; the rt.-hand one, by Vaudreuil, though shorter, is more hilly, and takes the same time to travel, so that by Louviers is preferable. Tall chimneys and numerous huge red brick buildings with many windows proclaim the manufacturing town of 14 Louviers (Inns: H. de Rouen, dear; de Mouton — neither good), advantageously situated on the numerous branches of the Eure; it is one of the 3 principal clothing towns of France, the other two being Elbœuf and Sedan. It contains more than 40 cloth manufactories, which employ from 7000 to 8000 persons in and around the town, though the number of inhabitants does not exceed 9885. The cloth of Louviers is remarkable for its fine quality. The Church of Nôtre Dame, shrouded behind the number of its flying buttresses, presents a mass of incongruities and sad mutilations, yet is well worth examination. Its S. portal, projecting forwards on fringed arches, with a pendant hanging from the centre, is decked out with an exuberance of florid ornament. It was built in 1496. The W. end has 3 portals, the centre supported by a Corinthian pillar. In the inside the nave and choir date from 1218, and exhibit the transition from the round to the pointed style; low and thick columnar piers support pointed arches, on which rests a glazed triforium of round-headed trefoil arches, with lancet windows under trefoil arches in the clerestory; the aisles are more modern. The bas-reliefs, carved in wood, of sacred subjects from the life of our Saviour, and the painted glass merit notice, as well as the open gallery of filagree stone-work under the central tower S. side.

The Gothic house with pointed windows, called Maison des Templiers, is probably as old as the 13th or beginning of the 14th century.

A road branches off hence to Elbœuf (R. 11.); coaches run thither daily.

At Vaudreuil on the Eure, 3 or 4 m. to the right of the road to Rouen, is an old castle surrounded by the waters of the Eure, and a fine church with a beautiful W. window.

A considerable tract of forest is passed between Louviers and Pont de l'Arche, a small town, whose main street is a narrow and inconvenient lane leading to the bridge of 22 arches by which the Seine is once more crossed, a little below the junction of the Eure. The view from it is pretty; on the right is seen the Cote des Deux Amants (see Route 11.). The tide ascends to this point.

The Gothic church contains some curious painted windows; in one of them the inhabitants of the town, male and female, in the costume of the 16th century, are seen towing barges through the central arch of the bridge.

To avoid a long bend of the river the road is carried over a high hill, whose top commands a charming view, but on the opposite descent regains the margin of the river before 17 Port St. Ouen, and thence runs beside it, skirting the foot of the chalk hills through a series of villages and hamlets to the extensive suburb of Eauplet, which extends up to the gate of Rouen. The entrance into the town on this side is by the Cours Dauphin, a raised causeway planted with an avenue of trees, having the Seine on the l. and the Champ de Mars on the rt. hand.

11 ROUEN.—Inns: Hotel de Rouen on the Quai du Havre, close to the landing-place of the steamer; room 3 fr.; table d'hôte 3 fr. Hotel d'Angleterre, Quai Boïeldieu. Albion Hotel, Quai du Havre. Hotel Vatel, Rue des Carmes.

Rouen, anciently Rotomagus, the capital of ancient Normandy, and the chief town at present of the department of the Seine Inférieure, is agreeably seated on the Seine, and yields to no provincial city of France in its majestic and venerable aspect, in historic associations, and in magnificent buildings; the triumph of the ecclesiastical and civil architecture, of the middle ages. It has this advantage also over most other ancient towns, that it is not a mere heap of dry bones, destitute of life and abandoned by commerce; its narrow streets of gable-faced, timber-fronted mansions, swarm like an ant-hill with busy crowds passing to and fro; it is a focus of trade, and the chief seat of the cotton manufacture in France. It may be called, indeed, the French Manchester. It contains 92,083 inhabitants, and is surpassed in population by only 4 other cities in France.

The situation of Rouen on a river which affords ready access on the one hand to the sea at Havre (103 m. distant by the windings of the stream), and with the capital on the other, tends highly to promote its industry and commerce. The Seine, here more than 1000 ft. broad, forms a convenient port accessible for vessels of 250 tons; and though the number of vessels is small, they add both to the picturesqueness and animation of the scene. Its banks are formed into fine broad Quais, and these are lined with handsome modern buildings, which have sprung up within the last 10 or 15 years, and serve as a screen to hide a rear rank of tottering timber houses, such as form the bulk of the city, and which previously extended down to the river side. Modern improvements and additions, indeed, have of late greatly detracted from the venerable and picturesque appearance of Rouen; but the changes are skin-deep, confined to its exterior, and the stranger has only to plunge into its almost inextricable labyrinth of streets to find enough of antiquity to satiate the artist or the most ardent lover of bygone times: although a law having been passed prohibiting the rebuilding of houses in wood, their number must diminish every year.

A Boulevard, occupying the place of the old fortifications which resisted Henry V. of England and Henri IV. of France, runs round the old town nearly in a semicircle, touching the Seine at its two extremities. This line includes within it all the most interesting public monuments and objects worth notice; outside of it spread a supplement of populous faubourgs, occupied chiefly by the weavers and working classes, who also form the bulk of the population in the suburb St. Sever, on the l. bank of the Seine, having wider but not cleaner streets than the inner town, interspersed at intervals by tall smoking chimneys and lavishly glazed spinning mills.

A walk through the town in the following order will carry the pedestrian to the things best worth observation; but if he wishes to see them thoroughly, he will find one or even two days not enough. The distances from one quarter of the town to another are considerable, to say nothing of the want of pavement, the dirt, and the bad smells which he will have to encounter. The Rue Grand Port, which runs up from the quai opposite the suspension-bridge, and which is at once the chief thoroughfare and includes the best shops, will bring you to the Cathedral; a little in the rear of it, to the E., is the church of St. Maclou, from the door of which a street running due N. will bring you to St. Ouen, the noblest church in Rouen. Close beside it, in the H. de Ville, is the gallery of pictures; but more worthy of attention is the Museum of Antiquities, Rue de Beauvoisin, near the Boulevard. Hence you must thread your way back to the river, visiting in turn the Palais de Justice, Tour de Grosse Horloge, Place de la Pucelle (where Joan of Arc was burnt), and Hôtel de Bourgtheroulde. As the churches close at 12, they should be visited in the early part of the day.

The Cathedral of Nôtre Dame occupies with its W. front one side of the fruit and flower market. The vast proportions of this grand Gothic façade, its elaborate and profuse decorations, and its stone screens of open tracery, impress one, at first glance, with wonder and admiration; diminished, however, though not destroyed, by a closer examination, which shows a confusion of ornament and a certain corruption of taste. "It is viciously florid, and looks like a piece of rock-work, rough and encrusted with images and tabernacles, and ornamented from top to bottom." — G. Knight. The projecting central porch and the whole of the upper part were the work of Cardinal d'Amboise (1509—1530); the lateral ones are of an earlier period (13th century), and chaster style; and the sculpture adorning them deserves attention. Above the central door is carved the genealogy of Jesse. Over the l. hand (N. W.) door is the Death of St. John Baptist, — in it may be seen Herodias' daughter dancing, or rather tumbling, before Herod: over this, on the rt., much mutilated, the Virgin with Saints. Of the two stately flanking towers, that of St. Romain, on the N., rests on walls older than any other part of the building (12th century): it may be profitably ascended, on account of the view. The rt. hand, or S. W. tower, called Tour de Beurre, because built (between 1485 and 1507) with the money paid for indulgences to eat butter in Lent, is a far more beautiful structure, surmounted with an elegant circlet of stone filagree. It contained the famous bell, named George d'Amboise, melted at the Revolution; it is now gutted. Of the central spire the less that is said the better; it is a cage of cast-iron bars intended to replace a spire of wood burnt by lightning, 1822; and judging from its shape and size, seen at a distance, might be taken for the parent of all the factory chimneys in and about the town. When finished, it will reach to a height of 436 ft. It is quite out of character with the rest of the building, and is intended to be gilt. A corkscrew or geometrical staircase of iron worms itself up the centre to a dizzy height.

The N. and S. fronts are in a style resembling the decorated of England, with geometric tracery. The very beautiful N. door, called Portail des Libraires, from the book stalls which once occupied the court before it, was not finished until 1478. The opposite one leading to the S. transept, called Portail de la Calende, and nearly of the same age and style, is ornamented with bas-reliefs from the history of Joseph. The figure hanging, vulgarly supposed to represent a corn merchant who suffered for using false measures, while his property was confiscated to build this entrance, is otherwise, and more accurately, explained to be Pharaoh's chief butler. The N. transept is flanked on either side by open towers of great beauty, and of such proportions as would fit them for the W. front of an English cathedral.

The interior measures 435 ft. in length, and the height of the nave is 89½ ft. It is in the early pointed style: above the main arches of the nave runs a second tier, smaller, but opening also into the aisles; an arrangement not uncommon in Normandy, but of which England presents only one instance, in Waltham Abbey. The three rose windows, in the nave and transepts, are very fine in size and decoration. In the end chapel, on the S. side of the nave, is the tomb and effigy of Rollo, first duke of Normandy, and opposite to it that of his son William Long Epée; but the figures are not older probably than the 13th century.

The choir, separated from the nave by a modern Grecian screen, was built between 1280 and 1300. The carving of the stalls, executed 1467, is extremely curious. The finest and oldest painted glass is to be found in the chapels of the choir aisles; it is of the 13th century. Small lozenge-shaped tablets of marble, let into the pavement of the choir, mark the spots where the heart of Richard Cœur de Lion, and the bodies of his brother Henry (died 1183), of William son of Geoffroy Plantagenet, their uncle, and of John Duke of Bedford, regent (prorex Normanniæ) under Henry VI. (1435), were interred. Their monuments, much injured by the outrages of the Huguenots in 1663, when all parts of the church suffered more or less, were removed, and lost until 1838, when the effigy of Richard I., a rude statue 6½ ft. long, was dug up from under the pavement on the l. of the high altar. His "lion heart" was also found still perfect but shrunk in size, enveloped in a sort of greenish taffeta enclosed in a case of lead, and is now deposited in the sacristy. His body was interred at Fontevrault; but he bequeathed his heart to Rouen, on account of the great affection which he bore to the Normans. The effigy of limestone, much mutilated, represents him crowned, and in the royal robes, and is now placed in the Lady Chapel behind the high altar, which contains two other splendid and highly interesting monuments. On the rt. hand is that of cardinals George d'Amboise, archbishop of Rouen and minister of Louis XII. and his brother, a magnificent structure of black and white marble, in the style of the renaissance, executed in 1525. The marble statues of the two cardinals, uncle and nephew, kneel below a covered canopy richly ornamented and gilt; behind is a bas-relief of St. George and the Dragon; above, in niches arranged two by two, are statues of the 12 Apostles; below are the Cardinal Virtues. The pilasters and intervening spaces are adorned with rich and fanciful arabesques. The bodies of the Cardinals d'Amboise were torn from the grave by the Revolutionists of 1793, the lead of the coffins melted, and the contents scattered.

On the l. side of the chapel is the monument of the Duc de Bréze, grand seneschal of Normandy; but more remarkable as husband of the celebrated Diana of Poitiers, mistress of Henry II., by whom it was erected. The effigy of the distressed widow kneels at the head of an emaciated corpse representing her husband after death, stretched on a sarcophagus of black marble. She is in a mourning attitude corresponding with the words of the epitaph which she caused to be engraved on the tomb: —

"Indivulsa tibi quondam, et fidissima conjux, Ut fuit in thalamo sic erit in tumulo."

A sentiment, however, which must be taken in an ironical sense; it is quite certain that she was not buried with him, but at her château of Anet, and it is probable that she was as true to her word in one respect as in the other. Above, in an arched recess, is the statue of the duke in full armour on horseback. This tomb is a splendid work of the age of Francis I.; and is attributed to Jean Goujon, or Jean Cousin.

A rich florid Gothic niche at the side, surmounted by a stone canopy of open work and intervening stems, was erected at an earlier period (1465) to Pierre de Bréze, grandfather of the preceding. Neither statue nor inscription remains.

The elaborately carved screen in front of the sacristy, executed in the latter part of the 15th century, and its wrought-iron door, must not be passed without notice.

Passing the Archevêché, contiguous to the cathedral on its N. and E. side, we come to the Church of St. Maclou, which ranks third among the churches of Rouen in beauty. Its grandest feature is its triple porch, one division of which was until lately blocked up by a house built exactly in front of it; it is a fine specimen of the florid architecture of the 15th century. The traveller should pay attention to the wooden doors (including that on the N. side), beautifully carved with Scripture subjects, in bas-relief, by Jean Goujon, it is said, and to the elaborate winding stair of stone near the W. entrance, within the church. There is much painted glass in the windows.

The Church of St. Ouen surpasses the cathedral in size, purity of style, masterly execution, and splendid but judicious decoration, and is inferior only as regards historic monuments. It is beyond doubt one of the noblest and most perfect Gothic edifices in the world. Although it suffered considerably from the Huguenots (1562), who made 3 bonfires within the building to burn the stalls, pulpit, organ, and priests' robes; and from the republicans, who turned it into an armourer's shop, and raised a smith's forge in its interior, by the smoke of which the windows were blackened until they ceased to be transparent, it has escaped in a remarkable degree; and judicious restoration, at present carrying on, leave little to desire touching its state of repair.

The first stone of the existing edifice (for 4 other churches had preceded it) was laid 1318 by Abbot Jean Roussel; the choir, the chapels, and nearly all the transept were completed in 21 years, and the nave and tower finished by the end of the 15th century. Thus one plan being followed to the termination, the most perfect harmony of style prevails throughout. "The W. front was to have been flanked by 2 steeples, between which a curved portico of 3 arches was proposed; but it is unfinished." — D. T.

Above the cross rises the central tower 260 ft. high, which, whether examined close at hand (as it ought to be), or seen at a distance rising above the town, is a model of grace and delicacy. "It is wholly composed of open arches and tracery, and terminates with an octangular crown of fleurs-de-lis." — D. T., which ancient royal symbol is also discovered in the pattern of the tracery of the windows, and in the painted glass.

The S. portal, called des Marmouzets from the figures of animals carved on it, deserves attentive examination, as a gem of Gothic work scarcely to be surpassed. It is surrounded by a fringe of open trefoil arches; while 2 groined pendants, 6 ft. long, drop from its vault. The bas-relief over the door represents the Death and Assumption of the Virgin: the whole has been restored.

The interior (443 ft. long, and 106½ ft. high), notwithstanding its size, is peculiarly light and graceful; its richly moulded piers are without capitals, the front pillars running up uninterruptedly to the roof as ribs, the side ones bending under the arches. The clerestory, being very large, increases the effect of lightness; "the windows seem to have absorbed all the solid wall," and the roof is maintained in its place by the support of pillars and buttresses alone. All the glass is painted, and there are 3 noble rose windows filled with it. The stranger should look into the holy water basin (bénitier) close to the W. door; he will find the beauties of the interior all mirrored on the surface of the water. The master mason under and by whom this noble church was reared is buried in St. Agnes' chapel, the 2d on the l. in the N. choir aisle. His name was Alexander Berneval; and, according to tradition, he murdered his apprentice through envy, because the youth had surpassed in the execution of the rose window in the N. transept, into the tracery of which the pentalpha is introduced, that which his master had constructed in the S. transept. Though the mason paid the penalty of his crime, the monks, out of gratitude for his skill, interred his body within the church which he had contributed so much to ornament.

The whole of the transept, choir, and lower part of the tower are Decorated in character, passing into the flamboyant in the upper story of the tower and in the nave.

The material used in the structure of St. Ouen is a limestone approaching to chalk, and containing flints, which have been often patiently cut through in the delicate carving and tracery. But the details of the building should be studied on the roof, upon the tower, and in the internal galleries. It will well repay the trouble of the ascent.

A very pretty Garden, whose great ornament, however, is the adjacent church, extends along the N. side of St. Ouen, behind the Hôtel de Ville; it was originally the convent garden. Within it, attached to the church, stands a very perfect Norman tower, with semicircular windows, in the style of the 11th century; it probably formed part of a previously existing church. It is called "La Chambre aux Clercs."

St. Ouen was archbishop of Rouen, and died 678.

The Hôtel de Ville, a handsome building of Italian architecture, attached to the N. transept of the church, formed part of the monastery of St. Ouen, to which a modern front, with Corinthian colonnade, has been added to give the building an official, civic air. Besides the public offices, it contains the Public Library, and Le Musée des Tableaux, a collection in which the good paintings bear a very small proportion to the bad. There is an ancient and curious picture, attributed to Van Eyck, of the Virgin and Child amidst Angels and Saints; the predella of an altar piece by Perugino, brought from Perugia; a copy of Raphael's Madonna di San Sisto; St. Francis in ecstasy; by Ann. Caracci; the Plague at Milan, by Lemonnière of Rouen; and an Ecce Homo, by Mignard.

The Bibliothèque Publique is a valuable collection of 33,000 volumes, very accessible, being open every day from 11 to 4, and from 6 to 9, except Sunday and Thursday. Among the 1200 MSS., many richly ornamented with paintings, are the history of the Normans, by William of Jumièges, 11th century; a Benedictionary, which belonged to an archbishop of Canterbury; and a missal book of the 12th century: the Gradual of Daniel d'Aubonne, 17th century, containing about 200 vignettes and initials, is very beautiful.

Le Musée des Antiquités, in the suppressed convent de St. Marie, Rue Beauvoisin, from the number and rarity of the curiosities deposited in it, consisting for the most part of voluntary donations, is one of the most interesting sights in the town, and highly creditable to the administration of the department, by whom it was founded, 1833-4; no stranger should omit to visit it. The following enumeration will give an idea of the nature of the objects preserved here: — The door of the house in which Corneille was born; many Roman and Gallic tombstones, coffins, &c., dug up at Rouen and other places in the department of la Seine Inférieure; many fragments of Roman sculpture; specimens of pottery, glass, mosaics; inscriptions; together with a draped female statue of good work, but wanting the head, from the Roman theatre, Lillebonne.

It is chiefly, however, for works of art and antiquities of the middle ages, and the following period down to the 17th century, that this museum is entitled to attention.

The windows, 15 in number, by which the gallery is lighted, are all filled with painted glass derived from suppressed convents, churches, &c., forming a chronological series from the 13th to the 17th century; most valuable and interesting, as showing the progress of the art. The most remarkable are those from the church of St. Eloi, Rouen, 16th century; the miracle of St. Nicholas from St. Godard (first half of 16th century), very fine. There is no collection of glass painting equal to this in France or England.

In glazed frames against the wall are hung charters and other ancient MSS. containing autographs of remarkable persons. Among them William the Conqueror's mark, a cross (he could not write); and the signatures of our other Norman dukes and kings, Henry I., Richard Cœur de Lion, may be observed.

The shrine of St. Sever, which once contained the relics of that saint, formerly in the cathedral, is in the shape of a Gothic chapel, with silver statues of saints in niches round its sides. It is of oak, covered with copper plates gilt and silvered, and is an elegant piece of workmanship of the end of the 12th century, recently restored. A crucifix carved in stone, 16th century: at the foot of the cross the holy women; on the opposite side the Virgin and Child. Many other specimens of sculpture of the 15th, 16th, and 17th centuries, in stone and wood, from religious edifices: 5 bas-reliefs of the Last Judgment in marble from the church of St. Denis sur Scie; in one, Christ is rescuing souls from the jaws (literally) of hell. Many capitals of Gothic columns richly sculptured.

An extensive collection of coins and medals; Roman, Gallo-Roman, French Norman, &c.

Casts from the bas-reliefs of the Hôtel de Bourgtheroude (p. 42.), representing the interview of the Field of the Cloth of Gold between Henry VIII. and Francis I. A small collection of arms and armour—among them will be found the coat of mail of Enguerrand de Marigny from the church of Ecouis (p. 46.); also several early cannon and wall pieces, ancient furniture, cabinets.

A fragment of the famous bell George d'Amboise (see p. 36.), which was melted into cannons and sous pieces at the Revolution.

This Museum is open Sunday and fête days from 11 to 4, and Tuesday and Thursday from 12 to 3.

In an adjoining building is a very respectable Museum of Natural History.

The amateur of stained glass should not omit to visit the churches of St. Godard, containing two windows 32 ft. high and 12 wide, and St. Patrice, where there are many more of still greater beauty executed in the 16th century. The architecture of these two churches is not remarkable; they are very late in the Gothic style.

The Church of St. Vincent has an exquisite Gothic porch.

Another church, St. Gervais, situated in the very remote faubourg Cauchois, is reputed the oldest structure in Rouen, and one of the earliest Christian monuments in France. The church itself is low, humble, and not remarkable; but below it is a crypt even more simple and unadorned, but exhibiting to the eye of the antiquary marks of construction as old probably as the 4th century, in the courses of Roman tiles between the layers of rough masonry. It has an apsidal termination ; in the side walls are holes for the cancelli or rails, to which the curtain was hung to separate the chancel from the rest of the church: the altar slab is marked with 5 + +. The two low arched recesses in the walls are said to have been the graves of St. Mello and St. Avitien, the first archbishop of Rouen.

The circular E. end of the church itself, which rests upon this crypt, is in the earliest Norman style ; and some of the pillars let into the wall, but too short to support the roof, have classic capitals. The Roman road to Lillebonne passed close to St. Gervais. William the Conqueror, tortured by the wound he had received at the cruel sack and burning of Mantes, repaired to the retired monastery of St. Gervais to die. His death-bed exhibited a melancholy example of the vanity of earthly grandeur. Deserted by his own sons when the breath was scarce out of his body, forsaken by friends and courtiers, and plundered by his servants, his body remained stripped and deserted, until the pity and charity of an unknown knight in the neighbourhood provided the funds necessary for the funeral ; and he himself escorted the body to its last resting-place at Caen.

The Palais de Justice is a most interesting specimen of civic Gothic architecture, which may vie with some of the town halls of the Low Countries. Reared at a time when the style had become fantastic in its forms and exuberant in its adornments, it yet displays so much originality of invention, beauty, and gorgeous magnificence, that it is hard to condemn it for a want of taste and purity.

It lines three sides of a square ; the wing on the l. is the Salle des Procureurs, built 1493, as a sort of exchange for merchants, native and foreign, to meet in. It is a large and handsome hall, with an open roof, like a ship's hull reversed, 160 ft. long and 50 ft. high, a sort of Westminster Hall in miniature, and now serving the same purposes. The body of the building in the centre was raised six years later by Louis XII. for the Cour d'Echiquier of Normandy, the ancient supreme tribunal of the duchy, at least as old as the time of William the Conqueror, for which the name of parliament was substituted in 1515 by Francis I. This façade is decorated with all the ornament which the fertile resources of the architect afforded ; the square-headed windows are set within the most delicate garlands of stone ; the buttresses are studded with niches and crowned by pinnacles ; and the lofty dormer windows rising against the high pitched roof are surmounted by canopies of the most delicate open work, with pinnacles and statues, many of them executed by first-rate artists at Paris, and are connected by a pierced battlement of arches and tracery. For many years past this front has been undergoing a careful restoration ; it is only a pity that it makes so slow progress.

The chamber in which the parliament of Normandy met is now the Salle d'Assizes. It has a fine roof of black oak, set off with gold ; but the elegant pendants which hung from it have been removed, and the wainscoting, painted over with arabesques and old mottoes, reminding judges of their duties, has been taken down or effaced by whitewash.

The large building behind the Palais, once the residence of the president of the parliament, is now the Cour Royale.

La Rue de la Grosse Horloge, not far from the Palais, one of the narrowest and most picturesque in Rouen, is so called from the antique clock gate-house, built 1527, by which it is spanned, adjoining the tower of the Beffroi, whence the curfew is still tolled every evening. In this street are several ancient houses.

The Place de la Pucelle, known also by the vulgar name Marché aux Veaux, serves to record the fate of the heroic and unfortunate Jeanne d'Arc, the deliverer of her country, and the terror of the English, who was burned alive here as a sorceress 1431, on the spot marked by the contemptible modern statue placed upon a pump, which bears her name, but the outward aspect of Bellona! Her ashes were collected by the hangman, and cast into the Seine, by order of the cardinal of Winchester. He and other prelates were spectators of her execution; and some of them, unmoved by her sufferings, even interrupted the priest who was confessing her by their impatience, exclaiming, "Now, priest, do you mean to make us dine here?" After she was bound to the stake, and while the flames were rising around her, she begged her confessor to hold aloft the cross, that she might still behold the sacred emblem above the smoke; and she died expressing her conviction of the truth of her mission, and calling on the name of Jesus. The cruelty exercised upon this simple and gentle maiden (for in all her battles she never killed an enemy, and was always intent on preventing the effusion of blood) is a disgrace to the annals of England. In prison she was subjected to insult, insidious treachery, and even outrage; at her trial in the chapel of the castle, she stood alone without counsel or adviser, browbeaten by her inhuman and bloodthirsty judges, yet baffling their cunning and sophistry by her plain straightforward answers.

But one of the saddest circumstances connected with the death of the forlorn maiden of Domremy was the treatment she met with from her own countrymen: the Bishop of Beauvais, her unjust judge, her accuser, and the false priest who was introduced into her cell on the pretence of friendship as a spy to betray her secrets, were all Frenchmen. Her own countrymen allowed her to be made prisoner at Compiègne without an attempt to defend or rescue her; and Charles VII., her king, who owed his country and throne to her enthusiasm, appears neither to have cared for nor remembered the heroine of Orleans, from the hour when she fell into the hands of the English. He certainly neither attempted to ransom her, nor did he protest against her trial.*

It was not until 24 years from her death that a papal bull proclaimed her innocence; and a cross was raised by her own countrymen, once more become masters of Rouen, on the spot where she had been bound to the stake.

The great tower of the old castle in which she was imprisoned was demolished 1780. She was shut up in a cage of iron, and her feet were fettered, — yet her spirit remained unbroken; and when some English nobles came to insult her, she answered, "Je sais bien que les Anglais me feront mourir, croyant après ma mort gagner le royaume de France; mais fussent-ils cent mille Goddams de plus qu'à présent, ils n'auront pas ce royaume."

On one side of the market-place, within a short distance of the statue, is an ancient mansion, which the common people call Maison de la Pucelle, but properly l'Hotel de Bourgtheroude, constructed at the end of the 15th and beginning of the 16th century, by William le Roux, seigneur of Bourgtheroude, nearly at the same period as the Palais de Justice. It is built round a court-yard, and its inner wall is ornamented with a series of bas-reliefs on tablets of marble, representing the interview of the Cloth of Gold, and the procession of the two kings Henry VIII. and Francis I., attended by their suite, among whom Cardinal Wolsey is conspicuous. Above these are other sculptures of allegorical figures, and the elegant hexagonal tower is decorated with pastoral subjects.

* From a masterly and most interesting account of Jeanne d'Arc in the Quarterly Review, vol. lxxix.

The Convent of St. Amand, recently pulled down, was a building of the same age, and decorated with similar sculptures.

There are several Gothic fountains in various parts of the city; the most curious are those of La Croix de Pierre, resembling in form Waltham Cross, but erected 1500 by the Cardinal d'Amboise; it stands in the Carrefour St. Vivien. La Fontaine de la Crosse is a low Gothic structure of the 15th century, elegantly adorned with tracery. The house in which the grand Corneille (Pierre) was born, the most illustrious of the natives of Rouen, exists in Rue de la Pie, No. 4.; a statue of him has been erected by his fellow-citizens on the stone bridge. Fontanelle, his nephew, author of the "Plurality of Worlds," resided in the Rue des Bons Enfans, No. 132—134. The composer Boieldieu was also born here, and the town has raised a statue to him on the quay facing the Bourse.

The edifice called Les Halles, situated between the cathedral and the stone bridge, appropriated to the purpose of a cloth hall for the sale of the manufactures of Rouen, occupies the site of the ancient palace and Vieille Tour, in which King John Lackland is said to have imprisoned and finally murdered his nephew Prince Arthur.

The structure called Monument de St. Romain, opposite the cloth hall (date 1542), was the spot where, by virtue of an ancient privilege conceded by King Dagobert, the chapter of the cathedral were entitled to claim, on Ascension-day, the release of a condemned criminal, how great soever his crime. This custom was intended to commemorate the circumstance of a sentenced malefactor having been the only person willing to accompany St. Romain in his dangerous encounter with the dragon (gorgouille) which infested the neighbourhood of Rouen. The monster, as it turned out, did not give much trouble; it was rendered powerless by the simple act of the saint making the sign of the cross over it, and with his stole tied round its neck allowed itself to be led quietly into the town. The privilege was maintained down to the time of the Revolution, though latterly under considerable modifications.

Bridges. — The first bridge over the Seine here was built (1167) by Queen Mathilda, daughter of Henry I.; it lasted till the middle of the 15th century, when it was destroyed, and a bridge of boats substituted for it. In 1829 the upper bridge of stone was completed, and in 1836 the boats were finally replaced, by the existing suspension bridge. An opening is left in the centre of this, between the supporting piers, under a lofty cast-iron arch rising 82 ft. above the river to allow masted vessels to pass.

The cotton manufactures of Rouen are of such extent and importance as to render it the Manchester of France; they are greatly promoted by 3 small streams, — the Robec, the Aubitte, and the Reuelle. A particular kind of striped and chequed stuff is called Rouennerie (toiles peintes rayées et à carreaux), because originally and more especially fabricated here. Spinning and weaving mills, dye works, especially of Turkey red, printing and bleaching works, are most plentifully distributed, not only through town and suburbs, but over the adjacent country in a circuit of many miles, employing, on a moderate computation, 50,000 persons.

The English church service is performed here on Sundays, but there is no regular church. English travellers repairing to an English place of worship abroad ought to make some inquiries respecting the character of those who officiate, and ascertain whether they be really in holy orders.

At the shop of Lebrument, late Frère, bookseller, Quai de Paris, the traveller may provide himself with many interesting works relating to the antiquities of Normandy, with views and maps.

The Poste aux Lettres is in the Rue St. Nicholas; open from 8 A.M. to 8 P.M.

Malleposte daily to Paris and Havre.

The Messageries Royales in the Rue de Bec, 10. Messag. Lafitte and Co. Rue Thouret, 15.

Railroad to Paris. Trains 6 daily. Terminus in the Faubourg St. Sever. (Route 8.)

Diligence to Caen daily, morning and evening; to Gournay and Beauvais daily; to Havre morning and evening; to Elbœuf and Lisieux; to Evreux and Orleans; to Pont Audemar and Honfleur; to Dieppe.

Steam-boats daily in summer to Paris in 18 hours (R. 11.); to Havre in 8 hours; and to Elbœuf: start from the Quai du Havre (R. 12.).

N.B.—The steamers are prohibited from stopping at any intermediate places.

Walks and Excursions.

The Mont St. Catherine, the escarped chalk hill on the l. of the city, rising above the Seine and the road to Paris, affords the best distant and panoramic view of Rouen, and will well repay the labour of the ascent to those who are not afraid to face a steep ascent, 380 ft. high, which may be mastered in half an hour, starting from the extremity of the Cours Dauphin. The entire mass of the town is spread out below you, surmounted by engine chimneys mixed with spires, sending out its long lines of houses and factories up the hill sides and into the neighbouring industrious valleys, uniting it with distant villages; the noble spires of the cathedral and of St. Ouen rising out of the midst, the winding and sparkling river Seine, spanned by its 2 bridges and crowded with shipping, give a pleasing variety to the landscape. The marks of active industry are every where apparent, the bleach-fields strewn with white webs, the stream courses marked by rows of factories and tall chimneys, the nooks in the hill sides choked with villages.

All along the top of the mount are traces of ditches and brick foundations of bastions, part of the strong fort occupied by the Marquis Villars and the soldiers of the League during the siege of 1591, which were captured by Henry IV., and dismantled by him in compliance with the request of the citizens, with the memorable words, that "he desired no fortress but the hearts of his subjects."

It is worth while to drive out to the château of Canteleu, on the road to Caudebec (R. 13.), on account of its beautiful view, even if you go no farther.

A more distant excursion, which will occupy one day very agreeably, is to Château Gaillard, near Andelys (Route 11.).

The post road thither lies through Le Forge Féret (11 kilom.), Pont St. Pierre (10 kilom.), Les Andélys (19 kilom.), making the whole distance 24¾ Eng. m. The Railway passes within 3 m. of Andelys.

There are many interesting monuments of architecture in the vicinity of Rouen: among them the Chapelle of St. Julien, 3 or 4 m. S. W. of Rouen on the l. bank of the Seine (R. 12.). St. George Boscherville 9 m. off, on the road to Havre (R. 13.).

ROUTE 10.

PARIS TO ROUEN (THE UPPER ROAD), BY GISORS OR BY MAGNY.

By Magny, 119 kilom. = 73 Eng. m. i. e. 6¾ m. shorter than the Lower Road (R. 9.), but much less interesting. By Gisors, 126 kilom. = 77¼ Eng. m.

The Havre Malleposte runs daily in 7½ hours. Diligences daily.

9 Courbevoie,
12 Herblay,
10 Pontoise,
18 Chars,
19 Gisors.
} in Route 5.

From Paris to Pontoise by St. Denis (R. 2.) is 3 kilom. = 1¾ Eng.

m. longer. On quitting St. Denis it turns to the l. out of the Calais road, and runs by the side of the Seine, skirting on the rt. the valley of Montmorency, whose beauties are much vaunted by the Parisians, and perhaps somewhat exaggerated. A little way short of Epinay sur Seine a road strikes off through it to St. Leu, celebrated for its château and park, which, before the Revolution, belonged to the Duc d'Orléans, and was the favorite residence of Madame de Genlis. In the time of Napoleon it was given to Hortense, the Queen of Holland, and after the Restoration became the property of the Duc de Bourbon, who ended his days there miserably and mysteriously, being found hanging from his bed.

Montmorency is a dirty little town 14 miles distant from Paris. Its fine Gothic church, of the 15th century, contains some good painted glass.

The house called L'Ermitage, about ½ a mile off, has attained celebrity because Rousseau resided in it, and wrote there his Nouvelle Héloise. It was then the property of Madame d'Epinay, and really a hermitage; it has since been totally altered, and turned into a country house. It was afterwards occupied by Gretry the composer, who died here 1813.

A great number of donkeys are kept for the service of visitors.

Enghien les Bains is a small bathing establishment on the borders of the Etang St. Gratien, within the valley of Montmorency. It owes its origin to a spring of sulphureous water which is supposed to possess valuable medicinal properties.

At Herblay the road by St. Denis joins that by Courbevoie. It is a tiresome road from Pontoise to 14 Bordeau, a hamlet dependant on the village of de Vigny, whose fine old Castle flanked by round towers, topped with extinguisher roofs, and surrounded by a moat, stands on the l. of the road. It was built by the Cardinal d'Amboise, minister of Louis XII., and is a picturesque and interesting specimen of domestic architecture in the beginning of the 16th century.

12 Magny.—Inn: Gran d Cerf. In the pretty church, in the latest Gothic, passing into the Italian style, is a monument, consisting of 3 marble statues kneeling, to the memory of the family of Villerond (date 1617); another in bas-relief recording the virtues of M. Dubuisson, pastor of the parish, and a richly ornamented canopy, carved, and bearing statues which covers the baptismal font.

We now enter the district anciently called le Vexin. The little river Epte divided the French from the Norman Vexin, and formed the boundary of Normandy. It is crossed at St. Clair sur Epte, whose ruined Castle, a mixture of late Norman and early pointed, is reputed the scene of the interview between Charles the Simple and the pirate Rollo; when the barbarian conqueror, called upon to do homage for the fertile province of Normandy, which he had in fact wrung from the weakness of the Frankish king, instead of kneeling to kiss the king's foot, seized the royal leg, and without bending carried it to his mouth, so as to upset the monarch from his seat, amidst the laughter of the rude warriors of the north.

The Epte is crossed on quitting St. Clair.

12 Thilliers-en-Vexin, in the midst of a monotonous plain of rich corn land. Near the middle of this stage the road passes at some distance on the rt., a village called Hacqueville, insignificant in itself, but deserving of mention as the birthplace of Mark Isambart Brunel, the engineer of the Thames Tunnel, whom England is proud to own as her son by adoption, although France claims him by birth. He was educated in the college of Gisors, and when the vacations called him home his favourite resort was the shop of the village carpenter, whose tools and instruments had greater attractions for the youthful engineer than Latin and Greek, and his allotted holiday task (devoirs). The writer of this has frequently heard him describe the wonder and delight with which he for the first time beheld (1784), on the quay of Rouen, the component parts of a huge steam-engine, just landed from England: "When I am a man," he said to himself, "I will repair to the country where such machinery is made."

15 Ecouis contains a remarkably fine Gothic Church built in the unusual form of a Greek cross, founded by Enguerrand de Marigny, the unfortunate minister and high treasurer of Philippe le Bel, unjustly condemned to death without trial at the instigation of the succeeding king's uncle Charles of Valois, and hung on the robbers' gibbet of Montfaucon. His monument, set up in this church at a time when his innocence and worth were acknowledged, was destroyed at the Revolution. That of his brother, Archbishop of Rouen, is still surmounted by his effigy in white marble. He went as ambassador to Edward III. in 1342, "and appeared at court in the guise of a warrior, not of a minister of peace." There are several other tombstones in the choir.

Between Pontoise and Ecouis there is another road through Gisors, which, though a little longer than the preceding, is taken by the malleposte.

18 Chars } in Route 5.
18 Gisors }
13 Etrépagny.
13 Ecouis.

A rapid ascent and descent carries the road across the industrious and picturesque vale of the Andelle, in the midst of which is 9 Fleury sur Andelle. About 10 m. N. E. of this, and 2 from Lions la Forêt, are the ruins of the Abbey of Mortimer, begun 1154 by Henry II. of England. The church is now pulled down; but some of the conventual buildings, in the style of transition from round to pointed — including a fine chapter house (date 1174), remain. It was at Bourgboudouin that Roland, the ex-minister and Girondist, committed suicide, 1793. As soon as he heard of his wife's death by the guillotine, he resolved not to survive her; but unwilling to endanger the generous friends who had sheltered him in their house at Rouen, he took leave of them, and carrying a sword-stick in his hand set out on the road to Paris. When he had got thus far, he sat down under a tree and stabbed himself, leaving about his person a note, written by his own hand to this effect: "Whoever you may be who find me lying here, treat my remains with respect. They are those of one who devoted his whole life to be useful, and who died as he lived, virtuous and unsullied. May my fellow citizens embrace more humane sentiments! When I heard of the death of my wife, I loathed a world stained with so many crimes." He perished an instance of the miserable fate which unerringly awaits those who, either from good or evil motives, are the first to plunge a country into revolution.

12 La Forge Féret.

From the brow of the steep hill leading down through deep cuttings into Rouen, a fine view is obtained of that city and the Seine. The upper and lower roads from Paris unite in the suburb Eauplet.

11 Rouen (Route 9.).

ROUTE 11.

THE SEINE. — ST. GERMAIN TO ROUEN.

The figures mark distances from place to place in French lieues = 2½ Eng. m. From St. Germain to Rouen is 56 leagues, about 140 Eng. m.

Steamers (Les Dorades and Les Etoiles) go daily in summer (from May to September inclusive), making the ascending voyage in 18 hours, the descending in 12. They mount no higher than Pecq (a suburb of St.

Germain, p. 30.), and start thence at 8 o'clock in the morning, after the arrival of the first train on the St. Germain railway (see Route 9.). The steam navigation from Paris to Pecq, which occupied 4 hours, has been abandoned in consequence of the completion of the railway, and of the difficulties and dangers of the passage, such as the Pertuis de la Morue, a narrow strait and rapid, near Bezons, the excessive winding of the river, and the 14 bridges which traverse it.

The scenery of the Seine (Sequana — from the Celtic seach, devious, and an, water) is very pleasing, almost meriting the epithet "beautiful;" its banks are abundantly studded with towns, villages, and châteaux, and are alternately wooded, or rise in round bare hills, sometimes presenting escarpment to the river, which, from the white colour of the chalk, are not altogether picturesque. There are not many old castles — Château Gaillard, however, is an imposing and interesting ruin, and perhaps, taken as a whole, the finest feature in the voyage. The number of islands in the river between Paris and Rouen is said to be 300. The great drawback is the circuitous windings of the river, which render the voyage tedious, prolonging the distance from Pecq to Rouen to 141 m., while by land it is only 71 m. The voyage down the stream, however, by steamer, occupies no more time than by diligence; but as the coach travels at night, you see nothing of the scenery. The boat has the advantage of freedom from the fatigue of a land journey. The completion of the railroad will render the steamer less desirable.

Between St. Germain (or Pecq) and Poissy the river makes a bend of 21 m., inclosing as it were in a loop the forest of St. Germain; by land the distance is 4½ m.

L. the river skirts the forest of St. Germain, passing Mesnil at the extremity of the terrace of St. Germain, and the village. The Seine has recently been bridged to allow the railway to pass at

L. Maisons (1) (Inns: Hotel Talma, so called because once the residence of the actor; good. Le Petit Havre). The château, now the property of M. Lafitte, was built by François Mansart, 1658, and is a handsome edifice of Italian architecture, but is not seen from the river. Before the Revolution it belonged to the Comte d'Artois, and was afterwards given by Napoleon to Marshal Lannes. The park has been cut into building lots, and sold piecemeal. Access is given to the new colony of villas by the bridge of wood resting on stone piers. The distance hence to Paris is only 12 m. by land. Voltaire wrote Zaire here.

Rt. Conflans (2½), a village having a suspension-bridge over the Seine, by which the road from Pontoise to Versailles crosses the river, is situated a little below the confluence of the Oise with the Seine, whence comes its name. A steamer ascends the Oise to Compiègne.

Rt. Andresis, is situated below the mouth of the Oise; it has a fine Gothic church.

L. Poissy (1¾). See p. 31. Passengers by the ascending steamers often disembark at Poissy, which is not more than 5 m. by land from St. Germain, whereas by the windings of the river the voyage takes 1½ or 2 hours. The most interesting objects on the river, as far as Rosny and Rolleboise, are described p. 32.

Rt. Treil (2¼).
L. Verneuil.
Rt. Meulan (2).
} The island Ile Belle, opposite Meulan, is reputed the prettiest in the whole course of the river; but it is feared its shrubberies, and thickets, and plantations, have been cut down.

L. Mantes (4¾), and Rt. Limay, united by a bridge
L. the château of Rosny (½), a red brick building, with terraces on which } see p. 32.

Sully may have walked, clipped avenues, &c. See p. 33.

L. Rolleboise (½); between this place and Bonnières the curve made by the Seine measures 12 m., the direct distance is 3 m.

Rt. La Roche Guyon (3½), one of the largest châteaux on the Seine, and one of the most striking objects, is a structure of different ages, part modern, part Gothic, situated at the base of a rock of chalk, which has been escarped artificially to make room for it. The kitchen, vaults, cellars, &c. are excavated in the rock, with merely fronts of brick. The oldest parts are a Gothic chapel and burial vault, and a large reservoir for water, all cut in the rock; and the tower on the eminence above, commanding the country far and near, and communicating with the château by steps cut in the hill side. The château has long been the property of the family Larochefoucauld. The chamber and bed occupied by Henry IV. on his frequent visits to the castle are kept up in their original condition. The attraction which drew him hither was the charms of the lady of the castle, the Duchess de Guercheville, whose high-minded reply to his assiduities deserves recording: "Je ne suis pas d'assez bonne maison pour être votre femme, mais je suis de trop bonne maison pour être votre maîtresse." The bourg adjoining the castle has a handsome Gothic church. "The houses of the poor people here, as on the Loire in Touraine, are burrowed into the chalk, and have a singular appearance; here are 2 streets of them one above another." — A. Young. A suspension bridge of 656 ft. opening between the piers, has been thrown across the Seine here.

L. Bonnières (1½).

Rt. Limetz, a village at a little distance from the river, nearly marks the situation of the embouchure of the Epte, a small stream, which once formed the boundary or limit of Normandy. Charles the Simple, in 911, was fain to offer to the Norman Rollo all the territory extending from this streamlet to the sea, and with it his fair daughter Gisela, to arrest the exterminating inroads of the warriors of the north. The offer was accepted; and Neustria, receiving the name of its conquerors, became Normandy. (See p. 45.)

L. Vernon (2½), p. 33.

Rt. The hills which border the river, with nearly precipitous cliffs, have a singularly wavy outline, their curved tops being saddled, as it were, with green turf, while between them dry valleys or coombes open out. They rise in the form of an amphitheatre, encircling an extensive plain. Nearly at the centre of the curve which the Seine here describes, on the summit of a commanding chalk cliff, rises

Rt. Château Gaillard (6), the most picturesque ruin and interesting object, both from its situation and associations, in the whole course of the Seine. Immediately below its frowning antique towers, and crumbling crags, a light and convenient wire suspension bridge has been thrown over the river.

The castle was begun and finished in one year by King Richard Cœur de Lion, in defiance of his rival Philippe Augustus, and in the face of the treaty of Louviers, by which he had bound himself not to fortify Andelys, the little town on the strand at the river side. He thus broke it in substance, while he kept to the letter. Exulting in his stronghold, as he first looked down from its commanding battlements on the defenceless town and exposed river below him, he named it, in the pride of his heart, his "Saucy Castle." Even now that it is reduced to a mouldering ruin, one cannot look up to its towering battlements, or gaze down from them upon the sunny landscape below — the glassy Seine, flowing close at the foot of the castle rocks, then girdling the peninsula in front, and reflecting vine and corn-clad slopes, trees, spires, and cottages in its surface, without sharing in this feeling of exultation of the fierce soldier king, in the possession of a stronghold which enabled him to defy his enemies, and overawe the country around, with the terror of his armed bands and unerring archers.

The eminence on which it stands projects forward, isolated from the neighbouring hills on all sides but one, where it is connected by a narrow tongue. This was cut through by a deep fosse skirting the outer line of wall. On all the other sides steep escarpments rendered the height inaccessible; towards the river, indeed, it presents a vertical precipice. Yet even along the edge of the cliff tall flanking towers were raised, some of which have long since toppled over, while others are tottering to their fall. But these were only the outworks, within them rose a citadel of singular form and strength, — a huge circular drum tower having a wavy surface alternately projecting and receding, like a frustrum of a fluted column. The circle is broken by the insertion of a round tower shaped externally like a dice box on the side overhanging the Seine. This was the Donjon, and contained the royal apartments; its walls are 14 or 15 ft. thick. A second deep fosse surrounds this citadel, cut in the chalk rock, here interspersed with flints which were used in the building, and thus it served at once as quarry and defence. Extensive caverns, supported by piers of the rock left standing, branch off from one side of this fosse; they probably were used as stables. The original gateway into the citadel is no longer accessible, but entrance may be gained by clambering through a small sally-port in the corner. It is to be feared that only a small part of the existing ruins belonged to the castle of King Richard. At his death Philippe Augustus, waging war as the champion of Prince Arthur with John, laid siege to this castle. It was bravely defended by Roger de Lacy for 6 months, when he was finally starved into surrender. He had previously expelled from its walls the useless mouths, the old men, women and children, to the number of 400 or 500; but the French king, wishing to distress the garrison, drove them back and refused them passage, so that the poor wretches, denied admittance into the castle, perished of famine in the ditches between the two armies. Château Gaillard continued to be the chief bulwark of Normandy down to the beginning of the 17th century. In 1314 two frail queens were immured within its walls, and one of them, Marguerite, wife of Louis X., was strangled here by order of her husband. David Bruce found an asylum here 1334, when an exile from Scotland, the castle having been ceded to him by Philippe of Valois. With a small garrison of 120 men it resisted for 16 months the forces of Henry V., and yielded at length because cut off from a supply of water by the wearing out of the ropes by which the buckets were let down into the well!

Against the face of the cliff above the Seine rises a curious pigeon-house tower, lined with cells for the pigeons, a common appendage to ancient fortresses, being a sort of natural larder. A chapel of recent date has been excavated in the rock near it.

The suspension bridge over the Seine beneath the castle opens a communication with Louviers (12 m.) rt. Below the castle rock crouches the town of Petit Andelys (Inn, Cerf); the large and conspicuous red building surmounted by a dome at the lower end of it, is an Hospital founded by the Duc de Penthièvre. At Grand Andelys about ½ m. inland, away from the Seine, is a Gothic church somewhat in decay, curiously Italianized on its N. side, containing some painted glass, and a rude representation of the neighbouring Château Gaillard carved in stone. A fine specimen of domestic architecture in the florid Gothic style of the 16th century, called La Grande Maison, is now converted into a granary. It has many rich details, including a fine oriel. Andelys, or rather the adjoining hamlet Villiers, was the birthplace (1594) of Nicholas Poussin, the painter, but the humble cottage of his parents is pulled down, and no monument has been set up to his memory. Turnebus, the Greek commentator, was also a native of Andelys.

La Fontaine de St. Clothilde alone recalls to mind the monastery founded here by the first Christian queen of France. It is swept away, but the water of the well is believed by the peasantry still to retain the virtues imparted to it by the saint, and to cure their children of stomach-aches.

Andelys is above 4 m. distant from the railroad (R. 8.). There is a direct post road to Rouen by Pont St. Pierre; it is traversed daily by a diligence.

The Seine, leaving behind the white crags and towering ruins of Château Gaillard, makes a wide sweep along the base of a series of semicircular chalk cliffs. This curve of the river is 18 m. long, while the direct distance from (rt.) Thuit to the mouth of the Andelle is only 8 m. There is no place worth notice on the Seine between these two points. The railway (p. 27.) emerges from a tunnel near (rt.) Venables, and skirts the river.

Rt. (5¼.) The pretty and industrious valley of the Andelle opens out into the Seine at the foot of a green hill, "the last of a long promontory," bearing the name of Côte des Deux Amans. It is the scene of the old romantic Lai of Mary of France, of the young lover who was to marry the mistress of his heart, a king's daughter, provided he could carry her to the top of the hill without stopping to rest. He fell dead under his precious burthen exhausted with the exertion just as he reached the summit; at which the king's daughter died of a broken heart, and was buried in the same grave with him. The hard-hearted father who had caused this catastrophe by imposing such cruel conditions, struck with remorse, founded on the spot where it occurred a convent whose existence is traced to an early period, but the building now standing on the top of the hill is not older than 1685.

At Romilly, 8 m. up the valley of the Andelle, are the most extensive copper works in France, consisting of foundery with rolling mills. The banks of the Andelle are studded with fulling mills. A bridge has been thrown across for the railway a little above the influx of

L. The Eure, from which the Dept. is named, a considerable and useful river, on which stands Louviers, famed for its cloth manufacture (p. 34.), falls into the Seine 2½ m. above

L. 3¼. Pont de L'Arche (R. p. 34.). This town is only 12 m. from Rouen; whilst, in consequence of several serpentine bends the distance by water is 33. The Seine abounds in islands in this part of its course, which increase the intricacies of the navigation.

L. a little below the bridge stand the remains of the Abbey of Bon Port, consisting of the refectory, and another monastic edifice, the church being quite destroyed. It was founded 1190 by Richard Cœur de Lion, in gratitude for his escape from drowning in the waters of the Seine, into which he had plunged in the heat of the chase while pursuing a stag. On reaching the bank, after a severe struggle with the current, he called the spot "bon port," and vowed to build a church. The approach to the town of Elbœuf is marked by the number of tall chimnies, and the many floating arks moored in the midst of the river, used for washing wool.

L. Elbœuf, 3.

Elbœuf is exclusively a manufacturing town, and if Rouen has any claim to be compared to Manchester, it may be called a French Leeds, as one of the principal seats of the manufacture of cloth; more than half of its 11,000 inhabitants and about 15,000 persons in the adjoining communes being weavers, or occupied in other departments of this branch of industry. Its situation on the l. bank of the Seine is advantageous to its prosperity. The wise enactments of the sage Colbert (1669) promoted greatly its already thriving commerce; but the Revocation of the edict of Nantes annulled their good effect, dispersing its industrious artisans, who settled in Leyden, Norwich, and Leicester. The manufactures of Elbœuf did not recover from this check until the events of 1815, relieving France from the competition of Belgium, gave them so decided an impulse that their produce is now threefold greater than it was then. The value of the cloth made here in one year is estimated at more than a million sterling.

The two Gothic churches of St. Etienne and St. Jean contain curious painted glass; in the latter is a window presented by the clothworkers' guild somewhere about 1466, in which various implements of the craft, such as shears and teazles, are introduced.

The working classes are generally industrious and economical, and are consequently far better off than those of Rouen.

A Steamer goes daily to Rouen.

L. The Rocks of Orival, a range of chalk cliffs beginning at Elbœuf, consisting of detached pinnacles and projecting shelves, formed by the hard flint layers enclosed in the rock, present a singular outline of fantastic forms. On a platform half way up their face, a small chapel has found a niche; it is partly excavated in the rock, so are likewise many small dwellings around it. One of these needles of chalk, called Roche de Pignon, rises 200 ft. above the river. The Rouen railway crosses the river and an island in the midst of it at an oblique angle near Oissel.

Rt. From Oissel (2½), marked by its spire: to Rouen the river is thickly set with islands bearing long rows of tall poplars. Beyond (rt.) Authieux the rt. bank rises in tall chalk cliffs, at the base of which, between them and the Seine, runs the road to Paris (R. 9.), passing a series of villages and manufactories.

L. St. Etienne de Rouvray, 1½. William the Conqueror was hunting in the forest of Rouvray, which still exists behind this village, when the news was brought him of the death of Edward the Confessor, and of the usurpation of his throne by Harold, his brother-in-law.

Rt. The high hill of St. Catherine (p. 44.), and the spire of the Cathedral are conspicuous long before reaching

2 Rt. ROUEN (9.)

The steamer is moored to the quai between the Pont d'Orleans, which rests on the isle Lacroix, and the iron suspension-bridge, connecting Rouen with (l.) its suburb, St. Sever.

N.B. — In ascending the Seine from Rouen to Paris the steamers start at a very early hour, usually 5 a. m.

ROUTE 12.

THE SEINE B. — ROUEN TO HAVRE AND HONFLEUR.

34 leagues = 85½ Eng. m. The distance to Havre by land is 53 m.

Steamers run daily, in summer, making the voyage in about 8 hours, i. e. a little longer time than the diligence.

The scenery is so pleasing, that notwithstanding the windings of the river, the voyage in fine weather is very agreeable.

The steamers are not allowed to stop to take up or let down passengers at any intermediate places. — 1841.

The hour of starting varies so as to enable the vessels to meet the flood tide off Quillebœuf, and by the aid of it to pass the shifting sands there. The boats start from the Quai du Havre close to the Hôtel de Rouen. Fare 10 fr., carriages 30 fr.

For some distance below Rouen the river is intersected by numerous islands, long narrow strips of earth planted with willows and poplars: a scene of rich verdure, but somewhat monotonous. The hills near Rouen are dotted with white country houses of its citizens and manufacturers.

Rt. The vale of Bapaume, beset with cotton factories, opens out.

L. Petit Quevilly (3 m. from Rouen). Here is an ancient little chapel of St. Julien in the Romanesque style, terminating in an apse having the windows and doors round-headed, built soon after 1162 by our Henry II., who had a hunting seat in the adjoining forest. Though now degraded into a barn, it is an edifice possessing an interest for the antiquary.

Rt. Canteleu, a château of the time of Louis XIV.; its terraces and gardens were laid out by Le Nôtre, but have been modernised.

Rt. Dieppedale, a long row of houses bordering the river.

L. Grand Quevilly once contained a Protestant church (temple) capable of holding 10,500 persons; but in 1685, through the machinations of the Jesuits, it was closed, and a few months after razed to the ground. This act of intolerance was committed shortly before the Revocation of the edict of Nantes entailed persecution and exile on the large and industrious Reformed community which then occupied this district.

L. Moulineaux (4), a prettily situated but poor village, on the high road to Honfleur (Route 23.), has a ruinous but interesting church in the earliest pointed style; date, the beginning of the 13th century. On the hill above it are some heaps of stone, the very scanty traces of the walls of a castle destroyed by King John, which, according to the tradition, once belonged to Robert the Devil, a fabulous personage, a sort of Norman Blue Beard, who murdered his friends and mistresses, and in the end sold himself to the evil one. Some suppose him to have been Duke Robert, the father of William the Conqueror.

L. Near La Bouille and Caumont are extensive quarries of building stone. Bare yellow cliffs line the river for some distance.

Rt. St. George de Boscherville. This famous abbey stands at some distance from the Seine, near the Havre road (Route 13.), and is only just visible from the river.

The Seine makes a bend 18 m. long between Rouen and this point; in a direct line they are not more than 10 m. apart.

Rt. Duclair (5½), a pretty village traversed by the road to Havre (Route 13.), squeezed in between the river and the rocks, one of which, an elevated crag, goes by the name of la Chaire de Gargantua. The rt. bank again sweeps round to the S., its elevated slopes covered with hanging woods.

Rt. It is recorded that at the little hamlet of Mesnil, Agnes Sorel, mistress of Charles VII., breathed her last, in the arms of the king. An old building is still pointed out as her abode; it retains its chimnies of the 15th century. It was called Mesnil la Belle; it is now a labourer's cottage. The l. bank below Mesnil has risen into round hills of considerable height, part bare, part wooded; houses few, and scenery solitary. To this succeeds on the rt. a plain, verdant and bosky, formed into a peninsula by the winding river, out of the midst of which rise the now spireless twin towers of Jumièges Abbey (p. 55.).

L. The Château de Mailleraye (7½), situated at the water's edge, below the village of Guerbaville, where there is a large ship-builder's yard, belongs to the Duc de Mortemart. It is an edifice of the 17th century, in a park surrounded by green walls of straight clipped trees, and is a conspicuous object from the river, but not otherwise worth notice.

Below Mailleraye the river expands considerably, and its channel begins to be beset with the sand-banks which render its navigation so difficult, leaving only a narrow passage in the middle free.

Rt. Caudebec (2¼), the most considerable and prettily situated town on the banks of the Lower Seine; its long terrace of houses screened by an avenue of green trees, and surmounted by its elegant church spire, was a favourite subject of the landscape painter Vernet. It is described at p. 57.

Rt. A humble structure at the foot of the steep, wooded heights below Caudebec, is the chapel of Nôtre Dame de Barre-y-va, much resorted to by sailors, who have covered its walls with ex-votos, paintings, models of ships, &c. The name probably comes from the circumstance of the much-dreaded Barre or Bore, at the mouth of the Seine, ascending at times thus far.

Rt. Villiquier, prettily placed, and forming an agreeable intermixture of trees and houses surmounted by a Gothic spire, is a fishing village and station of the pilots, whose duty it is to carry vessels between this point and Mailleraye.

L. Vatteville la Rue.

The Seine, which has run nearly due S. from Caudebec, resumes its proper direction from E. to W. below Vieux Port, and preserves the same as far as its mouth. Its banks, retiring to a considerable distance from each other, allow it to expand into a wide but shallow estuary, frequently enlivened by large shipping, tug steamers (remorqueurs), &c.

L. Quillebœuf, an important town and small sea port which Henri IV. wanted to convert into a fortress, but which his widow Marie de Medecis dismantled, is built on a projecting promontory, at the extremity of which stands its massive church tower and light-house. It is the station of the pilots to the number of 110, with 28 apprentices (aspirants), whose duty it is to carry vessels through the intricate navigation of the mouth of the Seine, from Havre and Honfleur up to Villequier.

This is the most difficult and dangerous portion of the whole river for vessels, on account of the sunk rocks and shifting sands, only to be passed during high tide. Shipwrecks occurred here almost every year before the introduction of steam towage, which, by enabling vessels to pass up, even when the wind is unfavourable, has diminished the delay and risque. So variable are the sand banks off Quillebœuf that they have been known to change their position more than a league in the course of twelve months: this indeed occurred in 1840. The cause of this must be looked for in the sudden contraction of the river at this point to about ¾ m., while a little below it is 3 m. wide. The consequence is that the vast mass of water poured into the Seine by the rising tide forms capricious and powerful currents, and very commonly enters the river in the form of a lofty wave or wall of water 3 to 6 ft. high, here called the Barre, and similar to the Bore at the mouth of the Severn. It stretches across from one bank to the other, marked by a line of white foam, sweeping all before it with a roar like thunder, heard forty minutes before it arrives. It seems to acquire the greatest force abreast of Quillebœuf, where it dashes over the quays, hurling vessels against them, and sometimes injuring the buildings, but it is perceived as high as Caudebec.

The still water produced at the point where the rising tide encounters the descending current, allows the sand and mud, carried along by the river when in rapid motion, to fall to the bottom, and accumulate into shifting deposits of sand. Among these sand banks the Télémaque, a vessel said to have been laden with property belonging to émigrés, and jewels of the Bourbon princes, was lost at the time of the Revolution. A recent attempt to raise the hull failed.

Rt. Through the vista of the valley of the Bolbec, which opens out opposite Quillebœuf, a glimpse is obtained of the castle towers of Lillebonne, celebrated for its remains of a Roman theatre (p. 57.).

Rt. The opening of another small valley is marked on one side by a conspicuous conical white rock called Pierre Gante (? Giante) overhanging the Seine at a height of 200 ft. and on the other by the Castle of Tancarville, the venerable strong hold of the chamberlains of the Dukes of Normandy, planted on a pedestal of high cliff forming part of the headland called Nez de Tankarville. To the water side it presents an open terrace, on which stands a modern mansion, with sash windows and a tall watch tower, round on one side, and angular like a bastion on the other. Behind stretch two long lines of varied and stately towers connected by curtains forming a large triangular enclosure, once the castle courts, now grass-grown and encumbered with ruins. The country behind it is one dense forest, over which these ancient battlements peer majestically. The best preserved portions are the gatehouse with caged windows, and grooves for double portcullis, and the contiguous tower dating from the latter half of the 15th century. Here, within walls 9 ft. thick, may be seen the "cachots" — and the "chambre de question" which is frequently mentioned in the old archives. In the corner tower (L' Aigle) on the brow of the cliff overhanging the Seine, one or two old wall pieces, so constructed as to be loaded from the breach, are preserved. In this part only of the old castle do roofs and floors remain. All the rest is mere shattered walls, gutted towers, enclosures dark and overgrown with nettles and hemlock, which now luxuriate on the hearths of the Tancarville, Montmorencies, Harcourts, and La Tour d'Auvergne, its ancient owners. The chapel and the Salle des Chevaliers, with 3 fire-places, are pointed out to strangers. The loftiness of some of the towers, and their singular forms, deserve notice: the Tour de Lion is the segment of a circle; the Tour Coquisart, 60 ft. high, of 5 stories piled one over the other, and still surmounted by the stone groined ribs of its roof, while all the rest is fallen, is in the shape of a triangle with curved sides. It communicates behind, with the Donjon, which was detached from the body of the place and entered only by a drawbridge. It contains a well 300 ft. deep. The date of its construction is the early part of the 15th century, and scarcely any portion of the castle seems older. The English under Henry V. burned down the preceding one 1437. The modern mansion is tumbling to pieces as fast as possible. From the noble owners whose names are mentioned above, Tankarville fell into the hands of Law of Lauriston, the South Sea schemer. It was plundered and demolished at the Revolution as the property of aristocrats and émigrés (the Montmorencies), but after having been for 20 years attached to a hospital at Havre, it has once more reverted to that family. The poor small hamlet of fishers' huts beneath the castle affords no tolerable accommodation for travellers. The distance from Lillebonne is 6 m. and from St. Romain on the road to Havre (R. 14.) about 12 m.

Below this the banks of the Seine are too distant and destitute of objects of interest to need farther notice, excepting the towns and ports of

Rt. Harfleur, in R. 14.

L. Honfleur, described in R. 23.

Passengers can be put ashore here, where they can take the diligence to Caen.

Rt. Havre, in R. 13.

The distance from Havre to Honfleur is about 7 miles.

ROUTE 13.

ROUEN TO HAVRE—LOWER ROAD BY ST. GEORGES BOSCHERVILLE, JUMIEGES, — CAUDEBEC, AND LILLEBONNE.

86 kilom. = 53¼ Eng. m.

Diligences run daily in 7 hours.

The following route is one of the most agreeable in Normandy, both for the pleasing view of the Seine which it commands and for the succession of ancient ecclesiastical remains in the vicinity of which it passes. It is, however, hilly. A little way beyond the industrious cotton spinning village of Bapeaume, it surmounts the long and steep hill of Canteleu, from whose top Rouen is seen to very great advantage, and the Seine winding away S. to double the ridge of which the hill of Canteleu forms a part. On the l. is the Château of Canteleu, belonging to Baron Lefevre, which commands the view in perfection, and about 2 m. beyond it a road turning off to the l. leads to the Abbey of St. George de Boscherville whose Church is one of the most ancient and unaltered monuments in Normandy. It was founded by Raoul de Tankarville, chamberlain of the Conqueror, previous to the Conquest, and consecrated in the founder's presence. From the precision with which its age is fixed, it has been termed "a land-mark of Norman architecture;" as usual it was destroyed at the Revolution, but the church was preserved for the use of the parish. It has the usual characteristics—vast proportions, simplicity, and austere grandeur. Its W. end has a round door ornamented with five mouldings and two side towers, in whose upper story the pointed arch of a very early date appears. This may have been the part of the church last finished. The vaulting of the nave and transepts is also pointed, all the rest is Norman; the arches are carried round the ends of the transepts, forming two lofts or tribunes supported on a column, and there is an apse at the E. end of each, as in Winchester Cathedral, the older part of which is very like this church. The Chapter house adjoining is of later date, 1157, and of mixed architecture, both round and pointed arches occurring in it. The capitals of its columns, sculptured with subjects in relief, such as the Passage of the Jordan, and the Sacrifice of Isaac, merit notice.

Returning to the high road you descend to the borders of the Seine, on which is situated the village and post station 20 Duclair (6 m. from St. George's), a row of houses between the river and the cliffs, one of which, from a supposed resemblance to a pulpit, is called Chaire de Gargantua.

The Seine once more takes a widely curving sweep, while the high road cuts across the neck of the peninsula. In the midst of this the twin towers of the Abbey of Jumièges are conspicuous. A cross road turns off to it near Yainville, whence it is about 2 m. distant. It was the most important monastic institution on the banks of the Lower Seine for its extent, the number of its inmates, and its share in promoting learning during the dark ages, and it now towers venerable and majestic above the humble timber-framed and chalk-walled cottages of the village. It has been compared with some of the Romanesque churches of the Rhine in its plain but stately W. façade, surmounted by octagonal towers which have only recently lost their spires, but between them the porch projects in an unusual manner. This and the entire nave as far as the cross surmounted by a more massive central tower, one side of which only remains standing, is of unchanged early Norman (date 1067). The round arches are supported alternately on square piers and circular columns; their capitals, destitute of any sculpture, were ornamented with painted foliage, some traces of which still remain.

The interior is in a state of ruin, entirely roofless save a small fragment of vaulting in the aisles, and open to the rains of heaven; greensward supplies the place of pavement: the E. end, which was in the pointed style of the 13th century, has been rased to its foundations. For the origin of this dilapidation the Revolution has to answer, but its consummation is of very recent date, this ancient and interesting fabric having been absolutely quarried, and carted away to build barns with its masonry. The stone employed is a hard chalk enclosing flints, which are frequently exposed in the courses of the piers. The present owner fortunately has respect for the ruins, and watches over their preservation, having fitted up the old gatehouse for his residence. A number of curiously and rudely sculptured fragments, keystones, bas-reliefs, &c. have been discovered by him, and merit notice. Beneath a plain black marble slab, fractured into several pieces and lying in a corner was once deposited the heart of "Agnes Seurelle (Sorel), Dame de Breauté." She died near this at Mesnil (p. 52.), and Charles VII., her royal lover had apartments fitted up in the abbey in order to be near her. She was a benefactress to Jumièges, and the monks retained her heart though her body was interred at Loches in Touraine. Breauté was the name of one of her domains; some have read the inscription erroneously "Dame de Beauté." Here also another mutilated monument has recently been brought to light. It consists of mutilated effigies of youths in royal garb, with circlets on their heads, known by the name of "les Enervés" (i. e. the hamstrung) from a tradition that they represent the two sons of Clovis II., who, having rebelled and waged war against their father, suffered the cruel punishment of having the sinews of their arms and legs cut. They were then bound and set adrift in an open boat on the Seine, whose current wafted them down as far as Jumièges, where they were kindly received by the monks and ended their days. On the S. side of the church are remains of the chapel of St. Pierre, a pointed work of the 14th century; and of a large vaulted apartment called "Salle des Gardes de Charles VII.," parallel with which runs a very extensive range of subterranean vaults, probably cellars, and the gatehouse.

The high road beyond Yainville and Le Trait is carried on a lofty terrace along the shoulders of the hills, commanding a most pleasing view of the windings of the Seine both upwards and down. Nearly in front the intervening slopes are covered with orchards and gardens, and on the opposite bank stands the Château of Mailleraye, a conspicuous and large edifice (see p. 52.). At the little village Caudebecquet, about 3 m. before reaching Caudebec, a road turning to the rt. leads in 1½ m. to another monastic ruin, of inferior interest to the other two, but of great antiquity, St. Wandrille, founded by the saint of that name in the 7th century, and at first called Fontanelle. Here may be seen some elegant pointed arches, sole relics of a church sold and pulled down at the Revolution for building materials. The conventual buildings, a palace in extent, are in the modern Italian architecture of the 16th or 17th century, and have been converted partly into a manufactory of Jacquerie, partly into a bark warehouse and mill. The Cloisters behind them contain several arches, rich morceaux of flamboyant Gothic, and a Lavatory, with a few relics of sculpture, becoming fewer every day through wanton mutilation. Part of the Refectory is Norman, and lined with a circular arcade.

The good judgment of the monks is very conspicuous in the choice of the site for this convent, a nook shut out from the world in a side valley of the Seine, fertile, well watered, and wooded. St. Wandrille now stands a monument of the fall of ecclesiastic pomp and wealth. The hill side to the N. was terraced to form gardens and shady walks, now grown wild. On the top of the height above them is a little chapel of St. Saturnin, an early Norman structure, with three apses and windows like loop-holes and walls of herring-bone masonry, many centuries older than any part of the convent below.

St. Wandrille is about 4 m. from 16 Caudebec. — Inns: Poste, — Hôtel du Commerce, not very clean, but tolerable.

This is one of the prettiest little towns on the Seine, with its quay and terrace along the water side, shaded by trimmed elms, forming a screen before the row of houses which face the river. In its outskirts, the hills are dotted with neat villas and country seats. Its only remarkable edifice is its Church, a beautiful Gothic building in the florid style of the 15th century in the form of a parallelogram without transepts. It is surmounted by a tower having a short steeple of open stonework, the flamboyant tracery in it taking the form of fleurs-de-lis. Its flying buttresses and variously patterned parapets are very elegant. It was begun 1426, and stands at the side of the church. In the W. end, the gorgeous triple portal, with side porches bent back, all exuberantly ornamented with carved foliage, statues, and niches, and the rose window above, merit notice. Also the N. porch.

Within, there is much fine painted glass of the 16th century, and a wooden cover to the font, well carved in relief with subjects from the life of Christ. The spaces between the buttresses are occupied by small chapels, those at the E. end expand, and the central one, the Lady Chapel, behind the high altar, is distinguished by a finely groined roof, the ribs of which descend in the centre to form a pendant of stone 14 ft. long, ending in a carved boss, or cul de lampe. In the next chapel of St. Sepulchre is a group of 8 figures as large as life, representing the holy personages at the tomb of our Lord, under a florid Gothic canopy. The master mason of the church, William Le Tellier, is buried in the Lady Chapel: he was employed on it 30 years down to his death 1484, and in that time completed the upper part of the nave, the choir and chapels around it, including the Lady Chapel and its pendant.

The artist will find, in penetrating the dirty streets of the town, some picturesque bits among its timber-framed houses.

Caudebec was anciently a strong fortress; it was taken 1419 by the English under Talbot and Warwick, and during the wars of religion Alexander Farnese, Duke of Parma, commander of a Spanish force, sent in aid of the League, lost his arm in reconnoitring the ramparts, 1592. They have been long since swept away.

About 1½ m. up the valley, near the road which goes to Yvetot (R. 14.), stands the Church of St. Gertrude, recently repaired by the parish: it merits notice for its architecture and painted glass.

The Havre road beyond Caudebec quits the borders of the Seine not to rejoin it until Harfleur is passed. It mounts a steep ascent and traverses a part of the table-land of the Pays de Caux. There is nothing of interest until you descend into the valley where lies the town of 15 Lillebonne (Inn: Hôtel du Commerce), numbering 2924 inhabitants, prettily situated on the stream of the Bolbec, and interesting on account of its Roman theatre, a relic of the ancient Julia Bona of the itineraries of Antonine and Ptolemy, capital of the Caletes (inhabitants of the Pays de Caux), of which the present town occupies the site and retains (with a slight change) the name. The road, on entering the town, passes under the old Castle on the rt., and nearly over the space which must have anciently been the stage of the Theatre. On the l. hand is seen the semicircular portion allotted to the spectators, in a great degree cut out of the hill, which, forming a gradual slope for the rows of seats to rest on, saved the cost of vast substructions; an advantage of which the Romans and Greeks usually availed themselves in their theatres. The remains consist chiefly of foundations, and have been laid open since 1812. The fragments of walls in the centre belonged probably to the orchestra, those on the slope of the side to the dressing-rooms. On the hill, among fragments of masonry, are several semicircular terraces one above the other, with traces of the vomitories, or entrances, and round the whole runs a corridor or vaulted passage gradually rising from the side to the centre, by which entrance was obtained to the highest seats. The walls and part of the vaults here remain tolerably perfect; they are supported by many spurs or buttresses. The walls are faced with ashler masonry, or with small stones about the size of bricks neatly jointed, the centre filled in with rubble of flint strongly cemented with grouting, the whole banded together at irregular intervals by horizontal courses of red tiles. The stone employed is a porous but coherent calcareous tufa, or travertine, which is to this day deposited by the water of a neighbouring brook.

This is the best preserved, and indeed, almost the only example of an ancient theatre in the N. of France, or of Europe. It measured across the cord of the arc 300 ft. and the dimensions of the circular corridor were 625 ft. The ground in and about the town can scarcely be turned up without disclosing ancient remains of one sort or another. In 1823 a fine bronze male statue (now in the British Museum) was discovered; and the Museum at Rouen has been greatly enriched from this mine of antiquities.

On the opposite side of the high road looking down upon the theatre is the Castle, a picturesque ruin, historically interesting as the residence of William the Conqueror, who here called together his barons to unfold the momentous scheme of the invasion of England. The massive outer walls now serve to enclose a garden, and modern house, the residence of the present proprietor; close beside it is a tall round tower of beautifully even masonry, having walls 13 ft. thick, and some finely ribbed vaults; isolated by a deep fosse, crossed by a drawbridge. It is a construction of the 15th century, built probably by the Harcourts, who owned the castle down to the Revolution. Not far off is a mutilated angular tower of the 13th or 14th century. The Norman part consists of the great hall, now in utter ruin, its walls of rubble, faced with free stone: its round-headed windows, towards the court, are supported by a pillar in the centre, with recessed pillars in the sides in the style of the 11th century. In this hall, according to the tradition, William met his barons in council. The commanding elevation of these ruins gives them a magnificent view over the adjacent valley, with a peep, through a gap at its extremity, of the broad estuary of the Seine 3 m. below the town.

The Parish Church has a fine tower and spire, similar to that of Harfleur, but inferior, and a rich portal.

Owing to the abundant supply of water from the neighbouring hills Lillebonne has become a manufacturing town, and cotton mills have multiplied considerably about it, especially up the valley towards Bolbec; calicos and indiennes are principally made here.

The Castle of Tancarville (Route 12.) is 6 m. distant from Lillebonne, by cross roads, the latter part so narrow and steep as to be practicable only for a light carriage. A cabriolet may be hired for 12 fr. to go thither, and on to St. Romain on the Havre road (p. 64.), waiting to allow the traveller to see the castle. The direct road from Lillebonne to Havre passes within 3 m. of the Castle: the diligences go round by Bolbec. (Route 14.) Both roads meet at 19 La Botte.

In descending from the Plain de Caux towards

Harfleur, a fine view is obtained of that town, its noble spire, and the Seine beyond. It is situated on the Lèzarde, a small stream now barely navigable for barges, and 2 m. distant from the Seine, yet Monstrelet calls it "le souverain port de la Normandie." The deposits brought down by the Lèzarde have probably contracted its bed, and formed a fringe of land along the shore of the Seine, which has greatly increased the distance between the town and the estuary. Before the rise of Havre, Harfleur was the chief port of the mouth of the Seine, at which the wool of Spain and Portugal was imported and sent up to Montevilliers to be wrought, while by reason of its fortifications it was the key to the entrance of the Seine. It resisted for 40 days the besieging army of Henry V. in 1415, who, as soon as it had yielded, uncovered his feet and legs and walked barefoot to church to say his prayers, after which he collected the inhabitants to the number of 8000, and turning them out of their houses with only the clothes on their backs, banished them and confiscated their property, substituting English colonists in their place. In 20 years, however, the town was surprised by a band of peasants aided by a number of the former inhabitants, and the English were expelled. The tower and spire of its church, built in the 15th century, it is said, by Henry V., and its fringed S. portal, are deservedly praised as masterpieces of Gothic architecture.

The Terrace of the Château of Orcher, running along the heights above the town, commands a remarkably fine view of the river. From Harfleur to Havre the road is carried along the side of a hill, sloping gently down to the Seine, whose embouchure is seen at intervals between the trees and houses. On the rt. a little above the road stands Graville. Its small church, prettily situated on a wooded bank, is Norman of the end of the 11th century. Its transepts are decorated externally with round intersecting arches, surmounted by figures of animals. The capitals of the pillars in the nave are sculptured with monsters. In the court yard behind the Hôtel de Ville are caves in the rock, once the monks' cellars. The church was built in honour of Saint Honoria. Her relics were removed for safety at the Norman invasion to Conflans, and confided to the custody of the monks, who, when the danger was overpast, refused to restore them. Notwithstanding this loss the place where they had been retained its sanctity, so that more pilgrims and worshippers repaired thither, than to the church at Conflans which actually held them! Remains of the masonry of a quay, with rings to attach vessels, are said to have been found under Graville. Passing numerous gardens and country houses, intermixed with inns, taverns, and guinguettes, composing the villages of Graville and Ingouville, so numerous as to form almost an uninterrupted street, we reach 16 HAVRE. — Inns, H. de l'Amirauté, on the Grand Quai; — H. de l'Europe, Rue de Paris, near Place du Spectacle; good attendance and cuisine, but not very clean; — H. des Etats Unis, — Wheeler's, an English house, Quai Nôtre Dame; — Frascati's Hotel, baths, and boarding house, on the sea shore; Sur le Terrèe, near the pier outside the walls, is the best, but inconveniently distant from police and diligence offices for persons who do not intend to tarry here. It contains a subscription reading-room, and warm baths, which cost only 24 sous, with 2 to the baigneur.

Havre, originally Havre de Grace, from a small chapel of Nôtre Dame de Grace, which stood on its site, the port of the Seine and of Paris, one of the most thriving maritime towns of France, is situated on the N. side of the estuary of the Seine, and contains 25,618 inhabitants. It is quite a modern town, owing its foundation to Francis I. (1516), and its prosperity to the judicious enactments of Louis XVI., though it has received its great impulse since the war, and has been rapidly gaining upon its elder rivals, Bordeaux and Nantes. It has no fine buildings, nor historical monuments; its streets are laid down chiefly in strait lines, and at right angles with one another, and they are grouped round 3 basins, or docks, communicating from one to the other by lock gates, and placed so as to form a triangle entered from the outer (avant) port. The quays bordering the basins lined with vessels, and choked up with cotton bales, sugar casks, &c., are the chief scenes of life. The strange cries and glittering plumage of parrots and macaws, will remind the stranger of the connexion of the port with tropical countries. Its principal street (and it is a handsome one) is the Rue de Paris, extending through the Place du Spectacle, from the Porte d'Ingouville to the round tower of François Premier at the entrance of the port, the only relic of the fortifications constructed by that monarch. The modern fortifications and triple range of ditches which surround the town, due chiefly to Napoleon, cheque the extension of new streets, impede the circulation of traffic by their narrow entrances, and are useless in a military point of view, because commanded by the neighbouring heights. The citadel, built by Richelieu, in which Cardinal Mazarin shut up in 1650 the leaders of the Fronde, the Princes of Condé, Conti, and Longueville, "the lion, the ape, and the fox, caught in one trap," to use the expression of Gaston of Orleans, has been dismantled.

The release of these distinguished captives was at length effected (Feb. 1651) by one of those sudden popular risings so common in the history of the Fronde. Mazarin, prostrated from the height of power by this revolution, bethought himself how he might make friends of his former victims, and, disguised as a courier, posted off instantly from Paris, in order to be the first to tell the joyous news, and unlock the prison gates. Assuming an air of the most obsequious servility, he assured them he had no hand in their imprisonment, and stooped to kiss the boot of Condé as the hero mounted his carriage, amidst salvos of artillery, on his way to Paris.

It is only by aid of a reservoir of water (la Floride), regulated by sluices, that the mouth of the harbour, formed in the flat alluvium of the Seine, can be kept clear from the deposits of the river still in progress. The port is accessible for vessels during only 4 hours each tide, at low water the port and avant-port are left dry. The 3 docks are capable of containing 250 or 300 vessels or more with inconvenience; a fourth dock, called Bassin de Vauban, has been projected. The entrance to the old docks is not large enough to admit steamers, which are obliged to remain, without sufficient protection from certain winds, in the outer port.

The saying of Napoleon, that "Paris, Rouen, and Havre formed only one city, of which the Seine was the highway," explains the cause of the prosperity of Havre. It is the place of import of all the foreign articles needed for the supply of the French metropolis: like Liverpool with us, it is the chief cotton port of France, furnishing this commodity to the manufacturer of Rouen, Lille, St. Quentin, from which it again receives the manufactured goods to export.

It is also the point of communication between the Continent of Europe and America; a great trade is carried on with the United States. The Declarations of Independence formed the groundwork of the present good fortunes of Havre. A line of packets runs regularly 4 times a month to New York.

Here, also, a great number of emigrants, many from Germany, annually embark for the New World.

The imports of Havre, though only one half in quantity and weight of those of Marseilles (the chief sea-port in France), are said nearly to equal them in value. In 1838 the number of vessels belonging to the port was 436. Some of the principal mercantile houses here are English and American.

The ship-builders of Havre enjoy a high reputation for the skill and science which they display in the construction of vessels, which are capital sea-boats. Yet their shipyards are nothing more than an open space on the sea beach, outside the fortifications, fenced in with a wooden paling. Le Norman, the chief builder, has turned out some beautiful steamers, which beat the English in swiftness.

The annals of Havre are connected with the history of England at several points. Henry of Richmond embarked here, 1485, for Milford Haven and Bosworth Field, backed by 4,000 men, furnished by Charles VIII. to aid his enterprise. The town was delivered over to the keeping of Queen Elizabeth by the Prince de Condé, leader of the Huguenots, 1562, and the command of it was entrusted to Ambrose Dudley, Earl of Warwick; but the English were ejected within a year, after a most obstinate siege, whose progress was pressed forward by Charles IX. and his mother Catherine de Medicis in person, sensible that the possession of Havre by the English would be a thorn in the side of France. Hatred of the English, indeed, had united all parties in France against them. The Protestant Condé served in the besieging army, which was commanded by the Constable Montmorency, previously the ally of the English. Warwick held out against vastly superior numbers, until his force was reduced by slaughter and the plague from nearly 6000 to 1500: he was himself shot in defending a breach, after which the place surrendered.

The fleet of William III., which had failed before Brest, made an ineffectual attempt in 1694 to bombard the town, as it had before done in the case of Dieppe with success. In 1796 Sir Sidney Smith, while cruising in the Channel, endeavoured to cut out a French ship of war from under the batteries; but became entangled in the currents and sandbanks of the Seine, and his vessel, having been perceived next morning lying high and dry, was captured by some gun-boats, and he was sent a prisoner to the Temple in Paris.

Bernardin de St. Pierre, author of Paul and Virginia, was born here in a house No. 47. Rue de la Corderie. Havre is also the birth-place of Mademoiselle Scudery, 1697, and of Casimir Delavigne.

There is an English Chapel in the Rue d' Orleans; service at 12 on Sundays.

The Cercle de Commerce is a large commercial club-house, furnished with almost all the European newspapers and many American, to which strangers can be introduced by members.

The Theatre in the Place Louis XVI., or du Spectacle, at the extremity of the Bassin du Commerce, one of the most striking buildings in the town, was burnt down 1843.

Baths.—Frascati, on the sea-shore, not far from the pier, contains good hot and cold sea-water baths. In summer, bathing is carried on in the open sea. Cabinets are provided for dressing and undressing, and men and women bathe together, but covered up in bathing dresses. There are no bathing-machines: ladies are led out to a sufficient depth of water by the guide, who then seizes them by the shoulders, lays them on the surface of the water, and dips them by sousing their heads under water.

N. B. The draught of the tide is so strong as sometimes to overpower even skilful swimmers. The bathers lay hold of ropes attached to posts to prevent their being swept away in stormy weather.

English travellers arriving at Havre are, for the most part, intent on quitting it as soon as possible, either on their way to Paris or Caen, or on their return to England. For them, the following information will be useful. They should be on the alert to get their passports signed and baggage passed, as the steamers and diligences to Paris start at an early hour.

The Bureau de Police, whither strangers must repair to obtain their passports, is in the Hotel de Ville, at the corner of the Place François I., not far from the round tower. The office is open at 8 o' clock a. m.

The Custom-house, corner of Quai Notre Dame and Grand Quai (entrance in Rue de la Gaffe), opens at 8. After the baggage has been examined (see INTRODUCTION), the dues for the harbour on the landing, and for porterage, are fixed by and paid to an English woman, who manages this department of the establishment.

Poste aux Lettres. 7. Rue du Grand Croissant; post leaves for Paris at 4½ p.m.

Consuls reside here from Great Britain and other maritime states of Europe and America.

Conveyances.

Malleposte to Paris (26 Eng. m.) by Rouen in 13 hours.

Diligences (offices, Rue de Paris, 49. and 101.) to Paris by Rouen 3 every evening in 16 hours, — to Rouen at 11½ daily in 7 hours. The lower road (R. 13. 9), though longer than the upper one (R. 14.), is far more agreeable.—To Dieppe by Fécamp daily, in 9 hours (R. 18.); to Caen (starting from Honfleur on the opposite side of the Seine) daily. (Route 23.)

Steamers go to Rouen daily in 8 or 9 hours; to Caen daily in 4 hours (see p. 70. R. 24.); to Honfleur once or twice a day in ¾ of an hour (R. 23.); to Dunkirk every 5 days; to Cherburg; to Morlaix in Brittany in 18 hours, every Saturday; to Bordeaux once a fortnight, 1st place 80 fr., 2nd 50 fr.; to Nantes; to London every Sunday, to Southampton daily; to Rotterdam in 24 hours every 10 days; to Amsterdam; to St. Petersburg and Copenhagen twice a month; to Hamburg every Saturday. More than 40 steam-vessels, including tug-boats, belong to the Port du Havre.

The antiquarian and architect may visit the Norman Church of Graville, 2 m. on the Rouen road (p. 59.)

Those who have an hour or two to spare at Havre cannot better employ it than in ascending the hill of Ingouville, a village of 5666 inhab., about ½ a mile to the N. of the town, consisting chiefly of neat country houses with gardens. The view from the top, over the town of Havre, its forest of masts, rising from amidst its buildings, over the embouchure of the Seine, the distant hills of Calvados appearing on the horizon like an island, and over the heights of La Hève to the rt. (N.), crowned by its twin light-house — is very striking and pleasing.

The chalk cliffs under the lofty headland of Cap la Hève, on which the lighthouses are erected at a height of 300 ft., offer some fine rock scenery; but, except when the tide is low, the shingly beech is not favourable for walking. These rocks were the favourite haunt of the author of Paul and Virginia.

ROUTE 14.

ROUEN TO HAVRE, UPPER ROAD BY YVETOT.

87 kilom. = 53¾ Eng. m.

The Malleposte daily in 5¾ hours. Diligences 3 or 4 daily.

A dull road through a fertile country, the Pays de Caux, far less interesting than the lower road (R. 13.). Even after Rouen is a long way left behind, the country traversed by the road exhibits the vivifying effects of the cotton industry, in mills or factories, country-houses, villages, &c. The chief of these is Déville, situated in a pretty valley which bears its name.

At Maromme our road turns to the l. out of that leading to Dieppe (R. 6.), and ascends the hill of La Valette, by which it attains the summit of the table-land of the Pays de Caux.

17 Barentin.

18 Yvetot.

An industrious little country town of 9,032 inhabitants, with houses of timber, containing some manufactures of cotton, but destitute of objects of interest. The title of "Roi d'Yvetot" has given a wide celebrity to its name, and has greatly puzzled antiquaries and local historians, who have failed in proving the existence of any sovereign authority, or in discovering the origin of the title, though an edict is said to exist in the archives of the exchequer of Normandy giving the rank of kings to the seigneurs of Yvetot.

There is a tradition that one Gaulthier, Lord of Yvetot, having offended King Clothair, son of Clovis, and having been banished his presence, ventured to throw himself at the feet of the king while he was kneeling in prayer before the high altar at Soissons, on Good Friday, thinking that the holiness of the place, and of the day of pardon for the sins of mankind, might obtain forgiveness for him also. Clothair, however, no sooner saw him than he drew his sword and slew him, but repenting afterwards of his crime, and desiring to make atonement to Gaulthier, created his heirs kings of Yvetot. But this story has no good foundation. Beranger describes the king of Yvetot: —

> "Il était un roi d'Yvetot,
> Peu connu dans l'histoire,
> Se levant tard, se couchant tôt,
> Dormant fort bien sans gloire,
> Et couronné par Jeanneton
> D'un simple bonnet de coton."

Here, in the very heart of the Pays de Caux, the traveller will now in vain look for the Cauchoise headdress, once commonly worn by the women. It was a huge structure of cambric and lace, something between a cap and a helmet, and appears to have been the fashion even in England during the 15th and 16th centuries. The modern modes of Paris have driven it out of the field even in remote Norman villages, and it is now rarely seen.

About 2 m. S. of Valliquerville (through which our way lies), at a village called Allonville, is an oak of unknown antiquity; its trunk measures 30 ft. in circumference at the ground. Great care is taken of it, and the parts deprived of bark are protected by tiles. The hollow of the trunk has served for 150 years past as a chapel, and is furnished with an altar, while above is an upper chamber with bed, chair, and table.

The Pays de Caux, through the centre of which our route lies, retains the name, slightly altered, of its ancient inhabitants in Cæsar's time, the Caletes (? Celts.) It is a high tableland, only here and there intersected by river courses, exceedingly fertile, though somewhat arid. Trees are rare on the high ground, except the usual avenues of fruit trees on the road side, and around villages and farm-houses, whose existence and position is invariably denoted by a sort of verdant rampart of stiff elms, planted in strait lines and double rows on or near a high bank of earth; you may be sure that a farm or château is hid behind such an enclosure.

22 Bolbec. A fresh-looking town of staring brick houses, which replace those of wood destroyed by a great fire in the last century; situated in one of the pleasant little valleys which intersect the Pays de Caux. It contains a vast number of cotton mills, manufactories of calicots, printed stuffs and handkerchiefs; print works, bleaching grounds, &c.; in short, it is one of the most industrious places in the department of the Seine Inférieure, 9630 inhab. The abundant stream which runs through it, and is a main cause of this activity, turns no less than 113 usines before it joins the Seine below Lillebonne. That ancient town (R. 13.) is only 5 m. distant; its Roman Theatre merits notice.

The diligences taking the low road from Havre to Rouen, turn off here to Lillebonne; the two roads separate however at the village of St. Romain; whence to the castle of Tancarville the distance is 9 m. (see p. 54).

14 La Botte. The remainder of this route through Harfleur to 16 Havre is described in R. 13.

ROUTE 18.

HAVRE TO DIEPPE AND ABBEVILLE BY FÉCAMP AND EU.

168 kilom. = 104 Eng. m.

Diligence daily to Dieppe in 9 hours.

At Harfleur (p. 59.) we turn out of the Rouen road, and ascend the pretty green valley of the Lézarde to Montivilliers, agreeably situated, with many trees about it, and containing some picturesque wooden houses. Its Church belonged to a once famous abbey of Benedictine nuns founded in the 7th century. It is in the Romanesque style of the 11th century, except the N. aisle, which is florid, and the Lady Chapel, early pointed. Notice should be taken of its elegant Norman tower surmounted by a light spire, with a florid portal on one side of it and a round doorway, ornamented with the embattled fret, on the other, and within, of the carved capitals of the columns, and a gallery of stone fretwork near the W. end.

16 Epouville. We now reach the high ground of the Pays de Caux (p. 63.), but traverse a number of valleys or gullies intersecting it, running down to the sea, in every one of which a village or small town nestles; this renders the road a succession of ups and downs. When the harvest is cleared from the ground and sheep are feeding among the stubble, a long narrow cart, covered either with a coved wooden roof or thatched with straw, a sort of horizontal sentry box on wheels, may be seen drawn up by the road side or in the fields; it is the moveable bed of the shepherd, in which he shelters himself at night or in bad weather.

14 Goderville.

12 Fécamp.— Inns: Poste, extortionate; Hôtel du Commerce.

Fécamp, a town of 10,000 inhabitants, nearly fills the bottom and sides of a narrow valley opening out towards the sea between 2 high falaises or cliffs, on one of which stands a lighthouse. It has the advantage of being at once a seaport and a manufacturing town, owing to the abundant stream which, as it descends the valley, turns numerous cotton and other mills, besides which there are 3 steam saw mills. The harbour is small and much sanded up, but is resorted to by a few colliers and Baltic timber ships, besides fishing vessels.

In the centre of the town stands the Church of the Abbey of Nôtre Dame, a large and fine edifice in the early pointed style, with some Norman features, built in the beginning of the 13th century, except the 2 round arched apsidal chapels behind the E. end, which are older, and the S.

side of the choir, which is more modern and florid. The Lady Chapel, with its carved woodwork of the 16th century, and the monuments in the side chapels of abbots Richard (1223), William (1297), and Robert (1326), consisting of altar tombs enriched with crocketted niches, bearing their effigies reclining under florid canopies, merit notice. Also some curious carvings of Scriptural subjects in the N. transept.

About 10 m. S.W. of Fécamp, on the coast, is the fishing village of Etretat, situated amidst rocks which have been excavated by the sea into arches, aiguilles, and other fantastic shapes. It is resorted to by French artists, and there is a tolerable and cheap little Inn;—Au Rendezvous des Artistes. The road thither is bad.

A hill steeper than that which leads into Fécamp from the W. carries the road out of it on the side of Dieppe.

19 Cany, in its pretty green and wooded valley, is an agreeable contrast to the bare open land which precedes and follows. The Château belongs to the Duc de Luxemburg.

The road again approaches the sea at 12 St. Vallery en Caux, a fishing town, of 5328 inhab., with a port formed by locking the stream, which here descends to the sea.

13 Bourg Dun.

18 Dieppe, in Route 5. (p. 22.)

A rudely jolting, one-horse patâche runs daily between Dieppe and Eu. A cabriolet costs 10 fr. to go and return. The road, as before, is carried over the high ground at some distance from the sea, and traverses in succession several valleys.

19 Torqueville, a small hamlet. Beyond it a considerably larger village, Creil, with a massive church, is passed.

11 Eu.—Inns: Poste; Hôtel de l'Union, neither good nor cheap.

A somewhat lifeless town of 3730 inhabitants, on the Bresle, a small stream which formed the boundary of Normandy, and which falls into the Channel 2 m. lower down at Treport. In the centre of the town is an irregular market-place, no 2 sides of which are parallel, overlooked by the E. end of the Parish Church, a heavy building and injured by modern reparations, externally propped up by huge flying buttresses. It is in the early pointed style; the triforium arches open into the aisles, the E. end is angular, but several of the side chapels are of late florid Gothic. Attention should be directed to the screen before that of St. Laurent, an Irish archbishop; to the Entombment in another chapel composed of statues as large as life; and to the fantastic, spirally banded column in the S. transept. The church has been restored by the King, who has also given several modern painted windows from the manufactory at Sèvres.

In the crypt (caveau) below the church are deposited a series of monumental effigies which were mutilated by the revolutionists 1793, and thrown into a vault filled with rubbish, but have been restored by the present king, though in a style and to an extent which gives them a very modern character. The oldest is of St. Laurent, archbishop of Dublin, who died at Eu (1181), whither he had repaired on a mission of peace, to reconcile Henry II. and the king of Ireland. The rest are of the counts of Eu, of the family of Artois; viz. Charles d'Artois, 1471, the head and hands are of marble; of his father, Philip d'Artois, made prisoner at Nicopolis by the Turks, d. 1397 in Anatolia; Jean d'Artois, 1386, his surcoat studded with fleurs-de-lis of copper; he was taken prisoner at Crecy along with the French king; Isabella de Melun, his wife, in an elaborately carved dress, with dogs at her feet; Jeanne de Saveuse, wife of Charles d'Artois, as pleasing countenance and curious costume; Helène de Melun, his 2d wife; Isabelle d'Artois, who died unmarried, 1397.

Eu is chiefly remarkable, however, on account of its Château, belonging to King Louis Philippe, who inherited it with the Comté d'Eu from his mother, daughter and heiress of the Duc de Penthièvre. His Majesty spends here in retirement a few weeks of every autumn. It is a low building of red brick surmounted by high tent-shaped roofs of slate, like the pavillons of the Tuilleries, and is without architectural beauty. It was built 1578 by Henry of Lorraine, le Balafré Duc de Guise, on the site of a castle which had belonged in turn to the Lusignans, the Briennes, the Artois, the Clèves, and the Saint Pols, and which was burnt down by Louis XI. (1475), to punish the treachery of the Comte de St. Pol. It has been much augmented by the present king, and splendidly fitted up, the walls being clothed with a collection of historical and family portraits, including those of the royal family and the various lines of the counts of Eu to the number of 1100. Many of them are copies, others are mere furniture pictures; yet the collection is highly interesting, and the formation of it seems to have given rise to the grander gallery of Versailles, which this resembles on a miniature scale. There appears to be no other arrangement than that of making a certain number of pictures fit into certain spaces; names, dates, nations, and families are intermixed, and the walls are covered with them from the top to the bottom of the house.

As the pictures are chiefly valuable in an historical point of view, not as works of art, and as every one bears its name on the frame, it is useless to enter into long details, which would merely be to give a list of the most eminent names in French history. A few, however, are here noted down, as possessing some peculiar interest: — the Regent Duke of Orleans by Mignard — Napoleon and his father, Charles Buonaparte! There are several portraits of the frivolous and ambitious Anne Marie Louise de Montpensier, called sometimes la Grande Mademoiselle, who, after having aspired to the hands of her cousin Louis XIV., of the Grand Condé, of Charles II., and of the Emperor of Germany, was content at last to be married to Lauzun, a simple gentleman, and endured from him, according to report, the insult of being ordered, by the undignified appellation of "Louise d'Orleans," to draw off his boots! She often resided in this château; and one of these likenesses, at the age of 43, in which she is drawn holding her father's (Gaston Duc d'Orleans) portrait, is mentioned by her in her "Mémoires." Her bedroom was that occupied by the present queen. Some of the drawings in the Cabinet de la Coquille, on the first floor, are by her. She became possessor of Eu by purchase from Mademoiselle de Guise, the last descendant of that family in a direct line, 1661. She bequeathed it to the Duc de Maine, natural son of Louis XIV., by Mde. de Montespan, in the vain hope of ransoming Lauzun her husband from the Bastille. She first commenced the historic gallery of portraits at Eu, and her collection forms the groundwork of that still existing. At the back of one of the portraits of herself there is written by her own hand, "Bergere alant a la faite du Vilage voisin." Portraits continued — of Louis XVI., Marie Antoinette, his queen, the Dauphin their son, who died in the Temple, and all the other members of their family; those of Louis Philippe and his family occupy the Salon de Famille: — the most pleasing and interesting is the Princess Marie of Wirtemburg, the sculptor of the admirable statue of Jeanne d'Arc. There are two portraits of Louis Philippe Egalité (d. 1793), one as a young man in civic dress, the other in uniform, by Sir J. Reynolds.

One of the most superb and interesting apartments is the Galerie des Guises, filled with portraits of that remarkable family, who once owned this château; among them, Claude de Lorraine, with the armour and sword with which he fought at Marignan; François de Lorraine, Duc de Guise, who was wounded in the face before Boulogne by an English lance, and who endured the pain of having the lance head extracted from his cheek with a pair of pincers, while the surgeon rested his foot on the duke's head to obtain a purchase. He was the successful defender of Metz against Charles V., and the capturer of Calais from the English; he was killed by the poisoned bullet of Poltrot, 1563. His son, Duc Henri le Balafré, so called also from a wound in his cheek received from an arquebuse at the battle of Dormans. He began to build the château d'Eu, 1578; he was the chief of the Ligue, the hero of the Journée des Barricades, and the murderer of Coligny on St. Bartholomew's night. He was assassinated by Henri III. at Blois (Route 53.), 1688, together with his brother, the Cardinal de Guise.

Marie de Lorraine, daughter of Duke Claude, Queen of James V. of Scotland, and mother of Mary Queen of Scots;—Queen Mary herself in her widow's weeds of white (royal mourning); — Catherine, Duchesse de Montpensier, sister of Le Balafré, who revenged his death by instigating Jacques Clement to assassinate Henri III.;—the Duc de Mayenne, brother of le Balafré, commander of the armies of the Ligue against Henri IV. Henry II. de Lorraine, Duc de Guise, conqueror and viceroy of Naples after Massaniello's rebellion.

"Le recit de cette salle a fait un long digression sur les portraits qui y sont," are the words of Mademoiselle de Montpensier herself, in describing these very pictures in her own gallery; yet how momentous a tale does every countenance tell! Where shall we find such an accumulation of ambition, of crime, and of romance, as in that one family?

Of Louis XIV. there are several likenesses, also of his family, his mistresses, his generals, his court; and even more of Louis XV. In the billiard-room are Charles I. and II., Oliver Cromwell, Queen Elizabeth, Joan of Arc, and Agnes Sorel.

The superb Salle des Rois is so called, because filled with portraits of kings and queens only: here are Marie de Medicis by Van Dyk, given by herself to Mademoiselle de Montpensier, and Henri IV.

In the King's Cabinet, among portraits of his own family, including his father, are Madame de Genlis, his preceptress; Pamela, afterwards Lady Fitzgerald; and Madame de Lamballe, who was murdered 1793.

The small Chapel, a mixture of Gothic and Italian in its decorations, has some modern painted glass windows from Sevres; one is a portrait of St. Amélie, after the picture by Paul de la Roche.

The Park or grounds are less attractive than the palace: being a wilderness of trees, mostly weedy elms, planted in rows with angular terraces; a gloomy canal, and muddy circular ponds beset with willows. No advantage has been taken of the slopes of the ground, — no taste shown in laying out the brotherhood of alleys and formal parterres. — Mr. Loudon might make something good out of it. Only on the l. of the castle a few ancient beeches survive, beneath whose branches the Balafré Duc de Guise heard the suits of his vassals, and concerted plots against his sovereign. Here a small space has been railed in by the king, who has affixed this inscription: — "Ici les Guises tenaient conseil au XVI. siècle." At the extremity of the grounds is a terrace overlooking the gap through which the Bresle quitting the bare and dull valley enters the sea, and the little village, Treport, is perceived at its mouth. On this terrace is a brick Pavil- lon, fitted up by poor Mademoiselle, during the time she was banished to her estate at Eu by the tyrant Louis XIV., for refusing to marry the paralytic and imbecile king of Portugal. Louis Philippe has restored it, and ornamented it with pictures of the events of her life.

Treport, the port of Eu, 3 m. distant, is a fishing village of 2,265 inhabitants, having an old Church with a fine portal. It is supposed to be the ulterior portus of Julius Cæsar.

There remain to be noticed at Eu the effigies of the Duc Henri de Guise Le Balafré, murdered at Blois, and of his wife Catherine de Clèves in the Eglise du College, originally of the Jesuits, who were established at Eu by le Balafré. The church built out of the ruins of the old castle, as well as the monuments, were raised at her expense; they are rich in marble, but of no value as works of art. He is represented in armour, she in ruff and farthingale; there are duplicate effigies of both attended by figures of Prudence, Strength, Faith, and Charity; Gillot was the sculptor. From the pulpit of this church Bourdaloue preached his first sermon. On the Bresle, close to the palace, is a mill for making sea biscuits, established by an Englishman.

16 Valines.

18 Abbeville (R. 2.).

ROUTE 21.

ROUEN TO ALENÇON BY BERNAY, BROGLIE, AND SEEZ.

144 kilom. = 89¼ Eng. m.

40 Brionne (R. 23.).

15 Bernay—(Inn, La Poste: Lion d'Or), a manufacturing town of 6,600 inhab. It once possessed an important abbey, founded by Judith, wife of Richard II. duke of Normandy; the Church of which, now converted into warehouses, is one of the oldest Norman (Romanesque) buildings existing in Normandy, having been begun in the early part of the 11th century. It is large in its dimensions and perfectly simple in its style: plain square piers support equally plain circular arches. The columns attached to the piers are carved, and one is inscribed "Isambardus me fecit." The choir ends in an apse, and there is one in each transept. "The dome vaulting in circular courses over the isles is exceedingly curious."

11 Broglie.

The Church is an ancient and singular building: along its W. front runs a row of interlacing circular arches, one side of the nave rests on very massive piers; the other is modernised, the piers pared down, and pointed arches substituted for round ones. The large and plain Château near this is the family residence of the Duc de Broglie, ex-minister, and one of the most virtuous, enlightened, and eminent statesmen in France.

16 Monnai.

14 Gacé.

22 Nonant.

12 Séez (Inn: La Corne), a poor little city with a population of only 5500, owing that title to the possession of a Cathedral, a fine edifice, the remarkable features of which are, the porch, 47 ft. deep, under the W. front, flanked by 2 spires; the nave, 80 ft. high, of elegant early pointed Gothic of the 13th century; the windows are double lancet and very elegant. The choir and transepts are in the decorated style of the end of the 14th century.

A cathedral was built here in 1055, but no part of it exists in the present one, judging from the style. The town was burnt down in 1150 and 1353, and probably the cathedral also.

21 Alençon (R. 35).

ROUTE 23.

ROUEN TO CAEN BY BRIONNE, OR BY HONFLEUR.

a. By Brionne 128 kilom. = 79½ m.

The road after issuing out of Rouen crosses the Seine, and runs within a short distance of the l. bank, here bordered by chalk cliffs (p. 52.), skirting on the l. the forest of Rouvrai, to 12 Grand Couronne; thence by Moulineaux (R. 12.) and near the castle of Robert de Diable to Bouille (p. 52.), where it quits the Seine, separating from the branch to Honfleur which turns to the rt. (see below).

13 Bourgtheroude.

About 2 m. N. of the road and the same from Brionne are the ruins of the Abbey of Bec, now of little importance or interest, but famous for having given two successive archbishops to the See of Canterbury, Lanfranc and Anselm. It has been demolished, except a tower and some uninteresting conventual buildings now turned into a mill.

18 Brionne.—Inn: La Poste, once the château of the seigneur of the place. Brionne is a small town on the Rille. The religious council which condemned the doctrines of Berengarius was held here, in the presence of William the Conqueror.

11 Marché Neuf.

14 l'Hôtellerie.

14 Lisieux, in Route 25.

17 Estrees.

13 Moult.

16 CAEN. (p. 72.)

Before reaching this the road falls into the great Route 25. from Paris to Cherbourg, and is fully described under that head.

b. By Honfleur 136 kilom. = 84½ m.

To Caen by Pont Audemer and Honfleur, a diligence runs daily.

12 Grand Couronne.

15 Bourgachard.

At 5 minutes past 1 on Saturday the 19th September 1829, the tower of the parish church sank down in a heap, crushing the nave and covering part of the churchyard. Had the accident occurred the following day, it being the hour of mass, the whole congregation must have been annihilated. There was a curious leaden font in this church. A dreary and barren district extends from this place as far as the pleasant valley of the Rille, one of the loveliest streams in Normandy, in which lies 23 Pont Audemer.—Inn: Pot d'Etain; the samlets (saumoneaux) of the Rille are excellent. This is a prettily situated town of 4,526 inhabitants, famed for its tanneries, of which it contains 40; besides which some cotton is woven here, its industry being greatly promoted by the Rille, which passes through it in small streams. It once had a castle, in besieging which, in the early part of the 14th century, cannon were first used in France: it was razed by Du Guesclin. The churches of Nôtre Dame des Prés, now a tan-house, and of St. Germain, in the suburb, may furnish some points of interest to the antiquarian architect.

The Terrace of the château de Bonnebon presents a pleasant view.

There ought to be a direct road from Pont Audemer to Pont l'Eveque, avoiding the détour by Honfleur.

In the latter part of this stage, at Fiquefleur, we obtain a fine view over the embouchure of the Seine.

23 Honfleur (Inns: Cheval Blanc, dear and dirty; La Poste:—neither good. Honfleur is famed for melons.)

A seaport town of 10,000 inhabitants at the mouth of the Seine, here 7 m. broad, on its S. bank opposite to Havre, and communicating with that port daily by steam-boats. The town is dull and utterly without interest to the traveller, and moreover very dirty, but its situation, backed by wooded heights, is very pleasing. Its commerce, once considerable, has been ruined by the rise of Havre. Its harbour, protected by a stone pier not yet finished, is accessible only at high water, and is principally resorted to by fishing vessels, though some timber ships unload here. 7000 dozens of eggs are exported weekly to England, besides butter and fruit. The chapel of Nôtre Dame de Grace on the hill above the town to the W., much resorted to by sailors and filled with their ex-votos, is in a charming situation for the view over the Seine. It was formerly not uncommon for the crews of vessels which had escaped imminent danger at sea to make a pilgrimage hither in their shirts, barefooted and bareheaded. The Steamer from Havre to Rouen calls off the port in going and returning. (R. 12.)

The Steamers ply daily to Havre and back, starting according to the tide: the passage takes up ¾ of an hour. Diligences daily to Caen and Rouen.

After the long and stately avenue of trees leading out of Honfleur, the way to Caen possesses no great interest; yet orchards and hedges give an English cast to the scenery. The head-dress of the women, a night cap twisted like a Phrygian bonnet, is by no means elegant.

17 Pont l' Evêque, a town on the Touques. Trouville on the sea, at the mouth of the Touques, is a small bathing place much frequented of late years.

Here the road to Lisieux (Route 25.) and Falaise branches S.

18 Dozullés. We here cross the Dives, from whose mouth the Conqueror set sail for England.

12 Troarn.

16 Caen, in Route 25.

ROUTE 24.

HAVRE TO CAEN.

Steamboats pass daily to and fro, starting as soon as the height of the tide allows them.

The voyage, which takes up about 4 hours, 2 of them on the open sea, is very pleasant, skirting along the coast of Lower Normandy as far as the mouth of the Orne, which the vessel enters with difficulty on account of the sands and rocks, and then threads its sinuous channel between low banks, but the landscape is enlivened by several ancient churches. A canal is in progress, by which some of the windings of the Orne will be avoided, and the distance from the sea to Caen, 10 m., abridged. If the vessel, owing to tempestuous weather, should miss the tide to cross the bar, it must wait outside, and lie off the mouth for 10 or 12 hours for the next tide; but this rarely happens.

"At length the city of Caen extends itself, terminated at each extremity by the venerable abbeys of William the Conqueror, and Mathilda his queen; the latter, surmounted by 3 towers, is nearest at hand. There are no traces of workshops and manufactories, or of their pollution; but the churches, with their towers and spires, rise above the houses in bold architectural masses, and the city assumes a character of quiet monastic opulence comforting the eye and the mind." — Palgrave.

Abreast of the town, the river is lined with sumptuous quays of solid masonry, alongside of which the vessel is moored Caen. Route 25.

ROUTE 25.

PARIS TO CAEN AND CHERBOURG, BY EVREUX AND LISIEUX.

To Caen 223 kilom. = 138 Eng. m.
Caen to Cherbourg 118 kilom. = 72½ Eng. m.

Malleposte in 15 hours to Caen, and 23½ hours from Paris to Cherbourg. Diligences daily.

From Paris to

70 Bonniéres is described in Route 9. A little beyond this we quit the route to Rouen, turning to the l. out of the valley of the Seine, up a wooded combe to an elevated and fertile but monotonous country.

16 Pacy sur Eure. 10 m. S. of this is Ivry, where Henri IV. gained a momentous victory over the Duc de Mayenne and the army of the League 1590 (see p. 114.)

At Cocherel, on the rt. bank of the Eure 4 m. below (N. of) Pacy, Dugueselin, in 1364, defeated the forces of the King of Navarre, Charles le Mauvais.

18 Evreux — (Inns: H. du Grand Cerf, tolerable — de France, opposite the Cathedral), chef lieu of the department of the Eure, has 10,287 inhabitants, and is prettily situated in a bowl-shaped valley shut in on N. and S. by hills, and watered by the Iton, an affluent of the Seine, divided into several branches. It has a considerable share in the cotton manufacture, here carried on by the hand-loom more than the steam-engine. Its chief edifice is

The Cathedral, presenting to the W. an incongruous front of Italian architecture, flanked by two towers, and surmounted in the centre of the cross by a loftier tower and florid spire, erected by the Cardinal de la Balue, favourite of Louis XI. The nave is in the Norman style, probably of our Henry the First's time, since he burnt the town, with the permission of the bishop, on condition of rebuilding the churches. The rest is pointed, and for the most part more modern than the reign of Philippe Auguste, who again burnt the town to revenge himself on the treachery of Jean Sans Terre, in making it over to him during King Richard's captivity, but on Richard's unexpected return not only withholding it, but murdering the French garrison placed in the castle. The choir, supported on clustered columns with glazed triforium (13th century), is very lofty and light. The N. transept is still more recent, and the portal leading into it, in the flamboyant Gothic, elaborately ornamented, is deservedly admired, in spite of the injuries and loss of its statues inflicted by the Revolutionists. The beautiful rose window in the S. transept, and the wooden screens to the side chapels round the choir, showing the flamboyant Gothic style modified by the reviving Italian, also merit notice. St. Taurin, the first bishop of Evreux, was wont to engage in personal contests with the evil one; he even took the devil by the horns, and in proof of his victory, one of the actual horns wrested off in the struggle was preserved here before the Revolution.

At the opposite end of the town is the Church of St. Taurin, attached to the seminaire; it is small, and resembles the cathedral in the various styles it displays, having shared like it the fortune of war and conflagration. The outer wall of the S. transept is ornamented with an arcade of semicircular arches, the panels of which are prettily diapered with a pattern formed of red tiles let into the masonry. This is supposed to be a relic of the church built 1026 by Richard II. duke of Normandy.

The greatest curiosity of this church is the Chasse or Shrine of St. Taurin, which once contained his relics, preserved in the sacristy. It is a wooden box, shaped like a Gothic chapel, covered with plates of copper, or silver gilt, enchased with a diapered pattern, and set round with bas-reliefs and small statuettes of bishops and saints. The architectural decorations are rich and in good taste: such shrines are now very rare. The precious stones which once ornamented it have been stolen or lost.

The streets of Evreux preserve many antique timber-framed houses, and it possesses a Beffroi called Tour d'Horloge, built in the 15th century.

The title of the premier English Viscount, Devereux Earl of Hereford, is derived from this town: the family traces its descent from Normandy.

The Château of Navarre, about a mile out of the town, is a commonplace mansion of the 17th century, built from designs of Mansard by the Duc de Bouillon, who exchanged (1652) his principality of Sedan with Louis XIV. for the comté d'Evreux; but it occupies the site and takes the name of a castle built 1532 by Jeanne of Navarre, mother of Charles, called the Bad, who was born here. Charles Edward, the young pretender, resided here for some time while planning the expedition of 1745. It was given by Napoleon to Josephine. It is not now kept up.

Coaches go hence to Chartres and Rouen (Route 50.) daily.

The next post station to Evreux is called 18 La Commanderie, from a castle and church of the Knights Templars, of which the ruins and some tombs of members of the order remain. It lies very high.

17 La Rivière Thibouville. A little to the N. is Harcourt, cradle of one of the noble houses of England, who trace their descent from a baron of the name who fell beside William the Norman at Hastings. There are scanty remains of a castle.

10 Marché Neuf.

14 L'Hôtellerie. The upland district traversed by the road forms part of the Pays de Lieuvin, celebrated for its fertility and excellent cultivation.

14 Lisieux. (Inns: H. de France; — la Belle Fontaine.) A thriving manufacturing town (11,473 inhab.), prettily situated at the confluence of the Touques with the Orbec. About 3,500 persons are employed in and around the town in weaving coarse woollens, flannels, horse cloths, &c. Its main street exhibits specimens of ancient domestic architecture, timber-framed houses and pointed gables, well suited to the artist's pencil.

The Church of St. Peter (formerly cathedral) faces an open square with its W. front flanked by 2 towers. It is in the early pointed style of the 13th century, with lancet windows, holding a place between the Norman and the lancet Gothic of England. A preceding edifice, built 1143-82 (when the pointed style had scarcely begun to appear in this part of France) was burnt down, 1226. Norman arches occur in the S.W. tower only; the outside of the S. transept is a fine example of the pointed style.

The Lady Chapel was founded, in the 15th century, by Pierre Cauchon, bishop of Lisieux, and president of the unjust tribunal which condemned Joan of Arc, in expiation of "his false judgment of an innocent woman," as he expressly states in the deed of endowment. (See p. 42.)

Henry II. was married to Eleanor of Guienne, the divorced wife of Louis le Jeune, 1152, in the cathedral of Lisieux.

Lisieux was the capital of the Lexovii, a Gallic tribe mentioned by Cæsar, and ruins of the ancient town (Noviomagus, L.), have been discovered at a short distance from the present one. Thomas à Becket retired hither 1169, during his exile from England.

17 Estrées. The road from Lisieux to Caen is almost totally destitute of interest.

13 Moult.

16 Caen.—Inns: Hôtel de France; best, and very comfortable: — charges, table d'hôte, 3 fr.; bed, 2 fr.; servants, 1 fr. 10 sous per diem: — Hôtel d'Angleterre; reasonable and also very good; — Hôtel du Palais Royal; not very clean, but moderate.

Caen, chief town of the department of Calvados (so named from a long reef of rocks on its coast), is situated on the Orne 10 m. from its mouth, and has 41,876 inhabitants. A smaller stream, the Odon, passes through the town and around the line of its old ramparts, to which it served as a fosse, before it joins the Orne, turning on its way several mills. Notwithstanding the antiquity of Caen, its wider streets, the large central square, in which stands the statue of Louis XIV. and its houses of white stone, give it a more cheerful air than Rouen, though less enlivened by passing crowds. The tall white Norman head-dress of the women, ornamented with lappets behind and sometimes with lace, is striking and quaint to a stranger's eye.

To the traveller Caen recommends itself by its numerous specimens of ancient architecture, to the permanent resident by the salubrity of its site, and the cheapness of house rent and provisions, which have caused our countrymen to settle themselves down here in a colony some thousand strong.

Near the centre of the town, on one side of a small market-place full of bustle and quaint costumes and character in the early part of the day, rises the Church of St. Pierre, surmounted by one of the most graceful towers and spires, in the complete Gothic style, which Normandy can produce; the middle story formed of tall lancet windows framed within reeded mouldings, is a model of strength and lightness; it is surmounted by a spire of stone, partly pierced au jour. It was built 1308, and is 242 ft. high. The nave was constructed probably about the same time, the choir, more richly ornamented, rather later, while its roof and the chapels round the choir were added in the 16th century (1521). The rich groining of the roof of the choir is surpassed in the chapels, where it assumes the form of pendant fringes, giving the roof a cellular character, while open rings are substituted for key-stones. The side walls of these chapels are pierced with arches and set with statues. Some of the capitals of the columns in the nave exhibit ludicrous carvings, such as Aristotle bridled and ridden by the mistress of Alexander, and Lancelot crossing the sea on his sword, from the old romances. The exterior of the E. end, well seen from the banks of the river, is as much Italian as Gothic, so entirely are forms and styles jumbled together.

Caen possesses two very remarkable monuments of the piety of William the Conqueror and his queen, in the churches of the Abbayes, Aux Hommes and Aux Dames: both founded 1066, and valuable in an architectural point of view, because their date is undoubted.

The Church of St. Etienne, or of the Abbaye aux Hommes, destined by the Conqueror as a resting-place for his own remains, was finished and dedicated by him in his lifetime, 1077, under archbishop Lanfranc, who was the first abbot. The W. front is so perfectly and severely plain that it will probably disappoint expectations; it is surmounted by 2 stately towers and spires of later date (1200) which, with the choir, were rebuilt or added to the original edifice, long after the time of William. The interior of the nave, however, exhibits the rigid severity, and massy strength, with the grandeur of proportion, of the Norman Romanesque style. The church is 371 ft. long and 98 ft. high. The lower row of arches supports a gallery, having arches of nearly the equal span, and $\frac{2}{3}$ of the height of those below, an arrangement resembling the arcades of the Roman Coliseum. These upper arches originally opened into the aisles, the vaulting below them being of posterior date. The clerestory windows consist of a tall and short arch placed alternately on one side or the other to meet the curve of the vault. The choir ending in an apse, and surrounded by apsidal chapels, is in the pointed Gothic style, answering to the early English of the 12th century (some say 1316—44). A plain grey marble slab in the pavement, before the high altar, marks the grave of William the Conqueror, the founder of the church, but it has been long since empty: it was broken open, the costly monument erected over it by William Rufus destroyed, and the bones scattered by the Huguenots, 1562, and lost, without record, except one thigh bone, which was re-interred. The Revolutionists of 1793 again violated the grave, and this also disappeared.

The funeral of the conqueror, undertaken by the charity of a simple knight, as already detailed (p. 41), was singularly interrupted, even within the precincts of the church, and before the service for the dead was concluded, by a cry from one of the bystanders, a man of low degree, who claimed the site of the grave, saying, that it occupied the place of his father's house, who had been illegally ejected from it, in order to build the church, and he demanded the restitution of his property. This claim, thus boldly made, in the presence of the dead monarch's son Henry, the chief mourner, being backed by the assent of the towns-people, who stood by, was not to be denied or rejected, and the bishop was obliged to pay down on the spot 60 sous for a place of sepulture for the royal corpse. Even then it is related, that as the coffin was being lowered into the grave, it struck against some obstacle, fell and was broken into pieces, so that the corpse, ejected from its tenement, diffused so horrid a stench through the church, that the rites were hurried to a close, and the assembled priests and laity dispersed.

The exterior of this church surmounted by its 2 W. towers, its central octagonal tower, and 2 turrets on the E. has a peculiarly striking effect from a distance, and reminds one of the arrangements of some of those on the Rhine.

The adjoining conventual buildings (date 1726) have been converted, since 1800, into a College, numbering not quite 300 students.

At the opposite end of the town is the Abbaye aux Dames, or church of la Ste. Trinité, founded 1066, and consecrated the same year, though probably unfinished, by Queen Mathilda the conqueror's wife, and destined by her for a nunnery of noble ladies. The conventual buildings attached to the church are quite modern (1726), and are converted into an Hospital, in which 40 sisters, of the order of St. Augustine, perform the duties of nurses of the sick: the choir of the church is railed off for their use. The church, in the lighter and more ornate character of its architecture, displays so broad a contrast to the masculine plainness of St. Etienne that it would scarcely be supposed that they had been both in progress at the same time. With the exception of the upper part of the W. towers, however, this edifice is a perfect and unaltered specimen of pure Norman Romanesque; the choir ending in an apsis being of the same age and style as the nave. "The piers are lighter, the engaged pillars project more than in St. Etienne, the embattled fret here runs round the main arches, and instead of a lofty triforium the walls above them are threaded by a gallery supported by misproportioned pillars, exhibiting grotesque figures among the foliage of their capitals. The arches under the central tower are remarkably bold, and their archivolts are chased with the Norman lozenge." (Sir F. P.) The one opening into the nave is obtusely pointed, but apparently of the same date. The choir, ending in a semicircle of double arches, one tier over the other, encloses in the centre the fragments of the black marble gravestone of the foundress, broken in pieces by the Calvinists who dispersed her remains, which, however, were collected some years after. Underneath is a crypt resting on 34 closely set pillars.

For the student of ancient architecture the following churches remain also to be visited. Not far from St. Etienne is St. Nicholas, another Norman church, coeval with the two abbeys, having been built, except the tower and the pointed vaulting of the nave, between 1066 and 83; it is now a stable belonging to the Remonte de Cavallerie. It is unaltered, very plain in style, and ends in an apse.

St. Etienne le Vieil, though desecrated and in ruins, is a fine specimen of pointed Gothic; on the wall of the choir is a mutilated equestrian statue said to be William I.

St. Jean has 2 unequal and unfinished towers in the style of that of St. Pierre, but inferior to it, in late pointed style.

St. Michael in the suburb of Vaucelles (Vauxhall?) displays some curious architectural features; in the Norman tower the very long but narrow and round-headed windows deserve notice. The fringed portal is surmounted by a gable filled with elegant flamboyant tracery, in the style of the 15th or 16th century.

Within the precincts of the Abbaye aux Hommes are several remains of ancient conventual buildings; one of these, now turned into a magazine and stable for soldiers of the garrison, is a large building of 2 stories, much mutilated, pierced with pointed windows; it dates from the end of the 13th or early in the 14th century.

The Hôtel-Dieu is a still older civil edifice, built in the reign of Henry II.; it is a long and ugly building terminating in a gable at either end, supported by buttresses, but it includes a fine hall of large size, supported on two rows of columns with pointed vaulting in the style of the 12th century.

There are many old houses, with curiously ornamented fronts of the 15th and 16th centuries, in the Rue St. Pierre (No. 52. 18. 20. 54. 24. &c.), but they are fast disappearing.

The Hôtel de Valois, Place St. Pierre, now the Bourse, is of Italian architecture.

The Castle, surmounting the height to the W. of St. Pierre, built by William the Conqueror and his son Henry — held for a long period by the English, but finally taken from them by the brave Dunois, who compelled the Duke of Somerset with a garrison of 4000 men to surrender, 1459 — has now the aspect of a modern fortress bastioned and counterscarped, but having been dismantled by a decree of the Convention, it is at present reduced to a barrack. The only Norman portion subsisting is the small Chapel of St. George, whose nave is probably of the 11th century, though the earliest mention of it is in 1181; while the chancel, separated from it by a bold arch, is of the 15th century; it is used as a store house. The castle hall is still preserved, and is Norman in style. From the ramparts there is a good view of the town.

In the Hotel de Ville, which occupies with its Grecian portico one side of the Place Royale, is a Collection of Paintings. The only ones worth notice are a genuine Perugino, Marriage of the Virgin, imitated by Raphael in the famous Sposalizio; — the Passage of the Rhine, Vander Meulan; — Melchizedec offering bread and wine to Abraham, Rubens; — the Virgin with 3 Saints, by some old master, called Albert Durer.

In the Cabinet d'Histoire Naturelle is a collection of the fossils of Normandy, including Icthyosaurus, Plesiosaurus, and a very perfect crocodile from the neighbouring quarries of l'Allemagne. The collections made in the South Sea by Admiral Dumont d'Urville have been deposited here.

The English church service is performed on Sundays at 1, in the French Protestant Temple, Rue de Geôle.

The Poste aux Lettres is in the Rue de l'Hôtel de Ville.

Caen is well provided with promenades, formal avenues of trees; — the chief are called Grand Cours, and Cours Cafarelli, by the side of the Orne. The handsome quays bordering the Orne and Odon near their junction form pleasant walks.

The women of the lower and middle classes in Caen, and throughout a large part of La Basse Normandie, are finely formed, fully grown, and handsomer than in most other parts of France.

The principal street, in which are the best shops, is the Rue St. Jean.

Froissart narrates the story of the capture of Caen in 1346, a short while before the battle of Crecy by Edward III. and the Black Prince, who being irritated by the resistance of the citizens, gave it up to plunder. It was then "large, strong, and full of drapery and all other sorts of merchandise, rich citizens, noble dames, damsels, and fine churches." The English fleet returned home laden with its spoils.

Several of the leaders of the party of the Girondins, proscribed by the Jacobins of the revolutionary tribunal, and driven from Paris by the insurrection of May 31. 1793, retired to Caen to organise a revolt against the tyranny of the Mountain, but were entirely defeated and put down in a battle at Vernon. It was shortly after this event that Charlotte Corday (a native of St. Saturnin near Séez), actuated by the spirit of resistance against the bloody tyranny of the Terrorists, which prevailed strongly at Caen, set out hence to Paris to assassinate Marat.

Among the illustrious natives of Caen, the learned Huet, Bishop of Avranches, born 1613, may be singled out; also Clement Marot, the poet.

Brummel, the Beau par excellence of the court of George IV. when regent, lived many years at Caen, and ended his days miserably in a madhouse here.

Malleposte daily to Paris and Cherbourg.

Diligences; to Paris morning and evening by Lisieux and Evreux (p. 72.); daily to Cherbourg (Rte. 26.); Dol and St. Malo (Rte. 27.); to St. Lo, Coutances, and Granville (Rte. 27 and 32.); to Rennes and Nantes (Rte. 31.); to Havre by Harfleur and Rouen (Rte. 23.); to Tours by Falaise and Alençon.

The making of lace is said to occupy 20,000 women and children in and about Caen. The streets of the suburbs are lined with family parties seated round their cottage doors, merrily twirling their bobbins. They make tulles, brodées, and blondes.

With this exception Caen has no claim to be a manufacturing town; though it was so, in an eminent degree, until the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes banished all its most industrious artisans.

Environs.

A cabriolet or other one-horse carriage may be hired for 8 or 10 fr. the day.

The student of ancient architecture might spend many days profitably and agreeably in visiting the ecclesiastical and civil monuments which abound in the neighbourhood of Caen. The department of Calvădós is particularly rich in monuments of architecture; the distinguished archæologist of Caen, M. de Caumont, enumerates nearly 70 specimens of the Norman architecture of the 11th and 12th centuries existing in it.

On the outskirts of Caen, to the E. at the extremity of the Rue Basse St. Gilles, is a singular castellated mansion called Aux Gens d'Armes, from 2 stone figures of armed men on the top. Though surrounded by battlemented walls and furnished with towers, it was not built as a place of defence, but as a maison de plaisance, for one Gerard de Nollent, in the beginning of the 16th century. Its walls are fantastically ornamented externally with medallion heads of emperors, &c.

There is a very beautiful and remarkable ruin near Caen, first described by Prof. Whewell, the Abbey of Ardenne, now a farm yard. It has a fine gate tower with a round-headed gate and pointed wicket, large stables, "a buttressed barn which puts to utter shame the largest of our edifices of this kind," and a beautiful Church, closely resembling in style the early English of our abbeys of Bolton and Newstead, now a barn or hay magazine. Its W. front is especially noticeable; it has a rose within a pointed window, and a rich porch supported "on detached shafts."

To the N. and N.E. of Caen, or between the town and the sea, lie the following objects of interest.

Thann. About 9 m. N.W. of Caen. Here is a true Norman church scarcely altered since the days of Henry I. when it was built, excepting the loss of its S. aisle. It is a good deal ornamented. The tower is capped with a hollow pyramid of stone, the oldest example of the nascent spire known.

1 m. farther to the N. is the interesting Château of Fontaine le Henri, a seat of the family d'Harcourt, built in the first 30 years of the 16th century, partly in the bastard Gothic, corresponding more with the late Elizabethan of England, partly in the Italian style, resembling the revived classic architecture of Audley End and Longleat. It is a mansion of no great size, but is distinguished by a preposterously lofty and steeply pitched roof, surmounting one wing, flanked by an equally lofty chimney. The most profuse decoration of sculpture is lavished on its singularly irregular façade. The ornaments of the windows, the pannelling, balustrades, &c., are not inferior to those of the Palais de Justice at Rouen, which they much resemble. The Church of the village is Norman.

Further on, 12 m. from Caen, on the sea, is Corseulles, a small bathing place and fishing port facing the terrible rocks of Calvados. It is famed for its oysters. Paris receives from the "parcs aux huitres" here $\frac{7}{10}$ of all that it consumes, amounting to $5\frac{1}{2}$ million dozen annually. They are transported by light and fast carriages.

3 m. E. of Fontaine le Henri is the pilgrimage chapel of Nôtre Dame de la Délivrande, to which the Norman sailors and peasants have resorted for the last 800 years. A very tolerable road, planted at intervals with stations and crosses, leads thither 10 m. from Caen. It has been thus admirably described by Sir Francis Palgrave: — "The traveller will not fail to linger on the little hill just beyond the first crucifix. Here he enjoys a lovely prospect. The horizon is bounded by long lines of grey and purple hills, nearer are fields and pastures, whilst the river glitters and winds amidst their vivid tints; nearer still the city of Caen extends itself (see p. 70.). About 4 m. farther we reach Cambres, one of the many seigneuries which belonged to the noble family of de Mathan. The château escaped spoliation at the Revolution. The Church of Annisy, on the l. of the road, is only remarkable for its herring-bone masonry, a complete imitation of Roman constructions, by Norman builders. It is composed of small flagstones of the size and shape of tiles. The church of Douvre, the next village, is rather a picturesque building. The upper story of the tower has 2 pointed windows of the earliest date. The other stories of the tower and the W. end of the church are Norman; the E. end is in ruins."

The Chapel of la Délivrande, is a small Norman edifice. The statue of the Virgin, which now commands the veneration of the faithful, was resuscitated in the reign of Henry I. from the ruins of a previous chapel destroyed by the Northmen, through the agency of a lamb constantly grubbing up the earth over the spot where it lay. Such is the tenor of the legend. The reputation of the image for performing miracles, especially in behalf of sailors, has been maintained from that time to the present, although it suffered much at the Revolution, when pilgrimages were forbidden. It was visited by Louis XI. in 1471.

From an eminence near this 6 or 8 church spires may be discovered; they have all a strong family likeness to that of St. Pierre in Caen.

Near this, on the coast, is Luc or Lucques, another small watering-place with an hotel (de la Belle Plage), said to be good.

Thann, Fontaine le Henri, and La Delivrande, may be all visited in the course of a summer-day, taking one road in going, the other in returning; the distance to and fro is rather more than 24 m. There is some sort of public conveyance to Corseulles in summer.

The church of Ifs, about 3 m. S. of Caen, has a curious early pointed steeple; but a still more remarkable tower and spire exists at Norrey, on the way to Bayeux (Rte. 26.).

The quarries of Caen stone, so abundantly used in England during the middle ages, and of which the White Tower, old London bridge, Henry VIIth's Chapel, Winchester, and Canterbury cathedrals, besides many of our country churches, were built, are situated within the circuit of 1½ m. to the W. and S. of Caen, near Maladrerie, on the road to Bayeux, and at Haute Allemagne. The rock is an oolite, equivalent to our Stonesfield slate, but without its slaty structure; it is extracted from subterraneous quarries through vertical shafts, in blocks 8 or 9 ft. long and 2 ft. thick. It is still employed in England; the magnificent new tower at the W. end of Canterbury Cathedral is built of stone brought from hence.

A visit to Falaise Castle, the birthplace of the Conqueror, will occupy a day; a diligence runs thither and back daily (see Rte. 29.).

Another antiquarian and architectural excursion may be made on the way to Bayeux, to Fresne Camilly, Creuilly, and St. Gabriel (Rte. 29.).

ROUTE 26.

CAEN TO CHERBOURG BY BAYEUX.

118 kilom. = 73 Eng. m.

Malleposte daily in 8½ hours.

Diligences daily, going round by St. Lo. (R. 32.)

1 m. beyond Caen, is la Maladrerie, so called from a lazar house founded by our Henry II., for lepers of the town of Caen, now replaced by a huge penitentiary (Maison Centrale de Detention). Near this may be perceived the whims or wheels by which the Caen stone (Rte. 26.) is raised out of the quarries. At St. Germain le Blancherbe, the direct but not post road to St. Lo (Rte. 32.) branches off to the l.

The first station on the way to Bayeux

12 Bretteville, is called l'Orgueilleuse, though of what it has to be proud is not evident, except its handsome steeple. This, however, is entirely eclipsed by the very fine open belfry and spire of Norrey, seen on the l. about 1 m. off the road.

This beautiful Church, which has been termed a miniature cathedral, is in the pure and simple Gothic style of our early English, and of the most elegant proportions, with an enriched choir, circular apse and N. porch. "All the mouldings are deep, free and repeated so as to give the greatest strength of line to all its parts." The tower owes its character of unequalled beauty to the 4 narrow and tall lancet arches which occupy the N. face of its belfry story, the two central ones open so as to let daylight through.

In going from Caen to Bayeux, a détour may be made to visit Frèsne Camilly, a church in the transition style, round arches prevailing in the body of the building, with indications of pointed arches in a pannelled arcade on the exterior of the N. wall. At Creuilly, the Castle, a construction of different ages, retains among more modern additions 2 round towers. It belonged to Robert of Gloucester, natural son of Henry I., and is now converted into a dwelling-house. The church is genuine Norman. A little farther is St. Gabriel, a ruined priory founded by Robert of Gloucester, 1128; the choir of the church alone remains, and is a very remarkable example of florid Norman. This is a détour which will repay those of antiquarian taste.

There is another road from Bretteville to Creuilly, passing by Sacqueville en Bessin, whose church is curious, partly pointed, partly round.

On the direct road from Caen to Bayeux, the country is not very interesting; orchards abound, or rather the cornfields are planted with rows of apple trees, under which the grain crop ripens.

16 Bayeux (Inn: H. du Luxembourg, good), a quiet and dull ecclesiastical city, with much the air of some cathedral towns in England, was anciently capital of the Bessin, and contains 10,303 inhabitants. It is washed by a small stream, the Aure, which enters the sea at 5 m. distance. It consists of two main streets, including some ancient specimens of domestic architecture, running up a hill to a large open place, lined with trees. Its only curiosities are its Tapestry and its Cathedral, its chief ornament, though disfigured by a central cupola in a semi-Grecian style. The W. front is a fine elevation, in the pointed Gothic, surmounted by two steeples of the 12th century, in the towers of which pointed arches alternate with round. The 3 porches, which, as well as that on the S. side, deserve attention for their bas-reliefs and ornamental foliage, are later in date and florid in style. The interior is 315 ft. long, and 81 high. The W. end of the nave consists of florid Norman arches and piers, whose natural heaviness is relieved by the beautifully diapered patterns wrought upon the wall, probably built by Henry I., who destroyed the previously existing church by fire, 1106. Above this runs a blank trefoiled arcade in the place of a triforium, surmounted by a clerestory of early pointed windows very lofty and narrow.

The arches of the nave, nearest the cross and the choir, ending in a semicircle, exhibit a more advanced state of the pointed style; and are distinguished by the remarkable elegance of their graceful clustered pillars. They were built by Bishop Henry de Beaumont, an Englishman, 1205. The circular ornaments in the spandrils of the arches are very pleasing and of fanciful variety.

The stalls are of oak well carved; the modern screen is totally at variance with every part of the church, except the cupola.

The chapels in the side aisles, and the exterior of the E. end, should not pass unnoticed. Under the choir is a crypt, probably the only part remaining of the original church, built, in 1077, by Odo, half brother of the Conqueror, and 50 years bishop of Bayeux. It is supported on 12 pillars with rude capitals, and contains some episcopal tombs.

The student of architecture may visit with profit the chapel of the former Séminaire, now Hôtel-Dieu, a simple oblong plain groined hall, lighted by double lancet windows, and not unlike the E. end of the Temple Church, in London; its date is 1206. Behind the altar is a singular recess beautifully groined. Also the little Norman Church of St. Loup, in the outskirts of the town, on the way to St. Lo.

The Tapisserie de Bayeux has lately been removed from the Hôtel de Ville, near the cathedral, where it used to be kept, — to be unwound by the yard from a roller like a piece of haberdashery, and subjected to the fingers as well as eyes of the curious, — to a new room in the Public Library, where it is more carefully preserved, and quite as conveniently exhibited, under a glass case. Many persons will look upon it merely as a long strip of coarse linen cloth, 20 inches wide and 214 ft. long, rudely worked with figures worthy of a girl's sampler. It is, however, a curious historical record of peculiar interest to an Englishman, and although it presents such anomalies as horses coloured alternately blue and red, there is much spirit in the drawing. It is ascribed, with much probability, to the needle of Mathilda, Queen of the Conqueror, and represents the Conquest of England, and the events which led to it. It was preserved in the cathedral until the Revolution, being hung round the nave on certain days. The earliest record of it is in an inventory of the effects of the church, taken 1476. Its series of rude worsted pictures represent such events as Edward the Confessor designating William as his heir; the treachery of Harold; the shipment and landing of the Norman army and battle of Hastings: in many of which Odo, Bishop of Bayeux, the Conqueror's half brother, is a prominent figure. The design has evidently been to represent Harold as an usurper, and William as the rightful heir to the crown, having other claims beside that of conquest. The Normans are drawn with shaven heads and chins, in armour of scales, helmets protected by nose pieces in front, and shields shaped like boys' kites, sometimes bearing devices or crests (supposed to be of later invention) suspended by a belt round the neck. All the buildings have round arches. At the bottom runs a curious border of animals, including camels and elephants, said to represent fables from Æsop. (?)

The tapestry has been excellently engraved for the London Society of Antiquaries, by the late Charles Stodthard. When Napoleon was meditating the invasion of England, he caused the tapestry to be transported from town to town and exhibited, on the stage of the playhouses, between the acts, to stimulate the spectators to a second conquest!

Wace, the author of the Roman de Rou, was a native of Bayeux, and canon of the cathedral. According to it Harold actually did homage to William of Normandy, as heir of Edward the Confessor, for the throne of England.

There are good Baths, at the side of the river, and near them a pretty Nursery Garden.

Diligences run daily to Cherbourg and St. Lo, Granville and St. Malo.

In going from Bayeux to Cherbourg, the diligences make a détour of 9 leagues; by passing through St. Lo (Rte. 32.), the malleposte takes the direct line, as follows, passing La Tour en Bessin, whose little church has a chancel in a style resembling the best English decorated; the nave is Norman, the tower and spire earlier than the chancel.

15 Formigny. Here the English were defeated (1450), in an engagement so decisive that it occasioned them the loss of Normandy, which has never since been separated from the French crown. A monument on the rt. of the road marks the battle-field, and commemorates the victory. It must be borne in mind, that Sir Thomas Kyriel, who commanded the English, an old soldier of Agincourt, who took little account of superior numbers on the side of the French, attacked, with a vastly inferior force, the army of the Comte de Clermont, and while thus engaged was assaulted in the rear by a second army under the Constable de Richemont.

15 Isigny on the Aure is accessible for vessels of considerable size, with the tide. Much butter is exported hence to England and elsewhere.

The river Vire, forming the boundary between the departments of Calvados and La Manche, is crossed about one-third of the distance.

10 Carentan. — Inn: Hôtel de la Place, good; a town of 3193 inhab. in a low marshy situation surrounded by fortifications no longer kept up, possessing an old Castle, which belonged to the kings of France, and was besieged by Edward III., 1346, and a handsome Church, surmounted by a spire; it is Norman, with pointed additions, the E. end in the style of the 14th century. There is some painted glass, but defective.

At Carentan, we enter the peninsula of the Cotentin, so called from the "côtes," coasts, which border it on 3 sides. It is a fertile and pleasing district, celebrated for its pastures, on which large herds are fed, every where enclosed within hedges, and abounding in old ruined castles and ancient churches. It is particularly interesting to Englishmen, as the cradle of some of the oldest and most noble English families. At every step the traveller will encounter obscure villages and hamlets, whose names are familiar to him as household words, as patronimics of great houses distinguished in French and English annals, most of whose founders left their country in the train of William the Norman. Such are Beaumont, Greville, Carteret, Bruce, Neville, Pierrepont; but these are only a few examples among many.

13 Sainte Mère l'Eglise, has a similar church to that of Carentan.

The ruins of the Abbey of Monteburg have been swept away to the foundation since 1817, having been sold in lots, and pulled down for the materials.

At Quinéville, 6 m. N. E. of this, on the coast, is an ancient monument of masonry 27 ft. high, and 30 in circumference at the base, which is square, and surmounted by a hollow cylinder garnished round with 2 rows of pillars. It is called la Grande Cheminée, and though some writers have made it a Roman monument, it may be more safely pronounced a structure of the end of the 12th century, and nothing more nor less than a chimney.

From the heights of Quinéville King James II. beheld the sea fight of La Hogue, which destroyed all his hopes of regaining the throne. It is said that in the heat of the battle, on seeing the French ships boarded and carried in succession, his English feelings so far prevailed, that he exultingly exclaimed to the French officers about him, "See my brave English sailors." (See p. 82.)

Through a pleasing country to which the hedges and woodlands give a perfectly English character, not unlike parts of Sussex, to 17 Valognes (Inn: Grand Turc, tolerable, in a plain way; civil people.) A pleasant town of 6940 inhabitants, containing some large and handsome mansions, the residence of numerous genteel families. The castle of William the Conqueror is demolished; it was here that he was warned by his fool in the middle of the night, of the conspiracy of the Seigneurs of the Bessin and Cotentin to surprise and assassinate him. He instantly mounted his horse, and escaped with difficulty to Falaise.

M. de Gerville, a distinguished antiquary and geologist, resides here.

Although Valognes possesses nothing in itself to detain the traveller, in its vicinity are several objects of high interest. St. Sauveur le Vicomte (10 m. S.) has a picturesque ruined castle and abbey (Route 27.) At Bricquibec (9 m. S. W.) is a convent of Trappists. The geology of the Cotentin is very interesting; its tertiary beds, in which more than 300 species of fossil shells, identical with those of the Paris Basin, have been found, and its Baculite limestone, may be well studied in the quarries near Valognes.

At Alleaume, the Roman Alauna, a village contiguous to Valognes, are very scanty remains of a bath: a Roman theatre described by Montfaucon has been totally demolished.

An excursion may be made hence to La Hougue and Barfleur by Tamarville (2¼ m.), where the Norman Church has an elegant octagonal tower, (a rare form,) composed of 3 stories of narrow round-headed arcades and windows.

St. Vaast la Hougue, 13 m. from Valognes, is a sea-port town of 3500 inhabitants, situated in a fine bay, with the fortified island and lazaret of Tatihou in front, recently provided with a pier 984 feet long. Previous to the rise of its rival Cherbourg, it was the chief port of the Cotentin, and of greater importance than at present. The English frequently effected hostile landings here, to lay desolate the fair fields of France. King Stephen in 1137 landed here, and the army which conquered at Crecy under Edward III., in 1346. Other armaments disembarked here in the reigns of Henry IV. and V., and in 1574 an army of 5000 French and English Protestants despatched by Queen Elizabeth under the Comte de Montgomery, to aid the cause of the Huguenots, made a descent upon Normandy at this point. La Hougue is chiefly known in English history, however, on account of the sea fight of Cap la Hougue in 1692, when the united English and Dutch fleets under Admirals Russel and Rooke, annihilated the expedition prepared by Louis XIV. for a descent upon England, with the design of restoring James II. to the throne. The action commenced at some distance from the coast between Cape Barfleur and the Isle of Wight. The French admiral Tourville, a man of great bravery, having orders from his master to engage at all odds, ventured to measure his strength with a fleet of 80 vessels, the largest which had entered the Channel since the Armada, while his own force did not exceed 44. It is supposed that he was ignorant of the junction of the Dutch, and that he counted on the desertion of Admiral Russel, who, it is well known, was in secret correspondence with James. However nothing of this sort occurred, and after a running fight the French, in 3 divisions, retired to their own coast, pursued by the English. 3 of the largest ships, including the admiral's, le Soleil Royal, sought refuge in Cherbourg, where they were blown up by the English Admiral Delaval. Tourville hoisting his flag on board another vessel, conducted 12 into the bay of La Hougue; where he had time, before the arrival of Russel the day after, to prepare means for a stout defence, running them aground on the shallows with their broadside to the enemy. The French army, united with a body of Irish and English refugees, were drawn up on the heights above; while the artillery was embarked on floating batteries, à fleur d'eau, to assist in repelling any attack on the ships. James II. attended by Marshals Berwick and Bellefonde, who commanded his forces, was a spectator of the action which ensued. The only really brilliant part of the battle was the attack and capture of this armament by the boats of the English squadron under Sir George Rooke; these, and a few light frigates, only being able to approach near enough to take a part in the action on account of the shallows. In the teeth of a tremendous fire of musquetry and artillery from shore and ships, the English sailors pulled up to the stranded vessels, boarded them all one after the other with loud huzzas, and pointed their guns against the French on the shore. All the 12 ships of war were burnt, together with a number of transports, 300 of which had been collected in this and the neighbouring ports to convey the army across to England.

About 7 m. N. of St. Vaast is Barfleur, an ancient and now nearly deserted town built of granite.

Down to the end of the 12th century, it was the most frequented port by which the communication between Normandy and England was maintained, in spite of the dangerous rocks around. Upon them perished the "Blanche Nef," — the ship which conveyed William, the only son of Henry I. with 140 young noblemen — through the fault of the intoxicated pilot and crew. The prince himself might have escaped had not an affectionate desire to save his natural sister, the Countess of Mortagne, caused him to turn back towards the foundering vessel. The boat which was bearing him to the shore was filled by a crowd of despairing wretches, and all sank to the bottom together.

On the extreme point of the Cap de Gatteville, the W. horn of the great bay into which the Seine discharges itself, the E. headland being near Fécamps, about 1 m. N. of Barfleur, a magnificent Light-house was completed in 1835. It is 271 ft. high above the sea, and is constructed entirely of granite. The light is seen at a distance of 27 m. out at sea. There is a fine view from the top. Barfleur is 15 m. E. of Cherbourg; a good road leads thither.

At the distance of about 7 m. from Valognes, the direct post road from Valognes to Cherbourg passes, 2½ m. on the l. the small town of Brix, a memorable name, since it is the same as Bruis or Bruce in its primitive spelling. The noble family of that name was allied to the Dukes of Normandy, and from it sprang Robert Bruce, the king of Scotland. The castle of the Seigneur de Brix, built in the 12th century, is now reduced to a few ruined vaults and foundation walls. It was called Chateau d' Adam. With this exception, there is nothing to notice on the road, until from the top of the last hill a fine view of the sea is presented through the gap of the valley, with Cherbourg at its mouth. A winding descent through a picturesque gully, displaying here and there bare cliffs, terminates in a long avenue of trees, which forms the approach to Cherbourg. On the l. rises the eminence La Fauconnière, crowned by the telegraph; on the rt. the cliff of Roule exposes a precipitous escarpment, 350 ft. above the sea.

20 CHERBOURG. — Inns: Hôtel d'Angleterre, on the new Quai du Port; — H. de Commerce; — good cuisine, but little comfort.

Cherbourg, one of the principal naval ports and dockyards of France, is situated at the N. extremity of the peninsula of the Cotentin, in the department of La Manche, in the centre of a bay, the extremities of which are formed by Cap Levy on the E., and Cap Omanville on the W. Its docks have been gained out of the rock, and its harbour won from the winds; for no pains nor cost have been spared to secure for France on this point, so advantageously projecting into the channel, a naval arsenal and port, whence she may be ready to watch or annoy her rival on the opposite coast. The town lies in the hollow of the valley of the Divette, which opens out to the sea under the lofty falaise of the quartz hill of Roule, crowned by a fort. Apart from its consideration as a naval station it is utterly insignificant; with dirty streets, reminding one of Portsmouth point. Its commercial relations are very limited; but its extensive naval works employ about 6000 out of its 19,872 inhabitants; and upon them alone depends its prosperity. Among its few articles of export are eggs to the value of one million francs yearly, sent to England. Cherbourg has a Bassin de Commerce, a commercial harbour, formed at the mouth of the Divette, never very full of shipping, but often visited by vessels of the English Yacht Club, who come over to lay in provisions and champagne. It is lined with quays, and the entrance to it is protected by stone piers, with a lighthouse at its extremity. The commercial port is quite distinct from the Dockyard (Grand Port), situated on the N.W. of the town. English travellers desirous of seeing the dockyard, must provide themselves with a note of recommendation from the British Consul to the Major de la Marine at the Vieux Port, on the E. of the commercial harbour, in order to procure a ticket of admission. He will appoint a gendarme to accompany them, to whom a couple of francs may be given for his trouble. The Grand Port occupies a nearly triangular space of ground, one side resting on the sea, and is surrounded by fortifications, which at this moment (1841) are being replaced by more lofty ramparts, taking in a larger extent of ground, surrounded by fossés cut in the rock, to be faced with granite masonry, on which many hundred men are at work, making the air ring with the clang of hammers.

The Port Militaire, and Arsenal de la Marine, planned, but only partly begun by Louis XVI., have been more than 36 years in progress; and the new works, commenced since 1831, will take as many more, probably, to complete. It consists of an ancient port, accessible for vessels of war at all tides, 56 ft. deep, capable of holding 12 or 15 ships of the line, and frigates; of a floating basin (bassin à flot), closed by lock-gates; and of a third basin, begun June, 1836, now in progress of excavation, by the aid of gunpowder, out of the solid slate rock, which forms the foundation of the entire yard, and out of which the other basins were quarried in the same manner. From the stairs on the W. quai of the avant port, Charles X. and his family embarked in 1830. There are four slips (Cales de Construction), of very solid construction; the lofty roofs rest on arches supported by piers of granite and slate; the arches are partly closed by wooden blinds. Adjoining them is a dry dock (Forme de Radoub), and beyond them are the Ateliers des Forges (smithy) des Machines (workshops filled with machinery for planing, turning, scooping, and cutting rods, beams, screws, &c. of iron); the Atelier de la Fonderie, roofed with zinc, furnished with two large and six smaller furnaces, and with iron, iron cranes, &c.

The Timber Shed (Hangar au bois) is 958 ft. long, and supported on 130 stone pillars. The yard is supplied with water from the Divette by a long and expensive conduit.

Convicts (forçats) are no longer employed in the dockyard of Cherbourg.

La Digue. The roads of Cherbourg, though protected on three sides by the land, are naturally open and exposed to the N. wind. To remedy this defect, the project of throwing a Breakwater across the bay's mouth, in the deep sea, has been favourably entertained by every government since that of Louis XVI., with whom it originated. The old Bourbons, the Republic, the Empire, the Restoration, and Louis Philippe, have all desired to advance a scheme which should contribute to secure for France a safe and strong harbour on this part of their coast, exactly opposite Portsmouth, which would be an eye to watch, and an arm to strike their rival on the opposite side of the Channel. At present the French possess no port for ships of war from Dunkirk (and that is fit only for frigates) and Brest. Yet even now (1841), after the operations have been carried on nearly 50 years, and nearly 28,000,000 of francs, together with about 4,000,000 cubic mètres of stone, sunk in the undertaking, it is only just beginning to raise its head above water; while, judging from past experience, it remains still very problematical whether it will be able to withstand the sea, and continue permanent. The whole undertaking may, as yet, be regarded as a long series of experiments and failures. The plan first adopted under Louis XVI. (1784) was that of forming truncated cones of timber, or huge broad-bottomed tubs, floating them on empty casks to the proper place, sinking them, and filling them with stones, and heaping up others round about them. But a very brief exposure to a few storms overset some of the caissons, shattered the framework of others to pieces, and spread the stone and wood over the anchorage, so as to injure it. After a considerable interruption from the Revolution, another scheme was resorted to of forming a bank of small stones, and covering these with large solid blocks: this was continued down to the time of Napoleon, who, as was his custom, looked at it in a military point of view, and at once directed the formation of a fort in the centre of the digue. All exertions were thenceforth concentrated on this object; a mole was formed, a battery raised on it mounting 20 guns, a garrison of 90 men was established on it, and lodged in barracks erected for the purpose. In 1808, however, a storm of extraordinary violence burst upon the roads; the waves, carried to an unusual height, soon submerged all the buildings raised upon the Digue, and by the impetuosity of their shocks, swept them all off, save the cabin of the commandant of the prison; and forming a wide breach in the masonry, poured over and through it with tremendous violence. There were at the time upon the dyke 263 soldiers and workmen, of whom 194 were drowned, 69 were saved by finding shelter in hollows among the stones, and 38 got off in a boat which managed to reach them during a short lull, with great difficulty, since the vessels in the roads within the Digue were all driven from their moorings. By this fatal disaster the operations of 16 years, in sinking large blocks, were nearly annihilated, and the whole mass of stone reduced to the condition of a shifting shingle bed, rendering it doubtful whether the plan of even protecting the roads at all was practicable. Nevertheless, Napoleon did not abandon it, nor did his successors on the throne lose sight of it. A survey, made by order of the government in 1828, showed, however, that the foundations had shifted in the course of 40 years, from the position in which they had been first placed, to a considerable distance. A fresh impulse has been given to the work since 1830; and under the vigorous superintendence of Louis Philippe, it is possible that the undertaking may yet be carried out. A new mode of proceeding was adopted in 1832, and as the result of the schemes previously pursued had shown that the mere weight and volume of the stones thrown into the sea was insufficient to secure their fixity, a layer of beton, a species of concrete composed of 1 part of pounded brick and 2 of lime, is now deposited on the loose stone heap, and upon it a wall of well jointed and solid masonry, faced with granite, is raised. Even this, however, was destined to be the sport of the waves during a storm which occurred in 1836, the most terrible since that of 1808; the coat of concrete was broken and turned over in places; blocks of stone, weighing 3 tons, were raised 22 ft. high in the air, and carried over the wall to the inside of the digue, so that at the end of 3 days 300 of them had found their way across, and wide gaps and fissures were formed in the body of the breakwater.

Instead of being discouraged, the present government seems spurred on by this last mishap to overcome all obstacles. Since these last injuries, the width of the dyke at its base has been increased to 295 ft.; more than 500 workmen are constantly employed upon it, being lodged in barracks on the breakwater, and protected during their operations by a moveable shed, and for a considerable distance the colossal structure raises its head several feet above the surface; at the present rate of progress it may be finished in 8 years.

The Digue de Cherbourg extends between the Isle Pelée and the pointe de Querqueville for a length of 3760 mètres, = 4111 yards, or more than 2 m. leaving openings for the entrance and exit of vessels on the E. of 1257 yards and at the W. of about 1½ mile. The depth of the sea about the digue varies from 36 to 45 ft. A light-house has been raised in the centre, together with a strong battery. The stone employed is partly from the quarries at the base of the Montagne de Roule, conveyed to the harbour along a tramway; the slate comes from Becquet, and the granite from Ferminville and Flamanville.

Persons desirous of seeing the digue have only to hire a boat in the harbour and row off to it, the distance being about 2 m.

The following statement of comparative measurements in yards will show how much more serious an undertaking the Cherbourg Digue is than the Plymouth Breakwater: —

	Length.	Breadth.	Height.
Digue,	4111	295	36 to 45
Break-water,	1760	120 at base, 16 at top,	14

It, however, remains to be seen whether the digue will ever be completed successfully. Its failure hitherto may, at least in part, be attributed to a defect of the plan in presenting to the violence of the sea a vertical wall instead of a gradual slope. During the occurrence of storms, the waves hurl the loose masses of stones, many of them tons in weight, with appalling violence, and a noise like thunder, against the even granite masonry, and acting upon it like so many battering rams, effect serious breaches.

The Roadstead of Cherbourg is, it is said, beginning to experience the benefit of the breakwater. Though only a third of its area is fit for large vessels, it is capable of containing between 30 and 40 men of war in its anchorage. It is protected by the batteries of Fort Royal, of 100 guns, on the Isle Pelée, and Fort du Homet on the W., to which must be now added the fort on the mole in the centre of the digue.

These works would render Cherbourg, if not impregnable from the sea, at least very difficult to attack. On the land side it has hitherto been almost open, but the fortifications now in progress are intended to strengthen it there.

In 1758 the English, under General Bligh, effected a descent on the coast, to the number of 7000, in the face of 16,000 French troops, who offered no effective opposition. The English forces kept possession of Cherbourg for three days, in which time they destroyed all the naval and military works, docks, arsenals, &c., blowing them up with the powder which the French had left behind, burning the lock gates of the harbour, and all the vessels of war and commerce. They levied a contribution of 44,000 livres on the town, but no injuries nor pillage of the inhabitants or their dwellings was permitted. To this the French themselves bear honourable testimony, acknowledging that the protection of the British officers prevented any outrage. All the cannon were carried off, but the bells of the church were conceded to the entreaties of the curé, and allowed to remain.

Cherbourg has no antiquities to show, except the Vieille Tour, which formed part of the ancient fortifications, washed by the sea, and the Church, not far from it; both built about 1450, and neither possessing any interest.

The Chapelle de Nôtre Dame du Vœu, outside the town near the dockyard, owes its existence and its name to a vow made by the Empress Maude when caught in a fierce tempest, which threatened to overwhelm the vessel in which she was attempting to gain the port of Cherbourg on her flight from the usurper, Stephen, by whom she had been driven out of England. While still at her prayers, and in the agony of anticipated death among the waves, "Chante, Reine," exclaimed a sailor; "behold the land; your prayers are heard:" and from this circumstance, it is said, the spot where the queen landed, and near to which she built the chapel, now enclosed within the dockyard, was called Chantereine, — a name which it still retains. The present Chapel of the Vow, however, is modern, and stands on a different spot. Mathilda is not the only refugee sovereign whom Cherbourg has seen within its walls at various periods; besides Charles X., who here took a last farewell of his country, after abdicating the throne at Rambouillet 1830, Don Pedro, ex-emperor of Brazil, arrived here, 1831, when driven from his states, and James II. repaired hither, after the battle of La Hougue.

The Hotel de Ville contains a Collection of Pictures, formed and bequeathed to the town by a native, Thomas Henry, himself an artist.

Consuls reside here from Great Britain and the maritime states of Europe and America.

There is a Bathing Establishment on the sands, to the E. of the Old Arsenal and Jettée, but it is not well appointed.

The Poste aux Lettres is on the Quai du Port.

A malleposte goes daily to Paris, in 24 hours.

Diligences daily to Paris by Caen; to St. Lo, Coutances, and St. Malo. Inferior coaches daily to Valognes; to Barfleur; to St. Vaast; to Bricquebec.

Steamers to Havre twice a week; to Weymouth once or twice in the summer.

Excursions may be made to the Phare de Gatteville; Barfleur, and La Hougue, (pp. 81, 82.).

Querqueville, 5 m. W. of Cherbourg, is a hamlet, whose name is variously derived from the oak, quercus, which once surrounded it, or, with more probability, from its small Church (kerk) of St. Germain standing by the side of the parish church. This is one of the oldest monuments of Christianity in Normandy. It is in the form of a cross: its chancel and transepts lighted by loophole windows; all end in apses, and all this part is of herring-bone masonry: the nave and tower were added at a subsequent period. The ornaments of the towers, stripes of stone projecting from the wall surmounted by the round arch, resemble those of Barton on the Humber, Barnack, and others in England.

The fort of Querqueville is one of the defences of the roads of Cherbourg, and its lighthouse points out the entrance to them.

13 m. further to the W., beyond Beaumont, the Cap la Hague (often confounded on the maps with La Hougue) stretches out towards Alderney (called by the French Aurigny), from which island it is only 9 m. distant. Both the cape and the island, as well as the Cape Flamanville, are of granite, the fundamental rock of the Cotentin, supporting the grauwacke and clay slates, which for the most part appear on the surface of that district. Opposite Cap la Hague, on a rock, called le Gros du Raz, about a mile out at sea, stands a lighthouse.

The Trappist Convent at Bricquebec, and the Castle and Abbey of St. Sauveur le Vicomte are described in Route 27.

ROUTE 27.

CHERBOURG TO ST. MALO, BY ST. SAUVEUR, COUTANCES, GRANVILLE, AVRANCHES, MONT ST. MICHEL AND DOL.

205 kilom. = 127 Eng. m.

Diligences go daily from Cherbourg by Carentan and Coutances to St. Malo.

Persons travelling in their own carriage, may vary the road back to 20 Valognes, the first post station (p. 81.) by going round by Octeville (1 m.) where is a Norman church with an octagonal tower and curious carvings (a Last Supper, &c. in bas-relief) older than the reign of Henry II., Martinvaast (2½ m.) having a still older church in the same style, and unaltered, with slender half pillars, supporting Ionic capitals outside its semi-circular E. end, and a cornice of grotesque heads under its eaves; its lofty stone vaulted roof is supported on horse-shoe arches. It stands in a sequestered spot, with a fine old yew beside it. There is a Castle, still inhabited, hard by. Bricquebec (8 m. from Valognes) a village including an ancient Castle, whose lofty donjon keep, 100 feet high, in shape a decagon seated on a high mound, remains tolerably perfect (date 14th century), as well as the walls of the outer enclosure. Other portions are as late as the 16th, and some as early as the 11th, century. It belonged in turn to the families of Bertram, Paisnel (Paganel) and Estouteville. It was taken from the last by Henry V. after the battle of Agincourt, and bestowed on his favourite William de la Pole, Earl of Suffolk, who parted with it to ransom himself from the hands of the French.

In the adjoining forest, on the hill des Grosses Roches, are three Druidical monuments of the kind called "Galleries Couvertes." A little more than a mile N.E. of Bricquebec is the Trappist Convent, founded 1823 by M. Onfray, on a spot of ground just cleared from the forest. Its inmates, 32 in number, of whom 12 are priests, are bound by strict vows to silence, communicating by established signs on indispensable matters, living on coarse dry bread, a few vegetables, a salad with a spoonful of oil, a little milk, and a bit of cheese, and one plateful of a meagre potage, which on fast days is reduced to 6 oz. of bread in the morning, and 2 or 3 at night, with a fixed allowance of herbs and roots. They are prohibited from wearing linen even when ill, and sleep with their clothes on, upon a straw mattress, piquée, 2 inches thick. They are allowed one sort of meat when sick, but fish is forbidden. They rise daily at 2 A. M. and on fête days at 12 or 1, and spend their time in prayer, reading, and work.

There is a cross road from Bricquebec to St. Sauveur.

On quitting Valognes our route separates from Route 26., and turning to the l. passes by Columby (a church with pointed lancet windows) to 17 St. Sauveur le Vicomte, where there is a picturesque and imposing Castle of the Tessons and Harcourts, but given by Edward III. after the treaty of Bretigny to John Chandos, one of the most famous captains of the wars of Edward III. and the Black Prince. He built the square and lofty keep tower, one of the gateways, and other portions. In the 17th century it became a hospital, and continued such down to the Revolution. Although falling to ruin, at present it is the best preserved feudal fortress on the Cotentin.

Here are also ruins of an Abbey, which in 1831 were being pulled down for the sake of the materials. The church was beautiful, the groundwork Norman (1067-1160), with additions, in the pointed style, of the 13th century.

From St. Sauveur to Périers the road, although a post one, was very lately impracticable for heavy carriages, and perhaps remains so still. It passes near the Abbey of Blanchelande founded by Richard de la Haye, a favourite of Henry II. (1155-85) who had been captured by corsairs, and passed many years in slavery. It is beautifully situated, and consists of the abbot's house still perfect, and inhabited by a farmer, and part of the Church, in which late insertions have been added to an original Norman structure.

11 La Haye du Puits. The castle, dating from the 11th century, the only thing of interest in this obscure little town, has been pulled down within the last 15 years to mend the roads! Mr. Gally Knight saw, in 1831, the last remains, a fine old machicolated tower, which was then condemned to fall by the pickaxe, and has probably by this time entirely disappeared.

At Lessay is another abbey and church in the Norman style, begun in the 11th century, but not consecrated till 1178. "It is of one character, plain, but grand throughout; and possesses a noble central tower. The W. portal is more ornamented than the other parts, and exhibits the dog-tooth moulding, which does not appear in England till nearly the end of the 12th century." — Knight.

18 Périers.

15 Coutances. — Inns: Hôtel de France; bed, dinner (including a bottle of wine), and tea, cost 5 fr. 10 sous, 1841. — Hôtel d'Angleterre; both tolerable.

Coutances, at present a somewhat lifeless town of 8,957 inhabitants, is built upon a nearly conical hill, the summit of which is occupied by the Cathedral, proudly predominating over other buildings, with its 3 towers. The high road, carried in a broad winding terrace along the flank of the hill, round the outskirts of the town, forms an agreeable walk, while on the opposite or E. side are more formal and gloomy promenades closely planted with avenues of trees.

The Cathedral is one of the finest churches of Normandy in the early pointed style, free from exuberant ornament, but captivating the eye by the elegance of proportion and arrangement. "The whole is of a piece, complete in conception and execution. The lofty towers terminating in spires, both finished and alike, flank its W. front." "Its interior is very lofty, more than 100 ft. from the floor to the keystone of the vault. Cluster piers divide the nave from the aisles; coupled pillars surround the choir (which ends in an hexagon). Most of the windows are of later date than the body of the building."—Knight. The peculiarities of this cathedral are, the side porches close behind the towers; the open screens of mullioned tracery, corresponding with the windows, which divide the side chapels; and the excessive height of the choir which has no triforium, only a balustrade just before the clerestory windows. The central tower is wonderfully fine in the exterior; it is apparently an expansion of the plain Norman lanthorn as at Caen. Some of the painted glass is in the oldest style; diapered patterns in a black outline, on a grey ground."—Palgrave.

A magnificent cathedral was built at Coutances in the 11th century with contributions partly furnished by Tancred de Hauteville and his 6 sons, the conquerors of Sicily and Apulia, who were natives of the diocese of Coutances; "it was consecrated 1056 in the presence of William, Duke of Normandy, 9 years before he conquered England."

Some of the antiquaries of Normandy have maintained that the existing edifice is the one completed at that time, and have claimed in consequence for their country the invention of the pointed style in the 11th century; but as no buildings either in W. France or in England were constructed in that style until 130 years after, and as, on the contrary, all the buildings erected during that period are in the round style; for instance, the church of Lessay only 9 m. off, consecrated 1178; there is no reason to concede to their claim. The evidence upon which they found it is, that the Livre Noir, (a mere account of the advowsons of the diocese, compiled 1250,) makes no mention of the rebuilding of the church after the 11th century. There exists, however, proof from inscriptions on the walls of the side chapels, that several of them were dedicated, and therefore probably built, in the latter half of the 13th century (1274), and it is also known that the church was nearly ruined in 1356 by the army of Geoffrey d'Harcourt, so that it must have needed serious repairs, though the record of them is lost, executed probably about the end of the 14th century. — (See Mr. Knight's Normandy.)

From the top of the fine lanthorn tower a view may be obtained of the sea, with the distant island of Jersey on the W., and of the rock of Granville.

The Church of St. Pierre is in the florid Gothic style of the 15th century.

The steep and narrow valley which bounds the town on the W. and is traversed by the terraced road leading to Granville, before mentioned, is crossed by the remains of an ancient Aqueduct, consisting of 5 perfect arches and 15 piers supported by buttresses, called Les Piliers, which is also the name given to the village, or suburb, in which it is situated, ¼ m. out of Coutances. In most guide-books and descriptions of the town it is called a Roman aqueduct, but its pointed arches, its buttresses with offsets, and coarse irregular masonry, prove clearly that it is not so, but a work of the middle ages, probably monkish. According to Dawson Turner it was erected in the 13th century by one of the noble family De Paisnel (Paganell).

Coaches go from this daily to St. Lo (Rte. 32.).

Those who love old Gothic ruins, either for their picturesqueness or architecture, will be repaid by an excursion hence to the Abbey of Hambye, about 13 m. to the S.E. It may be taken on the way to Granville, making a détour of 6 or 7 m. A good road now (1841) leads through a pleasing but hilly country by Mesnil l'Aubert, and St. Denis le Guest, leaving Hambye l'Eglise ¼ m. to the rt. to Bourg d'Hambye, a scattered village, with a small but clean cabaret furnishing only homely fare, — coffee, milk, cheese, and cider. The old Castle of Hambye whose keep, 100 ft. high, stood on an eminence towering over the Bourg, and of which Mr. Knight found one tower standing in 1831, is now (1841) swept away to mend the roads, an instance out of many of the destructive spirit in France, by which so many noble or curious edifices have been levelled with the dust in the course of the last 20 years.

It is a pleasant walk of 1½ m. from the Bourg to the Abbey, but the road thither, through narrow lanes, is practicable only for light cars.

The little Abbey of Hambye nestles in a retired valley, sheltered under picturesque cliffs by the side of a trout stream (the Sienne), the beau idéal of a monastic site. The roof and W. end are gone, the ivy begins to creep up the mouldering walls, and destruction is advancing apace, yet there is much beauty in the narrow arches which enclosed the choir resting on columnar piers, in the style of the 15th century. Behind them are side chapels much older, having round and pointed arches in combination, which marks the period of transition. The tower in the centre of the cross rests on square piers which become octagonal below by chamfering. The convent buildings are now occupied by a farmer. The Chapter House, a double pointed vault elegantly groined, resting on angular pillars and entered by a fine doorway deep sunk in its early English mouldings, is now turned into a woodhouse; it should be seen. This abbey was founded by William de Pagnel 1145, but renovated, or probably rebuilt, in the 15th century, by Joanne de Pagnel, the last of her family, who was buried in the church with her husband Louis d'Estouteville, the defender of Mount St. Michel against the English (p. 94.). Their tombs were destroyed at the Revolution.

About 5 m. from Hambye is Perci, cradle of the earls of Northumberland. The high road to Granville may be regained at Bréhul.

The direct road from Coutances to Granville has no interest.

19 Bréhul. Trees diminish in size and number on approaching the sea, peeps of which and the island of Chaussey are seen at intervals. The entrance to Granville is by a steep descent, excavated partly through a deep hollow way ; on the rt. a natural wall of rock separates the road from the sea-shore, and through a gap cut in it, access is afforded to the baths and sea-shore. In front rises a high hill, its slope cut away evenly and levelled, until it is as steep and smooth as the roof of a house, in order to form a glacis for the fort on its top. A bend in the road presently discloses to view the lower town and harbour.

10 Granville. Inns : very bad, Hôtel du Nord. This is a small but tolerably prosperous seaport (7600 inhabitants), chiefly resorted to by fishing vessels, but driving some commerce along the coast and with Jersey (33 m. distant) and Guernsey.

Its situation is singular, built in steps or terraces under a rocky promontory projecting into the sea, surmounted by the fort whose presence restricts many of the buildings from rising above one story in height. Under the shelter of this eminence lies the little port, screened by it from the N. winds. A new town is gradually spreading itself along the low margin of this harbour, and up the banks of a stream so small that it is generally swallowed up in soapsuds, and contributes, with the filthy abominations of the town itself, especially at low water, when the harbour is drained to the lees of mud, to produce a state of atmosphere barely tolerable. The sombre hue of the buildings, whose walls are dark granite and their roofs black slate, renders Granville on a near examination as unattractive to the sight as to the smell, and moreover it contains no objects of interest.

The stranger desirous to rescue himself from ennui must repair to the noble Pier, begun 1828 and still unfinished, enclosing an older one in its much wider circuit. It is very strongly built, so that guns can be mounted on it. The tide rises and falls here at times from 40 to 44 ft.

Steamers go hence to Jersey (in 3 hours) and to St. Malo once a week.

The church at the W. end of the town is a low, gloomy building, chiefly in the late flamboyant style, though it has some round arches. It is of grey granite, even the capitals of its columns being worked in that hard stone.

In order to ascend the hill above the old town it is advisable not to thread the labyrinth of filthy alleys, steep slopes, and stone steps which compose it, but to issue out by the road to Coutances, and then scale the steep slope no farther than the walls of the fort, a point which commands a good sea view. Close under the cliffs lie the baths (Salon des Bains) and reading room, which can be approached only through the breach in the rock before alluded to, leading also down to the sands, a fine smooth and broad expanse, quite shut out from the town. There are no machines ; instead of them bathers are enclosed in cases of canvas carried in the fashion of sedan chairs, and they must walk into the water thickly clad ; the ladies led by women ; the men are banished to the distance of ½ m. to the N.

Though Granville is not a particularly strong place it resisted effectually the attack of the peasant army of Vendeans 30,000 strong, on their ill-fated march N. from the Loire in 1793, led on by the gallant Larochejacquelin. The inducements of the royalists to make this attempt was the hope of opening a communication by the sea with England, whose government had promised to send them succour ; and to secure a fortified place where they could deposit in safety the women and children, the sick and the priests, who embarrassed the operations of the army. The Vendeans, being destitute of artillery to breach the ramparts, were unable to resort to a regular siege. The attempt to storm the place, though conducted with the most dashing courage, was foiled. More than once these brave soldiers gained the ramparts, sometimes supplying the want of scaling ladders by sticking their bayonets into the chinks of the masonry, but as often they were swept off by grape and musquetry from the walls and gunboats in the harbour, until at length they were forced to retire with a loss of 1800 killed. Their army never advanced farther N. ; this was the culminating point of their success, and from henceforth they were compelled to retreat. During this attack the suburbs of the town were set on fire by the republican commander of the fortress and burnt down.

It is a very pretty ride from Granville to Avranches ; the view obtained from the height, after crossing the wooded dell of Sartilly, of the peaked rock of Mount St. Michel is especially striking.

About 4 m. N.E. of Sartilly is the ruined abbey of Luzerne. The church in the transition style is tolerably perfect ; it was completed 1178 except the nave, which is later. The conventual buildings, turned into a cotton mill at the Revolution, are fast going to decay. The road from Sartilly is wretchedly bad.

26 Avranches. — Inns : Hôtel de France ; — Hôtel de Bretagne ; both tolerable.

Avranches (Abrancæ), a town of 7269 inhabitants, is now chiefly remarkable for its very beautiful situation, on the sides and summit of a high hill, the last of a widely extending ridge, rendered accessible for the high road by broad terraces carried up its steep slope in zigzags. The view which you obtain in ascending, and especially that from the little mound on the l. of the road before you enter the town, in front of the Sous Prefecture, is perhaps the most beautiful in the N. of France. The landscape abounds in wood with partial clearances of well cultivated corn land, through the midst of which winds the river, flashing in glittering pools until expanding into a broad estuary it meets the sea, which borders the horizon. But the prominent feature of the view is the peaked rock of Mont St. Michel, and the twin islet of Tombelaine rising grandly from the hem of the waters.

Under this mound is a Public Walk planted with trees, formerly the garden of the archévêché, in the midst of which a statue of General Valhubert, a native of Avranches, who fell at Austerlitz, is set up.

The Cathedral of Avranches, one of the noblest in Normandy, and the chief ornament of the town, was destroyed by the mob at the Revolution ; its site remains an open platform, commanding an extensive view, and recently named Place Huet, from the celebrated Bishop of Avranches. All traces of the church are swept away, save the stone upon which Henry II. kneeled, a humble penitent, before the Papal Legates, to make atonement for the murder of Becket, "which had affected him more than the death of his own father or mother." After swearing on the gospels that he had neither ordered nor desired it, he here received the Papal absolution, 1172.

There are some portions remaining of the old ramparts of the town.

Another point of view preferable, perhaps, in some respects, even to that above described, is obtained from the Jardin des Plantes.

There is an extensive Public Li- brary here, containing 10,000 volumes and some old MSS., among which was discovered recently a copy of Abelard's treatise, called "Sic et Non," published 1836 by M. Cousin.

The beauty of the situation, the salubrity of the air, and the cheapness of living, have rendered Avranches a favourite residence of the English, who form a considerable colony here.

There is a way practicable with a guide on horseback from Avranches to Mont St. Michel, across the sands when the tide is out; but as there are two watercourses to wade through, beset with quicksands, there is some risk in taking it, especially with a guide not perfectly master of the line of route. It is far preferable to go round by Pont Orson. As is the case on Lancaster sands, the rise of the tide here is so excessively rapid at times, that a fleet horse, it is said, could not outrun it.

In going to Pont Orson and Dol you quit Avranches by another series of zigzags overlooking the bay of Cancale with Mont St. Michel in the midst, rising above a beautiful foreground of trees, and at Pont au Baud, at the bottom of the hill, cross the little river Selune.

At Louis a cross road, very bad, turns off on the rt. to the Mont St. Michel by Ardevan.

22 Pont Orson. The Croix Verte cannot be recommended as an inn to stop at, but it will furnish a horse and car for 5 fr. or 6 fr. to go to the Mont St. Michel, 5 m. off. A good, new macadamised road thither will be completed, 1842, it is said, to replace "un des plus affreux chemins" in all France, and render Pont Orson by far the best approach to the mount. It passes through Beauvoir and near Ardevan, where are the remains of conventual farm buildings, anciently belonging to the monks of the mount. The road terminates on the margin of "la Grève," i. e. the sands, extending for many square leagues all around the mount, and left bare every tide for 4 or 5 hours by the sea, which interrupts the passage to it between 1 and 2 hours near high water. The distance across them to the mount is about a mile; the driest track is firm and perfectly safe for horses or carriages, but on either side are quicksands, which render it dangerous to diverge. There always remain behind a few pools which would reach above the ancles of a pedestrian. There is something mysterious and almost awful in the aspect of this solitary cone of granite, rising alone out of the wide, level expanse of sand. One might imagine it the peak of some colossal mountain just piercing through the crust of the earth, but deprived, at the moment of its appearance, of the geological force necessary to rear it aloft. Slight as is its elevation, its isolated position in the midst of the sea, and its heaven-pointed top, render it the prominent object of every view from the surrounding coast, and from a long distance give it the appearance of being much nearer at hand than it really is. On approaching it, it is found to be girt round at its base by a circlet of feudal walls and towers, washed by the sea; above these rise the quaint, irregular houses of the little town, plaistered as it were, against the rock, and piled one over another. Above them project the bare beds of rock, serving as a pedestal from which the lofty walls, high turrets, and prolonged buttresses of the conventual buildings are reared aloft, surmounted in their turn by the pinnacles and tower of the church (now bearing a telegraph) which crowns the whole and forms the apex of the pyramid.

Not inferior in interest to its outward aspect are the historical associations connected with this shrine of the archangel Michael — the successor of Bel and the Dragon — the saint of high places. Holy hermits succeeded to Pagan priests in the possession of this natural temple, which Norman dukes and kings further honoured by building a church, and converted into a fortress almost impregnable in ancient times. Henry I. here effectually resisted his two elder brothers. Here Henry II. in 1166 kept his court, and received the homage of the turbulent Bretons, whom he had subdued with a strong arm. This was the only fortress which held out for the French king, when all Normandy was overrun by the armies of the conqueror of Azincour; successfully withstanding 2 sieges, in 1417 and 1423, under the brave Louis d'Estouteville. The shrine of St. Michel was for ages visited yearly by thousands of devotees from far and near, and the records of the convent preserve the names of more than a dozen royal pilgrims who have repaired hither to prostrate themselves as penitents before it, and to load it with their bounty. The Revolution dispersed the monks, interrupted the pilgrimage, and changed the destination of the building to a Prison, in which 300 aged priests were immured until death should release them: not but what its prisons and oubliettes are of far greater antiquity. Who has not heard of the iron cage of St. Michel (formed of wood by the way, in spite of its name)? Its last occupant was an unfortunate Dutch journalist, who was seized most unjustifiably beyond the territory of France, for having abused the unscrupulous tyrant Louis XIV., who treated the Dutchman as he did the Italian prisoner of the iron mask. St. Michael's Mount in Cornwall, which bears so remarkable a resemblance to this, though on a smaller scale, was one of the foreign dependencies of the abbey.

The entrance to Mont St. Michel is by 3 gates one within the other, the second flanked by 2 of the cannon with which the English forces of Henry V. ineffectually bombarded the mount in 1424, firing from them stone balls 1 ft. in diameter. Near this the arms of the knights of St. Michel, with a lion for supporter, are seen carved in the wall: the third gate is provided with a portcullis, and within it is the little inn (not very inviting; crabs, shrimps, and fish may be got here). The town (so to call it) consists of one narrow, steep, and very inodorous lane. The best way of ascending is by the ramparts, turning to the rt. after passing the gate, up a succession of grass-grown flights of stairs "hanging to the side of the rock," provided with machicoulis at the side to annoy an enemy below. The uppermost gateway leading into the castle-convent, stands midway across a flight of steps, and is flanked by 2 bartizans or turrets; it "is very scenic and baronial," built probably 1257; but the chamber of knights and princes now re-echoes to the clank of chains and the rattle of the shuttle and beams. The present destination of the building is a prison for ordinary criminals and political offenders. For this reason only parts of it are accessible for minute examination of strangers; and others are concealed by screen partitions. The formality of delivering the passport, and requesting admission of the governor having been gone through at this gate, the stranger is conducted by dark mysterious vaults and passages, up and down gloomy stairs, to the Cloisters, the most beautiful part of the building, and a gem of Gothic architecture, unique of its kind, built between 1220 and 1228, and "strangely moresque." Towards the court they are supported by a double row of pointed arches resting on thin granite pillars, leaving an exquisitely groined narrow vault between the rows. The pillar of one arch alternates with the point of the next, so as to allow a most graceful carved volute or sprig, issuing from the capital of every alternate pillar, to be seen. The spandrils of the arches are filled up with a vegetative creation, of foliage, sprigs, flowers, gar-lands, such as is scarcely to be equalled any where for fanciful variety, and sharpness, and excellence of execution; the whole is surmounted by a cornice of flowers and is in good preservation. It highly merits to be drawn in detail. The arches and carvings are of soft limestone brought from a distance; all the rest of the buildings are of granite, and the rock of St. Michel itself is of that stone.

The Church of the convent consists of 2 parts, of different ages and styles. The Norman nave, in the massive style of the 11th century (1060), with slightly ornamented capitals, and a wooden roof, is now used as a chapel for the convicts. The pointed Gothic choir is of the 15th century (1452—1521): — the mouldings of the arches are carried down into the reeding of the piers, without any interruption of capitals. The arches are closed up with walls, into which curious Scriptural bas-reliefs, such as Adam and Eve driven from Paradise, Noah's ark, &c., St. Michael killing the dragon, very grotesquely treated, are let in. The piers supporting the central towers having given way, owing to the injury they received from a fire, the last of 8 or 10 conflagrations which, at different times have consumed the abbey, the arches of the transept (also Norman) are staved up by a complicated framework of timber to prevent the roof falling.

The Chambre des Chevaliers, below the cloisters, is a noble hall, or nave of 4 finely vaulted aisles, supported on 3 rows of pillars, and measures 98 ft. by 68. The date of its construction is supposed to be the 12th century. The chapters of the knights of the order of St. Michel, founded 1496, by the bigot Louis XI., who twice repaired hither as a pilgrim, were held in it. This is now filled with the looms, at which the prisoners are compelled to work. La Salle de Montgomery, is also a fine Gothic apartment.

Beneath the choir of the church a circle of drumlike pillars, set very close together, with one in the centre, supports the superincumbent weight, and forms a curious crypt. The view from the top of the church, elevated 400 ft. above the sands, from amidst its florid buttresses and pinnacles, now much mutilated, is curious. The Rochers de Cancale, on the coast of Brittany, the town of Avranches, and the neighbouring rock of Tombeleine, Tumba Beli, on which, as well as on St. Michael's rock, the god Bel was worshipped, in Pagan times, are the most conspicuous objects; all around is a waste of sand, interspersed with pools and channels of rivers, or a wild expanse of tossing waves.

Owing to the short stay the sea makes around the walls at every tide, and the hillocks and sand banks which intersect the sands, the castle is hardly accessible by a boat, and from this circumstance, and its amphibious position changing twice a day from land to water, its strength as a fortress arises.

The Castle of Pontorson (p. 93.), now entirely swept away, was entrusted by Charles the Wise, 1361, to Dugueselin, to hold as a frontier post against the English. During his absence on a foraging expedition, however, it was very nearly lost, through an understanding between an English prisoner, Felton, and the waiting-maids of Dugueselin's lady. The attempt was discovered, as the enemy were scaling the walls, by his sister, a stout Amazon, who overthrew the ladders into the ditch, and the treacherous waiting-maids were sewed up in sacks and drowned in the river!

The granite Church of Pontorson, partly Norman, with a transition W. end, and pointed choir, contains, in the N. aisle, a singular series of carvings in stone, representing the Passion — but so mutilated as to lose much of their value.

The river Couësnon crossed by a bridge, on quitting Pontorson, forms the boundary between Normandy and Brittany. A fertile and very picturesque country succeeds, well wooded; in fact, one entire orchard, the corn-fields being invariably planted with rows of fruit-trees. A last view is obtained of St. Michel from a lofty hill, over which the road is carried.

The caps worn by the women hereabouts consist of a piece of white linen, bent like a roof, laid on the top of the head, the front, or gable, turned back in a sort of scroll, exactly corresponding with that seen on monumental effigies in English churches, of ladies of the 15th and 16th centuries.

19 Dol. —Inns: La Grande Maison, not very good, homely but not dear; — Hôtel de Nôtre Dame.

Dol is a remarkable town, as bearing thoroughly the aspect of ancient days: the black hue of the granite of which its houses are built, contrasting sometimes with splashes of whitewash dashed over them, the heavy projecting gables, the arcades of various heights and patterns, running under the houses, the quaintly carved granite pillars on which they rest, all give a peculiar character to the place, and offer some good bits for the artist's pencil, while he may fill a sketch-book with costumes in its market-place. It has 3,990 inhabitants, and a considerable corn market held in a desecrated church (des Carmes) distinguished by a fine flamboyant W. window, and a Norman nave.

The chief building is the Cathedral (before the Revolution an episcopal see) built of sombre grey granite, uniformly in the early pointed style, except the porches; that on the S. leading into the nave being florid, and having carvings in white stone like those in the cloister of Mont St. Michel. The arches of the nave have deep mouldings, and rest on circular piers, composed of a group of 4 columns, the inner one towards the nave being detached half way up to the roof, where it becomes engaged like the rest. The choir, more ornamented than the nave, but in the same style, has a square E. end, like the English churches, but behind the high altar is an open arch of two divisions separated by a slender pillar admitting a view into a small Lady Chapel behind. The space above this arch is occupied by a large E. window filled with old and good painted glass. These are the most striking points in this church, which is a fine edifice, worthy of attention for its similarity to the Gothic of England; indeed many of the churches of Brittany are said to be the work of English architects.

The old walls of Dol remain tolerably perfect, wanting the gates; many of their flanking towers and bastions are surmounted with deep machicoulis, and the whole is surrounded by a deep ditch. A high Terrace walk has been formed on the outside of this, and planted with trees. On the side of the town next the cathedral a view is obtained from this walk of the solitary eminence of Mont Dol, a granite rock something like Mont St. Michel, only rising out of the dry land.

These antiquated fortifications of the 15th and 16th centuries were defended by the Vendeans after their retreat from Granville against the republican army, which was beat off after a bloody combat of 15 hours' duration, and compelled to retreat.

The tract of land between Dol and the sea, a distance of 3 m., is chiefly marsh gained from the waters by embankments; very fertile, but teeming with miasma, which, however, has diminished of late from improved drainage. A tremendous irruption of the sea, reclaiming its own in the beginning of the 17th century, overwhelmed this district.

About a mile outside of Dol and ¼ m. to the l. of the Rennes road is one of those Druidical stones, so common in Brittany, called Menhirs (see p. 105.) It is known as la Pierre du Champ Dolent, a name which probably marks it as a funereal monument, perhaps on some field of blood or battle. It is a rude, skittle-shaped obelisk of granite, a single-block 30 ft. high above ground, and 8 or 10 it is said below, rising in the midst of a corn-field, and surmounted by a wooden cross.

On the way to St. Malo you pass on the rt. the Mont Dol, a granite rock surmounted by a telegraph rising out of the flat land and most probably once an island in the bay of Mont St. Michel, for the sea no doubt once extended thus far. Where the road reaches the present margin of the bay the shore is lined by a long scattered village, composed of nearly as many windmills as cottages. Not a boat can approach them owing to the shallowness of the water, although the tide comes up to their doors twice a day. On the W. shore of the bay, however, is the small port of Cancale—4,880 inhabitants—visible on the rt., backed by high cliffs, famed for the oyster beds on the Rochers de Cancale below them, whence Paris and a large part of France is supplied.

In 1758 an army of 14,000 English, under the Duke of Marlborough, landed here, but after fruitlessly summoning St. Malo, which was found too strong to be taken by assault, they re-embarked, having burned a few small vessels, and, as Walpole said, "The French learned that they were not to be conquered by every Duke of Marlborough."

28 St. Malo — (Inns: H. de France very fair; Table d'hôte at 5, 2 fr. 50 cent. H. de la Paix) a fortified sea port town — population 9981 — may be styled a little French Cadiz from its position on a rocky island (l'Ile d'Aron) communicating with the mainland by a long causeway called Le Sillon; the port formed by the mouth of the river Rance being separated from the open sea by the island and this causeway. The town fills the island completely, so that its picturesque walls and flanking towers, surmounted by a deep cornice of machicoulis, rise at once from the water's edge, washed by the waves, and the houses and buildings squeezed closely together, having no room for lateral extension, rise to the height of five or six stories above its narrow and filthy lanes.

The tides rise here higher than at any other point in the channel, viz. to an elevation of 45 ft. above low water mark, and the harbour which is protected by a stout pier is drained perfectly dry at ebb, so that carriages and foot passengers cross it to go to the populous suburb St. Servan (9984 inhab.) in places covered an hour or two before with 4 fathoms of water. But a solid wall of granite has been recently thrown across from St. Servan, with lock gates in the centre wide enough to admit steamers and frigates, so as to retain the tide, and form a floating dock. This will open a second approach from the Rennes road to St. Malo, across a bridge to be thrown over the lock gates. A sort of tête du pont is in construction to defend it.

The harbour is lined with a broad quay running just under the town walls, and here the steamers moor when the tide permits them to enter. The Town walls afford an almost uninterrupted walk around the island, and the circuit may be made in ¾ of an hour. The view out to sea is varied by the little archipelago of islands, white, angular, bare rocks which raise their bristling heads around the roads: the larger ones crowned with forts and batteries. That called La Conchée is occupied by a strong citadel built by Vauban; and Cisambre, 6 m. off, is also strongly fortified. The smaller isles and the sunken rocks attached to them render the access to the port difficult.

The public buildings are of no interest: on the side of the town, nearest the Sillon and separated from it by a bridge, is the old castle, which, together with a large part of the fortifications, may have been constructed in the 16th century by Anne of Brittany, who placed over one of the towers this inscription. "Qui qu' en grogne, ainsi sera, c'est mon plaisir." The Church, very capacious and much modernized, has a choir something like that of Dol, and a new gaudy Gothic altar from Paris, with several marble statues worth notice.

The sabbath is more strictly observed by the Malouins, and indeed in Brittany generally, than in most other parts of France.

English service is performed here on Sunday, — but there is no chapel.

The statue opposite the Hotel de Ville is that of Dugay Trouin a native of St. Malo (born 1673), and a naval hero of whom the French are very proud "parcequ' il a chassé les Anglais sur toutes les mers."

The illustrious Chateaubriant first drew breath in the Rue des Juifs, and the Abbè de la Mennais, author of Paroles d'un Croyant, was also born here.

On the sea shore by the side of the Sillon, just beyond the castle, on the rt. of the road from Dol, are Sea baths and a Subscription Reading room. There is a large expanse of sand extending at low water as far as a little rocky island in front, well adapted for bathing, but unprovided with machines.

St. Malo flourished during the war, when it was styled the "Ville de Corsaires" fitting out privateers to prey on the commercial ships of England; many large fortunes were then made.

The best view to be obtained of St. Malo is from the half ruined Fort de la Cité (?) situated on the promontory a little to the W. of St. Servan, reached by the first turning on the rt. after you enter that suburb from St. Malo. Hence from a considerable elevation, you look down upon the town, upon the singular inlets of the sea branching out into the land which form the harbour, and on the archipelago of little islands grouped around its entrance. Among them the islet of Grand Bay situated to S. W. of the town, chosen by Châteaubriant for his last resting place, and bestowed upon him by the municipality of his native town, is conspicuous. His fellow-citizens have erected a tomb on it to contain his remains. Immediately beneath the spectator on his l. rises the tower of the Solidor, a feudal fort 60 ft. high, with flanking towers at its angles approached by a draw bridge. It is now a prison.

Diligences daily to Rennes (Route 41), and Paris (Route 35), to Brest (Route 36), to Dinant (Route 41), to Dol and Caen. (Route 27 and 31.)

Steamers. There cannot be a more delightful excursion than that by the river Rance from St. Malo to Dinant. A small steamer ascends and returns with the tide daily. (Route 41.)

Steamers twice a week to and from Jersey, where they correspond with the boats to Southampton.

ROUTE 29.

Caen to Tours by Falaise, Alençon and Le Mans.

232 kilom = 143½ Eng. m.

A daily communication is kept up by diligences, but with interruptions, and the traveller is compelled to wait 3 or 4 hours at a time for the coach which is to carry him on. A separate conveyance runs from Caen to Falaise, and back daily. About 7 m. from Caen, and 2 or 3 to the right of the road, lies Fontenay le Marmion, cradle of the family of Marmion.

21 Langannerie. The country for the first 2 stages is bare, open, and monotonous, until the castle of Falaise is perceived on the rt. rising out of a picturesque valley.

6 m. short of Falaise, and nearly 2 to the l. of the road, lie the rocks of St. Quentin sometimes called Brêche du Diable, a rocky gorge bounded by precipices, pinnacles, &c. It is compared by Mr. Trollope with Cheddar cliffs, only on a much smaller scale.

14 Falaise. — Inn, H. de France C. This ancient town of 9580 inhabitants occupies the summit of a lofty platform, bordering on a rocky precipice, or Falaise, whence its name. One very populous suburb has extended into the narrow ravine below this precipice; and another, situated at the distance of 1 m. to the E., called Guibray, now rivals the town itself in size and population, and is distinguished for its fairs established by William the Conqueror, held in August. Falaise is a dull lifeless town, at present, having only one object of interest to the passing traveller — the Castle, one of the few real Norman fortresses remaining in France, the ancient seat of the Dukes of Normandy, and the birthplace of William the Conqueror. It is a grand and picturesque ruin, occupying a commanding position at the extremity of the town, where the platform is cut into a narrow promontory by gullies which isolate it on 3 sides, rendering it a place of great strength, until the invention of gunpowder. To this it was indebted for the nine sieges which it had to endure. The approach to it is behind the modern Hôtel de Ville: within the exterior court is a college or grammar school. A grassy terrace walk along the ramparts, shaded with trees, leads to the Donjon Keep, an oblong square, whose walls, supported by high and massy buttresses, rise abruptly from the edge of the precipitous rocks de Norrou. It is now a mere shell partly filled with rubbish; its walls show traces of herring-bone masonry, and retain several-round headed windows, of 2 lights supported on short pillars, and having capitals carved with Runic knots. In one corner a little cell is shown in which, according to the tradition, the Conqueror was born. From those windows and ruined walls you look down into the Val d' Ante, so called from the small stream which runs through it, crowded with mills, and tanneries. It was while gazing upon this scene according to the tradition, that Duke Robert the father of the Conqueror, (like David of old), first espied Arlotte, the tanner's fair daughter, and became at once so smitten with her charms, that he made her his mistress, and continued faithful to her until death.

The keep is surpassed in elevation by Talbot's tower, a cylinder of beautifully smooth, and perfect masonry, rising beside it to a height of more than 100 ft., crowned with a rim of broken machicoulis. Its walls 15 ft. thick enclose a winding stair leading to the top, and a well opening into each of the 5 vaulted stories. The chapel is converted into a powder magazine. This tower is supposed to have been built by "Valiant Talbot" who was lord warden of the "Marche Normande," after the capture of Falaise by Henry V., between 1418 and 1450. Henry assaulted the castle from the top of the still loftier cliff Mont Mirat, on the opposite side of the ravine, where traces of his entrenchments still remain: the siege lasted more than 4 months. On the other side of the castle is a relic of another siege, viz. the breach in the wall by which Henri IV. carried the fortress by assault, after 7 days of cannonade, in 1589.

The churches are not remarkable. A considerable portion of the old town walls remain running round the edge of the ravines, through which the stranger may ramble agreeably, either upwards into the suburb of Val d' Ante, the birthplace of the Conqueror's mother, below the castle keep, or issuing out of the picturesque "Porte des Cordeliers," the only gate remaining perfect, he may follow the direction of the Ante downwards through shady lanes and re-enter the town by the dismantled Porte St. Laurent.

There are several cotton mills in the vicinity, and the weaving of night-caps occupies a considerable number of hands.

22 Argentan.—Inn, Trois Maures (?). A town of 6147 inhabitants, on the Orne surrounded by ramparts.

23 Seéz (in Route 21).

21 Alençon (in Route 35).

14 La Hutte.

9 Beaumont sur Sarthe.

15 La Bazoge.

12 Mans (in Route 46).

21 Ecommoy.—Inn: Poste.

19 Chateau du Loir.—Inn: Poste. The Castle, after which this village is named, is gone, it was built 1080 by Robert Eveille-chien Duc d' Anjou. The cliffs near this are hollowed into caves serving partly for houses to more than 100 poor families, partly as cellars for the richer.

20 La Roue in Touraine.

21 Tours (in Route 53).

ROUTE 31.

CAEN TO RENNES BY VIRE, MORTAIN AND FOUGÈRES.

171 kilom. = 106 Eng. m.

2 Diligences daily.

The road conducts through some of the most pleasing scenery in Normandy; at first it ascends the valley of the Odon, in which lies 13 Mondrainville. We now enter the bocage of Normandy, a pleasing wooded district, situated about the source of the Orne, Odon, and Vire.

12 Villars bocage; here is an hospice founded 1366, by Jeanne Bacon, of Mollay.

14 Ménil au Zouf.

19 Vire—(Inn: Cheval Blanc, not good), a most picturesque antique town, (population 8,000,) the capital of the Bocage, romantically situated on a lofty eminence, bordered by deep ravines. A Norman Castle occupies the extreme point of the promontory, naturally inaccessible on 3 sides owing to the precipices which surround it; and on the fourth originally separated from the town by a deep ditch. It is now reduced to the fragment of the tall keep, a construction of the 11th century, having been dismantled 1630, by order of Richelieu, but its ruins are carefully preserved, and surrounded by a charming promenade, planted with trees, extending over the site of the castle courts, and forming one of the chief attractions at Vire. From its elevation it commands a view of the country around, and especially of the two vallies beneath it called par excellence Les Vaux de Vire, whence comes the word Vaudeville originally applied to the merry and humerous drinking songs composed among these vallies by one Oliver Basselin. He was a native of Vire, and owner of a fulling mill, which still remains at no great distance from the town. He flourished in the 15th century, and is reported to have been present at the battle of Formigny (p. 80.). His chansons, chiefly in praise of good wine and his native province, soon became so popular over France, that their name was transferred to those truly national dramas peculiar to the French stage, in which the plot or story is carried through chiefly by songs.

In the narrow and steep streets of Vire may be found many specimens of ancient domestic architecture, well adapted for the artist's sketch book: the Church of Nôtre Dame also is a fine building, but the chief boast of Vire are the walks in and about it. Besides the promenade above mentioned, particularly agreeable are the walks, adjoining the fish ponds, famed for their huge tame carp which come eagerly to be fed by the stranger's hand. The terraced paths are carried most agreeably up the hill side amidst thickets and plantations, commanding at intervals very pleasing views.

But almost all the vallies in the neighbourhood, generally shut in by craggy heights, and copse-covered slopes, deserve to be explored. They abound in mills of paper and cloth, in which the cloathing for the French army is made. This gives employment to half the inhabitants of Vire. On the 10th August, the "Fête des drapiers" is celebrated here, and more than 10,000 persons assemble under the apple trees which are illuminated at night for the occasion.

Vire has a gastronomic celebrity for chitterlings (andouilles), and for pastry.

10 m. S. E. of Vire is Tinchebray, where Robert of Normandy succumbed in battle to his younger brother Henry, 1106. This victory secured a throne to the one prince, and a prison for life to the other.

13 Sourdeval.

10 Mortain. There is but one poor inn, opposite the church, which, however, furnishes a good dinner and clean bed.

Mortain, a decayed and lifeless town, occupies a position nearly resembling that of Vire, and at least equally romantic. Mr. Knight says, "the leading features of both places are the same, but the scenery of Mortain is more beautiful. The vallies are narrower, the steeps more rocky and better wooded; the river at the bottom is more considerable, and a wide extent of distant Campagna is seen through the jaws of the ravine. The whole scene put me in mind of Italy, and of Tivoli, and the cascades which we heard from above and visited afterwards helped to keep up the resemblance."

"You descend to the side of the old Castle, but when you arrive there you find it a most suitable spot for an eagle's nest. A jutting cliff, only connected to the height by a narrow ledge of rock, afforded just space enough for a feudal fortress. The strength of this fortress made it once a place of importance. Here dwelt the brothers and the sons of kings of England." The whole of this venerable structure has recently been levelled with the dust, and in its place now rises the staring modern prefecture.

The Collegiate Church has been groundlessly pronounced to be a work of the year 1082, when a church is known to have been founded here. But the only fragment remaining of that epoch is a circular doorway leading into the nave, on the S. side, ornamented with zigzags and saw-tooth ornaments, the rest is of the pure and unmixed early pointed style of the 13th century, and the clumsy junction of the new wall around the old circular portal is very apparent. The arches of the nave rest on thick short pillars; those of the choir are narrower.

About a mile out of the town, seated in a secluded valley, is the Abbeye Blanche, founded 1105. The Church is in the Transition style, round-headed windows, alternating with pointed. An early pointed cloister also remains tolerably perfect, but the abbey is now a manufactory, and it is quite uncertain how long it will escape destruction.

The Cascades of Mortain are the finest; and indeed almost the only ones in Normandy.

About 8 m. from Mortain are the ruins of the Abbey of Savigny, b. 1173, in the Transition style, but partaking more of the round than pointed character.

15 St. Hilaire du Harcouet is the entrepôt for the agricultural and manufacturing produce of a large part of Brittany: — its markets are greatly frequented. The frontier of Brittany is crossed about 4 m. to the N. of 11 Souvigné.

16 Fougères. Inns: Poste (?); St. Jacques. This town was once a frontier fortress; — anciently the key of Brittany on the side of Normandy; it has now a modern aspect, in consequence of destructive conflagrations, which reduced it to ashes, in the last century.

The huge Castle, constructed in the latter end of the 12th century, still remains the most prominent object, surrounded by battlements, and surmounted by two towers, but ruined.

20 St. Aubin du Cormier; near this La Tremouille gained a decisive victory, in 1488, over Francis II. Duke of Brittany, the Duke of Orleans, afterwards Louis XII., and others who had leagued against the Crown,

10 Liffré

18 Rennes, (in Route 35.)

ROUTE 32.

BAYEUX TO ST. LO AND AVRANCHES.

90 kilom. = 55¾ Eng. m.

Diligences daily.

13 Vaubadon.

The road traverses a portion of the extensive forest of Cerisy. The Abbey of Cerisy, one of the most considerable in Normandy in olden time, lies on the rt. of the road. The church still exists, an early Norman building of the same plain character as St. Stephens at Caen (p. 73.) It was founded 1030, by Robert, Duke of Normandy, and completed by his son, William the Conqueror.

21 St Lo — Inn: Grand Soleil best, but far from good, and very dirty.

This town, named from St. Lo, or Laudus, who lived in the 6th century, and came from this part of Normandy, is picturesquely situated, and its Cathedral, standing prominently on the brow of the hill, has an imposing appearance, with its double towers and spires, but as a building it is inferior to those of Bayeux or Coutances. The W. end is florid, of the 15th century; it has three fine porches, but the upper part is defective and irregular; and, as well as the choir, exhibits marks of slovenliness in its builder. The nave is earlier and better, in the pointed style of the 12th century. Outside the Church, in the S. W. angle, is a fine stone pulpit, with a pyramidal canopy over it. Charlemagne founded here, in the 9th century, the once celebrated Abbey of St. Croix; but this building was swept away at the invasion of the Northmen, and the present Eglise de St. Croix, a very curious edifice in the early Norman style, does not appear older than the 11th century. The nave arches rest on pillars, and the S. side is plainer, and apparently older than the N. Over the round-headed doorway at the W. end is a bas-relief representing St. Lo restoring sight to a blind woman. The adjoining conventual buildings are of late dates; they are now converted into a Stud (haras), for improving the breed of horses.

St. Lo is chef lieu of the Department of La Manche, and numbers 8,941 inhabitants; it has a manufacture of fine cloth, but possesses no great attraction to the stranger. There is a small terraced platform to the W. of the cathedral, called Petite Place, which commands a view of the Vale of the Vire.

Diligences go twice a day to Coutances (Rte. 27.), passing within a short distance of Hauteville, the humble village which sent forth the bold Baron Tancred and his six sons to conquer Sicily and Apulia. On the way from St. Lo to Vire (Rte. 31.) lies the town of Torigny. The building now used as an Hôtel de Ville is one wing of the Château of the family of Matignon, Counts of Torigni, one of whom, by marriage with Louisa Grimaldi, became Prince of Monaco. In 1793 the building was turned into a prison, and the park, terraces, and gardens sold piecemeal.

The Church of St. Laurent is early Norman, and that of Nôtre Dame retains traces of the same style.

The road from St. Lo to Avranches lies through 17 Villebaudon. The little humble village, Percy, was the cradle of the ancestors of the house of Northumberland.

17 Villedieu les Poêles derives the adjunct to its name from the number of coppersmiths, who drive a thriving trade in pots, pans, and other articles, which the French call dinanderies and quincailleries. These artificers were originally settled here by the Knights Templars, who employed them in making decorations for churches. Here are many furnaces for melting the copper, and mills for rolling it into sheets.

22 Avranches (Rte. 27.).

SECTION II.

BRITTANY.

Introductory Information.

1. Character of the Country. 2. People. 3. Language. 4. Celtic Remains classified. 5. Superstition. 6. Churches, Carvings, Bone-houses, Kersanton Stone. 7. Connection with England. 8. Chouannerie. 9. Books to consult. 10. Tour of Brittany. 11. Accommodation for Travellers.

ROUTE		PAGE
35	Paris to Rennes, by Versailles, Dreux, Verneuil, Alençon, and Laval (Railroads to Versailles) . . .	109
36	Rennes to Brest . .	118
38	St. Brieuc to Brest, by Paimpol, Lannion, Morlaix, St. Pol de Leon . . .	127
41	St. Malo to Nantes by Dinan, Rennes, and Châteaubriand	132
42	Morlaix to Nantes, by Huelgoat, Carhaix, Pontivy, and Josselin	136
44	Brest to Nantes, by Quimper, Lorient, Auray, the Druidical remains of Carnac, Vannes, and Roche Bernard	139
45	Rennes to Vannes, by Ploermel. — Excursion to Carnac	149
46	Paris to Nantes, by Chartres, Le Mans, and Angers .	150

1. There can scarcely be a more abrupt contrast to the smiling land of Normandy than that presented by the neighbouring province of sombre, poverty-stricken Brittany. Here we find an atmosphere of mist and moisture; and a soil based on hard granite, best fitted for heath, furze, and broom, the very broom (genet) which supplied our first Plantagenet with his crest and name. In many points the country bears a strong resemblance to Scotland; the same wide, barren moors, the same deep and picturesque wooded dells, and storm-beaten coasts. Here, however, are no grand lofty mountain chains like the Grampians: the highest ridges of the Menez-Arrés hills, the backbone of the peninsula of Brittany, rarely surpass 1200 ft. above the sea level.

2. In civilisation it is behind almost every other part of France: its inhabitants are of Celtic origin, speaking a language of their own, allied to, and, indeed, essentially the same as the Welsh and Cornish, so that Breton sailors landing on our coasts can make themselves understood by the Welsh there. It is exclusively spoken to the W. of a line drawn from the point of Finisterre through Chatelaudran and Pontivy; the "Vrai Bretagne Brettonnante," as Froissart calls it, to distinguish it from "La Bretagne Douce," where French is spoken. One of the principal objects of interest and study for the stranger in Brittany is its inhabitants, who have been kept distinct from the rest of France by position as well as difference of language.

The peasantry are almost as wild as their country, excessively quaint in their costume, broad-brimmed hats, and flowing hair, in some districts wearing trunk hose (bragons bras = breeks) of the 16th century; in others wrapped up in goat-skins, like Robinson Crusoe, a costume which they retain as it was handed down from their ancestors. They are usually mean and small in their persons; coarse-featured in face; squalidly filthy in their habitations; rude and unskilful in their agriculture. They are almost unchanged in their manners, customs, and habits: modern innovation has not entirely rubbed off the rust of long-continued habit; old legends and superstitions still retain their hold on the popular mind. In no part of France are the people, both of upper and lower orders, more observant of their religious duties, of festivals, fasts, &c.; nowhere are the churches so thronged. They present a curious picture of a primitive state of society; and if a century behind their neighbours in what is called improvements, they are at least not corrupted by revolutions and commotions.

"There is much picturesque beauty in Brittany, though of a character not so imposing at first sight as that of countries moulded on a grander scale. Scenery of great and winning loveliness is to be found on the banks of the Trieux, the Lannion, the Chateaulin, and the Rance, and in many other secluded and scarcely accessible valleys, where the 'broomie kno,' the wooded dell, and the rocky cliff alternately border the brawling mountain torrent, as it flashes along its stony bed, or is pent up in the still pool of an old water mill, which looks as if it had stood untouched (as it has perhaps) from the time of the 'good Duchess Anne.' The quaint and antique aspect of the buildings adds much to the picturesque character of the country. Some, as in Dinan, Morlaix, Quimper, &c., are framed of timber, with projecting stories resting on grotesquely carved brackets. But generally the houses both in the towns and villages are of grey granite, with massive round or ogee arched imposts to the doors and windows, often enriched with gothic mouldings; and presenting, from the peculiar colour and grain of the stone, an appearance of antiquity even in buildings recently erected. The churches again are features of great interest and beauty scattered profusely over the country, and many a ruined castle or tower, or dilapidated "manoir" with its old avenue, huge granite portals, round turrets, and 'extinguisher' roofs, recals the days of the Breton chivalry. Add to these characteristic features, that the country is usually very intricate and thickly wooded, the enclosures being small and surrounded by high earthen banks, upon which, from six to ten feet above the level of the road or field, grows a close phalanx of timber trees, oak, elm, or ash, gnarled and pollarded into grotesque forms, and intercepting all view, so as to give rise to constant excitement, as the scene changes almost at every step that the traveller advances." — G. P. S.

4. Of Ancient Monuments of different ages there is no lack in Brittany, and above all, of Celtic Remains; those extraordinary masses of rude unhewn stones whose objects, age, and uses have never been satisfactorily accounted for, but which are supposed to have been in some way connected with the religion of the Druids, and their number would prove this country to have been the chief seat of that mysterious worship. In Great Britain we possess a few, and, above all, we have in Stonehenge a more stupendous monument than any elsewhere; but in Brittany the number is enormous; almost every wild heath possesses one or more. They are most numerous, however, on the storm-beaten promontories and islands of the W. coast; especially in the Morbihan, which includes the wondrous stony array of Carnac and the monstrous granitic obelisks of Lokmariaker, larger than any single blocks at Stonehenge, but now fractured.

These rude Remains are of several different kinds, distinguished by the following names: —

a. Menhir (literally long stone: Ir-min-Sul; long stone of the sun) is a monolith in the form of a rude obelisk set upright on one end, whose height much exceeds its breadth. There is a menhir near Dol which rises 30 ft. above the ground, but the largest specimen of this class known is at Plouarzel, near Brest; it exceeds 42 ft. in height. Those at Lokmariaker, now laid prostrate and broken by violence, were more than 60 ft. high, and were thick in proportion.

b. Peulven (pillar of stone), an upright stone of inferior height to the mehir; the single stones at Carnac are generally of this class.

c Dolmen (from "taal," table, and "maen" or men, stone), in England commonly called Cromlech, is an arrangement of rude blocks, by which one or more upright stones are made to support a horizontal block or slab. Sometimes they nearly resemble a table; the upright stones serving merely as props or legs, and are called in French pierres levées, or pierres couvertes; at others the supporting stones are wide slabs, so arranged as to fit close to one another, and so lofty as to allow a man to walk upright beneath the horizontal roof-stone which they support. Kils Coity House in Kent is an instance of this kind, and there are others in Cornwall, but they are far inferior in size to those of Brittany, which are often 60 or 80 ft. long. The French sometimes call them "allées couvertes."

d. Kistvaen is similar to the Dolmen, inasmuch as it consists of two rows of upright stones supporting flat blocks; but the stones are smaller, and the whole structure lower and longer; it appears to correspond with the "Hunnengräber" of North Germany. The most remarkable example is on the island Gavre Innis near Lokmariaker.

e. Galgal is a tumulus, barrow, or cairn; the largest known is the Butte de Tumiac on the shore of the sea of Morbihan.

These Celtic remains are not confined to Brittany, though most numerous there; they occur almost invariably on some flat open plain at a distance from the hills, in situations corresponding with Salisbury Plain and Dartmoor in England. Brittany appears, like our Mona, to have been the sacred land of the Gauls, the centre of their worship, to which probably the various nations and tribes repaired on pilgrimage at stated times to pay their devotions.

Of the particular destination or object of these rude elevations in general, or of the individual uses of the different classes enumerated above, no satisfactory explanation has been offered. The accumulated ranges, the long avenues of stones of Carnac and Erdevan, amounting to thousands in number, may have stood in the place of temples where rites of initiation and purification, similar to the Grecian mysteries, may have been performed. The upright solitary menhir may have been a symbol of some individual deity, as the sun; the dolmen may have served as an altar or shrine, and the galgal and kistvaen were probably monumental. Equally unexplained are the mechanical means by which a rude people contrived to transport, and to elevate one above another, such huge masses.

5. Their mysterious influence is not yet, by any means, effaced from the mind of the lower orders in Brittany. The first teachers of Christianity in this region found this attachment to superstition so strong, that, after in vain attempting to eradicate it, by overthrowing and destroying these rude stones, they altered their plan to that of engrafting, to a certain extent, their own faith upon the old idolatrous worship of stones and fountains, converting the dolmen into a chapel, and making the menhir serve as a pedestal to a crucifix, which it commonly does even to the present day.

The influence of paganism lingered long in these remote wilds, attached as it was to visible objects: indeed, the inhabitants of Ouessant are said to have been idolaters until within 150 years.

Hence has arisen a strange jumble of Paganism and Romanism; thus pilgrimages are made to fountains by those who desire to be relieved from some malady, by pouring the holy water over the affected part: and visits are paid in the depth of night to some solitary menhir by the barren woman, who hopes to become fruitful by rubbing her bosom against the hard stone. Some of these inanimate objects also are supposed to possess virtue to cure the diseases of cattle. Heathen divinities were replaced by saints, of which the number in Brittany exceeds that of any other part of Romanist Europe, most of them are peculiar to the country, their names being unknown elsewhere, and their canonisation conferred rather by the popular voice than with the authority of the Pope. Almost every church has its own strange legend, and on its saint's day a pilgrimage or Pardon is celebrated, when indulgence for past sins is obtained, and the penitent pilgrims are no sooner shrived than they begin to run up a fresh score at the riotous festivities which follow these assemblies. These pardons, or village festivals, which are nearly equivalent to the German Kirchweih, the Flemish kirmes, and the English wake, deserve the attention of strangers, from the illustrations they afford of Breton life, manners, and costume.

6. In Ecclesiastical Monuments Brittany is not so well furnished as Normandy, but the architecture is of a different style, chiefly the florid or flamboyant Gothic, and of a much later period: indeed, even in architecture, Brittany seems to have been behind the rest of the world, and the fashions of building only reached it when superseded in other parts. There are, indeed, some peculiarities in "the Breton style," which render it well worthy the attention of architects. In elaborateness and profuseness of ornament, in the minuteness and delicacy of carving, especially of the foliage, (for the figures are inferior,) there are some churches in Brittany which yield to few in any part of Europe. As instances may be mentioned those of Folgoat near Brest, St. Pol de Léon, which is remarkable for its exquisite spire, Théogonec near Morlaix, St. Herbot, near Poulahouan, and the cathedral of Nantes.

The department of Finisterre is the quarter in which churches more especially abound, and it is quite as profusely supplied as Lincolnshire, and many of the village churches are of unusual size and richness.

Several of the churches, even in remote situations, as at St. Herbot, are decorated internally with carvings in wood and stone; roodlofts still exist at Folgoat, &c., though scarcely found elsewhere on the continent: painted glass is also by no means uncommon. These very gorgeous churches of Brittany were erected principally from the end of the 14th to the beginning of the 16th century.

Formerly the church-yards and even roadsides were adorned with Crucifixes of most elaborate execution, and comprising a multitude of figures; "most of them suffered by the Revolution, but many exquisite examples remain almost as perfect as those of Plougastel near Brest, St. Théogonec, &c., and hardly a single point of intersection of two roads can be passed which is not marked by a more or less mutilated cross, oftentimes restored by the piety of the present generation." — G. P. S.

The Bone-house or Reliquaire will be constantly found in the Breton churchyards, and illustrates a curious custom. To allow "the rude forefathers of the hamlet" to repose quietly in the grave is opposed to the ideas of piety and affection in these rude people: after a certain number of years the survivors are required to show their remembrance and respect for their parents and relations by removing the sculls and bones from the coffin and placing them in the Ossuary, — where the former are arranged on shelves, open to the view of all, each with the name or initials in black paint written across the fleshless brow. There is a curious Reliquaire in St. Herbot.

One cause of the profuse decoration of these churches, and of their excellent preservation, may be referred to the materials employed — a green stone, peculiar to Brittany, called Kersanton (St. Anthony's house), remarkable for the facility with which it is worked, and its tenacity in withstanding the weather. Its composition is not exactly understood, but it is supposed by mineralogists to consist of mica and amphibole, in particles minutely disseminated. It is found only in two localities, on the W. of the Roads of Brest, near the escarped rocks of Quelern, between the river of Faou and that of Landerneau. It is regarded as volcanic, both from its composition and because the rocks adjacent to it show marks of dislocation, caused apparently by its intrusion. The weather has scarce any destructive effect on it, even after the lapse of ages; and its peculiarly bright green colour gives to a portal carved out of it the appearance of being cast in bronze.

Of churches in the Romanesque or Norman style the examples are few; among them are the church of Dinan and the chapel of Lanleff, which, after all the disputes of learned antiquaries, respecting its origin and great age, is probably merely an equivalent to the round churches of England.

The cathedral of Dol nearly corresponds in style to the Early English; and the tradition of the country attributes it and some of the later churches to English architects. This is not surprising considering the long and early connection between Great Britain and Little Britain, to the S. of the Channel: Armorica, as it was styled, which the careful researches of historians and philologists have proved to have been colonised by natives of Britain after the sixth century, partly during the Roman dominion, partly after the invasion of the Saxons. From Brittany, if we believe the native traditions, we derive our most popular romances, our nursery and fairy tales. Arthur here held his court with the Knights of the Round Table; and the cradle of Merlin was on the Ile de Sein, a low sand bank in that stormy sea La Baie de Trepassés.

7. Many of the names of places closely resemble those of Wales and Cornwall. Brittany also has its Cournouaille, equally celebrated with our own for wrestling matches, still held annually, at which the true Cornish hug is said to be given; and for wreckers, whose infamous trade is promoted by the ever raging sea and iron-bound coast. The Droit de Bris, right of "jetsam and flotsam," is, however, nearly abolished in France as in England; and the time is past when a race or whirlpool was as productive to a landlord as a mine or fishery.

English armies have fought and bled on this soil of Brittany; and the chivalric heroes of our history, Edward III., Chandos, Sir Walter Manny, were opposed to no unworthy antagonists in the Dugueselins and Clissons. In the castle of Elven, Henry of Richmond passed 15 years of his youth, though a prisoner, yet protected from the vengeance of the Yorkists.

A perusal of Froissart will be a good preparation for a visit to Brittany.

8. Brittany, old-fashioned in all things, is still the stronghold of that old-fashioned virtue, loyalty to its sovereign; and, besides sharing in the horrors and glory of the war in support of the legitimate monarch, which had its rise in La Vendée, was the seat of a hard-fought contest of its own, called La Chouannerie, from the cry "chou, chou," in imitation of the night owl, the signal for onset among the Breton peasantry, originally employed as a sign by smugglers, in their nocturnal expeditions. Memorials or recollections of these struggles will be encountered by the traveller at every step.

9. Those who desire full information respecting the antiquities, customs, legends, and poetry of the Bretons should read Souvestre's excellent work, "Les Derniers Bretons," and Freminville's "Finisterre and Morbihan." For its churches and Druidic remains consult Merimée, "Sur les Monumens de l'Ouest de la France"; for its history, Daru: — Miss Costello's "Bocages and Vines," Mrs. Trollope's "Brittany," are interesting English works; and Mrs. Stoddart's "Tour in Brittany," will repay the perusal.

10. Skeleton Tour of Brittany.

Brittany is accessible to travellers from England, by steamers either direct from Southampton to St. Malo, a very good starting point, or from Southampton to Havre, and thence by land through Normandy, or by steamer to Morlaix.

The traveller coming from Paris may commence his tour at Rennes, but the capital of Bretagne does not possess any of the characteristic features of the province.

Dol.
St. Malo.
Dinan.
St. Brieuc.
Lanleff.
Paimpol.
Treguier.
Morlaix.
St. Pol de Leon.
Folgoat.
Brest dock-yard.
Pointe St. Matthieu.
Châteaulin (by water).
Carhaix.
Folgoat.
St. Herbot.
Châteaulin.
Quimper.
Quimperlé.
Auray.
Carnac and Lokmariaker.
[Peninsula of Rhuys.]
Vannes.
Roche Bernard.
Nantes.

11. Accommodation for travellers, even in the large towns, is inferior to that of the rest of France; while in spots at all remote from the high road the filth is most disgusting, the fare miserable.

ROUTE 35.

PARIS TO RENNES BY VERSAILLES, VERNEUIL, DREUX, ALENÇON, AND LAVAL.

355 kilom. = 220 Eng. miles.

The Brest malleposte goes daily (3 places) in 26 hours.

From Paris to Versailles there are 2 railroads, one on the l. the other on the rt. bank of the Seine.

a. Chemin de fer, Rive Gauche, 16¾ kilom. = 11¼ Eng. m. Terminus outside the Barrière du Maine at Paris. Trains go every half hour. Those starting at the hour are stopping trains, those at the ½ hour quick or direct. Time employed 20 to 25 minutes; with stopping train 35 minutes.

Before issuing beyond the line of the new fortifications you see on the rt. Grenelle and Vaugirard; now forming a town of about 6000 inhabitants, most of the houses being Cabarets, the resort of the working classes on Sundays and fête days, and on the l. Montrouge, where are numerous quarries of building stone.

Beyond the Lines the railway passes between the detached forts of Vanvres and Issy, a village whose name is fancifully derived from a temple of Isis! In the Seminaire, Fénelon was interrogated by a conclave of bishops, styled the Conference of Issy, on certain points of doctrine, and here the Cardinal Fleury lived long in retirement, and died 1745.

Rt. Vanvres. The Château, formerly the property of the Condés, built here by Mansard for the Duc de Bourbon, now belongs to the College Louis le Grand.

5 Clamart (stat.) The village, half hid among the trees, on the l. was the retreat of La Fontaine, of the Abbé Delille, who wrote here his poem L' Imagination, and of Condorcet.

Emerging from a deep cutting we traverse on a lofty viaduct (Pont du Val) of 2 rows of arches, one above the other, 108 ft. high and 145 ft. long, the bosky dell of Val Fleury, commanding a pretty view of the château of Meudon on the l., while the Seine is perceived on the rt.

2 Meudon (stat.) A little on the l. lies the bourg of 3000 inhabitants. Rabelais was curé of Meudon, or rather the income of the living was bestowed on him by Cardinal du Balley, for it is believed he never was in orders, and he certainly never performed the duties of a priest.

The Château, now belonging to the Crown, approached by a fine avenue of 4 rows of lime trees, was built by the 2nd dauphin, father of Louis XV. Louis XIV. said when he saw it, "Ceci ressemble à la maison d'un riche financier plutôt qu'à celle d'un grand prince," and refused to enter it. It was fitted up for Marie Louise by Napoleon 1812. The best thing about it is its situation, its gardens laid out by Le Nôtre, but lately re-arranged on a more modern plan, and its terrace, which belonged to an older château constructed by Philibert Delorme for Henri de Guise, Cardinal of Lorraine, and belonged afterwards to the Minister Louvois. It was purchased by Louis XIV. for his son the Grand Dauphin, who died here, but it was pulled down in 1803 owing to its dilapidated condition. The view from the terrace is very fine. The late Duc d'Orleans had a breeding stud for race horses here.

The Forêt de Meudon is a favourite holiday resort of the Parisians. Near this the fatal accident occurred on this railway, when by the fracture of the axle of a locomotive, several of the foremost carriages of a long train were crushed, thrown upon the engine furnace, and set on fire, and more than 100 persons were burnt alive, together with the railway carriages in which they were locked up, in the space of about ¼ hour in May 1842. An expiatory chapel has been erected on the spot where this catastrophe occurred. Another cutting succeeds, and the railway passes under the Meudon avenue.

1 Bellevue (stat.), was named from a villa built in a few months to please Madame de Pompadour, but pulled to pieces during the Revolution.

Rt. Sèvres (stat.) contiguous to Bellevue, is described farther on (p. 112.) The high road, and the Chemin de fer, rive droite, now run parallel and within a musket shot of our line.

A deep cutting through part of the crown forests leads to 4 Chaville (stat.), so called from a village on the l.

1 Viroflay (stat.)

4 Versailles. (stat. in the Avenue de la Mairie.) See Galignani's Paris Guide.

---

b. Chemin de Fer, Rive Droite. Terminus in Paris, Rue St. Lazare 120, the same as the St. Germains and Rouen railways, and the three railways use the same line of rails as far as Clichy. Trains every half hour (stopping), and every hour direct, from 7½ A. M. to 10 P.M., 22¾ kilom. = 14 Eng. m., time in going 30 to 35 minutes.

After crossing the Seine by the Pont d'Asnières (stat.) beyond Clichy, this railway turns to the l. out of the St. Germains line to Courbevoie (stat.), whose large barrack, built by Louis XV., is seen on the l. and beyond it the Arc de l' Etoile. The avenue leading from it, after passing the Seine by the Pont de Neuilly, branches out into two roads leading to Rouen, the upper and the lower, both of which are crossed by the railway before reaching Puteaux (stat.) A fine view is obtained of Paris and the Seine from this part of the line, while skirting on the rt. the flanks of Mont Valerien (p. 29.), now converted into one of the citadels of Paris.

Suresnes (stat.)

St. Cloud (stat.)

The Royal Château built or altered by Mansard for the Duc d'Orleans, brother of Louis XIV., has been the scene of great events. Here the fatal Ordonnances of July 1830 were signed, which lost Charles X. the throne; here Napoleon, like Cromwell before him, laid the foundation of his power on the memorable 19 Brumaire (Nov. 11, 1799), by expelling with his armed grenadiers the council of five hundred from the Orangerie in which they held their sittings; — two of the most momentous of the Revolutions of France. It was a favourite residence of Marie Antoinette, of Buonaparte, and is now occupied every summer by the present royal family.

The interior is handsomely furnished, and contains some paintings chiefly of the modern French school, Gobelin tapestry, Sèvres vases, &c. The finest apartment is the Salon de Mars; the most interesting for its associations, the Orangerie already mentioned. Even more remarkable than the Château is the Parc de St. Cloud, laid out by Le Nôtre, always open to the public, and well worthy of a visit on account of the beautiful view which it commands over the winding Seine, and the country around Paris, for its artificial cascades, and its water works, which play the 1st and 3d Sunday of every month. The Grand Jet d'Eau rises from the centre of a circular basin, at the extremity of a long avenue to a height of 137 ft. and discharges 5000 gallons per minute. The copy of the beautiful circular temple at Athens, called the Lanthorn of Demosthenes, should not be passed unobserved. In this part a fair is held on the 7th September, and lasts 3 weeks, one of the most celebrated and frequented of all the fêtes near Paris.

The name St. Cloud is a contraction of St. Clodoald, grandson of Clovis, who escaped alive when his brothers were murdered by their uncle Clothaire, by hiding himself in a wood and living as a hermit. Here, in the Maison de Gondi, Henri III. was assassinated, by Jaques Clement 1589, while his army, united with that of Henri of Navarre, were encamped on these heights preparing to attack Paris. The father of Louis Philippe was born here.

The railway is carried under a part of the park of St. Cloud in a Tunnel more than 1650 feet long.

Sèvres (stat.) Both railways have stations here, but at some distance from the village, as well as at

Chaville (stat.)

Viroflay (stat.)

Rt. The small village of Montreuil is the birth-place of General Hoche, who commenced life as an under groom in the royal stables, and rose to be commander of the army of the Moselle.

Versailles. Terminus Rue Duplessis, Boulevard de la Reine.

---

c. The High road, Route Royale, quits Paris by the Barrière de Passy. The village of Passy was the residence of Benjamin Franklin 1788. He occupied the house No. 40. Rue Basse, previously Hôtel de Valentinois. The Abbé Raynal died here, 1796, and Bellini, the composer, 1834. The road runs along the rt. bank of the Seine through Auteuil, 2 miles further on, which was also the residence of many eminent men. The wise and good Chancellor d' Aguesseau lived and died here; an obelisk in the churchyard marks his grave. Boileau's house is still pointed out, Rue de Boileau, 18., and Molière composed here a great part of his works. Condorcet and Madame Helvetius had also houses here. The park and château de St. Cloud are conspicuous on the hill to the rt. The river Seine is crossed by the Pont de Sèvres, a short way before entering le Bourg de 13 Sèvres (population 4,000), situated on the l. bank of the river, 6 m. distant from Paris, between 2 hills, the hill of Meudon on the l. and that of St. Cloud on the rt., along whose slopes the two railways to Versailles are carried. Sèvres, like Faienza and Delft, gives its name to the china made in it, and for which it is principally known. The manufactory is in the large building on the l. of the road, erected 1755, when the works were transferred from Vincennes, and purchased by Louis XV. It is still the property of the crown, and employs 150 persons. Admission to see it is given by the directeur M. Brongniart, a distinguished mineralogist and geologist, to whose scientific researches the manufacture owes much of its present perfection. Besides the show-rooms filled with objects for sale, there is a very complete and curious Porcelain Museum here, consisting of clay, earthenware, and china of all countries and periods, from the oldest Greek and Etruscan vases down to the most recent productions of the nations of Europe and Asia, China, Japan, and the East Indies, and of many of the rude tribes of America. Here is a series of all the objects made in the establishment since its commencement, marking the change of fashion and forms; also the various materials, earths, calces, colouring matters used in the manufacture. The Kaolin, or white clay, comes from St. Yreix near Limoges. The paintings are very remarkable from the talents of the artists employed, (among whom Madame Jacotot and M. Constantin rank highest,) and the skill displayed in the burning of the colours gives an equal pre-eminence to Sèvres ware. Several pictures by ancient and modern masters have been copied in the size of the originals; some were painted on the china tablet in Italy and sent over to Sèvres to be burnt, and again returned thither to be retouched. The Sèvres manufacture is celebrated for its white unglazed ware, biscuit de Sèvres, the white glazed ware, the elegance of the shape, and the beauty of the painting.

The manufacture of painted glass, so erroneously supposed to be lost, has been revived and brought to considerable perfection within a few years; also the imitation of precious stones.

The park of St. Cloud (p. 111.) reaches as far as Sèvres; there are 2 entrances from the town.

The road continues between the 2 railways as far as Versailles, and enters that town by the Grand Avenue de Paris.

6 Versailles. — Inn: H. du Reservoir and H. de France.

Versailles is described in Galignani's "Paris Guide."

The road to Brest, in quitting Versailles, passes between the park wall and a large sheet of water, called Pièce des Suisses.

A little way on the rt. lies St. Cyr, converted by Napoleon into an Ecole Militaire, 1806, for 300 pupils — a destination which it still preserves, but it was originally founded by Louis XIV., at the suggestion of Madame de Maintenon, as a school for 250 young ladies of noble birth, and Mansard furnished the designs for it, 1686. Racine's tragedies of Esther and Athalie, written for the pupils of the establishment, were here first brought out, in the presence of the King and Madame de Maintenon. She retired hither after Louis's death, and dying here, 1719, was buried in the church. At the village of Trappes the road leaves, on the l., the route to Nantes (Route 46.), through a dull country to 19 Pontchartrain.

12 La Queue.

12 Houdan. (Inns: l'Ecu, le Cygne.) There is a handsome Gothic Church and an old Tower, part of the ancient fortifications, in this town of 2000 inhabitants.

7 Marolles.

The river Eure is crossed at Cherisy.

12 Dreux.—(Inn, H. du Paradis) (Durocassis), a town of 6249 inhabitants, on the Blaise, a tributary of the Eure. It was on the plain between the two rivers that the battle, known as la Journée de Dreux, one of the bloodiest in the French religious wars, was fought between the Roman Catholics, under the Duc de Guise, who was victorious, and the Huguenots, under the Prince de Condé, who was made prisoner, 1563. The Duc de Guise shared his couch the night after with his mortal enemy, and slept soundly by his side.

The hill which rises above the town is crowned by the ruins of the Castle of the Comtes de Dreux, which was captured with the town from the Duc de Guise by Henri IV.: the remains of the keep tower of brick, of a handsome Norman gateway, and of a Gothic chapel, built 1142, still exist. The space enclosed by the walls is planted and converted into a garden, in the midst of which rises a modern Chapel, in the form of a Greek temple surmounted by a cupola, erected by the present King when Duc d'Orleans, as a burial place for his family: — within it are interred the Duchesse de Penthièvre, and the Princesse Marie of Würtemberg, the accomplished daughter of the King, and the lamented Duke of Orleans, heir to the throne. The King has recently caused to be constructed a tall tower, which serves as a residence when he visits the spot: it has a subterranean communication with the chapel.

The Gothic parish church or cathedral not very large, nor of good design, and the Hôtel de Ville, a semi-Gothic building of the 16th century, containing a curious chimney piece, and a bell, cast in the reign of Charles IX., bearing a representation, in relief, of the procession of the Flambards, are said to merit notice.

Rotrou, the tragic poet, who preceded Corneille, and Philidor, the chess player, were born at Dreux.

There are numerous manufactures of coarse cloths, serges, &c. in the arrondissement of Dreux.

Diligences go hence to Chartres and Rouen daily.

11 m. N. E. of Dreux are the scanty remains of the Château d'Anet, built by the architect Philibert Delorme for Diana of Poitiers out of the funds furnished by the liberality of her royal lover Henri II., 1552. on the site of a castle which belonged to her husband Louis de Brézé, to which she retired to pass her widowhood. When she first became acquainted with the king she was 31, and he a youth of 13, yet she maintained her influence over him to the day of her death, in spite of the Queen, Catherine de Medicis, and he wore her colours — the widow's weeds, black and white — to the last, and her symbol, the crescent of Diana, is conspicuous in all his palaces. She was buried in the Chapel, which still remains surmounted by a cupola, but her monument was removed to Paris, 1793, when her body was torn from the grave, and lost.

The château was almost entirely pulled down at the Revolution, part of the façade was transported to Paris, where it has been re-erected at the Ecole des Beaux Arts. The ruins are pleasantly situated on the banks of the Eure. That stream traverses a little lower down the Plain of Ivry, the scene of one of the most decisive victories gained by Henri IV. over the armies of the Ligue, 1590, composed of French and Spaniards under Mayenne. Henri's words to his soldiers before the battle were, "Je veux vaincre ou mourir avec vous. Gardez bien vos rangs, ne perdez point de vue mon panache blanc, vous le trouverez toujours au chemin de l'honneur." The monumental obelisk erected on the spot to commemorate it was thrown down 1793, but restored by Napoleon. The ch. of St. Remè near Drenx is a fine example of the flamboyant style.

14 Nonancourt.

The house in which Henri IV. slept the night before the battle of Ivry is pointed out.

11 Tillières sur Avre.

10 Verneuil.—Inn, Poste; Cheval Blanc.

This interesting old town, of 4000 inhabitants, contains several remarkable specimens of Gothic architecture; — the finest being the Tour de la Madeleine, a magnificent work in the most gorgeous late Gothic style, surmounted by a stunted spire. Verneuil was once a place of strength; — under its walls, which partly remain, a fine specimen of fortification of the 12th century, was fought a bloody battle in 1424, between the French and English, which, after two days of hard and uncertain contest, terminated in favour of the Regent, Duke of Bedford, and was the last great victory obtained by him. The bravest leaders and most efficient troops who fought on the side of the French were the Scotch. Their commanders, the Earl of Douglas, who had been created Duke of Touraine, his son, the Earl of Buchan, and many other knights were slain. The English army was inferior in numbers to the enemy, yet it left 1600 dead on the field, while on the side of the French there fell 4000, including Scotch and Italian allies. As usual the English archers contributed mainly to the victory. Attached to the portion of the fortifications not yet removed, is a tall tower, 60 ft. high, on the margin of the Avre, called la Tour Grise.

The road by Argentan and Falaise branches off here. Route 29.

17 St. Maurice.

22 Mortagne. (Inn: H. de France.) An old town (5158 inhab.) which claimed to be capital of la Perche. It is situated in a commanding position on a hill, surmounted by the high road in a series of zigzags, in order to reach the principal square. It was a place of strength, often besieged, and suffered much from the horrors of war. During the contests of the League, it was taken and pillaged by the two parties 22 times in 3½ years. Parts of its ramparts remain. Its only supply of water is obtained by means of a steam-engine pump, from springs at the bottom of the hill. The Church is remarkable for the pendants in the roof of its nave.

The canvas used for pictures is made at Mortagne, besides other coarse cloths, and some porcelain.

7 m. N. of Mortagne, at Soligny, is the convent of La Trappe, founded in the 12th century; but owing its celebrity to the severe rule of the order enforced, 1666, by the Abbé la Rancé, who, after leading a dissipated life in his youth, spent 37 years in penitence here, and died at the age of 77. It was suppressed 1790, by a decree of the Assemblée Nationale, and its church destroyed with the tomb of La Rancé, but the monks were restored in 1814.

16 Mesle sur Sarthe. The Sarthe, a tributary of the Loire, is crossed here.

10 Ménil Broust.

13 Alençon (Inns: la Poste; — Hôtel d'Angleterre), chief town of the department de l'Orne, has a population of 14,000, and is a thriving place, situated on the Sarthe, near the junction of the Briante. Its manufactures consist chiefly of hempen and linen cloths, called "Toiles d'Alençon," of which nearly 22,000 pieces are sold annually.

The making of lace, "Pointe d'Alençon," established here by Colbert, for which the town was long celebrated, has now nearly disappeared. Cyder and perry (poiré), the common drink of the country, are sold to a considerable extent, in casks called pipes.

The public buildings are not very remarkable. The Cathedral consists of a Gothic nave, built in the 16th century, having some painted glass, injured by a storm, 1821, and a pulpit approached by a staircase cut in the pier, attached to a plain modern choir. The crypt beneath the church contains the monuments of the Ducs d'Alençon — lately opened.

Three battlemented towers of the old Castle are incorporated in the modern Hôtel de Ville, and the Prefecture is a brick building, which once belonged to the Duchesse de Guise.

One of the most atrocious of the Revolutionary leaders, Hebert, the anarchist, editor of the infamous journal, Père Duchèsne, was a native of Alençon. He was led trembling and weeping to the scaffold, to which he had condemned so many thousand innocent persons, in 1793, exhibiting in his last moments the most extreme cowardice.

The name Diamants d'Alençon is given to the crystals of smoky quartz (rock crystal), found in the neighbouring granite quarries; where the beryl also occurs.

Diligences go hence to Tours and Caen. (Route 29.).

11 St. Denis. The river Mayenne rises near this, and is crossed about ½ way to 12 Prez en Pail, in the department of the Mayenne; the portion of it traversed by the road is a dreary country, unenclosed and covered with heath.

19 Le Ribay.

The high road to Brest, merely skirts a suburb of Mayenne, leaving the town itself on the rt.

17 Mayenne. (Inns: Belle Etoile; —Tête Noir.) A town of 10,000 inhabitants, situated ⅔ on the rt. bank and ⅓ on the l. of the Mayenne. Its manufactures of calicos, linen cloth, and tickens, employ 8000 persons in and around the town. The Castle, now in ruins, is a picturesque object, on the rt. bank of the river, near the bridge. It belonged to the seigneurs of Mayenne, and was taken, after a 3 months' siege, by the English, under the Earl of Salisbury, 1424. Many of the streets are very narrow, and so steep that it requires 8 or 10 oxen to draw a cart up them.

Laval, chief town of the department, is situated 24 m. S. of this.

The road descends the valley of the Mayenne, having the river on the rt. but out of sight, to 13 Martigné.

17 Laval. — (Inns: Tête Noir; — Cour Royale), chef lieu of the department of the Mayenne, on the river Mayenne, has 16,500 inhabitants. The old part of the town consists of black timber houses, each story projecting beyond that below it, until the gable overhangs the street; but a new quarter has risen on the W., where the streets are wide and regular. On the rt. bank of the river close to the old bridge, the Castle of the seigneurs of La Tremouille rises from a basement of rock, on which its lofty wall is raised, flanked at one end by a machicolated round tower. It was built in the 12th century, and its Chapel on round arches is perhaps of that date, but there are many later additions, and the jambs of some of the windows facing the inner court retain some rich ornaments in the style of the Renaissance (15th or 16th century). It is now a prison.

The Cathedral presents a singularity of ground plan, taking the form of a right angle, occasioned by the sloping ground on which it stands. It is a curious Gothic edifice. The nave and choir (except the aisles and side chapels, additions of the 15th and 16th centuries, in the flamboyant style,) are not older than the 12th. The E. end is square; the porch is a wretched addition of recent times. Under the church are very extensive substructions and crypts, thrown up in consequence of the slope of the ground to form a platform or pedestal for the building.

St. Vénérand, a church of the 15th or 16th century, has a little painted glass.

The church in the village of Avenières adjoining the town, built 1040, deserves the notice of the architect. Its choir, in the early pointed style, is surrounded by 5 apsidal chapels, and 2 others open into the transepts. Above the cross rises an elegant stone spire of decorated Gothic. The church contains a miracle-working image of the Virgin. The architect and antiquary ought not to leave unseen the little ruined Church of Grenoux, 2 m. from Laval. It is destitute of all ornament. The structure of its masonry, small square stones with intervening bonds of tiles, mark the style of a period not later than the 9th century. Within it is a monument of a knight and his lady.

Laval is essentially a manufacturing town, occupied in the production of linens and cottons, (toiles, coutils, siamoises,) and of linen thread, large quantities of which are spun here. A market for the sale of these productions is held every week in the Halle aux Toiles.

Laval was the centre from which arose the royalist insurrection of 1792 called Chouannerie, either from 4 brothers named Chouan, its first leaders, of the village St. Ouen des Toits, or from the cry of the owl, imitated by the salt smugglers of this district as a signal to their confederates, and afterwards adopted during the struggle, by the peasant guerillas, to announce the enemy's approach.

One of the most glorious victories of the Vendéans was gained in October 1793, a little to the S. of the town. Defeated in several previous combats, and driven across the Loire with a large republican army in pursuit of them, their enemies believed the war extinguished. Barrère announced this intelligence to the Convention in Paris; "La Vendée is no more, the brigands are exterminated, a profound solitude reigns in the Bocage, covered with cinders and watered with tears:"—but at the very time that these words were being uttered, Larochejacqueline had carried Laval at the point of the bayonette; — then turning round on his pursuers, he exhorted his brave bands to efface the memory of their former defeats, and to fight for the preservation of their wives and children who accompanied them, now far from their homes. Lescure insisted on being carried through the ranks on his death-litter, mortally wounded as he was, to encourage the Royalists by his presence, and share their peril and toil. The Vendéans, obeying the appeal, on this occasion rushed upon the enemy in close column, routed them entirely, and pursued them beyond Château Gonthier, with a loss to the Republicans of 12,000 men, among whom were the redoubted garrison of Mayence, who were mostly cut to pieces, and of 19 cannon. The conflict began at les Croix de Bataille, 2 m. S. of Laval. So precipitate and complete was the rout, that the remains of the republican army, reduced to 12,000 men, were not collected and reorganised until 12 days had elapsed, and not before they had left the town of Angers in their rear.

20 La Gravelle.

15 Vitré (Inn: La Poste) is in appearance a town of the middle ages, retaining the greater portion of its feudal fortifications, high and thick walls flanked by towers, surmounted by machicolations, and surrounded by a deep ditch. They appear not later in date than the 15th century. On one side of them, but detached from them by a ditch, stands a venerable and picturesque Castle of the Seigneurs de la Tremouille, now converted into a prison and falling to decay. In the court is an elegantly ornamented structure, half Gothic, half Italian, supposed to have been a pulpit. At the time of its construction the lords of the castle were adherents of the Reformed faith, and the inscription, which may still be read around the console, "post tenebras spero lucem," probably alludes to the persecutions they suffered.

The church of Nôtre Dame is in a style indicating the decline of Gothic art; attached to it, on the outside, is a stone pulpit, and within one of the chapels hangs a frame containing 32 small enamels, probably from Limoges.

The peasants of this part of Brittany, wear a dress of goatskins with the hair turned outwards, which gives them a somewhat savage aspect, and reminds one of Robinson Crusoe.

About 1½ m. S. of Vitré is the Château des Rochers, long time the residence of Madame de Sevigné; her bed-room and the cabinet where she wrote many of her charming letters are pointed out, and there is a fine portrait of her by Mignard, but the furniture, &c. of the interior has been totally altered.

Near Essé, 7 lieues S. W. of Vitré, is a Druidical monument called "la Roche Aux Fées," consisting of 43 large rough blocks of stone — 34 upright, supporting 8 others which form a roof.

The Vilaine river, after which the department is named, rises near Vitré; our road runs parallel with its course as far as Rennes, crossing it by a stone bridge at 15 Chateaubourg.

2 m. beyond this the road passes close to a large slate quarry excavated to a depth of more than 100 ft.

9 Noyal. The country possesses little interest.

12 RENNES. — Inns: No good inn; — moderate charges, but all dirty; H. de l'Europe, H. de la Corne de Cerf; — H. de France, near the Messageries. This town, formerly capital of Brittany, now chef lieu of the department of Ille et Vilaine, is situated at the confluence of these two streams, and contains 35,552 inhabitants. Here are few antiquities; the town has an entirely modern aspect, arising from a dreadful fire which in 1720 reduced nearly the whole city to ashes. It lasted 7 days, and consumed 850 houses, besides nearly all the public buildings; the ancient and solidly built clock tower crumbled to pieces on the third day calcined by the flames. The public buildings, of a date subsequent to this catastrophe, display for the most part the bad taste of the 18th century.

The streets are uniform; and, "notwithstanding the sober and gloomy hue of which the houses are chiefly built, Rennes is rather a handsome city," but dull. Considerable improvements have recently taken place, many narrow streets have been removed, and a new bridge has been thrown over the Vilaine.

The stately Palais de Justice, in the handsome Place du Palais, was the parliament house of the States of Brittany, and is the most remarkable building here. It contains one fine large Salle des Pas Perdus, and several apartments rich in gilded ceilings and stucco ornaments, Cupids bearing festoons, &c. with roofs and panels painted by Jouvenet. Its date is 1670.

The interior of the modern Cathedral, "recently finished, is a very spacious, lofty, and imposing Hall of Grecian architecture; the principal aisle having a richly decorated vaulted roof, supported by massive and well-proportioned fluted Corinthian columns. On the whole, the effect is striking, but not at all ecclesiastical." M.A.S. The ancient Cathedral St. Melaine retains a Romanesque porch supported on engaged pillars with curiously carved capitals, probably of the 12th century. The telegraph on the top of the cathedral is one of the chain communicating between Paris and Brest.

There is a very handsome modern Theatre, situated in another respectable square, with covered arcades around it, lined with shops.

In the Hôtel de Ville facing the theatre is a collection of pictures removed from the damp Musée in which they were before deposited: the greater part are of little worth. As a curiosity may be cited a Judgment of Solomon painted by King René of Anjou, but much injured, faded and dingy in hue. There is a Lion Hunt by Rubens (?)

Here is also the Public Librarycontaining 30,000 volumes, and many rare MSS., among them a charter of Don Henry, of Trastamare, granting lands in Spain to Dugueselin.

The chief attraction of Rennes, however, is its Public Walks, especially that called le Mont Thabor, planted with fine trees and commanding a pleasing view over the town and valley of the Vilaine. A miserable statue of Dugueselin has been set up in it.

The other walks are le Mail, extending down to the junction of the Ille and Vilain, la Motte, and le Champ de Mars.

One of the old town gates, la Porte Mordelaise, is preserved opposite the new cathedral; the entrance is by a pointed arch, and the masonry includes a stone bearing a Roman inscription dedicated by the town of Rennes (Redonis) to the Emperor Gordian; it is no longer legible. Through this gate the ancient dukes of Brittany made their solemn entry into Rennes on their accession, but before passing it they swore to preserve the Catholic faith and the church of Brittany, to govern wisely, and to execute justice; they were then conducted into the church, where, after 2 days spent in prayer, they were crowned with the golden circlet, and girt with the ducal sword.

The manufactures of Rennes are sail cloth, which it supplies to the French navy, and some table linen. The butter is excellent, especially that of Prévalaye, large quantities of which are sent to other parts of France.

Rennes has a communication by Canal with St. Malo and the Channel on the one hand, and with Nantes and Brest on the other.

Diligences daily to Paris and Brest (R. 36.) — to Dinan and St. Malo (R. 41.) — to Caen (R. 31.)— to Nantes (R. 41.)

ROUTE 36.

RENNES TO BREST.

240 kilom. =149 Eng. m.
Malleposte daily in 18 hours
Diligences daily.
10 Pacé.
13 Bedée.
14 La Barette.

17 Broons is remarkable only as the birth place of Bertrand Dugueselin, the great captain of France in the 15th century. He was 10th child of Robert Dugueselin, and remarkably ill favoured to look upon. He first saw the light in the castle of La Motte Broons, of which no vestiges remain, but the place where it stood is marked by an avenue of trees, and a Monument, erected at the cost of the department, by the side of the road to Brest, about 1 m. out of the town.

12 Langouedre.

15 Lamballe was the chief place of the Comté of Penthièvre; the castle of the counts was reduced and dismantled by Cardinal Richelieu, 1626, to punish a rebellious seigneur. The Church of Nôtre Dame, standing on the top of the hill, whose slope is occupied by the town, was originally the castle chapel, and is a fine Gothic building. Thick cylindrical piers, surmounted by capitals in bands, support the lancet arches of the nave, whilst the choir rests on clustered pillars, the arches being surmounted by a double triforium gallery. It has a wooden roof. In a side aisle is some good carved wood-work, with decorated and flamboyant tracery, perhaps the remains of a roodloft. Part of the church was not built until 1545.

The road to St. Malo (R. 41.) diverges from this.

Glimpses of the sea are obtained on the rt. before reaching 20 St. Brieuc—Inn: Croix Blanche, clean and good; one of the best on this road: dinner, bottle of wine, bed, and tea for breakfast, 4 fr. 50 c.

There is nothing worth notice in this town of 11,382 inhabitants; it is situated on the Gouet, and has a port called Légué, 2 m. lower down the stream provided with a long quai, accessible for vessels of 400 or 500 tons, to unload at. On the top of a hilly promontory, commanding the bouchure of the river, stands the ruined Tour de Cesson, built 1395, to defend its entrance, but blown up 1598, after the war of the league, by order of Henri IV. Such, however, was the thickness of the wall, and the coherence of the mortar, that one half of the cylinder remains standing, braving the tempests, while the other lies shattered into a few large masses at its base, as it fell. There is a pretty walk from St. Brieuc to Legué, through a narrow ravine, traversed by a small tributary of the Gouet.

St. Brieuc was taken by the Chouans in the Vendéan war, 1799.

An interesting antiquarian and architectural excursion to Lanleff, Paimpol, &c., may be made from this (Rte. 38.).

15 Chatelaudren, a small town on the Leff.

14 Guingamp (Hôtel des Voyageurs) is a very picturesque town, situated in the vale of the Trieux, which abounds in pleasing scenery (7200 inhab.). It formed part of the vast possessions of the Ducs de Penthièvre, and has descended from them to Louis Philippe. The site of their castle, razed to the earth, is occupied by a grove of trees, and serves as a promenade; but fragments of the town walls remain. Its Church, surmounting the other buildings, part Gothic, part in the style of the revival, has some peculiarities; viz. grotesque heads, projecting from the shafts of its piers.

The Fontaine de Plomb, in the middle of the place, is rather an elegant work of Italian artists in the 15th century, it is supposed.

The Chapel of Nôtre Dame de Grace, 3 m. out of the town, is well deserving a visit, although its rich decorations in sculptured tracery and figures have been much mutilated. "Its elegant spire, finely proportioned pillars, and light arches, are still worthy of admiration; and much of the grotesque carving, which formed the cornices of the nave and aisles, may still be seen."—Trollope. It was erected in the 14th century by Charles of Blois.

19 Belle Ile en Terre.

The department of Finisterre in La Basse Bretagne, the ancient Armorica, is entered before reaching 19 Ponthou.

15 Morlaix — (Inns: Hôtel de Paris; Hôtel de France), is a flourishing little port and town of 9596 inhab. picturesquely seated in a valley, wide enough only for the tidal river or creek which runs up it, lined with 2 quays and 2 rows of houses, "behind which the hills rise steep and woody on one side, on the other gardens and rocks and wood; the effect romantic and beautiful."—A. Young. The rock rises so close behind the houses as to give rise to a proverb "from the garret to the garden, as they say at Morlaix." It is only 6½ m. from the sea, and is reached by vessels of considerable tonnage. To the stranger, its chief attraction is the unaltered air of antiquity which it retains in its older quarters, such as the Rue des Nobles, and du Pavé, and the thoroughly Breton character of its street architecture and houses, over-hanging the footway, each story, fronted with an apron of slates, more nearly approaching its neighbour on the opposite side of the way, until the inmates of the garrets may shake hands. The grotesquely carved corner posts, ornamented with figures of kings, priests, saints, monsters, and bagpipers, the Gothic doorways, the sculptured cornices, would enrich an artist's sketch-book, and furnish employment for many days. The costume of the people, also, is thoroughly in keeping with the buildings; their pent-house brimmed hats, their loose Trunck hose, their shaggy locks, hanging like manes down their backs, are all thoroughly characteristic of la Bretagne Brettonnante (§ 2.).

Sad havoc, however, has been made in this antique town by modern improvements; and the outlet recently formed for the new Rue Royale, by which the road to Brest issues out on the W., has swept away a crowd of crazy, but picturesque constructions, whose loss would make Prout sigh.

Two small streams, descending from separate ravines, but uniting above the town, are arched over to furnish space for the market-place and Hôtel de Ville; below which, expanding naturally, and partly by their bed being artificially excavated, they form a port, lined with quays and lofty picturesque houses, resting on covered galleries or arcades, called Lances. Beside these quays several merchant vessels may usually be seen lying together, with a variety of small craft.

The churches are not remarkable: in St. Melaine is some good carved screen work.

The Hôtel de Ville has been lately rebuilt.

Many of the houses in the Rue des Nobles (especially the staircase of one high up on the right hand) deserve notice; they are richly ornamented in the flamboyant style.

The Gothic fountain of the Carmelites, and the ruined Chapel of St. François may be visited by those who have time. The Manufacture Royale de Tabac, a large building on the W. quay, is said to produce the worst tobacco in Europe.

In 1522, the fleet of Henry VIII., who was at that time incensed with Francis I. for seizing the ships and goods of English merchants in French ports, on its return from escorting the Emperor, Charles V., to Spain, under the command of Henry Earl of Surrey, entered the river, in number 50 vessels, and effecting a descent in the neighbouring bay of Dourdu, surprised Morlaix. The English set fire to it in four different places, pillaged it, massacred the inhabitants, and burnt to the ground great part of it, "together with some right fair castles, goodly houses, and proper piles."—State Papers. They retired to their vessels loaded with booty; but 600 of the hindmost were intercepted by the infuriated inhabitants, and cut off with great slaughter near a spring, still called Fontaine des Anglais, or, as the Bretons, like their Welsh kinsmen, call them, the Saxons.

Near the said fountain begins a very pleasant promenade, planted with trees, called Cours Beaumont, which extends nearly 1¼ m. down the l. bank of the river. The views from it of the river and the wooded valley are very pleasing.

The site of the old castle planted with trees also commands a fine view of the town.

Morlaix is the native place of General Moreau.

Diligences daily to Paris and Brest; to St. Malo; to Rennes; to Lorient.

A well-appointed steamer runs from Morlaix to Havre, 70 leagues, in 20 hours, once a week, fare 30 fr.

The churches of Kreisker, at St. Pol de Léon, and of Folgoat, may be visited by making a détour, on the way to Brest (Rte. 38.). Another interesting excursion is to the mining district of Huelgoat and Poulahouen (Rte. 42.).

Rather more than half way (9 m.) between Morlaix and the next relay, the village of Théogonec is passed, remarkable for its fine Church in the style of the Renaissance; a vast edifice, richly decorated with sculptures in the dark Kersanton stone. Its delicately carved pulpit, its reliquiary and its Calvary, deserve notice.

21 Landivisiau has a church also with a fine portal, filled with statues of the 12 Apostles.

The Church of Lanbader, 5 m. N. of this, on the road to St. Pol, surmounted by an elegant tower and spire, was originally attached to a commandery of Templars, ruins of which exist near the tower. Within is a beautifully pierced and carved roodloft of wood, composed of exquisite flamboyant tracery, also a staircase in the same style. The chains of some knight, liberated from slavery among the followers of Mahoun, still hang in the choir.

3 m. short of Landerneau, on a hill above the village La Roche Maurice, stand the ruins of its castle, reduced to 3 shattered towers, but very picturesque in its outline and position.

In the churchyard is an Ossuary, filled with skulls and dry bones, ornamented in front with a sculptured frieze, representing the Dance of Death, executed 1639. The Church is Gothic, and built 1559, and contains some good painted glass. The carved portal in Kersanton stone, and the sculptured roodloft of wood within, are worth notice.

16 Landerneau — (Inn: Hôtel de l'Univers;) a pretty town, seated in the hollow of a valley on the Elorn, whose mouth forms one branch of the roadstead of Brest. There are some picturesque Gothic bits among its old houses. 4963 inhab.

The roads to Brest from Morlaix, from Carhaix (Rte. 42.), and from Quimper (Rte. 44.), all converge hither.

A little beyond Landerneau, on the l. of the road, between it and the river Elorn, a ruined gateway, draped with ivy, is the sole subsisting relic of the Castle of the Joyeuse Garde, now known as Château le Forêt, the cradle of chivalry, the seat of Arthur, Lancelot du Lac, and the knights of the round table. Of course there is no pretension that the existing remains are of their time. No satisfactory explanation is given of the origin of the name Joyeuse Garde; but it is supposed to be a perversion of a Breton term.

20 BREST. — Inns: Hôtel de Province, best; Hôtel du Grand Monarque.

Brest, the chief naval seaport of France, an arsenal of war and fortress of first class, is most advantageously situated near the W. extremity of the department Finisterre (the Land's End of France), on that portion of her territory which projects most to the W. between the channel and the gulf of Gascony. It stands on the N. side of one of the finest harbours in the world, nearly landlocked, accessible only through a narrow and well fortified throat, Le Goulet, and extending far inland in 2 branches, one running up to Landerneau, the other towards Châteaulin. The town is built on the summit and sides of a kind of projecting ridge, and some of its streets are too steep to be passable except on foot. A narrow but deep creek, which is in fact formed by the mouth of the small stream the Penfeld, running up from the harbour behind this ridge, serves as the basin to the dockyard, and divides the town on its l. bank from the suburb La Recouvrance on its rt.

The communication between the town and suburb is kept up by numerous ferry boats. Close above the mouth of this creek, which is not more than a musket shot across, and is defended by several tiers of batteries on either hand, rise the feudal round towers and colossal curtains, not less than 100 ft. high, of the picturesque old Castle, which belonged to the Ducs de Bretagne. It was besieged in vain by Duguesclin and Clisson, was long held by the English, having for governor, 1378, the brave warrior Robert Knolles. It was yielded up by Richard II. 1395, in consideration of 12,000 crowns, and was finally modernised by Vauban 1688, who formed casemates in the interior of its massive towers and platforms, with embrasures for cannon on their tops. From its walls there is a good view of the port and dockyard, but the Fort de l'Ecole, on the opposite side of the water, commands one still finer, including the roads also. There are numerous dungeons beneath the castle, and extensive vaults were discovered 1832.

The inner port of Brest, or creek above mentioned, is so narrow that if the town had any commerce it would not be large enough to hold the merchant vessels, but there is no deficiency of depth (25 ft. at low water), and 30 or 40 ships of war might lie within it in single file. Above the castle the shores of both sides of this creek are enclosed by a high wall separating the dockyard within it from the town. The mouth of the creek is closed by a boom. The population of Brest is said to exceed 32,000, though, to avoid the additional contributions on large towns, it is put down in the census at 29,860. There is accommodation in the numerous barracks for a garrison of nearly 10,000 men.

Although Brest is enclosed within ramparts, there are several fine open spaces within its walls; such are the square called Champ de Bataille, innocent of any other combat than a sham fight, and the Cours d' Ajot (so named from an officer of engineers who laid it out), a most agreeable promenade, on account of the fine trees which shade it, and the beautiful view of the roads, appearing like a vast lake, which its terrace commands; but infested all the morning by parties of recruits undergoing drill.

More rain, it is said, falls in Brest than in any other town of France, and the whole department of Finisterre is peculiarly exposed to storms, winds, mists, and fogs.

In 1548, Mary Queen of Scots, then a child 5 years old, landed at Brest, and a few days after was affianced to the dauphin Francis at St. Germain.

The Dockyard, or Port Militaire. — The authorities connected with the dockyard (major de la marine, &c.), are very niggard in giving admission to strangers, but an application to the Port admiral or Maritime Préfet made by the English consul, who is particularly obliging to persons recommended to him, will procure it. Entrance to the Bagnes and Hôpital de la Marine, the most interesting objects here, should be expressly included in the ticket of admission. The celebrated dockyard of Brest is situated on the 2 sides of a narrow but deep arm of the sea, running up in a winding direction between high and steep rocks, which intrude so near upon the water that it is only by paring them down that space is formed for the buildings, and for the quays and yards required in front of them. The first view looking down from above into this narrow ravine, lined with long and massive ranges of buildings rising tier over tier in the form of an amphitheatre, is exceedingly striking. On one side is the Voilerie (sail house), Magazin Général (slop shop), and Corderie (ropery) of 3 stories, surmounted by the Bagne, and above it rises the New Hospital. On the opposite side are various ateliers, forgeries, Atelier d'Artillerie Marine (burnt in 1833). The new Foundery (for casting cannon) begun 1841, and the Quartier des Marins, or sailors' barracks, where they are lodged when in port in the same manner as soldiers; — an admirable establishment, which might be advantageously copied by the English admiralty, fill up the opposite side. The level space at the water's edge is occupied by slips (cales de construction), only 2 of which are covered, about 8 being uncovered, dry docks (formes) now (1841) partly converted to the purpose of building ships, since the rumour of war with England began to be bruited. There are, besides timber yards, boat sheds, water cisterns supplied by a steam-engine where vessels fill their tanks, sheds for containing the new tanks, and government cellars, while a very large space near the sea entrance of the dockyard is covered with dismounted cannon. Here also is placed a trophy from Algiers, a brass gun 20 ft. long, which forms an excellent column, reared on its breach. It is surprising that the first dockyard of France should possess so few covered slips. The precautions against fire and theft are very rigid; a vigilant guardian watches in every apartment, a doorkeeper at every door; cisterns are placed at short distances, with tubs full of water every 8 or 10 yards.

The ground occupied by most of these buildings has been gained by excavations out of the hill side. Greatly as the space on either side of the water has been widened by artificial means, the cliffs even now approach too near the slips and timber sheds, preventing a free circulation of air, causing dampness and consequently dry rot. Near the timber sheds is the Musée Maritime filled with models, ships' heads, &c., but containing nothing very remarkable.

On both sides of the port, roads are carried up the steep sides of the confining heights in zigzag terraces, so that they may easily be surmounted by heavy carriages.

The Victualling Office (Direction des Subsistances et Parc aux Vivres) is near the mouth of the port on the rt. bank, and includes the bakehouse containing 24 ovens, the slaughterhouse, kitchens, &c. In 1802—3, when the combined Spanish and French fleets lay in the roads, 50,000 rations were supplied hence daily.

The Bagnes (from bagnio, Ital. bath; the Christian slaves in Turkey and Barbary were employed in heating the baths of the sultans, pachas, deys, &c.) contain about 3000 convicts (forçats), condemned to forced labour for a certain term of years or for life. Their dress is a jacket of dirty red serge, fitting no better than a sack, yellow trousers, and a red or yellow cap; the green cap denotes one condemned for life; the yellow sleeve one twice sentenced, and the worst offenders are heavily loaded with shackels fastened to a ring rivetted fast round the leg. The chain and shackel together weigh more than 7lbs, and usually cause a wound on the leg at first. It is not, however, the hideous dress nor the clanking chains which render them repulsive; it is the countenance marked with bad passions and villainy, which indicate the degradation of human nature. The worst offenders are coupled two together to the same chain. They work in gangs, each gang accompanied by a plante or garde chourme, a fierce looking moustache, with a tranchant sabre, and by a soldier with a loaded musquet. The Prison of the Bagnes has a long façade, with more of architectural ornament and style in its pediment than usually marks a prison destined for doubly and trebly dyed criminals. It contains 4 Salles, lofty, wide, and airy, filled with large wooden platforms having sloping tops like desks; these are the bedsteads of the forçats, who recline on them upon a small mattress provided with a coarse quilt of sackcloth, the chain of each being passed over a bar of iron running along the foot of the bed, but allowing tether enough to move a distance of 5 or 6 ft. Only the better class of convicts are allowed a thin mattress.

As soon as their allotted task for the day is done out of doors, they are allowed to repair hither; some have writing desks, others employ themselves in handicrafts, many in making toys out of cocoa-nuts, horse-hair, &c., by which they may earn a little money. At gunfire the names are called over, and in an hour profound silence is required; the night passed on a hard board is a time of suffering, especially in winter, from the cold.

Their allowance of food daily includes a pint of wine, a measure of biscuit, or ½ a loaf of brown bread.

The 4 salles are closed by strong iron gates at night, but stand open during the day; there are, however, plenty of guards at hand, and immediately behind the Bagnes rises the Caserne de la Marine Militaire; which could pour in some hundred men in a few minutes in case of revolt. The forçat, degraded as he is, is not allowed to be struck by his guards or keepers; his punishment, if he does wrong, is either solitary confinement in the black hole, a series of cells in the court behind the building, or deprivation of his wine, &c., coupling to another prisoner, or flogging with the rope's end. As a further preventive to tumult or rebellion, the walls of each salle are pierced with embrasures through which 2 cannon show their mouths; they are loaded with grape, and would enfilade the chamber, and sweep it from end to end.

Outside the dockyard, a little higher up the hill than the prison, rises the Hôpital de la Marine, an edifice of great extent though of unpretending architecture, of which Brest may well be proud. It was begun 1824, and is only lately finished. It contains 26 salles, each with 53 beds; and is attended by between 30 and 40 Religieuses, Sœurs Fidèles de la Sagesse as they call themselves, who are also lodged within the building. So far from being revolting, as is the case in many hospitals, it is a pleasing sight to enter one of the salles; its cleanliness is not only extra French, it is ultra English, and puts to shame the confined frowsy chambers of Greenwich Hospital. Here are wide, airy apartments, the roofs without speck, the floors, though of tile, sedulously polished and provided with pieces of carpeting, each window hung with white curtains, each bed of metal, also with white curtains and furniture. The salle des officiers is superior to the common rooms, even elegant. The kitchens, laboratories, linen closet, &c., are in the same style. Even the convicts when sick are received and nursed in this establishment.

A British Consul resides here.

At Hebert's library and reading-room, Rue d'Aiguillon, the papers may be seen, and many interesting works on Brittany, especially those of M. Souvestre and Freminville, obtained.

Conveyances; — malleposte daily to Paris in 47 hours; diligences daily to Paris by Rennes; — to St. Malo; to Lorient and Nantes.

Steamer every other day traverses the Roads and ascends the river of Châteaulin, on the way to Nantes (Rte. 44.), as far as Port de Launay, a very pleasant voyage.

The Roadstead of Brest lies between the great promontory of Finisterre on the N. and the smaller peninsula of Quélern on the S., which approach so near as to leave a passage only 1749 yards broad between them called the Goulet. The Mingan rocks, rising in the midst of this channel, contract the entrance still more, and compel vessels to pass close under the guns of batteries which line it on either side and command it by a cross fire. The road consists of numerous bays into which several rivers empty themselves, the principal being the Elorn from Landerneau, and the Châteaulin, which is navigated by a steam-boat. In some places the harbour is 3 m. broad, and the area of its surface is estimated at 15 square leagues. All the fleets of France might lie snugly within it, and a hostile ship dare not venture within its entrance without the risk of being battered to pieces. Not only are the jaws of the harbour bristling with fortifications "à fleur d'eau," but the works are carried inwards so as to command the anchorage and the batteries spread outside to the rt. and l. of the entrance, while every eminence is crowned with other forts commanding those below. The number of cannon and large mortars which could be brought to bear on an enemy from the batteries of the Goulet, and of the coast outside of it is not less than 400, while 60 pieces sweep the anchorage from the forts within the Goulet. On the N. of the Goulet, in the midst of the bay of Bertheaume are 2 island forts, united together by a rope bridge, and by one of wood with the shore. The extreme fort on this side is the batterie de St. Mathieu, under the ruined abbey (p. 126.), and close to the new lighthouse. On the S. of the Goulet lies the bay de Camaret, one of whose numerous and formidable batteries goes by the name of Mort Anglaise, commemorating the miserable defeat of the Expedition which landed here 1694 from a British fleet commanded by Admiral Berkley. On approaching the shore, the English found it bristling with armaments, batteries thrown up on all sides, gunners at their posts, troops of horse and foot drawn up behind the guns, and as the English prepared to land, 3 masked batteries opened on the ships a most destructive fire. 900 men under the command of General Tollemache, who persisted in landing in the face even of such formidable preparations, reached the shore and were almost immediately cut to pieces; the ebbing of the tide having left their boats dry, and cut off their retreat. And thus the expedition failed miserably. What wonder! The news of the intended descent had been betrayed to Louis XIV. and James II. more than a month before by the Duke of Marlborough, the hero of Blenheim! These are the words in which he communicated the intelligence to his old master James: — "The capture of Brest would be a great advantage to England, but no advantage can prevent, or ever shall prevent, me from informing you of all that I believe to be for your service; therefore you may make your own use of this intelligence." — Macpherson State Papers. In the interval between the receipt of this letter and the sailing of the armament, the skill and activity of Vauban had put the intended landing-place in such a state of defence, by throwing up batteries, disposing cannon, and collecting troops, as to render success hopeless, defeat inevitable.

The Pointe des Espagnols owes its name to a body of Spaniards, about 600 strong, who occupied it for several weeks, 1594, and threw up an earthen redoubt, which was captured by assault. The Peninsula of Quélern is defended by lines, drawn across the isthmus, which connects it with the mainland, nearly a mile long, consisting of bastions faced with masonry, constructed by Vauban, mounting 60 pieces of cannon. From a point near these lines, just above the Bay of Camaret, the finest view is obtained of the roads of Brest and their defences, with the point of St. Mathieu and the archipelago of Ouessant on the N., and on the S. the Bay of Douarnenez and the Point du Raz.

The defences above enumerated do not include those of Brest itself, amounting altogether to 400 pieces of cannon, nor of the entrenched camp behind it, numbering 60 more cannon and mortars.

Excursions. The country about

Brest is far from picturesque, but it contains many objects of interest.

The Menir of Plouarzel, about 10 m. N. W. of Brest and 3 beyond the village of St. Renan, is the loftiest of those singular Celtic monuments now remaining in Finisterre. It measures 35 ft. in height, and stands on an eminence in the midst of a wild heath. Whatever its original destination, it is still looked on with awe by the peasantry, and singular superstitions are associated with it. Often in the dead of night the barren woman repairs hither, hoping to procure the boon of fruitfulness by rubbing her naked breast against the hard granite.

Near the mouth of the pretty river Aber Ildut, which flows past St. Renan, are the quarries of granite which furnished the pedestal for the obelisk of Luxor, erected in the Place Louis XV., at Paris.

3 m. N. of St. Renan, at Lanriouaré, is the graveyard of the 7777 saints, a walled enclosure, never trod by the peasants except with bare feet and head uncovered, paved with slabs, and marked by a cross.

The ruined Abbey of St. Matthew, situated on the extreme W. cape of Finisterre, N. of the Rade de Brest, is about 15 m. W. from Brest and 10 from St. Renan. The roads from both places converge at the little town of Le Conquet, where La Grace de Dieu is a decent cabaret. Conquet suffered from an English fleet sent forth by Queen Mary to ravage the French coast, 1558, and surprise Brest, "because it was known not to be well garrisoned, and was thought the best mark to be shot at for the time." But the English commander contented himself with a far more inglorious enterprise. Landing at Conquet, "he put it to the saccage, with a great abbey, and many pretty towns and villages, where our men found good booties and great store of pillage."—Hollinshed. Thence it is a walk of 3 m. along the tops of the cliffs, battered below by the waves, to the storm-fretted ruins of St. Matthew's Abbey, which stand on the bleak exposed promontory above the sea; "the most W. spot of France, and, with the exception of Cape Finisterre in Spain, of the European continent. It occupies a position similar to St. Mary's Abbey, Whitby, so as to be the first and the last object seen by the mariner quitting or entering the Bay of Brest. Whatever wind may blow, it is rare but it rages a hurricane around these mouldering arches and piers, which yet have braved for five centuries the pelting storm and whistling wind. The architecture is pointed in the greater part of the building, with some Romanesque portions and round arches. It is of solid granite, simple in style, and without ornament. Close beside the ruins, a Lighthouse has recently been erected. There is much savage grandeur in the scene around, viewed from this point, increased by the sullen roar of the mighty Atlantic chafing in the caves and fissures of the rocks below. In clear weather the eye ranges over the dangerous strait called Passage du Four beset with rocks, between the mainland and the granitic islands Moléne, Beniguet, and Ouessant. The last is supposed by some to be the Ultima Thule of the ancients; its inhabitants remained idolaters down to the 17th century. The indecisive naval action of Ushant (as we call it) was fought off this island, 1778, between the French fleet under d'Orvilliers, and the English under Keppel and Palliser. On the S. the roads of Brest and the Peninsula of Quélern lie open, and on the horizon appears the Pointe du Raz.

On the E. side of the roads, and on the opposite shore of the estuary of the Landerneau river, lies Plougastel, remarkable for a Calvary attached to its cimetière, one of the most remarkable of the Gothic monuments of Finisterre. It is a crucifix of Kersanton stone, § 6., adorned with a multitude of sculptures, rudely but forcibly executed, representing scenes of the Life and Passion of Christ. Some of the subjects, such as the Entry of our Saviour into Jerusalem to the music of the bignion (bagpipe), the Temptation and Hell, are treated in a homely manner, approaching the grotesque, marking the hand of a rustic artist. "Notwithstanding its Gothic character, it appears by an inscription upon it to have been executed in 1602, but we must remember that the middle ages lasted longer in Brittany than elsewhere."—Souvestre.

The costume of the women of Plougastel is remarkable for its elegance.

Ferry boats ply between Brest and the point of Plougastel.

The fine Gothic Church of Folgoat (Rte. 38.) would form an agreeable day's excursion for him who interests himself in architecture. He might take the patache, which runs daily from Brest to Lesneven and back.

ROUTE 38.

ST. BRIEUC TO BREST; COAST ROAD BY PAIMPOL; LANNION; MORLAIX; ST. POL DE LÉON; AND FOLGOAT.

The distances are marked in lieues communes of 3 Eng. m., measured from place to place.

This route properly consists of two excursions, from the high road from Rennes to Brest: it carries the traveller to a succession of interesting churches and ecclesiastical remains well worth visiting, though much of it lies over cross roads; no posting.

St. Brieuc. (p. 119.) A wretched patache runs between this place and Paimpol, passing near the little port of Binic, through Plouha.

Thus far there is nothing remarkable, unless the traveller diverge about 1 m. to the l. of the road beyond Binic, to visit the beautiful Gothic chapel of Lantec, which has been compared with the Ste. Chapelle at Paris, but is far inferior to it.

From Plouha the antiquarian traveller should diverge to the l., to visit a ruined building, known as the 7½ Temple de Lanleff, about 8 m. from Plouha. A carriage cannot easily get within a mile of it, owing to the badness of the roads. It has been the subject of much controversy, some writers calling it a Pagan Temple; but, in truth, it is nothing more than an early Christian church, probably of the 10th or 11th century, in the rare form of a rotunda, like the English churches of the Temple, St. Sepulchre, Cambridge, Little Maplestead, Essex, &c. But the building which it perhaps most nearly resembles, is the round church at Nymegen, in Holland, attributed to Charlemagne, but now in ruins. It consists of two concentric walls, the inner one a cylinder, 30 ft. high, resting on 12 circular arches, supported on square piers, with engaged columns on each side, of granite, having rudely carved capitals of monsters, human faces, rams' heads. Outside of this runs a lower concentric wall, destroyed for a considerable part of its circuit, but which once extended quite round the inner wall, and thus formed the aisles of the church. It is pierced with narrow loop-holed windows, which widen inwards — the early form common in churches built before glass came into use. The edges of the vaulted roof which covered this aisle may still be traced, and a small portion of the aisle is included in the modern church; but whether the vaulting of it be as old as the walls on which it rests cannot be distinctly affirmed. This ruin now forms a vestibule to a little village church. As a ruin, it is too rude in its architecture to be pleasing, but in the midst of it rises a noble yew-tree, tall and straight, surmounting the old wall with its dark canopy of foliage.

The tradition of the country is, that it was built by the Templars, the "Moines Rouges," as they are called. It is just possible, that Gothic architecture in Brittany was not more advanced in the 12th century than this building indicates.

Lanleff is about 24 m. from St. Brieuc, and 7½ from 2½ Paimpol: — Inn, Pelican, the only one, 1841, but not clean, and very extortionate. 2112 inhab.

On the seashore, 2 m. to the E. of Paimpol, are the ruins of the Abbey of Beauport (in 1841 the keys were kept at Paimpol, and should be obtained before setting out). It is beautifully situated on the shore of a retired bay. The remains consist of a Church, now roofless, and deprived of the choir, in the pointed style, built 1202, with a W. front, showing an early English character, together with several conventual buildings, at the E. end. An elegant small chapter-house, its vaulted roof supported on a row of circular pillars, is so perfect that it is now used as a school. On the N. side are an extensive vaulted cellar, and an apartment of a superior character also vaulted, which was the grand refectory. These serve the purpose of farm buildings at present, being divided between 2 tenants.

From Paimpol to Treguier is about 9 m., passing through Lezardrieux, where the river Trieux, descending from Guingamp, is crossed by a fine wire suspension bridge resting on lofty piers.

The castle of La Roche Jagu, near this, is an interesting specimen of domestic architecture, now in ruins, finely situated on the Trieux above Lezardrieux. It is a semi-castellated mansion, entered by a low doorway closed by an oaken door, and a heavy iron gate of cross bars. Although dismantled, it is inhabited by a peasant. There is a fine view from its roof.

Another still larger and loftier suspension bridge thrown over the Jaudy leads into 3 Treguier. (Inn, Hôtel de France tolerable.) A town of 3,178 inhabitants, occupying the summit and slope of a hill.

The Church in the market-place, formerly the cathedral, has a fine S. porch, the vaulted roof pannelled, and the divisions filled with quatrefoils, and a doorway ornamented with statues in niches, of good workmanship. The piers of the nave are irregular in form, and its arches vary in width. The N. transept is Romanesque, with circular arches, and well wrought capitals to its pillars. Contiguous to it is a tower in the same style, and probably of the 11th century, though named Tour de Hastings after the Danish pirate of a much earlier period. This tower is best seen from the cloisters, where some mutilated effigies of ecclesiastics and knights are deposited.

In a farm-house a little way out of the town called Kermartin is preserved the bed of St. Yves, a favourite Breton saint. It is a cupboard bedstead, the front of dark wood finely carved.

4 Lannion (Inn, Hôtel de l'Europe) on the Guier, possesses a market-place filled with odd old houses, several of a very peculiar style of architecture, and nothing else worthy of remark but narrow and dirty streets. A diligence runs daily to Morlaix. There is a post-road hence to Guingamp (32 kilom.), and another by Plesten (18 kilom.), to Morlaix (19 kilom.).

The district extending N. from Lannion to the sea, between the rivers Guier and Jaudy, is the very cradle of romance. King Arthur held his court at Kerdluel, graced by the presence of the Paladins, Lancelot, Tristan, and Caradoc, and a short distance off the coast is an islet called Agalon or Avalon, which the Bretons maintain to be King Arthur's burial place, thus depriving Glastonbury of that honour.

About 6 m. S. of Lannion, on the

E. bank of the Guier, between it and the road to Guingamp, is the Castle Tonquedec, one of the largest and best preserved in Brittany. It was built in the 13th century, and dismantled by order of Richelieu, after having served during the wars of the Ligue as a royal fortress. It consisted of 3 courts defended by moats, drawbridges, and portculles. In the inner court is the keep, a tall round tower "accessible only by an opening in its 2d story, approached by 2 drawbridges, supported midway upon an isolated square pier." The staircase was formed in the thickness of the wall. "In many respects these ruins are well worth coming some distance to visit. To the antiquary they are precious as a specimen of the finest military architecture of the 13th century. For the sketcher they combine the requisites to form a lovely landscape."— Trollope.

The direct road from Lannion to Morlaix (about 23 m.) passes St. Michel sur Gréve, a spot where the sea encroaches on the shore, and a little farther we enter the department Finisterre. On the sands near this, according to the legend, King Arthur fought the dragon.

The crypt under the church of Lanmeur is of great antiquity, and encloses the holy fountain which caused its foundation, and is still held in repute by the common people. The piers which support the crypt have serpents carved on them.

About 5 m. N. of Lanmeur, close upon the coast, lies the village of St. Jean du Doigt, whose church, containing the precious finger of St. John from which it is named, is a favourite place of pilgrimage with the peasantry, who repair hither to the number of 12,000 on the eve of St. John. The church has a wooden roof elegantly carved and painted, and surmounted by a spire of lead; it also possesses a ciborium bearing enamelled medallions of the 12 Apostles, a beautiful crucifix of the 16th century, a chalice and a patena presented by Anne of Brittany, who was a patroness of St. John's finger. She built the hospice by the side of the church to receive pilgrims.

Souvestre mentions a singular chapel called the Oratoire between this and Plougasnon, in which the young girls who are about to marry in the course of the year, hang up their hair as an offering to the Virgin; this ancient Gaulish custom, however, is diminishing every year.

7½ Morlaix (Rte. 38. p. 119.).

There is nothing very interesting beyond Morlaix until the towers and spires appear of 5 St. Pol de Léon.—Inn: Hôtel du Commerce, tolerable, and very cheap; bed, tea, and breakfast 2 fr.

This ancient and almost deserted ecclesiastical city reminds one of St. Andrew's in Scotland, and St. David's in Wales, in its remote position near the sea-shore, in its decayed state, and in its ancient edifices. It possesses 6692 inhab. and two very fine churches.

The Cathedral, dedicated to St. Pol, is flanked at the W. end with two fine towers, whose central stories, pierced with long and elegant lancet windows (like St. Pierre at Caen), are surmounted by spires also pierced through to the sky. They open to the choir beneath, so as to form a sort of vestibule as at Peterborough. The nave is in the early pointed style, probably of the 13th century; the transepts display Romanesque features; in the S. transept is a fine circular window, its tracery cut in granite. The trough-shaped bénitier near the W. end was probably a tomb, and from its rude sculpture is certainly very old. The choir, longer, more ornamented, and of later date than the nave, is surrounded by double aisles, and ends in a Lady Chapel; it contains some good carved woodwork of the 16th century. The S. porch, a rich florid work with foliage delicately cut in Kersanton stone, merits examination.

The boast of St. Pol is the spire of the Church of Creizker (the word means centre of the town), 393 ft. high; a structure of open work of great lightness and grace, though constructed entirely of granite. The richly ornamented square tower is surmounted by a very boldly projecting cornice, above which rises the spire, its masonry cut to imitate overlapping tiles. The whole rests on 4 pillars not particularly thick, but the arches of the aisles act as buttresses to support it. This spire was built at the latter end of the 14th century by John IV. Duke of Brittany; according to tradition the architect was English. The N. portal, florid and fringed, is very rich and in good taste, though much injured; the rest of the church is not remarkable. These are the curiosities of this dull town, and after exploring them one is happy to leave behind its grass grown streets, and the melancholy which they inspire. 3 m. to the N. lies the little port of Roscoff. Half way, near Chapel Pol, are some Celtic remains, several dolmens, and a menhir. § 4.

Roscoff is filled with sailors and smugglers, and contains a vegetable prodigy, a fig tree, in the garden of the Capucin convent, whose branches, supported by scaffolding, would shelter beneath them 200 persons. The church, though of the time of Louis XIV., has a Gothic character, while its details are Italian; below it are 7 very curious bas-reliefs in alabaster.

Opposite Roscoff lies the little island of Batz, separated by a strait which may be crossed in 10 minutes. In the cemetery there is a monument of granite, to the memory of a lady who succoured the proscribed and fugitive priests during the Revolution. The young Pretender landed here after his hazardous escape from Scotland, following the battle of Culloden.

The road from St. Pol to Brest lies through

7 Lesneven (Inn, Grande Maison does not look promising). Some Roman remains, urns, &c. found a few miles S.E. of this dull little town, on the way to Landivisiau, have been supposed to mark the site of the long lost Breton town Occismor.

Pursuing the road to Brest 1 m. beyond Lesneven on a drear, bleak unsheltered spot, we reach the village of Folgoat, marked in the distance by its tall spire little inferior to the Creizker, of unusual splendour for a village, attached to the Church of Nôtre Dame, one of the most remarkable Gothic buildings of Brittany. It owes its origin to the following circumstance: — an idiot boy once haunted this spot who was in the habit of begging alms of those who passed, and using at the same time this one unvaried exclamation, "Oh! Lady Virgin Mary!" so that the place became known as "ar fol coat," the fool of the wood. The fool died, and in a short time there sprung up from his grave, even out of his mouth, according to the legend, a beautiful lily, whose leaves bore inscribed upon them the name of Mary. This miracle was noised abroad, and coming to the ears of John de Montfort, then warring with Charles de Blois for the dukedom of Brittany, he vowed to build a church on the spot if he triumphed over his rival. In consequence, after the victory of Auray, he laid the first stone on the spot where the lily had sprouted forth, but it was not finished until 1423, by his son John V., who, in an inscription legible on the l. of the W. portal, claims to be its founder.

It is built of the very dark green stone called Kersanton (§ 6.), which gives the edifice on the whole a gloomy appearance, but it is well adapted for delicate sculpture, and by the sharpness with which it has retained the delicate touches of the artist's chisel, shows how great judgment he exercised in selecting it. Almost every part of the church inside and out deserves minute inspection; the fertile invention, laborious pains, and dexterous skill of the sculptor is visible in almost every part, though the edifice has been sadly injured through neglect. This is more especially conspicuous externally in the W. portal, the canopy of which fell down 1824; but round the portal runs so delicate a wreath of thistles and vine leaves, perfect in their prickly flowers and stems, and even in the very fibres of the leaves, the curves of the stalks and tendrils, as cannot be seen without wonder. Birds also (chardonneret) and serpents are interspersed among the leaves. Above the door is a bas-relief of the Nativity, the Adoration of the Magi on one side (St. Joseph with wooden shoes has all the character of a Breton peasant), and of the Shepherds on the other. Below, the centre pier is formed into an elegant niche enclosing the bénitier under a graceful canopy, and supporting it on a bracket. Among the foliage here and in other parts may be seen the ermine, the armorial device of the dukes of Brittany, bearing their motto: "Melius mori quam fœdari." The thistle (chardon), and the goldfinch (chardonneret), also recur repeatedly in the ornaments of various parts of the church.

A far more beautiful porch is attached to the S. transept. Here 12 most exquisite niches line the vault leading to the door, in the mouldings around which similar leaves and wreaths are reproduced with far greater truth and delicacy. The stone from its peculiar colour has all the effect of bronze. This portal is believed to have been built by Anne of Brittany, as the arms of France united to those of Brittany are visible on it.

The sloping, open parapets which decorate the gables of the transept, the tracery of the E. windows, especially the central one surmounted by a rose, and the elegant arched niche at the E. end on the outside of the church below it, constructed to receive the waters of the miraculous fount, which bursts forth from beneath the high altar itself, are not to be passed unnoticed. The water of this spring is held in great repute by pilgrims, who, regardless of bystanders, strip themselves to apply it to all parts of their persons.

Within the church, on the rt. as you enter, is the Fool's chapel, covered with frescoes nearly destroyed by the damp. Every capital, cornice and border merits attention for the minute carving, but the chief object of interest is the jubé or Roodloft between the choir and nave: it consists of 3 round arches most elegantly fringed, surmounted by canopies resting on pannelled pillars, and supporting a gallery, of rich open work, pierced with quatrefoils. The foliage composing the crockets is an elaborate, yet natural imitation of the most complicated leaves, and the 2 angels who occupy the place of finials are well designed.

The E. window, seen from within, surmounted by its rose, is admirable for its tracery: the high altar below it is a single slab of stone, 14 ft. long, supported on a front of niche work filled with statuettes. The side screens and side altars are all more or less worthy of observation. There are numerous statues of saints curious for their costume. But the chief peculiarity of this church is the manner in which the sculptor who decorated it has rendered into stone the productions of the vegetable creation.

The roof of the church does not agree with the rest in splendour, and is evidently not completed conformably with the original plan.

The Gothic College on the N. side of the church was built by Anne of Brittany, who, as well as Francis I., were lodged in it when they came on a pilgrimage to Folgoat.

The country between St. Pol and Brest is very dreary; much heath, furze and broom; — the cottages are poor dingy peat-covered hovels, among which a few starveling black sheep seek a scanty mouthful: few trees appear higher than brushwood. There are many beggars, some of them rivalling in their rags the mendicants of Ireland.

We fall into the great high road from Paris about a mile before entering 6¼ Brest, in Rte. 36.

ROUTE 41.

ST. MALO TO NANTES BY DINAN AND RENNES.

78 kilom. = 48½ Eng. m.

The détour by Dinan is 13 kilom. or 8 Eng. m. longer than the direct road.

St. Malo is described in Rte. 27.

The pleasantest and shortest way to Dinan is to take the steamer, which ascends the Rance daily with the tide, making the voyage in 3 hours.

Owing to the variation of the tides on this coast, amounting to 40 ft., the current of the Rance is desperately rapid, and the river fills and empties with remarkable celerity.

The places passed in succession upon either bank are —

Rt. St. Servan and the Castle of Solidor, p. 98.

L. St. Suliac, the prettiest village on the Rance.

L. Port St. Hubert, a little watering place in a charming situation.

L. Plouer.

Rt. Pleadihen.

Chatelier.

L. Tadens.

"The river is confined between lofty precipices nearly all the way to Dinan, and may vary in breadth from ¼ to ½ a mile. Sometimes expanding into wide reaches, it resembles a Scotch lake."— C.

The general character of the scenery is thus described by Mr. James: —

"The sail up the Rance is perhaps as beautiful as any thing that the varied earth can produce.

"On glided our boat; and, as the stream wound in and out amongst its high banks, we soon lost sight of St. Malo. Now darting through a narrow pass between immense bold rocks, which seemed scarcely to leave space for the passage of the boat, we could almost have touched the stony cliffs on either side; and now floating over the bosom of what seemed a wide, calm lake, we could perceive no outlet till we nearly reached the opposite shores. Thus alternately confined between tall crags, and pouring out into wide basins, the beautiful river flowed on; and, breasting its stream, we passed on in sunshine and shade, till, at last, rushing out from one of the deep gorges through which it poured, we beheld an immense extent of undulating country, covered here and there with wood, and broken in various spots with crags, while, brightly relieved by the deep shadow of a cloud which covered all the foreground, the town of Dinan appeared on its high hill behind, with its old battlements catching the full light of the day, as they hung over the bold masses of rock on which the town is perched."

The high road from St. Malo to Dinan runs on the E. side of the Rance, but only now and then in sight of it, and is devoid of interest until it comes in view of Dinan.

The postmaster charges 4 kilom. extra on quitting St. Malo at high water, on account of the circuit round the port which his horses are obliged to make, instead of crossing direct to St. Servan, as is done when the tide is out; but the new bridge will remedy this. See p. 97.

15 Châteauneuf.

We here quit the direct road to Rennes, by St. Pierre de Plesguin 13 kilom., Hédé 20 kilom., Rennes 23 kilom. = 34¾ Eng. miles.

The picturesque towers and spires of Dinan are close at hand as the crow flies, but it takes a good half hour to descend the steep hill at whose foot the Rance flows, and to ascend that equally steep, though now rendered accessible by zigzags, on the opposite side, before you can enter 18 Dinan.—Inns: Hôtel du Commerce, best; Poste; both in the Place Duguesclin, and neither very good.

The country in which Dinan is placed is perhaps the most beautiful in Brittany. The situation of the town (8,044 inhabitants) is very singular, on the crown and slopes of a hill of granite, overlooking the deep and narrow valley of the Rance, flowing 250 ft. below it. The sides of the hill are excessively steep; but, notwithstanding, houses and streets have been built along the face of it to the water's edge. The Rue de Jersuel, which stretches down to the bridge, is so precipitous as to be impracticable except on foot, and it is even difficult for a pedestrian to descend its slippery pavement; yet this originally formed the only approach to the town on the side of St. Malo, through a pointed and ribbed Gothic gateway. The old town wall and watch towers still remain; the streets in the older quarters abound in picturesque bits of architecture; and no spot in Brittany is better fitted to exercise the artist's pencil.

The modern road from St. Malo, after making a wide sweep and many turns under the old walls, in order to master the hill, enters the town by the Porte St. Louis close to the old and picturesque Castle, built about 1300, and often inhabited by Anne of Brittany, but now a prison. It was besieged by the Duke of Lancaster, 1389, and successfully defended by Duguesclin against the English. It stands on the edge of the ravine, on the outskirts of the town, and isolated from it by a deep fosse. The present entrance has been forced through a wall into the chapel, a finely vaulted chamber with a recess on one side, beside the altar, in which the lord or lady of the castle might hear mass without being seen; it is called the oratoire of Anne of Brittany. The deep cornice of machicolations which crown the Donjon tower give it a very picturesque appearance, and there is a pleasing view from its top.

The Place Duguesclin receives its name from that Breton hero, whose statue (in plaister!) is placed in the midst of it; and, from the circumstances of its having been the lists in which he fought and vanquished an English knight, "Thomas of Cantorbie," whom he challenged to single combat for seizing treacherously, in time of truce between the two nations, his brother Oliver, 1359.

The Cathedral of St. Sauveur is an interesting edifice to the antiquary, in the Romanesque style, such as is more commonly met with in the S. of Europe than in the N. The crumbling nature of the granite of which it is composed give it the appearance of greater antiquity than it really possesses. The lower part of the W. front and the S. side are probably of the 12th or even 11th century: the rest is modernised. The central portal, a round arch deeply recessed within mouldings and pillars (the two outer ones detached), is flanked on each side by blank arches, containing statues of the four Evangelists standing on lions, &c., under curious Romanesque canopies. From the wall above, the winged lion and ox, attributes of St. Mark and St. Luke, project in high relief. The buttresses against the S. wall are in the form of round attached pillars, or square pilasters surmounted by capitals. Nothing within the church merits notice except a black tasteless slab in the N. transept, bearing engraved on it and gilt a double-headed eagle, whose outspread wings are crossed by a bar, below which a quaint inscription, in gold letters, informs us that the heart of Bertrand Duguesclin

(spelt gueaquī) reposes beneath it, while his body lies among those of kings at St. Denis. Now, at least, neither statement is any longer true. The slab was found among the ruins of the church of the Jacobins now razed to the ground; and all traces of the heart and of the tomb of the Lady Tiphaine, the wife of Dugueselin, by whose side the heart was deposited, are gone: the body shared the fate of the royal ashes at the desecration of St. Denis in the Revolution. (See p. 20.)

The admirer of ancient domestic architecture should explore the narrow streets with overhanging houses, the basements planted on pillars, each story projecting on corbels, which form the nucleus of the town. Arcades resting on carved granite pillars or wooden posts are very prevalent. Besides the steep Rue de Jersuel already mentioned, the Carrefour d'Horloge, so called from its lofty granite clock tower, the Rue de la Vieille Poissonnerie, (where is a house bearing the date 1366,) and the Rue de la Croix, (where the house of Dugueselin and his lady Tiphaine is shown near the Hôtel de Ville,) are the most remarkable in this respect.

The English settled in Dinan are said to amount to 400 or 500: they have a Chapel here in which the English Church Service is performed on Sunday.

Mademoiselle Costa keeps a tolerable circulating library.

The Steamer from St. Malo ascends the Rance as far as the bridge of Dinan.

Diligences daily to Rennes and Paris, to Brest, to St. Malo, Dol and Caen.

On the outside of the town, under the old walls, now overgrown with ivy, while the ditches are converted into gardens, run most agreeable Terraces, commanding beautiful views over the vale of the Rance. The Mont Dol and Mont St. Michel are visible, it is said, from some points. There are manufactories of fine linen and of sail-cloth in and about the town.

Excursions almost without end, each varying from the other, may be made on horse and foot in this delightful neighbourhood.

At the distance of less than a mile from the Porte St. Louis, prettily situated in the bottom of a dell, through which a streamlet falls into the Rance, lies the village of Lehon, where are the ruins of a once celebrated abbey and a castle. The abbey is entered by a fine circular archway within deep mouldings: the church, now roofless, is in the early pointed style: it is called La Chapelle des Beaumanoir, from being the burial place of the family of that name, whose tombs were broken open at the Revolution, and the remains dispersed, while their monumental effigies, originally placed in the niches on either side of the church, have been removed to a chapel on one side. There are 4 figures of warriors armed, and an ecclesiastic, all in high relief; the drapery well executed, the hands folded in prayer. One of them is said to have been the leader of the Bretons in the famous "Combat des Trente." (See Route 42).

The steep wooded height above the village is crowned by the Castle, now reduced to a square enclosure of walls levelled down to the surface of the potato field which they enclose, having round towers in the angles and centre of each face. It was taken by Henry II. of England, 1168. From this castle-crowned height a beautiful view opens out of the village and abbey at its feet, of the course of the Rance and the romantic valley through which it flows. The navigation above this is continued by means of a canal which unites the Rance with the Vilaine.

The walk may be very pleasantly extended from this along the slopes of the hills, by paths across the fields behind the Hospice des Aliénés, towards the village St. Esprit, where there is a curious Gothic crucifix, now much mutilated. The charm of this walk, however, is the fine view it presents of the antique towers and spires of Dinan, on the opposite side of the valley to the rt., and the insight it affords into the curious system of labyrinthine lanes, by which a great part of Brittany is traversed. The country is well wooded, abounding especially in oaks, and each field is surrounded by hedges. The lanes by which it is intersected in all directions, owing to the soft and crumbling nature of the soil, differ little from ditches worn down 8 or 10 ft. below the surface of the fields, and vary in character between a pool or slough of mud, or a mound of hard bare rock. A stranger is almost sure to loose his way among them, so intricate and numerous are their crossings. The country, seamed and grooved by these hollow ways, is like a rabbit warren, and thoroughly explains how the Chouans and Vendeans were able, among such fastnesses, to put to defiance so long the armies of the republican government.

On the opposite side of Dinan, about 1 m. distant, at the bottom of a really romantic little valley, is the spa or Eaux Minérales, a source of saline sulphureous water, good for liver complaints, much resorted to in summer. Alleys have been planted and a sort of pump-room built, which contribute little to the beauty of the spot, though they cannot spoil it. A walk along the paths, cut through the trees along the steep sides of the dell, is highly to be recommended.

The Château de la Garaye is a ruined mansion of the time of Francis I., exhibiting in its falling walls and towers some picturesque bits of architecture, in the style of La Renaissance, intermixed with Gothic ornaments. The last owner, M. de la Garaye, quitting the gay world, converted this house into an hospital, while, with his wife, he devoted all his time and fortune to the care of the sick. To fit themselvs for their duty they both studied medicine and surgery, and his lady became an excellent oculist. The hospital was destroyed at the Revolution, which the benevolent founders fortunately did not live to see, having died 1755-7, but the monument over the graves even of these benefactors of the district, in the churchyard of Faden, did not escape destruction from the ruthless hands of the republican spoilers.

On the road from Dinan to Rennes the small town of Evrau is passed; it is situated on the Canal which joins the Rance to the Ile. The castle of the Beaumanoir here is now modernised. The country beyond is very tame: fields and hedgerows, and few villages. Country houses, where they occur, lie at a distance from the road, without lodges or dressed grounds.

29 La Chapelle Chaussée.

24 Rennes in Rte. 35.

There are 2 roads from Rennes to Nantes:

— a. By Derval 107 kilom. = 66¼ Eng. miles.

16 Bout de Lande.

11 Roudun.

A high hill is crossed before reaching

17 La Breheraye.

9 Derval.

12 Nozay.

14 Bout de Bois.

14 Gesvres.

14 NANTES in Rte. 46.

— b. By Châteaubriant 119 kilom. = 73 Eng. miles.

18 Corps Nuds.

17 Thourie.

18 Châteaubriant (Inn, Hôtel des Voyageurs, small but clean,) is named from an old castle, built 1015, by Briant, Comte de Penthièvre, taken and destroyed in the reign of Charles VIII. by La Tremouille, who left nothing standing but the keep and 2 other towers. The Château Neuf was the residence of Françoise de Foix.

18 La Meilleraye.

About 1 m. on the l. of the road lies a Monastery of the Order of La Trappe. It was sold as national property 1793, and was repurchased 1816 by a Romanist Society of Trappists, who had been settled at Lulworth in Dorsetshire, but their number has been greatly diminished (to 25) since 1830, in consequence of their having mixed themselves up with the Chouan insurrection of that period.

19 Nort is a small town on the l. bank of the Erdre, which becomes navigable here for steamers. One plys daily between Nantes and Nort, to and fro. Below this the Erdre swells out into the form of a lake; on its rt. bank are Chapelle sur Erdre, and the castle of la Gâcherie, residence of the Princess Marguerite de Navarre, sister of Francis I., and authoress of the romances known by the title Heptameron.

A little farther is the castle of Blue Beard, (Gilles de Retz,) whose story is told in Route 58.

18 Carquefou.

11 Nantes, in Rte. 46.

ROUTE 42.

MORLAIX TO NANTES, BY THE MINES OF HUELGOAT AND POULAHOUAN, CARHAIX, PONTIVY, JOSSELIN, AND PLOERMEL.

This is a cross country road, not a post road, but it is described, as it includes several places of interest.

There is a good view of the picturesque town of Morlaix (p. 119.) from the heights crossed on quitting it. The road gradually approaches and surmounts the chain of the Menez Arrés hills, through a desolate country chiefly moorland. The summit level is reached at Croix Court, which is also the boundary of the arrondissements of Morlaix and Châteaulin. About $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. beyond Le Mendi, a hamlet 12 m. from Morlaix, a road turns off on the l. to Huelgoat (4 m. farther). Here is only a poor inn, which, however, can furnish a clean bed and something to eat. Huelgoat is a town of 1040 inhabitants, in a remote and thinly peopled district celebrated for its Mines of lead, containing silver mixed with it. They are situated about $1\frac{1}{4}$ m. from the town in the midst of a most picturesque valley, through which runs a rushing stream, concealed from view at one particular spot by an éboulement of colossal fragments of rocks.

The path (to the mines) is carried through thick woods by the side of a narrow canal or aqueduct, conveying water to move the machinery and the hydraulic pump by which the mine is kept dry. This machine is a masterpiece of mechanical skill, constructed by M. Juncker, an engineer of Alsace, and related to Cuvier. It well deserves the minute attention of all who take an interest in mining or machinery, and has been thought worthy of an eulogistic report, read to the Academy of Science by M. Arago. It has the force of 280 horses, and raises 3 cubic metres 53 centièmes per minute, a height of 754 ft., effected by a column of water equal to 21 cubic inches, falling from a height of 196 ft. It has been at work for many years night and day, its movements are free from the least irregularity or the slightest noise. It is entirely under ground at a considerable depth below the surface. The process of separating the silver from the ores by amalgamation with mercury is also very curious. M. Juncker, who for many years directed these works, has introduced considerable ameliorations on the Saxon method, by means of which large masses of very poor ores have been worked, which were formerly rejected; by this means the prosperity of the Huelgoat mines has increased much of late years. Permission to enter the mines is readily given by the director. The best time for visiting them is at six o'clock, when the gangs of miners are shifted, and the nightworking set relieve those who have toiled through the day. The descent is made by a bucket and rope.

The vein of lead has been traced for more than ½ a mile in a clay slate of the upper Silurian formation.

The lead ore (Galena) is sent to Poulahouan to be smelted.

In the church of Huelgoat is a curious reading desk (lutrin) resting on a pedestal resembling the classic tripod, but of wood, each of the 3 sides ornamented with a figure in bas-relief of a classic character. On one a man with long hair and a mace over his shoulder, with no other clothing than a short cloak, on another a young man in classic garb, bearing a torch in one hand, and a dart in the other; on the third a female bearing a cup and vase, in the guise of a Bacchante. It has been well described by M. Freminville; but nothing is known of its origin or the meaning of its carvings.

The Mènage de la Vierge, is a species of cave formed by fallen masses of granite rock, through which a small stream of black water and of unknown origin flows, in places out of sight. It is possible with a sure foot and steady head to descend into the gulph. Near this is a Rocking Stone.

The Cascades of St. Herbot are worth the walk to them, less on account of the waterfalls themselves, than for the scenery of the little valley in which they lie, varied with dense woods and bare jutting rocks. The village Church, surmounted by a fine square tower on a height above, contains the tomb and effigy of the anchorite St. Herbot, some carved screen-work in the choir, and a rood-loft of most elaborate and beautiful workmanship in the style of the Renaissance. There are 2 painted windows of rich colour with the date 1556. It has a fine W. portal in the decorated style, but bearing the date 1516, an ogee arch ornamented with frizzled foliage, and a still more beautiful S. porch, but the statues are poor. Herbot is a veterinary saint, who cures the diseases of animals, provided a lock of the beast's hair be laid on his altar.

At Branilis in the parish of Locquefret, about 6 m. from Huelgoat, at a distance from any village, surrounded by 3 or 4 hovels, is a fine large Church in the best style of Gothic art, surmounted by a spire, and internally adorned with carving in stone and wood, and with painted glass, now all going to decay.

Poulahouan, on the direct road from Morlaix to Carhaix, contains other lead mines, but inferior in extent and productiveness to those of Huelgoat. Here, however, are the smelting houses in which the ore from both mines is reduced. The galleries of the mine have been driven horizontally ¾ of a mile and vertically more than 600 ft. in the grauwacke.

There is a direct road (15 m.) from Huelgoat to Carhaix, a primitive town, among the hills, in the midst of that most unsophisticated district of ancient Brittany, Cournouailles. It abounds in old houses, with projecting cornices, and carved timber work, and is inhabited by people as old fashioned as their dwellings.

Here is shown the house in which La Tour d'Auvergne was born, in 1743; who, stern republican, as well as brave warrior, steadily refused rank, but died the "premier grenadier de France," in the battle-field on the banks of the Danube. A statue of him by the Piedmontese artist, Marochetti, was erected in the place in 1840.

A little way out of the town on the road to Callac, is an ancient structure said to be a Roman aqueduct. There is also a Roman road which can be traced for more than a mile on the way to St. Gildas. Richard Cœur de Lion was defeated at Carhaix, 1197, by his rebellious vassals, the nobles of Brittany. Six high roads unite here, to Brest, Morlaix, St. Brieuc, Vannes, Châteaulin and Quimper.

A direct road leads from Carhaix to Lorient, by Le Taouet, and over the high range of the Montagne Noire. Not far from Le Taouet, is a very handsome Gothic chapel.

The road to Pontivy and Vannes quits the department of Finisterre soon after leaving Carhaix, passes Rostrénen (department Côtes du Nord), beyond which it crosses the Brest and Nantes canal, and reaches Pontivy (Inn: H. des Voyageurs), an ancient town with old walls and gates, to which a new quarter was tacked on by Napoleon, who changed the name of the place to Napoleonville. At the restoration of the Bourbons, however, his name and his public works were dropped; and many of the buildings remain half finished. The river Blavet, now rendered navigable to the sea at Lorient, and the canal from Brest to Nantes, afford openings for some commerce. The Castle of the Dukes of Brittany is of ancient foundation, but the actual edifice was rebuilt 1485. It is rapidly falling to ruin.

About 6 m. N. of the road to Josselin, is Rohan, cradle of the noble family of that name, now a poor and insignificant village, but prettily situated. Of the Castle, now neglected by the princes its owners, scarcely a morsel of wall remains above the surface; the last fragments having been pulled down recently to build cottages with the stones.

Posting is established on the road between Pontivy and 34 Josselin. — Inn: Poste; Croix d'Or.

The Castle of Josselin, an ancient feudal fortress, founded on a rock above the river Oest, was the residence of the famous Constable de Clisson, who added a donjon, now destroyed, to the building, and died here, 1407, in a chamber facing the river, still pointed out. The oldest parts are the round towers, on the outside, built of slate. The most remarkable portion of the building is the inner front, in the irregular but picturesque style of Gothic in its latest form, equivalent to our Elizabethan, and dating probably from the 16th century. It is surmounted by pointed gables, and no two divisions correspond: the windows surmounted by Gothic canopies, interspersed with parapets of interlacing tracery, in the midst of which the words, "à plus," the motto of the Rohans, to whom the castle still belongs, cut in letters of stone, is constantly recurring. From the initials A. V. with a coronet, it is supposed to have been built by Alain VIII. Vicomte de Josselin.

The Tomb of Olivier de Clisson, in the Church of Nôtre Dame, was violated at the Revolution, and the effigies of himself in armour, and his wife Marguerite de Rohan, through whom he inherited the castle, were broken to pieces. The mutilated fragments were to be seen lately in the sacristy. A modern mausoleum has been erected in execrable taste.

In the midst of a wild open heath, half way between Josselin and Ploermel, a modern obelisk marks the spot where the Combat des Trente took place. Here, if we may believe Breton poets and writers of modern date (for ancient authority is wanting for the event, and many have doubted whether it ever occurred), close to an oak, which has long since disappeared, called chêne de mie voie, a battle is said to have been fought 1351, between 30 Bretons on the side of Charles de Blois, and 30 partisans of Jean de Montfort, consisting of 20 English, 4 Flemings, and 6 Bretons, there not being enough English on the spot to form the full complement of combatants. The challenge was given by Du Beaumanoir, the Breton leader of the garrison of Josselin, to his opponents, who composed part of the garrison of Plöermel, in consequence of an alleged infraction of a treaty by the latter. The English were led on by a knight, whom the French call Brembro (? Pembroke), and after a very stout resistance were vanquished, chiefly owing to the death of their leader. The combat of the 30 is not mentioned in the oldest copies of Froissart, the cotemporary chronicler of the wars of Brittany, and is doubted by Daru in his history; notwithstanding which, the monumental obelisk erected since the Restoration, in the place of one destroyed at the Revolution, headed "Vive le Roi! Les Bourbons toujours!" gives a list of the names of the 30 Bretons engaged in it.

12 Ploërmel in Rte. 45.

15 Malestroit.

There is no posting from this place to Redon, a town of 4500 inhabitants on the Vilaine, which is a tidal river up to this point, and navigable for vessels of considerable size, while the navigation is continued by locks above this to Rennes.

The Church, originally belonging to the Abbey, is a fine Gothic building with a semicircular E. end. The conventual buildings are turned into a college.

The Château de Beaumont, in the vicinity of the town, retains 3 towers of considerable antiquity attached to its modern constructions. There are extensive slate quarries near this.

19 Rozay.

24 Bout de Bois. We here enter Rte. 41 a. p. 135.

14 Gesvres.

14 NANTES. (Route 46.)

ROUTE 44.

BREST TO NANTES — BY QUIMPER, AURAY, VANNES, AND LA ROCHE BERNARD — EXCURSIONS TO LORIENT AND TO CARNAC AND LOCK-MARIAKER.

307 kilom. = 191 Eng. m.

A Diligence (mail) runs daily.

Between Brest and Châteaulin the steamer (see below) is preferable to the diligence.

The high road from Brest to Châteaulin makes a great circuit, in order to avoid the creeks jutting out of the Bay of Brest: it follows the Paris road to 20 Landerneau (Rte. 44.), then turns abruptly S. to 20 Faou, seated on a river which becomes all slime at low water. The costume of the people in these little towns, and indeed in this part of Brittany, is such as was worn in England in the time of Charles I. and II. — slouched hats, trunk hose, (bragon bras, i. e., brogues or breeks,) very wide, and with many folds, the hair hanging down the men's backs, reminding one of the pictures in Isaac Walton. The black charcoal burners thus attired have a very singular appearance. The women here wear a sort of cravat round their necks. The Pardon (§ 5.), celebrated four times a year at Rumengol near Faou, is attended with very curious ceremonies.

From the high ground beyond Faou, a pretty view is obtained on the rt.; the road, which is very hilly, next dips into a wooded and picturesque dell, at the bottom of which is a royal manufactory of gunpowder, called Pont de Puis. Another hill surmounted, and we reach the banks of the Châteaulin river at Port de Launay, the point of arrival and departure of the steamer recently established.

The steamer runs only three times a week, making the voyage from Brest to Port Launay, 2 m. short of Châ-teaulin, in four hours. It traverses the Rade de Brest through its entire length, and thus enables the stranger fully to enjoy the beauties of that fine salt-water lake. For a general description of it, and of the vast range of batteries which defend it, see p. 125. Rte. 36. On setting out, the opening of the Goulet is seen on the rt., and on the l. the wide creek or inlet which extends up to Landerneau. The steamer passes between

Rt. the Pointe des Espagnols, the extreme projection of the peninsula of Quélern, and l. the Pointe de l'Armorique, both strongly defended by forts. During the wars of the Ligue, a Spanish force sent over to aid the Duc de Mecœur in his resistance to Henri IV., took possession of the point, and intrenching themselves on it, completely commanded the entry of the roads. Their fort was at length captured by assault by Maréchal d'Aumont, assisted by 1800 English, commanded by Col. Norris, sent over by Queen Elizabeth, after an obstinate defence, and all within it put to the sword — the French say, chiefly through the savageness of the English.

The peninsula of Quélern, consumed on both sides by the ever restless waves, exhibits a fringe of notched and jagged rocks, which, as they become undermined by the ocean, are constantly giving way. Immense fissures are formed every year in the ground above, and are followed by numerous landslips. These bare and exposed promontories covered with heath, and cut up and notched by the waves, were the chosen site of the worship of the Druids, and abound in those curious Celtic remains called Druidic stones. (§ 4.)

L. The Bay of Daoulas, or "Double murder," is so called from the slaughter of two saints by a pagan chief, which gave rise to an Abbey whose ruins still remain. They are chiefly of the 15th century, with earlier portions in the round style. Near this are the quarries of the Kersanton stone, so much used for the churches of Brittany. (§ 5.)

Rt. The steamer next enters the inlet of Châteaulin, bending round the projecting promontory Landevennec, on which are ruins of a church attached to a once celebrated Abbey, the Breton Chartreuse, which was destroyed at the Revolution, and its valuable charters and MS. sent to Brest to be made into cartridges by the artillery.

The banks of the inlet, now contracting into a river, are picturesque, but the course of the stream is very winding.

At Port de Launay the voyage for steamers ends; the river Aulne being crossed by a weir and lock a short way above this, to render it navigable for barges as far as Châteauneuf, where the canal to Nantes commences.

There are many slate quarries on the banks of the river near to 19 Châteaulin. Inn, Poste, tolerable. A small, but not remarkable town in a pretty, park-like valley, having a bridge over the Aulne, and an old castle in ruins on a rock behind it. At Pleyben, 7 m. E. of this, is a fine Gothic Church, with a lofty tower and well preserved sculptured portal, bearing inside of it statues of the twelve Apostles; the windows are adorned with painted glass. In the churchyard is a very curious Calvaire resting on four arches, on the sides and the top of which our Saviour's passion is represented in bas-reliefs and statues, more than 120 in number, not ill drawn, the drapery especially. The costume is that of the 16th century, yet the date affixed to the monument is 1650.

Quimper may be reached from Châteaulin in about 6 hours. The road here quits the valley of the Aulne by a steep ascent 3 m. long; from the very top of which, an open moorland tract, you still look down upon Châteaulin and its valley. This ridge is called the Black Mountain. It was near this part of the road that a party of intrusive clergy and bishops, appointed by the Revolutionist government, proceeding to a confirmation at Brest, were stopped, dragged out of the coach by a party of Chouans, and murdered on the highway.

24 Quimper. (Corentin.) Inn, H. de l'Epée, the only good one.

Quimper is capital of the department of Finisterre, though it has only 9860 inhabitants, while Brest has 30,000. It bears the stamp of antiquity as much as any town in Brittany, and is still partly surrounded by the walls and watch towers, erected for its defence by Pierre de Dreux, who, though a bishop, was also a great captain in its time. The Cathedral rears its stately W. front with a deep sculptured portal, rich in foliage, but much fractured between two massive towers, on one side of the market place. It is a large and fine edifice, begun 1424, and has this peculiarity, that its nave is not on a line with the choir, which inclines considerably to the N. E., although the irregularity is not so perceptible as to be a defect. The interior is of a stately height; in the S. aisle is a curious grated niche. The pulpit is carved and gilt. The sculpture of the porch is like that of Folgoat in the beautiful treatment of the foliage. The towers though massive are not heavy, being set off by the slit windows 30 ft. high which pierce them, and by the light open parapet with which they terminate.

The ruined Church of the Cordeliers begun 1224, with the elegant though mutilated cloister appertaining to it and the chapel of Lockmaria, on the outskirts of the town to the S., apparently older than any in Quimper, and a work of the middle of the 12th century, will be appreciated by the antiquary.

The best and most modern houses line a quay on the rt. bank of the Odel, which flows through Quimper in the form of a canal. On its l. bank stands the Prefecture, fronting a sort of Champ de Mars, behind which a tall and steep hill rises, covered with a hanging wood, cut into terraces and zigzag paths, forming an agreeable public walk, leading to the top, whence there is a fine view of the river, which expands greatly below the town.

Quimper is said to be an agreeable residence; its situation is very pretty, and some trout fishing might be had in the neighbouring streams; the climate is bad, however.

For those who have time and inclination there remains to be visited near Quimper the picturesque manoir of Coat Bily a little to the rt. of the road to Châteaulin (date 1517); the elegant and well preserved chapel of La Mère de Dieu, 16th century; the Moustoir, an ancient fortified mansion on the way to Concarneau.

A new high road has been made from this to the Pointe or Bec du Raz, a storm-beaten promontory surmounted by a lighthouse, which though nearly 270 ft. above the sea, is constantly covered by the spray during tempests. The spot has little grandeur, but a savage wildness; the sea around is always tempest-tossed, and the shore of the Baie des Trépassés, so called from the number of dead bodies washed upon it, is perpetually covered with wrecks. The flat bare rocky peninsula of Penmarch abounds in Celtic remains. Near Soc'h is a Druidic parallelogram of upright stones, and the finest dolmen in Finisterre, consisting of 16 vertical slabs supporting two horizontal or tabular stones.

The road out of Quimper to Quimperlé has been much improved of late, by being carried round the flanks of the hills, instead of over their tops.

21 Rosporden stands on the borders of a large pond.

25 Quimperlé (Inn: q. if any good one), is seated amidst hills, on a brawling river, the Elle, and is a pretty town.

The large mass of building on one side of the Place, now serving as Mairie, &c., was originally a convent of Benedictines, attached to which, behind, is the Church of Ste. Croix, a building calculated to interest the antiquary and architect from its age (10th or 11th century?), and its form, a rotunda surmounted by a dome with 4 projecting apses, one of which has been modernised. The arrangement of the central piers, concave inwardly, convex outwardly, the pilasters attached to them, the narrow, loopholed, roundheaded windows high up in the wall, all mark its antiquity. 3 flights of steps lead up to the altar, beneath which is a curious and still more ancient crypt, entered from the outside. It contains the tomb of St. Gurlot, with a hole in the stone through which the Bretons thrust their arms to be cured of rheumatism. Above the main entrance to the church is a bas-relief of good execution, of the age of Francis I. representing the 4 Evangelists and the Theological Virtues. There is another church (St. Michel) on the top of the hill, its groundwork Romanesque, with additions of the 12th and 15th centuries.

Travellers bound for Lorient (where the Hôtel de France is a good inn), take a route to the rt. of our line on quitting Quimperlé. There is nothing remarkable in that dull modern town of straight streets and 19,095 inhabitants save its Dockyard, which is not readily shown to an Englishman, and which he need not care to see, as it is much inferior to those of his own country. The town is strongly fortified, and stands in the angle between two creeks, one of which, the estuary of the Scorff, forms the port militaire, the other the port marchand. They expand below the town, where they are met by the estuary of the Blavet from the E. and expand into the Roads; but as the dockyard occupies nearly the entire margin, and is surrounded on all sides by a high wall, all view of the water is excluded from the town, and contributes nothing to remove the monotonous dulness of its dirty streets, whose meagre houses look as though they were built merely to be knocked down. There is but one agreeable spot, and that is the tasteful garden of the Préfet Maritime, which is of course private. An excellent bird's-eye view of the dockyard may be obtained from the top of the tower of the parish church.

At the entrance of the Dockyard is the house of the Préfet Maritime. The adjacent buildings are part of those erected by the "Compagnie des Indes Orientales," whose establishment here, 1666, converted into a town a previously obscure village. The company was dissolved 1770. Law of Lauriston, the South Sea schemer, occupied the house which is now the Préfecture. Near to it stands a narrow look-out tower 180 ft. high, overtopping all other buildings, affording a view of the whole roadstead and of the coast far and wide, near which is a small astronomical observatory. Lorient is exclusively a building dock; there are no bagnes nor convicts here. There are 15 or 16 building slips (cales) here, and on the opposite side of the creek, but only one has a permanent roof, under which the Bayard, 90 guns, is now building; the rest are mostly frigates and steam-vessels. A new Fonderie is in progress near to the shed for masting vessels; 2 large mast-houses, and very extensive workshops, provided with a steam-engine, have just been finished. The utmost activity prevails. — (August, 1841.) The roads open out at the lower extremity of the creek which forms the port; they are partly dry at low water. Some way down is the Ile St. Michel covered with the yellow buildings of the Lazaret, and beyond it, on a projecting point, the fortress of Port Louis, commanding the entrance of the harbour, mounting 500 cannon?.

A steamer goes from Lorient to Nantes and vice versâ every week, touching at Belle Isle.

The estuary of the Scorff is crossed by a wooden bridge in going to Auray from Lorient.

A mail runs between Quimperlé and Nantes daily in 36 hours, through Lorient and Hennebon. The direct road to Hennebon passes out of the department Finisterre into the Morbihan about 6 m. from Quimperlé.

The river Blavet is crossed by an iron suspension bridge to reach 23 Hennebon, 4477 inhab.

An antique town situated on its l. bank, once the chief port of Morbihan. Its name must be familiar to all who have read Froissart, through the noble defence which it made in the succession war of Brittany 1342, during two sieges sustained by Jeanne de Montfort against the armies of Philippe de Valois and Charles of Blois. The capture and imprisonment in Paris of Jean de Montfort would have ruined his cause in Brittany but for his heroic countess, who, possessing the courage of a man and the heart of a lion, threw herself into Hennebon, strengthened its works, filled it with provisions, and animated the courage of the garrison and inhabitants to resist to the last extremity. To marshal troops, to lead them to the onset, to fight hand to hand armed cap-à-pied with sword and casque, to manage a war-horse with the skill of the most adept cavalier, to preside in council, or dictate treaties; such were the accomplishments of this noble dame. Several times did she boldly sally forth at the head of her troops to assail the enemy, and on one occasion set fire to his camp, and when the besiegers turned round to defend it in such numbers as to cut off her retreat into the town, she forced her way through them and effected her escape to Auray, whence, after beating up the country around for 5 days, she returned in triumph to Hennebon with a force augmented from 300 to 600 men, and entered the gates in safety. At length the last extremity arrived, provisions were nearly exhausted, her counsellors advised surrender, and articles of capitulation were drawn up. She was forced unwillingly to consent to yield, provided at the end of 3 days succour did not arrive from England. On the eve of the 2d day as she was gazing from her watch-tower, she perceived the English fleet which had been detained by contrary winds, entering the mouth of the Blavet full sail, bringing the brave knight Sir Walter de Manny, with a strong force of English knights and archers, and plenty of provisions. All thoughts of surrender were now abandoned, and after one or two successful sorties, the siege was raised. Two years after this, Edward III. in person landed here with an army of 12,000, which laid siege to Vannes. In 1375, however, the town was taken by Duguesclin, and the English garrison all put to the sword, except the commanders Wisk and Prior, who were reserved for ransom. The only relics now remaining in the town from that period of bloodshed are a portion of the town wall on the side of the river, and an ancient gate which led to the castle; it is a pointed gateway between 2 very massive round towers, and is now a prison. The Church is said to have been built by the English; it is unfinished, and only remarkable for a lofty and elegant portal, recessed and fringed, not unlike that at Harfleur, surmounted by a crocketted steeple. There are some picturesque old houses here.

Near Baud (a poor town destitute of a tolerable inn) 15 m. N. of Hennebon, is the statue called Venus of Quinipily, from a castle of that name now razed to the ground, on whose site it is placed. It is of granite, coarsely worked and badly designed; the arms are crossed in front over a piece of drapery like a stole, descending halfway down the thighs; in other respects it is naked. Nothing is known respecting its origin, and the conjectures respecting it are very vague. One person supposes from its Egyptian character that it was a Gallic Isis, and it is called Venus only in the inscriptions on the pedestal set up 1689. This much is certain, that down to the 17th century it was worshipped with foul rites, and is even now looked on with superstitious veneration by the peasantry.

A dreary and monotonous country of moor and heathland is crossed on quitting Hennebon to reach

13 Landevan.

15 Auray. — Inn: Pavillon d'en haut; tolerable. A town of 3734 inhabitants, on the Auray; in no wise remarkable, but from its position it is the best starting point for a visit to the Celtic antiquities of Carnac and Lockmariaker. Jolting gigs may be hired here for 10 fr. to go and return.

The Castle of Auray, no part of which is now standing, is said to have been founded by King Arthur. A battle fought under its walls 1364, settled the succession to the dukedom of Brittany in favour of young de Montfort, son-in-law to King Edward III., who owed the victory to his English allies, led on by the brave John Chandos. In the opposite ranks fought Duguesclin, who was made prisoner by Chandos, and Olivier de Clisson, who lost an eye in the battle. Charles de Blois was slain in the thickest of the fight, and there fell on his side not less than 5000 men, while the English lost a very small number.

St. Anne d'Auray is a celebrated pilgrimage church 6 m. from the town, frequented usually by 6000 devotees from all parts of Brittany in the month of July, but not otherwise remarkable. It is a modern, and not handsome building.

In another direction, about a mile from Auray, is the nunnery of the Chartreuse, occupied by the Sœurs de la Sagesse, who instruct a school for the deaf and dumb. Attached to their church is the Expiatory Monument erected by the Bourbons to the memory of the 950 unfortunate Emigrés and Royalists, who composed the ill-advised expedition to Quiberon, 1795, and who either fell there, or were shot by the republicans on the banks of the Auray, at the spot marked by a Grecian temple not far distant from the Chartreuse. The monument which has been placed in the church to record their unhappy fate is not a work of merit, either in general design, or in the execution of the bas-relief intended to adorn it. It bears the names of those who fell.

The village of Brech was the birthplace of George Cadoudal, the leader of the Chouans. Morbihan was the centre of their insurrection.

The Excursion to Carnac and Lockmariaker may be made in one day, by pursuing the following plan, and provided the traveller can walk 8 m., the only mode of passing between these two places being on foot. If the wind be favourable, he may take a boat and descend the Auray to Lockmariaker, a pleasant voyage of a little more than an hour; if he visit Gavre Inis (N. B. in this case take candles and matches), 1 or 1½ hour more is required: — from Lockmariaker on foot to Carnac will take 2 hours. He must, however, beforehand, hire a gig at Auray, and send it on to Carnac to wait for him. He may return to Auray in the gig in 2½ hours.

In sailing down the estuary of the Auray he will pass

Rt. the Château de Plessis Kaer, a Gothic castle, with additions of the time of Francis I., and the ruins of another called Rosnareu. Near this the boatmen assert that ruins of the piles of a bridge, which they attribute to Cæsar, may be discovered at low water in the bed of the river.

Rt. A perfect Château called Kerentrec. The river now widens out, and a little further on we enter

The Morbihan (Little Sea), an inland sea or archipelago from which the department is named, so thickly beset with islands, that the common belief assigns them a number equal to the days of the year. The shores on all sides have a most jagged outline, fringed with capes, creeks and inlets; they are of granite barely covered with the scantiest vegetable soil, supporting a growth of barren heath; very often the surface is mere bare rock. Two narrow peninsulas or arms, projecting from the E. and W., separate this gulf from the sea, allowing only a narrow passage between them. This archipelago is very difficult to navigate—a perfect labyrinth of islands, separated by intricate passages, which only the experienced navigator can thread. The land rises but little above the sea; it is sterile in the extreme; the peasantry are miserably poor, and barely win a scanty crop from a soil whose proper productions seem heath and furze. Yet this melancholy and mysterious, but uninviting district, seems to have been the head quarters of the religion of the Druids—the number of barrows, cairns, dolmens and menhirs, &c., is extraordinary.

The island of Gâvr Innis, or Gaffr' né, nearly opposite Locmariaker, may be visited on the way thither, diverging a mile or 2 to the E. Here, underneath a cairn of stones (galgal), a subterraneous chamber has recently been discovered and cleared out. You enter by a triangular opening, crawling on hands and knees through a vestibule leading into a chamber, regularly formed, like a dolmen, of vertical stones covered by very large horizontal slabs. This chamber communicates with a much narrower gallery paved and roofed with stones, more than 40 feet long: the entire length of the chamber being at least 50 ft.; its direction is from E. to W. Curious and unexplained figures of a rude kind, chiefly of a wedge form—intermixed with others evidently representing serpents—are engraved on the under surface of the stones; and one of them, forming a sort of partition, is pierced with a hole wide enough to pass the arm through, like the handle of a shield. Nothing has been discovered within this inexplicable structure; the stones composing it are granite.

Locmariaker is a poor village, not possessing accommodation of the commonest kind for a traveller, nor even affording provisions. It stands on a heathy promontory projecting between the ocean and the gulf of Morbihan, but is deserted by the tide at low water, so that one must land at a sort of pier a little to the N. of the village, near the Mont Hellu, a mound of stones or galgal, about ¾ m. N. W. of the village. There is another similar mound to the S. E. called butte de Cæsar. The most interesting of the Celtic monuments lie to the N. of the village, between it and the Mont Hellu. Contiguous to the last house is a menhir 20 feet long, overthrown like every other in this district; a little to the l. on an eminence a dolmen, the top stone of which is 12 to 15 ft. square, and in parts 3 ft. thick. Still farther to the N. lies prostrate and broken into 4 fragments the largest Menhir known; it measures nearly 60 ft. in length, and 5 or 6 ft. in height, as it lies. It is difficult to imagine by what force so huge a mass can have been snapped short across, with such clean fractures. Some have attributed its fall to lightning. Near to it is another dolmen called Dol ar Marchant, the Merchant's Table, which seems larger than any other in the neighbourhood; it consists of 2 table-stones, one of them 16 ft. by 12, supported on 3 vertical ones; it is possible to creep under it, and remark the singular figures cut on its under surface. Between it and the Mont Hellu, a vast heap of cinders is said to have been found. (?)

There are many other similar monuments near Locmariaker, but these are the principal ones.

Locmariaker (i. e. place of the Virgin Mary) is supposed to occupy the site of the ancient Dariorigum, the capital of the Venetes, and its position agrees with Cæsar's description of their "oppida in extremis linguis, promontoriisque posita," and some substructures of houses laid bare near the village, are attributed to the Romans.

The peninsula of Rhuys, which, with that of Locmariaker, form, as it were, the natural piers separating the sea of Morbihan from the Atlantic, contains the following objects of curiosity. 1. Le Grand Mont, called also la Butte de Tumiac, situated about 4 m. from Sarzeau, an obscure little town, but memorable as the birth-place of the author of Gil Blas. It is the largest tumulus existing in France, 100 ft. high and 300 in circumference, and is planted near the extremity of the promontory. 2. The ruined church of the Abbey of St. Gildas de Rhuys, remarkable because it was the retreat of Abelard in 1125, who narrowly escaped poisoning at the hands of the refractory and ill-conditioned monks, whose dissolute manners he resolutely repressed. The remains consist of a modern nave, and a very ancient choir in the Romanesque style, terminating at the E. end in 3 semicircular chapels. The walls of the transept are partly of herring-bone masonry. The date of the oldest part of the building is probably 1038. The tomb of the saint is pointed out; an ancient font deserves notice. St. Gildas is about 21 m. from Vannes. On the way to St. Gildas from Vannes, 3. the Castle of Succinio may be visited. It is a fine and perfect feudal fortress, built 1260 by John the Red, Duke of Brittany. It has nearly the form of a pentagon flanked by 6 round towers. It was the birth-place of the Constable de Richemont, who defeated the English at Formigny.

Between Carnac and Locmariaker, a deep inlet of the sea penetrates far inland, and is crossed half way by a ferry; the way is very intricate, from the number of paths, so as scarcely to be found without a guide, and the road is very bad. The distance, 8 m., is practicable only on foot.

The Ferry of Cherispere over this inlet is prettily situated, and commands a view of the little port of La Trinité in the bay of Crach.

A little to the W. of the ferry, near some salt works, at the bottom of a shallow dell, is a rude monument to mark the grave of a royalist, shot on the spot, 1801.

The approach to Carnac is marked by the prominent Cairn, or Tombelle de St. Michel, so called from the chapel surmounting it. It is a cone of loose stones artificially heaped together, standing at the E. extremity of the great army of stones of Carnac, of which it commands a view, as well as of the sea and promontory of Quiberon.

Carnac. The Soleil, chez Rio, the only house of entertainment, is a very humble cabaret, possessing only the commonest accommodation, though it will afford something to eat. The people are very civil however.

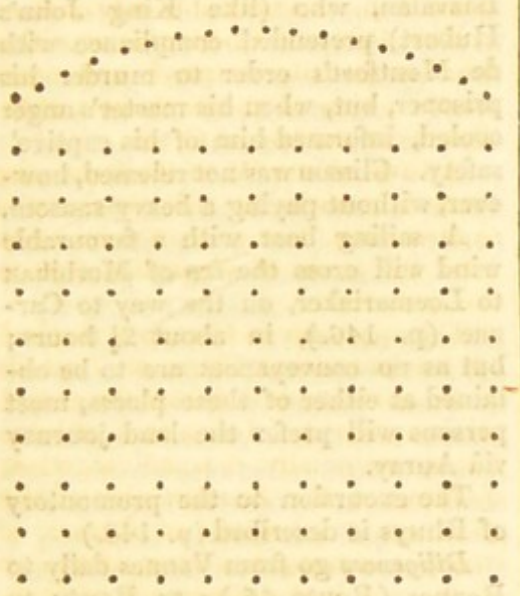
The great Celtic Monument of Carnac, the most extensive in France, is situated about ¾ m. from this remote village, and is traversed by the road from Auray. In the midst of a wide heath, as dreary and blasted in aspect as that "near Forres," extends this brotherhood of grey stones, — rude blocks set on end, angular, showing no marks of polish, and hirsute with the long moss which has covered the hard surface of the granite, and marks the length of time they must have stood in their present position. At first sight, it is difficult to distinguish any order, so many are overthrown, and the gaps left in the lines by depredations are so numerous and wide; indeed, every house and every wall in the vicinity seems to have been built out of this ready quarry. The great mass of the stones extends between two windmills. They are arranged in 11 lines, forming 10 avenues, with a curved row of 18 stones at one end, touching at its extremities the two outside rows.



The ranks are best preserved, and the stones are highest near the farm called Menec. There are, it is said, not less than 12,000 stones; blocks of the granite which forms the basis of the country, and which is barely covered with soil, and in many places projects naked above it. None exceed 18 ft. in height, and a very large proportion are cubical masses, not more than 3 ft. high. They give one the idea of a regiment of soldiers, and the tradition of the country respecting their origin is, that St. Cornely (Cornelius), hard pressed by an army of Pagans, fled to the sea shore, but finding no boat to further his escape, uttered a prayer, which converted his pursuers into stones. Of the numerous theories invented by learned antiquaries to account for the origin and object of these stones, several are not less absurd nor more improbable than the legend just mentioned; none are satisfactory. The opinions perhaps least unworthy of consideration would suppose either that it was a burial place on the site of some great battle field, and that each stone marked a grave, or that it was a great temple dedicated to serpent worship. It was probably connected with some of those rites of initiation which formed part of the Druidical religion, and were derived from the same source as the Greek mysteries.

At Erdevan, about 8 m. W. of Carnac, and again at St. Barbe, between Carnac and Erdevan, there are similar assemblages of stones, but not so numerous. Some have maintained that these three systems of rude pillars were once united, but there is no evidence of this. The piles of stones invariably follow the same direction from E. to W. One can scarcely see Carnac without comparing it with Stonehenge; and it must be admitted that in spite of the vast multitude of stones, the few and gigantic masses of Salisbury plain are far more impressive than the long array of the petrified army on the heath of Morbihan. At Carnac there are no cross-stones raised on the top of the upright slabs, as at Stonehenge.

The Peninsula of Quiberon stretches 10 m. S. into the sea, a little to the W. of the village of Carnac. Its name is associated with melancholy recollections of the ill-contrived and ill-executed expedition, consisting of 6000 French emigrants in the pay of England, who were landed there from a British fleet, 1795, and after a futile attempt to break through the Republican armies opposed to them, were for the most part driven into the sea by General Hoche. The surprise by Hoche of Fort Penthièvre, which guards the entrance of the peninsula, and of which the Emigrés had made themselves masters on first landing, decided the fate of the expedition. Sombreuil, their brave leader, when expelled from it, drew up his little band on the farthest extremity of the sand, where they made the most determined resistance, so as to call down the admiration of their antagonists and fellow countrymen. Humbert, the republican general, advanced with a flag of truce, and promised that their lives should be spared if they laid down their arms. A storm prevented the British fleet rendering them any assistance; one corvette alone for a time checked the Republicans by its destructive fire, and a few of the fugitives were brought off in the boats of the squadron; but many, including women and children, perished in the waves. 950 unfortunate men, most of them persons of rank or station, who capitulated on promise of amnesty with their commander, Sombreuil, were, in spite of that, conveyed to Auray as prisoners of war, and shot there (see p. 144.). The descent on Quiberon was an example of the danger of disgrace and failure which England runs by "waging a little war."

The road from Auray to Carnac is not good; the latter part is very bad.

There is nothing to note between Auray and 18 Vannes (Inn, Hôtel du Commerce, tolerable). This town, capital of the department of Morbihan (population 10,395), is built at the extremity of a narrow inlet, branching out from the gulf of Morbihan, and about 15 m. from the open sea. It possesses in an eminent degree the character of antiquity which distinguishes most Breton towns, in its narrow streets, overhanging houses, massive town walls and gates, but has no curiosities to detain the stranger. The portal of carved Kersanton stone, and the towers of the Cathedral, and a tower in the centre of the town, erroneously called Tour du Connetable, because Olivier de Clisson was said to have been confined in it, 1387, are the only buildings worth mentioning. 3 or 4 old convents, suppressed at the Revolution, now serve for barracks, and similar purposes.

The castle into which the Constable de Clisson was entrapped, under pretence of asking his opinion of the new fortifications, by John (IV.) de Montfort, who then locked the door upon him, and loaded him with chains, was the Château de l'Hermine, which was razed to the ground in the 16th century. Clisson owed his life to the forbearance of the governor, Bazvalan, who (like King John's Hubert) pretended compliance with de Montfort's order to murder his prisoner, but, when his master's anger cooled, informed him of his captive's safety. Clisson was not released, however, without paying a heavy ransom.

A sailing boat with a favourable wind will cross the sea of Morbihan to Locmariaker, on the way to Carnac (p. 146.), in about 2½ hours; but as no conveyances are to be obtained at either of these places, most persons will prefer the land journey viâ Auray.

The excursion to the promontory of Rhuys is described (p. 146.)

Diligences go from Vannes daily to Rennes (Route 45.); to Brest; to Nantes.

Through a country abounding in heath and broom, we pass through

25 Muzillac to

15 Roche Bernard, on the l. bank of the Vilaine, which is here crossed by a remarkably fine Suspension Bridge of iron wire, supported on 2 piers of granite masonry, each approached by 3 lofty arches of granite. The opening between the two points of suspension measures 626 ft., the elevation of the road way above high-water mark 108 ft. In its general appearance it very much resembles the Menai bridge; it was constructed under the superintendence of M. Chaley, the engineer of the bridge of Freiburg, in Switzerland. It was completed 1839, and subjected to the trial of its strength, which the French law requires, by means of 2 rows of 115 carts and carriages heavily laden on the carriage way, and of 117 barrows filled with stones, on the footpath, which it stood without the least symptom of weakness.

The road leading to and from the bridge is well engineered, and leaves the town of Roche Bernard, on one side. A new Inn (Hôtel Silvestre, tolerable) has been built on the new road, ¾ m. S. of the bridge. Those who remember the tedious and dangerous ferry which this bridge replaces, and all the trouble and inconveniences of embarking and disembarking, will rejoice in the improvement. There is nothing of interest beyond this; the country is very dreary, with few hills; the road in the department of the Loire Inférieure is only now (1841) beginning to be macadamized.

19 Pont Château.

16 Le Moire. At Savenay, on the rt. of our road, in December 1793, the last relics of that daring army of Vendéan peasants, which had crossed the Loire 6 weeks before 80,000 strong, now reduced to 8000 or 10,000, made a last stand against the Republicans, but their obstinate bravery was of little avail against overpowering numbers. They fought long after their ammunition was exhausted, even women taking part in the combat, but were at length cut to pieces or made prisoners, 3000 only escaping back into La Vendée.

11 Temple. Glimpses of the estuary of the Loire, running parallel with our road, are seen on the rt. Near Santron, through which the road passes, is the Château de Buron, one of the residences of Madame de Sevigné. The approach to Nantes is marked by the number of neat country houses.

23 NANTES (in Route 46.).

ROUTE 45.

RENNES TO VANNES BY PLOËRMEL, AND TO CARNAC.

92 kilom. = 57 Eng. m.
A diligence daily.

15 Mordelles.

20 Plélan.

24 Ploërmel (Inn, Hôtel du Commerce), a town of 4875 inhabitants.

In the Parish Church are the monumental effigies in armour of Dukes John II. (1305) and III. (1341) of Brittany. They were brought from the church of the Carmelites, founded by John II., who had fought in Syria against the Infidels, and had visited Mount Carmel; the sculpture is good, and they are tolerably perfect: the church was destroyed at the Revolution. These statues are interesting examples of the costume and armour of the time. There is some painted glass in the church.

About 7 m. W. of Ploërmel is the Castle of Josselin (R. 42).

10 Roc St. André.

16 Pont Guillemet.

Beyond this, about 1 m. to the rt. of the road, is the ruined Castle of Elven, one of the best preserved fortresses of the middle ages in Brittany, built on the model, it is said, of some castle in Syria. It stands on a flat, surmounted by a lofty octagonal keep tower. Elven is interesting to an Englishman, because young Henry of Richmond (afterwards Henry VII.) was shut up in it for many years along with his uncle, the earl of Pembroke, by Francis II., Duke of Brittany. The two English fugitives, escaping from their own country after the battle of Tewkesbury, were driven by a storm on the coast of Brittany, and Henry remained a prisoner nearly 15 years, until 1484, when, escaping into France, he accepted the invitation of friends in England to supplant the tyrant Richard III.

17 Vannes. (R. 44.; where the excursion to the Druidical Monuments of Carnac is also described.)

ROUTE 46.

PARIS TO NANTES, BY RAMBOUILLET, CHARTRES, LE MANS, AND ANGERS.

394 kilom. = 244½ Eng. m.

Malleposte daily in 28 to 30 hours. Diligences daily.

The first part of the road by

13 Sevres to

6 VERSAILLES, is described in R. 35. N. B. 8 kilom. "de faveur" above the real distance are reckoned in the first stage, and 4 in the second. The road to Rambouillet is uninteresting: it divides into two at Trapes; the rt. hand branch is the road to Brest (R. 35. 36.). Near Magny Les Hameaux are the scanty remains of the once celebrated abbey of Port Royal des Champs, destroyed by royal decree, 1709, at the instigation of the Jesuits, as the head quarters of Jansenism, after the nuns, its tenants, had been subjected to the most cruel persecutions in order to compel them to subscribe to the bull of Alexander VII. against the doctrines of Jansen. In 1644, a number of learned men and profound divines professing the same doctrines, settled in a farm house near the convent, called La Grange, repairing hither for study; and here composed those works which, as "they were published anonymously, are known by the name of their place of residence. Arnauld, Paschal, Nichols, are among the Messieurs de Port Royal,—an appellation so glorious in the 17th century." — Hallam. Boileau was their friend, and Racine, who wrote their history, their pupil.

"He whose journey lies from Versailles to Chevreuse, will soon find himself at the brow of a steep cleft or hollow, intersecting the monotonous plain across which he has been passing. The brook which winds through the verdant meadows beneath him, stagnates into a large pool, reflecting the solitary Gothic arch, the water mill, and the dove-cot, which rise from its banks, with the farm house, the decayed towers, the forest trees, and innumerable shrubs and creepers which clothe the slopes of the valley. France has many a lovelier prospect, though this is not without its beauty, and many a field of more heart-stirring interest, though this, too, has been ennobled by heroic daring; but through the length and breadth of that land of chivalry and of song, the traveller will in vain seek a spot so sacred to genius, to piety, and to virtue. That arch is all which remains of the once crowded monastery of Port-Royal. In those woods Racine first learned the language — the universal language — of poetry. Under the roof of that humble farm-house, Pascal, Arnauld, Nicole, De Sacc, and Tillemont, meditated those works which, as long as civilization and Christianity survive, will retain their hold on the gratitude and reverence of mankind. There were given innumerable proofs of the graceful good humour of Henri IV. To this seclusion retired the heroine of the Fronde, Ann Geneviève, Duchess of Longueville, to seek the peace the world could not give. Madame de Sevigné discovered here a place "tout propre à inspirer le désir de faire son salut." From the petit Trianon and Marly, there came hither to worship God many a courtier and many a beauty, heart-broken or jaded with the very vanity of vanities — the idolatry of their fellow mortals. Survey French society in the 17th century from what aspect you will, it matters not, at Port Royal will be found the most illustrious examples of whatever imparted to that motley assemblage any real dignity or permanent regard. Even to the mere antiquarian it was not without a lively interest." — Edin. Rev. St.

The Château of Dampierre, in the vale of Chevreuse, has lately been restored by its owner, the Duc de Luynes.

18 Coignières.

14 Rambouillet, a dull town of 3000 inhabitants, remarkable only for its Château, long the residence of the kings of France, down to the time of Charles X., who, after the July revolution, here signed, in conjunction with the Duc d'Angoulême, his abdication of the French throne, Aug. 2. 1830; under pressure of the news that the mob of Paris, armed, was on its march hither, seeming to threaten results not unlike those which befel Louis XVI. at Versailles, Oct. 1789. It is a gloomy and ugly pile of red brick, with flanking towers of stone, destitute of interest beyond what it may derive from its history. A chamber is shown in which Francis I. died, 1547. The dreary park and extensive forest adjoining was the favourite sporting ground of Charles X. The château is now let out to a private individual.

Beyond this the road becomes more hilly and varied.

13 Epernon, no tolerable Inn. The name of this town of 1600 inhabitants was changed from Autrist to Epernon by Henri III., who created it and the district around a duchy for his favourite Nogaret. It retains portions of its old walls and towers, and is prettily situated on the banks of the Guesle, under a commanding rock of limestone.

The Château attached to the little town of 9 Maintenon was given by Louis XIV., with the estate and title of Marquise de Maintenon, to Françoise d'Aubigny, widow of Scarron, at the time the king made her his wife. Their marriage is said to have been celebrated in the chapel of the castle by the archbishop of Paris, in the presence of Pere la Chaise, 1685, she being 50 years old and Louis 47. The castle stands on the margin of the Eure, and now belongs to the Duc de Broglie; parts of it are said to belong to the original structure raised by Cocquereau, treasurer of finance to Louis XI. and Charles VIII.

The valley of the Eure is here crossed by the imposing ruins of the aqueduct, constructed 1684, at the mandate of Louis XIV., to convey the waters of the Eure from Pont Gouin to Versailles, but afterwards abandoned for the machine at Marly.

"As Lewis had committed the blunder of building in a place without water, he proposed to remedy his mistake by conveying the river eight leagues, by a new channel, to adorn his park. To accomplish this it was necessary to join two mountains at Maintenon, and form an aqueduct: 40,000 troops were employed in this great work, and a camp formed expressly for the purpose. From the unhealthiness of the work or of the air, a great mortality ensued; the dead were carried away in the night time that their companions might not be discouraged; but the loss of many thousand lives to please the wanton caprice of a despot, excited no sympathy and created no surprise. The war of 1688, however, interrupted the labour, and it was never afterwards resumed." — Lord John Russell.

The remains consist of 47 arches, 42 ft. wide and 83 high. The total length of the canal, of which this was to form a part, would have exceeded 33 miles, if completed.

On leaving Maintenon behind, we enter the fertile plain called La Beauce, comprising some of the finest corn land in France. The twin steeples of Chartres are conspicuous a long way off.

19 CHARTRES. (Inn, Hôtel de France; tolerably good.)

Chartres, a city of 14,439 inhabitants, once capital of the fertile Beauce, and now of the department d'Eure et Loir, is situated on a slope, at the bottom of which runs the Eure, washing the only remaining portion of the old fortifications, and two of the city gates. The Porte Guillaume, one of these, is picturesque; the rest have been pulled down, the ramparts levelled into walks, and the town thrown open. Chartres is remarkable in a commercial point of view for one of the largest corn markets in France, held every Saturday, where the produce of the Beauce is disposed of; in point of architecture, for its Cathedral, one of the most magnificent in Europe, conspicuous far and near, with its two tall but unequal spires surmounting the hill on which the city stands. Its most striking and interesting features, after its vast dimensions and elegant proportions, are its two rich and singular lateral portals, its painted glass, scarcely equalled in France, and its three rose windows.

There is much perplexity in the dates assigned to different parts of the building, but, with the evidence of style, we may pronounce the Crypt, running under the whole extent of the choir aisles, to be the only part remaining which was built by Bishop Fulbert, 1029. He was aided in his pious foundation by gifts from the kings of England, France, and Denmark, and a great body of people came over from Rouen to work at it, encamping in tents around while it was in progress. The church, as it exists, was not dedicated until 1260, and the greater portion of it may safely be referred to the 13th century; but the W. front was completed in 1145, except the elegant crocketted N. spire raised in 1514, partly at the charge of Louis XII., by Jean Texier, an architect of the Beauce: it is 403 ft. high, and the upper part of beautifully light and delicately executed work. In the W. front, which is simple in its style, we have to remark the triple portal of pointed arches; that in the centre, supported and flanked by statues of royal saints. They are attenuated figures with formal plaited drapery, characteristic of the Byzantine sculpture of the 12th century. Above the door is the image of Christ in an oval, with the symbols of the 4 Evangelists, as designated in the vision of Ezekiel, around him. Below these are the 14 Prophets in a row, and in the arches above the 24 Elders of the Apocalypse, playing on musical instruments of the middle ages. The sculpture of the rt. hand portal relates to the life of the Virgin, and in that of the l. is seen Christ again surrounded by angels, with the signs of the zodiac, and the agricultural labours of the 12 months.

Far finer are the two entrances on the N. and S. sides, consisting of triple projecting Gothic porticos (something like the W. end of Peterborough), resting on piers, or bundles of pillars, with side openings between them. The stately statues which line the sides and vaults are of a superior style of art, and of a later date (14th century) than those of the W. front.

The interior is of such consistent vastness in all its parts, that its dimensions do not perhaps strike the spectator, at first sight, to their fullest extent, but its length is 422 ft., and the height to the apex of its roof 112 ft. The style throughout nave and choir is the mature Gothic. In the centre of the nave a maze or labyrinth, of intricate circles, is marked out on the pavement in coloured stone: to follow it through its windings (1320 ft. long), saying prayers at certain stations, was probably, at one time, a penitential exercise. The church possesses a perfect treasure of painted glass, more than 130 windows being completely filled, and few being quite destitute of this splendid ornament. They date, for the most part, from the 13th century. Some of the glass is ¼ an inch thick. The 3 rose windows at the end of the nave and transepts are remarkable for their size, 30 or 40 ft. diameter, and their complicated tracery, but it is somewhat clumsy.

The choir has double aisles and a semicircular E. end; in the inside 8 marble bas-reliefs, of Scriptural subjects, mediocre in design and execution, are inserted, and behind the high altar is a huge marble piece of sculpture, in the taste of the time of Louis XIII., not consistent with the character of the building. The outside of the screen, which separates the choir from its aisles, is ornamented with a series of very remarkable Gothic sculptures, each representing an event in the life of Christ or the Virgin Mary, in 45 compartments surrounded with the most elaborate tracery and tabernacle work; they were begun, 1514, and continued down to the middle of the 17th century, and are interesting as some of the final efforts of Gothic art. The execution has been compared to "point lace in stone, and some of the sculptured threads are not thicker than the blade of a penknife."

The painted windows, both in nave and choir, illustrate subjects from the Bible or legends of saints; in the lower compartments are frequently seen representations of various trades — shoe-makers, basket-makers, &c., showing that their guilds or corporations were the donors. Attached to the E. end of the church is a chapel dedicated to St. Piat, in the form of an oblong; it was founded 1349, and is flanked by 2 round towers externally.

In the choir of Chartres cathedral Henri IV. was crowned 1594; — Rheims, the ancient scene of the royal coronation, being at the time in the hands of the Leaguers. The ceremony was performed by the bishop of the diocese, and as the "Sainte Ampoule" was not to be got at, a vial of holy oil, said to have been given by an angel to St. Martin of Tours, to cure a bruise, was brought in procession from the Abbey of Marmoutiers, and with this the King was anointed.

After exploring this noble and surpassing edifice, the traveller will probably have little desire to look at inferior churches, yet the only other curiosities here are

The Church of St. Pierre (St. Père), contiguous to a huge caserne, once a convent, and not far from the river; — although very inferior to the cathedral, it presents a remarkable lanthorn-like E. end, filled with rich painted glass. The lanthorn character is increased by the triforium, running all round the choir, being open, and glazed. The choir, though pointed, must be very early in the style, the piers having a Romanesque character. The nave slightly different, and apparently later, yet retains the transition appearance in its columns. Its triforium is a row of trefoil headed arches, supported on pilasters.

St. André, also near the river, and now a magazin de fourrage filled with straw and hay, is yet interesting to the student of architecture as an early, plain, and severe example of the pointed style. In the W. façade a circular headed doorway is surmounted by a triplet of lancet windows, and these by a bold rose window. The piers supporting the nave arches are cylindrical, making the transition from Romanesque to Gothic. The choir, which was carried across the Eure, is destroyed. A curious crypt extends from the S. aisle down to the river and below its level. St. André is supposed to have been founded 1108.

An Obelisk has been set up in the Marché aux Herbes to record the fact that Marceau was a native of Chartres —"Soldat à 16 ans, Général à 23; il mourut à 27." The original inscription mentioned his exploits in destroying "the rebel Vendéans at Le Mans and Laval." The Revolutionary leader Petion was born here.

The Corn market is exceedingly well regulated; business is transacted for ready money, and is usually over in ¾ hour. The measuring and selling of the grain, and receiving payment for it, are managed by a corporation of women, of long standing, remarkable for their integrity, and implicitly trusted by the owners.

There is a public Library of 30,000 volumes and a Museum (?) in the town.

Diligences daily to Orleans and Rouen by Evreux (R. 50). To Tours by Vendôme (R. 54.)—to Nantes.

The little village Bretigny, 6 m. from Chartres, gives its name to the celebrated Treaty of peace signed 1360 between France and England, by which Edward III. renounced his claim to the throne of France, and released the French king, John, taken prisoner at Poitiers, upon payment of a vast ransom, and delivery of numerous hostages. A violent storm which fell upon Edward and his army near Chartres, and "reminded him of the day of judgment," caused him to make a vow (looking towards the towers of the cathedral), that he would give peace to France, and led to this important treaty.

The journey from Chartres is continued through the monotonous but fertile and well cultivated corn-plain of La Beauce to 18 Courville, 3 m. S. of which is the Château de Villebon, where the illustrious Sully died. It is a square building of brick, with towers at the angles, and not many years ago retained its ancient furniture, even to the bed on which the great minister expired. The Eure is crossed for the last time by the road near Courville; it rises about 15 m. to the N. of the road.

18 Montlandon. Here the fertile Beauce terminates, and the country becomes hilly.

19 Nogent le Rotrou, a town of 7,070 inhabitants, contains a ruined Castle, the residence of Sully, and his Monument in the chapel of the Hôtel Dieu founded by him. It bears the marble statues of himself and his wife by Boudin 1642, and a long inscription at the back: it escaped the fury of the Revolution, but the grave itself was violated, and the bones disinterred and scattered. The word Nogent is an abbreviation of the Latin Novigentium; Rotrou was the name of a count of Perche, in which district it is situated. The river produces craw fish in great abundance. Inn, St. Jaques. The road follows the direction of the Huisne river from Nogent nearly to Le Mans.

22 Ferté Bernard is a prettily situated town in the department Sarthe skirted by the road. Within it the Parish Church is an interesting Gothic building, having a richly sculptured external gallery with the words "Salve Regina," cut in stone, and 3 chapels, from the vaulted roofs of which hang stone pendants.

19 Connerré. Near this is a large Dolmen, or Druidic monument of rude stone slabs, like Kits Coity house in Kent.

10 St. Mars la Bruyère indicates by its name the desolate sandy heaths in the midst of which it is situated.

15 Le Mans—(Inn: Le Dauphin), once capital of the province of Le Haut Maine, now chef lieu of the department of La Sarthe, is situated on the l. bank of the river Sarthe, a little above the junction of the Huisne, and has 20,000 inhabitants.

The principal edifice is the Cathedral of St. Julien, which is well deserving of attention. It is in two styles; the Nave Romanesque, though with pointed arches, dates probably from the 12th century, but its side aisles and walls and the plain W. front are not later than the 11th, perhaps much earlier. Indeed the external masonry of the side walls, resembling Roman constructions, is probably part of the original church founded in the 8th or 9th century. Above the W. door are portions of reticulated masonry, and an ancient bust of a king or bishop; on each side are figures supposed to represent the 2 signs of the zodiac, Capricorn and Sagittarius.

On the S. side is a very richly carved Romanesque doorway—a round arch preceded by a pointed porch flanked by statues of kings and saints, resembling the W. door at Chartres, and with angels in the vault. It is much mutilated unfortunately.

The Choir is a beautiful production of the 13th century, the period of perfection in pointed Gothic architecture. It is surrounded by 11 chapels, and its windows are filled with beautiful painted glass, little inferior to that of Chartres, except in preservation. In the transept is a fine rose window, together with much stained glass, of the 14th or 15th century, a date rather more modern than that of the choir.

This church contains the monuments of Berengaria of Sicily, Queen of Richard Cœur de Lion, brought from the Abbey of Epau and much defaced; of Charles of Anjou; and of Langeay du Bellay, distinguished as a soldier and as a writer in the reigns of Francis I. and Henri II. The last is attributed to Germain Pilon; the arabesques and bas-reliefs in marble are well worthy of attention.

An undressed block of silicious sandstone, standing on one end, has been incorporated into the wall of the church on the outside; it is supposed to be a Druidic stone.

The Church of Nôtre Dame du Pré is probably of the 11th century.

Nôtre Dame de la Coûture (de culturâ Dei) has a very old choir, supposed to have been begun 990; both arches and vaulting are round and of rude construction: it has a very elegant portal, adorned with sculpture of considerable merit. The conventual buildings to which it was originally attached are now the Prefecture, but contain besides, the Library and a Museum, partly devoted to natural history, partly to paintings of a very inferior order, but possessing one curiosity at least, viz. a portrait of Geoffroi Plantagenet enamelled on copper, a very early specimen of that class of art: it was anciently placed in the cathedral where he was buried. There are also many objects of Roman antiquity found in Mans and the neighbourhood, pottery, &c. St. Pierre is supposed to be the oldest church here, that is to say, the lower part of its walls.

The Seminaire, originally the Abbaye de St. Vincent, has a noble façade and a fine staircase.

Many specimens of ancient domestic architecture still remain here, especially in the Grande Rue. Nos. 7, 10, and 12 deserve attention; the last is known as the house of Queen Berengaria, but appears not to be older than the 15th century. It contains a chimney piece adorned with bas-reliefs. The house of Scarron (husband of Madame de Maintenon) is pointed out near the cathedral. The vestiges of the Roman rule at le Mans are not considerable: the chief are the remains of 3 subterranean aqueducts, by which the city was supplied with water from a distance. A portion of them may be seen in a cellar of the Rue Gourdaine.

Fragments also of the Roman town walls still exist; but all traces of an amphitheatre, discovered in the last century, have been swept away.

Le Mans was the birthplace of Henry (II.) Fitz-Empress, the first of the Plantagenet kings of England; a name derived from the plant or sprig of broom (genet), which his father, Geoffroi, used to wear in his cap, the abundant production of his native provinces Anjou and Maine.

A great trade is carried on here in clover seed, which is sent over in large quantities to England. The chief article of manufacture is wax candles. Le Mans is also famed for poultry: its poulards and chapons supply the markets of Paris.

Le Mans witnessed the ruin and final dispersion of the Vendéan army in 1793. Worn out by the disastrous fatigues of a six months' campaign, they were here assaulted by the Republican forces under Marceau's command. Most obstinate was the resistance made by the Royalists in the streets and great square of the town, before they were finally expelled, with their leader, Larochejaquelin, who was wounded in the action. Then ensued the most fearful carnage, not only of the Vendéan soldiery, but of their miserable wives and children, who accompanied them. By the joint exercise of cannonades of grape, and platoons of musquetry, discharged upon the defenceless crowd, under the order of the commissioners of the Convention, upwards of 10,000 persons were massacred on that occasion.

Conveyances daily to Caen by Alençon and to Tours (R. 29.).

The road, on quitting Le Mans, crosses the Huisne just before it falls into the Sarthe, and then runs along the l. bank of that river as far as 16 Guécelard. On the outskirts of Le Mans, not far from the bridge over the Huisne, the buffoon Scarron threw himself into the river, to conceal himself from the pursuit and taunts of the mob, whose derision he had excited by parading the streets during the Carnival tarred and feathered, by way of masquerading. The result of this frolic, so little becoming his position as canon of the cathedral, was, that he caught a rheumatism in his limbs which rendered him a cripple for life.

Maize begins to grow to the S. of Le Mans, but nowhere to the N. of that place.

7 Fouletourte.

The road descends into the pretty valley of the Loir (N.B. not to be confounded with the Loire), a little before it reaches 20 La Fléche (Inn: La Poste). A town of 6,500 inhabitants, prettily situated in a country where vineyards begin to be cultivated with advantage. The large edifice, now the Ecole Militaire, was built by Henri IV. as a Jesuit's College, 1603, but turned into its present destination by Napoleon. The heart of Henri is still preserved in the church. The Church of St. Thomas is a heavy Romanesque edifice.

21 m. N.W. of La Fléche, and 3 beyond Sablé, is the Abbey of Solesmes recently purchased and re-occupied by a society of Benedictine monks, who devote themselves to study in this picturesque retreat. The church is remarkable for 4 groups of statues called Les Saints de Solesmes enclosed in niches, each surrounded by a rich framework of architecture and sculpture, in a style of Gothic approaching to the renaissance. The groups of statuary represent, 1. Christ dead at the Sepulchre; the head of Christ, and the figure of the Magdalen are particularly well executed. Above the recess rises an ogee arch decorated with the richest foliage of thistles and mallows. It bears the date 1496. 2. Christ disputing with the Doctors; the figures, in the dress of the 15th century, are somewhat coarse, reminding one of a Dutch painting. 3. On the l. of the choir; the Communion of the Virgin. 4. Death of the Virgin;— in the N. transept. These sculptures have been variously attributed to Italian artists, and to the Frenchman Germain Pilon, but without authority. An altar in the S. transept has been lately fitted up with fragments of other statuary found among the ruins of the abbey. The stalls in the choir, carved with the genealogy of Christ, are worth notice.

The road to Angers follows the valley of the Loir downwards, running at the foot of gentle hills covered with vineyards.

13 Duretal is a town of 1500 inhabitants, overlooked by two picturesque embattled towers, part of a Castle built by Foulques Nera Comte d'Anjou.

14 Suette.

The Loir now bends away from the road to the W. and 6 m. below this falls into the Sarthe.

On approaching Angers the road passes near some of the vast quarries of slate which form a principal production of the district.

20 Angers. — Inns: Hôtel de Londres, on the quai opposite the landing-place of the steamers, best; Cheval Blanc.

Angers, chef lieu of the department Maine et Loire, is situated on the Maine, called Mayenne, in the upper part of its course, a little below the junction of the Sarthe with it and about 5 m. above the influx of the Maine into the Loire. It has 33,000 inhabitants. Modern improvements made within the last 10 years, the formation of a broad quay along the l. bank of the river, the substitution of tall, regular, white stone houses, like those of the Rue Rivoli, for the old gable-faced cottage-built structures, have greatly innovated upon the thoroughly antique character which Angers previously bore. A broad formal boulevard, planted with young trees, replaces the old fortifications,—

"The flinty ribs of this contemptuous town;"
. . . "those sleeping stones,
That as a waist did girdle it about,
By this time from their fixed beds of lime
Have been dishabited." King John.

The "strong barred gates" are all down, and only one tower remains near the upper bridge of those "saucy walls." Black Angers, as it was called from the sombre hue of its buildings of slate, is now like an old coat with a modern trimming, but plunge into the midst of its labyrinth of buildings, scale its steep and narrow streets, many of them inaccessible to wheel carriages, and you will find traces enough of the Angers of olden time, the capital of Anjou, and residence of its dukes. In few towns of France will the antiquary, artist, or architect find a greater number of interesting antique churches and houses than here.

Most of the old houses are timber-framed, their fronts gable-faced, the roofs, and often fronts, covered with scales of slate, which abounds in the neighbourhood and forms the common building stone, and many of the door and corner posts, the joists and cornices, bear rich Gothic carvings.

The most venerable relic of antiquity is the old Castle, at the water side, close to the new suspension bridge. Its walls were originally washed by the waters of the Maine, until its moat was partly filled to give place to the new quay. If its size and preservation be jointly considered, it is perhaps the finest feudal castle in France. Seventeen colossal towers surround it; they are 70 to 80 ft. high, close set along the walls, shaped like dice boxes, thick below, narrow waisted and having bands of white stone let into the black rough slate of which they are built, so as to give them the appearance of being hooped. A broad and deep ditch isolates the castle from the rest of the town; it is entered by a massive gateway under a perfect portcullis; within its portal is the furnace where lead and pitch were melted for the benefit of invaders. This castle was begun by Philippe Auguste, and completed by Louis IX. It serves at present for a prison, barrack, and depôt of powder. The part which served as a palace of the dukes of Anjou, overlooking the river, is now in ruins, but shows the architecture of the renaissance. It stood between the high tower called Du Moulin, because it once supported a windmill, and that called Du Diable, because close to it was the fearful Oubliette, down which criminals were cast alive. From this tower there is a capital view of the town, its spires and other buildings, of the river and its bridges; while a slight glimpse of the Loire also, deep set in its distant valley, may be gained. There is a neat chapel, now filled with fire-arms, showing, in the delicate tracery of its windows, a good example of Gothic. Beside it is a small building flanked with turrets in which, it is said, King René of Provence and Anjou was born. The view from the terrace outside the castle-gate is less extensive but nearly as good as that from within the walls, and on the whole the castle is more imposing from without than interesting within. On one side of the open space surrounding the castle stands a handsome modern building originally L'Académie d'Equitation. Mr. Pitt (afterwards Lord Chatham) and the Duke of Wellington received part of their education at the military college here, now removed to Saumur, which occupied this edifice, still called L'Académie. It has been converted since the Revolution into a caserne de Cavalerie, and dépôt de la Remonte. No trace or tradition is preserved of either of these great men, of whose education it may be said, "fas est et ab hoste doceri."

The Cathedral of St. Maurice is every where conspicuous from its elevated position and its twin towers, placed so close together as to seem thrown into one. The very delicate spire on one side is injured by the contiguous ugly pavillion, an addition of the Renaissance (1540). The W. portal, a work of the 12th century, is remarkable for the richness and good preservation of the sculptures surrounding its elegant, early-pointed arch; they retain indeed even their colouring. On either side are 4 saints, male and female; above, the curved niches are filled with smaller statues, angels, &c., while the tympanum is occupied by the Saviour, surrounded by the attributes of the 12 Apostles. The workmanship is good, the faces expressive, the draperies elaborate, but the whole displays the stiff style of Greek art of the period. Higher up, in a row of niches, are 8 statues of dukes of Anjou, later in date (15th century) and inferior in execution. On the l. hand as you enter, passing from below the carved organ-loft, is an antique bénitier of oblong form, in verde antique, supported on lions, a Byzantine work of the lower empire; it was brought from the East, and presented to the church by King René. The church consists of a very long nave without aisles, each division of the side wall being a wide pointed arch resting on the ground without pillars, and an upper arch rising from engaged groups of pillars having Romanesque capitals, enclosing a pair of narrow circular-headed windows. The greater part of these windows, as well as those of the nave and choir, are filled with painted glass of the richest colour and very old (13th century), forming one of the chief ornaments of the church. This and other churches in the Angevine style are destitute of triforium or clerestory. The choir and transepts are short, the E. end is multangular. Both transepts (1225) terminate with fine wheel windows, the other windows are pointed, and below these along the wall runs a rich pointed arcade. The nave is about 80 ft. high, and nearly 54 ft. wide, stone vaulted. Local historians lay great stress on its roof being supported without flying buttresses, but their place is supplied by huge clumsy square piers at least 8 ft. by 10 square, and retaining the same thickness up to the roof, raised outside between each pair of windows and at the angles of the transepts, and thus the wonder is removed. Margaret of Anjou was buried in St. Maurice, but her tomb was destroyed at the Revolution.

Not far from the cathedral is the Musée, placed in a building erected by an intendant of the province, afterwards converted into the Séminaire, and added to in the time of Louis XIV. Its cloister and winding staircase are curious examples of the latest Gothic style.

It contains a large collection of mediocre paintings, mostly of the modern French school. Among them is placed a Vase of antique Egyptian porphyry, brought by King René from the East, which for a long time passed for one of the water-pots used at the marriage feast at Cana. It bears 2 bearded masks carved on it, and is broken, which is not surprising considering its thinness.

Here is a fine bust of Napoleon by Canova, in marble, condemned to be broken at the Restoration, but saved by being hid in a garret. One room is filled with casts from the works of the living French sculptor David, given by him to his native town. His statues of Guttemberg, inventor of printing for Strasburg, of General Foy in a Roman dress, of Armand Carrel in loose pantaloons plaited round the waist, of the Greek girl at the tomb of Marco Botzaris; his busts of Göthe, Hahneman the homœopathist, and Jeremy Bentham, appear best worth notice. He also executed a series of medallion heads of celebrated persons of the 19th century.

The museum of Natural History, situated in the upper story of the building, is reached by a corkscrew stair remarkable for its lightness, and its singular groined roof. The collection is exceedingly well arranged and named. The geology of the department is illustrated in a series of specimens by themselves. Among a few antiquities is the crosier of Robert d'Arbrissal, founder of Fontevrault, found in that Abbey; it bears a semi-pagan representation of St. Michael and the dragon, of gold (?) partly enamelled. The shoes of Joanne de Laval, 2d wife of King René, high-heeled and ornamented with open work; also an aerolite, which fell in one of the faubourgs of Angers 1822, deserve attention. The Library possesses some curious old MSS.

Not far from the musée is the ruined church of Toussaints, attached to a convent now converted into a Depôt des Subsistances Militaires. It is an elegant pointed building, and almost identical in style with the early English. It is a cross church without aisles, with lancet windows, richly cut capitals, and corbels, from which springs the roof destroyed at the Revolution. The E. window is a wheel, apparently of later date.

The massive and stately tower of St. Aubin in the early pointed style, unfinished and surmounted with a conical roof of slate, is now converted into a shot tower.

A curious discovery was made a few years ago at the Prefecture, viz. that along the corridor on the l. hand, concealed by thick plaister runs a colonnade of florid Norman architecture, of very early date, and of curious and elaborate workmanship. The small round arches rest alternately on piers faced with pilasters, and on detached pillars arranged in 2 rows, each 5 deep. All the pillars, cornices, and mouldings of the arches, are most elaborate, sharply cut, very perfect, and no two alike. The mouldings running round the arches consist of bearded heads, monsters, animals, fish, &c.

In the midst is a circular portal, the lower part of which is sunk rather below the surface of the ground, supported on cut columns of varied patterns, and surmounted by a series of Runic bands, cords and foliage, each confined to one stone, and radiating from a common centre. Next to this is a still greater curiosity, a double arch ornamented with fresco paintings instead of sculpture, the subjects being Herod on his Throne, the Massacre of the Innocents, the Temple of Jerusalem, and the Nativity and Adoration of the Magi, who are seen on horseback approaching Bethlehem. The style of drawing bears a near resemblance to the tapestry of Bayeux; the colours are very perfect. These arches formed part of an early church and convent of St. Aubin, of which the prefecture occupies the site.

The old Eglise de St. Martin, now converted into a magazine of fagots, and piled up to the roof with them, so as to be scarcely visible, will yet interest the antiquary from its age and style of structure. It is in the early Romanesque style, consists of an inordinately long nave, of a transept — having thick round pillars set in the 4 inner angles of the walls which supported the tower, and of an apsidal E. end. Its windows are round headed and long. It is the oldest church in Angers, and one of the few churches in France whose origin can with probability be referred to the period of the Carlovingian kings. The nave and transept, exclusive of certain repairs, appear to be part of the church founded in the 9th century by Hermengarde Queen of Louis le Debonnaire, who died 819. The choir is later, probably of the 12th century.

At the extremity of the town to the N. is the Church of St. Serge, remarkable for a choir supported on 6 columns of peculiar lightness and height, from whose freely cut capitals rises an elegant pointed roof; behind it is a square Lady Chapel. The style indicates the transition from Romanesque to early pointed. The windows are without tracery, for the most part round headed, enclosed within pointed arches. The transepts seem of a much older date than the choir; the nave is in the late Gothic of the 15th century.

Here is a finely carved spiral staircase of wood; every pannel contains a different sculpture and composition.

In the same quarter of the town is the Jardin des Plantes, an agreeable walk in hot weather under shady trees, near to the Seminaire, a vast edifice.

Among the more interesting specimens of ancient domestic architecture, with which the streets of Angers abound, may be mentioned a corner house, in the Place behind the cathedral, adorned with curious carvings in wood; that called Hôtel des Marchands in the Rue Baudrière, and another in the Rue du Figuier known as the Hôtel des Ducs d'Anjou, for what reason is not evident, since René, the last Duke of Anjou, died 1480, and this building cannot be older than the 16th century, and is in the style of Francis I.'s time, with more of Italian than of Gothic in the composition of its architecture. The square turrets, or projecting oriels, at its angles are singular.

In the suburb of Doutre (beyond, or on the further (or rt.) bank of the Maine) are several buildings deserving notice for their antiquity. The Eglise de la Trinité is a Romanesque building probably of the 11th and 12th centuries. It consists of a long nave without aisles, having in the side walls a series of apsidal recesses under pointed arches. The choir very shallow, and formed of a central and 2 side apses, is separated from the nave by a wall pierced with a pointed arch, which contracts the view of the high altar, but serves as a support to the Tower, which is square below, octagonal above, and very elegant.

Close to this church, indeed touching it, is a second equally ancient and in a nearly similar style, l'Eglise de Ronceray, once attached to an extensive nunnery, now converted into the Ecole des Arts et Metiers. The church now serves as a chapel for the students; it is very plain and considerably modernized.

On the same side of the river, a little higher up, is the Hospice St. Jean, founded by Henry II. King of England, and duke of Anjou, 1153. The great hall, said to be of that date is a fine apartment, lofty and airy, its groined and pointed roof supported on 2 rows of light pillars. Here the beds of the patients are ranged in rows, the males separated from the females by a low partition. The office of nurses is performed by nuns; the whole is kept very orderly, the linen-closet particularly neat. The cloisters between the great hall and the church are partly in the Romanesque style; double pillars support the arches; a round portal with deep mouldings leads into the Chapel. A decayed barn near the hospital is still older than it.

At the opposite extremity of the Suburb Doutre, below the suspension bridge, near the Nantes road, is the vast Nunnery au Bon Pasteur, surrounded by high walls. The sisters keep a school for females.

Very extensive Boulevards, planted with trees and lined with some very handsome houses, the Mairie, &c., occupy the site of the old walls, and communicate with a wide open space for the exercise of troops, called Champ de Mars, traversed by the road to Saumur. Some of the houses about it bore until lately the marks of bullets fired in the attack of Angers by the Vendéan army, 90,000 strong, 1793.

The forces of King John laid waste Brittany in 1199, and to that period we must refer the scene in Shakespeare; "Before the walls of Angiers," where the citizens are summoned by both the rival kings,—"Ye men of Angiers, open wide your gates."

Angers occupies a fortunate position near the mouth of 3 navigable rivers, in a country producing lime, coal, and slate.

Angers is famed for its nursery gardens; there are not less than 30.

The neighbourhood abounds in Slate Quarries, which employ between 2000 and 3000 men, and supply a large part of France. They furnish 80 millions of slates yearly, which are exported to the value of 1½ millions of francs per annum.

The most considerable, Le Grand Carreau, is about 4 m. off, a little to the l. of the road to Saumur. It is nearly 400 ft. (105 metres) deep, and occupies an area of 4000 metres. Besides the yawning open excavation, a considerable cavern, approached by a horizontal gallery on one side of the quarry, has been driven under ground. It is approached by vertical ladders, and frail extracting machinery overhangs the precipice. At times serious slips, or éboulements, produce very dangerous avalanches of rock.

There are 2 steamers daily to Nantes, and 1 to Tours and Orleans, making the circuit of the tongue of land which separates the Mayenne from the Loire. (See R. 58. p. 205.)

Diligences daily to Paris by Le Mans (R. 46.); to Paris by Tours; to Nantes; to Chartres; to Saumur.

The direct distance from Angers to the Loire at Pont de Cé is about 5 m., and 5. m. beyond the river is the very interesting Château de Brissac (p. 205).

The road to Nantes quits Angers by the Suburb Doutre, and leaving the Mayenne on the l. hand, reaches the Loire at 18 St. George sur Loire.

8 Champtocé.	}	described in Route 58. p. 207.
14 Varades.
13 Ancenis.
9 Oudon.
14 La Seilleraye.

14 NANTES.—Inns: Hôtel de France, in the Place Graslin, close to the theatre, best. Hôtel des Voyageurs, Rue Molière; H. du Commerce.

Nantes, the ancient residence of the dukes of Brittany, when that province was independent; which disputed with Rennes the title of capital of the duchy, now chef lieu of the department of the Loire Inférieure, is situated on the l. bank of the Loire, at the influx into it from the N. of the Erdre; the junction of the two rivers being in the middle of the town. The Sévre (Nantaise) from the S. flows into the Loire a little below Nantes. There are at least 16 bridges in the town over these various streams. It is distant about 40 m. from the ocean, and is a flourishing seaport, the fourth in rank and population in France, numbering 77,992 inhabitants; and, though less prosperous since the loss of St. Domingo to France, and of late outstripped by Havre as a port, it has remained nearly stationary in population and commercial prosperity for the last 50 years; it is still the seat of much respectable opulence and active industry. As a town, it is one of the handsomest and most pleasing in France. Its fine Quais, extending about 2 m. along the Loire, and on both sides of the Erdre, and the wide open space left by these two rivers, enlivened with small craft, remind the traveller somewhat of the busy aquatic towns of Holland, Amsterdam, and Rotterdam, and give a very cheerful character to Nantes, which is, besides, far less dirty than most French towns. In the new quarters, it has streets lined with houses not unworthy of Paris. The Rue Royale and Rue d'Orleans contain the chief shops, while the old quarters, belonging to the capital of the ancient duchy, abound in picturesque houses, gable-faced and overhanging the narrow streets. Those who admire and would seek out picturesque bits of street architecture, now fast disappearing even from the old town under modern improvements, must penetrate the Rues de la Poissonnerie, where the house "aux Enfans Nantais," so called from the carved figures of the martyrs St. Donatien and St. Rogatien, at the corner of the Place du Change, deserves particular notice: it dates from the 15th century. There are other old houses in the Rues du Calvaire and de la Juiverie. In the Rue de la Boucherie is a house said to have been inhabited by Anne of Brittany.

The most prominent and remarkable edifice is the Cathedral of St. Pierre, externally an unsightly pile, from the unfinished towers not rising much higher than the roof. The three lofty portals of its W. front, however, are striking for size and the great number of small bas-reliefs and other sculptures adorning them. It was begun 1434, and finished about the end of the century. The nave, of the same age, is very imposing on account of the great elevation of its roof, 120 ft. above the pavement, and the elegance of its arches, but its windows are destitute of tracery. The modern wood carving in some of the side chapels, and the stonework of the organ loft decorated with pendants, a delicate work of the 16th century, deserve notice. Attached to this noble nave is a plain Romanesque choir, inferior in height and plain in style, probably of the 11th century: it was already enclosed in new walls, corresponding with the nave, preparatory to pulling down the old structure, when the works were stopped for want of funds near the latter end of the 15th century. The solitary transept on the S. side, which had been alone completed, is now partitioned off, and serves to contain the splendid Monument, removed from the suppressed Carmelite convent, of Francis II., last Duc de Bretagne, and his wife, Marguerite de Foix, raised to their memory by his daughter, Anne of Brittany. It is a splendid work of art in the style of the renaissance, executed by a Bas Breton artist, Michel Colomb, a native of St. Pol de Leon, who preceded Jean Goujon. It was fortunately secreted at the Revolution to preserve it from destruction. It is a raised altar tomb of marble, black, white, and red, raised to a height of 5 ft. Upon it repose the recumbent figures of Francis and his wife; three angels support their heads, and their feet rest on a lion and greyhound. In the four corners stand statues as large as life in white marble; of Justice, with sword and scales, said to be a portrait of the Duchess Anne; of Power, strangling a dragon (heresy), which she draws out of a tower; she is attired with helmet and breastplate, and has a scarf wound round her arm; Wisdom bears a mirror and a compass, and Prudence, double-faced, holds a lanthorn in one hand and a bit in the other, as attributes. These statues are well designed, and executed with great delicacy, which is particularly conspicuous in the draperies. Along the sides of the tomb, small statues of the 12 Apostles are ranged in niches, and below them are figures of mourners in coloured marble. The patron saints of the Duke and Duchess, St. Francis d'Assisi and St. Margaret, stand at the head, St.

Louis and Charlemagne at the feet. The remains of the illustrious dead, for whom this splendid tomb was raised, having been torn up and scattered in 1793, the body of the Constable de Richemont, one of the generals who contributed to drive the English out of France in the reign of Charles VII., was deposited within it in 1815. The N. transept and the choir of this church are in progress of completion, to correspond with the nave, and it is proposed to pull down the old choir.

Beyond the cathedral, a broad and much frequented promenade, occupying the site of the old fortifications, and forming a sort of boulevard, extends from the Loire to the Erdre, under the names Cours St. Pierre and Cours St. André. The former is approached by a broad and stately flight of steps from the Loire, and is ornamented with statues of the Duchess Anne and of the three Breton heroes, —the constables Du Guesclin, Clisson, and De Richemont. Between the two walks stands a Column raised to the memory of Louis XVI., and surmounted by his statue; but, since 1830, made to commemorate a combat between some young men of the town with the troops of the line, in which 10 of the former were killed, during the July Revolution. The brass plate which records this, states that "Des ouvriers Anglais ont fait graver cette inscription." 'Tis a pity English workmen cannot mind their own business without meddling with the politics of a foreign country.

The Castle (château), a massive and venerable edifice of the 14th century, partly modernised in the 16th by the Duc de Mercœur during the wars of the League, flanked with bastions, still bearing on them the cross of Lorraine, stands at the extremity of the Cours St. Pierre, on the margin of the Loire, surrounded on the land side by a deep fosse. Its massive round towers are built of slate and granite: a portcullis still defends its entrance, and the interior contains several constructions of the 16th century in the latest Gothic; the windows surmounted with canopies. In one is a curious spiral staircase. Most of the kings of France, from Charles VIII. downwards, resided for a time within its walls. The powder magazine is said to have been the Chapel in which Anne of Brittany was married to Louis XII. (?), thus becoming, for the second time, queen of France. She certainly was born here, and made the castle her residence. In this castle Henri IV. signed the Edict of Nantes for the protection of the Protestants in 1598, revoked to the injury and stain of France by Louis XIV.

In 1654 it was the prison of the Cardinal de Retz, who escaped by letting himself down by a rope from the bastion de Mercœur into a boat moored in the Loire, which at that time, and until the present quai was formed, washed the castle walls. The attention of the sentinel meanwhile was taken off by giving him a bottle of wine to drink, and his eye was deceived by the cardinal's red cloak and hat slipped off and hung over the battlements. De Retz reaching the shore by means of the boat, instantly mounted a horse provided for him by his friends, which, however, quickly threw him and dislocated his shoulder. In spite of the accident and the pain it caused, he rode on to a place of safety, the Château de Beaupreau, whence he effected his escape through Spain to Rome. Madame de Sevigné describes her visit to the castle in 1648, shortly after, and the Duchess de Berri was shut up in it previous to her removal to Blaye. That adventurous princess, after having long encouraged disaffection and fermentation in Brittany and la Vendée, was finally detected in concealment, Nov. 1832, in the house No. 3, Rue Haute du Château, facing the castle, which belonged to 2 ladies, zealous partizans of the Bourbon cause. Her presence in this house had been betrayed to the government by a Jew, previously a confidant of the duchess and her friends, and a party of soldiers and police were despatched thither instantly. They searched, however, in vain, the whole building from top to bottom, but found her not. Confiding, however, in their information, a party of soldiers was left behind, to keep watch. Some of them, posted in a garret, remained a whole day beside a fire which they had lighted, when on a sudden they were startled by voices and the sound of kicks, proceeding from the back of the chimney, and out scrambled 3 persons, greatly to the surprise of the soldiers. These were the duchess and two companions, who had passed 12 hours in a secret hole or hiding place under the sloping roof, entered by a door 20 inches wide, and too low for a man to stand upright in. Not only this oppressive confinement, but even the heat of the fire were endured patiently, and without the slightest noise, until they were nearly suffocated, and the duchess's dress, entirely scorched by the iron door being heated red hot, was on the point of catching fire.

Nantes possesses a Museum of Paintings, rather above the average of provincial collections, though a large portion are copies; situated in the upper part of the Cloth Hall, Rue de l'Arche-Sèche. The greater part were collected by one M. Cacault, of this town. Among the curiosities may be specified a head of a Crusader painted by Canova;—an old church painting of a Holy Family, on two shutters; a head of Christ brought from the cathedral; portrait of Queen Elizabeth (? artist unknown); portraits of the children of Henri II., by Janet; a Bull, by Brasscapat, a modern artist, good. Here is a copy of Napoleon's bust by Canova.

Travellers who have leisure to devote any time to a Library, will find that of Nantes, above the Halle aux Grains, Quai Brancas, an especially rich collection of 30,000 volumes. A MS. copy of the Cité de Dieu of St. Augustin, of the year 1375, is remarkable for its beautiful miniatures.

The Archives, deposited in the Prefecture, contain a mass of curious documents relating to the history of Brittany; many ancient charters of Abbies, &c., and the trial of that most infamous of criminals, Gilles de Retz, Maréchal de France, who was burnt on the Chaussée de la Madeleine (R. 58). It is in Latin, and will not bear translation.

In the Musée d'Histoire Naturelle, Rue du Port Communeau, may be seen a collection illustrating the geology of the department, formed by the late M. Dubuisson; besides several fragments of antiquity found in the neighbourhood, and a mummy, presented by the Egyptian traveller, Caillaud, who is a native of Nantes.

The Quais, lined on the one side by handsome houses, and on the other fringed with shipping, present a lively scene, and form an agreeable walk about 2 m. long (at least in the lower part where they are gravelled). An Englishman, in traversing them, may remember with some interest that it was at this port that the young Pretender embarked on the expedition of 1745, in a fast sailing brig, the Doutelle, provided by one Walsh, a French subject settled at Nantes, who accompanied him. He was disguised as a student of the Scotch college at Paris, and for better concealment had allowed his beard to grow. On the quais are situated the Halle aux Grains and the Bourse, which is not remarkable for excellence of architecture. The Quai de la Fosse is lined by a fine row of trees, reminding one a little of the Boompjes of Rotterdam. Near its lower end, where the ship builders' yards commence, in which the steamers for the Loire are constructed, is a building, insignificant in itself, but remarkable for its associations, and they are melancholy, called Salorges, built as an entrepôt for colonial merchandise, and still serving as a warehouse. Who has not heard of the Noyades and Republican marriages; the invention of Carrier, the most detestable, perhaps, of the monsters of the Revolution, when sated with single murders by the guillotine, and thirsting for more blood, and the excitement of executions on a large scale? It was in front of the Salorges that they took place, and the building served as a temporary place of confinement for the miserable victims, who were dragged hence and put on board barges (gabarres) furnished with a sliding valve (sou-pape) or trap door in their bottom. These boats, when towed into the middle of the river, and deserted by the crews, were sunk with their load of 20 or 30 human beings, by pulling from the shore a cord attached to the valve. To prevent the possibility of escape for the strong swimmer, or poor wretch who might be cast ashore alive by the current, armed men of the bloody band called Compagnie de Marat, composed of the most abandoned wretches whom the lowest dens in Nantes could pour forth, were stationed on the banks to fire on those who rose to the surface, while others, armed with swords, cut off the hands and fingers of such as struggled to reach the boats. As many as 600 human beings perished on one day; the total number of persons thus destroyed has never been correctly ascertained, but 25 of these Noyades or executions by water are known to have taken place, and the number who perished has been variously estimated at 6000 or 9000! At first, the wholesale butchery was perpetrated at night, but emboldened by impunity, and supported by a portion of the citizens, almost exclusively of the class of little tradesmen, the tyrants did not hesitate to immolate their victims in broad day. The most atrocious feature in these massacres is the number of women and of young children, who were thus consigned to eternity, without the possibility of having committed any offence, by the exulting savages who then ruled the people's destinies. When a remonstrance was made against the murder of the children, "Ce sont des Louvetaux, il faut les détruire,—Ce sont des vipères, il faut les étouffer," were Carrier's answers. The experiment of the Noyades was first tried on 24 priests condemned to transportation (déportation). "Le decret de déportation fut exécuté verticalement," was Carrier's boast. The marriages Republicains, as another refinement of cruelty was called in mockery, consisted in binding together a man and woman, back to back, stripped naked, keeping them exposed for an hour, and then hurling them into the current of "la Baignoire Nationale," as the bloodhounds termed the Loire. That river, as it were, indignant at crimes scarcely paralleled in the history of the world, threw back upon its banks, at each returning tide, the corpses with which it was choaked, until the air became pestilential, and its very water and fish poisonous. When Carrier was at length called to account for his crimes, which, however, had been connived at, if not approved by the Convention a short while before, and asked for proofs of the accusations against him, he was answered, "Vous me demandez des preuves? faites donc refluer la Loire." But these are only a part of the Revolutionary atrocities committed at Nantes: to the victims of the Noyades must be added those who perished by the guillotine, by disease, famine, and terror in the prisons, and, above all, by the fusillades, which took place day after day on the Plaine de Sainte Mauve, where, at one time, 500 children, the eldest not more than 14, were mowed down by musketry, and where deep ditches, dug for the purpose, were filled with corpses heaped confusedly one over the other. The population of Nantes, which amounted in 1790 to 81,000, was reduced to 75,000 in 1800, and the number who were slaughtered in 1793 belonging to the town and surrounding country is estimated at 30,000. It is painful to describe these horrors, but they form an integral part of the history of Nantes, and that which is here detailed is only a sample; they might be greatly expanded.

The Vendéan war has also left some sad souvenirs at Nantes. In the attack of the town by the Vendéan forces on the 29th June 1793, their leader, the gentle Cathelineau (the carter), was mortally wounded in penetrating into the Place Viarme, now the cattle market, and his fall was the cause of their retreat. Not far from this spot another of their generals, Charette, was shot, at the corner of the Rue de la Miséricorde, April 1796.

Fouché, the notorious police minister, Duc d'Otrante, and Marshal of France, was born at Nantes.

The new Quarter of the town, the W. end of Nantes, was commenced 1784 by M. Graslin, ancien fermier-général, after whom the Place containing the theatre is called. He seems to have exhausted the Biographie Universelle for names to the adjoining streets; among them appear the Rue Jean Jacques, Rue Racine, Rue Franklin, Rue Crébillon, &c. The houses are built of white stone from the neighbourhood of Saumur.

The commerce of Nantes, though no longer what it was, is still of great value; in 1836 it was carried on by 458 vessels, but more than ½ of them were of less than 100 tons. Owing to the want of water in the Loire abreast of the town, vessels of more than 200 tons burthen are obliged to unload at Paimbœuf (p. 167.), 24 m. lower down, near its mouth.

The importations consist of sugar, coffee, cotton, and other colonial produce.

Nantes is gradually changing from a commercial to a manufacturing town. The most considerable manufacture is that of cotton yarn; in 1837 there were 16 mills in the vicinity of the town.

A Canal is in progress to connect Nantes with Brest by the Erdre; it will be about 230 m. long when finished. There is a singular manufacture here of preserved dinners ready cooked, (Conserves Alimentaires) prepared by the firm Colin et Compie, Rue de Salorges, No. 9, which sends forth, hermetically sealed, all kinds of provisions, so as to be capable of perfect preservation in all climates, and for any length of time. 150,000 boxes of young peas and 800,000 boxes of sardines (pilchards) are embalmed in one season, and 8 oxen can be cooked at once in a single boiler. Roasting is carried on by heated air, and boiling by steam, in a kitchen roofed with glass, after the manner of the passage d'Orleans in the Palais Royal. The proprietor of the establishment employs in the autumn 800 persons in curing and packing sardines alone, and monopolizes all the green peas which come to market in early spring to supply his wants.

The suburb of Nantes on the S. side of the Loire is spread over a series of islands, formed by the branches of that river and the Sèvre, connected together by no less than 6 bridges in one line, over all of which the roads to Bordeaux and Clisson pass.

The Protestant Church is in the Rue des Carmélites, in the chapel of the former convent.

The Poste aux Lettres is in the Rue Santeuil.

Prosper Sebire, bookseller, Place du Pilori, No. 5, has a number of views, plans, guides, &c., relating to Nantes, as well as maps.

Fiacres are found for hire in the principal squares.

Omnibuses (said to be a Nantais invention, transferred from this to Paris) run along the Ligne des Ponts from the Place du Commerce to the Pont de Permil, and along the quays from the Bourse to the Chantiers de Construction.

Malleposte daily to Paris in 30 hours. (R. 46.)

Diligences daily to Paris by Le Mans in 44 hours—3; by Angers and Tours, 54 hours (R. 58.); to Brest, 2—Rennes, 3—Bordeaux, 4—Poitiers, to Bourbon Vendée, 2.

Steamers. — Inexplosibles daily ascend the Loire, reaching Angers on the 1st evening, Tours on the 2nd, Orleans the 3d, starting from the Quai du Port Maillard. — The steamers of another company called Riverains, daily to Angers; down the Loire to Paimbœuf daily; and to St. Nazaire when the high tides permit; to Bordeaux, 3 times a month; to L'Orient and Quimper once a week.

Steamer on the Erdre to Nort starts from the Quai Céneray, behind the Préfecture. (R. 41.)

Environs of Nantes.

The immediate vicinity of the town displays great marks of opulence and prosperity, in its numerous and neat white villas, many of them quite in the English style, and in the great number of factory chimneys, many of them new.

The excursion most commonly recommended to a stranger is that to Clisson, the Richmond of Nantes, 18 m. S. of the town, on the borders of La Vendée, described in Route 60. It is a pretty spot, though its beauties have been considerably exaggerated by local enthusiasts. You may go thither by the omnibus in the morning, visit the castle and all its curiosities, and return by the same conveyance at 7 P. M. But as this may leave the traveller a prey to ennui for several hours after exhausting the sights of Clisson, it is even possible to hire a cabriolet, and see Tiffauges, returning to Clisson in time for the omnibus.

The Loire below Nantes

Is navigated by steam vessels, but with caution, on account of the numerous sand banks.

L. a little below Nantes the Sèvre Nantaise enters the Loire.

On the island of Indret, 7 m. below Nantes, the French government have a recently formed establishment consisting of a dockyard for building steamers, with forges for the construction of steam-engines. More than 800 workmen are employed here, and great activity prevails—1841. The steam engines turned out here are very capital, and France is thus becoming independent of England in the supply of these powerful auxiliaries of war or peace. Indret is well situated at the mouth of the Loire so as to have a speedy communication, safe from cruisers in time of war, with the great dockyards of Brest, L'Orient, and Rochefort. The establishment is not readily shown to Englishmen, who after all will see here nothing which cannot be as well seen at home.

The estuary of the Loire is 3 m. broad abreast of

L. Paimbœuf (30 m. below Nantes.) This place may be regarded as the out port of Nantes, since large vessels above 200 tons burthen stop here and discharge their cargoes into lighters (gabarres). The loss of St. Domingo, and the long-continued wars under Napoleon, reduced the population of this town from 9000 to 4000, which it does not exceed at present.

2 steamers ply daily to Nantes in 4 hours. Coaches go hence to the watering place of Pornic, 12 m. S. of Paimbœuf, situated on the shore of the bay of Bourgneuf opposite the island of Noirmoutiers, the last retreat of the Vendéan bands. Comfortable accommodation is to be had in the Etablissement des Bains. The town was burnt in the Vendéan war; an old castle overlooks its little fishing port.

SECTION III.

ORLEANOIS. — TOURAINE. — RIVER LOIRE. — LA VENDÉE. — POITOU. — SAINTONGE.

ROUTE		PAGE
48	Paris to Orleans	170
49	Paris to Orleans (Railway)	176
50	Rouen to Orleans, by Chartres	178
52	The Loire (A.). — Gien to Orleans	178
53	The Loire (B.). — Orleans to Tours, by Blois and Amboise. — The Châteaux of Chambord and Chénonceaux.	179
54	Chartres to Tours, by Vendôme	194
56	Tours to Loches and Châteauroux	194
57	Tours to Saumur, by Chinon, and Fontevrault	196
58	The Loire (C.).—Tours to Nantes by Saumur, and Angers	198
60	Nantes to Poitiers, by Clisson	208
62	Nantes to Bordeaux, by Bourbon Vendée, Rochelle, Rochefort, and Saintes	212
64	Tours to Bordeaux, by Poitiers and Angoulême	217
65	Poitiers to Châteauroux, by St. Savin. — Excursion to Montmorillon	226
66	Poitiers to Rochefort by Niort	227

INTRODUCTORY SKETCH OF THE COUNTRY.

Arrived on the borders of the Loire, which divides France nearly in the centre, the traveller already finds himself amidst sunny landscapes, under the influence of the more genial climate of the south. The provinces bordering on that great river, Touraine, Orleanois, Anjou, Poitou, have been styled "the garden of France;" and the golden vineyards, the blooming orchards, the yellow cornfields (especially those of La Beauce, the granary of France), and the acacia hedges, bear testimony to the facile bounty of nature. But little pains have been taken to improve her gifts; an ornamental garden or pleasure ground is rarely seen; the earth seems to bring forth abundantly with less than the average amount of pains-taking; "c'est le pays de rire et de rien faire." The Loire, which forms its chief feature, is decidedly inferior in beauty to the Seine. In Touraine its banks are flat and monotonous, and it is only after passing Tours that it becomes really picturesque. Near Saumur it is a romantic stream; and from thence, with slight interruptions, nearly all the way to Nantes, the "considerable boldness of its banks, the richness of the culture, the wooded islands, and the animation derived from the swelling canvas of active commerce, conspire to render it eminently beautiful; but for the rest of its immense course it exhibits a stream of sand, and rolls shingles through the valley instead of water."—A. Young. "Quel torrent révolutionaire que cette Loire!" was the expression of the most atrocious of the democrats; and the unbridled impetuosity of its course, its sudden inundations and changes of bed justify the epithet, and are as detrimental to the utility as to the beauty of this main artery of France. In winter the Loire rages, and swells, and has too much water, just as in summer it has too little. Its broad shoals greatly disfigure the landscape; its shallows and sandbanks render the passage of steamers intricate. Navigation is limited to very small vessels, and is frequently arrested in the dry months. The cave dwellings excavated in the cliffs of soft chalk (craie tufeau) along the river banks, and the long Levée or dyke which protects the right bank between Blois and Angers, a distance of 96 m., from inundations, will be remarked as peculiar features in the borders of the Loire. The descent of the Loire from Orleans to Nantes is productive of much interest, partly derived from its venerable cities, gloomy castles, and the great events in French history which have passed upon its banks.

These provinces of France, especially Touraine, were the chosen residence of her kings down to Louis XIV., and they afford a hundred sites preferable to the sands and morasses of Versailles. The vast and castellated Chambord, bristling with turrets and pinnacles, studded with Diana's crescent; where the Emperor Charles V. was entertained by his good-natured enemy Francis I.; the gloomy Blois, haunt of bigotry and scene of the deep-plotted assassination of the Guises; Amboise, the favourite abode of the warrior Charles VII., and also witness to conspiracy and wholesale massacre; Chenonceaux, the retreat of Diana of Poictiers; Plessis, the den of the timorous bigot Louis IX.; Chinon, where passed the careless revelry of the indolent Charles VII., and the opening scene of the wondrous career of "the shepherd girl of Domremy;" Fontevrault, the last resting-place of the lion-hearted Richard; Loches, with its dungeon of sighs and tears, a provincial Bastille, contrasting with more agreeable recollections of the beauteous and gentle Agnes Sorel; Dampierre, where Margaret of Anjou's life and sorrows ceased; and Nantes, which saw Henry IV. put his hand to the edict of toleration; and, in later times, witnessed the heroism and frailty of a daughter of Bourbon, his descendant; — all these are national monuments; integral portions, as it were, of French History. It is a region of interesting associations and recollections: here Joan of Arc first unfurled her victorious banner; here the chief events of the contests of religion in the sixteenth century occurred; this soil is watered with the blood of Guise and Condé, the fields of La Vendée are fattened with the unburied bones of the thousands who fell in the cause of loyalty, and in opposition to revolution and irreligion.

All the places above-named or alluded to well deserve to be visited by the traveller. Orleans, though retaining few traces or relics of the Maid; Blois and Amboise; Tours, a fine city, though seated on a flat, amidst dust and glare; Saumur, once the stronghold of Protestantism; Loches, for its architectural remains and historical souvenirs, and pleasing situation in the charming valley of the Indre; black Angers, cradle of our early Plantagenet monarchs, all abound in specimens of ancient architecture, all possess more or less claims to attention. Chenonceaux is a charming specimen of the old French château, with turrets and extinguisher towers; without, all crinkum crankum, and within, lined with tapestry and armour; preserved unimpaired, and well kept up. Aizy le Rideau is nearly as perfect and beautiful, but with less interesting associations.

S. of Nantes, between the Loire, the Sea, and the Sèvre Niortaise, lies La Vendée, celebrated in the history of the wars of the Revolution for its adhesion to royalty and opposition to innovation. The framework or foundation of the country is composed of the elevated plateau of the Gatine, whose crest is in no wise distinguishable, and which presents a series of hills, furrowed by narrow glens or valleys, through which run a few muddy streams.

"It is an inextricable complication of heaths, brooks, heights, hollows, and little plains having no connection with one another, and apparently no general water-shed. It is covered with trees, yet has no forests; every field, every dwelling is surrounded by quick hedges, abounding with close-set trees, and surrounded by ditches, forming complete natural redoubts. The lines of communication from place to place are hollow ways, cut so deep below the surface of the ground that a man's head in walking along them will not appear above it, and their vertical sides are surmounted by hedges. They are narrow, shady, and muddy or rutty according to the season, and intersect one another so as to form a multitude of crossways, looking all like one another. There are few high roads; no large towns; the villages are scattered and thinly inhabited; estates very much subdivided; houses concealed by trees and bushes, and a peasantry of primitive and rude manners; these are the combination of circumstances which have made this district a complete labyrinth, perfectly adapted as the theatre of the civil war which so long and so fearfully desolated it. It is divided into three parts: the Marais, comprising the sands, salt marshes, and ponds bordering the seashore, intersected by dykes and canals, abounding in pastures, destitute of drinking water; the Bocage, covered with thickets and heaths, rough and bristling, much cut up and well cultivated; and the Plaine, very rich and highly cultivated, abounding with corn and vines."

The traveller disposed to visit the theatre of the Vendean war may do so from Nantes by way of Clisson; but the character of the country and its inhabitants is fast changing under the system pursued by Napoleon and Louis Philippe; and intersected, as it has been by them, with a network of high roads, it has lost much of its primitive character.

The railway to Orleans, lately completed, brings this interesting country in a manner to the gates of Paris.

ROUTE 48.

PARIS TO ORLEANS.

116 kilom. = 72 Eng. m.

The highroad is now superseded by the railroad — finished 1843. Mallepostes and diligences are transferred to the rail. It opens a most agreeable channel to reach the south of France by the Loire. See R. 49.

The high road to Orleans quits Paris by the Barrière d'Enfer; it passes through Bourg la Reine, where Condorcet, proscribed by the Convention, put an end to himself by poison, 1794. It leaves about 1 m. to the rt. the town of Sceaux, once famed for its Château, built by the Minister Colbert, afterwards enlarged by the Duc de Maine, whose duchess assembled around her here a literary circle the most eminent in France. It was destroyed at the Revolution, and its park, laid out by Le Notre, ploughed up. A part of it has been made a public garden. Sceaux is now celebrated for its large cattle market, and has a considerable glass manufactory. Florian, the novelist, is buried in its Cimetière.

12 Berny. Chatenay, about a mile to the rt. of Berny, was the birthplace of Voltaire, 1694.

At the village of Aunay is the residence of M. de Chateaubriand.

7 Longjumeau, a small town on the Yvette.

Beyond this the road skirts the hill of Mont Lhéry, whose ancient castle, of which a ruined tower remains, built (1012) by Thibault-File-Etoupe, forester of King Robert, was the terror of the kings of France in feudal times, and has been made famous by Boileau in the poem of the Lutrin.

"Ses murs dont le sommet se dérobe à la vue,
Sur le cime d'un roc s'allongeant dans la nue,
Et présentant de loin leur objet ennuyeux,
Du passant qui les fuit semblent suivre les yeux."

A bloody but indecisive battle was fought between Mont Lhéry and Longpont, 1465, between Louis XI. and the troops of the so called "Ligue du Bien Publique," commanded by the Comte du Charollais, afterwards Charles the Bold, of Burgundy. The spot still goes by the name of Cimetière des Bourguinons.

12 Arpajon. The Marolles station of the railway is about 1 m. to the l. of this town, of 2,400 inhab, p. 178.

12 Etrecy, a walled town.

Morigny, on the l. of the road, beyond the river Juine, has a fine church.

7 Etampes.

This ancient town, of 6,000 inhabitants, carries on a considerable trade in flour, the produce of its numerous mills, and in wool. Notre Dame is a Gothic church of the 13th century; that of St. Martin has a leaning tower. This is a station of the railway. R. 49. Etampes once possessed a royal castle, which was given as an apanage to various remarkable personages, among others to the mistresses of the three French kings, Francis I. (Anne de Pisselieu), Henri II. (Diana of Poitiers), and Henri IV. (Gabrielle d'Estrées.)

Beyond this the road enters the monotonous plain of La Beauce, famed for growing corn.

9 Montdésir.

At Méreville, on the l. about midway in this stage, is the Château of Comte de Laborde.

10 Angerville.

13 Toury.

14 Artenay. Here the road from Chartres falls in. R. 54. A little to the W. of the road, near Rouvray, an English detachment of about 2000 men, under Sir John Fastolf, escorting a convoy of provisions to the army besieging Orleans, defeated a force 4000 strong, consisting of French and Scotch, commanded by Dunois and the Count of Clermont, who endeavoured to intercept them. The French left 500 dead on the field, among them Sir John Stewart, constable of Scotland. This engagement, fought February 10, 1409, was called "The Battle of Herrings," from the salt fish for Lent, which formed the bulk of the provisions intended for the English.

A few months later, June 18, and nearly on the same ground, at Patay, the English forces under the same commander, retreating dispirited from Orleans, were put to flight at the first onset by the French, led on by Jeanne d'Arc. Fastolf ran away, and in consequence was afterwards deprived of the Order of the Garter. The brave Talbot, who never turned back on an enemy, being left to fight almost alone, was made prisoner together with Lord Scales.

6 Chevilly. Some curious fossil remains of gigantic quadrupeds (Deinotherium) have been recently discovered near Chevilly.

We here enter the Forest of Orleans; Cercolles is a small hamlet in the heart of it, inhabited by woodcutters. The suburb Bannier, more than 1½ m. long, precedes the town of 14 Orléans. Inns: — H. du Loiret, best; — Boule d'Or; — H. de France. Place du Martroy; — H. de l'Europe.

Orleans (the Roman Genabum, named afterwards Aurelianum, from M. Aurelius, who rebuilt it in the 3rd century), occupies an extensive level area, on the l. bank of the Loire; it contains 45,000 inhabitants, and is chef lieu of the department of the Loiret. In a town so important for its situation, nearly in the centre of France, midway on the course of the sunny but shallow Loire, of consequence in a military point of view as commanding the passage over that river from the N. to the S. provinces of the kingdom, and conspicuous in history from a very early period — the traveller will probably expect more of interest than he will find. Orleans is not conspicuous for trade or manufactures, and is deficient in tangible historical memorials, chiefly owing to the cacoethes of pulling down for the sake of what is called improvement, which has prevailed to a most destructive extent during the last 50 years in the town council. The town gates and walls have been destroyed, several of the latter since 1830, and above all, nearly every memorial of the heroine of Orleans, Joan of Arc, have been swept away.

A tolerably handsome street leads from the bridge over the Loire to the irregular Place du Martroy, which occupies nearly the centre of the town, and is prolonged from it under another name (Rue de Banier) to the Barrière de Paris.

A wide and handsome new street (Rue Jeanne d'Arc) has been driven through a dense mass of old houses from the Rue Royale to the W. front of the Cathedral (St. Croix), the chief building of the town, which this opening now for the first time allows to be seen to advantage. The remarkable circumstance connected with this church is, that it was built, as it now stands, in the 16th century, at a period when Gothic architecture was not only on the decline, but had fallen into disuse. Notwithstanding this it is a beautiful edifice, in a pure style, and reflects credit on its architects, and on Henri IV. who furnished the funds, to atone for the destruction by the Calvinists of the former church, to ingratiate himself (vain hope) with the Jesuits, and to liberate himself from the pope's excommunication. He laid the first stone 1601, and the building, unfinished at his death, was continued under Louis XIII., XIV., and XV. Since 1816, a great deal has been done towards repairing and completing it, and it has been computed that the cost first and last exceeds 22 millions of francs. The design of the W. front was made, 1764, by the architect Gabriel, and modified by his successor M. Paris. It consists of 3 somewhat plain pointed portals, surmounted by 3 rose windows, flanked by 2 towers of equal height (280 ft.) and of great elegance: the circular top is capped by a circlet of cut stone; below this runs a light arcade with fringed arches; in each tower are 3 circular windows. Over the W. portal are some incongruous coats of arms, supported by cherubs, including the shield of the old Bourbons, now lilyless. The S. porch is a Grecian abomination. The nave is flanked by double aisles; its clerestory is particularly lofty.

A portion of the former cathedral, blown up by the Huguenots 1567, who had previously turned it into a stable for their cavalry, in spite of the remonstrances of the Prince de Condé, still remains in the N. choir aisle: the choir ends in an apse. There is nothing else to notice in the interior.

The other churches are either modern or so mutilated as scarcely to deserve notice. St. Aignan is the finest; its much injured portal and nave are in the florid style. Under it is a Romanesque crypt; its towers are surmounted by a pyramid. The houses No. 2 and 4 in the Place adjoining this church, formerly the Convent of St. Aignan, were built and inhabited by Louis XI. They are of plain red brick with high pitched slate roofs, having dormer windows, and resemble closely the remaining fragment of the chateau of Plessis les Tours (R. 53.). St. Pierre le Puellier (Petrus Puellarum) has a Norman N. porch and an ancient apse.

Next to the cathedral, the stranger will find the most to interest him in the Musée, situated Rue des Hotelleries, not far from the Rue Jeanne d'Arc, in the ancient Hotel de Ville, a picturesque old edifice of the time of Charles VIII. and Louis XII. Besides a considerable number of bad pictures it contains a curious collection of local antiquities, carvings in ivory, wood, and stone, which once ornamented the houses and churches of Orleans, chiefly of the 15th and 16th centuries. Amidst old furniture, cabinets, chimney-pieces, bas-reliefs, and statues, is an elaborately carved chest, bearing the history of Solomon and David in relief; another, which came from St. Aignan, is ornamented with a representation of the coronation of Louis XI. A Massacre of the Innocents in stone, an enamelled triptic, and some elaborate iron-work, locks, &c. with Gothic patterns, chef-d'œuvres of the hammer and anvil, also deserve notice.

Not far from the Musée in the Rue des Albanais, and Rue Neuve No. 22., is the house of Diane de Poitiers, so called because she is supposed to have been laid up in it with a broken leg, but it appears to have belonged to the Bishop of Orleans, and was built 1552. The inner front facing the court is a good specimen of Italian architecture, such as we see in the works of Inigo Jones.

Owing to the excessive filth and bad pavement of the older streets of Orleans, the stranger will do well not to trust himself to thread their labyrinths, but should rather keep to the great thoroughfares and the quays, and only to dive into the side streets to visit some particular object and return. The Rue du Tabourg contains some interesting specimens of domestic architecture, as the house of Jeanne d'Arc (No. 35.) described further on, and that of Agnes Sorel, which, whether rightly attributed to her or not, is well worthy of examination, on account of its carved wood and stone work, its doors, the reliefs round the galleries facing the court, their roofs and the staircases. No. 28 Rue de la Recouvrance, called Maison de François Premier, is supposed to have been built for the Duchesse d'Etampes 1540, and in its general arrangement, sculptures, (including the Salamander of Francis) is a good specimen of the renaissance.

At one extremity of the Place du Martroy is a bronze statue of Jeanne d'Arc erected 1804, affected in attitude, incorrect in costume, and entirely in bad taste; around the pedestal are bas-reliefs, representing her exploits and death. An ancient statue, erected on the bridge soon after her death, was broken to pieces by the Revolutionists of 1792, to melt into cannon! We have reserved to the last the enumeration of the few remaining memorials, souvenirs and relics of the heroic Maid of Orleans. A careful inquiry has only discovered the following:

In the Salle du Conseil of the Hôtel de la Mairie is a portrait of her, painted 1581, from an older picture, it is said; it represents her in a theatrical attitude, and in a female costume of the time of Francis I., and apparently deserves little confidence as a likeness. A view of the town hung up here, shows its ancient configuration about the time of the siege. King Louis Philippe has presented to the town a bronze cast of the statue by his gifted daughter, as yet by far the worthiest representation of the inspired maid.

In the private cabinet of antiquities, belonging to M. Vergniaud Romagnesi, a highly respectable furrier, who has most successfully and indefatigably unravelled the archæology of his native town, there exists a likeness of Jeanne, which has far better claim to be considered as a genuine portrait than any other: it is the banner which was carried at the annual procession to celebrate the raising of the siege, presented to the town by Francis I., and painted in the early part of the 16th century, probably by Italian artists of Leonardo da Vinci's school settled at Amboise. It is on canvas painted on both sides. It represents the Virgin and Child in the centre; on her right hand Charles VII. supported by his patron St. Denis, kneeling to receive a ring from the infant; on her l. the Pucelle, also kneeling with hands lifted in prayer, clad in full armour except the helmet, and girt with her sword. Her long black hair parted across her forehead is bound by a fillet behind her back. The expression is remarkable, the eyes very deep set in the face. The background is a curious view of the town, including the old bridge and the tourelles in the midst of it. This banner still bears the cuts and slashes of the swords of the fanatic Huguenots who regarded it as a relic of popery. It was removed from the Mairie at the Revolution, on account of the Fleurs-de-lis which would have caused its destruction, and was concealed in the garret of one of the Echevins of the town, where it remained until a few years back.

The museum of M. Vergniaud contains among other curiosities some fine painted glass of the 16th century from Chenonceau, and the halbert of La Tremouille, brought from his castle.

The maid of Orleans entered the city on Friday, April 29th, 1429, in the teeth of the English army, which was vastly superior to the French force. She had convoyed a supply of provisions from Blois to the famished townsmen, who, as she rode in triumph through their streets on her charger, in full armour, bearing her sacred banner, looked on her as their guardian angel sent from heaven. She was lodged in the house of Jacques Bouchier, treasurer of the Duc d'Orléans, which she had selected, with that sense of modesty which always actuated her, because she would be under the protection of a matron of good repute, his wife. It stood close to the Porte Renard, (long since removed,) and only in part exists in the house No. 35. Rue du Tabourg. The chamber which she occupied is removed, and a sort of pavillon of Italian architecture was erected in its place in the latter part of the 16th century.

The scene of the chief exploits of the maid was the old bridge, which stood considerably higher up the river than the present one (b. 1761), and rested in the centre on an island. It was defended at its extremity, on the S. bank of the Loire, by a fort, or Tête du Pont, called Les Tourelles, which had fallen into the hands of the English before Jeanne's arrival, and, together with another tower in the centre of the bridge, formed a strong post whence the English greatly annoyed the besieged by a battery of cannon planted on it. It was while reconnoitring the town from this battery that the English commander, the Earl of Salisbury, was mortally wounded by a shot from the walls, which drove a splinter into his head.

The maid in her enthusiasm decided that this post should be first attacked, and though she was opposed in this by the most skilful of the French commanders, they were obliged to yield because she carried the people and soldiery with her. As the bridge had been broken between the Tourelles and the town when that fort fell into the hands of the besiegers, a chosen band of troops with the maiden at their head was pushed across the Loire in boats, and began the attack upon the Tête du Pont on the l. bank, which formed part of the Bastille des Tourelles. It was defended by a picked body of 500 English soldiers, under Sir John Gladsdale, who for many hours kept their assailants at bay by their unerring flights of arrows, and fire of cannon. At length the maid, seeing her countrymen falter, snatched up a ladder and planting it against the walls began to mount to the escalade, but an arrow pierced her corslet, and she fell as one dead into the ditch. She was with difficulty rescued by her own people from being made prisoner, and borne to the rear. Here, however, after a few woman's tears called forth by the anguish of the wound, she received, as she said, the consolation of "her voices," and encouraged by St. Michael, St. Catherine, and St. Margaret, &c. hurried back once more to the contest. Great was the dismay of the English when they beheld her, whom a few minutes before they had supposed mortally wounded, again leading the assault, and waving on high her magic banner. To the feeling of supernatural agency fighting against them was now added the failure of arrows and ammunition, and the hopelessness of aid from their army on the opposite bank. The spirits of the French proportionately increased, and they now began to assault the Tourelles from the side of the town, throwing beams over the broken arch to render it accessible. 300 men had fallen on the side of the English, and the capture of their fortress was at length decided by the death of their leader, whom a cannon shot hurled into the river as he was crossing the drawbridge. That same evening the courageous Jeanne, whom but the day before the English had tauntingly desired to "go home and mind her cows," entered Orleans in triumph, by the bridge which had remained many months closed; as she had herself foretold before she began the attack. Next day the English broke up the siege, burning the remaining bastilles which they had erected around the town to hem it in, and retreating from before the walls. Thus in seven days from her arrival in the town, had the maid accomplished its deliverance.

Opposite to the spot where the old bridge terminated, on the l. bank of the river, stands a small cross called Croix de la Pucelle, and the cellars, underneath the neighbouring cabaret called Le Bœuf, are part of the celebrated Tête du Pont included in the English bastille called Les Tourelles. They are now below the surface of the ground, but receive partial light from the old loop holes, which seem designed for the firing of cannon, and are furnished with rings above, from which it is probable that the guns were suspended by chains, as carriages were not then in use. The fort has two branches, and there is a vaulted passage from it, which the people say led to the river. In its present state the fort is nothing more than a damp, dirty, low cellar, possessing this interest alone, that it is perhaps the sole remaining relic of the siege.

The life of the Maid of Orleans has been admirably told in the Quarterly Review, No. 138. by one who has used the discrimination of the practised historian in sifting the true from the false, and has unravelled, for the first time, the mystery of her story, without depriving it of any of the charms of a romance.

During the wars of religion, at another siege of Orleans, 1563, the Duc de Guise, the conqueror of Calais and defender of Metz, who commanded the Catholic army which invested the town, was assassinated before its walls by a fanatical young Huguenot, Poltrot de Méré. He was shot near the village Olivet (R. 70.), and died a few days after in the Château de Caubrai. Orleans was then justly regarded as a stronghold of the Protestant party, and continued so until the revocation of the edict of Nantes banished those who followed the Reformed faith. Previous to that event its population amounted to 54,000.

Francis II., husband of Mary Queen of Scots, ended his insignificant life at Orleans, whither he had repaired to assist at the meeting of the estates, in the building now the Mairie. In his last illness he sent, at the instigation of his mother Catherine de Medicis, a deputation of pilgrims to Nôtre Dame de Clery, promising to purge the kingdom of heretics if he ever recovered. The vow was accomplished not by him, but by Charles IX., at the instigation of the same wicked mother, in the St. Bartholomew's night.

Cæsar mentions Orleans in the following passage: "Carnutes Genabum concurrunt, civesque Romanos, qui negotiandi causâ ibi consisterant, interficiunt."

Promenades are formed round the town upon the line of the former ramparts.

The Post Office is in the Rue d'Illiers.

Conveyances.—Mallepostes to Tours and Bordeaux, to Limoges, daily.

Railway to Paris, 5 or 6 trains daily.

Diligences:—to Tours, Bordeaux, Nantes, 4 daily; to Bourges, to Rouen, by Chartres; to Limoges and Toulouse.

A slow coach runs along the road, on the l. bank of the Loire, through Clery and St. Dié, which is only 3 m. from the Château de Chambord (p. 183) to Blois.

Steamboats on the Loire, three times a week, to Gien, up the river (Route 52.).

—— 2 daily to Tours and Nantes (Route 53.).

Environs. The objects of interest in the vicinity of Orleans are the Château de la Source, the residence of Bolingbroke, 2 m. S. E. (Route 70); Notre Dame de Clery, the burial-place of Louis XI. p. 180.

The distance to Château de la Source is about 5 m.; a cab costs 4 or 5 fr. The way thither leads across the bridge over the Loire to the village of Olivet, whither omnibuses run every hour from Orleans, where the road turns to the l. The château is named from the little river Loiret, which here rises at once out of the ground in full flood, from a natural basin injured by art, close under the walls of the château, in the midst of the parc, and after a course of only 10 m. falls into the Loire, giving, however, its name to the department. With this exception, the grounds laid out in the formal French style, have little interest; nor has the château itself any other than what it derives from having been the residence of Bolingbroke, who rented it from the proprietor during the latter years of his life when exiled from England. He was visited here by Voltaire. He wrote here his Reflections on Exile. There is a second and more copious source produced at the beginning of the last century, by the artificial means resorted to, to confine the waters of the old source, which in consequence, broke a new passage for themselves.

ROUTE 49.

RAILWAY. — PARIS TO ORLEANS, AND TO CORBEIL.

121 kilom. = 75 Eng. miles.

Trains go to Corbeil (30 kilom. = 19 Eng. miles) in 1 hour, or 55 minutes, 8 times a day, on week days; every hour on Sundays and fête days.

Trains to Orleans 6 or 8 times a day, in 5 hours.

The railway was completed to Orleans in 1843.

Terminus in the Boulevard de l'Hôpital, close to the Jardin des Plantes. The line, at first skirting the walls of the Hospital of the Salpetrière, is carried through a pretty country, at the foot of the slopes which border the l. bank of the Seine. It approaches the river closely at each curve which the Seine makes, and commands pleasant views of it. There are many pretty villas and country-houses on the river banks, and villages are numerous.

It skirts the walls of Ivry, and of Vitry, famed for its nursery-gardens, on the rt.

Choisy stat. is close to a viaduct of 8 arches, which also support the towing-path along the Seine; 4 of the arches are left open to allow a passage between the Seine and the town. Choisy is a very thriving, manufacturing town, whose population has increased within a few years to more than 3,000. It was called Choisy le Roi, because Louis XV. made it one of his residences; the Château which he built for himself and Madame de Pompadour is demolished, except a fragment, now turned into a china manufactory. There are also manufactories of morocco leather (the largest in France), of glass, and of beetroot sugar, and a chemical work. Close to the station the Seine is crossed by a bridge of 5 arches, built 1802. The château and village of Orly are seen on the height to the rt. The railway skirts the parc of Villeneuve le Roi. A station is to be made here, and a new bridge over the Seine is in progress to give access to it. We approach the vine-clad slopes, bounding the Valley of the Seine.

6 Ablon stat. Ablon is composed almost entirely of neat villas. One of the 3 protestant churches which the reformers of Paris were allowed by the edict of Nantes to possess, stood here.

2 Athis Mont stat.

Juvisy, situated at the foot of a hill on the rt., is remarkable for its antiquity. Its bridge over the Orge anciently formed the boundary between the kingdoms of Paris and of Orleans. Isabella of Bavaria was arrested here as she was carrying off the Dauphin.

At Juvisy a Branch Railway to Corbeil separates from the main line to Orleans, turning off to the l., but continuing along the margin of the Seine, and running near the high road to Lyons (R. 105). It passes through 4 Chatillon sur Seine-Stat. Chatillon is a little port on the Seine. At Viry is the fine garden of the Duchesse de Raguse.

3 Ris stat.,—close to Laborde.

Here is a suspension bridge built over the Seine by the late M. Aguado, the Spanish banker.

The railway cuts through a part of the park of Petit Bourg, broken up and parcelled out by its owner, the late M. Aguado. The Château, when it belonged to the Duc d'Antin, was often the residence of Madame de Montespan, who was visited here by Louis XIV.

4 Evry stat.

3 Corbeil stat.

Corbeil is a considerable manufacturing town of 3,900 inhab., on the Seine, here crossed by a bridge, at the influx of the Essonne. Here are very extensive Flour Mills, belonging to government, which supply Paris. The principal buildings are, the Church of St. Spire, the Halleau Blé, and the little church of St. Jean en l'Ile, built by the Templars, in the 13th century.

Omnibuses are waiting at Corbeil to convey passengers on to Fontainebleau. (Route 105.) A continued street connects Corbeil with the village of Essonne.

[It is probable that the Corbeil railway will be continued on to Dijon.]

At Juvisy (19 kilom. from Paris) the Orleans Line, curving a little to the S. W., enters the valley of a small stream, the Orge, the railway crossing previously the high road to Antibes. It traverses the gardens of

3 Savigny (stat.), a village possessing a handsome castle, fortified 1486 by Etienne de Vesi, chamberlain to Charles VIII., now the property of the Princess Dowager of Eckmühl. A great hemp market is held here. Viaducts of 3 and 5 arches lead to and from

2 (rt.) Epinay (stat.), which is 2½ m. distant from Longjumeau on the post road, p. 170. The quarries near this furnish paving stones for the streets of Paris. You next skirt on the l. the forêt de St. Geneviève; on the rt. beyond the Orge, you see the château of Vaucluse; Villiers, and its villas of Paris citizens, and Longpont, whose church of the 14th century is the sole relic of its ancient abbey. A portion of the parc of the handsome château of Ormay is traversed before reaching 4 St. Michel sur Orge. Mont Lhéry is about 1½ m. on the rt.; see p. 171.

The line passes through the midst of the collection of hamlets called

3 Bretigny (stat.), beyond which the railway attains a summit level, and descends into the valley of the Juine shortly before

5 Marolles (stat.). The village and château lie a little on the l.; Arpajon (see p. 171.) is about 1 m. off on the rt.

3 Chaptainville (stat.). On leaving this station we pass through the park appertaining to the château of Mesnil Voisin, the property of the Comte Choiseul Praslin, a building of brick and stone on the borders of the Juine. Farther on to the l. is another château, Chamarande. The railway skirts the walls of 9 Etrécy (stat.). It here approaches the post road, which passes through Etrécy, and the two run parallel for some distance.

7 Etampes (stat.), close to a ruined tower called Guinette, built in the 11th century by King Robert. Etampes is described at p. 171.

The railway crosses the streams of the Louette and Chalonette on viaducts, and ascending the valley of l'Hémery reaches the upland plain of La Beauce and a second summit level. It crosses the post road on a bridge shortly before reaching 19 Angerville (stat.). 14 m. from this is Pithéviers, famed for patés d'alouettes, for almond cakes, and for its trade in saffron. From this point the post and railroad run side by side, within a short distance of each other, so that the description of the one will serve for both.

13 Toury.

14 Artenay (stat.), p. 171.

5 Chevilly (stat.).

14 Orleans. Terminus a little to the E. of the Porte Bannier.

See Route 48. p. 171.

ROUTE 50.

ROUEN TO ORLEANS, BY CHARTRES.

201 kilom. = 124½ Eng. m.

Diligences daily.

11 Port St. Ouen,
17 Louviers, } (Route 9.)
23 Evreux, (Route 25.)

13 Thomer. Our route traverses the fertile but monotonous district of La Beauce (Belsia), one of the granaries of France, on a table land extending nearly from the Seine to the Loire; of which Chartres is considered the capital.

15 Nonancourt.

14 Dreux. (Route 35.)

16 Péage.

16 Chartres (Route 46.) It takes about 10 hours to travel hence to Orleans. At the village of Bercheres are stone quarries from which Chartres cathedral was built. The road traverses the fertile corn-lands of La Beauce.

26 Allonne.

19 Allaines.

15 Artenay, on the Paris road, (Route 48.); and in the department of the Loiret.

6 Chevilly.

14 Orléans. (Route 48.)

ROUTE 52.

THE LOIRE, A.: GIEN TO ORLEANS.

62 kilom. = 38½ Eng. m.

Steamers, 3 times a week.

The scenery of this part of the course of the Loire is not particularly interesting.

When the height of water in the Loire permits, the steamers ascend as high as Nevers. From Nevers to Gien the course of the Loire is described in Route 105.

Gien is a town of 5,530 inhabitants, on the rt. bank of the Loire, here crossed by a bridge, on the road from Orleans to Lyons. Its old church,

St. Etienne, has been injured by repairs. Near it is a portion of the ancient Castle, now turned into the Prefecture. It was at Gien that the Maid of Orleans crossed the Loire on her way from her native village, to announce her divine mission to "Charles le Dauphin," at Chinon.

L., a mound of earth, called Motte du Lion, is supposed to be a Celtic tumulus.

About 12 m. below Gien lies

L. Sully, a town of 2,145 inhabitants, possessing a wire suspension bridge, (since 1856), and an old Castle, resting its front upon the Loire, and separated on the other side from the town by a deep ditch. This building is remarkable as the residence of the minister of Henri IV., Maximilian de Bethune, first Duke de Sully, who purchased it from its former possessor, the family de la Trémouille; and in the alterations which he made in the building every where effaced their arms to substitute his own, along with cannons, grenades, bullets, and similar ornaments. He passed here the latter years of his life, after his disgrace under Louis XIII., maintaining considerable state with his regiment of lancers, and occupying himself with the preparation of his work "Sur les Economies Royales," which he printed at a press established in one of the towers. It remained in the possession of his descendants down to 1807, when the last Duc de Sully died. One of them formed up a little theatre in the château, and was visited by the literary men of his times, among them by Voltaire, who here commenced his Henriade. The building is now going to decay, and is no longer inhabited: in one corner a few bits of tapestry, old portraits, &c. have been brought together; also a statue of Sully.

Rt., the Church of St. Révérie, one of the oldest and finest in the department, was originally attached to a monastery, destroyed 1792. Its tower was lower volt of th authority curious N and one o cristy.

Rt. Ch
mains of
The riv pension-b
L. Jarg habitants, still retain within wh soldiers, chief, th themselve
the siege attacks o nois and down is mounti made canno stantl lower ner.
all the spite of prevent was ma
The Vraie, t nots, 15
Rt., a bleux, i d'Orlean
the Sein
Rt. O

St. Etienne, has been injured by repairs. Near it is a portion of the ancient Castle, now turned into the Prefecture. It was at Gien that the Maid of Orleans crossed the Loire on her way from her native village, to announce her divine mission to "Charles le Dauphin," at Chinon.

L., a mound of earth, called Motte du Leon, is supposed to be a Celtic tumulus.

About 12 m. below Gien lies

L. Sully, a town of 2,145 inhabitants, possessing a wire suspension bridge, (since 1836), and an old Castle, resting its front upon the Loire, and separated on the other side from the town by a deep ditch. This building is remarkable as the residence of the minister of Henri IV., Maximilian de Bethune, first Duke de Sully, who purchased it from its former possessors, the family de la Trémouille; and in the alterations which he made in the building every where effaced their arms to substitute his own, along with cannons, grenades, bullets, and similar ornaments. He passed here the latter years of his life, after his disgrace under Louis XIII., maintaining considerable state with his regiment of lancers, and occupying himself with the preparation of his work "Sur les Economies Royales," which he printed at a press established in one of the towers. It remained in the possession of his descendants down to 1807, when the last Duc de Sully died. One of them fitted up a little theatre in the château, and was visited by the literary men of his times, among them by Voltaire, who here commenced his Henriade. The building is now going to decay, and is no longer inhabited: in one corner a few bits of tapestry, old portraits, &c. have been brought together; also a statue of Sully.

Rt., the Church of St. Bénoit, one of the oldest and finest in the department, was originally attached to a monastery, destroyed 1792. Its tower was lowered in consequence of a revolt of the monks against the royal authority under Francis I. It has a curious N. portal, some carved stalls, and one or two curiosities in the sacristy.

Rt. Châteauneuf. Here are remains of a fine château.

The river is crossed by another suspension-bridge at

L. Jargeau, a town of 2,358 inhabitants, 12 m. from Orleans. It still retains a portion of its old walls, within which a few hundred English soldiers, with their commander-in-chief, the Earl of Suffolk, shut themselves up, after the raising of the siege of Orleans, to resist the attacks of the French led on by Dunois and the Maid. She was struck down into the ditch by a stone, while mounting a ladder to scale a breach made in the walls by the besiegers' cannon; but, recovering herself, instantly rose, and encouraged her followers by her voice and waving banner. The town was taken, and almost all the garrison put to the sword, in spite of the endeavours of the Maid to prevent the shedding of blood. Suffolk was made prisoner.

The Church of St. Etienne and St. Vrain, though injured by the Huguenots, 1562, is still a fine building.

Rt., a little below Checy, at Combleux, is the opening of the canal d'Orleans, which unites the Loire with the Seine.

Rt. Orleans, p.171.

ROUTE 53.

THE LOIRE, B. ORLEANS TO TOURS, BY BLOIS AND AMBOISE. — EXCURSIONS TO CHAMBORD AND CHENONCEAU.

By the post road, which runs along the rt. bank of the Loire, the distance is 114 kilom. = 73 English m. 4 or 5 diligences run daily. A railroad is in progress to Blois and Tours.

Steamboats start every morning from the Quai de Recouvrance at Orleans, about 7 or 8 o'clock. The voyage from Orleans to Tours takes up about 9½ hours; the ascent requires double the time.

The steamers called Inexplosibles belong to a company established by M. Henri de Larochejacquelin, brother of the chief of that eminent family. They are of iron, very slight and small, in order to draw as little water as possible; they are furnished with a cabin where refreshments may be had, but have a very limited deck. Carriages are not taken on board.

The course of the Loire from Orleans to Tours lies for the most part through a wide valley, slightly varied by hills of very moderate height; its scenery, therefore, consisting chiefly of slopes covered over with vineyards, of low banks, and islands, fringed with willows and poplars, is somewhat monotonous, though of a sunny character, and relieved now and then by a frowning old town such as Blois or Amboise, or by a formal château. Lower down a yellow streak of cliffs hollowed out into caves and subterranean dwellings frequently occurs. The river itself winds very much; its shallow waters occupy a bed too large for them to fill in summer, and obstructed by shifting sandbanks to such an extent that steamers navigate up and down only by zigzagging from side to side, by which one-third is added to the length of the actual windings of the river.

The high road from Orleans to Blois is somewhat tedious.

The first thing worth noticing after quitting Orleans is

L. the outlet into the Loire of the Loiret, a stream not 30 ft. broad, which yet gives the name to a department. On the peninsula between the rivers once stood the Abbey St. Mesmin, whose fertile territory was the gift of Clovis to the monks. A part of the church and traces of the gardens remain. The road to Cléry crosses the Loiret by a bridge at St. Mesmin.

L. opposite to St. Ay*, whose vineyards produce the best wine in the Orleanais, the spire of the Church of Nôtre Dame de Cléry may be perceived about 3 m. from the Loire on its l. bank. This little town, 9 m. from Orleans, contains a very fine Church, remarkable for the veneration in which its image of the virgin was held by the bigot and tyrant Louis XI. who was buried within its walls. Its name must be familiar to every reader of Quentin Durward. Louis passing this way in his frequent journeys into Touraine always performed his devotions to our Lady of Cléry, whose leaden figure he carried in his cap. The existing church was almost entirely built by him, in the place of an older one ruined by the English under Salisbury, 1428. He selected it as his burial place in preference to St. Denis, because he believed he had recovered from a severe illness by the intercession of the Virgin. A grave was made for him in his lifetime, in which he used to lay himself at full length to ascertain whether it fitted him, but this as well as the statue in bronze which adorned the tomb was destroyed by the Huguenots, 1563. The existing monument is said to resemble the preceding one, except that the statue is in marble; it was executed by Michel Bourdin, an artist of Orleans, for Louis XIII. It went to Paris 1794, but returned 1818, and has a fresh and modern air from the restoration it has undergone. Lewis is represented bare-headed, on his knees in an attitude of prayer, upon a black altar tomb with 4 angels in the corners. The image of the Virgin is said to be the identical one before which Lewis spent so many hours in prayer; it is black. Independently of its fine architectural proportions, the church possesses several objects of interest, as the sculpture of the Sacristy, much mutilated, the carved wood-work of its stalls, and the Chapel of the family of the * Post Road 13 St. Ay.

Counts of Dunois, in which Tanneguy du Châtel was buried 1477. A wretched road leads from this to Meung on the Loire.

The Loire is crossed by a wire suspension-bridge at Rt. Meung, or Mehun, a town whose name occurs in the annals of the English campaigns. It has a Romanesque church, and a red, ruined Castle close beside it, partly concealed by trees, and backed by a hill.

L. In the church-yard of Lailly, Condillac was buried without a line to mark the spot. An irregular bridge of some 30 arches, the oldest parts of which date from the 15th or 16th century, is thrown over the Loire at

Rt. Beaugency*, an antique town of 4849 inhabitants, prettily situated between two hills. Conspicuous above its old houses rises the square Donjon tower, of great antiquity (10th or 11th century) and solid construction, 115 feet high, adjoining the Castle built by Le Beau Dunois. The Hôtel de Ville, designed by the architect Viart of Orleans 1526, has an elegant front ornamented with the arms of the Card' de Longueville and of the Comte de Dunois. The clocher de St. Firmin is the only remains of the church of that saint, and is now attached to the Hôtel Dieu. Beaugency gives its name to one of the best wines of the Orleanois.

The high road runs at the back of the town, skirting without entering it, and for the next 3 stages separates itself from the Loire, to avoid its windings, and passes the little town of

Rt. Mer and Suèvres†, and the village of

Rt. Menars le Château‡, so called from the well built but ill kept château which belonged to Madame de Pompadour, and under Louis XVIII. to the Duc de Belluno. It is now the property of the Prince de Chimay, who has established a college here.

Post Road.

* 13 k. Beaugency.
† 13. Mer.
‡ 10. Menars.

L. St. Dié, nearly opposite Suèvres, is about 1¾ m. distant from the Palace of Chambord. (See p. 183.)

Rt. Blois. § Inns:—H. de l'Europe, tolerably good, nearest the landing-place of the steamer; bed 2 fr.; Nouvelle Angleterre, close to the bridge; Bœuf. The crème de St. Gervais, a preparation resembling Devonshire cream, made at the village St. Gervais, near Blois, is said to be very good.

This ancient and picturesque town, chef lieu of the departement Loire et Cher, containing 14,000 inhabitants, is built upon a steep slope, crowned by its historic and gloomy castle at one end of the ridge, and by the cathedral at the other.

The quarter which reaches down to the river consists of modern houses, forming a handsome quay lined with rows of trees, and along it, between the town and the river, the high road passes. A bridge of 11 arches, surmounted by an obelisk in the centre, unites Blois with its suburb Vienne on the l. bank.

Numerous streets of stairs running up the hill, and winding narrow lanes lined with picturesque old houses, form the bulk of the town, and must be threaded to reach

The Castle, now degraded into a barrack, but for ages the residence of kings and princes, and the scene of momentous events, crimes, and murders. The E. front, of red brick, facing the square, is of the time of Louis XII., who rebuilt this edifice, in which he was born.

The fine Gothic portal, surmounted by a niche or oriel, is not in the centre of the façade; it leads into a court, the E. side of which is lined with a cloister, resting on pillars carved with a net-like panelling. On the rt. hand (N. side) is the pile raised by Francis I. corresponding in style (renaissance) with part of Chambord. That on the W. was commenced under Gaston Duc d'Orléans from the designs of Mansard, but never finished; that on the l. (S.) is the most ancient and least like a palace, the work, probably, of Louis XI. An elegant winding staircase of stone, from whose rich roof the Salamanders of Francis I. have been effaced, leads into the suite of rooms, now occupied with soldiers' beds, muskets, and accoutrements, in which the Tragedy of the Guises was consummated. Tradition, as it seems, gloating over this deed of blood and deception, has preserved the memory of the minutest particulars connected with it; and, though the interior was stripped of almost all its decorations at the Revolution, and the walls white-washed like those of a prison, points out the chamber and oratoire of Catherine de Medicis, the contriver of the plot, — the Cabinet of Henri III. where he distributed with his own hand the daggers to his 45 gentlemen in waiting, who were to rid him of his rival, the hero of the barricades,— the Vieux Cabinet, at the entrance of which the victim, sent for by the king, was set upon by his assassins, as he was turning aside the tapestry hung over the door, and fell pierced with more than 40 wounds, — the outer chamber where the body lay for 2 hours with a cloak and a cross of straw thrown over it, until the royal murderer, issuing from his den to look at the corse of the once mighty Henri le Balafré, spurned it in the face with his foot, saying, " Je ne le croyais pas aussi grand," and then ordered it to be burnt, and the ashes thrown into the river. During the progress of the murder, prayers were being offered up for its success in the adjoining chapel, distinguished by the pendents which still ornament its roof. This happened on the 23d December, 1588: — on the following day the Cardinal de Lorraine, brother of the Balafré, was murdered in cold blood in another part of the castle. The ground floor of this wing of the building is occupied by the Salle des Etats de Blois, to attend the meeting of which the Guises had been enticed hither from Paris, their stronghold. It was while seated at the council board in this hall, eating prunes de Brignolles, that the duke was summoned by the royal page to attend the king. This hall is supposed to be as old as the 13th century: a row of pointed arches supports its double, barn-like roof of wood. The king's throne was placed against the wall on one side.

One other memorial of that age of crime and superstition remains to be noticed,—it is a sort of pavillon raised upon an old tower, detached from the rest of the castle, projecting over the Church of St. Nicholas towards the river: this was the Observatory of Catherine de Medicis, to which she used to retire with her astrologer to consult the stars. It bears the inscription "Uraniæ Sacrum." A stone slab, like a tomb-stone, served as a support for the astrolabe.

A good general view of the gloomy pile is gained by turning to the l., as you issue out of the great gate, through a vaulted passage into the Place du College, above which it rears aloft its blackening, ill-omened mass from a basement of grass-grown buttresses. Here we may remark the window from which Catherine de Medicis let herself down, to escape from the Calvinists engaged in the Conjuration d'Amboise. (See p. 186.)

In the Jesuits' church (Eglise St. Vincent), now belonging to a sisterhood, facing this Place, is the tomb of Gaston d'Orleans (?), who passed here, in a sort of exile, the last eight years of his insignificant life.

The Church of St. Nicholas is a fine Gothic edifice, chiefly belonging to the 12th century, except the lower part of the side chapel, said to be of the 11th, and the three first arches of the nave, which probably date from the 13th. The manner in which the capitals are executed, and the regularity of the arches, deserve notice. This church has been restored lately.

The terraced gardens attached to the prefecture (formerly Eveché) form a most agreeable walk, commanding a fine view of the town and river, extending to the distant towers of Chambord and Chaumont. The cathedral is not worth entering: it is said to have been built by Mansard. A vaulted sewer, partly cut in the solid rock, by some attributed to the Romans and called an aqueduct, runs under a considerable part of the town. It is known to the common people as the Pont de César.

In the old streets of Blois may still be found some interesting specimens of domestic architecture of the 16th century. The Hôtel d'Alluye retains an elegant portico in its inner court, and some rooms on the ground floor, but little altered. Miss Costello, mentions a curiously-carved house in the Rue Pierre de Blois leading to the Eveché; and an elaborately-sculptured staircase of wood representing St. George and the Dragon, with a central ballustrade corded to the top, and compartments filled with various compositions, is figured in Müller's views.

Among the illustrious natives of Blois may be named the learned divine and chronicler Peter of Blois, who died in England A. D. 1200; Louis XII.; and Denys Papin, for whom the French have claimed the invention of the steam-engine.

In 1814 the empress Marie Louise, with the king of Rome, and the remnant of the Imperial court, government, and army, were despatched hither by Napoleon, who made his wife regent; and the last imperial decrees were dated from hence.

The interesting excursion to the Château de Chambord may be conveniently made from Blois, whence it is about 12 m. distant, a 2 hours' drive. The road thither runs up the l. bank of the Loire in sight of the Château of Menars on the opposite bank, on an embankment or Levée, nearly as far as St. Dié, a village with a small inn (a u Grand Chambord) 1½ m. distant from the château. A cross road, in very bad condition, leads thither.

Chambord, the Versailles of Touraine, until Louis XIV. deserted that beautiful province to fix the royal residence in a swamp close to the metropolis, has no beauty of site to recommend it, being placed in the midst of a sandy flat, surrounded by a park 21 m. in circumference, where the roe and deer cross the traveller's path. By many the chateau itself will be pronounced ugly and fantastic: a vast group of turrets, minarets, and cones or inverted funnels, rise conspicuous at a distance from a solid basement, the chief features of which are 6 external round towers of prodigious size, 60 ft. in diameter, which seem the types of all those which characterise French châteaux. Its architecture marks the transition between the fortified castle and the Italian palace, and is a fine specimen of the age and taste of Francis I., who built it, after his return from captivity in Spain, on the site of a favourite hunting lodge of the Counts of Blois, engaging Primaticcio to furnish designs for it. He laid the foundation of it 1526, and employed 1800 men constantly on its construction until his death. It was afterwards continued, though with less zeal, by Henri II. and Charles IX.; and even Louis XV. added the low screen at the back which, though from Mansard's designs, is most ugly, and of course inappropriate to the style of the original. It is at present the property of the Duc de Bordeaux, having been purchased for him, and presented to him by public subscription. He has been confirmed in his possession, though the Bourbons have forfeited other estates in France, by the decision of the French law courts. Its 440 chambers are uninhabited, dismantled, and falling to ruin, the glass broken in the windows, the slates falling from the roof, the floors partly ripped up; — but the decay (dating of course from the Revolution) will, it is hoped, be arrested, since a small sum is now laid out yearly by its owner in repairs.

Enclosed within the building a central tower rises above all the rest, called Donjon, or Tour de la Fleur de Lis, from the lily of France, in stone 6 ft. high, which surmounted it, and having escaped the hammer which defaced all its minor brethren so profusely scattered over the building, at the first Revolution, was destined to fall at the second.

This tower is filled with a very beautiful double spiral staircase, an architectural curiosity, so contrived that 2 parties may pass up or down at the same time without meeting, scarcely even seeing each other. It opens on each floor upon 4 corridors, branching from it like the arms of a cross, vaulted. The compartments of their roof were once filled with the Salamander and F. of Francis I. One of these corridors was converted under Louis XIV. into a theatre, for the first performance of Molière's Bourgeois Gentilhomme, in which Molière and his troop performed before the king for the first time, 1670. The device of Henri II. and Diana of Poictiers, the H. and D. entwined with the crescent, are distributed over the parts which he built, but left unfinished.

It is worth while to mount to the terrace and top of the tower to examine the details of the building, its solid masonry inlaid with morsels of black slate cut into the shape of lozenges, crescents, &c. Its rich niches, its classic chimneys converted into ornaments instead of being eye-sores, its balustrades, and flying buttresses, are all curious specimens of the style of the Renaissance, resembling somewhat the Elizabethan architecture of Burleigh. The roof is like the hull of a ship, and must contain a forest of timbers. From the top of the tower you look down upon the wide forest and wilderness of a park with its avenues.

There is little pleasure in traversing a labyrinth of empty rooms, mostly small, stripped of all ornament, open to the weather, and showing no traces of the frescoes with which they were decorated by Jean Cousin; unless the imagination can restore them, and repeople their halls and corridors with the brilliancy and beauty of the courts of Francis I. and Henri II., recalling the time when Charles V. was entertained here on his passage through France, 1539, by his generous rival, or that when poor Mademoiselle de Montpensier here lost her heart to the fickle Lauzun.

Among the occupants of Chambord since it was deserted by its royal owners, have been Marshal Saxe, — that veteran of a hundred fights, to whom it was given by Louis XV. He brought with him 6 cannon taken from the enemy, and a regiment of lancers whom he reviewed daily from the terrace, although with one foot already in the grave. He died here 1750. It afterwards became the asylum of Stanislas king of Poland, and his queen Maria Leczinski.

It was plundered and dismantled by the mob of 1792, and sold as national property.

Napoleon bestowed it in 1809 upon Marshal Berthier, from whose widow it was purchased by a body of Loyalists and presented to the Duc de Bordeaux, as already mentioned.

Bidding adieu to Blois, its frowning castle, whose W. front looking down the Loire is imposing and more cheerful than the rest, with the astrological tower of Catherine de Medicis in front of it, and the pepper-box dome of the cathedral in the distance, we resume our voyage between vine hills and willow beds.

Rt. Hereabouts begins the colossal dyke called La Levée, commenced in very ancient times under the Carlovingian monarchs, and augmented and improved by different kings of France, to restrain the furious Loire within its bed, and check its destructive inundations. It runs along the rt. bank as far as the mouth of the Mayenne, below Angers, a distance of about 100. m. It is faced with masonry kept in constant repair, and the high road is carried along its top. It is a considerable work, though vastly inferior to the dykes of Holland. There are other very extensive dykes on the l. bank in different portions of the river's course.

This high embankment conceals from the view of those who travel by water the wide and fertile plain beyond it; only now and then the tops of houses are seen rising above it.

Rt. Chousy. The first object to be noticed below Blois is,

L., the Château de Chaumont, a conspicuous building, on a height, with machicolated towers, forming 3 sides of a square. It was the residence of Catherine de Medicis, who here spent her time in plotting and in reading the stars until the death of her husband, Henri II., when she obliged his mistress, Diana of Poitiers, to exchange her bijou château of Chenonceaux (p. 187.) for this, which, however, Diana does not appear to have inhabited. It was the birthplace of the Cardinal George d'Amboise, 1460, the wise and popular minister of France under Louis XII. The arms, still visible, cut in the masonry, are a blazing hill,—chaud-mont.

Rt. Veuves: a little beyond this the Loire enters the province of Touraine, and the department Indre et Loire.

Rt. The high road does not pass through Amboise, but through a suburb on the opposite bank of the river.

L. *Amboise.—Inn: Lion d'Or. La Boule d'Or was shut up, 1841. At the Cycne, on the rt. bank of the river, close to the Poste aux Chevaux, the landlord keeps a good horse and cab, and charges to Chenonceaux 8 fr., or thither and to Loches 15 fr.

* Post road. — 12 Amboise.

Amboise, an old and languid town of 4600 inhabitants, stands on the l. bank of the Loire, here divided by an island, upon which the 2 bridges which cross the river rest.

The principal and most conspicuous object is the Castle, long the residence of the kings of France, and now the property of Louis Philippe. Its buildings, flanked by round towers roofed with cones, reduced to a very small portion of their original extent, occupy the platform of a lofty rock, escarped in front and rear. The present king, who inherits the castle as the descendant of the Duc de Penthièvre, has caused the old houses to be swept away from the base of the rock, so as to form an opening from the bridge to a tunnel, which he has bored through the rock and under the castle. It is vaulted with masonry. Two enormous towers, 90 ft. high and 42 in diameter, spring from the ground at the base of the rock, and rise to the level of the other towers. They contain 2 winding, inclined planes of so gradual a slope that horses and even carriages can ascend them to the summit of the rock. The one in front has been lately closed to form a saloon, but that behind, on the l. as you emerge from the tunnel, still gives access to the castle, and is remarkable for its elegant florid Gothic doorway and groined roof. This and most of the other existing buildings date from the time of Charles VIII., who was much attached to Amboise, having been born here, 1470; he also died here, 1498.

In the interior of the château there is nothing worth seeing; the improving hand of the present possessor having pierced holes as big as the embrasures of a battery in its old and massive walls to admit broad day into vaults once perhaps cachots or oubliettes, but now, by the aid of whitewash, ventilation and stoves, converted into comfortable kitchens, larders, pantries, and cellars; while the upper rooms, papered, polished, and filled with cast-off furniture from the Palais

Royal, preserve no traces of antiquity. Yet in them perhaps was decided the bloody doom of those 1200 miserable and misled Huguenot prisoners concerned in the well known "Conjuration d'Amboise," which had for its object to extricate the young and simple king Francis II. from the clutches and influence of the Guises, 1560. The secret of the plot was betrayed to the Duc de Guise by one of the conspirators, and its leader, La Renaudie, seized and hung on a gibbet in the centre of the bridge. The remainder of the conspirators were dispersed and everywhere seized; the castle walls were decorated with the hanging bodies of the conspirators, and the courts and streets of the town streamed with blood, until the wearied headsman, resigning his axe, consigned the remainder to other executioners who drowned them in the Loire. Such was the extent of the carnage that the court was driven from Amboise by the stench of the dead bodies. This butchery formed the prelude to the still more horrible tragedy of St. Bartholomew. In 1470 the exiled Queen Margaret of Anjou and her son, through the intervention of the cunning Louis XI., were reconciled in this castle to her quondam foe, by whom her own husband had been dethroned, the Earl of Warwick, the king-maker. Hatred to Edward IV. became the bond of union, and they agreed in vowing vengeance on him.

The gardens are well kept up, and the view from their terraces is as good as that from the château itself, which is not worth entering, as it contains no paintings or architectural decorations, and is simply furnished as a country gentleman's house. Within the garden, however, stands the little Chapel, one of the most exquisite morsels of profusely florid Gothic in France, recently restored by the king in a manner most creditable to French taste. It is in the form of a cross, was built for Anne of Brittany, and is dedicated to St. Hubert, whose miraculous meeting with the stag having a cross growing between its horns, is curiously carved over the rich doorway. This and the interior are pannelled throughout, or decorated with foliage of the most delicate sculpture. The leaves, showing all their fibres, crisped and curled round the edges like kale, are cut behind in a style more common in ivory than stone. Interspersed among the foliage are singular and grotesque figures: along the wall runs a sort of frieze of stone work; the roof is elaborately groined, and the pendants hanging from it carved with grotesques, the whole reminding one of the richness of Henry VIIth's chapel, without its arrangement. Underneath is a crypt in which the Holy Sepulchre was originally placed, which is now removed to the little chapel of St. Florentin in the town below. It consists of a group of figures as large as life, well executed in baked clay and coloured, representing the Entombment of our Lord. The figures are said to be portraits of the family of an intendant of the palace named Babou, the three Marys being likenesses of his daughters, who were in turn mistresses of Francis I., as the story goes.

In the cliff a little above the castle, and entered from the garden behind a private house, are very singular caverns, called Les Greniers de César. They consist of a lofty, narrow excavation running in a direct line into the rock, evidently once divided into three stories, as the broken edges of the chalk vaulting which formed the roofs and floors still remain; and by their removal the three are thrown into one. The walls are covered with cement. At the extremity is a round, vaulted chamber lined with masonry; at one side runs a staircase cut in the rock, descending towards the river and ascending to a level with the roof of the high excavation, where it leads to three other similar vaulted chambers constructed, it is supposed, to hold corn. There is a tradition that Cæsar, with these caves below it, to serve as store-houses.

It seems likely that these caves had a much later origin, though their destination was probably for granaries or cellars.

Amboise is said to derive its name from its position between the two streams, "ab ambabus aquis", the Loire and the Amasse, which here falls into the Loire.

A very pleasant excursion may be made from Amboise to Chenonceaux, 10 m. S. The road lies through the forest of Amboise, belonging to the king, passing on the rt. the pagoda of the park of Chanteloup, whose magnificent château, the retreat of the Duc de Choiseul, discarded minister of Louis XV., when banished from the court to his estate by way of punishment, has disappeared. After the Revolution, it belonged to le Comte Chaptal, the distinguished chemist, and minister of Buonaparte, who established here a refinery of sugar from beet root, which he first brought to perfection. The château was pulled down and sold a few years ago by the "bande noir."

At Bléré (Inn, Boule d'Or) we reach the valley of the Cher; and a road turning to the l. up the rt. bank of the river, covered hereabouts with black vines (gros noir), leads to the village of Chenonceaux (possessing a tolerable little inn) which is connected by an avenue with the Château de Chenonceaux.

In front of the building extends a stately terrace lined with stone balustrades set with orange trees, approached by a flight of steps; and adjoining is a pleasure garden.

Château Chenonceaux has nearly as many souvenirs about it as Amboise, but not of so disagreeable a kind. It was built in the more joyous days of Francis the First. Its picturesque ornaments, such as are seen at Longleat, at Audley End, and in works of Inigo Jones. It stands on the river Cher: literally on, for it is built partly upon a bridge, and the river passes under it. At a distance it is most picturesque, with its green court, its single advanced round tower, occupied by the Concièrge, and pretty formal gardens around. Its interior is almost unaltered since the day it was built, besides, what is so rare in France, being well and carefully kept up, retaining all its old furniture, old cabinets, old china, enamels, and glass. Its vaulted hall is hung with armour, its walls are covered with stamped cloth, its doors are screened by tapestry curtains which draw aside, and the rich ceilings are of blue ground studded with stars. You are shown the very glass out of which Francis I. drank; Mary Queen of Scots' mirror, &c. But its chief interest depends on the persons who have lived in it. It was given, by Henri II. to his mistress, Diana de Poitiers, who enlarged it, by extending the bridge, previously constructed over only part of the river, quite to the other side, and raising upon it a handsome, but less quaint and interesting building, of two stories. Hither her royal lover used to repair after hunting in the neighbouring forest of Loches. Her initial, D, is plentifully introduced combined with his H, thus, ⊞ She was, however, dispossessed of her fair mansion, on the death of Henry, by the wicked and unscrupulous Catherine de Medicis, whose bed-room, with the original furniture, is still shown. It was afterwards for some time occupied by Louise de Lorraine, widow of Henri III.: her chamber is still hung with black. Nor does the list of distinguished inmates cease here, for near the end of the last century all the wits of the time used to assemble here, drawn together by the owner of the mansion, Madame Dupin, a beautiful, amiable and accomplished lady, who died so recently as 1799, at the age of 93. In her time, Voltaire, Bolingbroke (the exiled minister), Rousseau, and many others, were her constant visiters; and in the little, dusty, faded theatre, which occupies the end of Diana's Gallery, Rousseau's opera, "Le Devin du Village," was performed for the first time. The collection of historical portraits, including all the persons who have lived here is very curious; among them a whole-length portrait of Diana, said to be by Primaticcio, in the costume of her namesake, the goddess, with a dog in a leash, a bow at her back, and wearing a taffeta petticoat, embroidered with golden fleurs-de-lys. Here are also portraits of Henri IV., of Sully, of Rabelais, and a cast of the sweet face of Agnes Sorel from her monument at Loches. The most remarkable thing about Chenonceaux, perhaps, is that it escaped the ravages of the Revolution; owing solely to the respect which the character of Madame Dupin, its mistress, commanded. Strangers are obligingly admitted by the present proprietor, Le Comte de Villeneuve, to see the interior.

Loches (R. 56.) is about 18 m. S. of Chenonceaux; the road runs partly through the Forest of Loches. It is a dreary ride.

Rt. The road* to Tours, below Amboise, is carried along the Levée, at no great distance from the Loire.

L. Mont Louis, a village composed partly of caves cut in the rocks, was the place of meeting of an ecclesiastical assembly, convened to witness the reconciliation of Henry II. with Thomas à Becket only three months before his assassination.

Rt. Frillière: near this, the banks of the river rise into considerable heights; and on the top of a projecting promontory stands, conspicuous from afar, rt. the feudal beacon tower, called Lanterne de la Roche Corbon, not unlike a great factory chimney of modern times. It anciently communicated by telegraphic signals with the Castle of Amboise. It is about 50 ft. high, and stands on the very verge of the cliff, above the small village of Roche Corbon, remarkable because most of its habitations are cut out of the limestone (craie tuffeau). They are sometimes faced with walls, at others with partitions of the living rock, and are prettily festooned with vines. One mass of rock, which must have slipped from above, and now lies in a nook, is turned into two cottages of two stories. These habitations seem comfortable, and are mostly provided with little gardens in front. Some large excavations which belonged to the castle of Roche Corbon, with fragments of masonry, remain. It is worth while to climb up to the top of the rock, beside the Lanterne, to look down upon the Loire from thence, a pleasing prospect. It is possible to scramble through the vineyards along the top of the cliff nearly to St. Radegonde, and so to reach Tours (4½ m.), but there is no path.

Rt. A row of villas with formal gardens, interspersed with villages, line the bank nearly all the way to Tours, whose cathedral towers form a fine object in the distance.

Rt. The round tower, rising at the water-side, close to the road, together with a gate-house, and a few crumbling foundations of pillars and walls, are the sole remains of the once magnificent Abbey of Marmoutier, (Majus Monasterium), one of the richest in France, founded by St. Martin, in which the sainte ampoule, or vessel of holy oil, given by an angel to St. Martin to rub a bruise which he had received, was preserved, an object of veneration with pilgrims, which was sent to Chartres to anoint Henri IV. at his coronation.

* Post road. — 12 La Frillière.

L. Just above the city of Tours is the mouth of the canal or cut which joins the Loire to the Cher, whose course is nearly parallel with the Loire, and only 13½ m. S. of it.

Rt. Opposite to it are remains of the old Gothic bridge built by Eudes Count of Touraine, in the 11th century.

L. Tours.*—Inns : Faisan, good, clean, and reasonable; — H. de Londres; comfortable, civil attendance; — La Boule d'Or; all 3 in the Rue Royale close to the Messageries;—H. St. Julian, adjoining the desecrated church of that name.

Tours, chief town of the department Indre et Loire, and once capital of Touraine, is situated in the midst of the fertile but flat valley of the Loire, on its l. bank, and between it and the Cher, and has 28,000 inhabitants. The great road from Paris to Bordeaux and Bayonne here crosses the river by its bridge of 15 arches, 1423 ft. long, and traverses the whole extent of the town through its principal street, the Rue Royale, a fine avenue running in a direct line from the bridge, and containing the principal hotels, cafés, shops, and offices of the diligences. At its entrance from the bridge stands on the rt. the Hôtel de Ville, and on the l. the Musée, while in front run quays and planted platforms serving as promenades. The town is no longer remarkable for the many objects of curiosity which it possessed before the sweeping convulsion of the Revolution; and the charms of its situation, in an unvaried plain, have been greatly overrated by the French. The Loire, though a fine river at certain seasons, contributes less to its beauty than might be expected, owing to a great part of its channel being left bare in summer, so that only three or four of the arches of the bridge bestride the shrunken stream, while the rest traverse wide, ugly beds of bare gravel. Owing to the flatness of the surface and the dust there are few interesting walks or rides in its immediate vicinity. However, our description of the town shall assume the form of a walk, which may occupy a long morning, or a short day.

Starting from any of the hotels in the Rue Royale, a turning on the l. (Rue de la Scellerie) leads you past the Poste aux Lettres to the Archevêché, approached by a handsome Italian portal, at the side of which rises the stately Cathedral of St. Gatien. The W. front, consisting of three lofty portals enriched with florid ornaments, niches, and foliage, surmounted by a window having a 4-pointed head, astonishes by its vastness; it dates from about 1510. The two towers which flank it are 205 ft. high; their domed tops, carved as with scales, are somewhat later than the rest and of a debased Italian style, not conformable with the lower part.

The interior, 256 ft. long and 85 ft. high, is in a mature and noble style of Gothic resembling early English, with varied capitals to the columns; the choir was begun 1170, and the nave carried on to completion in the reign of St. Louis, but the W. end is still later, of the 15th century. In the beautiful old painted glass surrounding the choir, and shedding a venerable gloom about the altar, may be seen the arms of St. Louis, of his mother, Blanche of Castille, and those of the town, a group of towers. The fine rose window in the N. transept is injured in effect by a thick stone prop carried through the middle to support the roof. At the angle of the S. transept and aisle is the marble monument of the two only children of Charles VIII. and Anne de Bretagne, in consequence of whose early deaths the succession passed to the branch of Valois Orleans. Figures of the 2 princes, watched by angels, recline on a sarcophagus of white marble decorated with the arms of France, with dolphins, bas-reliefs, and ornaments in the style of the renaissance : it is the work of two Tourangeaux artists named Juste, cotemporaries of Jean Goujon.

* Post road. — 12 Tours.

It is worth while to ascend the towers on account of the view; which includes Amboise, Plessis les Tours, and the course of the Loire and Cher. The woodwork of the roof, a masterpiece of carpentry, covering the stone roof, and the elegant, light, spiral staircase (renaissance), resting on a crown of open groins or ribs, in the N. tower, should be seen at the same time.

Passing from the cathedral towards the quay, two circular and machicolated towers are seen on the rt., enclosed within the Cavalry Barracks: these formed part of the Castle built by Henry II. of England in the 12th century. From this tower Charles de Lorraine, the son of the Duc de Guise le Balafré, imprisoned by Henri III. after his father's murder at Blois, escaped by letting himself down by a rope. Turning to the l. and following the line of the quay, you reach the Bridge (b. 1762) already mentioned: several of its arches have given way at different times, owing to the river undermining its foundations.

The Musée contains a collection of nearly 200 bad pictures, chiefly copies, and some casts; it is open to the public only on Sundays, 12—4. A Last Judgment, brought from the chapel of the castle of Plessis, may be mentioned as curious.

A little way up the Rue Royale, on the l. in going from the bridge, is the desecrated Church of St. Julian, now turned into a remise and coach house for diligences; but though so degraded it is a fine pointed edifice of the 13th century (1224), except the lower part of the W. tower, which is founded upon circular arches, with Romanesque capitals belonging to an older church. The building is so perfect that it might easily be rendered fit for divine service. There are three or four other desecrated churches here. The first street on the rt. is the Rue de Commerce, and No. 35, the residence of M. Gouin (Banquier, Agent of Coutts, &c.), is the handsomest old mansion in the town, and a perfectly preserved specimen of the style of the renaissance (16th century) adapted to domestic architecture: its front is richly decorated with coats of arms, scroll-work, &c.; its dormer windows are terminated by crocketted gables; a turret projects in front, below which is the entrance, and round the bottom runs a light trefoil balustrade. The house is said to have been the Chancellerie de Louis XI.

Continuing our walk along the Rue de Commerce we come to the Rue des Trois Pucelles; where the house No. 18. passes for that of Tristan l'Hermite, the ill-omened executioner of Louis XI. (See Quentin Durward.) It is a brick mansion, evidently of the 16th century; its front terminates in a gable, and is flanked by a stair turret, 70 ft. high, overtopping the neighbouring houses and commanding a view of Plessis. Its door and windows are enriched with florid canopies, that over the door supported on twisted columns; but the remarkable feature, to which probably the house owes its name, is that the string courses dividing the 3 stories are formed by ropes in relief, ending in fantastic knots so as to resemble the noose of a halter; the same occurs also over the door. On the wall may be read the motto, "Assez aurons, et peu vivrons" and "priez pour—" The court-yard walls are similarly decorated, and on the ground floor is an elegant vaulted recess for a lavatory. In the same street, on the opposite side, is a house of evidently much greater antiquity (14th century) having a vaulted ground floor and an arcade of pointed arches running along its first floor.

In going hence to the Vieux Marché a corner house, now a shop, is remarkable for the carvings on the front, representing the Holy Family.

In the centre of the market-place itself is a white marble fountain, La Fontaine de Baune, of considerable elegance, in the renaissance style, executed by the brothers Juste. Among its ornaments are the porcupine, the crest of Louis XII. and the ermine of Anne of Brittany.

Two towers, rising on either side of the Rue St. Martin, are conspicuous objects in all views of the town: one, containing the clock, having a domed top, is called the Tour de St. Martin, or d'Horloge, the other, La Tour de Charlemagne, was so named, it is said, because his wife Luitgarde was buried below it. They deserve notice and mention as the only remaining relics of the vast Cathedral of St. Martin of Tours. The palladium of this celebrated building was the shrine of St. Martin, the first metropolitan of Tours, (A.D. 340), which became to the barbarians of the dark ages what Delphi was to the Greeks,—the oracle which kings and chiefs came to consult, in the beginning of the 7th century. The concourse of pilgrims to this shrine occasioned the old Roman town Cæsarodunum of the Turones to swell to ten times its original extent. The great ecclesiastical establishment of which this church was the centre spread civilisation and religion through the country, and its archbishop became the patriarch of France and one of the most influential persons in the state. At the head of the chapter even the kings of France were proud to enroll themselves.

Bishop Gregory of Tours, a native of the city, was buried within the walls of this church.

Its treasures in precious metals, jewels, &c. amounted to 575 marcs of gold and 2,200 marcs of silver, in 1562, when it was pillaged by the Protestants, who broke the images, melted the lamps, and burnt the relics deposited here. After flourishing for twelve centuries, the church, an enormous edifice, was utterly destroyed at the Revolution, excepting two towers out of the five which adorned it. On viewing the space which now intervenes between them, some idea may be formed of its extent. One of these stood at the W. end, the other at the N. W.; they both seem from their style to date from the 12th century. Attached to that of St. Martin may be seen Romanesque pillars and capitals of an earlier edifice. Louis XI., through gratitude for supposed benefits derived from the Saint's intercession, surrounded St. Martin's shrine with a railing of solid silver which weighed nearly 6776 marcs. His needy follower, Francis I., had it taken down and converted into good crown pieces, which were called "testons au gros bonnet."

A florid Gothic portal, forming the front of a house in the street running from the market to the Rue St. Martin, was one of the residences of the chapter.

The Halle au Blé is another secularised church, gutted to a mere shell, dedicated to St. Clement. It is a building of the 16th century; its florid N. porch, though mutilated, still retains portions of foliage cut with much delicacy. There is nothing to be seen within.

Plessis les Tours, the castellated den of the tyrant and bigot Louis XI., with which all the world is acquainted through the admirable descriptions of Quentin Durward, is situated in the commune of La Riche, adjoining a humble hamlet of scattered cottages, on a perfectly flat plain, about a mile distant from the Halle, on the W. of Tours, passing the Barrière des Oiseaux, and beyond the Hospice Générale. Visiters to Plessis must not expect anything in the shape of a feudal castle, for it was built at a time when the fortress was giving place to the fortified mansion. When complete, it must have been somewhat like the older parts of Hampton Court and St. James's Palaces, which were built not many years after Plessis, with this difference, that the niggardliness of Louis, and his apprehension of danger, caused it to be built in so plain a style, and with so many defensive precautions, walls of enclosure, drawbridges, battlements, and wet and dry ditches, that its external appearance must have corresponded with that of a gaol much more than of a palace. The small fragment, now remaining, so far from having about it the least trace or character of a castle, looks like a mean ordinary dwelling: indeed it formed part of the inner constructions, but was surrounded by three ramparts and fosses. It is of plain red brick, with quoins of stone, and sash windows, surmounted by a high pitched roof, and almost all traces of the scanty ornaments have been destroyed. Beside it is a stair turret, recently raised 16 or 20 feet, with a wooden addition at the side to convert it into a shot tower! Originally a cloister ran along the front. The interior is modern, except the stair, and contains nothing worth notice. All traces are gone of the pitfalls, fosses, &c. which originally surrounded the castle; but on the l., as you approach the house, are seen the foundations of walls of masonry; and a door, below ground, leads into a range of vaulted chambers barely lighted by small windows, which may once have served for prisons as they now do for cellars. It is evident that the palace was well supplied with dungeons. At the end of the small terrace walk in the garden is another vault called the prison of Cardinal de la Balue, who was shut up for betraying his master's secrets to Charles of Burgundy: it has been repaired, but the lower steps of a stair, the lower part of the fire-place, the grated bars and shutters are old. At the back of a cottage, nearly facing the garden gates, is a small vaulted chapel, now filled with casks, said to be the Oratory of Louis XI., where he passed hours in abject prayer to the Virgin and Saints for cures of his complicated maladies. The present doorway has been broken through the wall where the altar stood; the two small windows are nearly stopped up. Louis ended his miserable life here, 1483. Plessis was converted into a Dépôt de Mendicité about 1778, was sold at the Revolution and pulled down. Plessis lies on the tongue of land between the Loir and Cher, about a mile from the Cher, and 9 m. above their junction.

Between Plessis and the Hospice is an old house, called La Rabaterie, having a square turret at the back which passes for the residence of Olivier le Daim, the barber and minister of Louis.

There remains little else to describe at Tours. Under the mutilated and uninteresting church of Nôtre Dame la Riche (originally called La Pauvre) is a cave vaulted, and having pillars in the corners, where it is said St. Gatien, the predecessor of St. Martin, first preached Christianity to the Gauls, A. D. 251., but it is now shut up.

At the Prefecture is placed the Public Library of 40,000 volumes, including some curious MSS.; for example, a copy of the Gospels in gold letters on vellum, which belonged to the church of St. Martin, upon which the king of France took the oaths as premier chanoine of that church; Les Heures of Charles V. of France and of Anne de Bretagne, and numerous Missals, besides early printed books. The library is open Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, 12—4.

The most respectable Café is that De la Ville, Rue Royale, opposite the Hôtel de Londres.

The Poste aux Lettres is in the Rue de la Scellerie, and the Theatre in the same.

The number of English established in and around Tours is very considerable; they have a subscription club.

The English Church service is performed every Sunday at 12 in the chapel Rue de la Prefecture. There is a second chapel, 5 Levée St. Symphorien.

Conveyances: — to Paris, malleposte and 8 or 10 diligences daily; to Bordeaux, malleposte and 3 great diligences daily, beside others to Poitiers, Angoulême, &c.; to Nantes; to Rochelle, Rochefort, Saumur, Angers; to Loches, Bourges, or Chinon daily.

Steamers : — Les Inexplosibles daily to Nantes (in 11 hours) and Angers; to Orleans in 14 or 15 hours. They start very early; about 4 or 5 o'clock in the morning.

Tours was long famed for its manufacture of silk, established 1480 by Louis XI., who brought over and settled here Italian weavers. This branch of industry, however, was ruined by the revocation of the edict of Nantes, by which the population was reduced from 80,000 to less than one half. This tyrannical act transferred 3000 families, with their wealth and industry, from France to Holland, and the manufacture dwindled away at Tours to take root at Lyons. Tours has now no manufacture of great importance, but receives some life from being a place of much passage, planted on one of the great high roads of France. The pruneaux de Tours, once so celebrated, are now far less esteemed in commerce than the dried plums of Gascony and Provence.

Tours is a city of some importance in history. The Turones, its ancient inhabitants, joined the league of the 64 Gallic towns under Vercingetorix against Julius Cæsar, and are mentioned by Lucan, "Instabiles Turones circumsita castra coerunt." The Lande de Miré, about 9 m. to the S.W. on the road to Azay le Rideau, is supposed to be the place where the Saracens under Abderahmen were defeated by Charles Martel, and Europe saved from the Mahomedan yoke, A.D. 732.

One of the chief mints of France was established in the middle ages at Tours, whence come the livres Tournoises, silver pieces (libra or as of the Romans) the equivalent of francs at present, which were coined here.

The Porte Hugon, which stood at the end of a street running down to the Loire, is said to have given the name of Huguenots to the Protestant party in France, who being very numerous in the town, but checked and watched by their enemies, used to meet beyond the walls, issuing out stealthily through this gate at nightfall. A more probable derivation is from the Swiss Eidgenossen, i.e. Confederate. Another memorial of the days of persecution of the Protestants is retained in the name Rue Renard, persons suspected of heresy being pursued in the streets by the Romanists about 1562, hunted down with the cry "au Reynard," and often massacred.

Touraine was bestowed as an apanage on Mary Queen of Scots, and her short-lived husband Francis, and she is said to have drawn revenue from it, as Duchess of Touraine, even while in captivity in England, but it was afterwards given in her lifetime to the Duc d'Alençon, brother of Henri III.

It is a pleasant walk of about 4 m. along the road to Orleans up the rt. bank of the Loire to the singular village La Roche Corbon, excavated out of the rock (p. 188.). It would be better to ride thither, and thus avoid the long dusty road.

The Colony of Mettray, about 4½ m. from Tours, established by two philanthropic French gentlemen, the Vicompte Bretignères De Courteilles and Le Conseiller Demetz, deserves very high praise, and will be visited by all who take an interest in the improvement of their fellow-creatures. The objects which its founders and directors have in view are, the education, reward, and restoration to society of juvenile offenders, who while in the public prisons have distinguished themselves by good conduct and by signs of penitence. This is sought to be effected by teaching them the mode of gaining an honest livelihood, chiefly by agricultural labour. The ground on which the establishment stands was given by the vicompte; it is conducted by him and his friend in person, and is supported by voluntary donations and annual subscriptions.

More distant and highly interesting excursions may be made to Amboise (p. 185.), Chenonceaux, 24 m. off (p.187.; 4 hours drive), Loches (p. 195.), and to that curious and unexplained monument of antiquity La Pile de St. Mars (p.199.).

ROUTE 54.

CHARTRES TO TOURS BY VENDÔME.

138 kilom. = 88 Eng. m.

Diligences daily.

15 La Bourdinière.

16 Bonneval.

An ancient Benedictine convent here is converted into a cotton mill.

14 Châteaudun.

A town of 6,500 inhabitants, standing on the banks of the Loir.

Its most conspicuous building is the ancient Castle of the Counts of Dunois, surmounted by a prodigious tower, 90 ft. high, built by Thibaut le Tricheur in the 10th century. The ancient name of the town, whence comes the modern, was Castellodunum.

During the next stage the road descends by the side of the Loir, passing the Gothic castle of Montigny on a height beyond the river.

11 Cloyes.

16 Pezou.

11 Vendôme. Inns: — Hôtel Galiondre, good.

A town of 9470 inhabitants, on the Loir, at the foot of vine-clad slopes. Above it rise the picturesque ruins of the Castle of the Ducs de Vendôme, demolished at the Revolution, when the graves of Jeanne d'Albret, mother of Henri IV., and of several Bourbon princes, were rifled, and their tombs destroyed.

There is a College here.

We now cross the Loir for the 4th time, and quit its valley to traverse a monotonous plain to 14 Neuve St. Amand.

12 Château Regnault, a town of 2500 inhabitants.

14 Monnaye (Indre et Loire).

15 Tours, in R. 53.

ROUTE 56.

TOURS TO LOCHES AND CHATEAUROUX.

108 kilom. = 67 Eng. m.

Diligences, daily, to Loches, in about 4½ hours.

You continue along the road to Bordeaux (Route 64.) for about 2 m. after crossing the Cher; then turn to the l. There is little to notice until after passing

20 Cormery, we reach the borders of the Indre, which flows through one of the richest and most fertile valleys of Touraine; in the midst of which stands

21 Loches. (Inns: — H. de France, best; —du Promenade, extortionate.) This is one of the most picturesque towns of Touraine, far more striking than Chinon or Amboise; its buildings are huddled together round the base of a lofty rock, from whose commanding top the picturesque ruins of its historic and ill-omened Castle still frown over the landscape, forming the grand and striking feature in every view. The town still retains several of its old gates grooved for the portcullis, and garnished with holes for stockade beams, and in its streets are some old houses.

On the opposite bank of the Indre lies the suburb of Beaulieu, connected with the town by a row of bridges. The river winding through the vale overspreads its bottom with a carpet of the richest verdure, fringed with willows and poplars, and turns the machinery of one or two mills.

The Castle of Loches, though long a royal palace, in which James V. of Scotland was married to Magdalen of France, and where Francis I. held his splendid court and received the Emperor Charles V. on his way from Spain to Ghent is better known, and has a more terrible reputation as a prison of state, especially during the reign of Louis XI. when "the sound of the name of Loches was yet more dreaded than Plessis itself, as a place destined to the workings of those secret acts of cruelty with which even Louis shamed to pollute the interior of his own residence at Plessis. There were in this place of terror dungeons under dungeons, some of them unknown even to the keepers themselves; living graves, to which men were consigned with little hope of farther employment during the rest of their life, than to breathe impure air, and feed on bread and water. At this formidable castle were also those dreadful places of confinement, called cages, in which the wretched prisoner could neither stand upright, nor stretch himself at length; an invention, it is said, of Cardinal Balue."—Scott. Louis appointed Olivier le Dain, the barber, who was also his prime minister, governor of the castle and gaoler. It is composed of a pile of buildings of various ages, partly in ruins. The most conspicuous of all is the tall white Donjon tower, rising at the extremity of the platform of rock to a height of 120 ft., and overhanging the verge of the precipice. Its walls of even and perfect masonry, supported by buttresses, in the form of circular pillars, pierced by scanty round-headed windows above, and by mere slits below, mark it as a work of the Norman style, probably of the 12th century, though some attribute its construction to Foulques Nerra, Comte d'Anjou, in the 11th. In its size, form, and the arrangement of the entrance stair, within a projecting lower tower, it is not unlike the white Tower of London, and the castles of Newcastle and Norwich. Its walls, 8 ft. thick, are now empty, gutted of the four stories into which they were divided. It stands within the inclosure of the town gaol, a part of the castle having been converted into that ignoble purpose. Beside it rises a picturesque group of less ancient towers, in one of which, circular in form, are the terrible Cachots of Louis XI., extending downwards in four stories below one another. Two of them contained the iron cages invented by Cardinal Balue, who himself expiated his treasonable betrayal of his master's secrets to the Duke of Burgundy by a confinement of eight years in one of them. In another, Ludovico Sforza, Duke of Milan, the prisoner of Louis XII., from 1500 until death came to release him, lingered for many years. Here Philip de Commines, the historian, was also shut up in 1486; the Duc d'Alençon, 1456; Charles de Melun, who was beheaded, 1468; and many more victims of tyranny. These dungeons are vaulted, and dimly lighted by small windows, whose deep recesses in walls 10 or 12 ft. thick, are crossed by double iron gratings. The cages existed down to 1789.

At the other end of the castle platform, on the l. as you ascend from the town through the arched gateway, is a more modern pile of building, now serving as the Sous Prefecture. At one end of the terrace behind it, within a small tower, is placed the monument of Agnes Sorel, mistress of Charles VII., who was born, 1400, in the neighbouring château of Fromonteau. Upon a base of black marble reclines the effigy of La Belle des Belles, well sculptured in white limestone, her hands uplifted in prayer, with two angels bending over her head, and shielding her with their wings, and two lambs reclining at her feet. She is gracefully attired in long robes, and a simple circlet surrounds her brow; her countenance exhibits a refined character of beauty, modesty, sweetness, and gentleness, not unworthy of the Madonna of Raphael, and befitting one whose influence over a king was never exercised but for good. It has been proved, however, by an acute historian, that she could in no wise have contributed to stimulate Charles to the assumption of his dominions and the expulsion of the English, not having been seen by him until 1431, after the death of Jeanne d'Arc. When Charles died, the ungrateful monks of Loches, whom the bounty of Agnes had cherished and her bequests had enriched, were desirous of ejecting her remains and tomb from their church, on the score of some scruples as to the purity of her life, but even Louis XI., much as he hated Agnes, reproved such ingratitude, and they remained in their place until the Revolution, when the grave was violated, and the monument was preserved from destruction only by the interference of the prefect.

Between the Sous Prefecture and the Norman keep stands the Church of St. Ours, a very interesting monument of the ecclesiastical architecture of the 11th century, founded by Foulques Nera, Comte d'Anjou, or his father; but said to have been in great part rebuilt at the end of the 12th century. It is surmounted by an octagonal cupola and by two spires, in the manner of the churches on the Rhine. A large W. doorway, enriched with most singular mouldings and carvings of monstrous heads, has been preserved in a very perfect state, owing to its being covered by a porch or vestibule. Another doorway on the N. has harpy-like figures on the capitals of its pillars. The choir and short transepts have apsidal terminations. The nave is singularly roofed in compartments, forming two cupolas which rise externally in the form of conical pyramids. The crypt chapel beneath the choir, recently discovered, was the place of devotion chosen by the bigot Louis XI.

The rest of the road lies up the pretty vale of the Indre, to 21 Chatillon sur Indre, a town of 2700 inhabitants, in the department of l. Indre, and the ancient province of Berry.

23 Buzançais, a town of 3800 inhabitants, on the rt. bank of the river, whose branches are here crossed by several bridges.

23 Chateauroux, in R. 65.

ROUTE 57.

TOURS TO SAUMUR, BY CHINON AND FONTEVRAULD.

76 kilom. = 47 Eng. miles.

Diligences daily.

This route issues out of Tours lined by avenues of poplars, and crosses at the distance of 1½ m. the river Cher, a little to the E. of Plessis les Tours (p. 192.) The Cher runs for about 15 m. below this nearly parallel with the Loire, before uniting itself to that river. Along its N. bank runs a considerable levée or dyke constructed by Madame de Vermandois, abbess of Beaumont les Tours, to protect the land between it and the Loire from inundations. After crossing the flat land, passing numerous white hamlets and villas, the road ascends and traverses an extensive table land before entering the valley of the Indre, on whose banks stands

25 Azay le Rideau, a small town prettily situated, 15 m. from Tours. On the l. of the road nearly concealed by trees, and surrounded by branches of the Indre, is the Château, one of the best preserved specimens in France of the semi-castellated manor houses in the style of the Renaissance. It was built by Gilles Berthelot in the reign of Francis I., and over the chief portal, enriched with sculpture and combinations of three classic orders, may be discerned the emblem of that king, the Salamander, with the motto "Nutrio et extinguo," and the initials of Diana of Poitiers. The carving has been thought worthy of Jean Goujon; the entire façade and the staircase are very elegant, the wall partly pannelled, and the compartments filled with diversified patterns. The interior has been preserved nearly unaltered, and contains old furniture and a collection of portraits. A bed, supported in the 4 corners by carved figures, is of most elaborate Gothic workmanship. A neatly kept garden surrounds the house. The present owner is M. de Biancourt.

A considerable tract of forest is traversed on the direct road from Azay, before it descends by the hollow way behind the castle of 28 Chinon. Inns: — H. de France, best, tolerable, though small ; — Chene Vert, dirty. A deserted and dull little town, which yet deserves a visit, owing to its pleasing position on the rt. bank of the Vienne, and on account of the numerous and interesting historical associations attached to its utterly ruined Castle, the French Windsor of our Plantagenet kings, as it has been termed, where Henry II. breathed his last, uttering curses on his own sons, whose disobedience had hastened his death. It was the favourite residence, also, of the French monarchs from Philippe Augustus to Henri IV., and the scene of Joan of Arc's first public appearance. The remains are of vast extent, but too much demolished, and too white in colour, to be very picturesque. They occupy the summit of a lofty platform of rock, rising nearly 300 ft. above the town and river. A natural escarpment surrounds it on 3 sides ; where the cliff was not naturally vertical, it has been cut away, and huge walls of smooth masonry have been built up from below to a level with the top of the cliff, so as to render it hopeless, before the days of gunpowder, to scale or batter such a fortress. Between the river and the rock crouch the buildings of the town. Behind the castle, in a deep hollow, runs the road to Tours, originally commanded by the castle embrasures; and a deep gully or fosse is cut through the rock on the 4th side, to isolate the promontory from the ridge of which it forms the termination.

Several of the tall flanking towers remain tolerably perfect ; the rest is all crumbling wall. The 3 divisions into which the castle was separated, by deep dry ditches, may still be discovered. In the central division, above the entrance to which rises the tall Donjon, the only part now inhabited, are shown the royal apartments ; and among them the very one in which Joan the Maid, the simple shepherdess of Domremy*, recognised Charles the Dauphin, though disguised in plain attire, and signalling him out from among the crowd of courtiers, led him apart to the recess of the window, where she unfolded to him " secrets known only to himself and to God." The scene of that interview, and of the splendours of the court of the careless and luxurious Charles, whom even the loss of a kingdom could not recall from indolence and pleasure, is now a broken ruin open to the sky, with one or two transoms remaining in the windows and a few traces of paint upon the walls. Close beside it is a very deep square tower, adjoining one of the ditches, and without openings, said to have been the Oubliettes down which prisoners were cast.

Crossing a bridge into the 3d court, we find around it the towers of La Glacière, in which Jacques de Molay, Grand Master of the Templars, is said to have been confined ; the Tour du Moulin, so called because it was surmounted by a windmill, standing at the farthest extremity, and of very solid structure ; and the Tour d'Argentau, from which, as the story goes, a secret passage led beyond the wall to the Maison Robardeau, the retreat of Agnes Sorel, Charles's mistress. Among all these fragments, the only trace of the original Norman castle is to be found in the round tower du

* See Quarterly Review, No. CXXXVIII.

Moulin; the rest seems not older than the 15th century.

The view from the walls is very pleasing, extending for a long distance up and down the fertile valley, — "a glowing and glorious prospect; a green expanse of groves and vineyards all blending into one," — with the winding Vienne sparkling and flashing among the green meadows, or foliage of poplars, walnut trees, and vines, nearly as far as its junction with the Loire, which, however, is not visible. Fontevrault, the last resting-place of Henry II. and his undutiful son, the Lion-hearted Richard, is concealed from view by intervening heights.

There is nothing worth notice in the town of Chinon (pop. 6677) itself. No tradition is preserved of the hostelry in which the Pucelle was lodged, on her arrival from her native village, and where she was kept two days before she could obtain admission to the king, until his councillors had ascertained whether she was a sorceress. Nor can the church be pointed out in which she spent the greater part of each day in prayer, while she resided here. It was at Chinon that she first received from the king her suit of knight's armour, and an escort of a squire, a confessor, and 2 pages. Here she first girt on the mysterious sword found in the church of St. Catherine of Fierbois (p. 217.), and here unfurled her white banner sprinkled with fleurs de lis, made expressly for her under the direction of her mysterious "voices."

The rocks behind the town, underneath the castle, have been quarried for ages to supply building materials, and these subterraneous excavations have attained a great extent. There is nothing worth seeing in them, nor is it a task of pleasure to explore them.

Chinon is the country of Rabelais, who was born 1483, in the farm-house called La Devinière, in the commune of Seuilly, a little way on the l. of the road to Saumur, on the opposite side of the Vienne. He commenced his education in the school of the neighbouring abbey, whose monks he afterwards ridiculed in his writings.

At Champigny, about 9 m. S. of Chinon, is a chapel containing very remarkable painted glass, representing the life of St. Louis.

It is a very delightful drive from Chinon to Saumur, through a country teeming with fertility, amongst orchards, and walnut grooves, and acacia hedges, while beneath the fruit trees springs up a crop of corn, without exhausting the soil. The valley of the Vienne terminates at Candes, remarkable for its fine church (p. 200.), where that river falls into the Loire; and our road emerging upon its l. bank, is carried along it, through most pleasing scenery, to 30 Saumur, described, with the rest of the road, in p. 201.

At Montsoreau, close to Candes, our road passes within 3. m. of the Abbey of Fontevrault. The excursion thither is described in p. 200.

ROUTE 58.

THE LOIRE, C.: TOURS TO NANTES, BY SAUMUR AND ANGERS.

By land 200 kilom. = 124 Eng. m.

A steamer descends daily to Nantes in about 11 hours, touching at Angers.

Two steamers ascend daily between Nantes and Angers, in 10 hours; one of them continues on to Tours, in 8 or 10 hours.

The prettiest part of the course of the Loire lies below Tours, in the neighbourhood of Saumur, and thence to Nantes. For some distance below Tours, however, its banks continue low, and its bed, every where too large in summer for its stream, is left bare and unsightly. Owing to the want of water, and the constant shifting of sand-banks, very often, in hot summers, the navigation is interrupted for two or three months. In winter, the river sometimes rises 20 ft. above its ordinary level, and from these irregularities it is unfit for the permanent establishment of water-mills or manufactories on its banks. It is confined on both sides by levées as far down as Angers.

The project of limiting its bed to a width of 120 metres, by stone dykes raised in the midst of the stream parallel with its course, intended to force the bulk of water into a central channel, and allow the sand to be deposited behind them, has produced an exactly opposite effect; for the river, having in most instances broken through the walls, runs on the outside of them.

The high road continues, as before (p. 184.), along the Levée, or river dyke, often on a level with the tops of the houses and cottages, which, together with the fertile fields, orchards, gardens, and vineyards, it protects from the inundations of the Loire, commanding, both on the river and land side, an extensive view.

Rt. St. Symphorien, nearly opposite Tours, forms a sort of suburb to that city; and not far from it is the pretty hamlet of St. Cyr, where a cottage, called La Grenadière, is at present the retreat of the veteran poet Beranger.

Rt. Luynes* is a small town at the opening of a valley into the Loire, backed by a limestone cliff, pierced with numerous cave dwellings, on the top of which stands the old castle, commanding the country around. It was the residence of the seigneurs of Luynes, and among them of the first duke, the favourite of Louis XIII., and Constable of France, who gave his own name to the castle and town, previously called de Maillé, 1619. Not far off are the ruins of an aqueduct, said to be Roman, of which nearly 50 square pillars and 8 arches remain. Luynes is the birth-place of Paul Louis Courrier, the celebrated political writer; he was found shot dead near his own residence, Veretz, on the banks of the Cher, not far from this, 1825.

A little below Luynes is,

Rt., Cinq Mars, or more correctly St. Mars, since the name is supposed to be a contraction of St. Medard. Near this village, whose ruined castle gave a title to another favourite of Louis XIII., who fell by the executioner's axe, under the relentless rule of Cardinal Richelieu, is the curious ancient monument called La Pile de Cinq Mars, a square tower of brick, 92 ft. high and 13 ft. wide on each face, surmounted originally by 5 pinnacles 10 ft. high, one of which was thrown down by a storm, 1751. Its origin, use, and age of the pile, are equally unknown. Some attribute it to the Romans, others to the Celts. It is destitute of door, window, or other opening, and is perfectly solid. On the S. face the bricks are arranged so as to form 12 compartments. It was probably a funereal monument.

The traveller continues to pass entire villages cut in the yellow chalk rock, or tuffeau, whenever it rises into cliffs favourable for human habitations.

L. The Cher, after running parallel with the Loire for about 15 m., enters it a little above Cinq Mars, but sends off a branch which continues to run parallel with it until it joins the Indre, 9 m. lower down.

Rt. Langeais †, another little town, has also a castle, in tolerable preservation, which is remarkable because the marriage of Charles VIII. with Anne of Brittany was celebrated within its walls — an event which united that important province to France. The gate-house serves as a gaol. This castle was built, in the 13th century, by Pierre de la Brosse, minister of Philippe le Hardi, after having been barber to his predecessor St. Louis. He ended his career on the gibbet of Montfauçon, being hung for high treason in poisoning his master's son and accusing the queen of the crime.

* Post Road. 10 Luynes.

† 14 Langeais.

Rt. Near St. Patrice is the Château of Rochecotte, where the famous Chouan leader of that name was born; it belongs to the Duchesse de Dino, now Princesse de Talleyrand, who was often visited here by her uncle, M. de Talleyrand.

Rt. Trois Volets.*

L. Nearly opposite this, backed by a wooded hill, is the Château d'Ussé, belonging to one of the family of Larochejacquelin, but partly built by Vauban, its original owner.

Rt. Chouzé†, on the confines of Touraine. Near this, if any where, the valley of the Loire exhibits its garden-like character, an exuberant vegetation, with trees of large growth, capable of furnishing some shade to the road, — among them the graceful feathery acacia, which also forms the hedges, — vines, Indian corn, and mulberry-trees, prevail. At Port Boulet the Loir is crossed by a wire suspension-bridge of 5 spans, leading to L., Candes, opposite to which place we pass out of Touraine into Anjou.

L. The river Vienne here pours itself into the Loire; and immediately below it stands the pretty white town of Candes, where St. Martin of Tours breathed his last. It has an interesting church, of which the apsidal choir seems to be of the 12th century, and the nave of the 13th (1215). Its S. porch is remarkable, though much mutilated; fourteen statues in trefoil-headed niches adorn the façade, with smaller niches below them filled with heads. The porch itself is a vestibule supported by a light central column, in the manner of the chapter-houses of English cathedrals. The W. end is flanked on either side by a machicolated buttress, and includes a circular window, now stopped up. The tomb of St. Martin is shown in this church. The possession of his remains was warmly contested between the Poitevins and Tourangeaux. About 10 m. from Candes, up the valley of the Vienne, is Chinon (Route 57.). A small brook alone separates Candes from Montsoreau, whose castle, now parcelled out among poor people, was the seat of that cruel Comte de Montsoreau who became the executioner of the Protestants of Anjou, by carrying out the infamous St. Bartholomew decrees of Charles IX.

3 m. up the little retired and wooded valley behind Montsereau lies the Abbey of Fontevrault, one of the richest in France in ancient times, where 150 nuns and 70 monks submitted to the rule of an abbess, who was always a lady of high degree. This singular establishment, which thus combined members of both sexes, was founded by a Breton monk, Robert d'Arbrissel, 1099; and, spite of the scope for scandal, maintained its existence for nine centuries, down to the Revolution. It has an interest to Englishmen, from having been the burial-place of several of our Plantagenet kings. A road now tolerably good (1841) leads to the poor village of Fontevrault, where the inn (Croix Blanche) does not look promising.

The abbey is now converted into a prison (Maison Centrale de Détention): the entrance is in the little place close to the inn. The prison is not shown without an order from the préfet; but no objection is made to admit strangers into the church to see the tombs, which they can do without coming in contact with the prisoners. Above the abbey building rises a singular octagonal tower, or oratory, called Tour d'Evrault; it dates from the 12th century.

The church, approached by a covered way, from which you look through loop-holes into the prison yards, is a very ancient building, supposed to have been begun by Foulques, 5th Comte d'Anjou, 1125. Its nave is now partitioned off, and, by the introduction of 2 floors, is converted into dormitories for the prisoners. The Royal monuments are now placed in the S. transept, enclosed by bolts and bars and grilles, in a dark corner; their mutilated visages and broken limbs bearing testimony to the violence of the Vandals of the Revolution, who tore them up in order to rifle the graves of their contents. The royal dust of 2 kings and 2 queens was scattered. The effigies, in spite of the injuries they received, are interesting from the evident marks they exhibit of being portraits; they retain still a little of the colouring with which they were ornamented. They are recumbent statues of Henry II. and Richard Cœur de Lion, represented in their royal robes without armour; the drapery of complicated execution. Richard is remarkable for his lofty stature (6½ ft.) and broad forehead; he wears moustache and a beard; his hair is cut short. The two female effigies are in better preservation; they represent Eleanor of Guienne, queen of Henry II., and Isabelle d'Angoulême, widow of King John; the last a statue of considerable beauty. It is much to be desired that these neglected effigies of our kings should be transferred from their dark prison-house to Westminster Abbey, where they would form an interesting link in the series of British historical sculpture. There can be no longer any harm in separating them from graves rifled and empty, and from an abbey now become a prison. The French government owes us some return for our ready compliance with its wishes to possess the bones of Napoleon.

* 12 Trois Volets. † 12 Chouzé.

The body of Henry II. was brought hither from the neighbouring royal residence of Chinon, and laid in the sanctuary previously to interment. When Richard, his undutiful son, approached, the dead body is said to have shuddered convulsively, and to have sweated drops of blood while he remained in its presence; "the very corpse, as it were, abhorring and accusing him of his unnatural conduct."

L. Souzé, a little below Montsoreau, contains a castellated mansion, behind which are vast excavations in the rock, which is pierced through and through like a rabbit warren to furnish dwellings for people of the poorer sort.

L. Still lower down is Dampierre, where Margaret of Anjou ended a life of ambition and sorrow, in misery and poverty, in a house granted to her by Louis XI., who had ransomed her at the price of 50,000 crowns from the hands of Edward IV., after 5 years of imprisonment, dating from the battle of Tewkesbury.

L. The approach to Saumur is marked by the number of windmills on the heights, below which stands the domed church of Nôtre Dame des Ardilliers. Beneath its cupola runs an inscription celebrating the suppression of heresy throughout his dominions, and the expulsion of its followers by Louis XIV.; a subject rather of shame than of boast, on a spot which suffered in turn the massacre of St. Bartholomew, the atrocities of the Dragonnades, and finally ruin from the revocation of the Edict of Nantes.

The convent attached to this church is now the Hospice de la Providence, attended by charitable sisters: a portion of the patients, including the insane, are lodged in cells and vast dormitories cut in the cliff behind.

Rt. La Croix Verte*, a suburb of Saumur, at the extremity of the bridge opposite to the town, contains the post-house.

L. Saumur — Inns: Belvedere, on the quay, well placed and good; fine view from its top: Hôtel de Londres, Rue Porte Fouchard.

This cheerful white town is one of the most picturesque on the Loire. Seen from the river or the bridge,

* Post road. — 16 Croix Verte. 4 kilom. extra are paid by those who take the horses into or from Saumur.

its quaint Hôtel de Ville, near the water side, surmounted by a tent-like roof and pinnacled turrets, its church spires and towers, surmounted by the castle behind, have a very pleasing effect. The town itself, however, is torpid, though its population amounts to 15,000 souls, and it does not possess many curiosities.

On the handsome quay, which lines the river, stand a modern edifice which combines theatre and market-house, and the antique Hôtel de Ville, a square building of red and white stone, surmounted by a peaked roof as high as its walls, with a cornice of trefoiled machicolations running under it, and turrets or bartizans in its corners. It was anciently included in the fortifications, and joined the town walls, and, therefore, has few openings in the lower part. The front towards the court-yard has not the same castellated character, but is enriched with florid Gothic ornaments, very elegant, and recently restored. The date of the building is probably the 15th century, about the time of Louis XI. The upper story is converted into a Museum. The best part of its limited collections are the antiquities found in the department; such as Roman vases, statues, spear-heads, axes, &c. of bronze; a complete set of Roman carpenter's tools, Roman weights, glass, cinerary urns (30 of them dug up in one spot), pottery, &c. But its chief curiosity is a Roman trumpet of bronze, 5 ft. long. Among the Celtic remains are several stone axes, dug up under one of the Dolmen in the neighbourhood, and a Druid knife of flint, from that of Bois Berard.

St. Pierre, the principal church, in the centre of the town, is disfigured by a modern Italian façade, and its massy tower is surmounted by a recent spire. Its interior, originally built without aisles, in the Angevine fashion, has had side chapels added. It is in the pointed style.

More curious for its age and architecture is the church Nôtre Dame de Nantilly, on the outskirts of the town. The oldest parts, the N. side, the nave, and E. apse, in the Romanesque style, have had a date referred to the 5th or 6th, but cannot be older than the 11th century. The S. aisle is an addition of the 15th century, nearly as wide as the nave itself, and the pillars between are nothing more than the old buttresses. The roof of the nave is slightly pointed, with plate-bands running across from pier to pier. In the S. aisle is the oratory of Louis XI. Against one of the piers is a bas-relief of Christ preaching in the wilderness, renewed 1830. The church is hung with curious antique tapestries, probably of the 16th century, productions of the looms of Flanders, if we may judge by the style of art. In one, representing the siege of Jerusalem, the soldiers are making use of match-locks. In this church are buried Gilles, Archbishop of Tyre, keeper of the seals of St. Louis, whose crozier is preserved here, and the nurse of king René of Anjou.

The castle, standing conspicuously on the top of the ridge which rises like a wall above the town (Sous-le-mur is a fanciful derivation of its name), is only worth entering for the view from its terraced bastions, over the Loire and the rich flat land on either side of it, not forgetting the pretty gardens at the base of the walls. The tall Donjon, circular below and octagonal above, and flanked by four turrets, is a magazine for powder and fire-arms, and is shut to strangers.

The wise Protestant leader, Duplessis Mornay, was appointed governor by Henri IV., and under his prudent and fostering care Saumur was a stronghold of the Protestants, and a flourishing town of 25,000 inhabitants. The revocation of the Edict of Nantes annihilated its prosperity, by expelling the industrious Huguenots, and reduced its population to one fourth.

One of the greatest exploits of the Vendean army was the capture of Saumur, 1793, June 10, by storming the heights, on which the republican army, 15,000 strong, had formed an entrenched camp, defended by 100 pieces of artillery. Henri de Larochejacquelin forced the entrenchments of the town from the side of the meadows of Varen, exciting his followers to the capture of a redoute by throwing his hat, conspicuous for its white plume, into the midst of the enemy, crying, "Qui va me le chercher?" — an appeal not lost upon his followers, especially when enforced by his own example in taking the lead. Foremost of his band, with only 60 of his men to back him, he forced his way into the town, clearing the streets before him as far as the bridge. Here seizing two cannon, he turned them against the enemy, drove them quite across the river and on the road towards Tours, thus separating them from the garrison of the castle, which surrendered the day following. The Vendeans obtained this victory with a loss of only 60 killed and 100 wounded, together with 80 pieces of cannon, 10,000 muskets, and 11,000 prisoners, who were released after having one side of their heads shaved, and promising not to serve against La Vendée — humane conditions, contrasting strongly with the atrocious system of massacreing their prisoners, already adopted by the Republicans at the command of the Convention.

Detached from the town, to the S.W., on the rt. hand, as you issue out of the main street, is the Ecole de Cavalerie, for the instruction, in all branches of information suited to their profession, of between 300 and 400 sous-officiers, who are drafted hence into different regiments to instruct their corps. There are large riding-schools, covered and open, in which the various exercises of the manège are performed with much precision. This establishment was transferred from Angers hither at the latter end of the last century.

Some remains of the old fortifications may be seen in the Rue du Petit Mail; they consist of two feudal towers and a prison-house. In the quartier des Ponts, the suburb which fills the island on which the bridge rests, is a house built by King René of Anjou, and called Maison de la Reine Cicile (de Sicile). Its once highly ornamented front, in the latest Gothic, not unlike that of the H. de Ville in style, has been so deplorably defaced that it retains little interest, but it may still be worthy to employ the artist's pencil.

Within about 2 m. of Saumur, on the S., stands one of the largest, most perfect, and best preserved Druidical monuments in France. It is of the kind called Dolmen (R. 9.; see p. 40.), and may be termed a hut formed of huge blocks of unhewn stone, set upright to form the walls, with others laid across them for a roof, in the manner of a house of cards. This rude cot measures more than 80 ft. in length, yet consists of only 18 stones, 4 on each of the sides and on the roof, one at the W. end, which is closed, another at the E., now thrown down, serving as a threshold over which you step to the present doorway, formed by bricking up the mouth. The largest stone measures 24 ft. by 21 ft. The stones are set so close, that originally a man could not force his body between them. The blocks composing it are of the sandstone found in this district, but not near at hand, nor near the surface. Among the adjoining vineyards stands an upright stone, also of Celtic origin. Near Riou, not far off, on the top of an eminence, is another cot, called Pierre-couverte, formed of only 6 stones, in the manner of Kits Coity house in Kent.

The road to these Druidic stones, on issuing out of Saumur, crosses the small river Thoue by a handsome new bridge of 3 segmental arches, called Pont Fouchard, thence by cross roads proceeds to the village of Bagneux, beyond which they are situated.

Anne Lefébre, who became Madame Dacier, the learned translator of Homer, was born at Saumur.

Diligences daily to Tours, Angers, and Nantes; to Le Mans; Chinon, Cholet; Poitiers and Bordeaux; to Niort and Saintes.

Steam-boats. The ascending boat from Angers and Nantes arrives here about 10 A.M.; the descending boat from Tours about 12. They bring to for a few minutes opposite the Belvedere.

L. The Ecole de Cavalerie is seen as you quit Saumur. The whiteness of the houses about Saumur is remarkable, and arises from the pure colour of the stone, which, being readily cut, is formed into smooth, nicely-jointed masonry, and gives even to humble cottages the aspect of villas. They add much to the pleasing character of the country, peering from amidst the luxuriant foliage. Acacia hedges, vines, and walnut trees, with orchards and rich crops of corn, cover this really beautiful district, upon which all the bounties of nature seem to have been lavished.

L. The village of Tuffeau receives its name from its quarries of tufa, worked into vast subterranean catacombs, which have furnished building materials for the surrounding district.

L. Treves is conspicuous owing to its pretty Gothic tower, 100 ft. high. It was built by Foulques d'Anjou, 1016, and given by Charles VII. to his Chancellor, Robert-le-Maçon, for saving his life at the capture of Paris by the Burgundians: it is carefully kept up by its present owner. Not far off is the Church of Cunault, attributed to King Dagobert, and though not of his time, at least of great antiquity: 11th to 13th century.

Rt. Les Rosiers. L. Nearly opposite, the very ancient Church of Gennes rises on the top of a hill: it is dedicated to St. Eusèbe, and is said to have been used by the early Christians. The ruined nave is built of small stones, alternating with bands of tiles in the fashion of Roman masonry. The N. door is arched with bricks intermingled with stones, and in the wall above is a row of small semicircular arches. Gennes lies in a remarkably pretty situation, on a streamlet called Avort.

L. The vast conventual buildings of St. Maur, with sixteen windows on a row in front, deserve to be looked upon with respect as the retreat of those learned and laborious Benedictines who, in the 17th century, by the patronage of Richelieu, 1621, compiled those ponderous folios — stores of learning and erudition, — "L'Art de verifier les Dates," "Gallia Christiana,"—the Collection of French Historians — the Monumental Antiquities, &c. "Works of general and permanent advantage to the world at large; showing that the revenues of the Benedictines were not always spent in self-indulgence, and that the members of that order did not uniformly slumber in sloth and indolence."—Sir W. Scott. Among the most eminent names which distinguished this society of learned monks are those of Felibien, Montfaucon, Vaisette, Lobineau, and Mabillon.

A wire bridge of 5 or 6 arches has just been constructed (1842) at Rt. St. Mathurin*, nearly opposite St. Maur. At Daguénière, a little lower, the Levées de la Loire (see p. 184.) terminate, after running by the river side from Blois hither, a distance of nearly 100 miles; and here the road to Angers † and Nantes turns away from the Loire, to rejoin it about 20 m. lower down.

Below this the Loire is split into a number of channels by considerable islands, which are connected together by a series of 4 bridges of more than 100 antiquated arches of wood and stone, equally inconvenient for boats,

* Post road from Saumur.
15 Les Rosiers.
10 St. Mathurin.

† 21 Angers, on the Mayenne, is described in R. 46.

which pass under, and vehicles, which go over them, measuring altogether about 4,600 ft.

Rt. Ponts de Cè.

A town of 3,520 inhabitants, on the right bank of the Loire, which is here nearly 2 m. distant from the l. bank. It is about 4 m. from Angers (R. 46.). Some antiquaries have attributed its origin to Ce-sar, who, according to them, also bequeathed to it the first syllable of his name—a theory which is considerably thwarted by the fact, that the name was anciently written Ponts de Scez. The bridges form an important passage over the Loire. A bloody engagement was fought here in the Vendean war, 1793.

Coaches run several times a day between Ponts de Cè and Angers, p. 157.

L. About 7 m. S.E. of Ponts de Cè is the Château de Brissac, seat of the noble and ancient family of that name, consisting of a handsome Italian palazzo, between two older castellated round towers, of such solid construction that it was found impossible to remove them when the centre was built, and they were in consequence amalgamated with it. It is conspicuous for the red colour of the stone. The general effect of its façade, though of a mixed character, is stately and good, but the details of carving have been destroyed by mutilations.

It was ransacked, stripped, and dismantled during the Vendean war, and returned to the Duc de Brissac at the Restoration a mere shell. He has repaired and refitted it with much taste, filling it with antique furniture and family portraits, among which is one of the Maréchal de Brissac in the time of Louis XIV.

L. The Loire is joined by the Maine (called Mayenne above Angers) about 6 m. below Ponts de Cè. On the point of land between them stands the village of La Pointe, where are numerous white villas and walled gardens of the citizens of Angers.

The steamers, both in ascending and descending the Loire, penetrate up the Maine to touch at Angers.

Below the junction of the Mayne the Loire is sensibly augmented in expanse and depth, and its banks attain a more considerable elevation than above, rising into hills, often in abrupt precipices from the water's edge.

Rt. One of these heights, called Coulée de Serrant, is clothed with vines, the growth of which is much esteemed. The Château de Serrant, the stately mansion of Count Walsh, is one of the finest on the Loire, and is situated 3 m. from the river, between it and the high road to Nantes. Its gardens, park, and orangery are said to be fine and well kept up. In the chapel is a marble monument by Coysevoix to the Marquis de Vaubrun, killed at the passage of the Rhine.

The family is of Irish origin, having emigrated with James II. A portrait of the Pretender, still in their possession, was a gift from him to their ancestor, who fitted out the vessel which conveyed Charles Edward from Nantes to Scotland in 1745.

The pretty wooded Ile de Béhuard contains a chapel of Our Lady, founded on a rock, whose uneven surface forms its floor, and projects upwards in a point 4 or 5 ft. high. It was for ages a place of pilgrimage, and was visited with superstitious veneration by Louis XI., whose faded portrait is still hung up within it, and by his son, and both lavished on it considerable gifts. By accident it was forgotten at the Revolution, and remains undespoiled, retaining many ex votos, some church plate, &c.

Its walls, still retaining the fleurs de lis and other coats of arms with which they were painted, are hung with the chains of Christian captives rescued from Algiers.

Rt. The church of the small town of Savenières (pop. 2500), opposite the Ile Béhuard, has parts of extreme antiquity. The front and part of the

S. wall of the nave, of singularly constructed masonry, consisting of black slate alternating with bands or layers of red tiles, arranged in fern-leaf pattern, intermixed with white tufa stones, are probably as old as the 6th or 7th century. The doorway is more modern. The choir and E. apse, added in the 11th or 12th century, display on their external walls and around the windows, rich Byzantine ornaments and mouldings.

L. The triple rock of Rochefort was anciently crowned by a fortress, of which nothing now remains but a few fragments of wall. It was destroyed by Henri IV., 1598.

Between (l.) the picturesque town of Chalonnes, surmounted by the square tower of its castle, and (rt.) St. George (at some distance from the Loir, on the high road), the river traverses a small coal field, which has been worked to a considerable extent of late, though it produces only an inferior quality of coal.

At Chalonnes another suspension-bridge has been thrown over the Loire.

L. The eminence crowned with a modern-looking ruin, through whose numerous windows and roofless walls the sky appears, is Mont Jan; whose name, according to etymologists, has something to do with Janus—though they cannot exactly agree what the connection is. The ruins are those of a convent of Cordeliers: it had been converted into a sort of state prison, of which the monks were the gaolers, when it was burnt during the Vendean war.

Rt. Champtocé*, a little village opposite Mont Jan, and situated on the post road, which here again joins the Loire, is surmounted by the imposing ruins of a feudal castle, celebrated from the crimes of its owner in the reign of Charles VII., the infamous Gilles de Retz, Sieur de Laval, a monster in human shape, the bugbear of the surrounding country, called Barbe Bleu, and the original of our well known Blue Beard; who, although clothed by us in a turban, in reality comes from the banks of the Loire. His history affords a remarkable instance of the superstitions of the 15th century, and of the impunity for his atrocities which a feudal seigneur enjoyed in that dark age. Having run through an enormous fortune by extravagance, and impaired by excesses his constitution in early youth, the Sieur de Retz sought to renovate both by magic. He kept in his pay an Italian alchemist and magician, who induced him to believe that a charm could be produced from the blood of infants, which would restore him to health and fortune by using it as a bath. For this end children and young persons were spirited away and murdered in the deep dungeons of his castles or in the solitude of his forests, to the number, it was said, of more than 100; he himself, in most cases, plunging the poignard in their breasts. At length the whole country rose up against the tyrant; and his suzerain, Duke Jean V. of Brittany, having heard the charges against him, caused him to be seized and tried: he was found guilty, condemned, and burnt at the stake in Nantes in 1440, after making full confession of his misdeeds. The peasant still regards with horror the ill-omened walls and vaults in which the monster raised the devil, and sold himself to Satan, according to the popular belief.

Rt. Ingrande, a long line of houses raised upon a terraced wall stretching along the strand, is placed exactly on the boundary of ancient Brittany and Anjou, and between the modern departments of Loire Inferieur and Maine-et-Loire. The name was originally "Ingressus Andium," the entrance of the country of the Andes, i.e. the Angevine.

Rt. At Montrelais are extensive coal mines, some of the pits extending the vast but not picturesque ruins of the Abbey of Montglonne, whose foundation is traced to Charlemagne, burnt down and destroyed by the republicans in the Vendean war; and a little below it, the church of St. Florent, surmounted by a modern-looking tower, by the side of which rises a Pillar to the memory of the brave Vendean general Bonchamps, but now surmounted, as if in insult and mockery, by the symbol of revolution, which he died in combatting, the drapeau tricolor. Wounded mortally in the fatal fray of Chollet, he was brought hither by the routed Vendeans to die, and closed his career with an act of mercy in sparing the lives of 4000 republican prisoners, who had been taken and shut up in the church, and against whom the irritated Vendeans were already pointing their cannon, worked up to madness by defeat, by the mortal wound of their general, and by terror for their wives and families. The commands and entreaties of the dying hero, and nearly the last words he uttered—"Grace aux prisoniers," — had the effect of saving them from military execution, when nothing else could have rescued them. Bonchamps expired in a miserable hovel, in the village of Meilleraye, on the opposite side of the Loire, but is interred within the church of St. Florent, and a monument of marble by David is erected to his memory. St. Florent was the scene of the most memorable event in the war of La Vendée, which all who have read Madame Larochejacquelin's touching memoirs will remember—the passage of the Loire by the Vendean army after their rout at Chollet, 1793. They reached the narrow strip of level ground at the base of the semicircle of heights on the l. bank, in number nearly 100,000, half of them unarmed, words, "left behind nothing but ashes and piles of dead." The tumult of such a multitude crowding down to the twenty-five small barks which alone could be mustered to ferry them over, the cries of children seeking parents or relations, the groans of the wounded, the alarm caused by the enemy, formed a scene of pain, confusion, and despair, which Madame de Larochejacquelin compares with the awful spectacle that the world must behold at the day of judgment. The whole multitude, however, were transported across in safety before the arrival of the enemy, whose advanced posts reached the river the day after.

* Post road.—from Angers.
8 Champtocé.

The broad expanse of the river is divided by an island, between St. Florent and rt. Varades *, the spot where the fugitives, when landed, waited the junction of their companions. It is a town of 4000 inhabitants.

Passing many monotonous clumps and rows of willows, we reach the suspension-bridge of wire supported by wire shrouds or stays, erected 1839, of five arches, more than 1300 ft. long, which leads from La Vendée to the little town of

Rt. Ancenis† (Inn: H. de France; small, but clean and comfortable.—H. M.), a town of nearly 4000 inhabitants, having remains of an old castle of the Ducs de Béthune at the water side, above the bridge, now reduced to a few strong walls and towers. The large barracks are formed out of a ci-devant convent of Ursuline nuns.

Here a broken remnant of the Vendean host, which had crossed at Varades, endeavoured to recross a few weeks after, shattered by the recent defeat of Le Mans. Larochejacquelin, on this occasion, volunteered to cross the river in the only boat which could be found on the l. bank, to bring over some hay barges attached to the opposite shore; but while so engaged he was attacked by the enemy and driven into the woods. A gun boat of the enemy sunk the barges destined to transport his followers, and thus cut off all communication between them and their general.

* Post road.—14 Varades. † 13 Ancenis.

L. On the top of a hill covered with brushwood stand the ruins of the castle of Champtoceaux, in which Jean de Montfort was kept a prisoner by Marguerite de Clisson; and at the foot of the hill a bridge or pier of two arches projects into the river, designed by the owner of the fort above to facilitate the levying of toll on the vessels which passed, in feudal times.

Rt. The tall black octagonal tower of Oudon*, five stories high, surmounted by machicolations, overlooks the flat land and a series of islands which here intersect the river. It was built probably in the 13th century.

Rt. After passing a group of pseudo-castellated modern constructions, worthy of a tea-garden, and called after their founder, a citizen of Nantes, Les Folies Siffait, we approach the (rt.) Castle of Clermont, on the top of an abrupt and lofty escarpment, yet not destitute of foliage, forming one of the most picturesque scenes on the Loire, but unendowed with any historical interest.

Rt. La Seilleraie†, at a little distance from the river, was several times visited by Madame de Sévigné, who dates some of her letters hence, and its gardens were laid out by Le Nôtre. The apartment and portrait of the Sévigné are preserved, and the mansion contains other portraits by Mignard, Le Brun, &c.

Rt. The precipitous heights gradually give place to gentle undulations, which, below the rocks of Mauves, subside into a flat monotonous plain, out of the midst of which, in the distance, the towers of the cathedral of Nantes are seen to rise. Islands and sandbanks greatly multiply in this part of the river, interspersed with dykes of stone heaps to regulate the river, and a few insignificant villages occur at intervals.

Nantes. Route 46.

ROUTE 60.

NANTES TO POITIERS, BY CLISSON.

178 kilom. = 110½ Eng. m.

Diligence daily in about 19 hours, and several from Nantes to Clisson.

Our road, before it gets clear of the suburb of Nantes (St. Jacques), is carried over the different branches of the Loire on a series of seven bridges, united by causeways, about 2 m. long, lined with houses. Beyond the last bridge the road to Bordeaux (R. 62.) branches off to the rt. About 2 m. S. of Nantes we find the country, though nearly level in surface, covered with vineyards.

13 Tournebride.

The little village Le Pallet is celebrated as the birth-place of Abelard; the crumbling briar-grown foundations of a square tower behind the church, on the l. of the road, are called the remains of the house of his father Beranger.

The stream of the Sèvre Nantaise runs nearly parallel with our road, a little on the rt., as far as Clisson.

A small bridge carrying the road over a valley is stated in an inscription to have been built "l'An 2 du Regne de Napoleon le Grand."

15 Clisson. Inns: H. de France, new; Poste, beyond the bridge.

This small town is celebrated for its very romantic situation in the deep narrow bosky valley of the Sèvre, on one side of which towers the stately old castle. The scene has a somewhat Italian character. As the town was destroyed in the Vendean war, its houses are mostly modern, and contribute little to the beauty of it. A handsome new bridge of twelve arches, rising on very lofty double piers, now spans the valley, carrying the road to Poitiers across without descending the very steep slope which leads to and from the river. The perspective of the interior of the bridge from below, through its arched piers, forms a vista like that of a cathedral.

* 9 Oudon. † 14 La Seilleraie.

The Castle of Clisson, the cradle of that illustrious family from which sprung the famous Olivier de Clisson, the fierce and successful antagonist of the English in the wars of the 14th century, who was thought worthy to succeed Duguesclin as Constable of France, stands on the l. bank of the Sèvre. It is based on the rock, or, where that was wanting to furnish a foundation, huge sustaining walls have been raised from the bottom of the valley, on a line with the escarpment of the rock, to support its towers and bastions. Where not protected by an escarpment, it is surrounded by a fosse. On the l. of the grass-grown court-yard, after entering by the gateway of the Tour des Pélerins, so called from the crusader Clisson, who built it after his return from Palestine, is a vast pile separated by ditches from the rest, entered by several gates in succession, containing the great hall, the tall donjon, of which one side only remains, and the kitchen, with its wide fire-place. From some of the windows a fine view is obtained over the two valleys of the Maine and Sèvre. All this part of the building is in a state of most complete ruin, occasioned by the civil war of La Vendée. Before that broke out the castle belonged to the family Rohan-Soubise, and had fallen into neglect, but its destruction was completed by the republican army in 1793. When the town was set on fire and destroyed by them, a number of its unfortunate inhabitants, chiefly old men, women, and children, sought refuge within the castle walls, and remained in its gloomy vaults and dungeons, whither they had conveyed some of their cattle also, for a little time unnoticed. But no sooner was their retreat discovered by the army of Kleber, than they were dragged forth from their hiding-place, and hurled alive down a deep well in the second court of the castle, now stopped up, and marked by a cypress planted near it. For many hours the feeble and half stifled cries of these unfortunate creatures were heard issuing from its depths before they utterly perished. The number thus destroyed is variously stated at 100 and 405; the latter, it is to be feared, is nearest the truth. The story of the well of Clisson is one of the blackest spots on that page of atrocities.

The pretty grounds of La Garenne, once highly extolled, perhaps too highly, as "a show place," but now no longer kept up, are indebted for the considerable beauty which they possess to the full stream of the Sèvre, which flows past them, to the fantastic rocks piled one above another rising near its margin, and to the fine trees dipping their branches in its waters, alternating with rich flat meadow-land, which here gives variety to the valley, and to the glimpses of the old castle seen at certain points. Winding walks are carried through the park, decorated at intervals with monuments and statues, a temple of Vesta, a grotto called after Heloise, and a Roman milestone of the age of Antonine found on the road to Poitiers. The Garenne owes its artificial embellishment to the brothers Cacault, who deposited their collection of paintings here, and to M. Lemot, a sculptor; successively its owners, who built the house on the height now deserted.

The Villa Valentin is a would-be Italian cascina on a height above the Maine.

On leaving Clisson, you pass on the top of the hill the little Chapelle de toute Joie, so called by a lord of Clisson who received on this spot the joyful news of the birth of a son, and built it in consequence.

The road from Clisson to Poitiers has been made about 12 years, and is part of a network of lines of communication formed to facilitate not only commercial intercourse, but the passage of large bodies of troops; they will contribute more than any thing else to alter the primitive state of society in this part of France. Clisson is on the very verge of La Vendée, (p. 170.) which begins on the l. bank of the Sèvre; but our road, running parallel with the river, does not enter it until within a short distance of 14 Torfou, a village almost exclusively composed of new houses, the old having been destroyed in the civil war. One of the greatest victories of the Vendean peasantry was gained near this over a republican army superior in numbers by 10,000 men, including the terrible garrison of Mayence,—veterans, and reputed the best soldiers in France, and commanded by Kleber. A pillar set up on the post road, about a mile beyond Torfou, at the junction of four highways, marks the scene of the battle, which occured Sept. 19. 1793. Its four sides bear the names of Charette, D'Elbée, Lescure, and Bonchamps, the four Vendean leaders who took part in it. The day would have been lost for the cause of the royalists, soon after the action began, had not Lescure rallied around him 1700 peasants of the village of Echanbrognes, who stood the brunt of the assault for two hours, until the division of Bonchamps came up.

About 3 m. from Torfou in a direct line, and more than 4 by the post road, passing the column (where turn to rt.), is the Castle of Tiffauges, an extensive ruin on a high table land between the l. bank of the Sèvre and a small rivulet (La Crume) falling into it. The donjon stood on the rocky height overlooking and commanding the gap through which the high road to Les Herbiers is carried. The inner courts, now separated merely by a few foundations of wall, are converted into productive corn fields; but behind two cottages, built in the midst of them, runs a pile of building skirting the brow of the cliff, originally occupied by the seigneur, and more perfect than any other part. The most picturesque bit is a round tower projecting over the rivulet, containing a fine vaulted apartment and a spiral stair, probably of the 16th century. Round the top runs a covered gallery, resting on the corbels of the machicolations. These chambers now serve as store-rooms for hay, corn, and other farm produce, and the inner wall is prettily draped with vines. By a little postern you may descend into the valley of the Crume. This castle is said to have been one of the residences of the wicked Gilles de Retz, the Bluebeard of the Loire (p. 206.); it was dismantled by the Cardinal Richelieu.

The part of the valley on which the village Tiffauges stands is rocky and somewhat bare of grass. A cotton-mill has been built under the castle. There is no good inn.

Those who take the direct line between Torfou and Tiffauges will have an opportunity of learning what sort of a country La Vendée was before Napoleon and Louis Philippe intersected it in all directions by broad, open, macadamized high roads. At the distance of a few hundred yards from either village you find yourself in a labyrinth of lanes branching in all directions, worn down by cart wheels or winter torrents, considerably below the surface, lined on either side with trees or hedges which close above your head, and form a covered way like a subterranean passage. So numerous are these deep paths, and so intricate their crossings, that even the inhabitant is apt to be misled by them, while the deep stagnant pools, or sloughs of mud, alternating with deep ruts or projecting bosses of bare granite rock, render the passage way far before you. It can easily be understood what a complete stronghold such a district would become when defended by a brave peasantry, fighting close to their own homes, and thoroughly acquainted with all its intricacies. 20 years ago, it must be remembered, only two high roads, properly so called, existed in La Vendée; that from Nantes to Bordeaux, and from Tours to Poitiers, and these were 70 m. apart. The peasantry were all accustomed to the use of the gun; many were old poachers, and capital marksmen. The tactics which they adopted was a species of skirmishing, never attacking the enemy but to advantage, themselves choosing time and place, when and where they found him entangled in the toils. At the word of command from their chief, these rude bands assembled at the place of rendezvous, scattered themselves on the enemy's approach, lining every hedge and copse, from which a murderous fire opened on all sides, the Vendean marksmen picking out their men, while they themselves were invisible or unassailable.

16 Mortagne (Vendée) was burnt down, like Torfou, in the Vendean war, and has been since rebuilt. It was long the head-quarters of the royalist army. At Cholet, 8 m. N. E. of this, a manufacturing town of 8897 inhabitants, entirely rebuilt since its destruction in the civil war, two actions were fought in 1793; in the first of which the Vendeans lost one of their bravest leaders, M. Lescure, who was shot through the head, and in the second suffered a more fatal defeat, which, in fact, decided the war, and drove them across the Loire (see p. 207.). Before this battle began, on the 13th October, 1793, the whole Vendean army heard mass by torchlight, performed by the curé of this Stofflet, even captured a park of artillery; but a charge of the republican cavalry, and an attack from the garrison of Mayence, the so-called "invincibles," turned the scale; the Vendeans were utterly routed, and their best general, the brave and generous Bonchamps, was carried off the field mortally wounded.

At a short distance from Nouaillé, on the road from Cholet to Saumur, a third leader of the Vendeans fell, March 4. 1793, Henri Larochejacquelin. For a long time after the wreck of the royalist cause, he had carried on a successful partisan warfare, issuing out from the fastnesses of the Forest of Vezins at the head of a few determined followers, and spreading dismay among the republican outposts. He was shot by a grenadier, while in the act of offering him quarter. At his death, the Convention could, for the first time, with safety and truth, proclaim that La Vendée had ceased to exist. An apple-tree is pointed out as marking the spot where he fell.

18 Chatillon sur Sèvre, destroyed also, except three houses, in the civil war, is now rebuilt. It was called Mauléon down to 1737.

22 Bressuire, a new town built on the ashes of one ruined by the same disastrous war.

Parthenay, a town of 4024 inhabitants, though carried by storm by the republican forces under Westerman, escaped annihilation, and retains some fragments of antiquity, in the ruins of its castle, the gate of St. Jacques, and the church of St. John, said to be a structure of the 9th century. The town stands on the right bank of the Thouet, a tributary of the Loire, in a hilly district.

24 Ayron.

25 Poitiers. R. 64.

ROUTE 62.

NANTES TO BORDEAUX, BY BOURBON VENDÉE, ROCHELLE, ROCHEFORT, AND SAINTES.

345 kilom. = 214 Eng. m.

A malleposte daily in 25 hours.

Diligences daily.

Steamers ply regularly between Nantes and Bordeaux. NB. Some trustworthy person should be consulted as to the efficiency and safety of the boats before embarking.

On quitting Nantes by the six bridges at the extremity of the Faubourg St. Jacques, our route turns to the rt. out of that to Clisson (p. 208.), and crosses, on a handsome new bridge, the Sèvre Nantaise, just above its junction with the Loire.

21 Aigrefeuille.

A little beyond this the road enters the department of La Vendée, and thenceforth traverses the centre of the district which was the theatre of the terrible civil war of 1792—93.

13 Montaigu, prettily situated on a height above a small stream called the Mayne, in the midst of the Bocage of La Vendée, has fallen from the condition of a town to a village since the war, when two thirds of its houses were burned, and a large part of its inhabitants massacred. The terrace of the château, not now inhabited, commands a good view.

After crossing the Maine, a wild open heathy country succeeds, producing furze, broom, and a little barley or buckwheat, as far as 24 Belleville.

13 Bourbon Vendée (Inns: Grand Hôtel; H. de France), a new town of right-angled streets and ugly fresh-looking houses, founded by Napoleon in the very centre of the rebellious province La Vendée, and destined by him to be called Napoleon-Vendée, is now the chef lieu of the department. La Roche sur Yonne, an ancient apanage of the Bourbons, occupied nearly the same site, and now, united with it, forms a suburb. It has not quite 5060 inhabitants. Destitute of commerce or manufactures, in a situation deficient in any advantages required to render a town flourishing, in the midst of a district of barren open heath, it stands about the dullest town in France, and a melancholy example of the folly of establishing a town by word of command. "It is exactly what one might expect it would be from the hasty and arbitrary manner of its creation. A huge oblong 'Place' forms the centre and principal part of it. From the sides and corners of this eight or ten streets branch off at right angles. The buildings which compose this square are almost all public edifices, each looking more mesquin and meagre than the other, and all having the appearance of being stretched out at the least possible expense to the greatest possible extent of front, for the purpose of making them go as far as possible towards the composition of the proposed town. A theatre, on the steps of whose portico the grass was growing, forms part of one side. A huge Hôtel de Ville, which seems deserted and shut up, stands opposite to a great barn of a church. A prefecture, a court-house, a mairie, and enormous barracks, surrounding a court in which a dozen regiments might manœuvre at once, occupy the most of the remaining space. The barracks have been constructed so much in haste and with so little solidity that they are already beginning to fall to ruins—new ruins, the most unsightly spectacle. They are deserted and apparently abandoned to their fate."—Trollope, W. France.

Conveyances go from this to Nantes, Bordeaux, Saumur, and Les Sables.

About 5 m. to the W. are the ruins of the abbey of Fontanelles.

The same dreary unenclosed and heath-clad land extends to 22 Mareuil, beyond which a fine corn country commences.

10 Luçon, a dull and dirty small town, in a situation which is unhealthy, on account of its vicinity to the marshes, connected with the sea by a canal, and having a population of about 3000. Luçon was the episcopal see of the Cardinal de Richelieu, having been a sort of family living, into which he, though bred up for a soldier, was inducted at the age of 22. Its Gothic cathedral, surmounted by a tall spire of open-work, is the principal building.

10 Moreilles. Our route now lies across a district which may be called the Fens of France, a series of marshy flats, traversed by numerous rivers, the chief of which are the Vendée and Sèvre Niortaise, it is intersected also in all directions by canals, and, notwithstanding the drainage effected by them, is unhealthy from malaria. A solitary conical mound rising out of the flat on the l. of the road is crowned by the village of Chaillé. The limits of La Vendée and the stream of the Sèvre Niortaise are crossed shortly before reaching 17 Marans, a town of 4000 inhabitants, 9 m. from the sea, exporting a considerable quantity of corn from La Vendée and of flour from Niort.

Before half the next stage is traversed the road crosses the canal from La Rochelle to Niort. Near this the marshes of La Vendée terminate, and the marly lands of the Aunis begin.

15 Grolaud. Here the canal is crossed.

A picturesque group of towers and spires, visible from a considerable distance, announces the approach to 9 La Rochelle. Inn: Poste; very good.

This third-rate fortress and commercial town of secondary importance, is situated on the sea, on the shore of a bay in front of which rise the Isles de Ré and d'Oleron. It was capital of the district of Aunis, and is now chef lieu of the Department de la Charente. Before its memorable siege of 1628, it had a population of 27,000: at present it contains no more than 14,857.

Its little port is entirely enclosed by the buildings of the town, and consists of an outer tidal basin, and an inner wet dock, protected by a pier, and flanked at its entrance on either side by a round tower, once part of the old fortifications. A quay, planted with trees, runs round the harbour, and forms an agreeable promenade.

Its chief commerce consists in the exportation of the brandy made in the adjoining province of l'Aunis, the finest in France, of wine, corn, and flour.

At low water the remains of the famous dyke thrown out into the sea by orders of Richelieu during the siege of 1628-29, and which contributed mainly to the surrender of the town, by interrupting all supplies and succour from England, are distinctly visible. This long pile of stones, stretching for a distance of 1640 yds. from the point of Coreille to that of Fort Louis, was built by the engineer Metezeau.

In the Hôtel de Ville, a building of the time of Francis I., is shown the chamber in which the heroic Guiton accepted the office of mayor on the very eve of the siege, "on condition that I be allowed to plunge into the heart of any one who speaks of surrender the dagger which I hold in my hand, which I insist shall be placed on the table of the council chamber where we meet, to be used against myself first, should I be weak enough to propose a capitulation." Influenced by so obstinate a spirit of resistance, the citizens held out for 14 long months against the vast force brought against them, commanded by Cardinal Richelieu in person, and supported by the presence of Louis XIII. At length, when famine, which followed the vigilant blockade established on the land side, by throwing up lines, 3 miles long, and by the dyke before mentioned drawn across the harbour, had reduced the numbers of the besieged from 27,000 to 5000, La Rochelle, the bulwark of the protestant cause in France, which had remained in the hands of the Huguenots since the first unsuccessful siege of 1573, was yielded up to the king, and its fortifications levelled, except the two towers at the mouth of the harbour. The ill success of the two expeditions fitted out by Charles I., whose favourite, Buckingham, contributed to the failure of the first by his incompetence, and who was assassinated by Felton while about to assume the command of the second, prepared the way for its fall. The town never regained its previous prosperity, though protestants are still numerous here. By its capture, Richelieu destroyed the political influence of the Calvinists in France.

The Gothic Porte de l'Horloge, whose architecture announces it to be a work of the 16th century, is another relic of the time of the siege, and there are some old houses still standing, which must also have existed at that memorable event, when streets and houses were rendered infected by the dead bodies too numerous for the living to bury. Such was the extreme misery to which the inhabitants were reduced, that one of them declared that for a whole week he had kept his child alive solely by blood drawn from his own body. One of the articles of capitulation was, that the invincible Guiton should continue in the office of mayor, retaining all his dignities.

The town was again fortified by Vauban in the reign of Louis XIV. The tower of the church of St. Sauveur, the loftiest in the place, now used as a shot tower, commands from its top a view embracing the Isles de Ré, whose town, St. Martin, resisted all the efforts of the English under Buckingham to capture it, 1628; and of Oleron, a long low bank of land separated from Ré by a strait called Pertuis d' Antioche. Still nearer, not 2 m. off the shore, is the Ile d'Aix, opposite the mouth of the Charente: the fort and batteries upon it, defending the entrance of the roads, were captured by the English, 1757, but have been greatly strengthened since that time. An attempt was also made, 1809, by the English, to destroy the French fleet here by fire ships, and was partly successful, as, out of fourteen vessels, four ran ashore and were burnt, and two were captured.

Some years ago, a singular plague of white ants (Termites), originally imported from India, infested the wooden buildings of La Rochelle.

There is an Etablissement des Bains here.

A steamer plies daily between La Rochelle and l'Ile de Ré.

The town is the birth-place of Réaumur, inventor of the thermometric scale named after him, and of Billaud Varennes, member of the national convention.

Coaches run twice a day between La Rochelle and Rochefort.

An uninteresting track of flat marshy land intervenes between Rochelle and Rochefort. Near the village of Passage stood an ancient town, Châtelaillon, which preceded La Rochelle, and has long since disappeared, owing to encroachments of the sea.

17 Trois Canons.

14. Rochefort.—Inns: Hôtel des Etrangers, not good, D.; H. Grand Bacha.

Rochefort, a fortress of fourth rank, but standing third in importance among the naval arsenals of France, is built on the rt. bank of the Charente, about 10 m. from its junction with the sea, and contains 14,040 inhabitants. The river is deep enough to float vessels of the largest size abreast of the town, having 20 ft. water at ebb, and 40 ft. at the highest tides, and five forts at its mouth protect the dockyard from hostile approach. Its position is well chosen, owing to its vicinity to the roadstead formed at the embouchure of the Charente, by the protection of the islands of Ré, Oleron, and Aix. Rochefort is quite a modern town, founded in 1664 for the establishment of a dockyard by Louis XIV., or, rather, his wise minister Colbert, who saw the necessity for a second port and arsenal on the ocean besides Brest. Its streets are built at right angles, and the only buildings of consequence are those connected with the Port Militaire, or Dockyard. Admission is given (with difficulty at present, especially to Englishmen,) by the Major de la Marine, on application of the British consul, and on exhibition of the passport. Among the vessels on the stocks are several large war steamers: the model room contains some curiosities. To describe the sailmakers' shops, the cable-twisting loft, the workshops whose machinery is set in motion by a steam-engine, would be nearly to repeat what has been said of Brest and Cherburg (pp. 83. 123.). The only novelty to an Englishman, acquainted with the British dockyards, will be the Bagne, or convict prison, capable of containing 2,200 forçats, but occupied by only half that number.

The largest and most remarkable edifice here is the Hôpital de la Marine, outside the town, consisting of nine separate masses of building, containing 1200 beds. It is excellently arranged and well kept up, cleanly in the extreme. There is a tolerable anatomical museum attached to it.

The town was originally very unhealthy, owing to its low situation among the marshes; but these have been drained of late, and fevers are becoming rare. In the Grande Place is a fountain adorned with figures, representing Old Ocean shaking hands with the Charente.

On the 3d July, 1815, Napoleon arrived at Rochefort, seeking to escape to America, and lodged at the prefecture; but finding that the Bellerophon, an English line-of-battle ship, was off the roads, and that there were no possible means of evading it, he went on board on the 15th, and sailed for England, after in vain attempting to obtain a pledge from Captain Maitland for safe conduct.

A Steamer runs twice a week from Royan, a small port on the N. bank of the Gironde, 29 m. from Rochefort, to Bordeaux: the voyage takes 7 hours. Coaches convey passengers between Rochefort and Royan, fare 3 fr., and total to Bordeaux, 10 fr. In going to Royan (a small watering place opposite the lighthouse of the Tour de Cordouan [R. 69.]), the Charente is crossed by a ferry. The road traverses an uninteresting flat, only redeemed by drainage from the state of a pestilential marsh, called Les Marennes.

A Steamer ascends the Charente to Saintes (35 m.) every morning, returning in the afternoon: the passage takes 4 hours.

The voyage up the Charente is agreeable, though somewhat monotonous, from the windings of the river and the unvaried nature of the green flat pasture lands on its banks. Near to Saintes it passes the ruined Castle of Taillebourg, on an isolated rock, near which St. Louis defeated the English in 1242.

Those who travel by land from Rochefort to Bordeaux must cross the Charente by a ferry close under the town of Tonnay-Charente, which Louis XIV. had fixed upon for the site of his dockyard, a design which was defeated by the enormous demands of its owners for the purchase of the ground. The Gothic Castle, having a park and gardens attached to it, is the ancient seat of the family of Mortemart. A great quantity of brandy is exported from hence, almost all the vineyards on the banks of the Charente being cultivated for the manufacture of eau-de-vie (see p. 216.): 6000 casks, a large part of the produce of Cognac, is annually shipped here for England.

9 St. Hyppolite.

13 St. Porchaire.

On the l. bank of the Charente stands

14 Saintes. Inns: Hôtel du Bateau à Vapeur; best, and very good.

Saintes, formerly capital of the province Saintonge, betrays in its name the antiquity of its origin as chief city of the Santones, and has many traces to prove its importance under Roman rule.

The principal and best preserved ancient monument is, the Roman arch of Triumph, upon the bridge over the Charente, serving now for a principal entrance into the town, constructed of a coarse limestone, originally very plain, and now, after the lapse of ages, much injured by the weather, which has rounded the angles of the stone, and converted the joints of the masonry into gaps. It is a heavy pile of masonry, pierced by two arches, and destitute of all architectural beauty, 38 ft. high. Five inscriptions upon it, now half-effaced, record that it was raised (in the reign of Nero) to the memory of Germanicus, of Tiberius his uncle, and of Drusus his father, by Caius Julius Rufus, priest of Roma and Augustus. It was saved from destruction in 1665 by Blondel the architect, who at that time rebuilt the bridge, and it has been repaired very lately. It is said to have been built originally on dry land, and that the river has since altered its bed, and isolated the arch; but this seems doubtful.

There are also considerable remains of a Roman Amphitheatre, near the church of St. Eutrope, in the faubourg. Though nearly equal in size to the grand circus of Nismes, it is very inferior in an architectural point of view, being built of small stones squared, and destitute of ornament, and is now reduced to a few fractured vaults and arches. The oval of the arena measures 70 ft. in its greatest length, and 57 ft. in width. The dens destined for the wild beasts still remain, and there are fragments of an aqueduct, contrived, it is supposed, to convert the arena into a naumachia for aquatic spectacles. (?) Many antique fragments, capitals, inscriptions, sarcophagi, &c., are preserved in the garden of the sous-prefecture. Such are the few traces of the former magnificence of the ancient Mediolanum Santonum, one of the most important cities of Aquitaine.

The Church of St. Eutrope is a structure of the 11th century; its crypt is probably still older; some of the capitals of columns have quaint carvings. The spire was built in the 15th century.

The detached tower of the Cathedral, conspicuous from the pinnacles which surmount it, occupies the site of the church built by Charlemagne in fulfilment of the vow of his father Pepin, after defeating on this spot Gaiffre Duc of Aquitaine. The portail is ancient.

The public Library contains Fenelon's Bible, with notes in his own hand.

The population of Saintes amounts to 11,000. The Charente is here a tidal river, but navigable only for barges. Much eau-de-vie is sent down to the sea for exportation. About 18 m. to the E. higher up the river, on the road to Angoulême, is the town of Cognac, which gives its name to the best brandy in France, produced from vineyards in its vicinity, and along the banks of the river near Jarnac and Angoulême (R. 64.), in the department of La Charente. The quantity produced annually does not exceed 6,000 butts (tierçons), but the number sold under the name "Les fines Champagnes," by which the best quality is distinguished, exceeds 15,000 butts. Cognac contains numerous distilleries, and is the staple place for the brandies produced in the surrounding districts. The vines cultivated for its manufacture are allowed to grow to greater luxuriance than those used for wine-making, and run along the ground, whence they acquire strength, while the earthy flavour which is inseparable from wine produced from creeping vines, is dissipated in the processes of distillation.

Francis I. was born at Cognac, while his mother Louise de Savoie, Duchesse d'Angoulême, was residing in the castle; but, according to tradition, he first saw the light under an elm tree, where his mother was unexpectedly brought to bed. A stone now marks the spot.

The road from Saintes to Bordeaux is carried through

12 La Jard,

9 Pons, a town of 4000 inhabitants, picturesquely seated on the l. bank of the Seugne. Its castle, distinguished by a keep-tower 100 ft. high, built in the 11th century, is now a prison. Théodore Agrippa d'Aubigné, grandfather of Madame de Maintenon, and a favourite of Henri IV., was a native of Pons.

10 St. Genis.

12 Mirambeau.

17 Etauliers, in the department of the Gironde.

The road reaches the banks of the Gironde at 13 Blaye, described in Route 69.

Steamers ply daily between Blaye and Bordeaux.

15 Gravier. There is a direct road from Etauliers to Graviers, avoiding the detour by Blaye round two sides of a triangle; but not long since this road was impracticable for carriages for want of repair.

16 Cubsac is on the highroad from Paris to Bordeaux. (R. 64.)

9 Carbon Blanc.
11 Bordeaux. } Route 64.

ROUTE 64.

TOURS TO BORDEAUX BY POITIERS AND ANGOULÊME.

326 kilom. = Eng. 202 m.

The Malleposte daily in 22 hours.

3 or 4 Diligences daily—besides coaches between intermediate towns.

The posting on this road is good: France.

from Tours to Poitiers may be done in 8 hours.

A somewhat monotonous avenue, 2½ m. long, leads out of Tours across the Cher, and the rich green pastures bordering on it. At the end of it stands the Château de Grammont, once belonging to the Archbp. of Tours. Its gate and one window through a gap in a tree command the whole breadth of the valley. At this point the road bends to the rt., ascending a height which limits, on this side, the Vale of the Loire and Cher, and commands an extensive view across it. A little beyond this the road to Loches (R. 56.) turns off on the l.

13 Montbazon, a small town, with a castle on a rock. Here the Indre is crossed. A little beyond

7 Sorigny you pass, on the l., the Chapel of St Catherine de Fierbois, whither Joan of Arc sent from Chinon to fetch the sacred sword, "marked with 5 crosses, lying in a vault," which she afterwards bore in all her battles. She had previously passed through the village, however, on her journey from Lorraine to Chinon, and had doubtless then remarked the weapon; but the vulgar belief attributed its discovery to divine inspiration.

16 St. Maure, here a road to Chinon branches off. See p. 197.

The river Creuse is crossed at Port-de-Piles, about ½ m. above its junction with the Vienne. Higher up, on the rt. bank of the Creuse, and 3 m. to the l. of our road, is the village of La Haye, the birthplace of the philosopher Descartes. The house in which he was born (1596) is preserved.

About 7 m. S. of La Haye, also on the Creuse, is the Chtâeau de Guerche, built by Charles VII. for Agnes Sorel, his mistress, where she resided when the king was at Loches, and where he used to visit her on his way to and from the chase in the neighbouring forest. It is a massy pile, rising 100 ft. above the water side, flanked by 4 towers at the angles. It retains in its interior some traces of fresco painting, and the punning initial letters, A over L (A-Sur-Elle). In the chapel is placed a statue of Agnes.

15 Les Ormes, on the Vienne.—The château belongs to the family d'Argenson.

The road runs parallel with the Vienne, though not in sight of it, through Dangé, and 12 Ingrande.

7 Châtellherault, (Inn : H. de l'Espérance, good), a smoky town of mean houses, on the rt. bank of the Vienne, is one of the chief seats of the Manufacture of Cutlery in France, which gives employment to about 600 families, out of its 9437 inhab., who work for large houses. There is also a royal manufactory of swords and bayonettes (armes blanches), established 1820. No sooner does the traveller's carriage stop here than he is assailed by a host of women plaguing him to purchase knives, scissors, &c., mounting upon chairs to force them in at the window.

The Duchy of Châtellherault was bestowed by Henri II. upon James Hamilton, 2nd Earl of Arran, Regent of Scotland, 1548, to induce him to consent to the projected match between his ward, the infant Queen Mary, and the Dauphin Francis.

On quitting the town, the Vienne (which is navigable for a short distance higher up) is crossed; and a portion of a gateway flanked by turrets, erected by the Duc de Sully, is passed at its extremity.

8 Barres de Nintré.

5 La Tricherie.

7 Clain. For the last 3 stages the road has continued to ascend the valley of the Clain. That stream traverses a rocky and wooded ravine, of much picturesque beauty, before arriving at,

12 Poitiers. Inns : — H. de France; — best and comfortable; bed 2 fr., dinner 3 fr., tea 1 fr., coffee 15 sous; — Trois Piliers.

Poitiers, the capital of ancient Poitou, an early possession of the kings of England, who were its Dukes down to the time of Charles V. (1371), stands on a rounded eminence of considerable height, the summit of which is occupied by the Prefecture and Palais de Justice. From this its streets sweep down, in steep slopes, or curve, in winding mazes, to the small river Clain, which, encompassing nearly $\frac{3}{4}$ of its circuit, in combination with the smaller river Boivre, which encircles another part, formed, in ancient times, a sort of natural fosse round its ramparts, now almost entirely swept away by town-council improvements. The number of inhabitants is 23,128, but it has neither commerce nor manufacture of any great importance, as might indeed be surmised from its dull and empty streets, excepting the market-place, which is a scene of much bustle and densely crowded.

It has an Ecole de Droit of some celebrity, numbering between 200 and 300 students, and still contains more than a dozen nunneries, chiefly serving as boarding schools for the education of young females.

The curiosities of Poitiers are chiefly of an antiquarian nature. It possesses a remarkably large number of churches; all more or less interesting to the lover of architecture and antiquity, — which, as some of them date from a very early period, and others were commenced later, and continued down to comparatively modern times, form a very instructive series by which to study the progress and change of style in building.

Notre Dame de Poitiers, in the market place, nearly opposite the Ecole de Droit, presents a remarkable example of the florid Romanesque style in its W. façade, which is nearly covered with sculpture from top to bottom. It rests on a triple arcade: the central arch forming the entrance being circular, the two side arches pointed, but all decorated with mouldings and capitals of the same character of richness and singularity.

The rest of the façade, on each side of a tall window, is occupied by arcades filled with statues and bas-reliefs; and the usual pointed oval frame (vescica piscis,) within the gable contains 2 statues. The whole is flanked by 2 round turrets. The probable date of this façade is the middle of the 12th century.

The interior is of a more severe style: an apsidal E. end, with circular arches and hooped vaulting, except the side chapels, one of which, in the S. aisle, an addition in the florid style of the 15th century, contains a rich recess to include a somewhat grotesque group of sculpture meant to represent the Entombment.

The Salle des Pas Perdus, attached to the Palais de Justice, which originally formed part of the palace of the Comtes de Poitou, is a vast hall, with an open wooden roof; its walls are decorated with arcades, circular on one side and pointed on the other, yet both perhaps nearly of the same date, the 12th century.

The Cathedral, dedicated to St. Peter is said to have been founded by Henry II. of England. The 2 towers, similar in style, but unequal in size,— the semicircular N. doorway, in which the capitals of the pillars are human figures, stiff, but good in style,— and a large part of the body of the building, whose round and pointed arches are intermixed, as in the Salle de Justice,— may possibly be of Henry's time.

The plan of the building is a parallelogram, divided into 3 aisles, the central one being much the widest. It terminates a little way above the arches, without either triforium or clerestory; the latter being transferred, as it were, to the side walls, where it appears in the form of a range of windows; one large pointed window, or 2 narrow round-headed ones, filling each compartment. The E. end is square, and has 3 coved recesses, in the thickness of the wall, to contain altars. The piers, composed of 4 engaged shafts, surmounted by sharply cut capitals, are very elegant. There are several painted windows, and a fine rose at the W. end, hid, internally, by the organ. Very solid buttresses support the walls and roof.

A little way behind the E. end of the cathedral, stands the Church of St^e. Radegonde; the lower part of whose elegant Byzantine tower, though masked by a florid porch, is probably of the 11th century, as well as the white marble benitier, shaped like a horse trough, within it. Above it is a curious niche, containing the statue of a saint. The Romanesque choir is raised upon a very old crypt, perhaps older than any part of the upper structure, partly cut out of the rock, in which is deposited the black marble Coffin of St. Radegonde, resorted to, in the month of August, by thousands of pilgrims, chiefly of the lower orders, who throng the low vault to kiss the worn marble Sarcophagus, (on which some curious ornaments, of an early age, may be discerned,) and to bring their sick children to be cured. The saint's empty coffin, it appears, still retains the virtue of healing possessed by her body, before it was burnt by the ruthless Huguenots in 1562. In the S. wall of the nave is a small chapel, fenced with iron bars, called "Le Pas de Dieu," because it contains the stone impressed by the footmark of our Saviour, who here appeared to St. Radegonde, according to the legend! It is covered over by an iron cage to protect it. Part of the internal decorations of this church are, like the porch, of the 15th century, and some of the sculpture is by no means appropriate to a church.

The building, called the Temple de St. Jean, recently converted into a Musée, and previously a church, is, next to the Roman Circus, the oldest edifice in Poitiers, and one of the oldest Christian monuments in France; on which account, as well as from the style of its architecture, it deserves particular attention from those who take an interest in ancient architecture.

It is an oblong building, measuring about 40 ft. by 25, its greatest length being from E. to W., and its walls on these sides, terminating in obtuse gables.

The masonry is very neat; and on 3 of the walls, inside as well as out, a sort of arcade is introduced, consisting of a circular arch, flanked and surmounted by small triangles, resembling pediments. These triangular ornaments are similar to those in the old church of Lorsch, on the Rhine, and may remind the architect of the flat-sided arches occurring in the churches of Barton-on-the-Humber, and elsewhere in England. This debased style of building, arising from want of skill in the architects, and of funds in the founders, followed the Roman, at the fall of the Empire, and preceded the Romanesque, and it is probable, therefore, that the Temple de St. Jean dates from the 6th or 7th century. Its destination appears to have been that of a Baptistery, judging from the well in the centre of its floor, about 8 feet deep, having a pipe running obliquely into it.

This supposition,—taking into consideration the coincidence in style with the church at Lorsch, a building supposed to be of the 8th century, appears more probable than that which would make it a Roman tomb, merely because a Roman monumental inscription was found within it. The style of construction is decidedly post-Roman.

To convert it into a church, a semicircular apse was thrown out from the E. wall, and a sort of porch was raised before the W. The style of building in these alterations denotes a date probably not later than the 10th century; and the curious frescoes, still visible on the inner walls, are perhaps nearly as old. The bull's-eye windows by which it is lighted were originally round-headed windows, the lower part of which has been bricked up. This edifice was condemned, a few years ago, by the municipal authorities, to be pulled down, because it stood in the way of the road to Limoges. Luckily there were found in Poitiers some admirers of ancient art to save it from destruction.

The antiquities deposited within consist chiefly of broken fragments of Roman sculpture and architecture; a mile-stone of the age of Alexander Severus, and some inscriptions; also a curious Byzantine bas-relief representing St. Hilarius.

The following churches deserve the notice of the antiquary and architect, in addition to those already mentioned. St. Hilaire, finished 1049, has lost a portion of its nave. The apsidal choir rests on 7 lofty columnar piers. The Church of Moutiersneuf is also Romanesque, but has been much restored since the Revolution.

The Romans have left traces of their settlement here, on the site of Gaulic Limonum, a city of the Pictavi, in the remains of an Amphitheatre, which is best approached through the Inn called Hotel d'Evreux. At the back of the stable-yard is a tolerably perfect wedge-shaped vault, now filled with hay; and, leading to it, a part of the vaulted corridor which ran round the building on the ground floor. The oval interior of the Circus is now converted into the inn garden, and some houses have been built upon the sloping constructions around it, which formerly supported the rows of benches. There is no doubt that other vaults and corridors remain under them. The hardness and regularity of the masonry, in the portions of the wall exposed to view, are such as characterise all Roman constructions.

The town of Poitiers is surrounded by narrow valleys or ravines, on all sides but the S. W., where a neck of land connects it with the high ridge whose extremity it occupies. In ancient times the town was defended on this side by strong walls and a deep ditch dug across the isthmus, The space immediately within these walls is now converted into a Promenade, called de Blossac, from an intendant of the Province in the last century. It would be a very agreeable walk were it only kept clean, for the terraces, resting on the foundations of the old walls, command a pleasing view into the deep valley of the Clain below.

The Bains de Belvedere, not far from this walk, are comfortable and moderate.

From the heights on the rt. bank of the Clain, there is a very good view of the picturesque town of Poitiers, but no path runs along them. The writer of this took an agreeable but scrambling walk, issuing out of Poitiers by the Paris gate, crossing the bridge over the Clain, then ascending through vineyards behind the Faubourg, and keeping along the edge of the cliff as far as the Road to Limoges, where he re-crossed the Clain by another bridge, at the back of St. Radegonde.

About 1½ m. out of the town, a little to the l. of the road to Limoges, on a height, is a Dolmen, or Druidic monument, called Pierre Levée. It is a block of calcareous sandstone, about 13 ft. long and 3 thick, resting at one end upon upright stones, but at the other deprived of its support. Rabelais attributes its erection to Pantagruel, "pour le divertissement des escholiers de l' Université."

At about an equal distance from the town, in another direction, a little to the l. of the road to Angoulême, are remains of a Roman aqueduct, which supplied water to the town and circus. 4 or 5 of its arches are still tolerably perfect, but they are neither imposing nor very ornamental.

Poitiers is historically very celebrated. The invading tide of the Saracenic hordes penetrated, in the 8th century, thus far into W. Europe, at a moment when the fate of Christianity seemed trembling in the scale. At that epoch, having already conquered Spain, they poured through the defiles of the Pyrenees, overspread Aquitaine, advanced up to the walls of Poitiers, under their famed chief Abdehramen, and burned the Church of St. Hilaire to the ground. They were even threatening to pass the Loire, when they were met, somewhere between Poitiers and Tours, by Charles Martel, in 732. This contest between the East and the West, between the Gospel and the Koran, ended in the defeat of the Saracens, 300,000 of whom, it is said, but on the doubtful authority of a single chronicler, were left dead on the field; and the remnant retired, never more to trouble Christendom in the West. The site of the battle-field has never been exactly ascertained, and no discovery of bones, "grandia effossis ossa sepulchris," has been made, which would surely mark the scene of so enormous a slaughter. At an earlier period (507) the plains of Poitiers had been the scene of the defeat of Alaric, king of the Visigoths, by Clovis.

Poitiers is distinguished in English History by the signal victory gained under its walls, in 1356, by the army of the Black Prince, consisting of English and Gascons, who early in that year had invaded the S. of France, and spread desolation through Languedoc, Limousin, and Auvergne, as far as the gates of Bourges in Berry. The prince's whole force did not exceed 12,000 or 14,000 men, and the expedition had no other design than that of a foray, to "harry" the fair fields of France. On his way back to Bordeaux, however, suddenly and unexpectedly, on the 9th September, he encountered the army of John, king of France, amounting to 60,000 men, of whose vicinity, and even of their march to meet him, he had been entirely ignorant.

"God help us," said the prince "we must now consider how we can best fight them." The Pope's Legate, Cardinal Talleyrand, assuming the office of peace-maker, in vain endeavoured to prevent the impending strife and bloodshed, though Edward himself offered to acquiesce in any reasonable terms, consistent with his honour, to be permitted to go free. He offered to give up all the towns and castles he had taken, together with the prisoners, and not to bear arms against the French king for the space of 7 years. The French, however, confident in numbers, would listen to no conditions but the surrender of the Black Prince, and 100 of his principal knights. The result is well known. The English owed the success of the day, under Providence, to their well-chosen position, to the deadly and skilfully aimed arrows of their yeomen, which availed more than the lances of their knights, and to the stout hearts of their leaders, the Black Prince and Lord Chandos, and of all the English under them.

On that fatal day France beheld the flower of her chivalry laid low, while her king, John, was led into captivity. The noble dead were buried by the towns-folk in the churches of the Cordeliers and Jacobins within the town. The field of battle, fixed by Froissart on a spot which he calls Maupertuis, a name now lost in the country, is proved, by old records, in which it is frequently mentioned, to have been situated between the commandery of Beauvoir and the Abbey of Nouaillé, near the road to La Rochelle.

Conveyances.—daily to Bordeaux and Tours, by Angoulême; to Limoges; to Rochefort (R. 62.); to Nantes (R. 60.).

The road from Poitiers to Angoulême possesses little interest. Shortly after quitting Poitiers, by the neck of land bounded by the Clain valley, on the l. it passes on the l. the road leading to the Roman Aqueduct (p. 221.), and at a short distance on the rt. that to Saintes and Rochefort (R. 62.).

6 Croutelle.

12 Vivonne.

8 Minières.

10 Couhé.

10 Chaunai.

8 Maisons Blanches. Civray, 2 leagues E. of this, contains a Romanesque church, whose façade is curiously ornamented with sculptures, including signs of the zodiac, somewhat like Notre Dame de Poitiers, but dating probably from the early part of the 12th century. At Charroux 8 m. farther off, are remains of an Abbey, now reduced to a tower about 80ft. high, rising from 2 circular arcades, one above the other, supported by piers, formed of bundles of shafts. This was originally the central tower of a very curious church, consisting of a circular choir, preceded by a rectangular nave: but all the rest is destroyed. The abbey was founded by Charlemagne, but these ruins are not older than the 11th or 12th century

12 Ruffec, (Inn: Poste, good;—a sort of cream cheese is made here.)

6 Les Nègres.

11 Mansle; here the river Charente is crossed.

14 Churet.

The towers of the cathedral and castle of Angoulême are espied 10 m. off. The cultivation of the vine now becomes general. The wines produced about Angoulême and along the borders of the Charente are of inferior quality, but fit for converting into brandy. The picturesque and broad valley of the Touvres is entered, and that stream is crossed at Pontoux.

A few miles up this stream is the Royal cannon foundery of Ruelle: charcoal is exclusively employed as the fuel for the smelting furnaces, and is abundantly supplied by the neighbouring forests.

Farther on, in the same direction, is La Rochefoucauld, whose castle was the ancient residence of the family of that name, its most noted scion being François, author of the celebrated "Maximes."

It escaped destruction at the Revolution, and still belongs to the same family, though no longer inhabited by them. It is a huge pile, flanked by round, cone-roofed towers at the angles, forming 3 sides of a square, and, with the exception of the antique donjon, was erected in the time of Francis I. A range of arcades serves as a passage along the inner façade, and a curious and richly-ornamented spiral stone staircase leads to the upper stories. Below the castle are very extensive Caves, not now entered, which served as a refuge to the Huguenots, in the wars of Religion. There are similar natural caverns all along the valley of the Tardonère, the largest of which, Les Grottes de Rancogne, are about 3 miles above La Rochefoucauld. They are traversed by a streamlet, and contain some stalactites.

The approach to Angoulême lies through the long suburb de l'Houmeau (in which is the Poste aux Chevaux), and it is not necessary to enter the town at all in proceeding to Bordeaux, unless you intend to stop here, but the inn is in the upper town. A very steep ascent leads from l'Houmeau into

11 Angoulême. (Inns: La Poste, new and good; the landlord's patés, of foies de canards famous; the cuisine excellent:—H. des Etrangers, diligence-house.)

Angoulême, the ancient capital of the Angoumois, now of the dep. de la Charente, occupies a situation, not unlike that of Poitiers, on the top of a high hill, terraced round with remains of the ancient ramparts above, while below it is nearly encircled by the course of the Charente, and by another small stream falling into it. The town is distinguished by far more life, industry, and trade than Poitiers, and possesses, with its suburbs, a population of 16,910 inhab. Though planted on the top of an isolated hill, more than 200 ft. above the Charente, it is most abundantly supplied with fountains of fresh water, pumped up by machinery recently established. Its houses being of a very white stone, easily cut, have a cheerful appearance: it has many new streets and a few old buildings. Its most pleasing features, however, are the series of Terrace-walks running round it, in the place of the old ramparts, and commanding a charming view of the industrious valley, deep below, of the winding Charente fringed with verdure, of the suburbs, and the paper-mills on the river banks, which furnish the staple article of manufacture here. By far the finest portion of these terraces is the Promenade Beaulieu; and a series of walks and shrubberies extend down the slopes below it towards the bottom of the valley. In the midst of them stands a column dedicated, by precipitate loyalty, to the Duchess d'Angoulême in 1815, re-dedicated, since 1830, "A la Liberté."

In the irregular Place, serving for the market, in the centre of the town, stands the old Castle, distinguished by its 3 picturesque feudal towers, and tall donjon, now converted into a prison, and surmounted by the telegraph. It contains a number of vaulted apartments, but possesses nothing of interest, save the recollection that it was the residence of the ancient Counts of Angoulême; that Marguerite de Valois, Queen of Navarre, was born in it,—the most accomplished princess of her day, "La Marguerite des Marguerites," as her brother, François I, called her; and that its walls gave shelter to Marie de Medicis. She retired hither, after her husband's assassination, under the protection of the Duc d'Epernon, governor of the Angoumois, who has been suspected of being the accomplice of Ravaillac; while the queen-mother herself is not free from suspicion—"The death of Henry did not sufficiently surprise her."

The Cathedral is rather a curious than a beautiful edifice, in the Romanesque style, rebuilt, from its foundations, in 1120. It suffered at the Revolution; and till very lately bore over its frontispiece the ill-effaced inscription, "Temple de la Raison," set over it at that period. It is surmounted by a fine tall tower, of 6 rows of semicircular arcades, rising on the N. side. The W. front is in the style of the churches of Italy; almost the whole space being divided by circular arcades, resting on elegant columns, enclosing statues much mutilated, surmounted, in the pediment, by a statue of the Saviour (once supposed to be Jupiter), surrounded by the attributes of the 4 Evangelists. The nave has no side aisles, and its roof is formed of 3 vaulted cupolas, a style of construction not known to the N. of the Loire. At the cross rises an octagonal tower. The choir ends in an apse. Numerous additions and repairs were made to the interior, after the barbarous devastations committed by the Huguenots in 1562 and 1568.

Among modern buildings, the Palais de Justice is by no means contemptible. In the attic has been placed the public Library, containing 14,000 vols., and a small collection of Natural History.

Outside the town, to the N., in the escarped rock below the ramparts, is the Grotte de St. Cybard, a holy hermit, whose real name was Eparchus, who occupied it as his cell, and died here in the 6th century. By the sanctity of his life he caused the foundation of a church and monastery, which extended from the cave to the Charente, and was once much frequented by devout pilgrims, but both are now swept away. In the grotto, which Charlemagne himself approached on bended knees in order to perform his devotions, mass was said daily, down to the time of the Revolution. This oldest Christian monument in Angoulême is respected by its present owner, but no longer serves as a church.

Ausonius makes mention of this town under the name Iculisma, fancifully derived from "In collis summâ," and gradually softened down, as some conjecture, into the modern Angoulême.

Angoulême and the surrounding province were governed, from the 8th century down to 1303, when they were united to France, by a long line of independent counts, 19 in number; first of the race of Taillefer, and, after 1180, of the house of Lusignan. It also belonged to the English, and was some time the residence of the Black Prince after the battle of Poitiers, 1360. One of the town gates, not pulled down until 1808, was named Porte de Chandos, from the brave English knight who built it, while constable of Aquitaine, for Edward III. A house in the Rue de Genève is pointed out as that inhabited by Calvin, who sought refuge here 1533, and taught Greek to maintain himself. The Place de Murier receives its name from a mulberry-tree which stood in the midst of it while it was the convent garden of the Jacobins. During the outrages committed by the Calvinist soldiery, 1562, when they captured and sacked the town, the monk Michel Grillet was hung to its boughs, in the presence of the Admiral Coligny, whose death he is said to have foretold with his dying words, saying, "You shall be thrown out of the window, like Jezebel, and shall be ignominiously dragged through the streets."

Among the remarkable persons natives of this place are Ravaillac, the assassin of Henri IV; Poltrot, who shot the Duc de Guise le Balafré before the walls of Orleans; and Montalambert, the inventor of a system of fortification.

The Naval School, established here at the suggestion of the Duc d'Angoulême 1816, was suppressed 1830, and very judiciously transferred to Brest, and the building in the Faubourg l'Houmeau still remains closed.

The manufactures of Angoulême consist of paper, made in numerous (36?) mills in the neighbouring valleys, and brandy.

Capital patés de perdrix aux trouffes are made here.

The Charente is navigable up to the quay below the town. A Steamer runs to Saintes (R. 62.) 3 times a week.

18¾ m. W. of Angoulême, on the way to Cognac, (R. 62.) is Jarnac, where a handful of Protestants, commanded by the Prince de Condé, engaged the royal army commanded by the Duc d'Anjou, doubling their force in number, and were defeated. Condé fell, after giving the signal for a third charge, which he led, with one arm in a sling, and his leg shattered. Young Henri, Prince of Béarn, his nephew, was a spectator of the bloody affray, but was not permitted to take part in it.

The road to Bordeaux descends from Angoulême into the valley by a series of zigzags, under the Promenade de Beaulieu. About the middle of the stage the ruins of the Abbey of la Couronne are seen on the l., in the midst of a green valley abounding in paper-mills. After escaping destruction at the Revolution, it has been demolished, for the sake of the material, since 1808, and is now reduced to a mere fragment, including the W. front with a fine door-way, and part of a rose-window over it.

13 Roulet.

8 Petignac. The post house is like a little château; beyond it is a steep ascent.

13 Barbezieux (Inns: Poste, Boule d'Or), the only good inn between Angoulême and Bordeaux: dinner in private, 4 fr., with wine.

The high road traverses the boulevard, or promenade, on the outskirts of this little town, of about 2500 inhabitants: it once belonged to the Seigneurs of La Rochefoucauld.

7 Reignac.

7 La Graulle, in a monotonous sandy district of heath and common.

At Chevanceau, a road branches off to Libourne. (R. 71.)

14 La Garde-Montlieu.

6 Chierzac. More common and fir plantations. In this district, and elsewhere in the south, during very hot weather, the oxen wear coats, and the asses are breeched, to protect them from the flies.

13 Cavignac, in the department of the Gironde.

About 1½ m. beyond the village St. André the road reaches the post station, Cubsac, on the rt. bank of the Dordogne, here a broad estuary, formerly crossed in ferry-boats, in which passengers and carriages were embarked. The transit occupied from ¼ to ½ an hour, and was sometimes attended with danger, and always formed a serious interruption to the communication between Bordeaux and the French metropolis. For this disagreeable ferry an iron-wire Suspension Bridge is now substituted, divided into 5 curves, supported on 6 pair of piers, consisting of hollow open columnar shafts or towers of cast iron. The road-way of the bridge is raised 93 ft. above the water, so as to allow vessels of large size to pass under it; and the approaches to it, from either bank, are by a series of lofty stilted arches, 29 in number, on either bank, which have a striking effect. The bridge itself has much the appearance of the Brighton chain pier, and is of slight construction, being warranted to stand no more than 40 years, it is understood. Besides the suspending wire cables, others are attached to the summits of the piers, in the manner of stays or braces, to steady them. The length of the central, or suspension bridge, is 1640 ft., and the 29 arches, on either side, measure 656 ft., making a total length of 2952 ft., or more than ½ a mile: it is 20 ft. wide.

The wire bridge of Cubsac, the longest in France, and, indeed, in Europe, was begun 1835, and finished 1839, at a cost of 3,000,000 fr., by the engineer, Fortuné de Vergèz.

The tolls for passing the bridge are heavy.

The Dordogne joins the Garonne

10 m. below this bridge, and their united waters form the estuary called the Gironde, after which the department is named.

The tongue of land which separates the Dordogne from the Garonne, across which our road lies, is a fertile district, chiefly laid out in vineyards and corn fields, and scattered over with country seats. It is called the "Entre Deux Mers."

The road from Libourne falls in on the l. (R. 71)

9 Carbon Blanc.

The approach to Bordeaux is very striking; the road is carried down, from a considerable height, in gently terraced slopes, winding round the shoulder of the hill, overlooking the broad Garonne, and the city of Bordeaux lining its opposite concave bank. From the foot of the hill a straight avenue, 2 m. long, leads to the magnificent Bridge, one of the finest in Europe, consisting of 17 arches of stone, the walls and spandrils being brick, with stone quoins, 1534 ft. long, traversing the Garonne, from the little suburb La Bastide to the city of Bordeaux.

Until 1821 the Garonne was passed, in the same manner as the Dordogne down to more recent times, by a ferry; and the want of a bridge has confined the city exclusively to the l. bank of the river.

A bridge of wood was begun in the time of Napoleon, but was abandoned soon after for one of stone, which was completed, 1821, by a company of shareholders, who are repaid, by the tolls during 99 years, for their outlay, which amounted to 260,000*l.*, (6½ millions of fr.) The architect was M. Deschamps.

A vaulted passage runs under the roadway, between it and the arches, for the whole length of the bridge; this gives a great height of wall between the crown of the arches and the parapet.

As the French are fond of comparing this bridge with that of Waterloo, the dimensions of both are here given in English ft.

	Length.	Width.	No. of Arches.	Width of Arch.
Bordeaux	1534	47	17	85*
Waterloo	1326	40	9	118

The view of Bordeaux from the bridge is very striking. Opposite the bridge stands the Porte de Bourgogne, erected to commemorate the birth of the Duc de B., grandson of Louis XIV.

11 Bordeaux in Route 73.

ROUTE 65.

POITIERS TO CHATEAUROUX BY ST. SAVIN; WITH EXCURSION TO MONTMORILLON.

119 kilom. = 73½ Eng. m.

This cross road, not much travelled, leads to some interesting antiquities.

23 Chauvigny, a town of 1000 inhabitants, occupies a commanding height on the rt. bank of the Vienne. It was, in feudal times, a strong fortress, and still possesses the ruins of 3 distinct Castles built on the same plan, a square flanked by turrets. The Donjon, on the top of the hill, shows on one side a breach in its wall, made by a battery of cannon in the 16th century, during the wars of Religion, and now filled up with bricks arranged herring-bone fashion. One of the castles, the most modern, probably of the 13th or 14th century, with pointed windows, now serves as a prison. There are many old houses in the upper town dating from the 15th and 16th centuries.

The Church, also in the upper town, is a very interesting Romanesque building, decorated with all the ornaments of Byzantine art externally, and also within; the capitals of its columns being carved with mermaids, monsters, &c., as well as with scriptural subjects.

* Only the 7 central arches have this width, the rest are smaller.

19 St. Savin has a Church decorated, in its porch, nave, and crypt, under the choir, with fresco paintings, representing scriptural subjects from the Creation, the figures as large as life, and tolerably well preserved. Those in the crypt describe the Legend of St. Savin and St. Cyprien, and are of smaller proportions. They are probably the work of Greek or Italian artists in the 11th, or, at earliest, of the 10th century, and are certainly very valuable as monuments of early art. It has been remarked, as a proof of the antiquity, or the Eastern origin, of these frescoes, that the horsemen are represented riding without stirrups. The whole church was originally covered with paintings: those in the choir have been effaced by whitewash! The church itself is a very ancient specimen of Romanesque architecture; it is entered by steps leading down into it, and the W. end seems to have been separated from the rest, so as to form a Narthex, like the gallilee of some English churches. The choir and shallow transepts end in apses.

At Montmorillon, 12 m. S. of St. Savin, "in the court yard of what was the baronial castle, and is now a college, there is an ancient and very curious chapel. Originally, it must have been the domestic chapel of the lords of the adjacent castle, doubtless erected by them, and for their private use. It consists of a subterraneous crypt, which, probably, was the family vault, and an octagonal chapel above it, with a conical roof. Part of this building is in the round style, and part in the pointed. That part which is in the round style may belong to the 11th century. The pointed part cannot be older than the 13th. But the most remarkable feature in this building, and that to which it owes its celebrity, is a group of rudely sculptured figures which occupy a recess above the door-way. Various explanations of this singular group have been offered by the learned, but none of them are satisfactory, and the problem is more difficult to solve, as some of the figures are taken from ordinary life, and some are allegorical."— H. G. K. The most singular and inexplicable, perhaps, are two female figures, the one corpulent, having toads or scarabs hanging from her breasts; the other, meagre, entwined by serpents, and suckling them.

18 Le Blanc.
18 Scoury.
11 St. Gaulthier.
15 Lothiers.
15 Châteauroux. R. 70.

ROUTE 66.

POITIERS TO ROCHEFORT BY NIORT.

132 kilom. = 80 Eng. m.

Poitiers (in Route 64) to 6 Croutelle, on the road to Bordeaux.

17 Lusignan on the Vonne gave its name to the noble family which rescued Jerusalem from the Infidels and for some time occupied its throne. The castle was surprised and razed by the Catholics 1574, and a public walk occupies its site.

12 Villedieu du Perron.

14 St. Maixant, 5500 inhab. on the Sèvre.

10 La Crèche.

13 Niort. (Inn, Maison de Bourgogne, not recommended.) Chef lieu of the dept. of the Deux Sèvres, on the Sèvre Niortaise, 22000 inhab.

The old Castle surmounted by 2 keep towers each flanqued by 8 turrets, remarkable as the birth-place, or at least the cradle of Madame de Maintenon, whose profligate father, Constant d'Aubigny, was confined in it, is now the Maison d'Arrêt.

10 Frontenay.
13 Mauzé.
11 Surgères
10 Muron.
16 Rochefort, in Route 62.

SECTION IV.

LIMOUSIN. — GASCONY. — GUIENNE. — THE PYRENEES. — NAVARRE. — BEARN. — LANGUEDOC. — ROUSILLON.

PRELIMINARY INFORMATION.

SCENERY OF LIMOUSIN — OBJECTS OF INTEREST IN THE PYRENEES — COMPARISON WITH THE ALPS — FORESTS — GAVES — LAKES — PORTS OR PASSES — VALLEYS — CIRQUES OR OULES — A DASH INTO SPAIN — INHABITANTS — CAGOTS — SPORTING — HISTORY — THE ENGLISH IN THE PYRENEES — FROISSART — THE BLACK PRINCE — WELLINGTON — CHARACTERISTICS OF THE CHIEF WATERING PLACES — THE BATHS — WORKS ON THE PYRENEES — DIRECTIONS FOR TRAVELLERS — APPROACHES AND NEAREST ROUTES — STARTING POINTS — SKELETON TOURS — ACCOMMODATIONS — INNS — CONVEYANCES — GUIDES — HORSES — CHAISES À PORTEURS.

ROUTE		PAGE
70	Orleans to Toulouse, by Vierzon, Châteauroux, Limoges, and Montauban	240
71	Limoges to Bordeaux, by Perigueux and Libourne	255
73	The Garonne. — Toulouse to Bordeaux, by Moissac, Agen, Marmande	257
74	The Gironde from Bordeaux, to La Tour de Cordouan. — Wine District of Médoc. — Châteaux Margaux. — Lafitte and Latour	267
76	Bordeaux to Bayonne, St. Jean de Luz, and the Spanish Frontier	273
77	Bordeaux to Bayonne, through Les Grandes Landes	281
78	Bayonne to Pau, by Orthez	283
79	Bordeaux to Auch, by Castel Jaloux and Nérac	284
80	Bordeaux to Pau	285
82	Pau to the Spanish Frontier, by Oleron, and the Val d'Aspe	290
83	Pau to Eaux Bonnes, and Eaux Chaudes. — Pic du Midi d'Ossau, and Spanish Baths of Penticousa	291
85	Pau to Lourdes, Cauterets, Luz, St. Sauveur, Barèges, and Bagnères de Bigorre. — The Mountain Road, with Excursions to the Lac de Gaube, Gavarnie, Brèche de Roland. — Mont Perdu, Pic du Midi, &c.	298
86	Bagnères de Bigorre to Bagnères de Luchon. — Mountain Road, by the Hourquette d'Aspin, Arreau, Col de Peyresordes, and Val de l'Arboust. — Excursion to the Lac de Seculeijo	315
87	Pau to Bagnères de Bigorre, and Bagnères de Luchon, by Tarbes. — Post Road. — Excursions to the Val de Lys, Port de Venasque and Val d'Aran	318
90	Toulouse to Pau, by Auch and Tarbes	331
91	Toulouse to Bagnères de Luchon and Bagnères de Bigorre, by St. Gaudens	332
93	Toulouse to Narbonne, and Marseilles by Carcassonne. — Canal du Midi	333

ROUTE		PAGE
94	Narbonne to Perpignan, Port Vendre, and the Spanish Frontier	336
97	The E. Pyrenees.—Toulouse to Foix and Puycerda. — The Valley of the Ariege. — Vicdessos. — Andorre	339
98	The E. Pyrenees.—Perpignan to Mont Louis and Puycerda, by the Valleys of the Tet and Tech. — Ascent of the Canigou	343

The scenery of Limousin, through which province the following Routes conduct the traveller to the Pyrenees, is thus described in the excellent work of Arthur Young: —

"In regard to the general beauty of a country, I prefer Limousin to every other province in France. It does not depend on any particular feature, but is the result of many. Hill, dale, wood, enclosures, streams, lakes, and scattered farms, are mingled into a thousand delicious landscapes, which set off everywhere this province."

The length of the portion of the chain of the Pyrenees running between the Mediterranean and Bay of Biscay, and forming the boundary line between France and Spain, is estimated at about 270 m. The highest parts of the chain are near the centre, and it descends considerably towards the Mediterranean and the Gulf of Gascony. The highest summits do not occur on the central ridge or main chain, but on the buttresses running out from it to the S., and therefore belong to Spain. Only one summit within the French frontier, the Vignemale, attains an elevation of 11,000 ft., while 3 in the Spanish portion of the chain exceed that measure. The average length of the valleys running up from the plain to the crest of the mountains is about 36 m.

Without doubt some of the finest scenery in France is to be found among the Pyrenees, which, though inferior in height, and on the whole in grandeur of scenery, number of snowy peaks, and area of crystal glaciers, to the Alps, yet possess beauties peculiar to themselves, of which the Alps cannot boast. The sunny atmosphere, which they owe to their more southern latitude, gives a warmth or glow to the landscape which will in vain be sought farther to the N.; and this genial climate, while it banishes perpetual snow to a height of about 9000 ft. (i. e. more than 1000 ft. above the Alpine snow line), also spreads a richness of sylvan decorations over these mountains unparallelled in Swiss scenery. Heights which in a more northern region would either be condemned to nakedness, or to a scanty growth of lichens, are here clothed in verdure to the very top; and precipitous rocks, elsewhere rejecting all vegetation, are tufted in every cranny and fissure with brushwood, especially with box, which thrives and spreads wonderfully.

But the pride and boast and chief charm of the Pyrenees are their vast forests, the seas of undulating foliage which clothe their sides and tops, not merely of dark monotonous fir, but oak and beech: examples of these are presented in the upper part of the Val d'Ossau, near Gabas, in parts of the d'Argelez and Val d'Aure.

The meadows which carpet the lower slopes and bottom of the valleys equal if they do not surpass those of Switzerland in intense verdure produced by irrigation and sunshine, and approximate to the even surface of an English lawn; and while the plains of Languedoc and Provence are parched into a yellow desert, here the hues of spring are prolonged into summer and autumn, and the traveller is constantly refreshed by vernal gales.

The brawling rivers (Gaves is the local name derived from the same Celtic root as our Avon) are remarkable, beyond those of almost any other country, for their excessive purity, and for tints resembling beryl and chrysoprase. The waterfalls are second rate, quite inferior to those of Switzerland; those above Cauterets are pretty, and, perhaps, the finest. That of Gavarnie, the loftiest in Europe but one (in Norway) though 1300 ft. high, is a mere thread of water. Lakes are almost entirely wanting, and here the inferiority of the Pyrenean mountains to those of Switzerland is most decided. The Lacs de Gaube, of Seculeijo (or Lac d'Oo), and the Lac Bleu, though very interesting from the adjuncts of scenery, precipices, and streamlets dashing into them, are mere mountain tarns, yet they are the finest and almost the only sheets of water.

The chain of the Pyrenees has in a considerable degree the character of a vast wall drawn from sea to sea, inasmuch as it preserves an almost unvarying ridge, notched by frequent passes or cols, rarely more than 1000 ft. lower than the summit of the crest which surmounts them. The consequence is, that the passes leading across the chain are generally higher than among the Alps, far higher in proportion to the comparative elevation of the Pyrenees, and that they are much less accessible for high roads; indeed only two are practicable for carriages — the Pass of the Bidassoa, at the W. extremity, close to the Bay of Biscay, and that of the Col de Pertus, at the E., along the shore of the Mediterranean. There are however at least 50 passes known to and used by the shepherds and mountaineers, and most of them practicable on horseback. They are here called "Ports," a very expressive name, for in many instances they are literally doors cut in the crest of the mountains leading from France into Spain. The most striking of these, and well worth the traveller's attention, are the "Brêche de Roland," and the Port de Venasque, the passage of which reveals the grandest, and almost the only, view of the Maladetta, the monarch of the Pyrenees.

The valleys of the Pyrenees run nearly at rt. angles with the great dorsal ridge descending from the central spine into the plain, in a series of basins and gorges: the most considerable are the valleys of the Garonne and Ariège.

The most beautiful are the Val d'Argelez (which no one should omit seeing), Val d'Ossau, and valleys of the Garonne, Adour, and Lys, Val d'Aure, and Val d'Aran.

The most grand gorges are those leading from Pierrefitte to Cauterets and Luz, and that of Mahourat leading to Pont d'Espagne, and the approach to Eaux Chaudes.

Several Pyrenean valleys have a termination quite peculiar to themselves — in a Cirque or Oule (a local word, meaning pot, Latin olla), a vast semicircle, excavated in the mass of the mountain, walled round by precipices of great height, surrounding two-thirds or three-fourths of the basin, and leaving no opening but that by which the waters escape. The finest of these cirques is that of Gavarnie, at the commencement of the Val de Lavedan: its walls are loftiest and most perfect; that of Troumouse at the head of the Val d'Héas is larger, but not so deep: another occurs at the bottom of the Val Estaubé. The nearest approach to this peculiar formation of the vale head in the Alps is at Leuk; but the precipices of the Gemmi, which wall it round, want the semicircular arrangement, as well as the waterfalls, the towers, and cylinders of rock which give the grand character to the scenery of Gavarnie.

The valleys of the Pyrenees are separated from one another by lateral ridges descending like ribs or buttresses from the great chain, over which the communication is maintained by numerous minor cols, called Portillons, or in some parts Hourquettes. Such are the interesting passes of the Tourmalets and of the Hourquettes d'Arreau and d'Aspin.

Most visiters to the Pyrenees make a point of ascending one of the high peaks in the vicinity of the baths, either for the sake of the view, or to say they have been on such or such a peak: hence, "Avez-vous fait quelques ascensions?" is a common inquiry. The mountain which may be ascended with least trouble, and which repays well by its prospect, is the Pic de Bergons, above Luz. The Pic du Midi de Bigorre, conveniently reached from either Barèges or Bagnères de Bigorre, is loftier and more difficult. Less easy still are the Pic du Midi d'Ossau, the Canigou in the E. Pyrenees, and the Brêche de Roland; while the still more lofty Vignemale is no easy task to surmount, and the Mont Perdu is both difficult and dangerous — an exploit for a practised mountaineer; and the Maladetta wears snow on its crest never trodden by human foot until 1842.

A dash into Spain, of three or four days' duration, will add much to the variety and interest of a journey among the Pyrenees. The points whence it may be made with most advantage, are either from Bayonne to St. Sebastian, from Eaux Bonnes or Cauterets to the Baths of Penticousa, or from Luchon to Venasque and the Val d'Aran. Short accounts are given in the following pages of all these excursions. Those who attempt them must be prepared to "rough it;" they will encounter a wild people, rude villages, accommodations of the very worst kind, yet very expensive, paths scarcely passable, and cookery nauseous to those unused to it from oil and garlic. The sudden transition from France to Spain, the total difference of people, language, manners, habitations, food, yields the chief zest to such a journey. An invitation to one of the Spanish Bull-fights, which are held every year in all the large towns of the N. of Spain, may tempt some to penetrate farther into the country. (In that case, we must refer them to the Handbook for Spain.)

The inhabitants of the Pyrenees, composed of various races, interesting for their antiquity, customs, costumes, &c., are worthy of the attention of the traveller. At the W. extremity of the chain, S. of Bayonne, you have the Basques, the aborigines of W. Europe, who have seen Carthaginians, Celts, Romans, Goths, Saracens, pass before them, and still remain in possession of their mountain home, part in France, part in Spain, speaking a language which has nothing in common with any other of Europe. (See R. 76. p. 277.)

The peasantry of Béarn, who occupy the beautiful Val d'Ossau and its tributaries, the land of Henri IV., in the midst of which he spent the years of childhood, are a fine race, retaining much of their primitive simplicity of manners, along with their ancient costumes, the men wearing the berret or cap, like the Lowland bonnet of the Scotch, and a red sash round the waist; the women covering their heads with the red hood or capulet. In the E. Pyrenees, the people of Foix and Rousillon have a considerable resemblance, in character, dress, and language, to the Catalans of Spain.

The proscribed and outcast race, called Cagots, seem to exist more in tradition than in reality at present among the Pyrenees The writer never met with any during his travels in these mountains; though he heard of families who had intermarried with them, or were descended from them. The ban of caste no longer hangs over them. They are said to have been weak in body and mind, low in stature, sallow in countenance, and to have lived only in the remotest valleys, shunning their fellow-men. There are various theories to account for their origin and name, none of them satisfactory — for example, that they are the descendants of the Goths, dispossessed of Aquitaine by Clovis — "chiens de Goths," whence Cagots, by a somewhat forced derivation. 2d. That they sprung from the Saracens, who stayed behind in France after their defeat by Charles Martel. 3d. That they were lepers, banished from human haunts for fear of infection; or, what seems probable, fugitives tainted with heresy and driven apart from the community by the prejudices and aversion of the Romish priesthood. They are now nearly lost through intermixture with the mass of the population.*

The Sportsman may still find some occupation among the Pyrenees in the pursuit of the bear, the ibex or bouquetin, and the izzard or chamois, though these animals are growing rare. The bouquetin, especially, is almost extinct; if any where, he may be found on the Maladetta. The izzard is not uncommon, and the best localities for enjoying this chase are Eaux Bonnes, where are some capital guides (see R. 83.), the snow-fields of the Vignemale, the Mont Perdu, and the Maladetta.

The izzard is hunted either by stalking, in the manner in which the red deer is stalked, though with much more difficulty and danger, amidst precipices, glaciers, and snow-fields, until, after a tedious pursuit, the huntsman may have the chance of a steady shot.

The other method resorted to is that of driving the animals by the guides and mountain shepherds towards the spot where the chasseur is posted. Success in this case entirely depends on the perfect knowledge possessed by the guides of the habits and haunts of the izzard.

The rivers are so much netted as greatly to interfere with the sport of angling; a scientific fisherman, however, would doubtless find full scope for the exercise of his rod among its innumerable gaves and mountain streams.

History and Antiquities. — The passage of these mountains by Hannibal, and afterwards by Cæsar, with large armies, are the earliest events of importance connected with the Pyrenees. The pass by which they crossed was that of Pertus, at the east end of the chain. Charlemagne's advance into Spain, in 778, was through that of Roncesvaux, where he received the memorable check so celebrated in history and romance, chiefly at the hands of the hardy mountaineers, the Basques, who fell upon his rear guard while entangled in the defiles, and killed many of his "paladins and peers," amongst them the renowned Roland, who has left his name upon the highest mountain ridge of the chain in the so-called Brêche, cleft through the rock, according to the tradition, by a swashing blow of his celebrated sword Durandal. The valleys and passes of the Pyrenees, like those of all other border countries, abound in castles and watch towers, relics of feudal times, when war and rapine was the business of a great portion of the inhabitants, especially of all who claimed to be noble or gentle. Those who would know something of the history of these ruined hill forts, and of the mode of life of those who occupied them in the 14th century, of the marauding expeditions which went out from them on border forays, to harry the cattle or fair fields of some neighbouring chief, of ambuscades to rob the burgess of the neighbouring towns of his merchandise, or capture some wealthy ecclesiastic or seigneur of eminence, and clap him into the deep dungeon until a ransom was paid, must refer to the delightful pages of Sir John Froissart's Chronicles, the oldest and best hand-book for the Pyrenees, which he traversed and threaded in various directions, picking up anecdotes for his history.

* The Editor is desirous of obtaining information from personal research, not hearsay, respecting the present state and numbers of the Cagots; if, indeed, any of them do exist.

In his time many of these strongholds were held by English garrisons for the Black Prince, the province of Gascony, with Bigorre, having been ceded to the English as part of the ransom of the French king John, captured at Azincourt. The tradition of the country, indeed, attributes the building of some of the castles to the Black Prince. He led an English army into Navarre, to reinstate Pedro the Cruel on the throne of Spain, through the pass of Ronceval, the scene of the "dolorous rout" of Charlemagne.

Four centuries and a half later, the Pyrenees once more became connected with English History, and in a more glorious cause.

"Many of these romantic heights are endeared to an Englishman by the recollection of gallant deeds of British valour performed at the close of the Peninsular war."—S. To visit the scenes of the masterly passage of the Bidassoa, and of the Adour below Bayonne, the spot where the fatal sortie took place under the walls of that fortress, the heights of Orthez, and those where the hard-contested but decisive and final battle of Toulouse was fought, cannot but add to the interest of the journey. It will augment the satisfaction of an Englishman on visiting the theatre of the war, to know that the British commander, so far from displaying the insolence of a conqueror on entering the French territory, took measures to repress rigidly all acts of plunder on the part of his troops, by careful discipline. No inconsiderable difficulty was at first experienced in restraining the Spaniards smarting under the oppression and wrongs inflicted on their own fatherland by the soldiery of the country which they then entered in triumph, and expecting to avenge upon its inhabitants the injuries they themselves had suffered. The firmness of the British commander, however, succeeded in alleviating, as far as possible, the horrors of war to the French; and the two following extracts, one from a general order of the Duke issued after the passage of the Bidassoa, the other from a letter written by him to a Spanish officer, will show how great care he took to effect this.

General Order.—"The Commander of the Forces is particularly desirous that the inhabitants should be well treated, and private property must be respected, as it has been hitherto.

"The officers and soldiers of the army must recollect that their nations are at war with France, solely because the ruler of the French nation will not allow them to be at peace, and is desirous of forcing them to submit to his yoke; and they must not forget, that the worst of the evils suffered by the enemy in his profligate invasion of Spain and Portugal have been occasioned by the irregularities of the soldiers, and their cruelties authorised and encouraged by their chiefs towards the unfortunate and peaceful inhabitants of the country.

"To revenge this conduct on the peaceable inhabitants of France would be unmanly and unworthy of the nations to whom the Commander of the Forces now addresses himself; and, at all events, would be the occasion of similar and worse evils to the army at large, than those which the enemy's army have suffered in the Peninsula; and would, eventually, prove highly injurious to the public interests. * * * *

To General ——, a Spanish Officer.—"I did not lose thousands of men to bring the army under my command into the French territory, in order that the soldiers might plunder and ill-treat the French peasantry, in positive disobedience to my orders; and I beg that you and your officers will understand, that I prefer to have a small army that will obey my orders, and preserve discipline, to a large one that is disobedient and undisciplined; and that, if the measures which I am obliged to adopt to enforce obedience and good order occasion the loss of men, and the reduction of my force, it is totally indifferent to me; and the fault rests with those who, by the neglect of their duty, suffer their soldiers to commit disorders which must be prejudicial to their country."—Despatches.

HOT SPRINGS—CHARACTER OF THE WATERING PLACES—BATHS IN THE PYRENEES.

The bounty with which nature has poured forth, throughout the whole range of the Pyrenean mountains, mineral sources of healing quality, of various kinds, adapted to the various ills to which flesh is heir, is truly surprising, and an interesting natural phenomenon. It has been calculated that in the whole chain there are not less than 200, many of them of a high temperature.

It has been observed, that they usually issue forth to light near the junction of the primitive rocks, as granite, gneiss, or slate, with some other formation, chiefly limestone.

The value of these natural medicines was not unknown to the Romans, traces of whose constructions have been discovered near more than one of the hot sources.

Here follows a list and a brief character of a few of the principal watering places, beginning from the W., with a notice of the nature of the mineral waters attached. The list might be greatly extended, and very many springs gush forth unseen and unknown, "carent quia vate sacro," i. e. because they have found no literary M. D. to celebrate them in an 8vo volume.

Eaux Bonnes. — A fashionable resort, consisting of a row of eighteen or twenty fine tall houses, chiefly modern, and Parisian in their style, and rather expensive, in a wild mountain nook. The water is sulphureous. It is recommended for those afflicted with complaints in the lungs.

Eaux Chaudes. —Water sulphureous, nearly like Eaux Bonnes, from which it is only 3 m. distant; more homely accommodation, and visitors less stylish.

Cauterets. — Sulphureous water. A neat little mountain town, in an upland valley surrounded by colossal peaks. Plenty of accommodation and good; also a place of fashionable resort. In autumn frequented by many Spaniards. Climate bracing, if not cold, from the elevation of its site. Excursions numerous. Its waters and site are considered efficacious in bronchial complaints and rheumatism.

St. Sauveur — Feebly sulphureous. A mere watering-place of 1½ dozen lodging-houses.

Barèges. — A complete hospital, thronged with miserable invalids; inferior accommodation; a poor village in a dreary gorge, which nothing but the hope of recovering health would render endurable beyond an hour or two: yet the efficacy of its waters is astonishing, and in a medical sense it deserves its celebrity, more extended over Europe than that of any other Pyrenean bath. It is often quite full in the season, and lodgings dear. A sharp atmosphere, owing to its great elevation.

Bagnères de Bigorre. — Saline springs; weak; one ferruginous spring. A considerable town, something more than a mere watering-place, seated just within the roots of the Pyrences on the verge of the plain, and not much raised above it; warm climate. Various amusements; pleasant excursions. The tepid baths are efficacious only for slight complaints: the waters are not powerful remedies.

Bagnères de Luchon. — Seated in the bottom of a basin surrounded by mountains; resorted to for pleasure as well as cure. Its waters are sulphureous and hot—efficacious in rheumatic complaints or cutaneous affections. There are charming excursions in its vicinity.

At every French watering-place is a medical inspector appointed by the government, and invalids intending to take a course of the waters had better put themselves in communication with him. He will assist them respecting lodgings, and assign to them a fixed hour for bathing, which they will retain during the whole time of their stay, a measure often indispensable during the season, owing to the number of bathers, to obtain access to the bath at all.

The Bath Houses (Etablissements Thermals) of the Pyrenees are very far behind those of Germany in orderly and medical arrangement; the waters, in many cases, losing some of their properties in their passage from the source to the baths. But their chief inferiority is in want of cleanliness. The cabinets des bains are dark hot cells; the baths themselves, though of marble, mere troughs, calculated to inspire disgust in those who either do not need, or are not thoroughly convinced of their sanative power.

Works relating to the Pyrenees. — The best of all the descriptions of the Pyrenees are the works of Ramond (the Saussure of these mountains), "Observations dans les Pyrenées," and "Voyages au Mont Perdu;" with Vayse de Villiers, 2 volumes of Itineraire; and Charpentier's Geological Essai, &c., now somewhat supplanted by the more recent geological papers by Elie de Beaumont and Dufresnoy, in the Transactions of the French Geological Society. In English, we have Mrs. Ellis's very pleasant little volume, Lady Chatterton's charming work, more recent and more comprehensive, and the Hon. Erskine Murray's "Summer in the Pyrenees," which relates especially to the little-visited valleys in the E. part of the chain.

The "Letters from the Pyrenees" of Mr. Paris, a hardy and intrepid pedestrian, have shown the way into some of the most remote valleys rarely visited, and never yet described by any English writers.

DIRECTIONS FOR TRAVELLERS IN THE PYRENEES.

Approaches and most direct Routes.

1. Southampton to Havre, steamboat; Havre to Rouen, up the Seine, steamer; Rouen to Paris, up the Seine or railway (1843); Paris to Orleans (Railway, 1843); Orleans to Tours, down the Loire, by steamer; Tours to Bordeaux, land journey of 3 days.

Now that the Railways from Rouen to Paris and from Paris to Orleans are completed, this is a speedy and agreeable route, perhaps the most eligible of all.

2. Southampton to Bordeaux, by steamer, once a fortnight in summer; passage 60 or 70 hours.* Bordeaux to Pau, a land journey of about 125 m., 2 or 3 days' posting, 18 hours' diligence; or up the Garonne to Langon, and thence by land to Pau.

3. Southampton to St. Malo, steamer; St. Malo to Nantes, land journey of 3 days; Nantes to Bordeaux by steamer, or by land through Rochefort.

4. Paris, Orleans, Limoges, Toulouse, Bagnères, a long and uninteresting land journey from Orleans.

5. Paris to Chalons sur Saône, by steam; thence to Lyons, Avignon, and Beaucaire, to Nismes and Cette, by railway; to Narbonne by steamer; by canal to Toulouse; a land journey thence of nearly 90 m. to Bagnères.

* This steamer does not run regularly.

The best starting points for making the tour of the Pyrenees are Pau for those coming from the W., and Toulouse for travellers approaching from the E. Those who do not intend to make a permanent stay at any of the watering places, should dismiss their heavy baggage before they plunge into the mountains, sending it on by Roulage, from the one extreme point of their intended tour to the other, from Pau to Toulouse, or vice versâ.

The Brunnen of the Pyrenees, ensconced each in its own beautiful valley, form good halting places for the passing traveller who visits these mountains merely from curiosity to explore their beauties, and he may thus terminate almost every day's journey in a comfortable hotel, or at least in tolerable quarters. Almost every valley is penetrated by a good carriage road, but it stops at a certain distance, without surmounting the mountain ridge, or penetrating into Spain, except the two extreme passes at the E. and W. ends of the chain. As there are few carriage roads over the lateral ridges from one valley into another, those who travel only in carriages must retrace their steps down the valleys. Pedestrians and equestrians (and the only way to see the Pyrenees to advantage is on foot or horseback) may pass, in most instances, by foot or bridle-paths, out of one valley into another across the minor ridges which separate them, and thus enjoy some of the finest scenery without going twice over the same ground. The great chain can only be crossed in the same way, by bridle or foot-paths, over some of the many Ports or Cols, more than 50 of which are enumerated between the Bay of Biscay and the Mediterranean.

SKELETON TOUR OF THREE OR FOUR WEEKS, TO INCLUDE THE MOST INTERESTING OBJECTS IN THE W. PYRENEES: —

Pau. Starting point to —
Eaux Bonnes et Chaudes.
* Pic du Midi d'Ossau.
* Col de Tortes.
* Val d'Azun.
Argelez.
Cauterets.
* Pont d'Espagne, Lac de Gaube.
[or from * Eaux Chaudes to Penticousa in Spain, by Pont d'Espagne to Cauterets.]
Gorge of Pierrefitte.
Luz, or St. Sauveur.
Gavarnie.
* Brèche de Roland, back to Luz.
* Val d'Héas.
* Vignemale.
Barèges.
* Tourmalet.
* Pic du Midi de Bigorre.
Bagnères de Bigorre.
* Lac Bleu.
Hourquette d'Aspin.
* Arreau.
* Tramesaigues and the Val d'Aure.
* Port de Peyresourdes.
* Lac de Seculeijo.
Bagnères de Luchon.
Val de Lys.
* Port de Venasque, Venasque, Viella.
* St. Beat, in Val d'Aran.
* Toulouse.

N. B. This mark * denotes places which cannot be reached in carriages, but only on horseback or foot.

CARRIAGE TOUR BY POST ROADS: —

Pau. Eaux Bonnes et Chaudes.
Louvie, Lestelle, Lourdes, Argelez, Cauterets.
Pierrefitte, Luz, Barèges.
Lourdes, Bagnères de Bigorre, Valley of Grip, Arreau (? no posting).
Lannemezan, Cierp, Bagnères de Luchon.
Cierp, St. Beat.
St. Gaudens.
Toulouse.

N. B. Ladies may be carried up to most of the points of interest in a chaise à porteur.

COMPLETE ITINERARY OF THE PYRENEES FROM BORDEAUX TO PERPIGNAN.

Days.	Night Quarters.	Objects of Interest.
1	Mont de Marsan.
2 3	Bayonne.	Citadel (Sortie). Embankments to turn the course of the Adour. — St. Pierre d'Arruby. — Bieritz.
4 5	St. Sebastian and back, by Diligence.	Interesting ride, through scene of the war in Spain. — Irun and Hernani, curious Spanish towns. — See Citadel of St. S. and walk to Passages.
6	St. Jean Pied de Port.	Inn, Soleil.
7 8	Roncesvalles, 15 m. from St. Jean.	Arrange about passport and procure a guide and horse at St. Jean. It will take a day to go, and the same to return. — Lodge at the Abbey.
9	Oleron.	By Mauleon, a Basque town, and Tardetz.
10	Val d'Aspe.	Bedous, best sleeping place, but bad.— Take provisions — at least white bread.
11	Eaux Chaudes: Val d'Ossau.	Cross from Escot by the Col de Marie Blanche, and Plan de Benou (the bed of a former lake), to Bielle in Val d'Ossau.
12 13	Eaux Bonnes.	Ascent of Pic du Midi d'Ossau.
14	Pau.	By Diligence. Or, if you do not wish to visit Pau, cross Col de Tortes and descend Val d'Azun to Argelez.
15	Cauterets.	By Lourdes, (Argelez, ascend Val d'Azun, as far as Pouy le Hun).—St. Savin.
16	Cauterets.	Ascend Monné; 10 hours up and down.
17	Penticosa.	Visit, on the way, the Pont d'Espagne and Lac de Gaube.
18	Eaux Bonnes.	By the Case de Broussettes.
19	Argelez.	By Col de Tortes and the beautiful Val d'Azun, 12 hours' walk.
20	Luz.	Pic de Bergons. — St. Sauveur.
21	Luz.	Gavarnie and Brèche de Roland. If Val d'Héas also, must sleep at Gavarnie and scale the Brèche next day.
22	Grip or Bagnères de Bigorre.	By Barèges, which may be seen en passant. Turn off at foot of Tourmalet, and ride up by the Lac d'Oncet to the top of the Pic du Midi. Sleep at Grip, if unable to reach Bagnères. Must start early.
23 24	Bagnères de Bigorre.	See marble works. — Baths. — Walks. — Visit Lac Bleu.
25	Arreau.	Ascend Penne de l'Hyeris. Cross Hourquette d'Arreau.

* Compiled from the notes of J. J., a most experienced traveller in the Pyrenees, obligingly communicated to the Editor.

Days.	Night Quarters.	Objects of Interest.
26 27	Aragnouet or Hospice de Coubise; miserable quarters.	Ascend Val d'Aure by Vielle, beyond which it splits into several branches. That called Val d'Aragnouet and Gorge de Couplan contains magnificent mountain scenery, forests, cascades. — Return to Arreau.
28	Bagnères de Luchon.	By Val de Louron, Port de Peyresordes, and Lac d'Oo. If time admits, ascend by Scala to upper Lake.
29	Bagnères de Luchon.	Val de Lys.—Go or return by Sopra Bagnères.
30	Luchon or Venasque.	Port de Venasque—Trou du Taureau—returning by Port de Picade, to Luchon. N. B. This excursion may be extended to Venasque, and round the Maladetta to Vitallez and Viella.
31	Val d'Aran : Lez.	By Port de Portillon to Œil de Garonne. — Castel Leon. — Bososte. — Sleepat Baths of Lez.
32	Cierp or Luchon.	Below Lez the finest part of Val d'Aran. —St. Beat.
33	St. Bertrand de Comminge.	Inn in Haute Ville. — See the church and remains of Lugdunum Convenarum below the town.—Ride up Val de Barrouse to Mauleon. The mountains are pierced with caverns.
34	St. Gaudens.	Visit la Basse Grotte de Gargas, 5 m. from St. Bertrand near Tyberan. — Cross the Neste to St Gaudens.
34	St. Girons; poor Inn.	By Diligence to St. Martory, where hire a horse to St. Girons, on the Sallat, a bad cross road, but practicable for vehicles.
35	Foix.	By Remont and La Bastide de Seron.
36	Tarascon.	Visit Iron Mines of Vic de Sos.
37 38	Ax or Mt. Louis.	Cross to Puycerda and Bourg Madame by Port de Morens. Arrange with the Douane to take a horse across the frontier. Sleep at Bourg Madame or at Cabannes under the walls of Mt. Louis.
39	Prades.	Ride by Olette down Vale of Tet.
40	Prades.	Ascend Canigou : must start early. Next day to Perpignan and Narbonne.

CONVEYANCES. — ACCOMMODATION FOR TRAVELLERS.

Diligences run regularly from Bordeaux and Bayonne to Pau and Tarbes, from Toulouse to Bagnères and Tarbes, which is the point of concentration for conveyances from all directions; and in summer a constant communication is kept up between all the watering-places. The diligences, however, are ill appointed, and very slow, and the routes they follow exceedingly circuitous. They are of use to the pedestrian in conveying his luggage from place to place.

Inns are far inferior to those in the German watering-places; the best are at Pau, Eaux Bonnes, Cauterets, Luz, and Bagnères de Bigorre (by far the best), but they have all the fault of filth. Those at Barèges and Luchon are inferior.

The charges vary much, especially for rooms, according to the season, rising exorbitantly when the places are full. Provisions are cheap. — Bed, 1f. 10s. to 2f.; dinner (table d'hôte), 3f.; breakfast à la fourchette, 2f.; tea or coffee, 1f. 10s. On ordinary occasions the traveller's expenses ought not to exceed 8f. per diem; and if he stop a week or longer in an hotel, he may easily bargain for 6 f. The chance traveller is often asked 3, 4 or 5 f. for the worst bed-room for a single night during the season.

Expences at Bagnères de Bigorre.

	Fr.	cent.
Board and lodging at an hotel for a month or six weeks, per diem -	5 — 6	0
Calèche and 2 horses - - -	16 — 18	0
A horse, exclusive of feed - - -	3 — 4	0
,, ,, for a month - -	60 — 80	0
A room in the town - - - -	1f. 50c. to 2f.
Bath at a fixed hour - - - -	1	0
Warm linen - - - - -	0	10
Chairmen (porteurs) - - - -	0	40

M. LEMONNIER.

Izzard venison, game, ortolans, truffles, mountain trout, green figs, and strawberries, are among the delicacies which await the traveller in the Pyrenees.

"The remote valleys — Val d'Aran, Val d'Aure and all those on the Spanish side are miserably off for inns: travellers should always take provisions thither, or at least white bread, as the rye bread, which can alone be procured, is apt to disagree with strangers." — J. J.

Riding horses, or rather ponies, very unprepossessing to look at for the most part, yet hardy and capable of work, and well used to the mountains, are kept at all the watering-places. The charges for them are moderate, viz. 5 f. a day, including the feed, or 3 f. paying the forage, which it is not advisable to do. It is the custom of the French visitors at the baths to unite in large parties, and invade some quiet valley, or interesting point of view, in troops of cavalry 50 or 60 strong, and to establish there a pic-nic. Very little regard is paid by these riotous assemblages to the beauties of nature. Awakening the echoes with the loud cracks of the whip with which they urge on their jaded hacks, they scour along the rough roads, up hill and down dale, attired in the most fantastic costume — men and women wearing the red sashes of the peasantry, and broad-brimmed felt hats; while even the ladies assume neat white pantaloons, sometimes set off with boots and spurs.

Guides. — There are very excellent and trustworthy professional guides, well acquainted with the mountains, and many of them capital mountaineers and skilful sportsmen; though not, perhaps, so good as the guides of Switzerland or Savoy. The best are met with at Eaux Bonnes, Cauterets, Luz, Bagnères de Bigorre, and Luchon. A guide receives 5 f. a day, feeding and lodging himself. A horse must be provided for him, unless the traveller is willing to be retarded by his following on foot.

For return money, 4 f. a day each for horse and man, until the guide can reach his home from the place where he is dismissed, is the fair allowance; but 5 f. are generally asked.

Chaises à Porteur.—There is scarcely an excursion off the high road, however distant, or a mountain-top, or other spot, however difficult of access, which ladies may not reach, by the aid of a chair on poles. Each lady will require from 4 to 6 chairmen; the cost is 15 f. a day, and 3 or 4 f. pour boire. This conveyance has been pronounced by a lady traveller "at once the gentlest, safest, and most agreeable mode of conveyance imaginable. The chairmen will go any where and everywhere; and instead of being rocked and jolted in a dislocating machine, those who cannot walk, and fear to ride, are carried about like petted children, without the risk of fatigue or the probability of danger."— Mrs. Boddington.

ROUTE 70.*

ORLEANS TO TOULOUSE BY CHATEAUROUX, LIMOGES, AND MONTAUBAN.

563 kilom. = 349 Eng. m.

Malleposte to Limoges in 20 hours; thence to Toulouse in 25 hours.

This is not an interesting road. A railway is projected to Vierzon.

An avenue of trees leads from the bridge of Orleans to the suburb, St. Marceau, abounding in country-houses; and a little farther on, the industrious village of Olivet (3,250 inhabitants) is reached. Here the river Loiret is crossed by a bridge, about 2 m. below its source, and 5 or 6 above its termination in the Loire. The Château of La Source, the residence of the banished Lord Bolingbroke, near this is described in R. 48. Below the bridge, between it and the Château de Ponty, on the l. bank, it is pretended that the assassination of the Duc de Guise by Poltrot took place (see p. 176.): he was conveyed to Caubray, where he breathed his last.

Our road, as far as Vierzon, traverses the district of La triste Sologne, noted for its barrenness; a large part of it being waste land, heath, and common; a dead flat of hungry sandy gravel, the surfaces lightly varied, and the scenery monotonous. The name Sologne (Segalonia) has been derived from "segale," seigle, barley, the crop chiefly produced on its unprofitable soil. (?)

21 La Ferté St. Aubin. At the entrance of this village, on the l., stands the Château of Lowendahl, named after a Danish general who served in the armies of France, along with his friend Marshal Saxe, and was made Maréchal de France for his share in the capture of Bergen-op-Zoom. It now belongs to the Prince d'Essling, son of Marshal Massena. It is a low building, surrounded by water. The name Ferté, an old form of fortifié, denotes the existence, in ancient times, of a castle, embattled and fortified by royal permission, granted to the seigneur.

12 Les Gyons, Department Loire et Cher.

11 Nouan le Fuzelier.

13 Salbris.

9 La Loge.

14 Vierzon (Inn, H. des Messageries), a town of the Department Cher, and of the ancient province of Berry, enlivened by the Canal de Berry, which passes through it, running side by side with the river Cher. By means of it the iron of Berry, manufactured in furnaces not far distant from the town, is exported; and coal is brought hither to smelt it. The population of Vierzon amounts to 4,700. Here the road to Bourges

* The Editor has not travelled this route beyond Vierzon and will be glad of corrections or additional information from those who have.

strikes off to the l. (R. 103.) Its Cathedral is one of the finest in France. At Vierzon, the tiresome Sologne has terminated; the valley of the Cher is rather cheerful, and on its borders are some vineyards. The Evre and the Cher are crossed on quitting Vierzon.

10 Massay.

17 Vatan, 12 m. N. W. of this is the Château de Valençay, long the residence of M. de Talleyrand; Napoleon used it as a prison, in which he shut up Ferdinand VII. from 1808 to 1814. The château was built in the reign of Francis I., from designs of Philibert de l'Orme, but has been much altered.

13 Maison Neuve.

At Bourg Dieu, or Déols, situated within 1½ m. of Chateauroux, are the ruins of an ancient monastery, and a church containing, in a crypt under the altar, a curiously carved marble sarcophagus.

17 Châteauroux. (Inns: La Poste, (Ste. Catherine) clean and people attentive; H. de France.) This town, chief lieu of the Department Indre, containing a population of 13,847, is of little interest to the traveller, but of considerable industrial importance, owing to its extensive cloth manufactures, the sale of which is estimated at 4 millions of francs yearly. The wools of Berry are almost exclusively used in their fabrication. Some trade is also carried on in iron, there being more than 40 iron furnaces in the department. The Castle, on an eminence above the Indre, close beside the modern préfecture, is a gloomy building flanked by turrets, probably of the 16th century. It was the prison, for 23 years, of the unfortunate Clémence de Maillé, Princesse de Condé and niece of Richelieu, who here ended a life of suffering, 1694. The Grand Condé, her husband, repaid her devotion to him and ill-requited affection, by procuring from Louis XIV. an order for her imprisonment; and his last dying request to the king was, that she should never be set free. Her grave, in the church of St. Martin, was violated 1793. The town owes its name to an older château, built in the 10th century by one Raoul de Déols. One of the old town gates, a venerable structure, still remains.

General Bertrand, who accompanied Napoleon to St. Helena, was a native of Chateauroux.

Diligences go hence to Bourges, and to Tours by Loches. (R. 56.)

15 Lottier, a dreary country of heath to 15 Argenton, a town of 4000 inhabitants, on the Creuse; it had once a large castle flanked by ten high towers, dismantled by Louis XIV., and farther reduced to ruin in recent times.

14 Le Fay.

19 Ville au Brun.

17 Morterol.

12 Chanteloube.

15 Maison Rouge.

13 LIMOGES (Inns: Boule d'Or, dirty; H. Richelieu not much better; H. de Perigord), the capital of the ancient province of Limousin, at present chef lieu of the Department Haute Vienne, is a commercial and manufacturing town, situated on the rt. bank of the Vienne, and contains a population of 27,611.

It is very picturesque in its ancient street architecture, but has few curiosities to show to the passing stranger. The Revolution swept away the greater number of its churches, many of which were very curious from their antiquity. Of those which remain the most interesting are

The Cathedral of St. Etienne, begun in the 13th century, and slowly continued down to the 16th, when the work came to a stand; and the building has since remained a mere fragment consisting of the Choir, the N. transept, and two compartments of the nave, now blocked up by a common partition wall, while at the spot to which it ought to have extended rises an isolated belfry, now in a very insecure condition, separated by a wide gap from the rest of the edifice. Under this tower is a Romanesque porch belonging to an older cathedral. The church is built of granite, and terminates in an apse. The interior is not remarkable in itself, but contains a Jubé, or rood-loft, removed, without reason, 1789, from its proper place, between the choir and nave, to one side of the nave. It is a curious jumble of flamboyant Gothic ornaments and tracery, with sculpture in the style of the Renaissance: it bears the date 1543. It has been seriously mutilated, and its niches robbed of their statues, but contains curious bas-reliefs, among which are represented the Labours of Hercules. Its construction is attributed to Bishop Langeac, whose tomb is remarkable for the richness and elegance of its decorations, far superior to those of the Jubé. It was prepared for him before his death, 1541, and includes some admirable bas-reliefs, well worth examination in spite of their mutilations; among them one, representing "Death on the White Horse," is much praised. Two other monuments, that of Bishop Regnault de la Porte, of the 14th century, and of Bernard Brun, his nephew, deserve notice.

St. Michel-aux-Lions is the most conspicuous object in the town, owing to its tall and graceful tower and spire, planted on the highest ground, surmounting the other buildings. This church, erected 1364, is named from the rudely sculptured figures of lions which ornament its porch; the lightness and height of the 8 lofty pillars supporting the roof are alone remarkable in the interior.

An old Cross of granite, in front of the church of St. Aurelian, deserves mention for the elaborate workmanship bestowed on it, which has recently been concealed under a coat of oil paint.

The Episcopal Palace is a handsome building of granite, with a fine Garden attached to it.

Although Limoges was an important place in Roman times, under the names Lemovices and Augustoritum, there are no remains of Roman buildings. The only trace of the amphitheatre, to which Molière alludes in M. de Pourceaugnac, Act. I. Scene VI., is the name Les Arênes given to a burial-ground. Its site is nearly covered by the Place d'Orsay, on one side of which runs a terrace whence there is a view over the valley of the Vienne. A Latin name "Aqua lenis," is said to be retained in the Fontaine Aigoulene, and its water is supplied through a Roman conduit.

The ancient fortifications of Limoges have been thrown down, planted, and converted into boulevards and public walks; nothing therefore remains as a relic of that terrible siege (1370) and capture by assault of the place by the Black Prince, who, irritated at its revolting from him, through the treachery of its bishop, swore by the soul of his father that he would have it back again. Too ill to ride on horseback, he directed the operations from a litter, and having forced a breach by blowing up a tower, entered through it, and denying quarter to its wretched inhabitants, allowed 3000 men, women, and children, to be massacred, a blot on the fair fame of his heroic career, the verge of which he had already reached, for the hand of death was upon him, and he breathed his last six years after.

Limoges is distinguished by having been the birth-place of the upright chancellor d'Aguesseau, born 1688. Vergniaud, the republican orator, the leader of the Girondins, beheaded by Robespierre, 1793, Marshal Jourdan, the conqueror at Fleurus, and Dupuytren, the surgeon, were also natives. Limoges likewise produced in the 15th and 16th centuries a series of artists, among whom the names of Laudin, Noel, Leonard, Courtois, Rexmore, are conspicuous, eminent for the beautiful paintings in enamel, which they produced, still so highly esteemed all over Europe. Nayllier, the last master in this genre of art, died 1765, and the art died with him. It appears to have originated as early as the 12th century, but was at its acme in the time of Francis I. The private cabinets of M. Germeau and M. Maurice Ardint of Limoges contain some very remarkable specimens of enamels.

The Manufacture at present most prevalent here is that of porcelain, due to the discovery in this neighbourhood (at St. Yrieix) of the kaolin, or pure white porcelain earth, consisting of the decomposed felspar, arising from gneiss, which alone furnishes a fit material for the manufacture. The substance appears to owe its origin not to a mere disintegration of the gneiss, but to an electro-chemical decomposition, and combination with neighbouring rocks, especially such as are ferruginous. Sèvres is supplied hence with the kaolin, and nearly 2000 persons are employed in and about Limoges in making china. There are also some cotton and woollen mills.

The Limousin horses are a celebrated breed, in much request for the French cavalry; they are reared in the prairies bordering on the Vienne.

A malleposte goes hence to Toulouse, another to Perigueux, Auch, and Pau.

Diligences to Toulouse, Bordeaux, Poitiers, Angoulême, Clermont, Moulins.

The road from Limoges to Bordeaux, by Perigueux, is described in Route 71.

At the town St. Junien, 18 m. from Limoges on the way to Angoulême is a very curious church of the 11th century, containing at the back of the high altar a curious sarcophagus of white marble, adorned with reliefs in the Byzantine style of art. It contains the relics of the saint, much visited by devout pilgrims. In the lower part of the town near the bridge is a chapel of the 15th century of Notre Dame; and 1 m. out of the town, on the borders of the Vienne, are the ruins of St. Amand. M. Mérimée observed in the transept a basin hollowed out of the rock, supplied by a spring of running water, into which little pieces of bread had been cast by the peasants, as offerings to St. Amand, who is believed still to work miracles, though his shrine has been destroyed for ages. This was in 1836-7.

At Boisseuil 7 m. from Limoges we leave about ½ m. to the rt. the ruined Castle of Chalusset, a curious example of the art of fortification in the middle ages, situated on an isolated rock at the junction of two streams. It must have been very strong both by its natural position and its outworks. It has been referred to the 12th century.

21 Pierre Buffière. Arthur Young praises much the beauty and variety of the country to Brives, hill and valley, a quick succession of landscapes.

11 Magnac.

12 Masseré (department Corrèze).

15 Uzerche, a picturesque little town on a conical hill, converted into a peninsula by the bend which the Vezère makes round it. It has a curious church on the crest of the hill, surrounded at the E. end by 5 apsidal chapels. Under it is a crypt, containing the tomb of St. Coronat, in a niche closed in front by a wooden railing. Insane persons are shut up within it for a night, in the belief that they will thereby recover their reason.

The road to Tulle here turns off to the l.

About 10 m. W. of Uzerche is the Château de Pompadour, anciently the residence of a noble family, several of whom were governors of the province of Limousin, whose name was never sullied, until on the extinction of their line (1722) it was bestowed upon the mistress of Louis XV., the daughter of the bankrupt butcher Poisson.

17 St. Pardoux.

8 Donzenac.

10 Brives (Inn: H. de Bordeaux, clean, comfortable, and a good cook, who makes celebrated patés) enjoys a fine situation in the valley of the Corrèze; but its favourable appearance at a distance is not realised in its interior which contains nothing remarkable but an ancient Gothic house attributed to the English: it is said to have been the residence of the governor. Brives is the birth-place of the Cardinal Dubois, son of an apothecary, who became tutor and afterwards minister to the regent duke of Orleans; and of Marshal Brune, one of the generals of the republic, assassinated at Avignon 1815.

The culture of the vine and of maize begins near this.

The road has now reached a hilly country; it passes within a short distance of the semi-Gothic Château de Noailles, cradle of the noble family who derive their ducal title from it. The old feudal Castle of Turenne, situated about 2 m. to the E. of the road, on the Tourmente, a tributary of the Dordogne, gave a name to another great family, illustrious by deeds as well as by descent: the Ducs de Bouillon obtained the domain and vis-county of Turenne by alliance. Within its walls, the wife of the great Condé, a fugitive with her son from the pursuit of Mazarin, was received amidst a crowd of enthusiastic partisans of the Fronde, in 1650, and sumptuously entertained for 8 days; during which, taking counsel with the Ducs de Bouillon and de La Rochefoucauld, she planned the memorable rising in the South which was called the civil war of Guienne. She here summoned her vassals and retainers to mount the fawn-coloured scarf, and to rally round her for the rescue of her husband from prison. At the order of the Duc de Bouillon the tocsin was sounded in the 400 villages of his vicomté of Turenne, and the peasants at once flew to arms and flocked round his standard.

20 Cressensac (dept. Lot).

Truffles flourish in the uncultivated ground around this village.

16 Souillac, a miserable little town in the deep valley of the Dordogne, on its rt. bank.

After crossing the river, a steep hill, nearly 3 m. long, requires to be surmounted, in effecting which the postmaster is authorized to attach a pair of oxen to all four-wheeled carriages. 2 m. on the l. is the village and château of La Motte Fénélon, not the birth-place, as some have stated, of the author of Telemaque, but a property belonging to his family. A hilly country, arid, barren, and uninteresting all the way to Cahors.

15 Peyrac.

17 Pont de Rodes.

17 Pelacoy. Near this is Murat, and a little beyond it La Bastide, the birth-place of Joachim Murat, general of cavalry, and king of Naples. He was the son of an aubergiste who was steward in the family of the Talleyrands.

A long but gradual descent of nearly 5 m. leads down into the valley of the Lot.

The very distant outline of the Pyrenees, 150 m. off, may be distinguished in clear weather near 16 Cahors. — Inns: des Ambassadeurs; (not very clean, but excellent cook, D.;) Trois Rois; de l'Europe: Cahors, the chef lieu of the department of Le Lot (population 12,050), is situated on the top and round the base of an escarped rock, on a wide sweeping bend of the river Lot. It is a very ancient town of narrow streets, to which a new quarter has been added. The name comes from its ancient appellation, Divona Cadurcorum, and there still exist the scanty remains of a Roman amphitheatre, and of a conduit, which conveyed water to it from the village, St. Martin de Vern, through La Roque, where are vestiges of the arches of an aqueduct.

The cathedral consists of a large nave, surmounted by two hemispherical cupolas, in the Romanesque style; a portal and the choir are Gothic. The Bishop's Palace is now the Prefecture. The bishop originally bore the title of count, and enjoyed the privilege of wearing a sword and gauntlets, which he deposited on the altar when he said mass. When he took possession of his diocese, he was received at the gate of the town by his vassal, le Vicomte de Sessac, bareheaded, without cloak, with one leg bare, and the foot in a slipper, and was conducted by the count in that guise to his palace, and waited on there by him at table. This curious tenure had fallen out of use before the Revolution.

The surprise and capture of Cahors in 1580 was one of the most brilliant exploits of Henri IV. (when king of Navarre). He approached the town by a forced march of 30 m. under a burning sun, and posting his men in ambuscade among the walnut trees, awaited the nightfall, when silently approaching the gate, he blew it up with a petard, and entered himself the seventh, followed by 700 men, and leaving 700 outside, to check the arrival of reinforcements to the garrison. The bursting of the gate had alarmed the town, which was strongly guarded, and a shower of stones and tiles from every house-top assailed the Navarrese troops and their general. The combat was carried on throughout the night, and when dawn appeared, they had gained but a very small part of the town. Henri was strongly advised to retire, especially when intelligence was brought of the arrival of succour to the town; but the king, with his back against a shop, persisted in fighting on, exclaiming, "Ma retraite hors de cette ville sera celle de mon ame hors de mon corps." The reinforcements were driven back, but Henri still had to struggle step by step, and lay siege to every street and almost to every house. It was not until the fifth night that Cahors submitted. Henri's soldiers, irritated by the resistance made by the garrison, put a great many to the sword.

On the open promenade de Fossé, in front of the college, is placed a statue of Fénélon, who was a student here. One of the 3 bridges over the Lot is curious, being surmounted by 3 watch-towers. Cahors is the native place of Pope Jean XXII., whose name was Jacques d'Euze; also of Clement Marot, the poet, author of sonnets, ballads, &c. (1495), and page to Marguerite, sister of Francis I.

The country around produces a good deal of wine, which is not much esteemed, and truffles in abundance.

21 La Magdeleine.

17 Caussade stands on the fertile plain, watered by the Loire; it is a town of 5000 inhabitants, famed for turkeys stuffed with truffles.

In the next stage, the river Aveyron is crossed, and we enter the wide and fertile plain of Languedoc, which extends to the foot of the Pyrenees with little interruption.

22 Montauban (Inns: Hotel de France; — best inn since leaving Paris, D.— de l'Europe), chef lieu of the Department Tarn et Garonne, is a good-looking little town, with clean and wide streets on the rt. bank of the Tarn, here lined by a fine quay, and crossed by a bridge, at the end of which stands the Préfecture, a square building with 4 turrets at its angles. There is nothing to be seen in the town. The cathedral is a large modern building of Italian architecture, with a frontispiece at the W. end.

"The Promenade of Les Terrasses on the borders of the Tescon, and on the highest part of the ramparts, commands that noble plain, one of the richest in Europe, which extends on one side to the sea, and in front to the Pyrenees, whose towering masses, heaped one upon another in a stupendous manner, and covered with snow, offer a variety of lights and shades from their indented forms, and the immensity of their projections. This prospect has a sort of oceanic vastness, in which the eye loses itself; an almost boundless scene of cultivation; an animated but confused mass of infinitely varied parts, melting gradually into the distant obscure, from which arises the amazing frame of the Pyrenees, rearing their silvered heads far above the clouds." — A. Young.

Montauban is a flourishing manufacturing town, producing various kinds of woollen cloths, hair stuffs (cadis, molletons), which are exported to the colonies: it has 24,660 inhabitants.

In the 16th and 17th centuries Montauban was a stronghold of Protestantism, its inhabitants having early embraced the reformed doctrines, and being prepared to defend them. It endured in consequence a very memorable siege in 1621, from the royal army led on by the favourite Luynes, who brought hither his master Louis XIII.; but instead of witnessing its fall, after nearly three months of fruitless assault, Louis and his minister were forced to withdraw, such was the obstinate bravery of the inhabitants and the skill of their governors. Under the reign of Louis XIV., and the influence of Madame de Maintenon, the Protestants of Montauban were singled out to suffer the direst persecutions inflicted by the so-called Dragonnades, or quartering of regiments of soldiers on them, who exercised every species of licence, inquisitorial tyranny, and cruelty, with the design of forcing them to become papists.

At the farther extremity of the bridge over the Tarn we pass under an arch of brick into the extensive suburb of Ville Bourdon, founded by the Protestants expelled from Toulouse in 1562.

We enter the grand route, from Bordeaux to Toulouse (R. 73.), a little short of 22 Grisolles. The Garonne runs parallel with our road, at a little distance on the rt., through a plain of unequalled fertility. The British army, under the Duke of Wellington, passed the river before the battle of Toulouse, by 2 pontoon bridges above the small town of Grenade on the l. bank nearly opposite Castelnau, 15 m. below Toulouse. The road crosses the river Lers, a little farther on. The capture of the bridge over it at Croix Daurade, by a gallant charge of the 18th hussars on the day before the battle, secured a communication between the columns of the allied army, part of which marched up the rt. and part up the l. bank of the Lers, to attack the strong position of Marshal Soult.

12 St. Jory.

The approach to Toulouse lies over a bridge flanked by two columns thrown across the Canal du Midi, which, half encircling the town on the N. and E., joins the Garonne about a mile to the rt. of this bridge in the Faubourg d'Arnaud Bernard.

The Obelisk on the height to the l. marks the centre of Marshal Soult's position at the battle of Toulouse, which, though strongly fortified by redouts and cannon, was carried by the Allies (see p. 253.).

17 Toulouse. — Inns: Hotel Vidal, on the Place du Capitole; — H. du Midi; excellent table d'hôte, tolerable in other respects; very moderate, but not clean; — H. de l'Europe, Place Lafayette, good situation, but dirty.

In the midst of the great plain of Gascony and Languedoc, beginning at the very foot of the Pyrenees, and stretching from them nearly 100 m. N. stands Toulouse, the ancient capital of Languedoc, and now of the department of Haute Garonne. It is built on both banks of the Garonne, just above the point where the Canal du Midi, connecting the Atlantic with the Mediterranean, falls into it; after winding round the N. and E. side of the town. The river is crossed by a bridge connecting the city with the suburb St. Cyprien on the l. bank of the river.

It is far from being a handsome city; its streets are irregular and dirty, its houses and even churches of brick: and neither public nor private buildings are distinguished by special architectural beauty: but it ranks as the seventh city in France, from the number of its inhabitants (77,400), and the extensive trade and commerce of a provincial capital, which it enjoys. It is interesting from its historical souvenirs as the capital of the kingdom of the Visigoths from 413 to 507, when it was destroyed by Clovis on the battle-field of Vouillé near Poitiers; as the place where the art of the troubadours was encouraged at the gay court of its counts; as the scene of the papal crusade against the Albigenses, headed by an English leader, and as the seat of the ancient parliament of Toulouse. But the Revolution has, as usual, done its worst to extirpate all tangible relics of bygone days.

The Place du Capitole (once Place Royale), a handsome though unfinished square, consisting of three sides of regular modern buildings and one of old and irregular structures, is the centre of bustle and traffic; the chief market-place, and the point of departure of the main thoroughfares. It is named from le Capitole or Hôtel de Ville, so called either from the tradition that in the time of the Romans the Capitol of the Tolosates may have stood here, or from the meetings of the civic chapter (capitolium), whose members were also called capitouls, on this spot. The building presents externally a modern front, finished 1769, with eight columns of red Pyrenean marble in the centre, and includes, besides the municipal buildings and the archives, the Theatre in the l. wing. The principal apartment, running along nearly the whole length of the first floor, is the Salle des Illustres, or hall of the worthies of Toulouse, so called from 38 terra-cotta busts of men of note, born in and near Toulouse, or connected with it, each with a pompous Latin inscription below it, filling as many gilt niches in the walls. In real truth a great many, as Riquet, engineer of the canal du Midi, Pope Benedict XII., &c., have no connection of birth with the town; and many more, though really citizens, have no claim to renown beyond its walls. Among those of most general celebrity may be mentioned Raymond St. Gilles, Count of Toulouse, one of the leaders of the first crusade; Cujas, the lawyer ("cujus merum nomen plus laudis amplectitur quam quælibet oratio potest"), who was rejected by the university here when a candidate for the professorship of law; and P. Fermat, the mathematician, inventor of the integral calculus, b. 1608.

In this hall are held every year the meetings of the Société des Jeux Floreaux, deriving its origin from the ancient troubadours, but founded, it is said, by one Clemence Isaure, a Toulousan lady, who revived the science of the "gai Scavoir" in the 15th century. Her very existence, however, is not a little doubtful, as there is no mention of her in the archives of the town, though her statue is preserved in the Capitole. Be this as it may the society have adopted her as their patroness and founder, and every year at the beginning (3d) of May, after making a pilgrimage to the church of the Daurade in which her tomb once was, they distribute to various competitors prizes, consisting of golden and silver flowers, the violette, amaranthe, eglantine, souci, and lis, for the best original compositions in verse, and essays in prose, for which they give the subject. The society maintains about equal importance, and the prize compositions have nearly the same literary value, as those of the bardic meetings held in Wales. Although the existence of Clemence is uncertain, there is no doubt of the antiquity of the society, and it claims for itself to be the oldest literary institution in Europe, dating from 1333. Indeed it appears that in that year a number of troubadours, or mainteneurs du Gai Scavoir, citizens of Toulouse, met in a field near the town to distribute prizes to the composers of the best verses.

In the same room with the statue of Clemence Isaure is preserved the axe with which Henri, Duc de Montmorency, the victim of the implacable Cardinal Richelieu, and one of the last of the great vassals of the crown of France, was decapitated. It is a sort of huge carving-knife, and was made in the town. The execution took place 1632, in the first court of the Capitole, at the feet of the statue of Henri IV., in whose reign that part of the building was erected. In the 2d court on the rt., two barred windows mark the dungeon in which he was confined, and belong to the oldest portion of the building. Here also is the old Salle de Consistoire, with ornamented roof and chimney (? if still existing). The council chamber of the senators of the town (capitouls equivalent to echevins) no longer exists.

The antiquity of the municipal privileges of the town, and of the meetings of the magistrates who were elected by the people themselves and who were recognized by Raymond V. as far back as 1152, deserves notice. These rights, of five centuries' duration, were infringed, in spite of the remonstrances of the citizens, by Louis XIV., who caused the capitouls to be appointed at Paris by royal ordonnance.

The Place du Capitole is a good starting-place from which to visit the chief curiosities of the town.

L'Eglise St. Sernin, the largest, oldest, and most perfect ecclesiastical edifice here, is a plain building of brick and stone in the Romanesque style, dating from the year 1090, when it was finished and consecrated by Pope Urban II. It is conspicuous for its lofty octagonal Tower, formed by five tiers of arches, each story less in size than that below it, the lower tiers surrounded by circular arches, the two upper by angular ones. The upper part is of the 14th century, the lower corresponds exactly in style with the church below. Of its two S. porches one is distinguished by a curious early bas-relief over the door in the Byzantine style, and by the capitals of its columns representing the murder of the Innocents, expulsion of Adam, &c.; the other a double portal, leading into the S. transept, bears carved capitals of the seven deadly sins. By the side of it, within a modernized chapel, are several tombs of early counts of Toulouse. The interior is remarkable for its very long Nave (not unlike that of St. Albans, but flanked by double aisles). Its cradle-vaulted roof is supported by plain angular piers, having engaged columns, and above its circular arches runs a triforium having slight double pillars with delicately cut capitals, continued all round the transepts, and lighted by windows on the outside. The E. end is semicircular and the arches round; close set columns support the vault above the high altar, painted with the colossal figure of Christ and the symbols of the four evangelists. From the aisle behind it project five apsidal chapels, decorated with curious carvings of saints, and legends in wood. Here also is a model of the church as it stood before the Revolution, showing that it formed an isolated fortress, apart from the town, walled in by towers and battlements. Some curious Byzantine bas-reliefs in white marble, said to have belonged to the old church of St. Sernin, built by Charlemagne in the 8th century (?), are let into the wall of the aisle behind the choir; they represent our Saviour, angels, and saints. The Crypt under the choir, modernized in the 15th century, was the place of deposit of relics in great number and esteemed of immense value. Before the Revolution this church indeed boasted of possessing the bodies of no less than seven of the apostles, one of them being a duplicate of St. James, another of his bodies being preserved at Compostella! This motto was blazoned over the entry —

"NON EST IN TOTO SANCTIOR ORBE LOCUS."

The wooden stalls of the choir are well carved in the style of the 16th century.

The Church of St. Taur, situated in the street leading from the Capitole to St. Sernin, derives its name from the wild bull to whose horns the body of the martyr St. Saturnin was bound by his heathen persecutors. The struggles of the furious animal having detached it from the cords, on this spot, a church was in consequence erected. That at present existing has nothing remarkable but its flattened fronton belfry surmounted by angular arches.

The Church of the Cordeliers, a brick building of great loftiness, erected in the 14th century, is now turned into a magazin de fourrage, and filled with hay; that of the Jacobins surmounted by a conspicuous brick tower, rising in arches having straight angled heads, is of vast size, and of brick like the other churches. It has become a barrack, and is divided by floors, the lower story serving as a stable for artillery horses.

Issuing out of the Place du Capitole by the Rue des Arts (?) we come to the Cathedral, or Eglise St. Etienne, chiefly remarkable for the irregularity and want of concord in all its parts. The large rose window is out of the line of the centre of the main portal immediately below it; the centre of the nave is parallel with the side aisle of the choir, and its two walls do not correspond. The Nave was built by Raymond VI., Comte de Toulouse, in the 13th century, at a time when he was accused of favouring the heretical Albigeois, and was excommunicated in consequence by the pope. Raymond was besieged within the walls of Toulouse by Simon de Montfort, Earl of Leicester, appointed by Innocent III. head of the crusade against the heretics who met his death in one of the suburbs of the town, from a stone discharged by a mangonel, whilst he was endeavouring to repel a sally of the citizens in the 9th month of the fruitless siege, on St. John Baptist's day, 1218. Count Raymond's construction is the oldest part of the church, and was doubtless intended to be removed by those who raised the more elegant Gothic Choir. It was begun 1272, but not roofed until 1502, by the Cardinal d'Orleans, son of the brave bastard Dunois, who built also the clocher and the singular isolated column called Pilier d' Orleans, which fronts you as you enter the nave. There is some good painted glass in the choir. The tower is singular from its form, having two broad sides and two narrow.

In the Rue des Arts is the Musée, deposited in the desecrated church of the Augustins, and comprising a large collection of bad paintings, copies, &c., filling two rooms, one of them the old church itself, which has been re-roofed and re-floored. The best pictures are a Perugino, St. John Evangelist and St. Austin; a Vander Meulen, Siege of Cambray; and a curious painting of the eight capitouls forming the town council of Toulouse in 1645. A good collection of casts from the antique is placed in the chapter-house, an elegantly vaulted and groined apartment of the 16th century, supported on light pillars. The Collection of Antiquities in this museum is the most interesting sight in Toulouse; it is placed under the admirable direction of M. du Mège, who may be considered its founder. The locale which it partly occupies is the elegant Gothic Cloister of the old church, the traceried arches of which are supported on pillars of marble in pairs, producing an effect not unlike the Campo Santo at Pisa.

In addition to a small series of Egyptian sculptures, there are numerous inscriptions, Roman and Gallic, votive altars, &c., with fragments of statues and of marbles, showing that the quarries of the Pyrenees were worked by the Romans, from various places in Languedoc and the Pyrenees. The most remarkable part of the collection, however, is the three following series, forming an almost uninterrupted chain in the history of art, from the Gallo-Roman period to the Renaissance or cinquecento through the Gothic period.

1st. A very large collection of antiquities dug up near the small town of Martres, on the l. bank of the Garonne, a little below St. Gaudens, and proved by M. Dumége to be the ancient Calagorris. In consequence of the excavations undertaken at his suggestion, it has proved a Gallic Pompeii. The discoveries consist of a series of about 40 busts and medallions of Roman emperors, and of members of their families from Augustus and Claudius down to Gallienus, forming a tolerably complete portrait gallery; — of a number of small statues of gods and goddesses, of good execution, especially in the drapery, including Isis, Venus, Diana, Jupiter, Serapis, Esculapius, Harpocrates; a series of bas-reliefs, much mutilated, representing the labours of Hercules; a mosaic of the head of a river god; a number of Corinthian capitals, friezes, and other architectural ornaments. Among the bronzes are a pair of wheels and the pole of a Roman chariot, very rare and interesting objects, dug up at Fa, near the Bains de Rennes. Two bas-reliefs with inscriptions relating to the two Emperors Tetricus, have given rise to much discussion among antiquaries. They were found at Nérac.

2d. A collection of works of art of the Middle Ages, consisting of bas-reliefs, statues, monuments, portals, and a long series of curiously carved capitals of columns obtained from ecclesiastic edifices and Christian monuments, destroyed or desecrated, at or since the Revolution, beginning with early Christian tombs, sarcophagi, and coffins, covered with sculpture rude and debased in point of art, but showing Roman influence, bearing Christian symbols, combined with heathen subjects, the cross, X, P, the vine-branch, &c. One of these brought from the outer wall of the church of La Daurade, where it went by the name of Tombeau de la Reine Pedauque (pes aucæ, queen goose-leg), bears six bas-reliefs of the multiplication of loaves and fishes, the raising of Lazarus, and other scriptural events which were adopted as types symbolical of the goodness of God, and of the resurrection, by the early Christians. Another sarcophagus from St. Orens at Auch, displays, with similar symbolical allusion, the sacrifice of Isaac, and Lazarus deplored by Martha, with Adam and Eve. Others of these tombs come from the very ancient cemetery of St. Saturnin in Toulouse. Several bas-reliefs which ornamented a portal of that church are preserved here; one represents 2 females seated, their legs crossed; one holds a ram, the other a lion: the names of these two signs of the zodiac being written at the side, and below one of them, "Hoc factum est in tempore Julii Cæsaris." They are supposed to have formed part of a Zodiac, or Julian Calendar attached to that church. It is not improbable that they were executed in the time of Charlemagne. From St. Sernin also comes a carving of a hawk, with a human head, treading under foot a monster, inscribed "Crocodilus:" the allegory seems derived from Egypt. A pedestal in white marble, bearing 4 figures in relief, 2 of them saints with palms (St. Justus and Rusticus) the Virgin, and a crowned king, supposed to be Charlemagne, holding a lotus-headed (?) sceptre, and wearing a cross on his breast, was brought from the Cathedral of Narbonne, of which he was the founder. The curious Portal of the old Church of La Daurade, pulled down in 1812 when the monastery attached to it was converted into a tobacco manufactory, has been re-erected here, as nearly as possible in its original condition. Its circular arch is supported by statues, instead of pillars; attached to it are 4 figures in bas relief, — David playing on the Harp, and the Virgin and our Saviour, with a king and queen, founders or benefactors of the church.

In like manner, the Portal of the Cathedral Chapter House, at Toulouse, decorated with figures of the Apostles in bas-relief, has been removed hither.

Here are numerous statues, partly coloured and gilt, of Christ, the Virgin, Apostles, and Saints. A series of more than 60 capitals of columns, almost all differing in form and decoration, the greater part ornamented with subjects minutely carved from the Bible or Legends of Saints. The casts of sculptures from the churches of St. Victor at Marseilles, and that of Moissac, merit attention, as well as many monumental effigies of noble knights and high-born dames, and holy ecclesiastics, mitred abbots, bishops, and several archbishops of Toulouse, here deposited.

The museum also boasts of possessing the ivory horn of the renowned Roland, richly carved — formerly preserved in the treasury of the church of St. Sernin.

A third division of the museum contains Monuments of the Renaissance, including casts from a portion of the carved wood screen-work in the Cathedral of Auch, and church of St. Bertrand de Comminges. A Pietâ, in white marble, from the Eglise des Carmes at Carcassonne, several fragments of statues, bas-reliefs, &c. by Bachelier, a sculptor of Toulouse, and pupil of Michael Angelo, 1485—1567; a relief, in white marble, of boys dancing, by Pierre Paul Puget, is very clever.

Toulouse possesses several other churches, scarcely worth visiting.

The plastered and stuccoed church of La Daurade derives its name from the gilt mosaics of a former church, of which no traces are now left: the monastery attached to it, on the quay, a little below the bridge, is now the Fabrique Royal du Tabac.

There are numerous specimens in the streets of the grand but exaggerated architecture of the Renaissance; one, perhaps the best, is attributed to Primaticcio's design, and is situated near the bridge over the Garonne.

If the stranger will continue past the bridge, up the street, on the rt. bank of the Garonne, called Rue du Couteliers, he may view the Hotel de St. Jean, of Italian architecture, that called Hotel Daguin, or more commonly Maison de Pierre, a gaudy specimen of the style of the Renaissance, and nearly opposite an ornamental portal, in much better taste, designed by Bachelier, already mentioned.

Still farther on is the cannon foundery, occupying the ancient nunnery of Sainte Claire; and a little beyond it Le Couvent de l'Inquisition, an obscure edifice retaining its old ill-omened name, but now belonging to a religious brotherhood engaged in education. It is memorable for crimes which stain the annals of Toulouse. Here alone, in France, was that accursed tribunal allowed to take root. Here, as in Spain, it brought with it its usual train of tyrannous atrocities, — torturing, imprisoning, roasting at the stake the living, tearing up the dead from their graves, or refusing Christian burial to persons deceased. It was first established here, in the time of Count Raymond VII. (1221), by the ecclesiastical council assembled to exterminate the heresy of the Albigenses, which, at the beginning of the 13th century, had overspread the entire S. of France, under the connivances or encouragement of Raymond VI. of Toulouse, one of the wealthiest and most powerful princes of his time. St. Dominic himself, the founder of the Inquisition, visited Toulouse to water the thriving offset from his own terrible foundation; the cell which he occupied was shown until 1772.

The Place de Salin was the scene upon which the French Autos da Fé were enacted.

The house No. 50 Rue des Filatiers was in 1762 occupied by a respectable Protestant family, named Calas. The father, Jean Calas, carried on the trade of draper, and prospered, in good repute with his neighbours, and in contentment at home. The only exception to his domestic happiness was the conversion, by a priest named Durand, of his third son, Jean Louis, to the Romish faith. The youth had, in consequence, been sent from home, receiving a small allowance from his father.

On the night of the 13-14th October 1761, cries were heard issuing from the house of Calas, and the chief of police, with an escort of soldiers, on entering it, found near the door the dead body of the eldest son of Calus and Marc Antoine.

A procés verbal was prepared, declaring that he died, hung by himself; which there can be no doubt is the truth, for he was of a melancholy temperament; but a malicious cry was raised in the crowd by a voice unknown that he had been strangled by his father, to prevent his abjuring Calvinism as his brother had done, and the report spread and was partly believed by the fanatic Toulousans. The elder Calas was, in consequence, accused of the murder of his own son, before the parliament of Toulouse; and that ancient and venerable assembly, without listening to one tenth of the evidence which had been prepared, and without any proof of his guilt, sullied its reputation for justice by condemning him, at the age of 68, to be tortured, and broken on the wheel, and his remains burnt and scattered to the wind.

The act of condemnation, in virtue of which this atrocious judicial murder was committed, runs as follows: "La Cour le condamne à être livré aux mains de l'exécuteur de la haute justice, qui, tête, pieds nus, et en chemise, la hart au col, le montera sur le chariot à ce destiné, et le conduira devant la porte principale de l'Eglise de Toulouse; où, étant à genoux, tenant entre ses mains une torche de cire jaune allumée, du poids de deux livres, il lui fera amende honorable, et demandera pardon à Dieu, au Roi, et à la justice, de ses crimes, et méfaits; ce fait, le remontera sur le chariot, et le conduira à la Place St. George de cette ville, où, sur un échafaud, qui y sera à cet effet dressé, il lui rompera et brisera les bras, jambes, cuisses, et reins; ensuite l'exposera sur une roue qui sera dressée tout auprès du dit échafaud, la face tournée vers le ciel, pour y vivre en peine et repentance de ses dits préfaits, servir d'exemple, et donner de la terreur aux méchants, tout autant qu'il lui plaise à Dieu de lui donner la vie; et son corps sera jeté dans un bucher préparé à cet effet sur la dite place, pour y être consumé par les flammes, et ensuite jetées au vent. Préalablement le dit Calas sera appliqué à la question ordinaire et extraordinaire, sera le dit Calas Père étranglé, après avoir resté deux heures sur la roue. Jugé le 9 Mai 1762, Cassan, Clairac, rapporteurs." He bore the torture inflicted on him in the Hôtel de Ville with the greatest firmness, answering all questions with the utmost clearness, and giving no advantage to his interrogators, but persist-ing in maintaining his innocence. On the scaffold, after suffering with the most patient resignation the agonies of his punishment for 2 whole hours, during which he was subjected to the mental rackings of a Romish priest, being still fully alive, the signal was given to the executioner to inflict the "coup de grace."

"De faux témoins ont égarés mes juges," exclaimed he, before breathing his last breath, "je meurs innocent: Jésus Christ, qui était l'innocence même, voulut mourir par une supplice plus cruel encore." The very Dominicans who attended Calas, exclaimed as he expired, "Il est mort un juste!" With his murder an end was put to martyrdoms and cruel persecutions of the Protestants which had disgraced the South of France for almost a century, and chiefly owing to the publicity given by Voltaire to the case of Jean Calus: this sentence was reversed and his innocence proclaimed by the Conseil Royal at Paris.

The Palais de Justice, totally modernized externally, and for the most part a new building, was the seat of the Parliament of Toulouse, where its sittings were held. The fine ceilings ornamenting its interior have been retained in two apartments: one, carved with reliefs, in compartments, representing the Labours of Hercules, is by no means contemptible, the other is richly gilt.

At a short distance below the bridge, the navigation of the Garonne is interrupted by a weir thrown across it, to supply water to the large corn mill of the town, called le Basacle, rebuilt 1814.

Between this mill and the church of La Daurade is the mouth of the Canal de Brienne, constructed by the archbishop whose name it bears, to remedy the interruption in the navigation caused by the mill weir. It runs nearly parallel with the Garonne for about ¾ mile below the Basacle, and then falls into the Canal du Midi. A fine avenue of trees leads to this junction. Here the 2 canals are crossed by small bridges, between which, on a level with the water, is stuck a large piece of sculpture, in high relief, of white marble, representing some unmeaning allegory, without allusion to the founder of the great work, Riquet, and contemptible in execution.

A few hundred yards below this, the Canal du Midi, after sweeping round the E. and N. sides of the city of Toulouse, enters the Garonne, through a basin provided with double locks, and guarded against ice by a sort of pier. The Garonne is at this point 144 metres, or 473 ft., above the level of the Atlantic.

The navigation of the Garonne, though carried on by barges, is very difficult, owing to rocks and stems of trees in its bed, from Toulouse to the junction of the Tarn. A lateral canal has been projected from Toulouse to Castels in Department Gironde. For a description of the Canal du Midi, see R. 93.

At the battle of Toulouse, the inner bank of the canal, towards the town, was lined with French troops, and every bridge over it strongly defended by Têtes de Pont and entrenchments. In an attack made by the British light division upon the bridge nearest the embouchure of the canal, designed by Wellington merely as a feint, but converted by Picton, in disobedience to orders, into a hopeless assault, the British were repulsed with a loss of 400 men.

A monument has been erected, in the grounds of the Château Gragnague, on the N. side of the canal, to a British officer of great merit, Colonel Forbes of the 45th regiment. Several other monumental tablets are also placed in the Protestant Church of Toulouse.

The best point of view for surveying the field of the battle of Toulouse, (April 10. 1814) as well as for viewing the town, is the Obelisk of brick, erected by the city, "Aux Braves morts pour la Patrie," occupying the site of one of Marshal Soult's redoubts, taken by the English, on the height of Calvinet. It is reached by traversing the fine oval place, and the broad Avenue Lafayette (originally d'Angoulême), crossing the canal at the flying bridge, or Pont Matabiau, and ascending at the back of the Ecole Veterinaire. The view owes its chief interest to the distant chain of the Pyrenees, occupying the horizon, whose peaks may be discerned, in fine weather, from the Canigou on the E. to the Pic du Midi de Bigorre on the W. with the Maladetta, Crabioules, and Mt. Perdu in the centre. The city itself is not striking; the country around is very flat and monotonous, and the Garonne runs in too deep a bed to form a feature in the landscape.

The most important part of Marshal Soult's position, at the time of the battle, was along the heights called Mont Rave, composed of two platforms, Calvinet (on which stands the obelisk) and Sypierre, both of which had been fortified, several weeks beforehand, with 5 redoubts, and entrenchments between them, mounted with a great many guns. The position was supported by the canal, and by the ramparts by which the town was then surrounded, in the rear of the canal; and in front the position was covered by the Ers. That stream was at the time unfordable, and all the bridges over it were blown up, or strongly guarded, except that of Croix Daurade, taken by the British Hussars the day before the battle. General Beresford's division, which achieved the victory, had to make a flank movement, marching for 2 m. up the rt. bank of the Ers, under the fire from the heights, over ground naturally very difficult, marshy, and intersected by watercourses, but rendered almost impassable by artificial inundations. After passing Calvinet, the British troops formed, and, charging up the height, took first the redoubt on Sypierre, and afterwards those on Calvinet. Here, however, a terrible struggle took place: the British, "clinging to the brow of the hill," in spite of the masses opposed to them, stood fast on the ground they had gained; and though the French made desperate efforts from the canal, they never retook Calvinet. A previous attack on Calvinet, made in the early part of the day by the Spaniards, had been very different in its result; so quickly, indeed, did they retire, that the Duke of Wellington said of them, "he never before saw 10,000 men running a race:" 1500 of them were slaughtered on the slope of this hill, chiefly in a hollow road upon its flank, raked by a battery from the Pont de Matabiau on the canal, "which sent its bullets from flank to flank, hissing through the quivering mass of flesh and bones," to use the words of Colonel Napier.

At 5 o'clock, P. M., Soult withdrew his whole army behind the canal. The next day he remained inactive, and on the night of the 11th was "forced to abandon" Toulouse, leaving behind 1600 wounded, and 3 generals, to fall prisoners into the hands of the allies. They lost in this battle 4659 men, and 4 generals; the French nearly 3000, and 5 generals killed or wounded; an useless waste of human life, since Napoleon had abdicated on the 4th April, some days previously, though that event was unknown to either of the commanders. There can be no doubt that the charge brought against Marshal Soult of fighting this battle though aware of what had happened at Paris is unfounded, and the Duke of Wellington himself has nobly vindicated him from it. The forces of the allies amounted to 52,000 men; but of these only 24,000, and 52 guns, were actually engaged in the battle; the French had 38,000 men, with from 80 to 90 guns. This is the estimate drawn out with the utmost fairness by Colonel Napier.

The country immediately about Toulouse is generally flat and uninteresting, and being besides arid, and burnt up in summer, the want of shade and verdure, and the excessive dust, offer no inducements to explore. Its fertility, however, is very conspicuous.

Toulouse is joined by a bridge of brick, pierced with round holes between the spandrils of the arches, and terminating in an archway, with the suburb of St. Cyprien, which was invested by General Hill and one division of the British army at the time of the battle.

The principal Cafés are in the Place du Capitole. The market held here is very abundantly supplied: fruit, vegetables, poultry, and wine are very cheap; butter and milk dear; ortolans, truffles, figs, pâtés de foies de canards, are the delicacies which await the gourmand here.

*Malleposte*s daily to Paris by Montauban and Limoges; to Marseilles by Narbonne and Montpellier; to Bordeaux by Agen; to Bayonne by Auch and Pau.

Diligences; daily, to Paris; to Bordeaux; diligences also correspond with the steamers on the Garonne to Bordeaux; to Tarbes, Pau, and Bayonne; to Auch and Bagnères de Bigorre; to St. Gaudens and Bagnères de Luchon; to Foix, Ussat, and Ax; to Villefranche (Aveyron); to Nismes and Marseilles by Narbonne and Montpellier; to Perpignan by Limoux; to Alby.

ROUTE 71.

LIMOGES TO BORDEAUX BY PERIGUEUX AND LIBOURNE.

215 kilom. = 133½ Eng. m.

Malleposte as far as Perigueux.

Diligences daily.

Through a hilly country we reach the first relay at 9 Aixé, on the Vienne, a small town skirted by the road.

24 Chalus. The post-house and inn is situated at some distance from this little town, which is only remarkable for its Castle of Chabrol, rising above it in picturesque ruins. Beneath its walls, Richard Cœur de Lion received his death-wound from the arrow of a youth named Bertrand de Gurdon. The tamer of the infidel, and hero of the Crusades, thus ended a chivalrous life of nearly constant warfare, before the petty fortress of a vassal, the Viscount of Limoges, which he had besieged in consequence of a quarrel about the division of a treasure found in the viscount's domain, of which Richard claimed the whole, or a larger share than had been conceded to him. The castle was soon taken, and the garrison of only 38 men were hung by the king's order, except the bold archer who had sped the shaft so fatal to him. The youth avowed, when brought before the dying monarch, that revenge for the death of his father and two brothers, slain by Richard, had prompted him to free the country of its oppressor. His life, though magnanimously spared by Richard, was taken after his death; and he is said to have been flayed alive by order of Richard's minister. The most conspicuous part of the castle yet remaining is a circular donjon, entered by a doorway high up in the wall, and no longer accessible without a ladder. The tower is entirely gutted. Around it are grouped some shattered fragments of buildings, including a portion of a chapel. A little conical stone, rising out of the meadows in the front of the castle, in the valley below it, is pointed out as the spot where Richard had placed himself to reconnoitre the fort, when the arrow struck him in the l. shoulder. The stone is called Maumont.

The bridge of Firbeix, 3 m. from Chalus, crosses the boundary line of the ancient province of Limousin into that of Perigord, famous for truffles the groundwork of its celebrated pâtés.

12 La Coquille.

15 Thiviers.

13 Palissou.

19 Perigueux (Inns: H. de France; Du Chêne Vert), the chef lieu of the Department Dordogne, contains 11,576 inhabitants, and is situated on the rt. bank of the river L'Isle, which was canalised in 1837.

The town, composed of streets narrow, tortuous, and dirty within, is fringed by green alleys externally.

Its Cathedral of St. Front, is supposed to be of an age anterior to the 10th century, except the lofty tower, 197 ft. high. The arrangement of the ground plan, and the construction of this ch. display some remarkable peculiarities. It is in the form of a Greek cross, with 4 equal arms, formed by squares, set round a 5th square in the centre. Each square is surmounted by a stone-vaulted cupola, concealed from without by a wooden roof, but visible to those who chose to mount up to the roof. In a chapel within it is a remarkable bas-relief in wood, representing the Annunciation, of elaborate execution. The prefecture is a handsome modern building.

The first ancient name of this city was Vesuna, retained in the tower de Vésune, a circular edifice of Roman construction, 100 ft. high, its walls 6 ft. thick, without doors or windows. It is supposed to have been a tomb, and is situated in a suburb called La Cité, which contains another ancient church. Traces of a Roman amphitheatre and arch in the town also still exist. At a later period, the name Vesuna was changed to Petrocorii, mentioned by Cæsar, whence Perigueux. The streets of Perigueux contain some curiously ornamented houses of the 16th century; one at the corner of Rue l'Aiguillerie bearing the date 1518; 2 others in Rue Taillefer, Nos. 31 and 37, and a 4th at the end of the Rue de la Sagesse, ornamented with arabesques and carvings, merit notice. There are some buildings and vaults which are as old as the 12th and 13th centuries.

The celebrated pâtés de Perigueux, well known to all gourmands, are made of partridges combined with truffles, and form an article of considerable export.

The road descends the valley of the L'Isle, nearly all the way to Libourne, crossing the stream opposite Castel Fadaise.

Passing under the castle of Montancey, we reach 18 Massoulie.

17 Mussidan.

17 Montpont.

18 St. Médard (Department Gironde). A few m. to the rt. lies Coutras, where Henri IV., while still only king of Navarre, gained a bloody victory over the forces of the League, under the Duc de Joyeuse, who lost his life on the field, along with many other great lords, 1587. Coutras is visible from a hill overlooking the valley of the L'Isle, surmounted before reaching 20 Libourne (Inns: H. de France; Des Princes), a town of nearly 10,000 inhabitants, situated on the rt. bank of the Dordogne, here a tidal river, capable of receiving vessels of 300 tons burthen, and crossed by a bridge of brick, like that of Bordeaux, at the confluence of the L'Isle, which is traversed by an iron bridge. It is a neat and regularly built town, founded, it is said, by Edward I., on the site of the "Condatis portus" mentioned by Ausonius.

An interesting excursion may be made from Libourne up the valley of the Dordogne to St. Emilion, a town of 3,100 inhabitants (3 m. distant), celebrated for its wines, and remarkable for the antique buildings it contains; viz. a ruined Castle, surmounted by a square keep tower, in a style resembling the Norman; a monolithic church cut in the rock; a round Gothic church, called the Rotonde; the Parish or Collegiate Church, a fine building surmounted by a graceful tower, octagonal above, square below; the ruins of several other churches; and a handsome building, the Palais du Cardinal de Cantarac.

18 Castillon. Under the walls was fought, in 1453, the battle in which valiant Lord Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury,

"The Frenchman's only scourge, Their kingdom's terror, and black Nemesis," hemmed in by a French force greatly superior to his own, was slain, at the age of nearly 80 years, gallantly fighting along with his son, the Lord Lisle, whom his father in vain counselled to depart out of the field, seeing that all was lost,—a real incident, which has furnished Shakespeare with a fine scene. The result of Talbot's defeat and death was the capture of Bordeaux from the English, and their final expulsion from Guienne. Near Moutraval, on the rt. bank of the Dordogne, a tomb was formerly pointed out under the name of Talbot's; but it is known that his body was transported by his friends to England. 3 m. from Castillon, on the l. of the road but accessible only by rough cross roads, is the Castle of St. Michel de Montaigne, the birthplace of Montaigne, the philosopher of the 16th century, and Shakespeare's favourite author. His room is preserved in the gate tower, over the entrance, and is decorated with Greek and Latin sentences; among them

"Homo sum: humani à me nihil alienum puto."

There is a pleasing view from the terrace.

The distance from Libourne is about 12 m.

The new road to Bordeaux, after crossing the bridge over the Dordogne, passes through 16 Beychac.

Shortly before reaching Carbon Blanc, our road falls into that from Angoulême to Bordeaux, described in R. 64., while 15 BORDEAUX itself will be found in R. 73.

ROUTE 73.

TOULOUSE TO BORDEAUX BY MOISSAC, AGEN, MARMANDE, DESCENT OF THE GARONNE.

256 kilom. = 158½ Eng. m.
Malleposte daily in 16 hours.
Diligences daily.
Steamers ply on the Garonne from Agen or Marmande to Bordeaux.

The first 2 stages from Toulouse by

17 St. Jory, and

12 Grisolles, are the same as R. 70. p. 246., but we turn to the l., out of the road to Paris by Montauban, before reaching

16 La Vitarelle.

The Garonne runs nearly parallel with the road, but so far off (1½ to 2 m.) as scarcely to be seen.

After skirting the little town of St. Porquier, and crossing the road from Montauban to Auch, we reach 13 Castel Sarrazin, a town of 7,000 inhabitants, carrying on some trade in the corn grown on the fertile plain around. Opinions differ as to the origin of the name; some deriving it from the Saracens, who may have built the castle, of which scanty remains exist, to secure themselves in this part of France; others, from Castel sur Azin, the name of the small stream flowing through it. The Abbé de Prades, one of the philosophers of the 18th century, and a friend of Voltaire, was born here.

The river Tarn, flowing down from Montauban to join the Garonne, is crossed before entering 7 Moissac (Inns: Grand Soliel), a town of 10,165 inhabitants on the rt. bank of the Tarn.

Its church, dedicated to St. Pierre and St. Paul, once attached to a celebrated abbey founded by Clovis, or more probably by St. Amand of Maes-tricht in the 7th century, has a very remarkable portal, which was added, in the early part of the 12th century, to the still older church. It is a deeply recessed porch, preceding a pointed arch, the mouldings and tympanum of which, over the door, are enriched with the most fantastic sculptures, designed with the utmost boldness and fancy. Figures of apostles, saints, angels, bas-reliefs, fanciful patterns and mouldings, have been dashed off with wonderful freedom. The central pier, supporting the doorway, and the side walls, under the porch, are similarly adorned. In the interior are some very early Mosaics.

The cloisters, a range of pointed arches, resting on twin pillars with singular capitals, are supposed to have been constructed at the same time.

An ancient fountain in the town merits notice.

A hilly stage intervenes between Moissac and 14 Malause, a prettily-situated town, whose ancient castle has been destroyed since the Revolution. The flat land ceases here, and the country around is very pleasing: the Garonne, which the road now approaches more closely, is a charming feature in the landscape.

The little town of Valence is passed, and a few miles further the road runs along a sort of terrace or quay by the side of the Garonne, through 12 La Magistère.

10 Croquelardit.

About half way between Toulouse and Bordeaux lies

10 Agen, (Inns: H. du Petit St. Jean, very good, capital cuisine, famed for its Terrines de Nérac, its pâtés aux truffes; H. de France.)

Agen, chef lieu of the Dept. Lot et Garonne, is an uninteresting town of 12,500 inhabitants, most agreeably situated on the l. bank of the Garonne, between it and the gently sloping height, covered with vineyards and country houses, called Côte de l'Ermitage. It is a very old town, chiefly of narrow streets. The Garonne is here crossed by a bridge of stone, and also by a suspension bridge, between which and the town runs a beautiful avenue of trees, forming an agreeable promenade called Les Graviers. The old church of St. Caprais, is a fine Romanesque building with numerous apses, and has been well restored. There are a few scanty remains of the cathedral of St. Etienne, destroyed at the Revolution, and its site is now become a beast-market.

The préfecture was originally the episcopal palace, and is a handsome edifice. An aqueduct for the canal is in progress.

The town was known to the Romans under the name Aginum. The early Christians suffered severe persecution here from the Roman prætor; and St. Vincent, the 2d bishop, and many followers, underwent martyrdom, being torn to pieces on the spot now occupied by the Fontaine St. Vincent. Agen suffered much from the fortunes of war, especially in the 14th century, when, by sieges and assaults, it passed repeatedly from the hands of the French to the English, and vice versâ. During the wars of the League, it was taken by the Duc de Matignon, with the aid of an engineer, who blew in one of the gates with a petard, 1591. Marguerite de Valois, who was in the town at the time, had great difficulty in securing a horse, with a pillion, for herself to escape, and post-horses for a portion of her maids of honour, many of whom were compelled to decamp "on foot without masks, others without riding-habits."

Those who have time should walk to the top of the rocky height of L'Ermitage, on the way to Villeneuve, for the sake of the view over the beautiful valley of the Garonne and the distant Pyrenees. In a pretty gorge or recess in the slope of the hill is the curious house of the erudite Julius Scaliger, whither he retired, in the reign of Francis I., after migrating from his native city, Verona. He died here 1558, and here his no less learned son, Joseph Julius Scaliger, was born. Agen is also the birth-place of Bernard Palissy, inventor of a beautiful species of earthenware, the Wedgewood of the 16th century, and not less scientific for his age, also of Lacépède, the naturalist, and of Bory de St. Vincent.

A great number of plum orchards clothe the neighbouring slopes and fields, and produce the celebrated prunes d'Agen, which form an article of considerable export.

Steamers navigate the Garonne as far up as Agen, when the river is of proper height: the descent hence to Bordeaux requires eight hours. The vessels are small and dirty; they do not take carriages, which must be sent by land by voiturier.

Malleposte to Auch and Pau; to Limoges and Orleans; to Bordeaux and Toulouse. The traveller bound to the Pyrenees may turn off here to Pau, by Lectoure.

10 Pont St. Hilaire.

11 Port St. Marie. Here is a suspension bridge over the Garonne.

Near the village of St. Côme, on the rt. of the road, the remains of a tower, called Tour de St. Côme, constructed of small square stones, and supposed to be of Roman origin, are worthy of notice. It stands at a short distance from 10 Aiguillon.

A town of nearly 2000 inhab. on the l. bank of the Lot, about a mile above its influx into the Garonne. Its principal building is the large château on an eminence left unfinished by the last Duc d'Aiguillon, noted for the part he took in the Revolution. But it is said to include portions of older construction. The duchy was created by Henri IV. 1599, to bestow it upon the Duc de Mayenne. The old castle so stoutly defended by the English in 1346, when besieged for 5 months by Jean Duc de Normandie, son of Philippe de Valois, with an army of 60,000 men, no longer exists. Although the prince directed against it twenty assaults in seven days, and though he had sworn not to move until it was taken, he was compelled to retire from before its walls, without having succeeded, being called off by intelligence of his father's defeat at Crecy.

The Lot is crossed here by a bridge of eight arches.

11 Tonneins. Inn: H. d'Angleterre. A cheerful-looking town, chiefly of modern buildings, remarkable for the beauty of its situation, on the rt. bank of the Garonne, containing 6500 inhabitants, half of whom are Protestants. There are extensive manufactures of rope here, and a royal manufactory of tobacco, large quantities of which are cultivated around Tonneins, and throughout the departments of Lot and Lot et Garonne, under the inspection of the excise.

There is a suspension bridge over the Garonne here.

18 Marmande. Inns: H. de France; H. de la Providence; Tête noire.

A town of venerable aspect, many of its houses being timber-framed, but possessing no objects of interest to the traveller; its population amounts to 9,900. The bridge over the Garonne was injured by an inundation in 1835.

Below Marmande the navigation of the river is more sure, and steamers ply more regularly than above. One or two vessels run daily to Bordeaux, corresponding with the diligences to Toulouse.

The road avoids the windings made by the river below Marmande, being carried in nearly a straight line to 11 La Mothe Landeron, which lies within the Department of the Gironde.

L. The lofty old ruined tower of Meilhau remains long in sight of those who travel by water, owing to its position at the extremity of an acute angle or elbow made by the river.

A fine suspension bridge of a single curve, 558 ft. wide in the opening, spans the river at 9 La Réole.

A town of 4000 inhabitants, retaining the ruins of an ancient castle, which Froissart says was built by the Saracens. The vast Benedictine convent, rebuilt in the 17th century, and suppressed at the Revolution, has been converted into a nunnery. The Gothic church attached to it has been allowed to go to decay.

9 Candrot.

The ancient town of St. Macaire, retaining its feudal walls and possessing a fine Gothic church, is passed shortly before reaching the suspension bridge, 656 ft. long, which carries the road over the Garonne into 9 Langon. Inn: Hôtel de l'Empereur.

A town of 3745 inhabitants, partly surrounded by old walls on the l. bank of the Garonne, which, though Langon lies on the great line of traffic between Bordeaux and Toulouse, could be crossed only by a ferry boat, down to 1831.

The high roads from Bayonne and Pau to Bordeaux (R. 76, and 80.) unite with that from Toulouse at Langon. The tide runs up as far as Langon.

The post road hence to Bordeaux is described in R. 76.

The banks of the river are now clothed with vineyards, whose produce, chiefly white wines, enjoys some reputation and fetches a considerable price, being known by the name of Vins de Grave. Sauterne and Barsac are both grown in the commune of

L. Preignac, not far from Langon. Bertrand de Gout, who became pope under the name of Clement V., was born in the very picturesque castle of Villandraut, about 8 m. S. of Preignac.

L. Barsac, whence comes the white wine named after it, is a town of 2896 inhabitants.

Rt. Cadillac was the seat of the Duc d'Epernon, governor of the province of Guienne in the 17th century; the first duke, who was the favourite of Henri III., but died in the prison of Loches, built the Chateau (1598), which is now converted into a female Penitentiary. His splendid monument, attributed to Girardon, erected by his son in the parish church, was destroyed at the Revolution, except one statue now in the Louvre. There is a great manufacture of wine casks here.

12 l. Cerons, an old castle.

L. Podensac, 15 m. from Bordeaux.

Rt. At Langoiron, at the foot of the slope, are ruins of a castle built apparently in the 14th century: near this l'Ami des Enfans, Berguin, was born.

L. Portets is the place where the inhabitants of the Landes embark their rosin and timber, the produce of that sandy district, which stretches S. from the Garonne near this to the Adour.

11 l. Castres.

13 l. Bouscaut, at some distance from the river. Among the numerous villages which crowd the banks of the Garonne none appear to deserve particular mention. On approaching Bordeaux the wooded and vineclad (rt.) heights of Floirac form a pleasing feature in the view. The bridge, p. 226.

11 l. Bordeaux. Inns: Hôtel de France, 29. Rue Esprit des Lois; Hôtel de Rouen, 11. Fossé de l'Intendance; Hôtel de Paris, frequented by English; Hôtel de Richelieu; Hôtel de la Paix (Sansots), beds, 2 fr.; sitting room, 3 fr.; F. K. excellent patés de perdrix.

Bordeaux, the second sea-port town of France, which may be styled its Liverpool, containing 110,000 inhabitants, is placed on the l. bank of the Garonne, on a spot where its voluminous stream, deep enough for vessels of 1200 tons burthen, makes a very regular curve, which being lined with handsome buildings of varied architecture, chiefly Italian, forms a noble crescent lined with quays not less than 3 m. long, surmounted by several Gothic towers and antique spires, in the back ground. No city in Europe, except perhaps St. Petersburg, can display a more splendid quay than this. The river abreast of the town, 2000 ft. wide, and 18 to 30 ft. deep, is filled with shipping up to the magnificent bridge, the handsomest in France. (See p. 226.) This noble exterior, equally striking to the stranger whether he approaches by water or by land from the side of Paris, is borne out by the aspect of a large part of its interior, which has a courtly rather than a commercial air. The Rue du Chapeau Rouge and de l'Intendance running E. and W. through the heart of the town, nearly separate the old town, of narrow and insignificant though very populous streets, from the N. or more modern quarter, consisting of wide openings: broad streets, extensive places, and avenues, and gardens running into one another, which render Bordeaux a sprawling city, difficult to get over on foot, but omnibuses and neat fiacres are fortunately very abundant.

The Place and Allées de Tournay are so named from an ancient intendant of the province, who in 1750 led the way in improving the city.

Some of the finest streets and rows of houses, and the open Place Louis Philippe terminating at the river side with two lofty rostral columns, occupy the site of a citadel called Château Trompette built by Vauban for Louis XIV., dismantled under Louis XVI., and removed since the Restoration. The construction of this new quarter has united with the town of Bordeaux the vast Quartier des Chartrons (so called from a convent of Chartreux) stretching down by the river side, and once a distinct faubourg.

One of the most conspicuous, and at the same time handsomest buildings, is the Theatre, of good Grecian architecture faced with a Corinthian portico, of 12 arches and isolated on all sides; it is situated in a very central part of the town. It was erected 1780, under the direction of the Duc de Richelieu by the architect Louis.

The Cathedral of St. André is distinguished by its 2 elegant spires 150 ft. high, at its S. extremity, said to have been erected by the English (?), and flanking a pointed portal enriched with statues and bas-reliefs, above which is a fine rose-window surmounted by a gabel. The nave partly in the round Romanesque style, partly, towards the W. end, repaired in a bungling manner in the 15th century, after the destruction of a part of the church by an earthquake, is destitute of aisles, and remarkable only for its breadth — 56 ft., which being out of all proportion with its height, deprives it of the chief merit and characteristic of Gothic architecture — elevation. The choir is more elevated, and in a more truly Gothic style, with a triforium gallery and lofty clerestory windows; it is probably of the same age as the spires, and is also said to be by English architects. Our Richard II. was christened, and the marriage of Louis XIII. with the Infanta of Spain, Anne of Austria, was solemnized in this church, 1615.

Opposite the W. end of the cathedral is the Palais, and Hôtel de Ville.

Near the E. end of the cathedral, but quite detached from it, is the Tour de Peyberland, a noble structure 200 ft. high, square below, and supported by buttresses, but gradually diminishing from its base until it terminates in a circular top. It was originally surmounted by a spire, which rose to a height of 300 ft. It is named from Pierre Berland, who rose from being the son of a poor labourer in Médoc to be bishop of Bordeaux, and caused it to be erected in 1430. During the Reign of Terror it was condemned to destruction, but the spire alone suffered, the rest resisting all attacks owing to its solidity. Its handsome windows, however, were stopped, and it was converted into a shot tower, in which capacity it still continues to bear the words, "Fabrique du plomb de chasse."

L'Eglise Ste. Croix, situated quite at the S. extremity of the town, near the quay, considerably above the bridge, is supposed to be the oldest church here, though a much earlier age has been assigned to it by some than it can claim, as its oldest parts cannot date farther back than the 10th or 11th century. Its W. front, quite irregular and without uniformity owing to its partial destruction and subsequent repairs, is a specimen of richly decorated Romanesque architecture, and from its age and quaint ornaments deserves some notice. Its semicircular portal and two lateral closed arcades are surrounded by mouldings elaborately carved, some with singular and unexplained naked groups of figures, intermixed with cable mouldings. In the tympanum above the door are three rows of bas-reliefs, in a style curiously resembling the Egyptian. The rest of the façade and the wall of the tower rising on the one side, is occupied by arcades; groups of twisted or grooved pillars flank the portal, and 3 tiers of 4 small pillars, placed side by side one above the other, serve instead of buttresses to the tower.

The interior is of later date and inferior interest: its clustered roof rests on clumsy drum-like piers, partly plain, partly surrounded by shafts, some of them surmounted by curious stiffly-carved capitals. It contains a handsome canopied tomb of an abbot, in decorated Gothic. In a chapel on the l. as you enter, the pannelled walls of which are decorated with tolerable paintings from the life of the Virgin by an old Italian artist, Vasetti, is an oblong baptismal font, bearing on 2 sides well executed bas-reliefs of the Last Supper, with decorated ornaments.

In descending the quay from St. Croix, you pass, a little above the bridge, near the church of St. Michael, situated nearly on a line with the bridge, and distinguished by its lofty detached tower, loses much of its effect by being hemmed in with mean houses. Its N. front is a superb Gothic elevation in the florid style (15th century.). It has an elegant rose window framed within a richly decorated arch, whose mouldings are curved back below it. Under it is the florid porch. Over the door are placed a pair of bas-reliefs representing the Sacrifice of Isaac and the Paschal Lamb, dating from the 16th century; they are separated by a charming group of wonderful expression, representing Judas's kiss. Within the church, at the back of this portal, over the door, is another group, an "Ecce Homo," of the same period, and a century earlier than the bas-reliefs on either side of it, which represent St Michael destroying the Dragon, and Adam and Eve. The nave and choir are nearly uniform, and of noble pointed Gothic; the choir (about the 13th century) has a triforium and clerestory running behind the high altar, so that the E. end is like any compartment at the side, except that the space below, behind the altar, is filled with a shallow apse.

There are a few good painted windows, and in the N. side of the nave a chapel furnished with an altar in the richest and most overladen renaissance style. Within its niches are three graceful statues — the Virgin and Child, St. Catherine, and St. Barbara.

Near the W. end stands the elegant detached belfry, 178 feet high, which now bears the telegraph, but was originally surmounted by a steeple, and rose to a height of 300 ft. It is of octagonal form, supported by elegant buttresses, and was built between 1472 and 1480. In the vault beneath it are shown from 40 to 50 human bodies, interred in the vault below before the Revolution, and preserved by its dry and antiseptic qualities, until they are now like leather, or salt fish, — a disgusting sight.

St. Seurin (St. Severin) situated beyond the Place Dauphine in the Allées d'Amour, is remarkable for a finely carved triple S. porch, consisting of a trefoil-headed door, enriched with statues of good workmanship, well-executed draperies, and dating from 1267. They represent the 12 apostles and 2 more sacred personages.

The W. front is modern, but is a tolerable attempt to follow the Romanesque style. The W. porch consists of three detached low vaults, one within the other, supported on pillars with curiously carved capitals.

Within this church, on the rt. hand or S. wall, is a curious bas-relief within a pointed arch above a doorway, now walled up, representing a pope saying mass (supposed to be Clement V., archbishop of Bordeaux) assisted by a cardinal. On the opposite wall is another bas-relief of seven figures in niches. The Gothic woodwork of the choir is curious but sadly bedaubed with paint. Under the seats are numerous grotesque groups. The high altar is decorated with fourteen curiously carved bas-reliefs of marble, framed, representing the legend of St. Severin, bishop of Bordeaux in the 5th century. On the one side of the chancel stands the Bishop's Throne, a curiously carved seat, under a canopy, all of marble, richly sculptured. This church was the cathedral before St. André. Under the choir is an early crypt with 3 aisles and semicircular arches. At the W. end rises a tower surrounded by a double row of circular arcades.

In the Chapelle of the College, a bold Gothic structure, is the monument of Montaigne, the essayist, a native of Montaigne St. Michel in Perigord, who was mayor of Bordeaux in 1553. He is represented in full armour according to the custom of the period, laid on his back, with his hands joined in prayer. The statue is a well executed work of the 16th century. No. 17. in the same street (Rue de Montaigne) is his modest mansion, in which he lived and died 1592.

These are the most remarkable ecclesiastical edifices of Bordeaux, but it retains still a monument of the Roman city Burdigala, in the fragment of an amphitheatre, now called Palais Gallien, not quite accurately, because though possibly built in the reign of the Emperor Gallienus, it was not a palace but a circus, capable of containing 1500 persons. It is supposed to have been built by Tetricus, one of the so-called 30 tyrants who assumed the purple here. It was condemned to destruction 1792, and has been since gradually pulled down to build houses, so that it is now reduced to mere fragments, interesting to the antiquary alone, of an oval wall formed of small stones with layers of tiles between them, interrupted by the broken archways which lead into it. The interior is occupied by houses and workshops, and two streets cross in the centre of it; so that you may stand in the midst of its area and scarcely recognize these ancient remains.

Bordeaux has preserved two of its feudal town gates: one, now called Tour de l'Horloge, built 1246 by Henry III. of England, surmounted by 3 pointed turrets, formed part of the old Hôtel de Ville. The other, Porte de Caillou, at the end of the Rue du Palais, was built 1492 to commemorate the victory of Charles VIII. at Fornova. The old Bourse in the Place d'Aquilaine, now an office of roulage, but built as a palace for Charles IX.; and the old Evêché in a narrow street near it, are picturesque examples of the architecture of the XVI. century.

Bordeaux, like almost every other chef lieu de Département in France, has a Gallery of Paintings. They are placed in the numerous saloons of the Hôtel de Ville; but except for their number they are in no wise remarkable, and the less said of their merits the more true the description. Those who take pleasure in the works of the French school will find wherewithal to gratify their taste.

The Musée situated in Rue St. Dominique, a street leading out of the Chaussée de Tourny, contains a collection of antique fragments, inscriptions, altars, &c., chiefly Roman, found in the vicinity of Bordeaux, two sarcophagi with bas-reliefs of inferior merit and late date, also fragments of the marble bas-reliefs, representing the battle of Fontenoy, and the capture of Port Mahon by the Duc de Richelieu, which ornamented the pedestal of the statue of Louis XV. in the Place Royale, destroyed at the Revolution. In the Musée d'Histoire Naturelle are tolerable collections of shells, of the fossils of the neighbourhood of Bordeaux, marked by blue tickets, and of the marbles of the Pyrenees. A specimen of a sea-eagle was shot at La Teste. These museums are open daily to strangers.

In the same locality, Rue St. Dominique, is the library of more than 100,000 volumes, partly the bequest of a member of the old parliament of Bordeaux, partly the remains of conventual libraries forfeited at the Revolution. A copy of Montaigne's Essays with marginal notes in his own hand, and the first French translation of Livy illuminated, are among its curiosities.

The Bourse, the centre of the commerce and trade of the city, is situated on the quay at the extremity of the Rue Chapeau Rouge, between it and the Place Royale. The merchants meet here daily, under a glass dome which covers the inner court of the building, 98 ft. long by 65 broad.

The commercial importance of Bordeaux is due to its situation on a fine navigable river where the rise and all of tides amounts to twenty feet, in which vessels of more than 1000 tons may ride at anchor, at a distance of about 70 m. from the sea. It is connected by the same river, through the Canal du Midi, with the Mediterranean. The commerce of Bordeaux is carried on chiefly with South America and Mexico, the United States, French Colonies, and Great Britain. Its principal articles of trade and exports consists in wines known in France as vins de Bordeaux, and in England as claret, a name of doubtful origin. From 50,000 to 60,000 tuns of wine are exported annually. Nearly half of the best quality and highest price is sent to Great Britain; very little is consumed in France. The Quartier des Chartrons is the focus of this trade; here the principal wine-merchants have their counting-houses and cellars.

The Cellars of MM. Barton and Guestier, leading bankers and wine-merchants here, are among "the lions" of Bordeaux. They are two stories in height, and commonly contain from 8000 to 9000 casks (barriques) of wine, never less than 4000 or 5000. The duty paid by this house in one year alone to the British government has amounted to 300,000 francs.

For an account of the wines of Bordeaux, see p. 267.

Among the delicacies furnished by the Bordeaux markets to the table are royans, a species of sardines (pilchards), caught in autumn; Ceps, a sort of mushroom cooked in oil; muriers, small birds something like beccaficas; Ortolans, caught in August near Agen and the Pyrenees.

The Café de Paris is a tolerable Restaurant.

Consuls reside here from the chief powers of Europe and America; Great Britain is most respectably represented by Mr. Scott, No. 7. Place du Champ de Mars.

The English church service is performed on Sundays at the English Protestant ch., on the Pavé des Chartrons, recently built.

The Poste aux Lettres is at No. 5. Rue Porte Dijeaux: a letter reaches London in four days from this.

Public baths on a very extensive scale in two fine buildings on either side of the Place Louis Philippe.

Newspapers of all countries, English, French, German, Spanish, &c., may be found in great abundance at the Cercle, 7. Place de la Comedie, opposite the theatre.

Paul Chaumas Gayet, the bookseller, 34. Rue fossé du Chapeau Rouge, keeps a number of topographical works, maps, &c., besides the newest French publications.

Besides the Grand Theatre, mentioned already (p. 261.), open commonly three times a week, there is a smaller Théatre Français or des Variétés, near the extremity of the Rue de l'Intendance adjoining the Place Dauphine.

Omnibuses run along the quay from one end to the other, and in a direction across the town, from the river to its outskirts.

Fiacres stand for hire in the principal places: they are better but rather more expensive than those of Paris, charging 2 fr. for the course, or, by time, 2 fr. for the first hour, and 1 fr. 80 c. for every hour after.

Conveyances.—Mallepostes daily to Paris by Tours in 38 hours; to Bayonne in 18 hours; to Nantes in 25 hours; to Toulouse in 16 hours.

Diligences daily to Paris (three or four) in 60 hours; to Toulouse several; to Bayonne in 25 hours; to Pau, Bagnères, Cauterets, and the Pyrenæan baths, to Libourne and Perigueux; to Nantes by Niort, Rochefort, and Rochelle. You may post from Bordeaux to Paris in 51 hours, exclusive of stoppages.

Steamers to Nantes, 3 times a month; to Havre, 3 times a month in 60 hours, fare 80 fr.

To SOUTHAMPTON, once a fortnight.

Steamers on the Garonne. — Down the river to Blaye and Pauillac daily, starting from the quay abreast of the rostral columns; to Royan, 21 m. from Rochefort, in correspondence with coaches thither (see R. 62.), twice a week in 7 hours.

Up the river, daily to Langon and Marmande (R. 73.) on the way to Pau or Toulouse; starting from the quay just above the bridge.

Environs of Bordeaux.

A railroad has been formed from Bordeaux to La Teste, an inconsiderable place 31 m. distant, a journey of about 2 hours, near the sea, on the borders of a great salt lake in the flat district of the Landes, whose sole productions are salt and pitch from the large fir forests.

This railroad has been most unaccountably made through a line of country where no previous traffic existed, to a spot possessing no commercial or manufacturing importance, in the vain hopes of generating these advantages in the midst of a desert. The speculators should have known that a railway is rather the consequence than the cause of traffic and commerce.

An excursion to La Teste (Inn, Tete Noir), will give the traveller some notion of the nature of the sandy district called Les Landes, and probably afford him an opportunity of seeing some of its inhabitants mounted on stilts.

The banks of the Garonne, below Bordeaux and the wine district of Médoc, which produces the claret, are described in R. 74.

The Garonne above Bordeaux, in R. 74, p. 267.

The excursions to the Château de la Brède, the birth-place of Montesquieu, 2 hours' drive (R. 76.), or to Blanquefort, the castle of the Black Prince, p. 267.

The wire suspension bridge of Cubsac, on the way to Angoulême and Tours, is about 8 m. distant, see p. 225, and is worth a visit.

Passages in the History of Bordeaux.

The earliest mention of Bordeaux is in the geography of Strabo, who calls it Βουρδιγαλα, under which it was known to the Romans, and described in som pretty verses by Ausonius the poet, who was born here, in the 4th century.

" Impia jamdudum condemno silentia quod te,
O patria, insignem Baccho, fluviisque, virisque,
Non inter primas memorem. * * *
Burdigala est natale solum, clementia cœli
Mitis ubi, et riguæ larga indulgentia terræ;
Ver longum, brumæque breves, juga frondea subsunt,
Fervent æquoreos imitata fluenta meatus."
AUSON. Claræ Urbes.

Hadrian created it the capital of 2d Aquitania.

Bordeaux belonged for nearly 300 years to the kings of England, who obtained it along with the duchy of Aquitaine by the marriage of Eleanor of Guienne, sole heiress of the last native duke, with Henry II., in 1152, and her inheritance became the fruitful cause of strife between England and France.

The Black Prince, having been invested by his father with the government of Guienne, resided many years at Bordeaux. Hence he set forth on that adventurous foray into the centre of France which led to the battle of Poitiers (p. 221.). Here he held a brilliant court, to which Don Pedro the Cruel repaired, when driven out of Spain, with his two fair daughters, who were here married to the English Princes John of Gaunt, and the Earl of Cambridge.

Here the Black Prince's son, Richard II., was born, and surnamed from his birthplace Richard of Bordeaux.

The Bordelais retained their affection for the English long after the downfall of our sway in the rest of France, in the reign of Henry VI.; revolting from the rule of Charles VII. to receive within their walls the valiant Talbot (1453), but his speedy defeat and death forced them again to submit to the French monarch.

Bordeaux was the seat of one of the provincial Parliaments of France, a high court of justice composed of laymen and ecclesiastics, who registered the royal decrees and transmitted them to the lower courts.

One of the most momentous events of the civil war of the Fronde was the siege of Bordeaux, undertaken by the royal army with Mazarin, young Louis XIV., and his mother at its head, while the city held for the Princess de Condé, the Dukes of la Rochefoucauld and Bouillon, at the head of their vassals assisted by the towns-people and backed by the parliament of Bordeaux. The heroic wife of the great Condé having escaped the clutches of the Cardinal, who already held her husband in prison, and wished to transfer her and her son to like durance, traversed the country from Chantilly, and after a series of adventures and escapes threw herself into the city, where the interest of the Condés was strong. Her beauty, eloquence, and forlorn position enlisted in her favour the enthusiasm of the magistrates and towns-people, and upon her persuasion they agreed to admit her allies and resist the force of Mazarin. She captivated all hearts, and became, as it were, queen of Bordeaux, then the 2d city of the empire, and Condé, while shut up in Vincennes and employed in watering his pot of violets, learned with surprise that his feeble princess was acting the part of a general, conducting the defence of a town, and exposing her life on the walls. The defence was conducted with such obstinacy, that at the end of several weeks Mazarin having made little progress was happy to offer fair terms to the Frondeurs. The citizens of Bordeaux were right glad to be released from the blockade just at the approach of the vintage, for their warlike enthusiasm had begun to cool at the prospect of being shut out from their vineyards.

A great impulse was given to the French Revolution by the inhabitants of Bordeaux. At the beginning of the reign of Louis XVI. the parliament of Bordeaux, having refused to acknowledge the edict of the king, was banished to Libourne, and in consequence contributed largely to the clamour for the assembling together of the States-general. Many of the persons of greatest eloquence and talent sent as members to the legislative assembly, including Vergniaud, Guadet, Gensonné, Ducos, &c. were returned by the department of the Gironde, whence the party which they composed was called the Girondins. But having themselves brought on all the evils of the Revolution, they were swallowed up by the monster they had created, and guillotined for the most part by the stronger party of the Montagne, which succeeded them in the convention. Bordeaux had a Reign of Terror of its own; the guillotine was erected in the square near the centre of the town, called Place Dauphine (in honour of the Dauphin, afterwards Louis XIII.), but then named Place de Justice, and some of her best citizens were sacrificed. No less than 500 persons suffered death here, whom either envy of their merits, or cupidity for their wealth, caused to be condemned under the false charge of conspiracy against the sovereignty of the people.

The names of some of the streets afford a curious commentary on the history of the town, and a proof among many of the mutability of the French nation. The Place Louis Philippe was Place Louis XVI. down to 1830, and a statue of that king had been prepared, and its pedestal actually erected when the July Revolution broke out. The Cours de Douze Mars was the name given to the row of houses now called Trente Juillet, because on the former day, in 1814, the Duc d'Angoulême made his triumphant entry into Bordeaux, at the invitation of the mayor Lynch (whose name has also been erased from a street which bore it), and amidst the acclamations of a part of the inhabitants.

On the 8th March in that year 2 divisions of the British army under Marshal Beresford marched upon Bordeaux; where the presence of the dauntless Duchesse d'Angoulême, who had thrown herself into the town to revive the dormant spirit of loyalty towards her family, and the intrigues of the Duc d'Angoulême, contrary to the advice and wishes of the Duke of Wellington, caused the premature proclamation of the Bourbons by the royalist mayor. The Duke had expressly declared that "he could not interfere to produce any declaration in favour of the Bourbons, nor to support their measures by military force."

ROUTE 74.

THE GARONNE AND GIRONDE FROM BORDEAUX TO LA TOUR DE CORDOUAN; THE WINE DISTRICT OF ME'DOC.

100 kilom. = 62 Eng. m.

Steamers daily to Blaye and Pauillac — 2 or 3 times a week to Royan.

Diligences daily along the SW. side of the river to Château Margaux, and Lesparre, through the midst of Médoc, and along the rt. bank to Blaye. The road on the W. side of the Garonne passes Bouseat Bruges, so named by Flemish settlers established here by Henri IV. to drain the marshes, and Blanquefort, whose castle, a favourite residence of the Black Prince, still preserves part of its outer circuit walls, and fosse, and some of its apartments entire. The leopards of England are only half effaced from the walls. It is a picturesque object. Thence it runs to Margaux.

Bordeaux Wines.

The long tongue of land stretching N. from Bordeaux, between the sea on the one hand, and the Garonne and Gironde on the other, is called Médoc (quasi medio aquæ), because nearly surrounded by water. It is the N. termination of the extensive district of sand-hills and sand plains, called Les Landes, extending from Bayonne north, which changes to a bank of gravel on approaching the l. bank of the Garonne, and forms a narrow strip of land no where more than 1 or 2 m. broad, raised from 50 to 80 ft. above the river, which is planted with vines, and contains some of the most precious vineyards in the world. The transition is abrupt from this gravel bank near the river to the mere Landes or sandy waste running to the W. and S. of it, producing nothing but firs, furze, and heath. The soil of Médoc is a light gravel, and indeed on the spots where some of the best wine is produced, it appears a mere heap of white quartz pebbles rolled, and about the size of an egg, mixed with sand. The best wine is not produced where the vine bush is most luxuriant, but on the thinner soils, where it is actually stunted, and in ground fit for nothing else, where even weeds disdain often to grow. Yet this stony soil is congenial to the vine, retaining the sun's heat about its roots after sunset, so that, in the language of the country, it works (travaille) in maturing its precious juices as much by night as by day. The accumulation of sand and pebbles, of which this soil is composed, is apparently the spoils of the Pyrenean rocks, brought down by the torrents tributary to the Garonne and other great rivers, and deposited in former ages on the borders of the sea. At the depth of 2 or 3 feet from the surface, occurs a bed of indurated conglomerate, called alios, which requires to be broken up before the vine will grow, as it would stop the progress of the plant, being impenetrable to its roots. The vine is trained exclusively in the fashion of espaliers, fastened to horizontal laths, attached to upright posts at a height not exceeding 1½ or 2 feet from the ground, running in an uninterrupted line from one end of the vineyard to the other. Manure is scarcely used in the culture, only a little fresh mould is laid over the roots from time to time; but the plough is driven between the vines four times every season, alternately laying open and covering its roots: this is performed by oxen, who, with steady and unvarying pace, thread the ranks without treading on the plants. Manure is supposed to depreciate the quality of the wine, and moisture or standing water is most injurious to the plant. The vine begins to produce at 5 years of age, and continues productive sometimes when 200 years old, provided its roots have found a congenial soil to insinuate (pivoter) their fibres, which they sometimes do to a distance of 40 or 50 feet, when the soil is dry and deep enough to protect them from the sun. The wines are classed into growths (crus), according to their excellence, and only a very small part of the strip of land before mentioned is capable of producing the "premiers crus;" indeed so capricious is the vine, that within a few yards of the finest vineyards, it degenerates at once. The following list will show the classification of Bordeaux wines, or clarets as we call them in England (though whence the name, or what its meaning, are unknown in Médoc), together with the average quantity of each produced in one season. The tun, or tonneau, contains 4 hogsheads, called barriques.

First Growths.	Tuns.
Château Margaux -	140—160
Château Lafitte -	120
Château Latour -	120
Haut Brion - -	60—80.

The last is properly a vin de Grave, grown on the Garonne above Bordeaux, yet is classed with Médoc wines; it is less in repute now than formerly.

Second Growths.	Tuns.
Mouton (Lafitte) -	120—146
Léoville, the best of the wines of St. Julien -	145—186
Rauzan (Margaux) -	75— 95

La Rose Gruau, Pichon Longueville, Durfort, Degorse, Lascombe, Cos-Destournelle, in all about 800 tuns.

It is needless to enumerate those of 3d, 4th, and 5th rate growths, many of which are produced in the vicinity of the first-rate vineyards, at the villages or in the communes of Margaux, Lafitte, Latour, without partaking in their excellences. The goodness of a season will sometimes give an excellence to second class wines, while in bad years those of first class sink to mediocrity, and are not fit for exporting to England (such is the importance of maintaining the character of these wines there), but go to Holland, or are retained in France. This is so well understood, that some years ago the proprietor of the vineyard of La Rose used to hoist on a flagstaff above his house, the English flag in good years, the Dutch in middling, and the French in bad years. England consumes more than one half of the premiers crus, and very little of inferior sorts; Russia takes a good deal, Paris little of the best; Holland is the great mart for wines of second quality, and the third rate sorts or vins ordinaires are chiefly used in France. An erroneous notion prevails in England that clarets are prepared for the English market, by a certain mixture to brandy. This is not the case; brandy would destroy the wine. A mixture does take place to adapt the wines to the English palate; but they are doctored with strong-bodied (corsés) Rhone wines, and chiefly with Hermitage, the principal consumption of which is for this purpose. The practice of mixing is very general. The characteristic of the good wines of Bordeaux is their aroma or bouquet; spirit they have none, and will distil away into nothing, yet the aroma will be retained and penetrate even through the Rhone wine, when it is judiciously added. The average price of a hogshead (barrique) of genuine wine of first growth, in the cellar of the first houses at Bordeaux, is 50*l.*, which with carriage, duty, bottling, &c. amounts to 80*l.*, rather more than 70*s.* a dozen. A first growth wine of a fine vintage is scarcely to be had at a less price; indeed the whole produce of Château Margaux has been sold on the spot for 1000 francs the hogshead, in the case of a very first-rate vintage. Very great skill is shown, and much experience required in the making of the wine, in the compounding of various growths and qualities, and in the preservation of it: a promising vintage often disappoints expectations, while a bad one sometimes turns out excellent; indeed all that can be said of the premiers crus is, that they are the wines which most often succeed. The total produce of Médoc, in average years, is from 150,000 to 170,000 hogsheads, of which about 6,000 go to England.

Travellers desiring to visit the principal vineyards of Médoc may take the steamer to Pauillac (which may be reached in 4 hours, or 6 against tide), which is not far from Lafitte and Latour, or the coaches which run daily will convey them to Margaux. The high road thither, and thence to Pauillac, traverses the centre of the narrow strip of land forming the wine district. For some distance out of Bordeaux it passes a series of country houses.

The Garonne below Bordeaux is a fine broad tidal river, but very much charged with mud, having few features of interest, its banks being chiefly low, while an intervening fringe of marsh and meadow land, grown over with willows, separates the river from the vineyards, little of which can be seen from the deck of the steamer.

Nothing can be finer than the view of the long crescent quay of Bordeaux, and the broad river crowded with shipping, many of them 3 masted vessels, as the steamer casts off from the quay, opposite the rostral columns, and skirts the long Faubourg des Chartrons.

Rt. Lormont is a picturesque eminence, covered with wood and vineyards, interspersed with some neat country houses on its top, and below its steep side. In a recess under the hill stands the village, with a domed church, surmounted by a château.

Rt. below Montferrand, a small village hid by poplars, is a large Château, the residence of M. Peyronnet, one of the ministers of Charles X. who signed the ordonnances.

Rt. The tongue of land between the Garonne and Dordogne, called Entre Deux Mers, which produces a vast quantity of wines of inferior quality, now draws to a termination at the low point called Bec d'Ambés. The union of the two rivers forms the broad estuary of the Gironde, whence the department is named. The monsters of the revolutionary Mountain, after overwhelming in 1793 their antagonists, the Girondins (so called because the leaders came from this part of the country), swamped even the name of the department, which for several months bore that of "Ambés." A long line of low hills, faced towards the water with cliffs, lines the l. bank of the Gironde and Dordogne. Looking up the Dordogne, you perceive on an eminence Bourg, a small town of 3855 inhabitants, where Louis XIV. when a child resided with his mother, Anne of Austria, for nearly a year (1649–50) during the continuance of the siege of Bordeaux (see p. 266). Mazarin, in order to superintend the operations and watch the leaders of the Fronde within the city, had repaired in person to the S., dragging with him the King, the Regent, and the Court. The ladies in waiting complained bitterly of the want of a theatre to enliven the ennui of their residence, and the cardinal got angry with the mayor because the whole place could not furnish a sedan-chair to carry him through the steep and dirty streets. The extensive vineyards around Bourg produced the wines (claret) esteemed the best in the district 200 years ago, before the cultivation of the vine in Médoc had commenced, which does not date farther back than 250 years.

Rt. The steamer stops to set down or take up passengers at the Pain du Sucre, a landing-place at the mouth of the Dordogne, close under the Bec d'Ambés, and about 1½ m. below Bourg. Two large islands are here formed in the middle of the Gironde.

L. Nearly abreast of the Pain de Sucre, a glimpse may be obtained of the mansion of Château Margaux, situated some distance inland: it is an Italian villa, the handsomest in Médoc, and belongs to the heirs of the Spanish banker, the Marquis d'Aguado, though rarely inhabited, owing to the malaria which prevails around it. It stands in the midst of the vineyards producing the celebrated wine of Château Margaux, the most esteemed growth of Médoc. The grape which yields it is small and poor to the taste, with a flavour slightly resembling that of black currants. The Château is about ½ m. from the village of Margaux, which abounds in neat whitewashed villas, seated in little gardens, amidst acacia hedges and trellised vines. It is about 20 m. distant from Bordeaux.

Rt. The yellow cliffs along the river side are pierced to form cellars, in which is deposited the wine grown above them; and for a considerable extent near Gauriac, they are excavated in quarries of building stone. At the base of the cliffs are several small villages.

Rt. Blaye. The dead walls and gloomy-looking modern bastions of the citadel of Blaye are seen projecting over the river at a height considerably above it. In the midst of them stands a fragment of the old feudal fortress, whose towers may be seen surmounting the turfed ramparts. This citadel was chosen as the prison of the Duchess de Berri, who was confined here in a double sense after her capture in La Vendée (see Nantes, p. 163.), having been brought to bed of a daughter in 1833. After a detention of 7 months she was sent back to Naples. The body of Roland the Brave was, according to tradition, transported hither from Roncesvaux, by Charlemagne, and interred in the Church of St. Romain, with his sword Durandal at his head, and his famous horn of ivory (Oliphant), with which he had awakened the echoes of Fuentarabia, at his feet. The body was afterwards transported to St. Seurin, at Bordeaux.

Opposite Blaye several islands have been formed in the middle of the river by the deposits brought down by the Dordogne and Garonne, and are constantly increasing. On one only of them is planted the little fort du Paté, so called from its round shape. It crosses its fire with that of the fortress of Blaye on the rt. bank, and of Fort Médoc on the l., and thus commands the passage of the Gironde.

To the N. of Margaux, the vines decline in quality; and it is not until after an interval of several miles of inferior vineyards, that we reach others, producing wine of reputation, in the vicinity of

L. Beycheville, lying within the commune of St. Julien, a name of note on account of the wine grown in it. The Château de Beychevelle, situated on the height in the midst of valuable vineyards, is the seat of M. Guestier, one of the first wine merchants of Bordeaux.

Here begin some of the most renowned vineyards of Médoc, which lie crowded together in almost uninterrupted succession, within a narrow space, stretching about 6 m. N. of Beycheville.

About 1½ m. off is Château Leoville, which produces one of the best second growths, nearly equalling the first growths. The estate is divided between Mr. Barton and M. de Las Cases. In the same commune is the vineyard of La Rose, a prime second growth, and in the adjoining one of St. Lambert, is the vineyard of Château Latour, yielding a well-known wine, premier cru. The estate, which does not exceed 330 acres, was sold a few years ago for 60,000*l*. The second growths, Pichon-Longueville and Mouton, come from the same quarter.

L. Pauillac, a small sea-port, behind which, at the distance of about 1½ m., is the vineyard of Château Lafitte, producing one of the three best wines of Bordeaux; it is the property of Sir Samuel Scott, and does not yield more than 400 hogsheads yearly. The region of good wines extends N. as far as Lesparre, but the wines are far inferior to those of the commune of Pauillac.

The aspect of the vine district of Médoc is that of an undulating country, slightly raised above the Garonne, affording here and there peeps of the river between the gentle hills and shallow gullies which intersect it. It abounds in marshes and stagnant pools, which render it unhealthy, so that the châteaux which occur in it are inhabited only for a small part of the year by their proprietors. Yet the district is populous, a group of cottages being attached to almost every vineyard, and inhabited by the peasants who cultivate it. The vineyards are open fields; even those of greatest value being for the most part unprovided with walls, or even hedges, in order to avoid the loss of any space of ground which must be left round the margin to allow the plough to turn. When the grapes begin to ripen, a temporary fence is formed round the vines, of twisted boughs interwoven with furze, to keep out the dogs, who are most destructive consumers of grapes. Further to deter both bipeds and quadrupeds from committing depredations, guards armed with guns are posted on the watch day and night, while streaks of paint, and bits of white paper stuck upon poles, announce that the vineyard is strewn with poisoned sausages, and that the grapes themselves are smeared with some deleterious mixture. The vines are planted in quincunx order on ridges (about 3 feet apart): they are trained to espaliers, and not allowed to rise more than 2 feet above the ground. In the best vineyards they barely cover the soil, but allow the singular mass of pebbles, of which it almost exclusively consists, to appear between the rows. The growth of the vine is confined within a narrow line of demarcation, and the transition is most abrupt from the most precious land to an uncultivated sandy desert. The distance of a few feet makes all the difference. The vintage takes place in the month of September; and it is then that Médoc presents a scene of bustle, activity, and rejoicing. The proprietors then repair hither with their friends and families to superintend the proceedings and make merry; vignerons pour in from the l. bank of the Gironde, to assist in the gathering. Busy crowds of men, women, and children, sweep the vineyard from end to end, clearing all before them like bands of locusts, while the air resounds with their songs and laughter. The utmost care is employed by the pickers to remove from the bunches all defective, dried, mouldy, or unripe grapes. Every road is thronged with carts filled with high-heaped tubs, which the labouring oxen are dragging slowly to the Cuvier de pressoir (pressing trough). This is placed usually in a lofty outhouse, resembling a barn, whence issue sounds of still louder merriment, and a scene presents itself sufficiently singular to the stranger. Upon a square wooden trough (pressoir) stand three or four men with bare legs all stained with purple juice, dancing and treading down the grapes as fast as they are thrown in, to the tunes of a violin. The labour of constantly stamping down the fruit is desperately fatiguing, and without music, would get on very slowly: a fiddler, therefore, forms part of every wine grower's establishment; and as long as the instrument pours forth its merry strains, the treaders continue their dance in the gore of the grape, and the work proceeds diligently. The next process is to strip (égrapper) the broken grapes and skins from the stalks, with an instrument called derapoir, and to pour the juice and skins into vats to ferment. The skin rises to the top, and the wine is drawn off into hogsheads as soon as fermentation is carried to the proper extent, in judging of which the utmost experience is required, as on it depends much of the quality of the vintage.

At Trompe-Loup is the Lazareth, where vessels from the Levant perform quarantine.

L. The cultivation of the vine ceases to the N. of Castillon, and the extreme point of Médoc, towards the mouth of the Gironde, consists of rich pasture land, famed for its breed of cattle, and some corn-fields. It lies on a level with the surface of the sea, and was redeemed from the condition of marsh by a colony of Flemings, invited over to France by Henri IV., who surrounded it with sea-dykes like their own country.

Rt. Mortagne. A diligence runs hence to Saintes in communication with the steamer.

Rt. Royan is a small sea-port town in the department of the Charante, about 25 m. from Rochefort, whither a diligence runs in correspondence with the steamer. (R. 62.) It is a station of pilots: and is resorted to for sea-bathing.

On an isolated rock outside the mouth of the Gironde, which is beset with dangerous sandbanks, rises the lighthouse called La Tour de Cordouan, whose beacon guides mariners entering or quitting the river. It is a circular structure of three stories, the central one being domed like a church, from the midst of which rises a sort of pepper-box turret. It was designed in the reign of Henri II. by Louis de Foix, one of the architects of the Escurial, 1611, who is said to have died here, and to have been buried within it. It replaced a lighthouse founded by the English 1362–71, while the Black Prince was governor of Guienne (see Rymer).

ROUTE 76.

BORDEAUX TO BAYONNE, ST. JEAN DE LUZ, AND THE SPANISH FRONTIER.

229 kilom. = 185 Eng. m.

Malleposte daily in 18 hours, diligences daily in 24 hours, to Bayonne.

For a mile or two out of Bordeaux a succession of neat villas lines the road, and the ground is mostly laid out in vineyards. Here, however, the vines grow upright, and are not trained along the ground as in the more famous district of Médoc (p. 268.). Their produce is a wine as black as ink, full of spirit, from which brandy is distilled. Before the end of the stage the country becomes open and heathy; it is, in fact, the border of that extensive region of flat sand called the Landes, to avoid which the high road to Spain makes a considerable circuit. See Route 77.

11 Bouscaut. Between 2 and 3 m. to the rt. of La Prade, a hamlet which is passed about the middle of this stage, lies the Château de la Brède, the birth-place and family seat of Montesquieu. It is a low many-sided castle, probably of the 15th century, surmounted by a circular donjon entirely surrounded by the waters of the Guémort, which forms a broad fosse around it, and served anciently to defend it from foes, since it can only be entered by three bridges (once drawbridges). It is far from imposing, either without or within; but retains its primitive condition nearly unaltered, together with some old portraits of the family Secondat, and, above all, the chamber of Montesquieu, with his simple bed, arm-chair, &c., nearly as he left it. The wainscotting on one side of the fire-place is rubbed by the motion of his foot resting against it, a habit attributed to him when seated in his easy chair lost in thought, meditating on his works. It was here that he composed his work "Sur la Grandeur et la Décadence des Romains," while it is reported that the dark feudal cachot beneath the castle, which is entered by a stair from his room, assisted him in his reflections "On the Liberty of the Subject."

13 Castres. The road ascends the valley of the Garonne, but at the distance of 3 or 4 m. from the river, whose banks are described in R. 73.

11 Cerans. Barsac, passed in this stage, produces one of the best white wines grown on the Garonne, and 4 or 5 m. S. of Preignac lies the château of Sauterne, which gives its name to the best of all the white wines of this district. (See p. 260.)

12 Langon on the l. bank of the Garonne, is described in R. 73. (Inn: Cheval Blanc.) Here the road to Toulouse (R. 73.) branches off, and our road quits the Garonne and turns nearly due S., penetrating through a portion of the Petites Landes. Few houses and no villages occur before 15 Bazas, an ancient town of 4300 inhab., which existed in the time of the Romans, and is mentioned under the name Vasates by Ausonius, whose father was born here. It has a fine Gothic church, which was once a cathedral. It is in the purest style of Gothic, without transepts. The sculpture, adorning the three portals of its façade, represents the call of St. Peter, the Coronation of the Virgin, and the Last Judgment, and is of great excellence. The angels presenting the souls to Christ, and the dead bursting from their graves, are executed with boldness and expression.

Bazas retains on its outskirts fragments of the old town walls.

17 Captieux lies in the midst of sand-wastes and pine forests; the country presents all the characters of the Landes, and the road enters the department so called shortly before reaching 15 Les Traverses.

14 Roquefort, an insignificant town of 1600 inhabitants, named from the rocks of tufa, which border the bank of the Douze, a tributary of the Adour. This place must not be confounded with Roquefort, famed for cheese, in the dépt. Aveyron, near Rodez.

About 20 m. W. of this, in the midst of the sandy Landes, is an obscure and wretched hamlet called Labrit or Albret. It was the cradle of the Sires d'Albret, one of the oldest families of France, from whom sprang the illustrious Henri IV., the son of Jeanne d'Albret.

Here the road from Bordeaux to Pau branches off to the l. (R. 80.)

12 Caloy. The chain of the Pyrenees, 30 leagues distant, may already be discovered in clear weather.

10 Mont de Marsan (Inn, H. Des Ambassadeurs; a very tolerable sleeping place (forbye the fleas); Ortolans may be had in August), is chef lieu of the department of Les Landes, (3774 inhab.) and enjoys some commerce by virtue of its position at the junction of two streams, the Douze and Medou, which, becoming navigable here, take the name of Medouze. It is united with the Garonne by the Canal des Landes, nearly 60 m. long, designed to open a communication between Bayonne and Bordeaux, when the sea is closed in time of war.

Roads branch off hence to Pau (R. 80.), and to Orthes.

The road hence is somewhat less dull: it lies through extensive forests of spindley pines, whose sides are rasped or grooved to extract the resin which exudes from the wound, and is collected in a hollow at their foot.

13 Campagne. Beyond

14 Tartas, where the Medouze is crossed by a new bridge, are some fine oak woods.

11 Pontons. As before, the same alternation of pine woods and bare sand, not a pebble to be seen. Pyrenees well seen beyond Pontons.

Pouy, a village on the l. of the road shortly before reaching Dax, was the birth-place of the philanthropic founder of the order of Sœurs de la Charité, St. Vincent de Paul. When a boy he tended his father's flock in the sandy heaths near the Lazarist convent of Buglose. The road passes through the village of 12 St. Paul de Dax, about a mile distant from the town of Dax, which lies on the l. bank of the Adour, and is reached by a bridge of wood. Its name probably comes from its hot springs (de aquis), which are one of the curiosities of Guienne, and doubtless induced that bath-loving people, the Romans, to found here their settlement, Aquæ Augustæ Tarbellicæ. They rise nearly in the centre of the town, and are received in a large square basin enclosed with porticoes, whence rise such clouds of steam as in a frosty morning to envelope all the town. The temperature at the source is 66° Réaumur, 212° Fahrenheit, a scalding heat. The water is nearly tasteless, and though only partially used medicinally, is much employed by the washerwomen. There are several other sources in and about the town. Near the bridge are portions of the old fortifications; and Roman masonry may, it is said, be discovered in their substructions. Inns: Hôtel St. Etienne; de St. Esprit.

The tertiary strata near Dax abound in fossil shells.

The postmaster is entitled to charge 2 kilom. extra on carriages which cross the Adour into Dax from St. Paul.

The road beyond Dax traverses numerous forests of cork trees, which being stripped of their flakey bark to stop the claret bottles of the merchants of Bordeaux, have a singular effect, from the dark brown colour of their naked trunks. A new skin speedily repairs the loss of the old.

16 St. Geours.

The Pyrenean range now forms a grand feature in the landscape. They are not unlike some views of the Grampions, in which sharp peaks here and there surmount intervening round-backed hills: the most conspicuous and picturesque peaks seen from this are the Arrhune in France, and the Quatre Couronnes in Spain. Near 13 Cantons, a large pond or étang is passed, and a peep is obtained over the Bay of Biscay on the rt.

The direct road from Bordeaux across the Grandes Landes (R. 77.), falls into ours at St. Vincent, and the Landes cease altogether at Oudres.

The descent upon Bayonne presents that town under a striking aspect, seated on the Adour, surrounded by fortifications. A short way before you reach the Octroi a lane on the rt. leads down to the Cimetière Anglaise, a simple enclosure between 4 walls, planted with poplars: it contains the remains of many brave British soldiers, and several officers of the Coldstream Guards, who fell in the Sortie from Bayonne, April, 14, 1814. Bayonne is entered by the Faubourg of St. Esprit, in which is situated the Citadel, the strongest of the military works. The town itself is reached by a narrow bridge of boats over the Adour, and after crossing the triangular strip of land between the rivers, by a permanent stone and iron bridge over the Nive.

19 BAYONNE.—Inns: H. St. Etienne, a good family hotel; H. du Commerce; also good; de l'Europe.

Bayonne, a strong fortress of the first class, commanding the Passes of the W. Pyrenees, and one of the two carriage roads leading from Spain into France, has an agreeable situation at the junction of the Nive with the Adour, and is divided into three parts by these fine broad rivers, which are lined with quays, and always include a small quantity of shipping. The suburb St. Esprit on the rt. bank of the Adour, lies within the dépt. des Landes, and alone includes 5897 inhabitants, (more than the chief town of the dépt.), among whom are 2000 Jews, descendants of those expelled at different times from Spain. On an eminence rising above this suburb, just at the lower end of it and commanding with its formidable batteries the town, both the rivers, and the plain to the N., rises the Citadel, the most formidable of the works, laid out by Vauban and greatly strengthened, especially since 1814, when it formed the key to an entrenched camp of Marshal Soult, and was invested by a detachment of the army of the Duke of Wellington, but not taken, the peace having put a stop to the siege after some bloody encounters. The last of these, a dreadful and useless expenditure of human life, took place after peace was declared, and the British forces put off their guard in consequence. They were thus entirely taken by surprise by a sally of the garrison, made early on the morning of April 14th; which, though repulsed, was attended with the loss of 830 men to the British, and by the capture of their commander, Sir John Hope, whose horse was shot under him, and himself wounded. The French attack was supported by the fire of their gun-boats on the river, which opened indiscriminately on friend and foe. 910 of the French were killed. Admission to the citadel is obtained by a ticket from the commandant; but except to a military man, it possesses nothing of interest. Steep approaches, resembling inclined planes, lead up to it, deep fosses surround it, nearly vertical walls 40 feet high and numerous bastions flank and infilade every access to it: visitors are not allowed to mount the ramparts.

Bayonne Proper occupies the triangular space between the two rivers, and stretches for a considerable distance up the bank of the Nive, which is crossed by 3 bridges. Its total population, excluding St. Esprit, is 15,912 souls; many of its streets have a half Spanish character, from the piazzas running under the houses. The handsomest quarter of the town is that adjoining the theatre, newly built, consisting of fine tall houses.

The only building of consequence is the Cathedral, ugly externally, but within a fine lofty church in the pointed Gothic of the 13th century, with choir and transepts very short. The arms of England are still visible on its roof. The cloisters behind, in the florid style, nearly the largest in France, deserve notice. From the top of its tower there is a good view of the distant Pyrenees, of the town, rivers, and citadel, and of the spot a little below it, at the extremity of the long avenue of trees, where a part of the British army under Sir John Hope crossed, by a bridge of boats furnished from the fleet of Admiral Penrose, and transported with much difficulty over the bar, Feb. 23-27. 1814, in order to invest the citadel.

As very malignant calumnies have been spread by some French writers, respecting the conduct of the Duke of Wellington's army in France, it may not be amiss to refute them by the unexceptionable testimony of one of their own writers, and an eye-witness, the late M. Vayse de Villiers, author of the Itineraire de la France, the best guide book for that country. He traversed the theatre of the war only a few months after the occupation by the Duke of Wellington, and states that so far from laying waste the country to a distance of a league around Bayonne, as a French writer had asserted, "Il avait établi une telle discipline qu'il étoit accueilli partout comme liberateur."— Route de Paris en Espagne, p. 91.

The Duke's own immortal despatches show with what severe discipline he prevented the troops, Spanish and English, under his command, imitating the cruel injuries which the French army had inflicted on Spain and other countries invaded by them.

The construction of the bridge over the Adour below Bayonne, and the passage of the Allies across it, display the genius of Wellington in conceiving, combining, and executing a measure deemed impossible by his opponents; and is styled by Colonel Napier "a stupendous undertaking, which will always rank among the prodigies of war." The impediments consisted in the breadth of the river, the rapidity of its current, the height to which the tide rises (14 ft.), the difficulty of procuring and transporting the materials of the bridge: since, if sent by land, through bad and difficult roads, they must have alarmed the enemy; if by water, the bar, passable only at high water, and surf at the river's mouth, rendered the entrance of boats next to impossible. The latter measure however had been decided on by the Duke; and to effect this purpose, a little flotilla of chassemarées had been prepared in the Spanish harbour of Passages. The long prevalence of storms, however, and contrary winds, had rendered its approach impracticable; and the gallant Sir John Hope, to whom the execution of this measure had been entrusted by the Duke of Wellington at last on the 23d of February, 1814, began to push his troops across upon a raft attached to a hawser; and thus in the teeth of a strong fortress and garrison of nearly 15,000 men, 600 men of the Guards gained the opposite bank; the French gun-boats which guarded the river being silenced by rockets, three of them burnt, and a sloop of war driven up the river under the guns of Bayonne, while the same effective weapons kept the garrison at bay. Next morning, in spite of the tempestuous weather, and the raging surf on the bar, which was so furious as to leave no strip of black water to point out the passage; without pilots, or even land-marks, the little fleet made for the mouth of the Adour. Each vessel had an engineer on board, and a supply of timber, cables, &c., and aided by men-of-war's boats from the fleet, they boldly dashed into the midst of the breakers, blindly seeking the entrance. Several of the foremost, mastered by the wind and the waves, ran aground or were dashed ashore, and their crews perished. This did not deter the others however; and one more fortunate boat discovered the only safe channel; and the rest following in its wake, gained smooth water within the bar, a glorious and gallant exploit. The twenty-six chassemarées thus introduced were moored head and stern by ropes stretched over the dykes, which line the river at a spot where it is 800 ft. broad, at a distance of about three miles below Bayonne. Platforms of loose planks were laid between the boats, and the ropes were left slack, so as to allow the bridge to rise and fall with the tide: yet this seemingly frail structure was strong enough to bear the heaviest artillery, and it was finished by the 26th. This deep-laid scheme entirely foiled Marshal Soult, whose attention had been drawn off by the British general to an attack among the Gaves, the tributaries of the Adour high up the country, at the very moment when the passage of that river was effected close to the sea.

Bayonne is a town of commerce as well as of war, though its port is of comparatively small use, on account of the shifting bar at the mouth of the Adour, which can only be passed at high water, and not without danger at some seasons, though the employment of tug-steamers now diminishes the risk. In the 14th or 15th century the Adour changed its bed, owing to its mouth becoming obstructed by shifting sands or dunes, blown up by the winds, and running N. parallel with the coast within this sand-wall, until it found an outlet either at Cape Breton, or at Vieux Boucaut. This lasted down to 1579, when the engineer, Louis de Foix, restored it to its old channel, called Boucaut Neuf. In 1684, however, it broke a fresh channel for itself to the l., in the direction of the Chambre d'Amour, but was brought back again shortly after to the bed, by which it still finds a passage to the ocean through a waste of sand-hills.

The commerce of Bayonne consists chiefly in Spanish wool, which is largely imported, and in an extensive smuggling trade carried on with that country.

Excellent chocolate and eau de vie are made here; but the Bayonne hams, so called because largely exported hence, are reared and cured among the Pyrenees, near Orthez and Pau. Some ships are built here.

From what has been said, it will be perceived that Bayonne has few sights to amuse the passing stranger. The well-supplied market, abounding in fruit and vegetables sold at the cheapest rates, are worth a visit, and these, or the promenades, will afford an opportunity of seeing the Bayonnaise ladies, who are remarkably pretty, as well as the Basquaise peasants, who are also distinguished by pretty faces and good figures, and contrast with the inhabitants of the Landes to the N. of Bayonne.

Those who desire a pleasant, shady walk and fresh air should repair to the Allées Marines, an avenue of trees more than a mile long, on the l. bank of the Adour, below the town and opposite the citadel, reaching down nearly to the bend of the river, near which the Duke threw his army across.

A little way outside the town is the dilapidated Château de Marrac, destroyed by fire in 1825 and gutted. It belonged to Napoleon, who here received the degraded sovereigns of Spain, Charles IV. and his queen; and her minion Godoy likewise. The Emperor also brought hither to meet them Ferdinand Prince of Asturias, whom, by false pretences, he had entrapped from Madrid in 1808: and in this château, under threat of death or imprisonment, they resigned to him their hereditary rights to the crown of Spain.

Bayonne was capital of the ancient district, enclosed within the Adour and Bidassoa, called Pays de Labourd, from Lapurdum, the original name, down to the 10th century, of Bayonne, which is merely the Basque Baiauna, a port. It gives its name to the Bayonette, said to have been invented in this neighbourhood (see p. 281.), and first made here. The gloomy old castle opposite the Sous-Préfecture, now a barrack, was probably the residence of Catherine de Medicis, when, dragging with her her weak son, Charles IX., she repaired hither to that secret conference with the cruel Alva, in 1563, at which it is now known the atrocious massacre of the St. Bartholomew's night was suggested and decided on. Yet Bayonne has the rare credit of refusing to execute the bloody orders of Charles IX., to slay all the protestants in the town, owing to the firmness of the governor Dapremont, Vicomte d'Orthez, who told the king that the town of Bayonne included only good citizens and brave soldiers, but not a single executioner.

The chief place of resort for the inhabitants of Bayonne out of the town is the little watering-place of Biaritz, described farther on (p. 278).

Cambo, in the vale of Nive, is also a pretty watering-place, with mineral baths.

Those who wish to make a short excursion hence into Spain, may take the diligence to St. Sebastian, which starts every morning, pass through a portion of the country, which was the theatre of the late war, visit the citadel of St. Sebastian and the singular land-locked harbour of Passages, eat an olla, and smoke a cigarillo, and return to Bayonne the following afternoon. See Hand-book for Spain.

The British consul, residing at Bayonne (Captain Graham), will sign his countrymen's passports for the journey.

In the coach-offices and inns at Bayonne will be found hung up advertisements of approaching Bull Fights, to be held at Vittoria, Tolosa, Saragossa, and other places in the N. of Spain, in the vicinity of the French frontier.

Conveyances : —*malleposte*s daily to Bordeaux in 18 hours; to Toulouse in 21 hours.

Diligences daily to Bordeaux (2 or 3); to Toulouse; to Pau, by Orthez and by Oleron.

Conveyances into Spain:—to Madrid — Malleposte travels by night, and is three nights on the journey.

Diligences belonging to 2 different companies to Madrid.

Diligences every other day to Tolosa and St. Sebastian in 10 hours.

The Southern Road quits Bayonne by the Porte d'Espagne, through which Napoleon poured so many gallant armies in succession into the Peninsula. The road is hilly the whole way to the frontier, and from time to time affords glimpses of the sea on the rt. After passing a number of country houses, amongst which, at a little distance on the l., stands the Château de Marrac (p. 277.), a finger-post at the end of 2 m. points the sandy way to Biaritz, (Inn, H. de Monhau, rooms small, but clean and comfortable), a little secluded watering-place 3 m. on the rt. and about 5 m. from Bayonne. It consists of a group of whitewashed lodging-houses, cafés, inns, traiteurs, cottages, &c., and generally of a humble character, scattered over rolling eminences and hollows bare of trees, on the sea-shore, here fenced with cliffs forty or fifty feet high, excavated by the waves into numberless quiet coves and curious caverns. In these the sea at times roars and chafes, perforating the rock with holes, and undermining huge masses, which are detached from time to time; and some of them, left like islands at some distance from the shore, still project above the waves. From the tops of these cliffs, especially that which bears the ruins of an old fort or lighthouse, you look over the wide expanse of the Bay of Biscay, bounded on the rt. by the French coast, on which rises the new Phare, which shows the way into the mouth of the Adour; and on the l., by the shore of Spain beyond St. Sebastian, with peaks of distant Sierras rising behind it. The limpid purity of the sea and the smoothness of the sand render bathing in the sheltered bays most agreeable. French ladies and gentlemen "en costume des bains," consume hours in aquatic promenades. The ladies may be seen floating about like mermaids, being supported on bladders or corks, and over-shadowed by broad-brimmed hats. The geologist will be interested to recognise in the rocks of Biaritz the fossils of the chalk or green sand, though the rock here assumes an external character very different from that we are accustomed to in England. Beyond its sea-bathing, its rocks, and its view, Biaritz must be the dullest place upon earth, except to those who have other resources of friends, &c., on the spot. Omnibusses and coucous are constantly plying between the baths and the Porte d'Espagne of Bayonne. The ancient mode of conveyance hither, which is peculiar to the spot, but is now becoming obsolete, was to ride "en cacolet." In this mode of conveyance the rider, seated on one side of a hack in a wooden frame fitting to a horse's back, as a pair of spectacles does to a human nose, occupies the place of a panier on one side of an ass's back, while his conductor, usually a stout and buxom lass, fills the opposite division, and by her weight the balance is preserved. Some little skill is required in mounting, for unless both parties jump into their seats at the same moment, he who reaches it prematurely runs the risk of destroying the equipoise and of being capsized into the dust, and the same in dismounting. It is chiefly peasants and market women, now-a-days, who ride en cacolet; though under the ancien régime of the Bourbons, the frolicksome Duchesse de Berri, when on a visit to this part of France, was wont to resort to this primitive conveyance.

There are 3 lines of custom-houses on the road from Bayonne to the Spanish frontier. The 3d, or innermost, is not more than 5 m. from Bayonne. A large fresh-water pond within a funnel-shaped basin is passed shortly before reaching 11 Bidart. We now enter the Pays Basques, inhabited by that peculiar race who speak a language having no relation with any other in Europe. They occupy in France only a small part of the SW. corner of the dépt. des Basses Pyrenees, but are much more widely disseminated in Spain, where they form the mass of the population of five provinces. The French and Spanish Basques are distinguished by their speech, and also by their costume, consisting of the red beret, a cap resembling that of the lowland shepherd in Scotland, a red sash round the waist, and sandals made of hemp, called Espartillas, on the feet, and a stout stick or shilalah in the hand. They are supposed to be the descendants of the "Cantabrum indoctum ferre juga nostra," who sided with Hannibal in opposing the Romans, who contributed mainly to the defeat of Charlemagne and Roland in the pass of Roncesvaux, and whose boast is that they were never conquered. In France they are confined to portions of the arrondissements of Bayonne and Mauleon, which formed part of the ancient kingdom of Navarre.

9 St. Jean de Luz.—Inns: Poste: St. Etienne; good. A frontier town of France, at the mouth of the Nivelle, where it falls into a small creek or bay, over which a new bridge has been thrown. The inroads of the sea for some time past have washed away parts of the town, breaking through the dykes thrown up to protect it, and the shifting sands at the mouth of the Nivelle have almost entirely blocked up its port. The town is distinguished by its narrow street and whitewashed houses, some of considerable antiquity. Here is the 2d Douane. The suburb on the l. bank of the river is called Sibourre. The marriage of Louis XIV. with Maria Theresa, Infanta of Spain, was celebrated here 1660.

In Nov. 1813, the British army, under the Duke of Wellington, crossed the Nivelle close to this town, after attacking and carrying the very strong entrenched position occupied by the French army upon the heights on the l. bank of the river.

In the midst of barren, heathy, high ground stands

5 Urugne, last post station in France. The forms of the mountains are picturesque, especially of that called Montagne d'Arrhune, rising above Urugne, which is visible even on the other side of Bayonne. Before reaching this point, the traveller finds, contrary probably to what he could have expected from books, that the mountain chain of the Pyrenees by no means terminates in France, but stretches W., in lofty ridges and bare peaks tossed about in wild confusion, traversing Spain to its farther corner, and ending in Cape Ortegal in the Asturias.

Beyond Urugne, the antique Château of Urtubi is passed. Louis XI. came hither, 1462, to meet the King of Aragon, John II.

The French frontier custom-house is placed at Behobia, a small village (with a poor inn, Poste) on the rt. bank of the Bidassoa, which here separates France from Spain. The baggage of travellers entering France is strictly searched; and after it has undergone the process, they will do well to have it plombed, to save themselves from a repetition of the same twice between this and Bayonne. 10 sous is the charge for plombing each package.

The wild and lofty mountains around and behind Behobia, called Montagne Vert, and Mendele, now so solitary, were strongly fortified by Marshal Soult in 1813, to defend the Passage of the Bidassoa, which the Duke of Wellington effected nevertheless, in the face and in spite of them. In the course of several months preceding, entrenchment behind entrenchment had been thrown up by the French; every weak point had been strengthened, and the whole line of slopes and precipices, from the sea to the Arrhune mountain, bristled with ramparts and batteries, defending the fords of the river; the bridge of Behobia being then broken down.

From the middle of the existing wooden bridge, which unites France to Spain, the stranger looking up the stream will perceive the green knoll, or mamellon of St. Marcial; on this a strong battery was planted by the Allies, which covered the passage, by the ford higher up, of one division, consisting of Spaniards, under Gen. Freire, who won from the French the heights of Mendele. The most formidable part of the French position was the Montagne d'Arrhune, not only from its elevation, steepness, and tremendous precipices, but from the redoubts, intrenchments, abbatis, &c. thrown up on it, wherever there appeared the least facility of approach, and from the strong body of troops, who held every commanding point, sweeping the slopes and ravines with their cannon and musquetry. The Duke of Wellington employed nearly 20,000 men in the attack of this mountain, which was gained, as it were inch by inch, the enemy being driven from one work after another up to the very summit, where they occupied a rocky height called the Hermitage. This was nearly impregnable, and they defended it for some time merely by rolling down stones upon their assailants. The bones of many a brave man are probably even now whitening among the dells and clifts of that rugged mountain: many who were wounded were left to perish where they fell, from the difficulty of discovering them among these vast solitudes.

A lower ridge, or projecting buttress of the Montagne d'Arrhune, is called la Bayonette, from that fearful weapon of war, invented extemporaneously, it is said, by a Basque regiment on this spot, who, having run short of ammunition, assaulted the Spaniards opposed to them by sticking the long knives which the Basques commonly carry, into the barrels of their muskets, and thus charging the enemy. This must have occurred some time in the 16th, or early in the 17th century. The ridge of the Bayonette was stormed and carried by the Allies 1813, before they gained the Arrhune.

Behind St. Marcial opens out the Valley of the Bastan, the cradle of the Bidassoa. Close below the bridge of Behobia is a little island, reduced by the washing of the current to a narrow strip of earth, tufted with grass and willows. This is the historically celebrated Ile des Faisans, on which the conferences were held between the French Minister Mazarin, and the Spanish Don Louis de Haro, which led to the famous treaty of the Pyrenees, 1659, and the marriage of Louis XIV. with the daughter of Philip IV. Each party advanced from its own territory, by a temporary bridge, to this little bit of neutral ground, which then reached nearly up to the bridge. The piles which supported the Cardinal's pavilion were visible not many years ago. The death of Velasquez, the painter, was caused by his exertions in superintending these constructions; duties more fitting to an upholsterer than an artist.

The Bidassoa forms the line of demarcation between the two kingdoms only for about 12 m.: it enters the sea about 5 m. below Behobia, between Andaye on the French side, and the ancient walled town of Fuentarabía (accent on the í) on the Spanish, after passing near the town of 9 Irun, first Spanish post station. See HAND-BOOK FOR SPAIN.

Between Irun and Fuentarabia are the 3 fords discovered by the Duke of Wellington, on the information of Spanish fishermen, by which he carried one division of his army across, and, gaining the first permanent footing in the French territory, turned the rt. of the French position, and the strongly defended heights near Andaye, (once famed for distilling brandy). These fords were practicable only at certain states of the tide, and for 3 or 4 hours, being covered by the sea, to a depth of 14 ft., at high water. Soult was therefore perfectly unprepared for an attempt to cross at this point, and his troops were deceived, by the tents of the British camp being left standing as though still occupied. At the close of a fierce thunder storm, early on the morning of Oct. 17, the allied army formed into 7 columns behind banks and ridges, issued forth at a given signal, and winding slowly, like snakes, across the broad sands, effected the passage.

ROUTE 77.

BORDEAUX TO BAYONNE, THROUGH LES GRANDES LANDES.

69 lieux de poste = about 173 Eng. m.

This was once the only road into Spain, but since the construction of the route through the Petites Landes (R. 76.), and the removal of post horses from this line, it has been almost entirely abandoned, although it is 25 m. shorter than the other. In fact, it traverses a country scarcely practicable for carriages, owing to the want of proper materials for the roads; a small portion only, near Bordeaux and Muret, being paved. The accommodation for travellers is, of course, very scanty. Many of the old post stations enumerated below, with the distances from one to another, are mere single houses or stables, established solely as relays, and perhaps now abandoned.

3 Gradignan. Beyond this village fields give place to heaths and pine woods, interspersed with a few patches of barley and a little maize; for these crops will grow wherever manure and industry can be employed upon the soil. The surface of the ground is of a dull grey or ash-coloured sand. A few flocks of lean, tattered, ill-conditioned sheep wander over this waste, tended by shepherds renowned for walking on stilts (échasses). By the aid of these they are not only enabled to stalk over the prickly bushes, and avoid the inconvenience of filling their shoes with sand, but they gain an elevation not afforded by the even surface of the ground, from which they can overlook their flock, and prevent their sheep straying. They carry a long pole, which, when stuck into the ground, forms a support, and against it they can rest, and knit stockings all the day through. A stranger, unprepared for the sight, would have some difficulty in explaining the nature of the extraordinary tripod thus formed; and the sheepskins worn by the peasant would not diminish the mystery. The peasants of the Landes are all accustomed to the use of stilts, and with a very slight exertion, and not a very quick movement, will clear the country at a pace which would keep a horse at a hard trot, by the aid of these wooden legs.

There is at least one thing which appears peculiarly at home among the Landes, which seems to rejoice in this dry sand, and to flourish in the most robust vigour — the pine (Pinus maritima). Nearly ¼ of the Dept. des Landes is covered with dark forests of this tree, and the distribution of it is greatly increasing, since, from the value of the timber and of the rosin which it produces, and the facility with which it is grown, large districts have been planted by order of the government. The Landes, it must be remembered, are not confined to the dept. so called, for we have hitherto been traversing that of the Gironde, and it is only between Belin and the next station

3 Muret, that the boundary line of the Dept. of Landes is passed. Here the small river Leyre is crossed, which falls into the sea at La Teste. Like all the streams of the district, its waters are brackish; and one of the chief evils to which the inhabitants are subject is the want of good water.

2 Bellevue.
2 Puch.
3 Barps.
2 Hospitalet.
2 Belin, a small town.
3 Lipostey.
4 Bonhère. Here used to be the best inn on the line.
3 Belloe, a single cottage.
4 La Harie.
3 Esperon.
4 Castels.

The Pignadas, or pine forests of the Landes, furnish a large quantity of rosin, which is obtained by grooving the trunk, or scarifying the bark 3 or 4 ft. above the root, and allowing the pitch to flow into a hollow below.

4 Majèse. An inn here formerly.
3 Les Monts.
2 St. Vincent. Here our road falls into the post road from Bordeaux to 9 Bayonne (R. 76. p. 275.).

The wild district of the Landes stretches uninterruptedly from the Garonne, at Bordeaux, to the Adour, at Bayonne, and from the sea to Mont St. Marsan and Dax.

The inhabitants of the Landes occupy a low position, physically and morally, in the scale of civilisation.

Any more accurate and recent information than what is contained in the above route will be welcome to the editor.

ROUTE 78.

BAYONNE TO PAU BY ORTHEZ.

85 kilom. = 52½ Eng. miles.

Malleposte to Toulouse daily.

Diligences daily by Orthez and by Oleron.

The road turns to the rt., out of that to Bordeaux, (R. 76.), on the top of the hill above St. Esprit, the suburb of Bayonne. It runs in a direction nearly parallel with the Pyrenees, through a country abounding in heath, having the Adour at some distance on the rt., until, a few miles beyond 17 Biaudos, that river is crossed: the descent upon it is fine. The Gave de Pau falls into the Adour a little below the bridge; henceforth we ascend the rt. bank of that stream all the way to Pau. Hereabouts the Gave divides the district called Chalosse from the Pays Basque, (see p. 279.).

20 Peyrehorade (Inn, H. de Voyageurs; second rate), a prettily situated town, on the Gave de Pau, just below its junction with the Gave d'Oleron, under a height crowned by a ruined Castle, mentioned by Froissart. About a mile out of the town, a turning on the rt. carries the new road to Pau by Oleron, (unfinished 1841), across the Gave de Pau, by a new wire suspension bridge. It passes through Sorde, a walled town, Sallies, so called from its strong brine spring, which furnishes the salt used in curing Bayonne hams, and Sauveterre.

The road from Peyrehorade to Orthez crosses, shortly before entering 16 Puyoo, a rivulet which anciently formed the boundary line between the kingdoms of France and Navarre.

The fertility of the plain, the abundant watercourses, the luxuriant festoons of the vines, and the magnificent views of the Pyrenean range, give great interest to this portion of the route. At Berenz, Sir Willoughby Cotton's division of cavalry, and Picton's 3d brigade, crossed the Gave before the Battle of Orthez. That victory was achieved, Feb. 27, 1814, by driving the French from a very strong position on the heights above Orthez, extending from the town to the high road to Dax and the village of Boés. The retreat of the enemy ended in a flight, and they were pursued by the British, the same night, as far as Sault de Navailles. A wound received by the Duke of Wellington in the critical moment of pursuit contributed to save the French from greater loss. They attribute their defeat to a superiority of force on the side of the allies, but the impartial estimate of Col. Napier sets down the numbers of Soult's army at 40,000, (including 4,000 or 5,000 raw conscripts,) and that of the Duke at 37,000. The British cavalry outnumbered that of the enemy by 1,000. The French lost nearly 4,000 men killed, wounded, and prisoners, the Allies 2,300.

12 Orthez (Inns:) is a somewhat dull town of 7,857 inhabitants, though situated at the junction of 6 roads,— to Spain, by St. Jean Pied de Port, to Dax, to Bordeaux, to Oleron, to Pau, and to Bayonne. It has an old Gothic bridge, which resisted the attempts of the French to mine it, and blow it up, consisting of 4 arches, surmounted in the centre by a tower from which, according to tradition, the Calvinist soldiers of the army of the Comte de Montgomery, after taking the town by assault, 1569, and putting to the sword most of its defenders, precipitated into the river the Roman Catholic priests who were found with arms in their hands, and who refused to abjure their religion. Jeanne d'Albret, Queen of Navarre, mother of Henri IV., established here a Protestant College.

Orthez was once a place of greater importance, as residence of the Princes of Béarn, down to the end of the 15th century, when they removed to Pau. The Castle de Moncada, built by Gaston de Foix, IV., 1240, after the pattern of a Spanish castle of that name, is reduced to a few ruined walls, overtopped by a stately tower, left to attest its former splendour, on a height above the town. It is mentioned by Froissart, who paid a visit to Gaston Phœbus Comte de Foix, 1388, and was received into the household, in order to obtain, from the Count's own mouth, information for his history respecting the wars in Gascony and Spain. He describes the death of Gaston de Foix, at the neighbouring village of Riou, on his return from hunting the bear, and the celebration of his funeral in the Church of the Cordeliers at Orthez, where he was buried, in front of the grand altar. The Castle of Orthez was the scene of unparalleled crimes during the life of the brutal Gaston Phœbus, who filled its dungeons with the victims of his unbridled passion; among them his own kinsman, the Viscomte de Chateaubon, Pierre Arnault, the faithful governor of Lourdes, who, because he refused to betray his trust, and surrender the fortress, was stabbed by Gaston's own hand, and thrust into a dungeon to perish; and, finally, his own son, and only child, whom he killed with his knife, in the dark cell into which he had caused him to be thrust.

The very picturesque peak called Pic du Midi d'Ossau is visible near this.

20 Artix. About 4 m. before entering Pau, the road passes, at a short distance on the l., the curious old and decayed town Lescar, supposed by some to be the ancient Beneharnum, whence the district of which it was originally the capital was called Béarn. The town was sacked and ruined during the wars of Religion, 1569, by the troops of the Comte de Montgomery. On a detached eminence, rising above the town, stand the Castle and the Church, a lofty edifice, partly in the Romanesque style, containing some carved oak. The early princes of Béarn were buried in it, but their tombs were destroyed either by the Huguenots or the Revolutionists.

The Jesuits' College, founded there by Henri IV. after his conversion, has been turned into a manufactory. Still nearer to Pau, on the l. of the road, is Bilhère, where Henri was nursed by a peasant, whose humble dwelling is still preserved and pointed out with some pride to strangers. The eminence rising on the opposite bank of the Gave, its slopes covered with verdure and vineyards, is the Côte de Jurançon, which produces the best of all the Pyrenean wines.

The road, before entering Pau, skirts the woody ridge which forms its beautiful Parc; and which, intervening between the river and the road, conceals the view of the mountains.

20. Pau (R. 80.).

ROUTE 79.

BORDEAUX TO AUCH, BY CASTEL JALOUX AND NÉRAC.

186 kilom. = 115 Eng. m.

The road is the same as R. 76. as far as 62 Bazas, p. 273.

14 Grignols.

15 Castel Jaloux, a town of nearly 2000 inhabitants, owing its name and origin to a Castle built by the Seigneurs d'Albret, on the l. bank of the Avance, now in ruins.

At Barbaste corks are made. Henri IV. had a flour-mill here, whence he was sometimes called "le Meunier de Barbaste": it still exists.

18 Pompiey. The road passes a little to the S. of the castle of Xaintrailles, the birth-place of Pothon de Xantrailles, a knight celebrated in the wars against the English in the reign of Charles VII., who took the valliant Talbot prisoner at the battle of Patay.

12 Nérac, (Inn, Tertres; famous for its pâtés, or terrines de perdrix), a town of 6327 inhabitants, pleasingly situated on the Baïse, once capital of the duchy d'Albret. It was an ancient possession of the family d'Albret, who built and resided in the venerable Castle, which remained nearly entire down to the Revolution, but is now demolished, excepting one wing, and its fosses turned into gardens. Yet even this fragment is interesting, because within its walls Marguerite de Valois, queen of Navarre, held her court, assembling around her the men most distinguished by learning and literary genius of the time; among others, Calvin, Beza, Clement Marot, here found an asylum from persecution down to 1534. At a later period, the "Bon Roi Henri," whose mother resided in the castle to within four months of his birth, passed here a portion of his youth. His chamber is pointed out at the W. end of the building. Here, in 1579, Catherine de Medicis held a conference. The tomb of Pothon de Xantrailles was destroyed along with the church of Cordeliers, at the instigation of the Calvinists.

The promenade called La Garenne was once the park of the kings of Navarre, planted by Marguerite de Valois. A bronze statue of Henri IV. has been erected to his memory by a private individual, inscribed "Alumno, mox Patri Nostro Ho. IV."

The Fontaine de St. Jean is overshadowed by 2 elms, planted by Henri IV. and Marguerite de Valois.

Corks are manufactured here for the wine-merchants of Bordeaux.

We enter the Département de Gers before reaching 22 Condom (Inns: Cheval Blanc; Lion d'Or), a town of 7144 inhabitants, and of considerable trade. It has a handsome Gothic parish church (?).

19 Castéra Verduzan.

Near this village are mineral springs; one sulphureous, the other chalybeate, which are received into a Bath-house.

24 Auch, in R. 90.

ROUTE 80.

BORDEAUX TO PAU.

194 kilom. = 120 Eng. m.

Diligences daily in summer.

The only tolerable sleeping place on the way is Mont de Marsan, p. 274.

The Bayonne road (R. 76.) is followed as far as 108 Roquefort, and by the diligence as far as Mont de Marsan (22 kilom.)

The mountains of the Pyrenean chain are visible even to the N. of this, rising ridge over ridge abruptly, from the low plain of Gascony, so as to give the greatest effect to their elevation, with a grandeur worthy of the barrier wall between two great kingdoms.

No villages of consequence, and few habitations, occur on the sandy tract between Roquefort and 16 Villeneuve de Marsan, on the Medou.

The district of sandy and heath-clad common, stretching from the sea coast, through the Landes eastward, gives place to cultivated and enclosed ground near 22 Aire, an old town, of 4,028 inhabitants, on the l. bank of the Adour, near which a detachment of the French army, retreating from Orthez, were defeated, a few days after that battle, by Lord Hill, who also gained possession of the French magazines here, and at St. Sever, lower down the Adour.

A steep ascent leads out of the valley of the Adour, and a table-land separates it from 16 Garlin.

12 Auriac.

From the top of each eminence, as you surmount it, a splendid view of the Pyrenees expands before the eye.

20 Pau.—Inns: H. de France, at the corner of the Place Royale; good, and excellent cuisine; a good table d'hote, 3 f.:—H. de l'Europe, Rue de la Prefecture; very good; its back windows have a view. D. — La Poste, Place de Henri IV.; beds, 3 f. to 30 sous; café au lait and eggs, 2 f.; table d'hote, 3 f.— H. de Daurade, ditto. N.B. Try here the white wine of Jurançon, which, when good, deserves commendation.

Pau, ancient capital of the little kingdom of French Navarre and Béarn, now chef lieu of the Dépt. des Basses Pyrénées, stands on a lofty ridge forming the rt. bank of the river, or Gave de Pau, and has nearly 13,000 inhab. Its situation is perhaps scarcely surpassed by that of any town in France, if we consider the magnificent view over the chain of the W. Pyrenees, which expands in front of it. The English have shown their good taste in having chosen it for their residence, especially in winter. The view, reminding one somewhat of that from the platform at Berne, though far inferior to it, is well seen either from the castle and its terrace, or from the extremity of the oblong, formal, gravelly promenade near the centre of the town, called the Place Royale, or from the Parc. This Parc is a fine natural terrace, running along the rt. bank of the Gave, thickly covered, on its top and sides, with noble trees, affording a grateful shade in the heat of the day, and provided with seats wherever, through gaps in the foliage, the different parts of the view appear to advantage. This spot formed part of the domain anciently attached to the old castle, and a communication between the castle and the Parc, through a formal square planted with rows of trees, called Plante, has recently been established by a handsome bridge of two arches, thrown over the high road.

The range of the Pyrenees, as seen from Pau, presents a strikingly beautiful and varied outline of peaks, cones, and ridges, often cut like a saw, rising against the S. horizon. Among the mass of summits, and precipices, and bold forms, are two pre-eminent from their elevation and shape — the Pic du Midi de Pau to the W., a peak with sides nearly vertical and cloven crest, rising at the extremity of the beautiful Val d'Ossau; and to the E., the Pic du Midi de Bigorre. These members of the great central range are disclosed to view through the gaps of a subordinate chain of round-backed and wooded hills forming the middle distance; while in the foreground appears the venerable castle of Pau, the torrent, or Gave, its banks beautifully fringed with trees, the picturesque bridge, and the ruins of another bridge destroyed by its inundations. Within the scope of this view appear Jurançon, a village famed for its wines, and Bilhère, where Henri IV. was nursed. It is a glorious prospect, to be dwelt upon and seen over and over again.

Pau owes its chief renown to its having been the birth-place of the "Bon Roi" Henri IV., who drew his first breath (Dec. 13, 1553) in its ancient, time-honoured, historic Castle, the most conspicuous and interesting building in the town. It stands statelily upon the ridge above-mentioned, overlooking the river and bridge, at the point of a sort of promontory formed by a small rivulet which cuts its way through the town, and behind the castle walls at the bottom of a deep ravine, to throw itself into the Gave, just below it. The towers, of which there are 5, and the outer wall which unites them, and serves to support the upper stories, are the oldest part, and supposed to date from the time of Gaston Phœbus, Comte de Foix, who founded the castle about 1363. The tallest tower, or Donjon, named after Gaston, rising at the E. end to a height of 115 ft., is of brick, furnished with loopholes. The windows have been stopped up in modern times. A copy of the contract for erecting it (dated 1375) still exists, and in it the Count himself engages to furnish the bricks from the Tuileries de Pau. In the gutted and half-ruined Tour de la Monnoye, rising on the side of the castle next the river, from the bottom of the eminence on which it stands, to a level with the terrace, Margaret de Valois, it is said, gave an asylum to Calvin and other persecuted Reformers, and took great delight in listening to their discourse, although she never actually abandoned the Roman Catholic faith. This tradition, however, requires confirmation. The tower was used as a gaol until the Restoration (1814). The little oblong court yard of the castle is destitute of architectural beauty; but the Tour de Montauzet, on the side of it, contained, according to popular belief, the oubliettes. It is about 80 ft. high, and its walls, to a height of 40 ft., were originally destitute of any opening, the gate at the bottom having been broken through in 1793, when the castle was sacked and despoiled by the Revolutionists. It stands within, and detached from, the outer wall of the castle, from which a small drawbridge, thrown over the gap, gave access to it through a little door. Within the thickness of its walls 7 or 8 confined dungeons exist, lighted by very small apertures, barred. The upper story only is provided with a window, looking into the court, and with a fireplace. Its wall, on the side of the court, is spotted with the marks of the shot fired by the Biscayans, when they assaulted the castle during the troubles, or civil wars in Béarn (1569), in the absence of Jeanne de Navarre.

Opposite the tower of Montauzet is the grand staircase, the vaulting of which, divided into squares, contains rich carvings, among which may be observed the letters H. M., the initials of Henri II. of Navarre and Margaret, the grand parents of Henri IV., by whom it was built. The entire restoration of the interior, now in progress, has been undertaken by Louis Philippe, and has been executed as yet with very good taste and splendour. He has revived, as far as possible, the ancient decorations, injured by the Revolutionists, who first stripped and ruined this ancient palace, and then degraded it to a barrack, and has replaced those which they destroyed by others as far as possible in accordance with the age and style of the edifice. The walls of the chief apartments have been covered with tapestry, and the rooms filled with ancient furniture of the period, collected at vast expense.

In an apartment on the first floor is preserved a most interesting relic—the cradle in which Henri IV. was rocked, consisting of a large tortoise-shell, inverted and suspended by cords, like the scale of a balance. It is at present surmounted by a trophy of flags, embroidered by the Duchesse d'Angoulême, the staves of which serve to support it. When the castle was sacked in 1793 by the Republicans, bent on destroying all traces of royalty, they would certainly not have spared this; but, luckily, another tortoise-shell was substituted in its place, which was broken, and burnt with every insult. The names of the parties who have the merit of preserving the original deserve to be recorded: they are M. D'Espalunge d'Arros, commandant of the castle, who devised the pious fraud; M. Beauregard, the possessor of a collection of natural history, who exchanged a tortoise-shell of the same size for the cradle, which he afterwards concealed for many years in the roof of his house; and M. Lamaignère, concièrge of the castle, who, at great risk, conveyed away the true cradle, and substituted the false in its place. A contemporary statue of Henri IV., preserved here, represents him leaning on his truncheon, after the battle of Ivry; it has little merit as a work of art. In front of the state apartments projects a balcony, commanding a view of the chain of the Pyrenees unsurpassed for its beauty. In the second story of the castle, in the room adjoining the Tour de Mazères, in the S.W. corner, Henri IV. was born. Here his venerable grandfather, Henri d'Albret, taking in his arms the new born infant, after his lips had been rubbed with garlic, according to the custom of Béarn, poured down his throat some drops of Jurançon wine, the best which the country affords, to give him a strong constitution! On the day of Henri's death, in 1610, there is a tradition that the castle was struck by lightning, which broke in pieces the royal escutcheon! Jeanne d'Albret was also born in the castle, 1528. It was alternately the prison of Reformers and Romanists during the religious wars and troubles of Bearn; and was the refuge of Theodore Beza and other Protestant teachers whom Jeanne de Navarre protected from persecution.

It also possesses more tragical associations, for within its walls eight Roman Catholic leaders of the revolt against Jeanne de Navarre, captured at Orthez by the Protestant general Montgomery, were executed. Romanist writers assert that this was done in contravention of a solemn treaty, which engaged to spare their lives; and add, that the sufferers were assassinated at a banquet to which they had been invited in token of reconciliation. The annals of the troubles in Bearn are a sickening narrative of bloody retaliations, murders, massacres, and cruelties perpetrated by both parties; but this statement, resting entirely on Romanist historians, needs confirmation! Nor does it seem necessary to resort to the treachery of a banquet to destroy men who were already prisoners. They were put to death as rebels on St. Bartholemew's day, 1569. There is a tradition that Charles IX., on hearing of it, exclaimed "he would cause a second St. Bartholemew in expiation of the first."

Among the costly and curious articles of old fashioned furniture collected by the king to decorate the castle, and restore it to its ancient splendour, may be mentioned the bed in the chamber à coucher du Roi, said to be that of Henri IV.; it is curiously carved with medallion heads of the kings of France: in an adjoining room is the bed of Jeanne d'Albret, and a state chair, richly carved, bearing her arms, purchased in England by Marshal Soult, and presented to Louis Philippe. The chapel has been newly fitted up, and has a painted window of Sèvres glass. The apartment leading to it contains some magnificent presents made by the present king of Sweden to the town of Pau, his birth-place. They consist of vases of porphyry of large size, superb tables of various kinds of porphyry, conglomerate &c., and a chimney-piece of serpentine, all the produce of Sweden, and of great value and beauty.

Bernadotte, king of Sweden, son of a poor saddler in Pau, was born in a house Rue de Tran, No. 6. He quitted his native town, 1780, as a drummer boy in the Regiment Royal de la Marine. Some of his relations still remain in very humble situations in the neighbourhood.

It is a somewhat remarkable coincidence, that of the two most eminent men and sovereigns who first drew breath at Pau, the one abandoned the Protestant faith, and other the Roman Catholic, in order to secure a throne.

The low ugly church of St. Martin is only remarkable, because in it Jeanne d'Albret, the most sagacious and accomplished princess of her age, after our Elizabeth, first received the communion according to the form of the Reformed church, on Easter day, 1560. Viret, the Reformer, preached from its pulpit.

A Statue of Henri IV. has lately been set up in the Place Royale; the bas-reliefs on the pedestal represent events of his life.

The College, at the E. end of the town was originally a convent of Barnabites, founded by Henri IV., after he had abandoned the faith of his mother, in order to conciliate the Roman Catholics.

In the Mairie there is a collection of marbles of the Pyrenees, and a picture, by Deveria, of the birth of Henri IV.

The Post aux Lettres adjoins the Prefecture, where is deposited a very curious collection of old records, deeds, &c., relating to the ancient state and history of Béarn, including the Fors (fueros, privileges,) of Béarn; autographs of its most illustrious Béarnois sovereigns, and a list of the contributions collected in Béarn towards the ransom of Francis I. from captivity.

There are Hot Baths (for 15 sous) at the extremity of the Place Royale adjoining the Basse Plante.

There is a Musée devoted chiefly to the natural history of the Pyrenees, above the new Halle, where the markets are held.

The town of Pau in itself is not very handsome or remarkable. Its chief street is the Rue de la Préfecture, which, on market days, presents a bustling scene; here are the chief shops, such as they are.

Many English, as before observed, make Pau their residence, chiefly for the winter months, when its mild and dry climate, and the stillness of atmosphere peculiar to it, are a great recommendation. — See Sir James Clarke's excellent work on Climate.

France.

Pau has been greatly resorted to of late by the wealthy Parisians also; good houses are consequently difficult to procure, and though provisions are cheap, house rent is enormously high; a moderately good suite of apartments costs more than a similar set at Paris. A number of new houses, however, are in the course of construction.

A new Protestant Church has been built in the Rue des Cordeliers, mainly by means of the aid afforded by the handsome contributions of the Duchess of Gordon. It is unfortunate that it should be so very ugly a building. The English church service is performed in it every Sunday by a resident clergyman.

A good Circulating Library of English and French books is kept by Markham, a respectable English bookseller, Place de Henri IV. (Place de Gramont), where some very well-executed views of the Pyrenees may be purchased.

Conveyances. — Diligences daily: to Bordeaux in 18 hours; to Bayonne, 9 hours; to Barèges, Luz, and Cauterets, 12 hours; to Bagnères de Bigorre, 36 m.; to Toulouse, to Oleron, in 3 hours; to Eaux Bonnes in 6 hours.

Commerce. — From the swine reared near this and at Orthez are derived the so-called Jambons de Bayonne; they are said to owe their excellent flavour to the abundance of acorns in the woods where the swine are herded, and to the salt of Salies with which they are cured. There is a considerable manufacture of chequered handkerchiefs here.

Baggage may be transmitted from this to Toulouse, or vice versâ, by the house of Turettes et Comp., commissionaires, or at a somewhat higher cost by the diligence.

Pau, situated at the termination of the plain, and at the roots of the Pyrenees, is excellent head-quarters for travellers intending to explore those mountains and the valleys which penetrate into their recesses. Of these, no one surpasses in beauty of scenery the Val d'Ossau, which opens out to the S., immediately in front of Pau, and terminates in the magnificent Pic du Midi de Pau.

The excursion to Eaux Chaudes and Eaux Bonnes, about 26 m. distant, situated at the head of the valley of Ossau, near the base of the Pic, are described in Route 83.; that to the Val d'Aspe in Route 82.

The church of Ste. Foi at Morlaas, 6 m. N. E., is said to be interesting.

Lascar, the antiquated town, 4 m., and Bilhère, 1 m., where Henri IV. was nursed, are mentioned in Route 78.

Cauterets is about 45 m., and Bagnères de Bigorre 36 m., from Pau (Route 85.).

ROUTE 82.

PAU TO THE SPANISH FRONTIER, BY OLERON AND THE VAL D'ASPE.

84 kilom. = 52 Eng. m.

A post road as far as Urdos.

Diligences daily to Oleron in 3 hours. The road has been greatly improved on the side of France, with the design of making it a highway to Madrid.

The road as far as Gan is the same as R. 83.; beyond that place it crosses the hills to 16 La Grave.

16 Oleron. (Inns: H. Condesse; good; dinner 3 fr.: Poste: H. des Voyageurs, chez Lustalot.) This is a large and prosperous manufacturing town of 6,500 inhabitants, on the Gave d'Oleron, formed by the junction at this spot of the Gaves d'Ossau and d'Aspe. The oldest part of the town occupies the summit of the hill and includes the church. A lofty stone bridge thrown across the stream unites Oleron with the suburb St. Marie, containing 3,400 inhabitants. Its church is profusely ornamented, though not in good taste, and its sacristy contains some costly priests' vestments. At the side of the Gave is the new Seminaire.

The objects manufactured here are the chequered handkerchiefs, so much in vogue as a head-dress among the peasantry of Arragon and Gascony, and also the berrets worn by the Béarnais. There is some trade in Spanish wool.

Diligences go in summer to Eaux Chaudes and Bonnes (R. 83.), and to Urdos.

The Val d'Aspe, at the mouth of which Oleron stands, contains scenery of great beauty, though it wants the boldness of many other valleys in the Pyrenees. A gradual ascent along a good road leads up it, following the course of the stream. At Asaspe the traveller has entered the Basque country and is already in the heart of the mountains. The Gave is crossed at Escot, near which a Latin inscription, cut in the rock by the wayside, commemorates the first making of this road by the Romans, under one Valerius, and twice more before reaching 17 Bédous, last post town in France, 1200 inhabitants; it has a tolerable but dirty inn. Here the vale swells out into a basin shape. In the neighbouring village of Osse there is a Protestant community of 30 families, who have preserved their faith in the midst of Roman Catholics.

An Obelisk of marble has been reared near the village of Accous (Aspa Luca) to the memory of Despourrins, the poet of the Pyrenees — their Burns, who was born here.

Grand defiles succeed to this basin; and in the midst the Pont d'Esquil, a bold antique arch, forms a fine object. Above Accous, the new road has been blasted out of the rock. After passing the villages of Aigun and Etsaut, we reach a grand, rocky defile at the ruined fort Portalet, which once entirely barred the passage up and down the valley: it was destroyed by the Spaniards. Near this, Buonaparte caused a road to be formed at vast expense, partly by excavating a shelf out of the face of the vertical precipice, partly by building up terraces of masonry, for the conveyance of timber for ship-building from the neighbouring forests.

Urdos, a poor village of 300 inhab., at which the carriage road ends.

11 Paillette (no post horses) is the last place in France. The journey into Spain as far as Jaca is a distance of 30 miles, and must be performed on mules. On the way, 10 m. short of Jaca lies 28 Campfranc, a village about equal in population to Urdos.

ROUTE 83.

PAU TO EAUX BONNES AND EAUX CHAUDES. — EXCURSION TO THE PIC DU MIDI D'OSSAU, AND THE SPANISH BATHS OF PENTICOUSA.

42 kilom. = 26 Eng. m. to Les Eaux.

Diligences go daily from June to middle of Sept. in 6 hours, returning in about 4 hours; very slow.

A voiture may be hired at Pau for the journey at the rate of about 25 fr.

The road is very good, but up hill most of the way. For those who travel only in carriages it leads into a cul de sac; and to prosecute their journey to other parts of the Pyrenees, they must retrace their steps nearly to Pau.

After crossing the bridge over the Gave du Pau, the village of Jurançon, distinguished by its groves of fine oaks, is passed on the rt.; it is famed for its wine, perhaps the best grown in the Pyrenees. The vineyards producing it extend along the slopes from this to Gan. One of the houses near the road was occupied for many years by Lord Elgin, when released from the dungeons of Lourdes by Napoleon as prisoner on his parole. The well-wooded, verdant, shady valley, up which the road runs, is watered by the Néez, or Neiss, a clear stream rushing over the limestone rocks, whose slaty foliations, crossing the direction of its current, resemble a flight of steps. In this country the vines are either trained over trellises, upon cross bars of wood, or are allowed to climb up the trees; whence their long tendrils sweep down over the hedges; the box tree flourishes, and would attain great size were it not constantly cropped. At the village of Gan on the l. also locally famous for its wines, is seen an old castellated house, in which Pierre Marca, the historian of Béarn and Archbishop of Paris, was born 1594. The front towards the court is said to possess some architectural interest. Here the road to Oleron (R. 82.) turns to the rt. Above Rébénac rises its château on a hillock, and a little beyond, on the l., the copious source of the Neiss bursts out of the rock. A long and toilsome ascent leads up to the village of Sévignac, situated on the top of the ridge separating the Neiss and other streams flowing into the Gave de Pau from the tributaries of the Gave d'Oleron, flowing out of the Val d'Ossau, which we now enter. It here expands into the form of a basin, round which the Gave takes a wide turn, passing by the village of Arudy. In descending the wooded slope from Sévignac, several glimpses are afforded of the Pic du Midi d'Ossau, a grand object; but near the bottom of the hill, and as far as the Pont de Louvie, his cleft crest and precipitous cone appear in full majesty, filling up the vista at the extremity of the Val d'Ossau. This is a magnificent view on a clear day, and in advancing up the valley it is soon lost. Rocks and precipices of limestone now line the road, which is partly cut out of them. On their smooth surface, or in their narrow chinks, the box delights to fix itself. They furnish the slabs of black and grey marble with which the door-posts and lintels of even the humblest cottage are here adorned. The Gave d'Ossau is crossed at the end of the village of 27 Louvie Juzon, and here also the road from Oleron (Route 82.) to Les Eaux falls in, at the Hôtel des Pyrenées, at the end of the bridge. The great transverse Val d'Ossau, which we are now about to ascend, and in which the Eaux are situated, is one of the most interesting among the Pyrenees for its picturesque beauties, and for the people who inhabit it. They still retain much of their ancient customs and costumes. The women are distinguished by the scarlet capulet, a sort of monk's hood, serving at once for bonnet and shawl, descending as far as the shoulders. Whether sitting or walking, and even when carrying burthens on the head, the spindle and distaff are never out of their hands. They are inferior in stature and features to the men, which may perhaps be owing to the hard and unfeminine labours which devolve upon them; it is common to see them holding the plough, and carrying sacks of manure on their heads, or spreading it over the land. The men, however, are not idle; they are absent on the high mountain pastures tending their flocks and herds, or following the hardy trade of wood-cutters and charcoal burners a great part of the year.

The men are chiefly distinguished by the wide cloth cap or berret, properly and most commonly of brown colour, which overhanging the brow and assuming very picturesque folds, sits very becomingly on a head of hair allowed to grow thick and of even length all round the neck, but cut short in front. They wear short jackets and knee breeches, also brown, the colour of the undyed wool of the sheep, and round the waist a brilliant red sash of silk or woollen is tied. To defend them from rain or cold, they carry the white or brown capa, which resembles a sack, unseamed on one side, pulled over the head. An artist would find many good subjects among them, very picturesque countenances, such as are seen in pictures of Van Eyck and Albert Durer.

The mountains around the valley abound in izards (chamois), which are sometimes met with in troops of 40 or 50. The chasse aux izards is a common amusement of visitors at the baths, under the guidance of experienced huntsmen, of whom there is no lack. The haunts most frequented by the izard, in this district, are the Pics d'Arcizet, de Gazie, and de Sesque.

Bears, though less common, are sometimes killed. "While at the Eaux Bonnes, we were roused by several musket-shots discharged close to the baths, and on running out to ascertain the cause, were met by a curious procession, a young ass dressed up in the skin of a bear which had been just killed on the mountains, led in by the successful huntsmen. Their tall athletic forms, dressed all in brown, from the berret to the stockings, armed with their guns and woodman's axes, had a picturesque appearance. The poor ass was sadly impeded in walking by the bear's paws, which dangled about his hoofs, and by the bear's head-piece, which compressed most uncomfortably his long ears. The bear had slain the night before ten sheep, and had eaten two; he fell pierced with bullets, one entering precisely in the centre of the forehead."—Journal, 1841.

Flocks of sheep form the chief wealth of this valley; but as they are led up to the mountains in April, and do not return till the end of summer, they are little seen, except by those who traverse the high mountains. They are guarded by a remarkable breed of dogs of large size, very courageous, whose duty is less to drive the flock, as the shepherd's dog of England and Scotland, than to protect it from the wolf and bear.

The rustic fêtes, dances, &c. still kept up in some parts of the Val d'Ossau, especially at Larruns (Aug. 15.), are well worth seeing, as they collect some of the finest specimens of the men of the valley, and of its primitive costumes. They have a peculiar musical instrument called tamburin, a lyre or zithern of 6 strings, struck with a stick by one hand, while the other holds the rustic mountain flageolet; it thus corresponds in simplicity and mode of playing to the old English tabour and pipe.

The part of the valley which we first enter is shut in by lofty mountains of bold forms and steep sides, separated by a plain of considerable breadth, through which winds the torrent, and it is scattered over with numerous villages. It is cultivated in patches to a considerable height, and covered below with large fields of maize, or with meadows deriving their bright verdure from well-managed irrigation, and producing, by means of it, three crops of hay in a year.

Within a mile of Louvie you pass, on the opposite bank of the Gave, the ruins of Castel Jaloux, or Geloz, occupying the top of one of two little hillocks; the other, also anciently enclosed within its ramparts, is now crowned by a small chapel. This stronghold was the key of the Val d'Ossau, and residence of its viscounts in early times, while the valley formed a separate state, independent of Béarn.

In the church of the village of Bielle, the finest in the valley in the pointed style, are four columns of marble, which, it is said, were so much admired by Henri IV., that he begged them of the inhabitants, but was met with this ingenious reply in the negative, "Nos cœurs et nos biens sont à vous, disposez en à votre volonté; quant aux colonnes, elles appartiennent à Dieu, entendez-vous en avec lui." The pillars themselves seem too poor to have excited the admiration of the king, but it was probably in the days of his boyhood, when wandering among his native mountains, that they struck his fancy.

A little before reaching the village of Laruns, one of the most considerable in the valley, a snow-white gash or scar, high up on the mountain side to the l., marks the situation of the white marble quarry of Louvie Soubiron, producing a stone well adapted for the sculptor's purpose. It has been employed at Paris for the statues in the Place de la Concorde, and for the bas-reliefs on the outside of the Madeleine. It is harder than that of Carrara, but is sometimes traversed by grey veins.

The situation of Laruns, encircled by high peaks and ridges, which impend on all sides above it, is very striking; among them the more distant Pic de Gers raises his conspicuous head. The Church appears originally to have had no windows much larger than loop-holes, though wide ones have been broken through in modern times: its font or bénitier, of the white marble mentioned above, is carved outside in the fashion of a basket, and within bears the inappropriate figures of mermaids.

On issuing out of Laruns you might suppose that you had arrived at the termination of the valley, so completely is it blocked up by the mass of the mountain Hourat; but after crossing the furious and injurious winter torrent, the Larienzé, and reaching the mountain foot, two roads are found to diverge; that on the l. to Eaux Bonnes (see p. 296.), that on the rt. to Eaux Chaudes, both places being equally distant (4 kilom. = 2½ Eng. m.) from this spot.

The road to Les Eaux Chaudes is carried up the mountain at an angle so steep as to render caution necessary in ascending and descending it with a carriage. At the top of this abrupt slope, the shoulder of the mountain, which, as it were, laps over, and conceals from the view of those below the upper part of the Val d'Ossau, has been cut down, and scooped out, by the aid of the auger and of gunpowder, into a notch, barely wide enough to allow 2 carriages to pass. A cold gust of air constantly traverses this gloomy recess, the portal of the valley; but after passing it, a sudden change of scene takes place. Before you opens out a lofty ravine or defile of mountains, almost precipitous, rising from 1000 to 1500 feet above your head, and approaching so close to one another, at their base, as to leave no room for culture or meadow, only space for the torrent. Below the road, which now, resuming a gentle slope, continues for 8 m. as good and broad as an English post road, the torrent, here called Gave de Gabas, roars, chafes, and tumbles from rock to rock, boring the limestone, by its whirlpools, into cauldrons and pits. The deep fissure, at the bottom of which it takes its course, is well seen near the bridge, which transfers the road from its l. to its rt. bank. From this point the river forces its way out into the lower Val d'Ossau, through a remarkable gorge walled in by precipices on either side, which has hitherto bid defiance to the passage of any road, and rendered necessary the steep ascent of the Hourat; it is quite inaccessible for man or beast. Its outlet is seen on the road to the Eaux Bonnes.

A project has been formed to carry the road from Pau to Eaux Chaudes, directly through this gorge into the valley, and thus avoid the steep and awkward ascent and descent of the Hourat; but as it would require to be blasted out of the rock, the great expense has hitherto prevented its execution.

The approach to the Eaux Chaudes is grand; the height and steepness of the mountains, now robed from top to bottom in box bushes, now starting out in lofty precipices of bare limestone, scarred by the course of torrents, which at times descend in long falls, like white ribbons, from their brows, and the variety imparted to the road by the projecting shoulders, round which it winds, give much interest to this part of the journey. At length the last projection is doubled, and a view opens of the group of houses called 17 Eaux Chaudes.— Inns: H. des Pyrenees (Chez Longa), the best; but rather a barrack, in external and internal aspect, than an hotel. It is entered by the upper story; the rest of the building lies below the level of the road, and is traversed by long dark corridors; while in a vault below it are set up the booths of itinerant vendors of goods, as well as the Baths. There is a traiteur attached to the house, as well as to Baudot's inn. Dinner at 5; table d'hôte 3 fr.; breakfast, or tea, 1 fr. 50 cents.; beds, 2 fr. There are 6 or 7 other inns and lodging-houses, which form the bulk of the place. It lies wedged in, as it were, in the midst of the long trough of the valley, between lofty precipices, towering over head, and often draped with clouds. The houses are founded upon granite, which here first makes its appearance jutting up in a round boss behind the village. In its rise it has considerably elevated the limestone above it, as may be perceived by the considerable curve in the strata, visible on the face of the precipices on the l. bank, opposite the baths. The hot springs burst forth out of the granite, close to the junction of the limestone. This phenomenon of the outbreak of hot sources near the points of contact of granitic or trappean rocks is of frequent occurrence among the Alps and Pyrenees.

In spite of the name, Eaux Chaudes, the temperature of the waters is not so high as at many other Pyrenean springs, the hottest not exceeding 95° Fahrenheit; and one of them is cold. The principal sources are Lou Rey (le Roi), named from Henri IV., a frequent visitor, 93°, and L' Esquirette, 95°, the most sought after, and most highly mineralised. The waters are sulphureous, and are supplied from 6 springs, 3 of which, used for bathing, are conveyed into Longa's bath-house, and to a separate establishment at the end of the village. The others are used for drinking. At present they burst out from the rock into rude little basins, whither invalids resort to fill their glasses, without the shelter of a pump-room, or the aid of a Hebe to fill it for them. A handsome Etablissement des Bains, however, to include pump-room, promenade and baths, chambers for the resident physician, and some sets of rooms for guests, has been begun, on the platform of rock below Longa's hôtel, and will be finished, it is calculated, in 1846. Into it the waters of 3 of the springs will be conducted. The existing baths are not particularly inviting. This new building will be furnished with 5 baths, besides douches. At present, the Eaux Chaudes contains neither billiard-room, café, nor reading-room (though these will probably be included in the new etablissement), and the Eaux Chaudes baths are resorted to, either by the real invalid in search of health, or the passing traveller, attracted by the beauties of nature. The village, indeed, with its low houses, and its little narrow platforms serving as promenades, has a triste air.

There is, however, at least one very interesting excursion to be made from this, viz. to Gabas and the Pic du Midi d'Ossau. Horses may be hired at 3 fr. to 4 fr. for the day; guides 4 fr. The valley of Ossau is a frequented passage between France and Spain, along which 15,000 mules pass annually. Its scenery, above Eaux Chaudes, is far grander and more varied in its mountain outlines and vegetation than below; and the whole range of the Pyrenees presents few more interesting rides than that to Gabas (6 m.). The fine near view obtained, in proceeding thither, of the Pic du Midi, which is out of sight at Eaux Chaudes, would alone well repay the trouble. About 2 m. beyond Eaux Chaudes, the Gave is crossed by a bridge of wood, called Pont d'Enfer, above which, on the rt., a small cascade, named from the neighbouring, but elevated hamlet of Goust, descends the mountain. In this portion of the valley, the limestone has entirely given place to granite, which forms the substance of the mountains, and the vegetation which covers them is of a beauty and variety unrivalled. It is at this point that we pass into the zone of fir trees; whose dark files, covering the mountain tops, descend half-way, mixing like mourners in the crowd of trees of lighter foliage; birch, beech, hazel, alder, and oaks, which rise from amidst an undergrowth of box, mixed with a wonderful profusion of wild flowers. At times the road mounts to a great height above the torrent; and there is a fearful pleasure in looking down, over the tree tops, upon it, writhing, struggling, and serpentining in the dark depths below. The firs in the forests around were formerly sent to Bayonne, to supply timber for the French navy, being hurled down the steep mountain sides, and floated down into the Gave d'Oleron.

Gabas is a poor hamlet, the last in France, having a small cabaret which will furnish a very tolerable dinner to a sharp appetite, and where Spanish wine may sometimes be had good. At the extremity of the hamlet is the French Douane. Hence the fine view of the forked summit of the Pic du Midi is obtained. From this point also the ascent of the Pic du Midi is made, following the right-hand branch of the valley above Gabas. It takes three hours passing the Cabanes de Magne-Baigne to reach the Créte de Pombie at the base of the peak itself, which is of granite, very steep, and takes $1\frac{3}{4}$ to 2 hours to surmount.

Should the traveller be disposed to take a peep at Spain, he may go from Les Eaux Chaudes to Penticousa, an Arragonese watering-place.

The carriage-road up the valley terminates at Gabas. There is a steep mule-path turning to the rt. which leads to the Plateau of Bioux Artiques, which commands so grand a view of the Pic du Midi, that Lady Chatterton says it is worth while to come all the way from England to enjoy it alone. It is only 1½ hour from Gabas. The mule-path turning to the l. from that place, on the W. side of the mountain, leads into Spain past the solitary house called Case de Broussette, the last in France, which will furnish only very homely fare, home-made cheese and the like, so that it is prudent to take provisions. It has been built by the Government as a sort of refuge or hospice halfway between Gabas and Salients.

The passage or col, called Le Port d'Anéou, is an hour's walk above this; a mule path of gradual descent leads from it, by the side of the stream of the Gaillago. The first Spanish village is reached by a steep descent, rather difficult for horses in one place, a little beyond the Custom House, and 5 hours' walk below the Col. It is called Salients (? Jallens); while the horses are resting here you may take a cup of excellent chocolate at the Posada, and visit the little church and its trésor. The village of Penticousa is 2 hours' ride hence; and 2 hours of difficult ascent by a winding path through a narrow and savage gorge, called El Escular, are required to reach the baths. The baths consist of 4 or 5 large buildings, in a wild, romantic situation, at a height of more than 8000 ft. above the sea level, in a confined hollow basin or valley, half of which is occupied by a lake surrounded by wild mountains of granite. Penticousa may be reached in 7 or 8 hours from Eaux Chaudes. The inn here is provided with a capital cuisine Française, and there is a daily table d'hote during the season. Accommodation, i. e. a clean room, may be had at the house of Don Jose Juan Torla.

The Spanish Val de Broto is one of the few remaining haunts of the ibex or bouquetin. It is reached by pursuing the valley of the Gallego downwards through a fine pass as far as Briescas, where a good breakfast may be obtained at the house opposite the Posada. Hence the path turns up a wild glen to the Col de Fablo, and then through several villages to Torla in the Val de Broto, 12 hours' walk from Penticousa, where accommodation may be had, but at extortionate charges, at the house of the intendant of the Douane.

From Penticousa * to Cauterets is a journey of 7 or 8 hours on foot, and a little more with mules, over the Col de Marcadau, one of the most desolate passes in the range; traversed by a very rough mule track, indistinctly marked in the rock. It is a climb of 3 hours to the summit, passing several lakes amidst scenery of the utmost wildness and grandeur descending upon the Pont d'Espagne and Lac de Gaube. (R. 85. p. 303.)

One of the first sights which travellers are invited to see at Eaux Chaudes is the Grotte situated in the rock on the l. side of the valley, 3¼ hours' walk above the baths.

The road to Eaux Bonnes, branching off to the l. at the bifurcation beyond Laruns, crosses the Gave de Gabas by a bridge, whence there is a good view of the dark and narrow gorge, through which that stream issues out of the upper valley (see p. 294). A steep ascent, carried up in a terrace along the mountain side, succeeds, and does not terminate till the road reaches Eaux Bonnes. On the l., low down, lies the castle of Espalunge, and higher up, on the shoulder of a mountain, the village d'Aas looks down upon our road. The stream flowing at the bottom of the valley is a tributary of the Gave d'Ossau, called the Valentin. At the very entrance of Eaux Bonnes a narrow, rocky gully, with a torrent at its bottom, is crossed by a wooden bridge. This stream is the contribution sent forth by the confined nook in which Eaux Bonnes stands, partitioned off, as it were, from the vale of the Valentin by a ridge of rock of no great height, and concealed from view until you are about to enter it. Beyond the bridge above alluded to is the fashionable and much-frequented watering place 17 Les Eaux Bonnes, consisting of a street of rather more than 20 hotels and lodging houses, of large dimensions and many stories, which would not disgrace a German watering place, and contrast with the homely low buildings of Eaux Chaudes. One side, however, of the street is still incomplete; the other is occupied by a miserable and filthy yard, planted with a few trees and hedges, nicknamed Jardin Anglais, a disgrace to the name and the place. The village is cradled in the lap of the mountains, niched in a complete cul de sac with precipices rising all around close to the houses, so that the rock has been blasted in order to make room for some of them.

* More precise information is desired by the Editor respecting the Routes to and from Penticousa.

Above these cliffs, to the S.E., towers the majestic Pic de Gers, the grand feature in all the views of this neighbourhood, while nearly due E. rises the serrated ridge of the Col de Torte.

The principal Inns are Hôtel de France, chez Cazères; La Poste; Quatre Nations; Hôtel de l'Europe.

The charges are high, but vary according to the season and the throng of visitors; but owing to the extent of accommodation and the number of inns, rooms are now always to be had. Meals are supplied even in the hotel by traiteurs, at the rate of 4 fr. per diem, including breakfast and dinner, at table d'hote; or 5 fr. if sent into the visitor's private apartments; children 2 fr. 10 sous, and servants 3 fr. The season opens in June and lasts till October, being at its height in July and August.

There are 4 or 5 springs here of warm sulphurous water, stronger than those of Eaux Chaudes, but of lower temperature, the hottest not exceeding 91° Fahrenheit. The principal ones rise at the foot of the crag called Butte du Trésor, and are conducted into the Bath-house at the extremity of the village. The water of one source is subjected to artificial heating to fit it for baths. The cold spring alone is used for drinking. The waters are considered good for complaints of the lungs and chest, and very efficacious in the early stages of consumption. Their reputation is of long standing, for the Béarnais soldiers of Henri d'Albret, wounded in the battle of Pavia, repaired hither for the cure of their injuries, and first gave the water the name of Eau d'Arquebusade.

The well-wooded cliffs around have been rendered accessible for invalids by zigzag paths and terraces. The summer-house on the top of the Butte du Trésor commands a view of Laruns and the Val d'Ossau. Other paths lead down to the pretty but trifling waterfalls of the Valentin. The finest fall is that named De Gros Hêtre, from a beech tree now cut down about 3 m. distant. Another very delightful walk of 1½ hour, at first under the shade of the beech trees, leads to the Promenade Jacqueminot, so called from a general who caused it to be cut. Thence there is a way through the forest of Assouste and to the Col de Gourzi, which leads over the mountains to Eaux Chaudes; but though running in a direct line, it takes twice as much time, and is twice as difficult as the carriage road by the Hourat.

There is a mountain path from Eaux Bonnes scarcely traced in some parts, over the Col de Tortes, and under the Pic de Gabisos; then over a second ridge to Arrens, and down the Val d'Azun to Argelez. (R. 85. p. 300.) By means of it the pedestrian may reach Luz or Cauterets in the shortest time, avoiding the détour by Pau and Lourdes which the high road makes.

Esterle is a good guide.

Persons residing at Eaux Bonnes should not omit to explore the Val de Gabas above Eaux Chaudes, with its luxuriant forests and its noble Pic du Midi, the grandest mountain in this district. (See p. 295.) It is a drive of an hour, or a walk of 2 to Eaux Chaudes by the road.

ROUTE 85.

THE PYRENEES. — PAU TO LOURDES, CAUTERETS, LUZ, ST. SAUVEUR. — GAVARNIE, BARÈGES, AND BAGNÈRES DE BIGORRE, MOUNTAIN ROAD. — EXCURSIONS TO THE LAC DE GAUBE. — BRÊCHE DE ROLAND AND MONT PERDU. — THE PIC DU MIDI, &c. &c.

A daily communication by diligences is kept up in summer between all the principal watering places of the Pyrenees.

Distances from Pau — to Cauterets 68 kilom. = 42 Eng.m. — to Luz and St. Sauveur 71 kilom. = 44 Eng. m. — to Barèges, 78 kilom. = 48½ Eng. m. — to B. de Bigorre.

This route includes some of the most interesting objects and places in the Pyrenees; and the drive from Lourdes to Luz and Cauterets in particular is a continued succession of the most beautiful scenery.

The road ascends the rt. bank of the Gave de Pau, through a plain of considerable width, nearly covered with maize, and passes between festooned vines slinging their tendrils between the apple and cherry trees. One village rapidly succeeds another, but they contribute little to the cheerfulness of the drive, as the houses turn their backs on the traveller, whose gaze is met by dead walls. He has however something more interesting to occupy his attention in the varying forms of the mountains which he is gradually approaching. But there is one exception in the village of Coarrase, where the Gave is crossed by a bold arch; for its old tower crowning a mound on the rt. bank, is part of the castle in which the Bon Henri IV. was confided from his early years to the care of Susanne de Bourbon, Baronne de Missans, and by the wisdom of his mother brought up in the rough fashion of the peasants of his native country, dressed like them, fed like them, sharing in their sports, and traversing the rugged rocks with bare feet; thus acquiring the vigour of body and strength of mind which enabled him to surmount in after-life so many hardships, dangers, and difficulties. Beside the ruin a modern château has been built.

The feet of the mountains are fairly gained at 24 Lestelle. (Inn, Poste.) Just outside of this village, at a spot where the road is hemmed in between a fine wooded hill spotted with chapels or stations and the river, which itself running in a contracted rocky bed is spanned by a bold arch most picturesquely draped with ivy, stands the Pilgrimage Church of Bétharram, an ugly modern building, containing a statue of the Virgin reported to have miraculous powers, which attracts a multitude of devotees from a distance in the month of September. Here also is a Seminaire for the education of priests.

Traversing a narrow defile again on the rt. bank of the Gave, which is hemmed in between barren bracken-covered hills, we pass into the department of the Hautes Pyrenees, and from ancient Béarn into Bigorre, shortly before entering the little manufacturing town of St. Pé, chiefly inhabited by nailors who obtain iron from the forges of Asson, and by comb makers who supply the Spanish ladies with combs of box-wood for their hair. It has a curious Romanesque church with apsidal terminations, and sculpture over the door. Much roofing slate is exported hence.

16 Lourdes. — Inns, La Poste and H. Lafitte.

Lourdes consists of a picturesque but somewhat gloomy-looking hill fort, seated on a rock, around which the town of narrow dirty streets and shabby houses group themselves. This Castle was once the key of the valley of Lavedan or of the Gave de Pau, commanding the 4 roads which unite here from Tarbes, Bagnères, Argelez, and Pau. It is reached by flights of stair and entered by a small drawbridge, and a door 4 ft. high and only wide enough for one person to squeeze through; but not being strong according to modern rules of art, is rather of use as a barrack than a fortress. It was long a state prison, and in 1804 Lord Elgin was incarcerated within it by Napoleon who caused him to be seized in his passage through France from Constantinople. Far different was its importance in ancient times; it was held for the English monarchs, and the Black Prince as part of the country of Bigorre, which was yielded up to the English by the French king John as part of his ransom, in conformity with the treaty of Bretigny. Froissart gives a very long account of its varied fortunes, which confers much interest to this feudal fortress — for all who are acquainted with this history. He tells us that when the Black Prince came over to take possession of Aquitaine, which his father had given him to hold in fief, he and his princess, while on a visit to the Comte d'Armagnac at Tarbes, rode over to Lourdes, which he had a great desire to see. He was greatly pleased, "as well with the strength of the place as with its situation on the frontiers of several countries, for those of Lourdes can overrun the country of Arragon to a great extent, and as far as Barcelona in Catalonia." The Prince entrusted the command of it to a knight of Béarn, one of his household, in whom he had great confidence, Sir Peter Arnaut, to guard it well. When the war broke out with France, he held it fast, and assisted by many bold adventurers, made repeated incursions through Bigorre and all Languedoc, sometimes to a distance of 30 leagues. "In their march out they touched nothing, but on their return all things were seized, and sometimes they brought with them so many prisoners and such quantities of cattle that they knew not how to dispose of or lodge them. They laid under contributions the whole country except the territory of the Comte of Foix, where they dared touch nothing without paying for it. Tarbes was kept in great fear, and was obliged to enter into a composition with them." In 1369, not very long after the visit of the Black Prince, Lourdes was actually attacked by the French army, commanded by the Duc d'Anjou, and at the end of 16 days the town, defended only by a palisade, and much injured by the machines which the duke brought to bear against it, was won; but the enemy made no impression on the citadel above, which bade defiance for six weeks longer to all efforts to take it. The governor remained true to his oath sworn to the Prince of Wales to guard his stronghold, and resisted the offer of a large sum from the Duc d'Anjou to deliver it up. Another attempt was made to induce this faithful châtelain to betray his trust, by Gaston Phœbus, who invited him to his castle of Orthez. Before setting out however Pierre Arnault confided his stronghold to his brother Jean, who took the same oaths of fidelity. Gaston, irritated at the steadfast honesty of Arnault in refusing his proposal to yield up the castle, in a brutal fit of rage stabbed him in 5 places with his poignard and thrust him into a dungeon where he perished. The atrocious crime availed him not; for Jean, the brother of his victim, proved as trusty a governor and skilful a captain as the murdered Pierre.

The whole history of Lourdes is admirably told by Froissart, from which the above notices have been abridged.

There is nothing to be seen here, but the artist-traveller may probably get a sketch of the castle and its picturesque donjon. The sides of the valley are very bare and uninviting near this.

The direct post road from Pau to Bagnères branches off from Lourdes, whence it is distant 21 kilom. (R. 85.)

When Lourdes is left behind we are in the heart of the mountains, but the valley continues for some time stern, rocky, bare; showing marks in its gashed sides and strewn bottom of the fury of the torrents.

Here and there a feudal hill fort rises upon its rocky perch, a relic of the days when nearly every valley of the Pyrenees was the scene of almost constant border warfare.

This unpromising vestibule however leads into what has not unjustly been called the paradise of Argelez, where the valley of Lavedan (for so this part of the watercourse of the Gave de Pau above Lourdes is called) expands into a wide basin renowned for its picturesque beauty, fertility, and cultivation, and ranking among the finest in the Pyrenees. This altered scene expands to view after passing the widely conspicuous dismantled tower of Vidalos, which, rising in the midst of the valley upon a monticule, conceals the village and what lies behind it.

Rich maize crops or verdant pastures occupy the bottom, interspersed with orchards alternately powdered with blossom or laden with fruit, walnut, fig-trees, and vines; but the tilled land extends far up the slopes, and the grand mountains around are clothed with forests of noble growth, the whole scattered over with houses and villages which adds to the whole the charm of much cheerfulness. In the midst of this lies the village or small town of Argelez. (Inns: — H. de la Paix, and du Commerce, are the best, but dirty). It is dirty and insignificant in itself and destitute of a good inn, but, from its sheltered situation, enjoys a climate where winter tarries so short a while that its presence is scarcely perceived; where the snow flake melts as soon as it falls, and spring begins when the valley above and below is buried in snow. In summer however it is intensely hot. It is precisely in the midst of these beauties of nature that man appears most miserable: the malady of goitre and cretinism is very prevalent about Argelez.

The Val d'Azun, opening out on the W. opposite Argelez, and extending up into the central chain between the mountains called Pic du Midi d'Azun and Pic de Gabisos, includes some very fine scenery, and is well worth exploring. A path leads up by Anzizans, a beautiful spot, to Arrens, the highest village (8 m.); but beyond it stands the pilgrimage chapel of N. D. de Pouey la Hun, a most picturesque building on a pedestal of rock overlooking the valley. From Arrens a mountain path runs to Eaux Bonnes (R. 83.), crossing two ridges, the second being the Col de Tortes.

Beyond Argelez the scanty remains of the ancient abbey of St. Savin, now sequestrated, are passed high up on the hill to our right. The view from the convent garden is most beautiful, and the church, said to be as old as Charlemagne, is very curious. The valley of Argelez terminates at 19 Pierrefitte.—Inn, Poste. This village, whose population seem to live by begging, much to the traveller's annoyance, is the centre from which the roads to Cauterets and to Barèges separate: it is seated at the foot of a lofty and conspicuous mountain, which seems to block up the passage, and which, in fact, gives rise to 2 minor valleys. The road to Luz, Barèges, and St. Sauveur (p. 305.) runs up that on the l., and the way to Cauterets is on the rt. of this mountain. The highest point of the ridge dividing the valley of Cauterets from that of Luz is named the Pic du Midi de Viscos: it is 7030 ft. above the sea level. The whole way to Cauterets lies through a narrow gorge, where the cheerful beauty of the lower valley gives place to savage grandeur. A new and good carriage road, which took 4 years to complete, is carried through it, rising immediately behind Pierrefitte, before it penetrates into the defile, in well contrived zigzags, either elevated on terraces of masonry or cut out of the hard rock: it is a fine work of engineering, not inferior, as far as it extends, to the celebrated roads through and over the Alps. The ascent by the old road was both difficult and dangerous; 4 horses and 3 pair of oxen being attached to a carriage to drag it up. A portion of the old way remains, and serves as a short cut for the pedestrian, whence he may survey to advantage the mouth of the narrow gorge, in the depths of which the torrent struggles along. It is a rent burst through vertical strata of slate, yet, except where its sides are absolutely perpendicular, they are either carpeted with bright patches of green meadow, or covered with trees and brushwood, among which the hazel thrives. At a short distance from the mouth of the gorge, the view, looking back upon the vale of Argelez, is peculiarly beautiful, from the contrast of rugged, gloomy wildness in the foreground, with the sunny richness beyond of groves, pastures, and cornfields. Near the middle of the pass, which longo intervallo may recall to the Swiss traveller some features of the Via Mala, the road surmounts in a series of graceful curves a bed of limestone or marble, called Butte du limaçon, which stretches across the valley like a dam. Over this the Gave tumbles in a long rapid, which frets its waters into foam as white as snow, and leaves little to be seen of its natural hues of beryl and chrysoprase. To this succeeds a slight opening in the valley, and a tall pointed mountain appears at its extremity, clad in fir: at its foot lies Cauterets; though intervening hills conceal it from view until you are close upon it.

9 Cauterets.—Inns: H. de France; Lion d'Or, comfortable and less dear, &c.

Tables d'hôte are not the fashion here; for the most part gentlemen dine à la carte, and families are supplied with meals in their rooms by a traiteur. Cauterets, though in a spot so remote and elevated (2900 ft. above the sea), with savage mountains encircling it in an amphitheatre, and overhanging its roofs with their peaks and pine forests, has a perfectly townish air, with an octroi at its entrance, paved streets of inns and lodging-houses, and in the centre an irregular market place. It is one of the chief Brunnen of the Pyrenees, containing nearly 1000 permanent inhabitants, — abounding in agents, guides, horse-jobbers, and itinerant marchands, who beset the traveller the moment he sets foot within it. The number of houses is about 200; most of them have the door-posts, window-sills, and thresholds of grey marble, and over every other door is emblazoned "Chevaux ou voitures à louer." Invalids repairing to Cauterets, to take the waters, must address themselves to the inspector (Dr. Buron), who will inscribe their names in a book, and allot to them an hour for taking the bath, to remain fixed during the whole of their stay, with a chaise à porteur to convey them if required.

The chief building is the pump-room or Etablissement des Bains, recently built near the foot of the hill, to receive the waters of the source called les Espagnols, one of the most powerful and hottest in the Pyrenees. It is so named from its having at an early period, according to tradition, cured the ailments of a king of Arragon, or from being much frequented by Spaniards, who cross the mountains, in great numbers, to repair hither. The new building is supplied with water in pipes carried down the slope of the hill de Perraute, from the source situated at a considerable elevation, where the old bath house stands. The bathing apparatus and accessories are constructed on the most approved plan dictated by the experience of modern science. The older bath houses in the same direction are little better than wretched sheds, approached by paths so steep and stony as to require much exertion on the part of the robust to surmount; yet up them the invalid was formerly compelled either to toil on foot or be carried in a chaise à porteur.

The Mineral Springs here are sulphurous and hot, varying only in the quantity of the same ingredients, and in warmth from 102° to 122° Fahr. There are about 16 distinct sources, six of which rise, on the hill of Perraute, above the town, to the E., and the remainder are situated higher up the valley, on the banks of the Marcadaou, from 1 to 1½ mile distant. They are said to present in their strength, warmth, and qualities an epitome of almost all the sulphureous sources scattered over the Pyrenees; some of them being even more powerful than those of Barèges, others as mild as St. Sauveur. The chief of the springs on the banks of the Marcadaou, and the one most resorted to, is the Raillère, whose waters are received in a building of some pretensions, faced with a portico, on a raised terrace, at the foot of a granitic mountain, destitute of trees or verdure, but covered over with fallen blocks of stone, which descend its slopes in dreary ruin. From 6 to 8 in the morning all the world of Cauterets repairs to this desolate spot, and, duringthe thronged season, bathers assemble here at a much earlier hour, even at 4 in the morning. The road is thronged with sour-faced invalids; — open sedan-chairs upon poles, covered with a canvas hood, of which 50 or 60 are kept in the town, hurry to and fro, occupied by muffled females; peasant women in red capulets, mingle with Paris dandies in white berrets, and red Béarnais sashes (la mode des Bains), black ecclesiastics in broad-brimmed hats, capuchin monks in brown sackcloth and hoods, and Spaniards of swarthy, olive-coloured visage and stately gait, their heads swathed in mottled handkerchiefs, their persons muffled up in the embozo of their cloaks, which are often no better than horsecloths, offering a singular combination of dignity and poverty, — such are the component parts of this motley and picturesque crowd which repairs daily to La Raillère. There are 23 Cabinets des Bains at La Raillère, with 2 douches and a fountain for drinking.

Above the Raillère is a group of other springs, and a cluster of little bath houses, built one above another against the hill-sides: the principal are the Bain du Pré, beneath a stream of fallen rocks, grown over with lichens, Petit St. Sauveur, Mahourat, des Œufs, des Yeux. The Source de Montmorency is a sort of grotto, whose waters, too hot for the hand to bear, deposit a white, greasy slime; and the Bain du Bois, the highest in this direction, contains 4 cabinet baths, with a douche in each, and beds for the invalid who may desire to encourage the perspiration produced by the bath, and 2 piscines or large baths: the charge for one is 20 sous.

July and August are the seasons when Cauterets is most thronged: lodgings are then very dear; poorly furnished apartments sometimes costing as much as 4 or 5 fr. each, per diem.

There is a subscription reading-room or club here, called Cercle.

Several formal avenues and alleys on the outskirts of the town, by the side of the road to Pierrefitte, and the Parc on the margin of the Gave, satisfy the wants of French visitors as promenades, but must appear wearisome to English: indeed, except in the society of friends, or with the inducement of illness to make one tarry, the attractions at Cauterets are few.

The Grange de la Reine, a humble farm, so called from Queen Hortense having once been belated in crossing the mountains, and having passed the night there, is a good point of view for the basin of Cauterets, about 600 ft. above it. The mountain called Peak of Monné commands a far more extensive and very striking view, but is a serious mountain to climb.

The sportsman may be thankful to know, that the rivers abound in trout, and that the chace of the izard and the bear may be pursued on the neighbouring mountains between the Vignemale and the Pic du Midi d'Ossau, with some prospect of success, at the latter end of spring. These wild animals are, however, becoming rare even in these their last retreats. Jean Destapins is a capital guide and chasseur, recommended by Mr. Erskine Murray.

Chaises à porteur cost 15 fr. a day, and 3 fr. pour boire to the porteurs, who are very agile and sure-footed; ladies are often carried by them as far as the Lac de Gaube. Good ponies may be hired here (p. 239.). Nobody thinks of quitting Cauterets without making the customary excursion (one of the most interesting in the Pyrenees) to the Pont d'Espagne and Lac de Gaube. There is a bridle road all the way, well marked but steep at its farther extremity, and the excursion may be performed by men without a guide. It requires about 2 hours' good walking to reach the Pont d'Espagne, and 45 minutes more thence to the Lac de Gaube: the return may be effected in less time.

The road ascends the desolate valley of the Gave de Marcadaou, passing the source de la Raillère, between the mountains Perraute and Peyrénère, whose sides strown with rocks fallen from above, and in headlong ruin hurled, effectually prevent the growth of trees or shrubs. The Gave is crossed by a wooden bridge beyond the Raillère, close to the junction of a tributary Gave descending from the Val de Lutour, up which runs a path. It is not until after a steep and toilsome ascent has left behind the Bains du Bois, that a change comes over the features of the valley, and dark forests of fir relieve the bared and wrinkled face of the granite precipices. The torrent leaps down from the upper to the lower slopes of the valley in several fine falls, the best of which is the cascade de Cerizet. The precipices rising on either side of the gorge are surmounted by serrated peaks and pointed aiguilles of granite, which assume most picturesque forms, while their base is clothed with fir forests.

About 6 m. from Cauterets is the Pont d'Espagne, in itself a mere simple structure of pine trunks thrown across the torrent, here confined in a narrow chasm between rocks, just below the junction of the Gave descending from the Lac de Gaube with the Marcadaou. The streams unite by leaping together into the chasm under the bridge, in picturesque falls, but of no great magnitude. These are but accessories to the sublime scene around, which, from the predominance of black fir forests, surrounded by granite cliffs shooting upwards in spires and pinnacles, our friend and fellow traveller (T.) assures us, reminded him somewhat of Norway.

The valley above the Pont d'Espagne, called Val de Jarret continues of great grandeur, and is traversed by a path on the l. bank of the Marcadaou, which leads by the pass called Port de Cauterets to the Spanish baths of Penticousa in Spain. (See p. 296. R. 83.) The road is good as far as the frontier, 4 hours' ride from Cauterets; there horses must be left in a rude cabin, and the descent made on foot, as the path thence is bad. The journey occupies 7 or 8 hours from Cauterets.

To reach the Lac de Gaube you must turn to the l. close to the Pont d'Espagne, immediately below it, where a very steep path strikes up the mountain side through the pine wood, and at first by the side of a torrent.

After about ¾ hour's walk (2 m.) over trunks and roots and shattered stones, you reach this lonely basin of green water. It is not more than 2½ m. in circumference, yet is the largest lake among the Pyrenees, and lies at an elevation of ft. above the sea level, and is 164 ft. deep. The steep precipices on either side are bare, except where seamed with lines of straggling black firs, alternating with streams of fallen rocks; but the entire centre of the picture is filled with the noble mass of the Vignemale, one of the highest mountains in France, white with eternal snow, crowned by crags and by glaciers which feed the lake through a small fall. The only habitation is the fisherman's hut, which now serves as a restaurant (furnishing lake trout for the hungry traveller's breakfast at a high rate), planted upon a ridge of granite, stretching across the valley, and damming up the waters of the lake. On a projecting rock a little monument of white marble railed in, is the record of the melancholy fate of a young Englishman, named Patisson, and his wife, who, within one month of their marriage, were drowned in the lake. They had trusted themselves to the frail skiff of the fisherman to row across the lake; and it is supposed to have been accidentally overset, for no human eye beheld the accident. Their bodies were conveyed to Witham in Essex.

The ascent of the Vignemale is sometimes made from the lake, which is either crossed in the boat, or skirted by the path on the l. The clue to the ascent is the Gave, which forms the water-fall at the extremity. Following its bank, you ascend in succession, in the course of 1½ hour's walk, 5 different stages or steps of the mountain, each of which the torrent clears by a leap. The mass of the mountain is alpine limestone, which here overlies the granite, prevailing from la Raillère to the Lac de Gaube. The Gave has its origin in the foot of a glacier stretching nearly up to the top of the mountain. Its crest is topped by 3 peaks detached from one another; the lowest of the 3, called Petit Pic, is alone accessible. The highest is 11,001 ft. above the sea level, surpassing every other in the French Pyrenees. The view is said to extend into Spain and over a large part of the French chain. This excursion cannot be performed without the aid of approved and experienced guides.

There is a difficult mountain path among broken rocks and the débris of glaciers, from the Lac de Gaube over the shoulder of the Vignemale, keeping that mountain on the rt., through the Col or Port de Ossouë and down the Val d'Ossouë to Gavarnie (see p. 308). It requires 8 or 10 hours, and should not be undertaken without good guides, being one of the most difficult expeditions in the Pyrenees.

The course usually taken by persons proceeding to Bagnères, Barèges, and Gavarnie, from Cauterets, is to retrace their steps down the valley as far as Pierrefitte (see p. 300.), and thence ascend the gorge leading up to Luz, which is so interesting in its scenery, that no one should omit to explore it.

It is a truly magnificent defile, differing from that to Cauterets, rather less gloomy, but scarcely superior. It abounds in rich foliage throughout. Near the 3rd bridge over the Gave a new road has been made with much engineering skill, running 200 or 300 feet lower down than the old, which mounts a very steep ascent, only to descend immediately after. It is alternately a shelf cut with vast labour out of the rock, or a terrace built up with masonry; an abyss under foot, and towering masses over head. The chasm through which the Gave flows is very striking: it is a rent so narrow that its sides seem to overlap each other, and never to have been completely parted. The green torrent chafing along, and worming its way through the depths between the rocks, is a beautiful object. Where the new road, in one even gradual ascent, meets the old, the gorge opens into a basin-shaped vale, remarkable for its rich carpet of verdure, cultivated in patches, and with little villages planted a considerable way up its sides, until fields give place to forests. The mountains by their separation leave space for a small plain nearly in the form of a triangle, entered by a narrow defile at each of its angles. On the S. W. opens that of Gavarnie, at the mouth of which lies St. Sauveur, on the S. E. that of the Bastan leading to Barèges, guarded at its mouth by the Castle of St. Marie. From both of these issue Gaves which, meeting in the midst of the plain, escape by its third or N. angle, through the defile leading to Pierrefitte, and traversed by the carriage road. At the upper end of the plain between the defiles of Gavarnie and Barèges, at the foot of a lofty mountain called Pic de Bergons, lies the little village of Luz. An avenue of formal poplars traverses the verdant flat meadows, gushing with rills of water, to which they owe their emerald tints and rich crops of grass, and leads into Luz, where Madame Cazeau's inn (H. des Pyrenées or Poste) deserves the praise of comfort, tolerable cleanliness, a good cuisine, and great civility. It is the best head-quarters for expedition to Gavarnie and Barèges. Grandet's lodging-house is also recommended.

Luz is a cleanly village, situated on a crystal Gave of rapid flow, to whose refreshing stream, under the inn windows, horses and pigs repair to bathe all day long. The pigs in particular seem to have acquired unwonted habits of cleanliness in this country, and to enjoy excessively the ablutions of their sides administered by the swineherd, who bastes them with a wooden ladle.

The Church of Luz, enclosed within a castle furnished with battlements and loopholed walls, is a great curiosity, bearing as it does the mixed character of the order of the Templars,—half monks, half soldiers, — by whom it was founded. They were planted here to guard the frontier in troublous times, forming an outpost of Christians against the Saracens at first, and Spaniards afterwards. The church, entered by a machicolated gate under a projecting turret, is a Romanesque building probably of the 11th century. The carved doorway, and the arcade of straight-sided arches, running round the E. end on the outside, deserve notice; also a small doorway now walled up on the S. side, through which alone, according to a tradition, which wants confirmation, the proscribed race of Cagots were allowed to enter the church, where they occupied a chapel apart from the rest of the congregation. (p. 231.)

The knoll behind Luz crowned with the ruins of a hermitage, commands a most pleasing view, looking down into a valley on either hand, and is easily accessible. A path may be found to descend on the opposite side to St. Sauveur, crossing the road to Gavarnie, and the small wooden bridge over the Gave.

It is not more than ½ a m. by the level road from Luz to the Baths of St. Sauveur, a narrow street of white inns (H. de la Paix is one) and lodging houses planted on a narrow terrace or ledge, on the top of a rocky cliff, about 200 feet above the Gave on its l. bank, and just within the jaws of the romantic and beautifully wooded defile, leading to Gavarnie. Its most conspicuous edifice is a modern church in the form of a Rotunda, so badly built that its walls are cracked from top to bottom. Near it rises a pillar, which by the erasure in 1830 of its inscription has ceased to commemorate the event to which it owes its existence, viz. the presence of the Duchesse d'Angoulême at these baths. It stands in the so-called Jardin Anglais, a name given in France to a little spot where trees and weeds are allowed to grow promiscuously, without having any attention paid to it.

In the middle of the village are the baths (Etablissement Thermal), one of the handsomest in the Pyrenees, containing 14 or 16 baignoires, supplied from springs of sulphurous water, resembling those of Cauterets, but less warm, and less rich in gas. They are considered efficacious in female complaints, for nervous affections, &c. Thus the greater number of invalids here are ladies, while at Barèges the male sex abounds. Being weaker than those of Barèges a course of them is recommended as a good preparation for the stronger waters of Barèges.

The name St. Sauveur is said to be derived from an inscription set over the healing source by a bishop of Tarbes, at what period is unknown. — "Vos haurietis aquas de fontibus Salvatoris."

N. B. The carriage road up the valley stops at St. Sauveur: in order to ascend it on horseback, you must return to the bridge, to enter the bridle road along the rt. bank of the Gave.

To a mere passing traveller Luz appears more cheerful and pleasant head-quarters as well as less expensive than St. Sauveur, while the one is as near to the various points of attraction in this neighbourhood as the other.

At Luz horses and guides may be had at the usual charges (p. 239.). Jacques St. Laur, who may be heard of at Madame Cazeau's, is an excellent guide. Bernard is also recommended. Another guide, Pierre Sanio of Luz, made the ascent of the Maladetta in 1842.

The summit of the Pic de Bergons, the hill behind Luz and opposite St. Sauveur, is one of the best points of view among the Pyrenees, and one of the most accessible, since even ladies may ride up without difficulty or be carried in a chaise à porteur. From Luz you follow the road to Barèges as far as the village of Estre, where a road turns to the rt. About 2 hours are required to reach the summit, and 1½ to descend. From the top may be seen the Cirque of Gavarnie, the Brêche de Roland, and Tours de Marboré, and the more distant and loftier Mont Perdu to the S.; to the W. the Vignemale; to the E. the sterile valley of Barèges, and the Pic du Midi; to the N. the Vale of Lavedan and the plains beyond it.

There is a path, not easy to find without a guide, over the mountains from St. Sauveur to Cauterets: the journey takes 5 hours on foot; but the high road (already described) is much grander in scenery, and as smooth as a bowling-green all the way, though it makes a wide detour.

Cirque de Gavarnie — Brêche de Roland — Mont Perdu.

The valley of the Gave de Gavarnie, at whose mouth stands St. Sauveur, contains some of the most striking scenery in the Pyrenees, and terminates in the most remarkable of those Oules or Cirques peculiar to the Pyrenees, and already described (p. 230). The distance from Luz or St. Sauveur to the Cirque de Gavarnie is about 15 m. A good but narrow horse road runs thither, and the time employed, riding as fast as stones, gutters, and steep and frequent ascents and descents will permit, is rather less than 3 hours; but ladies riding at a gentler pace will take 4 or 5. On reaching the foot of the bridge leading to St. Sauveur, you turn short to the l., without crossing, and ascend by the road along the rt. bank of the Gave, passing the baths on the opposite side. The grand scenery of the defile begins at once: — umbrageous woods alternating with precipitous rocks: mountain peaks of picturesque form rear their heads aloft; below gapes a confined chasm. The road is a narrow shelf, cut in the face of a rocky precipice, down which the eye gazes 300 or 400 ft., sheer into the green and frothy river, agonized within the narrow, half-opened fissure below. One difficult pass around an angular shoulder of the mountain is called Pas de l'Echelle, because, before the present road was cut, it could only be traversed by a hazardous stair, descending on one side and ascending on the other. Here the peasants of Bigorre defeated a force of Miquelites (Spanish troops), who invaded the frontier for the last time in the wars of Louis XIV., 1708. There are ruins, down in the hollow, of an old fort called Escalette, the vestiges of which are nearly gone. Many small falls are passed and torrents crossed by high and narrow bridges, suspended over deep gulfs: many of the water-courses are bestridden by mills, not much larger than boxes; a row of such, close together, seen on the hillside, near the romantic double bridge Sia, looks like beads on a white string.

Twice the valley expands into the basins of Pragnères and Gèdre, and it is more often throttled (étranglé) by narrow defiles. On approaching the village of Gèdre from the hill above it, you have a fine view, for a short space, of the snowy mountains called Tours de Marboré, and of the Brêche de Roland, a gap in the wall of rock which crests the mountain, looking like a notch made in a jaw by the loss of a single tooth. It was cut through, according to the legend, by Roland, the brave Paladin, with his trusty blade Durandal, to open a passage in pursuit of the Moors. To the rt. of it is the false Brêche, a similar gap. They both lie immediately above the Cirque of Gavarnie, and are soon lost to view behind intervening mountains, as the valley curves, and are invisible from the Cirque itself. At Gèdre there is a small inn, and a sight scarcely worth notice, but to which travellers are invited, called Grotte de Gèdre. It is an imperfect arch, formed by the torrent scooping out the rock, partly grown over with creeping shrubs.

The opening on the l., through which this torrent issues, is the mouth of the Val d'Héas, one of the largest and deepest valleys which penetrate the granitic region of the Pyrenees, containing fine wild scenery, and terminating in the Cirque de Troumouse, situated a little to the E. of that of Gavarnie. In coming from Luz the valley is entered by a road turning to the l., on the height which precedes the village of Gèdre. It keeps up on the slope for some distance, then ascends along the rt. bank of the Gave, under the shade of fine trees, ashes and sycamores. The torrent descending on the l. from the Cambiel, is next crossed on a bridge; a sombre gorge succeeds, leading to the village of Héas, remarkable for its chaos of granite blocks, about 4 miles from Gèdre, which have fallen from the mountain above, across the valley, and resemble that of Peyrada, described farther on. This enormous land-slip took place in 1650, blocked up the torrent, and formed a lake behind it, which lasted until 1788, when its waters, sweeping away the dam, broke out, inundating the valley below, and thus the lake was tapped and emptied.

Here is the celebrated Chapelle de la Vierge d'Héas, 4910 ft. above the sea level, resorted to yearly between the 15th of August and 18th of September, by hosts of pilgrims from afar, who come to worship and kiss her miraculous image, dressed in gold embroidered stuffs, and hooded with the red capulet of the country. Before the rude chapel was built by the shepherds of the valley to shelter it, the image sought refuge upon an enormous block of granite, the largest and most elevated of the group of fallen fragments, called Le Caillou de l'Arayillé, which is much reverenced in consequence. It is a wild and naked spot, with little cultivation. Beyond it the gorge d'Aguila opens out to the E. About 6 m. farther on the valley ends in the Cirque de Troumouse, a semicircular wall of precipitous mountains, enclosing a verdant plain.

The road to Gavarnie, from the prettily situated village of Gèdre, skirts the flanks of the mountain Cornélie, between hedges of box, and reaches in a little space the Chaos or Peyrada, an éboulement or slip of masses of gneiss fallen from above, so extensive that it looks as though a mountain had tumbled to pieces. It is a grand and savage scene. The path winds, in zigzags, through a perfect labyrinth of blocks, many of them as big as a house, and far larger than the Cumberland Bowder stone, piled one above another in extreme confusion, forming mysterious cavities and sheds between them. These fragments sweep down to the Gave, and partly conceal it; their fall must have occurred long ago, from the lichens which cover their surface, and was probably produced by the action of the atmosphere, especially of frost, so powerful an agent in fracturing and disintegrating the slaty structure of the gneiss. Beyond the Chaos the road passes under the base of the Pimené, a picturesque mountain, rising on the l. to a height of 9,384 ft.

In passing the Pont de Barregui the peaks and glaciers of the Vignemale are disclosed to view for a short time, at the extremity of the Val d'Ossouë (p. 304), up which runs the mountain path to Cauterets by the Lac de Gaube.

Gavarnie is a poor small village, 4378 feet above the sea level, with an inferior public-house inn, furnishing fresh trout and tough cutlets, which, unless a bargain is made, will be charged for exorbitantly.

The poor and uninteresting Church, whose want of a tower to hold its bells is supplied by a timber scaffold, contains the sculls of 12 Templars (?) beheaded in the reign of Philip le Bel; such is the tradition, and the Order certainly had a commandery in this desolate spot. One of the heads is said to be that of a female. The church is almost entirely modern.

Behind Gavarnie rise the black walls of the Cirque, surmounted by eternal snow, closing up the valley. It appears close to the village, and the stranger will scarcely believe that he has 3 weary miles to trudge or ride, which will take nearly an hour before he can reach its farther extremity. Three shallow basin shaped valleys are passed, partly strewn with stones, partly carpeted with grass, seemingly at one time lake basins, before you surmount the small projecting wall of rock which masks the entry to the Cirque, and once, doubtless, dammed up the waters of the Gave. Here, shut out from the world, and, as it were, arrived at its end, you gaze up to the vast semicircle of rocks around, the tall rampire of a kingdom, at the base of which France terminates. The precipices forming its sides, varying in height from 1000 to 1400 feet, are divided into 3 or 4 steps or stages, upon each of which a glacier covered with white snow is heaped: not a scrap of vegetation relieves their bare sides. Down the vertical faces of the rocks stream 12 or 15 thin cascades, like white threads; but there is one on the l. hand where the precipice is least interrupted, which falls in one white cord, only twice broken by ledges, nearly 1266 ft. high: it is reputed the highest fall in Europe, and is the head water of the Gave de Pau; but so small is it in volume that it dissipates into spray before reaching the bottom. These streamlets are the drainage of the glaciers above, and all, joining the Gave, escape from the Cirque by the only opening, that by which the traveller enters. The floor of the Cirque is an uninterrupted and irregular heap of rubbish and blocks of rock, the ruins of the neighbouring mountains which have fallen from above, very toilsome to walk over; and in the midst are one or two patches of dirty snow nearly consolidated into ice, under which the Gave flows in a hollow vault. It takes nearly ½ an hour from the entrance to reach the foot of the high water-fall, where the geologist may find specimens of the fossils contained in the rocks of the Cirque, which have been ascertained by M. Dufresnoy to be identical with those of the chalk — though he would certainly not recognise, otherwise, that formation, in the dark cliffs around, so unlike in colour and texture to the white chalk of England.

The mountains rising above the Cirque, but not visible from within its enclosure, are to the E. the Cylindre, 10,050 ft., so called from its shape, whose base is embedded in the great glacier whence springs the high fall; the Tours de Marboré, 9964 ft., forming part of the Mont Perdu; and on the W. the Brêche de Roland, and further on the Fausse Brêche.

The ascent of the Brêche de Roland is made from the Cirque of Gavarnie: it is fatiguing and difficult, but not dangerous, provided the head be steady, and the brain proof against the sight of precipices opening under the feet. Some provisions and a wine or brandy flask should be taken. It occupies 3 hours, and 2 to descend, and commences from the corner of the Cirque on the rt. hand opposite to the high fall. A stranger would scarcely find the spot; no path leads to it, and there is no apparent break or interruption in the perpendicular wall of the Cirque. The strata of the limestone are here vertical, and a buttress of it slightly projecting from the mass furnishes the means of scaling the precipice along the abrupt and shattered edges of the slaty rock here divided like the leaves of a book, set on end, but shivery on the surface. The broken angles and splinters serve with care as steps, in which one may insert the toes and fingers, but it is as abrupt as the ascent of a ladder; and wide spaces of smooth rock often intervene without any notch or projection offering a foothold. To those who cannot look down a sheer precipice many hundred feet deep without a tendency to giddiness, there is some danger in this escalade, as well as in passing over some smooth projecting shoulders of rock, and round the edges of 1 or 2 precipices, which alternate higher up with steep slopes, covered less with grass than with fallen stones. These steep grassy banks form a pasturage, called Las Serrades, for the flocks of some Spanish shepherds, who rent them from the commune of Gavarnie. There is no intermission to the steepness of the ascent, no flat interval between the slopes; it takes more than 1 hour of "treadmill work" to rise above the high cascade. Hence it is a glorious sight to look down upon the precipices and waterfalls, and the great glacier which feeds them, at which, shortly before, you gazed up with aching neck. Hence the Tours de Marboré are well seen; and at this height about noon, the roar of avalanches succeeds to the monotonous dash of waterfalls, which before alone interrupted the solitude. The Cirque is soon after lost sight of: above your head rises an expanse of snow and glacier covering a steep slope, inclined like the roof of a house, surmounted by the wall of rock, in the midst of which is Roland's Breach, and another similar embrasure on the rt. of it, called Fausse Brêche. As the glacier is too steep to ascend, you leave it on the l. hand, and begin to climb a less steeply inclined, snow-clad slope, which at some seasons is denuded down to the slaty rubbish below the snow. It is a work of some fatigue to surmount this, and crampons and a pole are generally furnished by the guide. When two-thirds of the acclivity are surmounted the guide turns to the l. across the glacier, whose surface is so highly inclined that it is not possible to ascend it from below. Even to cross it when the snowy surface is hard or slippery requires great caution. The mountaineer sets his foot down firmly with a stamp, to secure a firm hold, and drives in his pole well before he takes a second step: a false move would send you at once to the bottom. A few steps beyond the glacier brings you to the Brêche. That insignificant notch in the mountain brow seen from Gèdre (p. 307.) has now expanded into a colossal portal 300 ft. wide, more than 300 ft. high, and 50 ft. thick — 9333 ft. above the sea level. The ridge or crest in which it is formed is literally, not metaphorically, a wall of rock varying in height from 300 to 600 ft., which here divides France from Spain, escarped on both sides, and not more than 50 or 80 ft. thick. Through this singular opening — as it were a window in the mountain, nearly square in its angles, and not much wider above than below, Spain is seen; a most uninviting prospect of rugged and bare mountains and valleys filled with stones and snow in the fore ground, while the distance is formed by the hazy plain of Arragon rising high up against the horizon. On the French side there is more of interest in the striking forms of the Vignemale, the Pic du Midi de Bigorre, the Bergons, and a hundred other peaks.

The threshold of the Brêche is angular, like the roof of a house, and the frontier line runs directly along it, so that one may sit astride of it with one leg in France and the other in Spain.

All along the front of the Brêche, on the French side, the glacier is scooped out into a deep fosse or cavity by the action of the sun's rays pouring from the south, through the opening, as Raymond has well explained, so that it cannot be approached directly, but only by skirting the edge of the cavity.

The ascent of the Brêche de Roland was accomplished by the Duchesse de Berri, in 1828, but it is not fit for ladies in general.

The Brêche is said by Ramond to be visible from Saragossa and Huesca; and a practised eye, knowing where to search for these cities, might, with the aid of a telescope in a clear state of the atmosphere, be enabled to discern them from hence.

The Brêche de Roland is used by the inhabitants of several villages on the Spanish side as a pass into France, and especially by smugglers. Through it lies the way to ascend the Mont Perdu, which may be reached in 6 hours from the Brêche, descending at first some hundred feet, and skirting the crumbling slopes of the Marboré on the l. Travellers usually pass the night in a poor hut near its base on the high table land called Millaris, scattered over with slaty débris, and traversed by rents and deep fissures. Mont Perdu is composed of 4 stages or terraces, faced by abrupt escarpments, each receding farther back than the one below. The 2 lower steps are easily ascended by means of a talus of marly débris fallen from above. The 3d and 4th are very difficult to scale, especially the 4th, which can only be reached through a sort of chimney, serving as an outlet for the melting snow. The summit of the Mont Perdu is 11,168 feet above the sea level, and second in height to the Maladetta alone among the Pyrenees; and was first surmounted in 1802 by Ramond after two dangerous and fruitless attempts. It is not to be tried without the aid of a skilful guide. Mr. Erskine Murray ascended from the hut of the Millaris, and returned from the summit to Gèdre on the same day.

Barèges and Pass of the Tourmalet to Bagnères de Bigorre.

It requires 1¼ hour to go in a carriage with two horses from Luz to Barèges, though the distance is only 4¼ m., but it is an ascent all the way, and the road is heavy and badly made, because constantly washed away by the torrent. Notwithstanding this the accommodation at Barèges is so very inferior that the traveller bound for Bagnères by the Tourmalet had better lengthen his day's journey by starting from Luz than put up at Barèges.

On quitting Luz you pass on the l. the ruined castle of Ste. Marie, one of the last possessions retained by the English in the S. of France, since it held out for the Black Prince nearly as long as Lourdes (p. 299). It stands on a mount, at the point where the valley of Barèges, or of the Bastan, opens into the plain of Luz. This is one of the least attractive valleys of the Pyrenees; the mountains around it are not picturesque in their forms, and the fissile and easily disintegrated shale composing them, crumbling down and filling up the bottom and sides of the valley, has been cut through by the Bastan, and other furious torrents which seam the mountains' sides. From time to time vast masses of débris are washed down, and éboulements ensue, which stop up the watercourses until a debacle occurs, and spreads desolation below it. Such catastrophes are of frequent occurrence; and the main torrent, the Bastan, is a very scourge. The great elevation of the valley above the sea contributes to its cheerless and forbidding character; and it is in such a situation, at a height 4271 ft. above the sea level, confined by gloomy mountains which almost seem to overhang it, that

7 Barèges stands, a watering place better known by name, perhaps, in distant countries, than any other among the Pyrenees, and in deserved repute with those who are really ill and in earnest to get well, on account of the cures effected by its waters, but void of all other attractions, destitute even of a tolerable Inn (H. de France; best, but very uncomfortable; cuisine dirty and bad: H. de La Paix; worse still). There is nothing to see here, so that our advice to travellers for amusement is, pass through and tarry not. Being the loftiest of the Pyrenean baths, its atmosphere is chilly and variable even in the height of summer. It contains about 70 houses, chiefly lodgings, with two miserable cafés, arranged in a long, dull street running by the side of the Gave. The buildings next the stream, which are meant to last, are based on huge buttresses of masonry, without which precaution they would long ago have been swept away by the inundations of the torrent. A wide gap, however, is left in the midst, upon which only a few temporary booths and huts of wood are raised, for the winter avalanches sweep down from the mountains Ayré on the S. and Midaü on the N., through the wide gaping gashes in their sides, which open out opposite the vacant space, and bury this part of the town under the snow for several months of the year. In consequence Barèges is inhabited only during summer and autumn, and is abandoned for the rest of the year, except by a few persons who take care of the houses, to the wolves and bears who often come down and prowl about the street. Mr. Erskine Murray, who came hither in the midst of winter, found the entire population reduced to 30 men and women, collected around the great public bath for the sake of the heat of the water, all busily employed knitting. At the beginning of summer the owners return and dig out their houses from the snow, which covers them up to the first floor. The triste air of the place is greatly increased by the number of cripples, sick, and invalids you encounter at every step. This may be called the Hospital Brunnen of the Pyrenees, being visited yearly by 1000 or 1200 genuine invalids, to whom the prospect of regaining health is a sufficient attraction. The French government have established here a military hospital, capable of receiving 300 men and 100 officers (perhaps more) for 50 days. The cures effected by the waters are wonderful: their efficacy is very great in gunshot and other wounds, in curing sores, in relieving rheumatism, stiffness of the joints, and scrofulous complaints. They cause old wounds or ill-cured ulcers to open afresh at first, then relieve them by discharges, drawing to the surface extraneous bodies long imbedded in the flesh, and promoting the exfoliation of carious portions of bone, and finally closes the wound in a healthy manner.

The mineral water is very strong, its principal ingredient being sulphuret of sodium, with portions of carbonate, muriate and sulphate of soda, azote, sulphuretted hydrogen, and animal matter. It is derived from 6 or 7 different springs, the most potent being that called Le Tambour, but the supply is scarcely adequate to the demand. They are conducted into a miserably-arranged, dirty, and ill-smelling bath-house, where they fill 16 baths, for the use of which 1 fr. is charged, and into 3 piscines or public baths capable of holding from 12 to 20 persons each. One of these is appropriated to the soldiers, another to the civil service, the 3d to the poor. Admission to them is settled by order of precedence, and they are in use all day and all night. Indeed so precious is the fluid, that the water from the bath-house is said to be turned into the piscines. The piscines are horrid vaulted dens below ground, their roof serving as a promenade, filled with vapour; and the water has a greenish-yellow tint. The waters have a strong smell of rotten eggs, and a nauseous oily taste; after standing they are covered on the surface with a film of glairy unctuous substance, which they also deposit on the sides and bottom of the bath, called Barégine by French chemists. These valuable medicinal springs rise (as usual in the Pyrenees) near the junction of the slate rock with the granite, and force their way to the surface through a mass of débris composed of the neighbouring rocks. They were first brought into notice by a visit which Madame de Maintenon paid to them 1676, by advice of the royal physician Fagon, for the sake of the young Duc de Maine, natural son of Louis XIV., and her pupil. The "gouvernante" dates several of her letters from hence; and after a protracted residence she had the satisfaction of bringing back the little cripple so much better that he could enter the room to meet the king walking. She reached this place by crossing the Tourmalet, the road by Lourdes not being then made, and lodged in the Maison Maraquette. Barèges was once nearly swept away by the bursting of the Lac d'Oncet.

A scanty and stunted wood of firs and alders is planted on the hill above Barèges on the S. It serves as a partial protection from avalanches, and below is converted into a promenade by walks cut along the slopes.

The fine tissue called crêpe de Barèges, is not made here, but at Bagnères de Bigorre.

Diligences go daily in the season to Lourdes, where they correspond with those to Pau, Toulouse, and Bagnères. The direct road to Bagnères, and by far the most interesting, is over the Tourmalet, but it is not practicable for carriages. Horses and guides may be obtained at Barèges.

Besides the excursions described under the head of Luz, which may be made from Barèges nearly as well as from that place, is the ascent of the Pic du Midi de Bigorre, which lies but a short way off the road to Bagnères by the Tourmalet, and will now be described.

The distance from Barèges to Bagnères de Bigorre across the Tourmalet is about 18 m.; including a halt to rest the horses, it takes up from 7 to 8 hours. A good bridle road, which will probably soon be passable for chars, and might easily be made a carriage road, leads up the Bastan valley on the l. bank of the torrent. The valley looks very dreary from the barrenness of the mountain tops, and the deep gashes cut in their crumbling sides by the avalanches which rush down them in spring. Yet their course is so regular, that on the very margin of these gashes cottages are built, each protected by a tuft of trees, and along their slopes a few cultivated patches of corn stretch upwards. Two torrents descend from the rt,, out of the vales of Lienz and Escabous, at whose head lie nearly a dozen small tarns, after which the Bastan is crossed, and the main ascent begins. About 1¾ hour's walk from Barèges you pass on the l. a path striking up a small valley towards the Pic du Midi de Bigorre. That majestic mountain, which though 9436 ft. above the sea level, is free from snow in summer, rises on the l. of the Pass of the Tourmalet, and is accessible, even on horseback, in 4½ hours from Barèges. The way lies by the margin of the Lac d'Oncet, a picturesque tarn at the foot of the peak, nearly closed in by precipices, about 2000 ft. below the summit. The view from the top comprises on the N. the plains watered by the Adour and Garonne, on the S. the great chain, including the step-like mass of the Mont Perdu, the Cylindre, Tours de Marboré, and Vignemale, covered with glaciers, while among a multitude of peaks to the E. rises the Maladetta, the loftiest of the Pyrenees. There is another way down through the Hourquette de Cinq Ours and the ravine leading from the Lac d'Oncet to Trames Aigues in the valley of Grip.

Ascent of the Pic du Midi from Luz.

"I had engaged a carriage to take us to Barèges, intending to hire horses there, but fortunately I changed my plan, and took my horses at Luz, for, on my arrival there, I found the whole of the horses previously engaged. We left Luz soon after seven, and Barèges about nine. The road is at first on the l. bank of the Bastan, and the bridge having been destroyed by the torrent, we were obliged to make a detour to cross it. From this point we did not meet with a single tree, but the lower parts of the hills were covered with verdure. After a 2 hour's ride we came to the point where the path, to ascend the Pic du Midi, branches off from that leading across the Tourmalet to Bigorre. Here is a shed, occupied by a man who had the care of some cattle and sheep; he provided us with excellent milk in a wooden bowl; it was deliciously cool having been kept in the running stream. From hence the path is steep, and in many places dangerous, there being scarcely room for a horse to step. We were enabled to ride to within 100 yards of the summit. The view here is magnificent. It wants the numerous lakes of the Righi, — but in other respects is superior. The Pic du Midi is nearly 10,000 ft. above the sea, and stands at the outer verge of the Pyrenean range. It descends with only one break to the plain, and affords a view towards Bordeaux and Toulouse, bounded only by the limit of vision. Turning towards the S. a wonderful sea of rocks, pinnacles, and glaciers present themselves. The Brêche de Roland, Mont Perdu, and the Maladetta, forming conspicuous points in this immense semicircle of mountains. The day was beautiful, not a cloud to be seen. Our guide, Bernard, said it did not occur four days in the year. We enjoyed our luncheon, and our sherry mixed with the snow of the glaciers.

"The various roads and villages in the vicinity of Bigorre could be distinctly traced. By the advice of our guide, we walked as far as the Lac d'Oncet, the highest lake in the Pyrenees. On reaching the junction to the paths, we again applied to the shepherd for some ice cream. During our excursion the Bastan had considerably diminished, and we were enabled to ford the river a little above Barèges."—D.

The Tourmalet is a low curved ridge, such as would be called a col in the Alps, an isthmus uniting the Pic du Midi with the main chain of the Pyrenees, over which lies the passage from the valley of the Gave de Pau, into that of the Adour. A series of steep zigzags carried over heaps of shivered shale, leads up to it. On the rt. rise three bristling mountains of fine form, the Caubère, the Campana, and the Pic d'Espade. The summit of the pass is 7141 feet above the sea level: the view from it is not very striking; but as you look back the Monné and mountains above Cauterets are visible beyond it. The vale of Grip opens out far more pleasingly than that of Barèges, carpetted with beautiful pastures; it is the cradle of the infant Adour, which rises near the base of the Pic d'Espade. After a mile or two of gradual descent, the valley makes an abrupt dip, down which the path is carried by a series of very steep zigzags called Escalette, to a hamlet occupied by shepherds, called Trames Aigues (3 hours from Barèges), at the mouth of a gorge through which the pyramidal mass of the Pic du Midi appears in full majesty. This is the finest object on the pass: its bare precipice, when lighted up by the sun, exhibits the most singularly contorted strata, imitating the lines on an agate. It remains in sight only for a short distance, but from no point does this mountain appear to greater advantage. The summit of the Pic is reached from Bagnères by ascending this valley.

Near Artigues, a hamlet on the rt. beyond the river, is a cascade formed by one of the tributaries of the Adour, and another a little lower down, the Garret formed by the Adour itself, beneath a black fir forest, which covers the shoulder of the mountain like a bear-skin, above the village of Grip. This is a prettily situated group of scattered cottages, including a very tolerable country inn, famed for its trout (H. des Voyageurs, chez Cazères): it is the one nearest Bagnères, 4 hours' walk or ride from Barèges, and 3½ from Bagnères de Bigorre. Grip is much frequented by visitors from both baths, on account of its waterfalls and its pleasing position, precisely in the part of the valley where trees flourish, corn begins to grow, and pastures become most verdant. The Pic du Midi may be reached in 5 h. from this.

From Grip to Bagnères de Bigorre there is a good carriage road, which, at St. Marie, falls into the valley of Campan, and the route to Luchon by Arreau (R. 86.). The aspect of the Val de Campan from this point, and in descending to Bigorre, is less attractive than in ascending, owing to the arid, bare, and stained escarpments of the limestone cliffs (Jura limestone) on the rt. bank of the Adour, but there are some fine views on the l. looking up the tributary valleys towards the Pic du Midi.

Ste. Marie, 7½ m. from Bagnères, lies near the point of junction of two valleys, up one of which runs the road to Grip and the Tourmalet, and up the other, that to Luchon by Arreau. The village of Campan, lower down, which gives its name to the valley, is not remarkable, but every traveller is pestered as he passes to visit the grotto, which is not worth seeing.

Below this, through the fine opening of the vale of Lesponne to the l., the Pics du Midi and de Montaigu are well seen: near its entrance stands the mansion of St. Paul.

At Baudéan, a small village a little lower down, Baron Larrey, the army surgeon and favourite of Buonaparte, who accompanied him on his various campaigns, was born 1766, in a humble house marked by a marble tablet. The valley of Campan is fertile, well cultivated, and populous, with a considerable show of picturesque beauty (see p. 322.). The precipitous mountain rising on the rt. is the Penne de l'Hyeris, often ascended on account of its view. The Pont de Gerde, over the Adour, leads to it.

2 m. short of Bagnères close to the road, is Médous, a sequestrated and abandoned Capuchin convent, reduced to uninteresting ruins. A copious source of clear water rising here serves to turn a marble mill. On the outskirts of Bagnères, the road passes close under the promenade called Allées Maintenon, p. 322.

BAGNÈRES DE BIGORRE (Route 86.).

ROUTE 86.

THE PYRENEES. — BAGNÈRES DE BIGORRE TO BAGNÈRES DE LUCHON. — MOUNTAIN ROAD, BY THE HOURQUETTE D'ASPIN. — ARREAU, COL DE PEYRESORDES, AND VAL DE L'ARBOUST. — EXCURSION TO THE LAC DE SECULÉJO, OR LAC D'OO.

This route may be divided into 2 days' journey, by halting for the night at Arreau, situated about half way. The road to that place is practicable for light cars; beyond it there is only a bridle road. The total distance may be about 35 m., exclusive of the excursion to Seculéjo, which is about 12 m. more, to and fro, off the direct road. The route abounds in picturesque beauties; it ascends the Val Campan (described in R. 85) as far as the village of Ste. Marie, 7½ m., 4 hours' walk from Arreau. We here leave, on the rt., the road to Grip and the Tourmalet, and crossing the Adour ascend gradually along the bank of its E. tributary, up the Val de Séoube, and, passing through a scattered and picturesque village, reach, in 2½ or 3 hours, Paillole, a group of cottages, in the midst of green pastures, encircled by noble forests, which seem to have suffered little diminution from the woodman's axe. In the mountain on the E. side of the valley, composed of transition limestone, are the quarries of Espiadet, yielding the marble called of Campan, a great deal of which was employed in the decoration of the royal villa of Trianon. After being long abandoned, they are now again worked by M. Geruset of Bagnères. At Campan itself, where the rocks are of the Jura limestone, no marble is obtained.

The ascent to the Col, or Hourquette d'Aspin, is carried up from the farm cottages of Paillole, at first in zigzags, entirely through forests of fir, composed of fine trees of ancient growth, covering the hill sides far and wide; only through gaps among the trees, the bare Pic d'Arbezon, is seen, from time to time, on the rt., at the head of the valley. The trees thin out before reaching the top of the pass, whose open curved slopes are covered with turf. The Hourquette d'Aspin (1½ hours from Paillole) commands one of the finest views in the Pyrenees. Look back, and the Pic du Midi de Bigorre and the Pic d'Arbizon rise majestically above the pine forests; forward, and the billowy forms of many mountains, and the junction of many valleys, peaks, ridges, and hollows, one behind another, are presented to view, and the horizon is closed by the snowy top of the Maladetta, or at least of the Monts Maudits. The slope of the hills, on the side of Arreau, is so steep that the descent upon that town, which appears lying in a hole, as it were, no more than a rifle shot off, is only effected by most complicated tourniquets, or winding terraces, the vagaries of which are most extraordinary and tantalising: 4 or 5 times, when you think you are close to Arreau, the road turns away to penetrate nearly to the head of the valley, on the rt. or l., and it takes a good hour from the top of the pass to reach the town, which is about 5½ hours' ride or walk from Bagnères. There is another pass from the Val de Campan into the Val d'Aure, and to Arreau, crossing the mountains more to the S. than the above, but the path is not so well marked, and is much steeper though shorter. It is called Hourquette d'Arreau.

Arreau (Inn, H. de France, neither clean, good, nor moderate) is a small town, no wise remarkable except for its situation, nearly in the midst of the picturesque Val d'Aure, which runs up into the Pyrenees, between the Val de Campan and the Val de Luchon, at the junction of the Nestes (or torrents) de Louron and d'Aure, which turn several saw-mills: the number of inhabitants is about 1,600.

Lower down the valley, near Sarrincolin, are the marble quarries of Beyride and Camous.

The upper part of the Val d'Aure unfolds scenery whose extreme beauty and magnificence will well recompense the pedestrian disposed to explore it, and prepared for the wretched accommodation which is to be found. Indeed it is advisable to take provisions of some kind, or at least white bread. A path along the l. bank of the Neste leads through the villages of Cadéac (½ hour), Ancisan, Guichen, all ancient settlements of the Templars, to Vielle (Aure), 5 m., a village with a wretched inn (H. d'Espagne), a very picturesque ruined castle on a height, and a curious church of the Templars, with a wooden clock tower, and a singularly ornamented door. Over this part of the valley the Pics d'Arbizon and d'Azet rise in great grandeur. One hour's walk above Vielle is Tramesaigues, a village having sulphureous springs, whose situation Mr. Paris considers one of the most romantic in the Pyrenees. Here the valley divides, and 2 paths strike off into Spain, one due S. by the Port de Plan, the other inclining to S.W. by the Port de Bielsa, passing Aragnouet, whence a path mounts over the Port de Cambiel to Gedre, at the mouth of the Val d'Héas. (R. 85. p.307.)

The Port de Cambiel is a depression between the mountains of Cambiel and the Pic Long, nearly 8,000 feet high, whence the Vignemale and Mont Perdu are well seen.

Two mule paths conduct from Arreau to B. de Luchon; one by the Port de Pièrrefitte (6 hours' walk), which is the loftier and the finer in point of scenery, but a bad road; the other, more commonly taken, by the Port de Peyresourde. It runs up the Valley of the Neste de Louron, which, at first narrow, widens out, and becomes populous higher up, and is studded with a great number of old feudal castles, now in ruins, but which once defended the passage into Spain, perched on conical rocks. That of Bordères, on the l. bank, was the stronghold of the Counts of Armagnac, owners of the valley, the last of whom, John V., in the reign of Louis XI., 1475, on account of his infamous union with his sister, was excommunicated by the pope, and deprived of his princely domains by Louis. Below this, looking back, there is a good view of the windings of the road to the Col d'Aspin and of the town of Arreau, which looks well only at a distance. At Avejan, above Bordères, the road crosses to the rt. bank, and, gradually ascending by narrow lanes flanked by trees and hedges, through the villages Estravielle and several others, reaches Loudervielle, distinguished by its square feudal watch-tower projecting over the valley, and confronted, on the opposite side, by a rival fort, based upon a rocky pedestal now quarried for slates. Above this, the vale of the Louron divides into 2 branches, terminating in the Ports de la Pez and de Clarbide, leading into Spain, but difficult, if not dangerous, and little used; and between them rises the grand Pic de Génos. Near the Port de la Pez are remains of a tunnel 200 feet long, commenced by some speculators, who designed to bore through the mountain in order to reach the Spanish pine forests, and make use of their timber. The scheme was abandoned. The ruined gallery is situated high above all habitations, and to visit it would take up a day. We pursue our course up the valley no farther, but at Loudervielle (2¾ hours' ride from Arreau) turn to the l. up a very steep stony ascent leading to the Col de Peyresordes, 4,452 feet above the sea, which separates the Val de Louron from that of L'Arboust, covered with coarse pasturage dotted over with a few fir trees. A new and better path is being traced across this col. Cultivation is carried up very high in the opposite valley; but the woods (arbusta), from which, doubtless, it derives its name, are greatly diminished. Before descending, a narrow path, difficult, and not practicable for horses, strikes off on the rt. direct to the Lac d'Oo, or de Seculéjo. Horsemen must make a considerable detour, descending the valley as far as an ancient, half-ruined, solitary church, planted on a singular mound, by the side of which rises the brand or split fir tree set in readiness to be lighted on "The Eve of St. John" (1¾ hours from Loudervielle).

In order to reach the beautiful Lac d'Oo you turn to the rt. at this church, and by a very narrow and stony path, through the fields and along the slopes of a hill which drops down upon the village d'Oo and its picturesque castles, you enter the Val de Lasto, as this branch of the Val de l'Arboust, at whose upper end lies the Lac de Seculéjo, is called. It is very narrow and deep, closed in by impending mountains, and at its head by glaciers. The horse path up it crosses the clear stream of the Oo or Go, just outside of the village, and following the rt. bank of the stream, threads stony lanes between pastures of vivid green under the shade of ash trees. Next, it emerges upon open meadows, beyond which it begins to mount in earnest, by a long series of zigzags, a high step stretching across the valley, which from below or above appears a precipice, yet is made accessible for horses, but is very toilsome to surmount. We now enter the fir woods; the mountains, sternly grand, rise beetling over the path, which is at one spot a mere shelf cut in the face of the rock. At length, the valley is traversed from side to side by a natural dam of slate rocks, whose strata are vertical. Behind this the little oval basin called Lac d' Oo, or de Seculéjo, lies snugly cradled, shut in all round, save on the side of the dam, by precipices of great height, which, though vertical, are tinged green by partial vegetation. In front, a very fine cascade forms the centre of the picture, and is reflected in a white streak upon the dark mirror of the lake below. The waters of the lake escape in a fall over a gap in the slate dam already mentioned, upon which also stands a hut, where horses may be put up, and common refreshments obtained. The lake abounds with trout. Here a small toll is paid for keeping up the path.

The waterfall of the Lac d'Oo is fed from a still higher reservoir, the Lac d'Espingo, drawing its supplies from the contiguous glaciers. It may be reached either by a narrow path along the l. or E. margin of the Lac d'Oo, or by crossing it in a boat kept to convey people to the foot of the fall, and then by clambering up at the side of it through a rent in the slate rock, whose broken laminations serve as steps (scala); next, passing above the cascade, it reaches the upper lake, D'Espingo, and a third lake close beside it, called Saounsat, in which fish cannot live, though trout are found in its neighbour, lying at the foot of the Mount Espingo, amidst scenery far more savage than that of the Lake d'Oo. The path continues above this, over beds of snow, past a fourth lake, which remains ice-bound almost the whole year, to the col called Port d' Oo, 9,850 ft. above the sea level, the loftiest col or pass in the Pyrenees, and surpassed by very few among the Alps, leading to the Spanish town of Venasque. (R. 87.) On the l. of this pass lies the vast glacier of the Port d'Oo, the second in extent, next to that of the Maladetta, among the Pyrenees.

It takes about 1½ hrs. to ascend from the village d'Oo to the Lac d'Oo and 3 hrs. to descend from the lake to Luchon.

In going from Luchon to the Lac d'Oo you turn to the l. out of the Val de L'Arboust at the village of Cazeauz; beggars and goitres abound here. Lower down is St. Aventin, a large village named from a chapel of that saint.

Thus far the road is kept in very bad order; hence, to Luchon, though steep, it is practicable for chars. After crossing the minor stream of the L'Oueil, the fine avenue called Allée des Soupirs leads into

Bagnères de Luchon. (R. 87.)

ROUTE 87.

THE PYRENEES. — PAU TO BAGNÈRES DE BIGORRE, AND TO BAGNÈRES DE LUCHON, BY TARBES. — POST ROAD. — EXCURSIONS TO THE VAL DE LYS, PORT DE VENASQUE, AND VALD'ARAN.

To B. de Bigorre, 60 kilom. = 37 Eng. m., thence to Luchon 78 kilom. = 48 Eng. m.

Diligences daily, but very slow.

The following is the direct post road between the two Bagnères; it runs through the plain to the N. of the Pyrenees, affording only distant views of them. To explore their beauties, the traveller must pursue Routes 85 and 86. — practicable partly only on horseback.

A high table land, in part uncultivated, is traversed both before and after reaching 16 Bordes d'Expouy.

The village passed on the rt., shortly before entering Tarbes, distinguished by its lofty church, is Ibos.

23 Tarbes. — Inns: Hôtel de France: — Grand Soleil. Sir John Froissart put up at the Star, and commended his hostel. Tarbes, chef lieu of the Department of the Hautes Pyrenees, is pleasantly situated on the Adour, in the midst of a fertile plain, in full view of the Pyrenees. It has 9,706 inhabitants, and some manufactures, but contains few objects of interest. Several public walks contribute to the public health and recreation, the principal and most striking of which is the Place Maubourguet, where are the principal inns and cafés, and the Prado. On the Place Marcadieu the markets and extensive yearly fairs are held. There is a fine bridge over the Adour, and a portion of its water is distributed in canals through the town. The chief building is a modern cathedral, said to occupy the site of the Castle of the Counts of Bigorre, of which Tarbes (the city of the Tarbelli) was the capital. The English monarchs retained possession of Bigorre, which, with Guienne, formed the dowry of Queen Eleanor, for 300 years, down to the reign of Charles VII. The Black Prince kept his court at Tarbes; Froissart describes his visit to the Comte d'Armagnac.

The distant view of the Pyrenees is scarcely equal to that from Pau, but the Pic du Midi de Bigorre here forms the prominent object, and the mountains about Luchon are also visible. An English baronet keeps a pack of fox-hounds here, and turns out several times a week in the season. Tarbes was the birth-place of the infamous Bertrand Barrère de Vieusac, member of the National Convention.

A smart action was fought at Tarbes, in the interval between the battle of Orthez and that of Toulouse, in which the British army drove the French from their position, and compelled them to retreat. One French brigade was attacked by the 3 rifle battalions: "the fight was short, yet wonderfully fierce and violent, for the French, probably thinking their opponents to be Portuguese, on account of their green dress, charged with great hardiness, and being encountered by men not accustomed to yield, they fought muzzle to muzzle, and it was difficult to judge at first who would win. At last the French gave way." But out of the 120 men who fell on the side of the British, there were 12 officers and 80 men of the Rifles. — Napier.

The road from Tarbes to Cauterets and Barèges, by Lourdes (19 kilom.) is described in R. 85. Tarbes is the key to the communication with all parts of the Pyrenees.

Mallepostes go daily to Pau and Bayonne; to Auch and Toulouse; to Auch, Agen, and Limoges.

Diligences go to Lourdes and Barèges; also to Bagnères; to Toulouse and Bordeaux; to Bayonne, Auch, Agen; to Bagnères de Luchon.

From Tarbes our road ascends the l. bank of the Adour; gradually advancing within the embrace of the mountains, which rise in height in proportion as we advance. The country is richly cultivated, copiously irrigated, and thickly peopled; no less than 8 villages being passed on this stage. A little off the road lies the Château d'Odos, where Marguerite, Queen of Navarre, sister of Francis I., died, 1549. Near Montgaillard, the road from Lourdes, Barèges, and Cauterets, to Bagnères, falls in on the rt. At Trebons, the Val d'Ossouet opens out on the rt., and runs up towards the Pic de Montaigu.

A little below Pouzac occurs a church, walled round like that of the Templars at Luz. About 2 m. below Bagnères, on the rt. bank of the Adour, near the farther extremity of a wooden bridge over that river, the geologist will discover a knob of hornblende or trap rock (ophite), which appears to have affected the rocks about it, since, a little lower down, the granite is found decomposed, intermixed with a limestone which has assumed a large granular structure.

The knoll passed on the rt., a little behind the village of Pousac, before reaching the town, is the Camp de Cæsar, so called from an intrenchment upon it.

21. BAGNÈRES DE BIGORRE.—Inns: Hôtel de France, good; comfortable apartments, and excellent table d'hôte; Galignani is regularly taken in; persons making some stay may board and lodge for 6 fr. per diem: — Frescati, a large establishment, including mineral baths and springs, a concert room, billiard and coffee rooms: — Hôtel du Grand Soleil: — du Bon Pasteur, good: — de la Paix.

Bagnères is the most town-like of the Pyrenean watering places in extent, amusements, shops, &c., having a permanent population of 8,000, often augmented by 6,000 or 8,000 strangers, intent upon pleasure as well as health, during the season, which lasts from the end of June to the end of September. It is a cheerful town of white-washed houses, set off with blue marble window-sills and door-jambs, delightfully situated, just where the plain of Tarbes begins to contract into the vale of Campan, and the slopes which bound it to change from hills into mountains, whose noble peaks and masses rising to the S. form the background of all the beautiful views in and about the town, while undulating slopes, trees, fields of maize, vines, and villas fill up the foreground. It stands at a height of only 1852 ft. above the sea level; and its fault is the fervid heat, dust, and glare during part of the summer, unfanned by the mountain breezes. The Adour, on whose l. bank it is built, is here greatly reduced in breadth and volume by the numerous artificial cuts and canals, which borrow its waters for the purpose of irrigation, and to turn marble, paper, and other mills. A large part of these streams also is made to circulate through the streets; and thus they contribute to clean them, while they freshen the air. Every street and lane has its own clear gutter, at which the housewives wash their linen and domestic vessels before their own doors; while to the deeper canals, horses, asses, and pigs repair twice a day, and after wading knee deep, are ladled over with water thrown from their backs by a wooden scoop.

Montaigne preferred Bagnères above all the Eaux Thermales which he had visited, "comme celles où il y avait plus d'aménité de lieu, commodité de logis, de vivre, et de bonne compagnie;" and on almost all these heads it still continues to deserve praise. The climate is warmer and less variable than that of the mountain baths; the cost of living and price of provisions are moderate, lodgings being very numerous, since almost every householder in the town lets either part or the whole of his domicile.

To the passing traveller its chief attractions are the picturesque beauties of the valleys and mountains around, which afford endless resources: in the town itself are scarcely any curiosities or sights.

The tall, octagonal, Gothic tower, rising near the H. de France, belonged to a church of Jacobins, suppressed at the Revolution. The church of St. John, which belonged to the Templars, but is now converted into a playhouse, retains a fine pointed doorway, enriched with mouldings. One or two old feudal towers remain of the ancient fortifications, relics of the days when Froissart describes Bagnères as "une bonne, grosse ville, fermée," whose peaceful citizens suffered sorely from a neighbouring den of thieves, or castle, or, to borrow Froissart's words, "Ceux d'icelle ville avoyent trop fort temps, car ils estoyent guerroyés et harriés de ceux de Malvoisin qui sied sur une montagne. (See p. 323.) Bagnères was given up to the English by the Treaty of Bretigny; and, as a border fortress on a line of passage into Spain, it was taken by Henry of Trastamare by storm, after the death of his brother, Don Pedro the Cruel. One of the towers, called de Malfourat, still stands opposite the Thermes.

Bagnères de Bigorre owes its reputation as a watering place to its warm saline springs, varying in temperature from 87° to 123° Fahrenheit. They are good for disorders of the digestive organs, and resemble those of Baden Baden, but contain a smaller quantity of saline substances. They were known to the Romans, as inscriptions found in and near the town prove; indeed its name is not improbably traced to the Latin "Balnearia." The sources rise, to the number of about 40, within the space of 3 or 4 hectares, out of a shaley calcareous rock, supposed to be the equivalent of the Jura limestone.

The Public Bathing Establishment, or Thermes, situated at the extremity of the town, under Mount Olivet, is the largest building in it, and the handsomest and most cleanly in the Pyrenees, though the arrangements for conducting the mineral waters to it are said to be defective, and to deprive them of a part of their medicinal properties. The six springs, La Reine (named from Jeanne de Navarre, mother of Henri IV., who used it 1567), Le Dauphin, Roi de Lannes, St. Roch, Foulon, and Des Yeux, are conducted into the building and distributed among its 29 baths and 4 douches. The water is previously received and cooled down in open tanks; and it is in this situation that the substance called by French chemists Barègine, but whose nature, whether animal or vegetable, conferva or oscillatoria, has not yet been ascertained, collects on the surface.

There are about 20 other private establishments in and around the town; indeed it is only necessary to bore into the ground to a certain depth to obtain with certainty a warm saline spring. The most fashionable and frequented bath, and the water apparently most efficacious, is that of Le Salut, rather less than a mile out of the town, in a great recess in the flank of the Monné hill. The bath-house is a solitary building, approached by a long avenue of poplars, winding through the pretty green valley, crowded at all hours, but chiefly in the morning, by bathers on horseback or foot, or in sedan chairs. It contains only 10 baths, so that, during the season, they are in request at all hours. The water of the Salut is saline, with a sulphureous smell; and it has the property of blackening silver. It has scarcely any perceptible taste, only a sort of milky feel in the mouth.

Bagnères also possesses a chalybeate spring, Fontaine Ferrugineuse (or d'Angoulême), almost the only one in the Pyrenees, situated on the E. flank of the Mount Olivet, in the direction of the village of Pouzac (p. 319.). Granite is stated to have been found by digging, within a few ft. of the spring, which, doubtless, originates in that rock.

The vale of Campan above Bagnères abounds in the beautiful marbles for which the Pyrenees are famed: they are much used in Paris, and the working of them gives employment to many persons here. The Marbrerie of M. Géruset is on a very extensive scale, and the modes of cutting, turning in the lathe, and polishing large blocks, by machinery moved by the river, are well worth seeing. Tables, chimney-pieces, buffets, pillars, slabs, as well as vases and other articles, are made here; and no less than 20 varieties of marble are employed. The prices are not extravagant: a list of the cost of the different varieties is printed. The most beautiful are the green and flesh-coloured marbles of Campan, the blood-red or Griotte, filled with fossilised shells of the nautilus, whose spirals are disclosed in cutting. The quarries whence they are derived occur in the transition limestone formation (see p. 315.). M. Géruset is also a banker and agent of Coutts.

The knitting of the fine wool of the Pyrenees, derived from Spain, gives employment to the greater part of the females, young and old, in and about the town, who may be seen sitting at their cottage doors, in the roads and streets, hard at work. The articles made here are counterpanes, mittens, aprons, caps, work-bags, besides shawls and scarfs of woollen gauze, rivalling in thinness fine lace. The so-called crêpe de Barèges is not made at that place, but in Bagnères. The principal depôt for these kind of articles seems to be chez Mademoiselle Laffourque.

"A French Protestant minister from Lourdes preaches every Sunday through the summer to a congregation of from 50 to 100 persons."—Mrs. Ellis.

The reading room, library, and museum of M. Jalon, Place d'Uzer, is an agreeable lounge: there is a good assortment of newspapers, including Galignani, and the library contains a most complete collection of works upon the Pyrenees. The museum is not very remarkable.

There is a Theatre here in a desecrated church.

Concerts and balls, during the season, are given at Frescati's, a superb establishment which was formerly a gambling house.

Diligences, 4 or 5 daily to Tarbes; thence to Pau, Auch, Bordeaux, Limoges; daily to Toulouse, to Bagnères de Luchon, to Cauterets, Luz, Barèges (nearly 40 m. distant by the post and coach road, 20 by the Tourmalet). (See R. 85.)

Guides and ponies for excursions in the mountains are very numerous. The landlords of the H. de France or other inns will recommend the most trustworthy.

Chaises à porteurs, or sedan chairs, are much used by invalids to go to the bath. To be carried to the Bain de Salut and back costs 1 fr.

The Promenades most frequented in and near the town (besides the Avenues de Salut already mentioned) are the Coustous (? Côteau), a long platform in the midst of the town, lined with houses and cafés; shaded with trees, under which a sort of fair is kept up throughout the season, in temporary booths occupied by itinerant marchands. It is crowded in the cool of the evening.

The Allées de Maintenon, a row of trees planted along a bank above the road leading to Campan, are named from the lady who became the wife of Louis XIV., but who visited these baths in the capacity of gouvernante to his deformed child, the Duc de Maine, for the benefit of the waters in 1675, 1677, and 1681.

The pleasantest walk in the morning is along the slopes of the Mont Olivet, the wooded hill rising behind the Thermes. Numerous shady paths are cut through the trees, whence you may survey the vale of the Adour. One path skirting the flanks of the hill leads to the chalybeate spring.

In the rear of Mont Olivet and of the Bains de Salut rises the loftier cone-topped mountain Bédat, which takes more than half an hour to ascend, but is accessible on horseback.

By crossing the 2 bridges over the two main arms of the Adour, by which the road to Toulouse quits the town, and turning to the rt., after passing the second up a steep road in zigzags, the Palombière is reached; a row of trees on the top of the hill, beneath which the fowlers spread their nets in September and October, to catch the migratory flocks of wild pigeons, aided by persons suspended aloft, in a basket, to the topmost branch, who terrify the birds by throwing sticks at them, and compel them to alight. There is scarcely a better point than this to look up the valley of Campan and survey the magnificent mountains at its head, bounding it on the S. W.; the Pic du Midi and the Pic de Montaigu, with the Penne (pen or Ben, Celtic, head) de l'Hyéris rising on the l. In the midst, the white buildings of Bagnères are spread out, backed by the dark masses of the Mont Olivet, the Bedat, &c. The Adour makes little figure in the view, so much are its streams frittered away; but below the town to the N. its wide, cultivated plain expands to view for miles and miles, until it unites with that of the Garonne.

More distant excursions, of great beauty and interest, are to the Valley of Grip and its cascades; to Trames Aigues, on account of the fine view thence of the Pic du Midi, described at p. 314.; the ascent of that Pic also, p. 313.

The most beautiful scenery of the Vale of Campan is to be found within the branch of it called Val Lesponne, opening out near the Château de St. Paul, between Baudéan and Campan, and running up between the Pic du Midi on the S. and the Pic de Montaigu on the N. Its lower portion has chiefly the pastoral character of rich verdure, alternating with cultivated fields. Beyond the village Lesponne it contracts in width, its aspect alters, and becomes wilder; bare rocks and rugged crags succeed to dark forests of beech and pine: the forms of the mountains are very striking. About 2 m. above Lesponne a gorge, opening on the rt., displays the entire mass of the Montaigu, a noble spectacle; and the streamlet traversing it descends the steep rocks in a pretty fall. Half an hour's walk farther, and the valley divides: the branch on the rt. leads, in 3 hours, over the pass called Hourquette de Baran by Villelongue, to Pierrefitte in the Val d'Argelez; that on the l., disclosing the noble form of the Pic du Midi, leads up to the Lac Bleu, in which the stream of the Val Lesponne takes its rise. The ascent to it is very steep and fatiguing, though achieved by ladies; it is cut through the mica slate rock, covered at first by a wood, beyond which are extensive pasturages. The lake itself "is an oval basin, or tarn, about two m. long, at the top of a mountain, surrounded by bare craggy peaks of the most curious formation, within whose declivities the snow always remains. It is a solitary spot with no house, or tree, or living thing to be seen in its vicinity, a stillness almost death-like reigning around. It might be dreary, but for the rich warm colouring of the rocks, the depth and stillness of the water, and its intense blue, whence it takes its name."—Mrs. Ellis, 298. Higher up is another smaller tarn, difficult to approach, distinguished as the Lac Vert, another of the head waters of the Adour.

The shortest and most romantic way to Bagnères de Luchon from B. de Bigorre is the bridle road by Arreau over the Hourquette d'Aspin, at the head of the Val de Campan, and through the Val de Louron, described in Route 86. Those who cannot endure the fatigue of riding must pursue the circuitous post road, which doubles the mountains, and skirts their roots between the valley of the Adour and that of the Garonne as follows. It quits Bagnères by crossing the Adour, and for the two first stages is identical with that to Toulouse. A steep hill precedes 12 Escaladieu, where the post house occupies part of the buildings of the ancient Abbey, now in ruins, charmingly placed on the borders of the Arros. It now belongs to a gentleman of Bordeaux, who has fitted up a portion of the building as a dwelling. The chapel remains, with some fragments of Gothic sculpture. A little beyond it the ruins of the Castle Mauvezin (i. e. Mauvais Voisin, a name given by the inhabitants of the neighbouring towns, who suffered from the depredations of the bands of marauders sheltered in this stronghold) crown a detached hill. It witnessed many exploits during the occupation of this country by the English. It was besieged 1374 by the Duc d'Anjou, with an army of 8,000 men; and the strength of the castle was so great that it would have held out for a very long time, but the well which supplied it being without the walls, the besiegers cut off the communication, and as the weather was hot and the cisterns dry, not a drop of rain having fallen for six weeks, the garrison were obliged to come to terms. The Duc d'Anjou allowed them to depart, saying, "get about your business, each of you to your own countries, without entering any fort that holds out against us; for if you do so, and I get hold of you, I will deliver you up to Jocelin (his headsman), who will shave you without a razor." He also allowed them to carry off as much of their booty as they could convey in trunks on sumpter horses. —See Froissart.

Capbern, a little farther on the road, is a small village, on one side of which, ½ m. off, in a retired nook, are the Sulphureous Springs of Capbern, having a bathing establishment, 3 hotels, and several lodging houses, attached to it. It is a place of increasing resort, owing to the virtue of its waters.

13 Lannemezan: on quitting this small bourg, a road branches off, S., into the Val d'Aure, to Arreau (R. 86.). There is a short cut for the pedestrian, or equestrian, to St. Bertrand, by La Barthe, where is a good little country inn, opposite the ancient square tower, at the E. end of the village.

16 Montrejeau (Inn, tolerable), a town of 3034 inhabitants, in front of the opening of the Vale of the Garonne, whose vista is terminated by the grand peaks and ridges attached to the Monts Maudits, ranking among the highest of the Pyrenees; at whose foot, on the S., rises the Ebro, and on the N., the Garonne. It is a truly magnificent view. The stream of the Neste d'Aure falls into the Garonne a little above this. Here the road to Toulouse (R. 91.) turns off to the l.; and that to Luchon, crossing the Garonne, begins to ascend its valley. On its rt. bank lies the ancient and curious walled town of St. Bertrand de Comminges (Lugdunum Convenarum), situated at the opening of the Val de Barousse, upon and around a solitary rock, rising picturesquely out of the plain. Its summit is crowned by a Gothic church, the finest among the Pyrenees, in the Pointed style, whose choir and organ are ornamented with wood carvings, of very remarkable excellence, executed apparently in the 16th or 17th centuries. The painted glass, and a monument of a bishop (date 1351) in white marble, deserve notice. Upon the walls are a series of rude and ancient (? fresco) paintings of the Miracles of St. Bertrand; and some relics of the Saint are preserved in the sacristy. Here is hung up the skin of a crocodile, which is said to have infested the neighbourhood, and to have been destroyed by the saint! In a fragment of the cloisters, which have only recently been pulled down, are some curious old tombs. This church was once a cathedral, and the town itself, now deserted (847 inhabitants) was the capital of a comté, and a bishop's see. Many of the houses belonged to the canons and chapter. The inn is in the upper town.

The grotto of Gargas, 5 m. N. of the town, in the wooded hill extending between the Garonne and Neste, is the finest in the Pyrenees, for extent, and the beauty of its stalactites: the entrance is a hole so small that it is necessary to crawl through on one's hands and knees.

The high road, leaving St. Bertrand, on one side, again crosses the Garonne, by the Pont de Labroquère, and pursues its l. bank, through scenery of great interest, in which well-cultivated fields, enclosed by festoons of vines, hanging from tree to tree, form the foreground and grand mountains the distance, by 16 Estenos—to Cierp, where we quit the Garonne, and enter the Vale of the Pique, which becomes its affluent at Cierp, a picturesque village, both on account of its antique cottages, and from its position, under cliffs which nearly overhang it, at a point where the vistas of 2 valleys meeting disclose noble views. There are quarries of a beautiful marble near this.

A road runs from Cierp up the Valley of the Garonne (Vallée d'Aran), one of the most beautiful in the Pyrenees, to St. Béat, the last town of France, situated in a narrow gorge between high mountains. (See p. 331.)

St. Béat is not more than 5 m. from the Spanish frontier.

The Valley of the Pique, which is very picturesquely varied with wood, rock, human habitations, and cultivated fields, presents a succession of savage contractions, and smiling, basin-shaped expansions, covered with verdure, the river alternately winding over the plains, and dashing through the gorge; its upper end terminated by the grand, snowy peaks contiguous to the Port de Venasque. The road, which now makes several awkward ascents and steep descents, is about to be carried on a regular terrace. When the iron furnaces of Guron are passed, we traverse, near Pont de Casaux, the defile, before the geological rupture of which, the basin of Luchon must, doubtless, have been a vast lake.

21 Bagnères de Luchon. — Inns: Hôtel de France, best, but not good:—Hôtel de Londres, attentive landlord:—Pierre, the guide has good horses:—Hôtel du Commerce. The accommodation and cuisine at the inns are bad; far inferior to that afforded at Bagnères de Bigorre. Strangers about to stop some days here had better hire lodgings, of which there are enough to accommodate from 1,500 to 2,000 persons. 2,077 inhab.

The situation of Bagnères de Luchon is somewhat like that of Bigorre, except that the mountains are loftier, and entirely surround the flat, fertile plain on the edge of which it stands, forming a sort of oval basin in the very heart of the Pyrenees. On the W., close to the town, the Val de l'Arboust opens out; on the S., high among the clouds, rise bare, serrated ridges, destitute of vegetation, but contrasting grandly with the luxuriantly cropped plain near at hand.

Luchon is a town of 2000 inhab., of narrow streets and mean houses, less neat and civilised than B. de Bigorre, with one exception, — the Allée des Bains, a triple avenue of limes, lined with buildings, including the chief inns, and best lodging-houses. Another avenue stretches up the hill to the entrance of the Val de L'Arboust; and a third, of poplars, crosses the valley, from the church, towards the river Pique. These Allées enable the pedestrian to move to a considerable distance under shade, protected from the sun, and enjoying the view of the mountains closing the upper end of the valley. This range of peaks and precipices, among which the Pic de la Pique is conspicuous, screens from view the Maladetta, the Monarch of the Pyrenees. In the middle distance rises the tower of Castel Vieilh, which stops the mouth of the gorge to the S.

At the end of the Great Allée are the Baths, — a group of buildings, neither handsome outside, nor convenient within. The chief of them was burned 1841, and it is to be hoped may be replaced by a better. They stand at the foot of a precipitous wooded hill of slate, called Super Bagnères: the waters issue forth at the junction of the slate with the granite; they are sulphureous (except two, one saline, the other ferruginous?), and vary in temperature from 77° to 152° Fahrenheit. The accommodation for bathing is more extensive, there being about 80 baths, but not more comfortable than at other French watering places, for the cabinets are small, dark, and do not look cleanly. The waters are good for rheumatic complaints, paralysis, and cutaneous disorders, but are injurious in nervous diseases, and to persons of sanguine temperament. They are taken internally as well as in baths.

By an experiment, which had been 2 years in progress, of driving horizontal galleries into the rock of the mountain behind, near the old sources, hotter water, and a more copious supply, has recently been obtained, but some of the old springs are dried up in consequence. Protestant service is performed in the Mairie.

The Romans were well acquainted with the hot springs of Luchon; many altars and inscriptions, now in the museum of Toulouse, have been dug up here, some of them dedicated Deo Lixoni, from whom the place would appear to be named.

Zigzag paths run up the hill behind the baths, through the wood, and along the face of the hill, but they are too steep for invalids, and too filthy for any body English.

The chief season of these baths is from July to the middle of September, but many come before and others linger after that period.

About 200 horses and ponies are kept here for hire, at the usual charges, and are in constant request in fine weather. Guides are proportionably numerous; among them Laffont, called Prince, is hardy, experienced, and trustworthy, and has very good horses; he knows every step of the country around and every mountain peak.

Diligences — daily, 3 to Toulouse; 1 to Auch; 1 or 2 to Bagnères de Bigorre.

The inhabitants of the valley of Luchon, and its tributaries, appear an inferior race to those of the valleys in the W.; not so well off, nor so well clothed. In their dress, the berret gives place to an ugly night-cap, and the capulet, if retained, is black, instead of red. Beggars are very numerous, and goitres not uncommon; yet the lower parts of the valleys are fertile, producing two crops of corn in the year; the first, of wheat or maize, the second, late in September, when the fields are literally white, for the harvest of buck-wheat. Many goats are kept, which find sufficient food in the luxuriant herbage of the rocks; and the tinkling bells of the scampering flock, as they enter the town at sunset, produce a merry sound.

The Cascade of Montauban, on the E. side of the valley, is a very romantic spot, and, though the fall is inconsiderable, forms an agreeable walk. It is approached through a garden made by the curé of the village, who devotes to his parish the douceurs left by visitors.

The Excursions to be made from B. de Luchon are superior to those from B. de Bigorre, and indeed the finest in the Pyrenees. That to the beautiful Lac de Seculéjo or Lac d'Oo will be found in R. 86. p. 317.; 4 hours are required to go thither, and 3 to return. St. Béat (p. 331.) and the Val d'Aran (p. 330.) are well worth visiting; the excursion may be combined with that to the Port de Venasque.

One of the nearest at hand, a ride of 2 hours or a walk of 3, the distance being 7 or 8 miles, is to the Val de Lys, so called not from its lilies, but from an old or provincial form of the word eau, water, from the number of streams and waterfalls. The road to it ascends the valley from the baths, having the Pique at some distance on the l. It passes, also on the l. the picturesque border tower of Castel Vieilh, perched on a projecting crag, before the mouth of the Gorge de St. Mamet, watered by the Bourbe, leading, by the pass of the Portillon, into the Spanish Val d'Aran (p. 330.) This tower was designed to defend the entrance into the Val de Luchon by the ports of Portillon and of Venasque. Soon after passing it, the road crosses the Pique to its rt. bank, and ½ a mile farther, leaving on the l. the road to Venasque (p. 327.), it recrosses the Pique, to enter the fine wooded gorge out of which the Lys issues to unite with it. After a mile and a half's pleasant ride through the wood, under the shade of beech and hazels, the gorge expands into a green basin-shaped valley, of a truly pastoral character; the pastures covered with herds occupying its bottom being overlooked by very lofty mountains, girt with fir woods, especially at its upper end. It is there shut in by the snowy peaks and glaciers of the Crabioules, rising above the fir-clad precipices, which look like a festooned curtain of black drapery drawn across the valley head. The centre of this curtain of foliage is streaked by the white lines of the foaming cascades which form the lions of this valley. The principal one leaps down into the valley, about 200 yards above the little cabin, half chalet, half pot-house, where visitors put up their horses, and may obtain some common refreshments. The slate rock is cleft by a very narrow fissure or groove, called Trou d'Enfer, down which the fall, really a picturesque one, dashes. The other fall, on the l., called Cascade de Cœur, is less striking in character and less accessible; it is fed by the glaciers of the Tuque de Maupas. The glacier of Crabioules, which feeds the other, is very difficult of access, owing to its steep inclination and its crevices. It joins, on the W., the glacier of the Portillon d'Oo and the Port d'Oo. The pedestrian should go to the Val de Lys or return from it by the hill of Super Bagnères, the height behind Luchon, whence he will enjoy a magnificent view.

None of the excursions from Luchon, nor indeed in the whole range of the Pyrenees, equal that to the Port de Venasque. It is somewhat difficult, yet is achieved by ladies in chaises à porteur, and is practicable on horseback, and no one should omit it who has strength and love of fine scenery. It may be accomplished in 9 hrs., allowing 1½ hr. halt at the port. A guide is necessary. The road is the same as that just described as far as the 2d bridge over the Pique above Castel Vieilh. Leaving the opening of the Val de Lys on the rt., without crossing this bridge, you continue up the valley of the Pique, through park-like scenery, under the grateful shade of beech forests interspersed with firs and yews, between whose branches appear the rugged crags of the Pic de la Pique on the opposite side of the torrent. The ascent is gradual up to the Hospice de Bagnères (1½ hr. ride), the last habitation in France, where the horses are commonly allowed half an hour's rest to prepare them for the fatigue in store for them. It is a large massy, dirty stone house, like a Refuge on a Swiss mountain pass, belonging to the Commune of Luchon, entrusted to an innkeeper who resides here till the 20th December, and on his departure leaves behind a store of bread and wine, wood and straw, for the entertainment of wayfarers who cross the pass even in the depth of winter. No one avails himself of this provision without leaving behind money in payment for it. The house is on a par with a common cabaret, and affords only the commonest necessaries, and appears a miserable hovel to those who need neither food nor shelter. It stands in a grassy hollow at the foot of high hills some way below the head of the valley where the Pique takes its rise at the foot of the mountain called La Picade, over whose shoulder lies the pass of the Port de Picade. The path to it scales the hill behind the house, and it is a good 2 hrs. ascent chiefly over grass to reach the port.

Opposite the house, at rt. angles to the vale of the Pique, a colossal semicircular recess, or natural cirque cut out of the mountains, which surround it with bare precipices, opens out; it is a scene of dreary solitude, disturbed only by the hoarse raven or the howling blast. It is approached by a little wooden bridge crossing the Pique in front of the hospice, under a singular peak rising on the l. hand.

"We were all puzzled as our horses' heads were turned towards the glen, and we commenced the ascent, to tell by what magic men on foot, much more laden beasts, were to pass up and over this wall in any part of its circumference. Up, however, we went, toiling for 2 hrs. incessantly along a slightly traced path, always winding in zigzags, over large stones or rough beds of debris fallen from the mountains alternating with smooth solid rock. It was a picturesque sight to look down upon this tortuous path, like a cord unwound, with our cavalcade of men and horses toiling up it. In all the difficult passes I have traversed, I never met with an ascent so abrupt or long, yet our little jaded horses did the work wonderfully well, taking to the steep staircase road most willingly, and clambering among the cliffs like kids, never making a false step, so that, except for a very short distance, no one needed to dismount. As we mounted higher, however, another obstacle besides the steepness presented itself — in the wind, 'the rushing mighty wind,' which sweeps down the gully with a hideous howl and a force perfectly tremendous, and renders it very difficult to keep one's seat. As the path in the upper part of its course is carried up the face of a slope which is all but a precipice, it is easy to imagine what serious consequences to horse and man these gusts may produce; and there is a proverb, that in ascending the Port de Venasque, 'a father will not look back at his son, nor a son wait for his father.' Two or three tremendous gusts had given us a foretaste of what might be expected when a sudden and more severe one whistled and whirled among the rocks; the horses staggered, the riders bent before it, clapping one hand to their hats, and the other to the pummels of their saddles.

One ill-starred animal, however, could not stand it—it was that which bore one of the Englishmen, who was a good rider. To my terror and dismay, I saw his beast down, slipping and struggling on the edge of a most abrupt descent: to have gone over would have been death; neither horse nor man would have stopped till they had reached perhaps a thousand feet below, and they would have swept others with them. Luckily the rider was able to throw himself off, and his beast regained its footing. The same accident, however, happened again in about a quarter of an hour to the same individual. It was amusing to see with what alacrity at the second alarm every one dropped from his saddle. About three-fourths of the way up is a small ledge or recess in the face of the mountain, in which lie 4 small, deep sunken tarns or ponds, frozen over a great part of the year. The steepness of the mountain and the shortness of the zigzags constantly increase till, near the top, the angle of the slope is so highly inclined that the path must turn abruptly at every 6 or 8 ft., and as the ground is covered with loose splintery shale, the horses have no secure footing. Nothing is to be seen but the awful abyss directly under your feet, the rocks in front hiding all view until the moment when you enter the Port, a wedge-shaped fissure cut into the crest of the mountain;—a mere gate, not more than 6 ft. wide. T. and I were the two first on the top, and on passing this doorway, stepped from France at once into Spain. To tarry in the singular portal or port hole was impossible on account of the wind which threatened to blow us back again more quickly than we had entered, so we descended a few steps, driving our horses before us, and seated ourselves on the smooth slate rock, which here dips downward as abruptly as the roof of a house. But what a scene opened before us — not a glimpse of which had been perceived before! We beheld an enormous mountain, the highest of the Pyrenees, called the Maladetta, or Accursed— I suppose from the utterly barren and dreary air of it and every thing about it. Its huge round top and ridges are covered with everlasting snow, except where one or two bristling black peaks break through it; its lower part is shrouded with scanty fir-trees: a great gulf or deep ravine separates it from the bare slope on which we stood; not a sign of human habitation or cultivation; all around a desert, as though a corner of the world forgotten and left unfinished. We spent more than an hour reclining on the scanty grass, gazing on this magnificent spectacle; then by another similar pass returned into France, proceeding on our way out of Arragon, through a corner of Catalonia. Thus ended our most striking excursion of the Pyrenees."—*MS. Journal.

The pass called Port de Venasque (reached in 2 hrs. from the Hospice of Bagnères) is cut through the mountain wall called Penna Blanca,

* In Blackwood's Magazine, No. CLXV., will be found a most vivid and true description of the Port de Venasque. The final ascent is thus related by its observant author:—

"Our position became at every step more interesting and extraordinary; for to all powers of observation this cul-de-sac was so perfect, and all means of exit so inscrutable, that not one of the party, after the most mature inspection, could form a conjecture as to the continuation even of the very pathway, much less of the pass itself, which appeared to elude our grasp as we drew near, and yet must, if it really existed, be now close at hand. At length, on rounding a sharp corner, the pass started into view, about 50 ft. above our head. . . . The poor animals, as if conscious that the severest portion of their task was drawing to a close, exerted themselves with redoubled efforts to accomplish the remaining—I may say—steps in the ladder. . . .

Another march brought me to the breach, when I drew up, and in motionless and speechless admiration sat with my eyes rivetted on the stupendous scene so singularly, so suddenly revealed. . . The Maladetta was immediately in front, without a single intervening object, standing in all its dreary nakedness, like the ghost of some mountain belonging to a departed world."—S.

at an elevation of 7917 ft. above the sea level, but at a considerable depth below the crest of that mountain, whose top, as well as the frontier line, is marked by an iron cross. In the depths of the hollow below the Port, within the Spanish territory, the Essera takes its rise, and a low ridge stretching across at its head unites the Maladetta, which is an outlier rising on the S. of the main chain, with the mountains of the Port de Venasque. Above this ridge on the l. lies the mysterious Trou du Taureau, an oval basin or gulf without visible outlet, excavated in the limestone rock to a depth of 80 feet, which, swallowing up the waters descending from the N. E. slope of the Maladetta, is believed to convey them under the intervening mountains into the Valley of Artigues Tellina, where, rising again to light, they form the Source of the Garonne. This phænomenon merits the personal investigation of travellers.

The Maladetta, erroneously included in some maps in the central chain, and even placed within the French frontier, is an off-set or buttress lying to the S. of the dorsal spine of the Pyrenees, and entirely shut out by it from France, as it were by a screen of peaks and ridges. Though the highest of the Pyrenees, 11,426 ft. above the sea level, it loses much of the effect of elevation when seen from the Port de Venasque, on account of the great height of the Val d'Essera, out of which it rises. The highest of its summits, the Pic de Nethou, had never been reached until 1842, when it was surmounted by a Russian officer named Tchitchacheff, with one French companion and 3 guides. The glacier upon its N. flank is the largest in the Pyrenees, and is dangerous to cross on account of the crevasses. In 1824 a guide named Barran perished miserably in one of them, owing to the covering of snow giving way beneath him, before the eyes of two French gentlemen, pupils of the Ecole des Mines, who heard his agonising cries as he gradually sunk down, without being able to render any assistance. The crags and snows of the Maladetta are the favourite haunt of the izard; and many a bold chasseur dares all the perils of the mountain in pursuit of them.

The Spanish town of Venasque is about as far from the Port to the S. W. as Luchon is to the N., i. e., a walk of 4 hours; but the way is very rough and difficult, following at first the windings of the Essera, wading the torrents which fall into it, and threading the mass of rocks and rubbish fallen from the gigantic wall of Penna Blanca on the rt. Some way down is the Spanish Hospice, "a vile posada" serving as a guard and custom-house, occupied by carabineers, and supplying the place of a hospice swept away by an avalanche in 1838, which resembled that on the French side of the pass. From this to Venasque, about 10 m., the path runs by the side of the Essera, and is very difficult. The scenery of the gorge is grand but savage, its striking feature being the number of its waterfalls, and rapidity of the torrents descending into it. A bath has been built on the opposite slope of the valley.

The path from the Port d'Oo (see p. 326.) descends the Val d'Astos. The sides of the mountains are stripped of wood near Venasque, which is suddenly disclosed to view by a bend in the valley. Its most conspicuous feature is the picturesque castle by which it is surmounted, originally a stronghold of the middle ages, converted by modern works into a fortress, which was besieged and taken by the French in 1809, and possesses no great strength. It is surrounded on three sides by deep ravines.

In the principal street, Calle Mayor, are several picturesque old houses ornamented with sculptured figures, coats of arms, &c., and some of these retain the towers which originally served for defence. The church, at the end of the town farthest from the castle, is a curious Romanesque building, fitted up in the Spanish style with carving, gilding, &c. Another church was destroyed by the French who did much mischief here. There is no regular inn at Venasque, but strangers are readily accommodated in private houses, though at charges exceedingly high.

Return to Luchon from the Port de Venasque. — Port de Picade.

It is by no means necessary to retrace one's steps, and take the same way back. The ridge of the Penna Blanca, through which the Port de Venasque opens, is traversed about 1½ m. to the E. of it by another pass, called Port de Picade, reached by turning to the l., traversing the meadows at the base of the mountains, whence the Port de Venasque looks as though it had been formed by chipping a bit out of the Sierra, and then scaling a steep ascent encumbered with rubbish, and not marked by any path. On the top you pass out of Aragon into a corner of Catalonia, and look down upon a chaos of wild peaks and ridges. Here you have the choice of two passes, the shortest the Picade; on the l. is a very narrow path carried along the shattered edges of the slaty stone, barely traced among shivers and splinters of rock upon the very ridge or crest of the Sierra, along the brink of the precipice. It is a grand wild spot, and is named Picade from a gigantic obelisk of rock which rears itself aloft. It leads back to the Hospice de Bagnères by a path marked with tolerable distinctness on the grassy slopes, and though steep much easier than that up to the Port de Venasque. Thus the traveller has passed from France into Spain through one door or gap in the great separation wall between them, and returned through another.

The pass on the rt. hand, after reaching the crest of the Port de Picade, is called Port de Pommereau, and leads into the vale of the Garonne, the upper part of which is called the Val d'Aran, and though lying on the French side of the Pyrenees belongs to Spain. The descent runs through the grand gorge of Artigues Tellina, covered, as you proceed down it, with dense intact forests of primæval growth, in the midst of which, in a deep hollow at the foot of precipices, 10 minutes distant from the path, one of the chief sources of the Garonne issues forth from a series of cavities encumbered with broken rocks called Œil de Djoueou, and by the Spaniards Ojos de Garonna, "the Garonne's eye." It is said that the copious stream which here bursts forth to-day is the torrent whose cradle is the snows of the Maladetta, and which, after being lost in the Trou de Taureau (p. 329.), pursues its way under ground, through the caverns of the limestone mountains, as far as this spot, where it rises a ready-made river. This is one of the most important sources of the Garonne. A little farther down lies the Hospice of Artigues Tellina. The part of the valley below this is covered with pastures. Much timber is cut in the forests, and floated down the Garonne to Bordeaux. Near the junction of the valley of Artigues Tellina with that of the main stream of the Garonne of Viella, the river is crossed by a bridge near the ruined Castel Leon, destroyed by the French in the war of the Succession, whence there is a fine view of the Maladetta. The Val d'Aran contains 32 towns and villages, 69 churches, and 20,000 inhab.; it runs up towards the great chain, 14 m. above Castel Leon; 5 m. up it lies Viella, the chief place of the valley, containing 900 inhabitants, 8 m. distant from the Port de Viella. Below Castel Leon at Las Bordas, the path to Luchon by the Portillon and the Val Burbe stretches off to the W. Lower down is Bosost, the second place in the valley, a miserable village but in a charming situation.

On the outskirts of the village of Les (?) are Baths supplied by sulphureous springs, and the Bath-house affords the best accommodation in the valley. Below this a fine view is obtained of the Maladetta. Here the Val d'Aran puts on its greatest beauty and grandeur, which place it almost without a rival among the Pyrenean valleys. The river is jammed in between the rocks near a bridge over a tributary stream, called Pont du Roi, which marks the frontier of France; it is the custom-house post, &c. The Val d'Aran belonged to France down to 1192, when it was transferred as the dowry of Beatrix de Comminges to her husband, a prince of Aragon. It was ravaged by the Carlists in the late war. Fos is the first place within the French territory. The valley contracts lower down to a grand defile, in the midst of which lies St. Béat, a very picturesque and interesting old town, consisting of a narrow street overhung by beetling cliffs: a ruined castle stands on a rock in the midst of the defile. The scenery around is most lovely. The Inn (Fortan's) is not good, but it is one of the best in the valley. There is an excellent carriage road from this to Cierp and Luchon.

There are quarries of marble here.

At Cierp, 6 m. below St. Béat, the Garonne is joined by the Pique coming from Luchon, and our road falls into the high road from Bigorre and Toulouse (p. 324.) leading thither.

 More detailed and accurate information respecting the Val d'Aran and Venasque would be acceptable to the editor.

ROUTE 90.

TOULOUSE TO PAU, BY AUCH AND TARBES.

184 kilom. = 114 Eng m.
Malleposte daily in 15 hours.
Diligence, daily.

Toulouse is in R. 70.

At the radiation of roads outside the Faubourg St. Cyprien, called Patte d'Oie, the branch on the rt. is that which leads to Auch; it crosses, at the distance of 2 m., the stream of the Touch.

18 Leguevin.

15 L'Ile Jourdain, a town of 2000 inhabitants, on the rt. bank of the Save.

17 Gimont.

8 Aubiet. The road runs through a highly cultivated and very productive country, in a direction nearly due W., not inclining in the least to S. all the way from Toulouse to 17 Auch (Inns: H. de la Paix:—de France), the chef lieu of the department du Gers, a town of 10,461 inhabitants, and see of an archbishop, is situated on the top and slopes of an eminence washed by the Gers at its base, and crowned by the Cathedral of Sainte Marie, one of the finest Gothic edifices in the S. of France, begun in the reign of Charles VIII., and completed, by the tasteless addition of its inappropriate Grecian portico, in that of Louis XIV. The church is 347 ft. long, and 74 ft. high. The painted glass is of rare richness and beauty; it was executed (1513) by Arnaud de Moles. The carved woodwork of the choir is equally remarkable. At the back of the stalls are well executed figures of Virtues, &c. in bas-relief, enclosed in niches and canopies of elaborate workmanship (date 1525-7). The choir is separated from the nave by a gallery (jubé), or rood loft.

Long flights of stairs lead from the lower town to the upper; many old houses are preserved here. The Place Royale, in the higher and better quarter of the town, is a handsome square; adjoining it is the Cours d'Etigny, so named from a magistrate by whom it was laid out, commanding a glorious view of the chain of the Pyrenees.

Auch was anciently capital of the Ausci (whence Auch), afterwards of the Comté d'Armagnac, and seat of the primate of Aquitaine.

A malleposte runs hence daily by Agen to Limoges (R. 73. 70.).

15 Vicnau.

9 Mirande.

13 Miélan. Soon after crossing the Arros we descend a slope, commanding the view of the Pyrenees, among which the Pic du Midi de Bigorre, rising directly in front, is grandly conspicuous, into the plain of the Adour, which stretches hence to the foot of those mountains, and enter

14 Rabastens, an old town mentioned by Froissart. A perfectly straight road connects this place with 19 Tarbes, in R. 87.

23 Bordes d'Expouy.

16 Pau (R. 80. p. 286.). There is a second and more direct road from Toulouse to Tarbes recently completed, which, though unprovided with post horses, is taken by the diligence daily, in 22 hours, passing through Lombez, Boulogne, and Trie.

ROUTE 91.

TOULOUSE TO BAGNÈRES DE LUCHON, AND BAGNÈRES DE BIGORRE BY ST. GAUDENS.

To B. de Bigorre, 142 kilom. = 88 Eng. m.; to B. de Luchon, 135 kilom. = 84 Eng. m.

Diligences daily.

The first part of the road, across the great plain of Languedoc, and along the l. bank of the Garonne, though seldom in sight of the river, is very monotonous. The Pyrenees are yet too distant to form an important feature, but the richness of the soil and abundance of the crops are very remarkable. The Duke of Wellington attempted the passage of the Garonne at Portet, a village on the l. of the high road, 6 m. above Toulouse, but the width of the river proved too great for the pontoons provided, and the army consequently crossed lower down, below Toulouse. The confluence of the Arriège with the Garonne takes place opposite Portet.

20 Muret.

The army of the Comte de Toulouse, aided by Pedro II., king of Aragon, amounting to 100,000 men, was defeated under the walls of Muret by Simon de Montfort, who made a sortie with 14,000 men, headed by St. Dominic, bearing a crucifix, and cut the besiegers to pieces, leaving Pedro dead on the field.

12 Noè on the l. bank of the Garonne. At Carbonne, above this, some way to the l. of the road, Lord Hill crossed the Garonne with 18,000 men; but finding the roads impassable, speedily returned to march along the l. bank against St. Cyprien, the faubourg of Toulouse.

27 Martres. In a field near this, interesting Roman antiquities have been discovered, consisting of an immense number of busts, statues, reliefs, inscriptions, &c., now deposited in the museum of Toulouse, marking this as the site of the ancient town, Calagorris Convenarum.

There is a bridge over the Garonne at St. Martory.

28 St. Gaudens (Inn, Hôtel de France, good), an old and gloomy town of 6020 inhabitants, at a little distance from the Garonne, has a church of considerable antiquity, in the Romanesque style, with 3 apses at the E. end, and small round-headed windows. The road to Bagnères de Bigorre here diverges on the rt., up the l. bank of the Garonne to Montrejeau, where it falls into R. 87. p. 324.

The Garonne is crossed by the road to Luchon a short way out of the town; and from the slope leading down to it there is a fine view of its windings and of the distant Pyrenees.

At the distance of 6 or 8 m. farther out the road passes abruptly from the plain into the midst of the mountains, by ascending an eminence, the extreme root or spur of the Pyrenees, to avoid a wide curve of the Garonne, but descends upon the river at the foot of the opposite slope. An uncommon view is here presented of the interesting town of St. Bertrand (R. 87.), which our road leaves on the rt. "You break at once upon a vale, sunk deep enough beneath the point of view to command every hedge and tree, with St. Bertrand clustered round its large cathedral on a rising ground. If it had been built purposely to add a feature to a singular prospect, it could not have been better placed. The mountains rise proudly around, and give their rough frame to this exquisite little picture." — A. Young. The Garonne is crossed at the Pont Labrèquere to

27 Estenos, described, with the rest of the road, to 21 Bagnères de Luchon, in R. 87. p. 324.

ROUTE 93.

TOULOUSE TO NARBONNE AND MARSEILLES, BY CARCASSONNE.—CANAL DU MIDI.

445 kilom. = 276 Eng. m.

Malleposte daily, in 37 hours.

Diligences, daily. With post horses in 9 hours to Carcassonne.

Bateaux de Poste daily, along the Canal du Midi from Toulouse to Agde: a very tedious conveyance, to which, for the most part, the lower classes only resort.

The road, on quitting Toulouse, passes on the l. the hill of Pech David — a good point of view to see the Pyrenees from, — and skirting, at a short distance on the l., the Canal du Midi, continues to run nearly parallel with it for several stages. This great and useful public work, sometimes called Canal des Deux Mers, because it unites the Mediterranean with the Atlantic, was executed under Louis XIV., by the engineer Paul Riquet, though the design is clearly sketched out in the Mémoires de Sully. It was commenced 1666 (100 years save 6 before Brindley, in England, began the Bridgewater Canal), and finished 1681, the year after Riquet's death. It measures, from the basin where it joins the Garonne at Toulouse, to the Etang du Thau, near Agde, where it falls into the Mediterranean, 244 kilom. = 151 Eng. m.; it is 20 met. (65 ft. 7 in.) wide at the surface, and 10 met. (32 ft.) at the bottom. It cost more than 16 millions livres = 33 millions fr.

It has 64 sluices, and many other considerable works, reservoirs, &c., which will be enumerated as we approach them. These, though wonderful for the time when they were constructed, have been surpassed by many in England, and even in France. The articles transported along the canal consist chiefly of corn, oil, soap, wine, brandy, &c.; it is navigated by barges of 100 tons, but the traffic is not very extensive, judging from the number of voyages yearly to and fro, which is only 960. It is closed for a month or 6 weeks once in 3 years for the "chômage" (still stand), in order to be cleaned.

Our road lies across a rich corn country, but monotonously flat, which before the end of summer becomes parched, dusty, and arid.

12 Castanet. The canal and the river Lers, running parallel with it, are crossed at 12 Baziège.

11 Villefranche, a town of 2400 inhabitants, consisting of a long street traversed by the road.

Beyond Avignonet we pass from the department Haute Garonne into that of l'Aude, and a little farther skirt on the rt. the Bassin de Naurouze, an artificial reservoir formed for the supply of the canal, which here attains its summit level (point de partage). The water is derived from a still higher and larger reservoir, le Bassin de St. Féréol, measuring 5249 ft. by 2558 ft., situated on the flanks of the Montagne Noire, whence it is conducted hither in an artificial channel to be discharged into the 2 seas. The descent of 208½ ft. between this and Toulouse is effected by 18 locks, and that of 719 ft., down to the level of the Mediterranean at Agde, by 46 locks. Riquet intended to have founded a town upon the basin of Naurouze — a design not yet accomplished, but an obelisk, by way of monument, was erected to him by his descendants, on this spot, 1825. A little island has been formed in the basin opposite the mouth of the Canal by the deposits brought down by it. After crossing this main feeder of the canal, there is nothing to notice until reaching 22 Castelnaudary (Inns: La Flèche: — Notre Dame), a town of nearly 10,000 inhabitants, on an eminence, skirted at its base by the Canal du Midi, which here expands into a bassin, much larger than that at Naurouze, the only thing remarkable here. There are stone-quarries and lime-kilns near.

The name has been traced to "Castrum Novum Arianorum," the name given by the Visigoths to the town, which they refounded. It suffered severely in the crusade against the Albigenses, having been taken both by Simon de Montfort and the Comte de Toulouse: and in 1237 the inquisitors enacted an auto-da-fè here; in which, in their desire to root out heresy, they not only burnt many persons alive, but many dead bodies, dragged ignominiously from the grave for this purpose. The most memorable event in the annals of Castelnaudary is the battle fought here on the banks of the Fresquel, 1632, between the forces of Louis XIII. and of Gaston Duc d'Orleans, at which the unfortunate Duc de Montmorency was wounded and made prisoner, and soon after conveyed hence to Toulouse to be beheaded.

12 Villepinte. The rounded outline of the Black Mountain bounds the view on the N.

9 Alzonne, a town of 2000 inhabitants.

17¼ Carcassonne.—Inns: Hôtel Bonnet: — St. Jean Baptiste, good and reasonable; on the airy Boulevard.—F. K. This chef lieu of the department of L'Aude, a city of 17,394 inhabitants, is traversed by the river Aude, and by the Canal du Midi, which, at first carried at a distance from its walls, at the request of the inhabitants has, in recent times, received at vast expense another direction, in order to bring it up to the town, where it now forms a large bassin.

Carcassonne itself is composed of two parts, the modern town on the plain and the old town on an eminence above it, forming a picturesque background with its venerable towers and commanding battlements. The lower and newer town, cheerful, flourishing, and industrious, consists chiefly of modern built houses in streets, ranging at right angles with one another, surrounded by boulevards occupying the site of its ramparts, including squares planted with trees and furnished with marble fountains, and running with freshening rivulets. It contains several large woollen factories, and not less than 7000 persons of the town and its vicinity are employed in the manufacture of cloth, chiefly exported to the Levant, Barbary, and S. America, where it is esteemed for its brilliant dyes. From this and other sources of commercial prosperity it has increased, in the course of four or five centuries, from a suburb to be the town itself, while the original city on the height has dwindled down into an insignificant faubourg. Beyond this, however, it has no claim to detain the passing traveller. Its modern cathedral, and church of St. Vincent, whose tall tower stands on the line of the meridian of Paris, are not remarkable. The avenue of trees planted along the margin of the canal, and embellished with a column of the red marble of the country to the memory of Riquet, its engineer, leads to the aqueduct bridge by which the canal has been carried over the stream of the Fresnel in recent times.

The old town, on the height beyond the Aude, deserves the notice of all who take an interest in antiquities, as retaining unchanged, to a greater extent perhaps than any other in France, the aspect of a fortress of the middle ages. A traveller with such tastes must not be deterred from entering by odious smells, steep, narrow, dirty, and desolate streets, with the grass growing in many of them and the houses falling to ruin, for it has been abandoned entirely to persons of the poorer class and to artisans, composing a population of paupers pent up within its narrow enclosure.

A portion of the inner line of ramparts and towers, which enclose it, is attributed to the Visigoths with much probability, and the rest, including the castle, seems to be of the 11th or 12th century, while the outer circuit has been referred to the latter end of the 13th century. The former are therefore the same defences which withstood for a time the assault of the army of Crusaders under the fierce Simon de Montfort and the Abbot of Citeaux, who, reeking with the blood spilt at Beziers, laid siege to Carcassonne, where a vast number of fugitives, together with the Vicomte de Beziers, had taken refuge. At the intercession of the King of Arragon his uncle, the papal legate promised to spare his life and those of 12 others with him; but the brave young warrior rejected these terms, declaring that he would sooner be flayed alive than betray one of those who had endangered themselves for his sake. Finding, however, that, owing to the number of men, women and children, who had poured in from the surrounding country, it was impossible to hold out, he managed to let them escape by a secret passage, and surrendered under a promise of safe conduct for himself. He was nevertheless seized treacherously, and soon after died in prison, while of those who remained in the town 50 were hung and 400 burnt alive. In 1356 this fortress effectually resisted the Black Prince, who burnt the suburb below, and ravaged with fire and sword the whole of Languedoc. A curious sally-port, or barbacane, projects from the walls on the side nearest the modern town; and one of the towers has been split into two, but the one half, though fallen down, has not broken to pieces,—such is the thickness and solidity of the masonry. The legend respecting it is, that Charlemagne, after in vain besieging for several years the town, which held out though defended only by one Saracen woman named Carcas, was about to raise the siege in despair, when this tower gave way of its own accord, and opened a breach by which his army entered. The figure of this Saracen Amazon is still to be seen rudely carved over the Porte Narbonnaise, on the E. side of the town.

The Church of St. Nazaire, formerly cathedral, in the middle of the old town, consists of a Romanesque nave, part of the church dedicated by Pope Urban II. in 1096, supported on massive piers round and square, and of a Gothic choir and transepts added at the beginning of the 13th century. In this part of the church are two fine circular windows, and some painted glass of great brilliancy of colour, though inferior in drawing. On one side of the high altar a slab of red marble is said to mark the grave of Simon de Montfort, Earl of Leicester, that cruel and ambitious warrior, who, steeled in the holy wars, in the school of the Templars and Assassins, turned at the bidding of the pope the sword whetted against the infidels upon the heretical Christians, the unfortunate Albigenses. In one of the side chapels of the nave is a curious bas-relief, representing an assault of a besieged town, probably of the 13th century.

Near the centre of the town is a very wide and deep well, into which, according to tradition, the Visigoth kings threw their treasures.

Carcassonne was the birth-place of the Revolutionist Fabre, who called himself D'Eglantine, because he had gained the prize of the golden sweet-briar in the floral games at Toulouse (see p. 247.); he began his career as an actor and ended it on the guillotine in 1793.

Diligences daily to Narbonne, Montpellier, Nismes, and Marseilles; to Perpignan by Limoux; to Toulouse.

At Caunes, 12 m. N.E. of Carcassonne, are the quarries of marble, commonly used in churches and other public buildings in the S. of France. They are associated with slates of the transition series and furnish 4 sorts; 1. flesh-coloured, much employed by Louis XIV. and XV.; 2. marbre cervelas; 3. grey marble containing Encrinites; 4. Griotte including nautili: one variety is called "œil de perdrix."

On quitting Carcassonne, the road crosses and runs for some distance by the side of the Aude; the canal makes a bend to the N., its new channel being cut through deep excavations. The cultivation of the olive begins near this, though the tree can scarcely be said to flourish hereabouts.

14 Barbeira.

Near this, a little to the N. of the canal, is the drained lake of Marseillette, converted from a useless pool or morass into 2900 hectares of excellent arable land by the enterprise and capital of Madame Lawless, an Irish lady domiciled in France. The drainage was completed 1808, and the ground is now portioned out into 24 farms. The country between this and Narbonne is very dreary; large part of it white naked rock: trees very scarce.

12 Moux.

14 Cruscade.

20 Narbonne, in R. 126.

ROUTE 94.

NARBONNE TO PERPIGNAN, PORT VENDRE, AND THE SPANISH FRONTIER.

To Perpignan is 62 kilom. = 40 Eng. m.

Diligences twice a day.

The road is very uninteresting, skirting on the rt., the low chains of the Corbières, consisting of bare rocks without trees or herbage; only a few bristly plants, and tufts of the heath which produces the Narbonne honey; and on the l., the salt lagoons, or shallow lakes, called Etangs de Bages, de Sigean, de la Palme, and de Leucate, which here line the shore of the Mediterranean, bordered with mud and sand. The district is unhealthy, owing to the miasma from this marshy tract. At intervals, when the road surmounts a slight eminence, a glimpse may be obtained of the open sea beyond the étangs.

21 Sigean, situated on the margin of the lagoon of the same name, was the scene of a victory gained by Charles Martel over the Saracens, 737.

The few trees near the road are all bent in one direction, to the S. E., by the violent winds from the N. W., which prevail here for 8 months out of the 12.

15 Fitou stands on the edge of the large étang, called de Leucate, from a half deserted town on the tongue of land between it and the sea; a place of strength and importance during the period when Rousillon belonged to Spain, and Leucate stood on the frontier of France. The extremity of the chain of the Pyrenees, stretching into the sea, may be discerned near this.

11 Salces; the fort on the rt., before entering this village, was built by the emperor Charles V.; it is now a powder magazine.

The little town of Rivesaltes, famed for its wine, lies about 1½ m. on the rt., upon a small stream often dried up, the Agly, which is crossed by the road half way between Salces and Perpignan.

The two branches of the torrent-river Tet are crossed in order to reach Perpignan; between them stands the suburb Notre Dame; and on the rt. bank the lofty and singular castle of Castellet, a double tower of brick, surmounted by machicolations erected by Charles V., now a military prison.

15 PERPIGNAN. — Inns: H. des Ambassadeurs:—du Commerce:—de l'Europe: — Petit Paris.

Perpignan, chef lieu of the Dépt. des Pyrenées Orientales, also a first class fortress of great strength, defending the passage by the E. Pyrenees from Spain into France, is placed on the rt. bank of the Tet, about 6 m. above its termination in the sea, in the midst of the level plain of Rousillon, and contains 18,500 inhabitants, exclusive of its garrison. As Rousillon, of which province it was the capital, was not permanently united to France until the Treaty of the Pyrenees, in 1659, it is not surprising that both the town, in its narrow streets covered with awnings, its semi-Moresque buildings, its houses furnished with wooden balconies and courts (patios), and its inhabitants, especially the lower orders, in their physiognomy, language, dress, dances, should resemble those of Catalonia, on the S. side of the Pyrenees. Those to whom Spain is unknown will be struck with this novel character; but beyond this there is not much to interest the stranger. Almost all the public buildings date from the Spanish period, and are of brick or rolled pebbles. The Cathedral, begun 1324, and continued by Louis XI., during the time he held Rousillon in pawn from the king of Aragon, consists of a very broad and lofty nave. The altar screen, of beautiful carved work, partly wood, partly stone, in the style of the Renaissance, deserves notice; and the massy framework, gilding, tapestries, &c., which decorate this part of the church are thoroughly Spanish in style. The font, of marble, in the form of a tub, is very old; some attribute it to the time of the Visigoth kings. Adjoining this church are remains of a still older church, now in ruins, called St. Jean le Vieux. Of the church and convent of the Dominicans, now a military store, a portion, in the Romanesque style, belongs to the edifice which St. Dominic, the Inquisitor, inhabited when he entered Rousillon. The building called La Loge, from the Spanish Lonja, exchange or bazaar, is a curious example of the mixed Moresque and Gothic styles of the end of the 15th century. Its façade, exhibiting flamboyant ornaments, foliage and tracery, though much mutilated and injured by alterations, and the covered galleries round the court behind, merit notice. The ancient University contains the public library of 20,000 vols., and the commencement of a museum.

The Citadel, separated from the town by a wide glacis, and surrounded by a double line of works, is considered very strong, and commands the town. The inner ramparts were raised by Charles V., the outer by Vauban; and in the midst rises a tall square castle, or Donjon, built by the kings of Majorca, and the remains of a church, whose façade is remarkable, and is said to resemble that on Mount Sinai. The portal is a pointed arch, faced with slabs of marble, red and white alternately, resting on columns whose capitals represent fighting dragons. On one of the ramparts, an arm carved in stone (dextrochère), projecting from the parapet, was formerly pointed out as marking the spot where the emperor Charles V., going the rounds at night, found a sentinel fast asleep at his post, and, pushing him into the fosse, himself took the musquet, and did duty until relieved by the guard. This has been recently destroyed. From the citadel a view may be obtained over the plain of Rousillon, extending 15 m. on all sides, save that towards the sea not more than 6 m., and surrounded by a semicircle of mountains, the most elevated being the Pyrenees on the S., though they are still distant; and the only mountain which makes a conspicuous figure is the Canigon, the highest of this portion of the chain.

M. Arago, the mathematician and astronomer, is a native of Estagel, a village near Perpignan. Perpignan is more remarkable as a fortress than a place of commerce, but some trade is carried on in wines of Rousillon, also in cork, from the mountains.

For information regarding Passports on entering France from Spain, see Introduction, d.

Diligences twice a day to Narbonne; daily to Toulouse, by Limoux; and to Barcelona in 2 days.

About 17½ m. S.E. of Perpignan is the sea-port of Port Vendre; the road to it passes 12 St. Elne, the ancient Illiberis, mentioned by Pliny as "ingentis quondam urbis tenue vestigium," and by Livy as the place where Hannibal first encamped, after crossing the Pyrenees, on his march to Rome, "Pyrenæum transgreditur, et ad oppidum Illiberis castra locat." It was rebuilt by Constantine, who gave it the name of his mother Elena. It has a very ancient Church of St. Eulalie, once the cathedral, and episcopal see of Rousillon before Perpignan. It dates from 1019, and is in the Romanesque style, but with a pointed roof; it is very plain internally, but the cloister adjoining is very richly ornamented with carvings, bas-reliefs, &c., and is worth notice. It is entered from the church by a pointed doorway resembling that in the citadel of Perpignan. Many inscriptions and bas-reliefs are let into the outer walls of the church; one of them is called the Tomb of Constans, who was assassinated at Elne by order of Maxentius. Elne is now reduced to a poor village. On quitting it the river Tech is crossed, and Argelez is passed. Beyond this the E. extremity of the Pyrenæan chain, dropping down into the sea, forms, by its projecting buttresses and roots, a number of headlands, and retreating coves or bays. On the shore of one of these lies 14 Collioure (Cauroliberis), defended by numerous forts, the whole commanded by the Citadel of St. Elne, between this and Port Vendres. At the entrance of the harbour rises a little rocky island bearing a Church of Pilgrimage, dedicated to the Virgin. The town contains about 2,000 inhabitants, and is surrounded by vineyards: the rocks, bare as they are, suffice to maintain the vine, and even the aloe, and produce some of the best wines in the department.

About 2 m. beyond Collioure is 3 Port Vendres (Inn, H. du Commerce), a town of 800 inhabitants, and a harbour of some consequence, as it is the only port of refuge between Marseilles and the Spanish frontier, and is accessible for frigates. It is defended by 4 forts and 4 batteries. It has gained of late in prosperity, from its increased communication with Africa, most of the troops destined for Algiers being embarked here. 3 or 4 steamers, plying between Marseilles, Barcelona, Gibraltar, and Cadiz, touch here every week. The marble obelisk, 100 ft. high, in the square, was raised to Louis XVI., who caused the harbour to be cleared, excavated, and made useful, 1780. The ancient name of this place was Portus Veneris, from a temple of Venus, built here by the Romans. There is a mule path hence into Spain, by the village and Col of Banyuls to Lanza, the first place in Catalonia.

The interesting road up the valley of the Tech, from Boulou, is described in R. 98.

The high road into Spain from Per-pignan continues to cross the monotonous plain of Rousillon, but, as it gradually approaches the Pyrenees, commands a fine view of the Canigou on the rt.

22 Boulou lies at the foot of the mountains on the Tech, whose valley is described in R. 98. The stream is crossed as you quit Boulou, and about a mile farther the ascent begins, the road making considerable curves, up to the pass or Col de Perthus, which may be reached in 1½ hour. Half way, upon the l. of the road, is the ruined castle of L'Ecluse. At the summit on the rt. of the Col, on a height above the little village of Perthus, stands the fort of Bellegarde constructed by Louis XIV., in 1679, to command the passage into Spain. It is a regular pentagon with 5 bastions, in one of which, facing Spain, General Dugommier, killed in the battle of the Montagne Noire, on the road to Figueiras, 1794, is buried.

This pass was crossed by the conquering army of Pompey, who erected upon it a trophy of his successes, inscribed with the names of 876 places which he had subdued. Cæsar followed not long after, and raised an altar by the side of the monument of Pompey, over whose lieutenants he had, in turn been victorious. No traces of either now remain.

Junquiera, the first Spanish town, 15 m. from Boulou, and the road to Barcelona, are described in the HANDBOOK OF SPAIN.

ROUTE 97. *

THE EASTERN PYRENEES.—TOULOUSE TO FOIX AND PUYCERDA.—THE VALLEY OF THE ARIEGE. — VICDESSOS. — ANDORRE.

81 kilom. = 59 Eng. m. to Foix; 18 lieux thence to Puycerda = 50 Eng. m.

* Routes 97 and 98, not being described from personal knowledge, may, perhaps, be somewhat inaccurate, and the Editor would feel much obliged to any traveller who has travelled on these lines for notes to correct them.

A post road as far as Foix. Diligences run daily to Foix, Ussat, and Ax.

At Portet (p. 332.) the road turns to the l., away from that to Bagnères de Luchon (R. 87.), and crosses the Garonne by a brick bridge, nearly opposite the influx of the Ariège, and afterwards runs along the l. bank of that river.

26 Viviers.

Near Beccarest is the seat of Marshal Clausel; and a little higher up is Cintegabelle, where Lord Hill passed the Ariège in 1814.

21 Saverdun, a town of 3,000 inhab., was the birth-place of Pope Benedict XII.; he was the son of a baker or miller. At Mazères, a little to the E. of our road, Gaston de Foix, Duc de Nemours, the hero of the battle of Ravenna, was born, 1489. Crossing the Ariège, by a bridge at Saverdun, the road ascends its rt. bank to 15 Pamiers, a cheerful and pretty town, has a population of 6000 souls, a cathedral, surmounted by an octagonal Gothic tower of brick, spared by Mansard when he rebuilt the nave in the style of the 17th century, and several promenades; one, near the church, looks out upon the distant Pyrenees. About 12 m. W. of this the philosopher Bayle, author of the Dictionary, was born, 1647, in the obscure village of Carla le Comte.

The road still runs along the rt. bank of the river; the valley contracts in width, and increases in beauty.

19 Foix (Inns: Rocher de Foix:—Poste), the ancient capital of the Comté de Foix, is now the chef lieu of the Department of L'Ariège, which is nearly coequal with the Comté de Foix. It is one of the smallest chef lieux in France, as its population does not exceed 4,857. It has a very picturesque site, at the junction of a stream called the Larget with the Ariège. "It fills up the mouth of the valley, here narrow and bounded by precipitous hills, and lines either bank of the rapid river, whilst an isolated rock, rising from amidst the houses, sustains the ancient castle of the Counts of Foix, who resisted with such invincible courage the attacks of the kings of France and Arragon, and whose line terminated with the chivalrous Gaston. It is known by the name of Les Tours, an appropriate one, as its lofty towers, built of a coarse whitish marble, and preserved unstained by the dryness of the climate, stand prominent. Part, also, of the ancient ramparts have resisted time's decay; and the antique character of many of the houses, together with 'the magic of a name,' have thrown a colouring over it that makes it, although now unimportant and remote, a spot interesting to the tourist."—J.

The castle, now converted into a gaol, and much injured by modern buildings, is approached by a very narrow, steep path, bending, with most abrupt turns, along the edge of the precipice. Of its 3 fine towers, all of different ages and all anterior to the 15th century, the tallest, or donjon, 136 ft. high, is also the oldest, having been built, 1362, by Gaston Phœbus Count of Foix: it commands a fine view from its top. Simon de Montfort in vain besieged this stronghold, in 1210, during the wars of the Albigenses; and at a later period, 1272, Philippe le Hardi, unable to take it by other means, began to undermine the rocky pedestal, with the intention of toppling it over, together with the fortress on the top of it! Such, at least, is the popular tale; and though there seems little possibility that such a threat could have been accomplished in days when gunpowder was unknown, it had the effect of inducing the garrison to surrender.

An elegant building of the 15th century, at the foot of the rock, serves as Palais de Justice.

The prefecture was originally part of the abbey of St. Volusien suppressed at the Revolution. The church of St. Volusien, rebuilt by Roger II. Comte de Foix, is a heavy Gothic building.

A considerable trade in iron, the staple of the Department Ariège, derived from the mines of La Rancié, in the Vicdessos, is carried on here. The metal is embarked on the Ariège at Autrerive, below St. Foix, for exportation.

Diligence hence to Toulouse.

The valley above this is bare of trees, but productive in corn and wine; the vine itself being frequently planted on the heaps of boulder stones cleared away from the fields, where they are otherwise so numerous as to hinder cultivation. Tarascon, a smaller town than Foix (1555 inhab.), having also its ancient castle on a rock above it, stands at the point of convergence of several valleys: that of Vicdessos, in which the iron mines of La Rancié are situated, traversed by a carriage road as far as Sens; that of Saurat (near the entrance of which is the fine cave of Bédeillac), up which runs a carriage road to St. Girons, by the Col de Portet and town of Massat (1000 inhabitants), and that of the Ariège.

The valley of Vicdessos is rendered one of the most industrious in the Pyrenees by its iron mines and works. It is farther embellished by the neat houses and gardens of the iron masters and miners, and by several picturesque old castles, among which that of Méglos is very conspicuous. The mines of Rancié, situated 460 ft. above the village of Sem, reached by a difficult path in zigzags which takes an hour to surmount, have been worked for many ages, but without a proper system, and it is supposed that the supply of ore will be exhausted in 20 years. The ore is chiefly the hydrate and carbonate of iron, and is very rich, often yielding 60 per cent.; but as it requires to be brought down from the mine on mule back, and to be transported often 40 or 50 miles to the furnace, and as the fuel (charcoal) must be sought for in many situations from a like distance, the metal produced is very dear, in spite of the cheapness of labour. Yet nearly 60 furnaces are supplied from hence in the department of Ariège alone. The iron ore is found deposited in caverns, veins, and hollows within the strata of a limestone rock, belonging apparently to the lower jura limestone (lias) formation, and within a short distance of the fundamental granite. The ore has been worked horizontally to a depth of 300 metres, and vertically to a height of 600 metres. Owing to the unskilfulness, want of concert, and heedlessness of the miners, the ore has been extracted without any regard to economy or safety of life; the roofs and walls of the galleries and chambers excavated, having no proper support, are constantly giving way in consequence, and serious loss of life has frequently attended these éboulements. Many of the galleries leading into the mines have been blocked up by the ruins. At the village of Vic de Sos, which is surrounded by furnaces (forges), there is a clean inn. There is a path up the Val de Sallix, over the mountain pass called Pont d'Aulus, into the Val d'Ercè, and by Aulus and Oust to St. Girons.

A little more than a mile above Tarascon lie the Bains d'Ussat, a group of lodging and bath-houses, &c., including two large and comfortable hotels (Des Voyageurs close to the road, and L'Etablissment on the opposite side of the river), which the traveller may conveniently make his head-quarters when exploring the neighbouring valleys. They stand shaded by trees, within a few yards of the river, at a point where the valley is closed by mountain walls of limestone, barely allowing a few box bushes to take root in their crevices, but traversed by numerous caverns, in some of which fossil bones have been found. The cave on the l. bank of the river, above the Hôtel des Voyageurs, is of considerable extent, requiring an hour to reach its extremity. The waters are warm, acidulous, and, when administered in baths, are said to have a calming effect over the nervous system and are much used by females. The baths are hollows excavated in the ground, lined with slate, filled naturally by the water rising from beneath.

The high road runs up the l. bank of the Ariège, but there is a path along the rt. from Ussat to Tarascon. Above Tarascon the vale of the Ariège makes an abrupt bend to the E., round the N. base of the Mont St. Barthélemy, one of the loftiest of this portion of the chain of the Pyrenees, whose top, surmounted by snows and glaciers, appears, from time to time, domineering over the upper valley on the l. The Pont de Gudane carries the road over the stream of the Aston, descending from the lofty and snowy range separating France from Andorre. Numerous old ruined castles, built originally to command the valley, or defend the frequented passage through it into Catalonia, occur at intervals, rising on peaked eminences above the valley; but the largest and most lordly and picturesque of all is that of Lordat, near Cabannes; its origin is attributed to the Moors or Goths. Iron works in equal number alternate with these feudal remains; thus the romantic associations of former times combine with the active industry of the present to add an interest to a valley which derives so many attractions besides from the beauties of nature. Its ancient inhabitants were called Tectosages, from the sagum, or cloak, which they wore, which has descended to the present generation, who, by a curious coincidence, still designate it by the same name, in their patois, "un sayo."

Ax, 13 m. above Ussat. — Inns: Hotel d'Espagne: — Hotel de France: — both extremely dirty.

Ax is a town of 2000 inhabitants, prettily situated, amidst granitic mountains, at the junction of 3 valleys, out of which issue 3 mountain torrents, whose streams combine, in or near the town, to form the river Ariège.

In the name Ax it is easy to discover the Latin Aquæ, derived from the hot, sulphureous, springs which burst out on all sides; indeed there appears to be a natural kettle of boiling water under the town. More than 30 hot sources issue forth in different parts of it, varying in temperature from 113° to 168° of Fahrenheit; and in order to obtain cold one must resort to the river, and even it, in some parts, is rendered tepid by hot springs rising in its very bed: the snow rests but a few instants on a soil so thoroughly heated from below. Besides the application of the waters to baths, of which there are 2 or 3 establishments, and for drinking, it is turned to various domestic and economic purposes by the inhabitants, who wash not only their linen, but a vast quantity of wool in its tepid streams. The town itself is a miserable collection of dirty lanes, the only considerable buildings being the hotels and hospitals, one of which has recently been constructed by government for military patients. Near the hospital is an ancient bath, established in 1200, and still called Basin des Ladres, or Lepers' Basin.

The road up the valley ceases shortly before reaching Merens, a poor village; beyond it the mountains close in and form a long, gloomy defile; it afterwards expands into an open, stony, and uninteresting tract. A very rough and steep path leads to Hospitalet (12 m. from Ax), a journey of 3½ hours on horseback. This is a poor hamlet, but has a small inn. 1½ hour's ride above this is the pass or col over the mountain, called Port de Puymaurins, upon which a custom-house is planted. Close to this pass, on the W., begins the territory of Andorre, a small neutral state between France and Spain, which has been allowed by its powerful neighbours, partly through its insignificance and poverty, to maintain an independent existence, under a republican form of government, for six centuries since the days of Charlemagne, resembling, in this respect, the republic of San Marino in Italy. It is shut in by high mountains on all sides but the S., where the river Embalire issues out towards the Spanish town of Urgel. Its population amounts to about 15,000, and its capital, Andorre, numbers about 2000. It is governed by a council of 24, a syndic, and 2 viguiers, or magistrates, appointed, one by the king of France, who, as protector of Andorre, receives 960 fr. of tribute yearly, the other by the bishop of Urgel. It consists of 3 valleys, hemmed in by grand mountains of great elevation: its productions are limited nearly to wood and iron; and from the sale of these (and from smuggling) the inhabitants are enabled to purchase corn and other necessaries, which their barren and lofty country refuses to yield. For the traveller there is no accommodation; and he that ventures hither, if he be not prepared to sleep in the open air, with some risk of starving, should carry letters with him from persons of authority at Ax to some of the wealthy proprietors. The only English traveller who has given an account of Andorre, derived from a personal acquaintance with the country, is the Honourable Erskine Murray.

After passing the crest of the great chain by the Port de Puymaurins the path descends the S. slope, through a very wild valley, strewn with rocks, passing the hamlets of Porté and Porta, near which a path strikes off to the rt., up a minor valley, into Andorre. Between Porta and Courbassil is the old ruined castle, after which the vale is named, called Tour du Carol, built, according to popular tradition, by the Moors; but after the conquest of this country and their expulsion from it by Charlemagne, the towers were christened Carol, after him. They occupy a very picturesque position, on the top of an immense isolated mass of granite, rising in the midst of this narrow and rugged valley. Beyond Courbassil is the village called Tour de Carol, situated within a mile of the Spanish frontier, which is marked neither by stream nor mountain, but is a mere imaginary line at this point. About 2 m. within it lies the Spanish town of Puycerda, 13 m. from Hospitalet. See HAND-BOOK FOR SPAIN.

The road hence to Perpignan, by Mont Louis and the Valley of the Tech, is described in R. 98.

ROUTE 98. *

EASTERN PYRENEES. — PERPIGNAN TO MONT LOUIS AND PUYCERDA, BY THE VALLEYS OF THE TET AND TECH. — ASCENT OF THE CANIGOU.

About 47 Eng. m.

A post road as far as Olette, but not always provided with horses.

The vale of the Tet, up whose rt. bank our road ascends, is flattened down and absorbed in the great plain of Rousillon, near Perpignan, and it is not until after leaving behind, at some distance,

24 Ille, a walled town of 3000 inhabitants, that the road enters fairly among the mountains. From Vinça, another town, the ascent is gradual to

18 Prades. This town of 3013 inhab. possesses a tolerable inn, but is in no-wise remarkable, except for its pretty situation on the rt. bank of the Tet, in a valley abounding in corn, wine, and fruits, vineyards terraced up the hill-sides, maize, and hemp fields. "The banks on the rt. and l. are spotted with villages, and clustered with old châteaux." Prades lies at the N. base of the Canigou, whose summit may be reached by 8 or 9 hours' walk up the vale of Lentilla. (See p. 344.)

There is, however, another and more interesting way of approaching the Canigou, pursuing the high road into Spain (R. 94.) as far as Boullou (22 kilom.), where it turns to the S.W. up the Valley of the Tech. At Ceret, 6 m. up, the river is spanned by an ancient bridge of a single bold arch, 144 ft. in the opening, whose construction is attributed to the Visigoth kings, but which in reality is not older than 1352. It is very narrow, and the arch thins out towards the keystone. Ceret, a town of 3000 inhabitants, is about a mile farther; and 7 m. above it is the small fort of Arles les Bains, constructed, 1617, by Louis XIV., on the top of an eminence, from whose base issue hot sulphureous springs of a temperature of 157° Fahr. They were known to the Romans, and the vaulted chamber in which one of them is still received is of their building, but is remarkable only for its solidity. Between this and the town of Arles are some iron forges, where the ore derived from mines situated high up on the N. flank of the Canigou, and brought hither on mules' backs, is smelted. The Tech is again crossed before entering the town; it has 2000 inhabitants. The church is ancient; the front and portal enriched with curious carving, in white marble, dated from 1045. On the l. of the façade, under a sort of shed, is a very ancient sarcophagus resting on 4 feet, filled with miracle-working water which is never exhausted, and is sold at 20 sous the vial full. It owes its virtues to the coffin having enclosed the relics of two saints, which were brought from Rome to free the neighbourhood of Arles from dragons, lions, &c., which then infested it! Adjoining the church is a cloister, a range of pointed arches on slender pillars, of the 13th century, without a roof.

About 10 m. distant among the mountains, and approached by steep paths, from which, however, fine views are obtained of the Canigou, is

* See note to Route 97.

he Romanesque church of Coustouges, which may interest the antiquary, as it is supposed to date from the 9th century.

8 m. above Arles, in the Valley of the Tech, lies Pratz de Mollo, a frontier town of 4000 inhabitants, surrounded by old-fashioned fortifications, but commanded on the height above by the efficient Fort Legarde, constructed from the plans of Vauban. A mule path runs hence over the mountains to the Spanish town Compredon.

The ascent of the Canigou, which projects forward from the great chain of the Pyrenees, and rises, almost isolated, above the plain of Rousillon, to a height of 9,141 ft., was made by Mr. E. Murray from Arles. He followed the mule paths leading to the iron mines, as far as the old tower of Batères, standing on a ridge whence you look down upon both valleys of the Tech and Tet; and after 3 or 4 hours scrambling from this ridge, "up steps, along precipices, and over snow wreaths," attained the summit; whence the eye surveys the plain of Rousillon, and the coast of the Mediterranean, with Perpignan on its borders; the valleys bordering on the Tet; the mountain range of Catalonia on the S.; and on the W., the chain separating Rousillon from the Vale of the Ariège. "The ascent or descent to Valmania is so difficult and dangerous as to deter many an aspirant from attempting to surmount it; but no one, with a tolerable pair of legs, good lungs, and not unaccustomed to mountain climbing, ought to be discouraged: should he succeed, he will find himself amply repaid for his toil and fatigue." Valmania is a hamlet composed of a few miners' houses, and a very humble cabaret which will afford night shelter, and fresh eggs, with vin du pays, in a wild situation under an old ruined castle. The iron mines occur near the junction of a limestone (of the age of the chalk) with the granite. It is a 5 hours' walk hence to Prades, descending the Vale of the Lentilla, through picturesque scenery, and joining the high road near Vinca.

Above Praes the plain of the Tet contracts into a valley: and, after passing the old castle of Ria, the cradle of a noble line, whence came the Counts of Arragon and Barcelona, narrows to a gorge at Villefranche, a town fortified by Vauban, but not strong, because commanded by the neighbouring heights, which squeeze it in as it were, and leave barely space for its two narrow streets, and the river below. In the vale of Corneilla, which penetrates S. from this into the flanks of the Canigou, lies Vernet, a watering-place, supplied by some of the numerous hot springs bursting out in all parts of the Pyrenæan chain; and above it the ruined abbey St. Martin de Canigou.

The high road crosses the Tet, by a bridge, on quitting Villefranche, and terminates soon after, giving place to a mere mule path.

16 Olette. 2 m. farther the cultivation of the vine ceases; the valley becomes sterile and wild; the road, ascending more rapidly, traverses a narrow defile, guarded and closed, in ancient times, by walls, towers, and gateways, whose ruins still remain. To this succeeds an open expanse, a table land of green meadow, a pastoral scene surrounded by fir-clad heights; and in the midst stands, at a distance of 10 m. above Olette, Mont Louis (a tolerable Inn), a frontier fortress (442 inhab.), built 1684 by Vauban to guard the passage from Spain.

The town consists of 8 short streets, in straight lines, crossing one another at rt. angles, surmounted by the citadel, whose casemates afford shelter for 800 men.

A road runs N. from this to Carcassonne (R. 93.), and a path over the mountains by Langles into the vale of the Ariège.

About 2 m. from Mont Louis, and at a height of 350 metres above it, 1559 metres above the sea-level, is the pass over the mountains, called Col de la Perche. The path from it descends into the basin-shaped valley of the Cerdagne Française, traversed by numerous streams, the chief of which is the Seyre or Segre, a tributary of the Ebro. The territory of France has here been pushed, for some distance, down the S. slope of the backbone of the Pyrenees, in the same manner that the Spaniards occupy the head of the Vale of the Garonne, on the N. of the chain, (R. 87.). 5 m. below the Col is Saillagousa, a town of 400 inhabitants; 2 m. farther is Llivia; and 3 m. more carry the traveller across the frontier to the first Spanish town, Puycerda, (10 m. from Mont Louis). See HAND-BOOK FOR TRAVELLERS IN SPAIN.

The road from Puycerda to Toulouse is described in Route 97.

SECTION V.

CENTRAL FRANCE. — BERRI. — AUVERGNE. — VIVARAIS. — ARDECHE. — CANTAL. — BOURBONNAIS. — LYONNAIS. — THE CEVENNES.

ROUTE		PAGE
103	Orleans to Bourges and Clermont	350
105	Paris to Lyons. — Route de Bourbonnais, by Fontainebleau, Montargis, Nevers, Moulins. — The Baths of Vichy	355
106	Paris to Lyons. — Route de Bourgogne, by Sens, Auxerre, Arnay le Duc, Châlons-sur-Saône, and Mâcon.—Descent of the Saône, from Châlons to Lyons	376
107	Paris to Châlons-sur-Saône, by Auxerre and Autun	384
109	Moulins to Clermont and Le Puy. — Volcanoes of Auvèrgne	386
110	Clermont to Mont Dore les Bains	400
112	Clermont to Lyons, by Thiers	404
114	Clermont to Toulouse, by the Cantal and Aurillac	405
116	Clermont to Toulouse, by St. Flour, the Baths of Chaudes Aigues, Rodez, and Alby	409
118	Lyons to Le Puy, Aubenas, Mende, and Nismes.—Railway to St. Etienne. — The Cevennes	413
119	Roanne to Valence on the Rhone, by St. Etienne and Annonay. — Railway from Roanne to St. Etienne	419
121	Valence to Nismes, by Privas, Aubenas, the Volcanoes of the Ardèche, and Alais.—Railway from Alais to Nismes. — The Cevennes	423

CENTRAL FRANCE.

General View of the Country.

Among the crowds of English travellers who annually roll along the high road from Paris to Lyons on their way to Italy, complaining of the dull monotony of France, how few have taken the trouble to ascertain what beauties and curiosities were presented by the districts which they almost skirted with their carriage wheels — Auvergne, the Vivarais, the Ardèche and Dauphiné. Auvergne, little known even to the French themselves, except among men of science, in whose works it is minutely described, is best approached by quitting the high road to Lyons at Moulins, and ascending the valley of the Allier to Clermont. The road thither, and for some distance beyond, traverses a country contrasting remarkably with that left behind at Moulins in varied surface, fertility, and abundance of foliage. It is thickly inhabited, and sprinkled over with towns and villages, not hidden, but planted on the road side or on the top of conspicuous eminences, where they alternate with ruined castles. The chief source of interest, however, in Auvergne consists in its extinct volcanoes, which of themselves deserve to attract visitors from all quarters of the globe. Even the distant outline of these commanding mountain groups marks them as something uncommon, while on a nearer approach their structure and composition furnish undeniable proof of their extraordinary origin. Many of them swell into domes, showing that others are formed into craters as regular and perfect as those of Etna and Vesuvius, assuming the shape of a funnel or inverted cone. In many instances the lava streams may be traced from the very lips of the crater out of which they originally flowed for miles over the country, capping the hill tops and filling up the valleys.

"The earth hath bubbles as the water has;"

Castles of the feudal ages, dismantled by the levelling politician Richelieu, or by the unbridled fury of the Revolutionists, abound in Central France and contribute to adorn the landscape. In the volcanic country they are usually perched on a platform of basalt crowning some conical peak, which is the relic of a great bed of the same rock which once overspread the country. These ready-made pedestals, from their isolated position and precipitous sides, afforded security for property in troublous times, and impunity for violence and rapine.

The best head-quarters for exploring Auvergne is Clermont, at the foot of the Puy (or pic) de Dome, whence numerous excursions may be made over the Phlegræan fields of France, including a visit to Mont Dore les Bains, situated within another volcanic chain, the Monts Dores. Further S. lie the volcanic groups of the Cantal, between Murat and Aurillac, whose scenery is striking and very peculiar; of Velay, in the midst of which stands the town of Le Puy, one of the most singular and picturesque in France; and of the Ardèche or Vivarais. Both the Cantal and Le Puy are accessible by good roads from Clermont, but there is a want of communication between them, and a carriage can only proceed from one to the other by a long detour, while the Ardèche is accessible by good roads only from the Rhone. The pedestrian and geologist will find his way readily across the country.

Aubenas, in the Ardèche, has a good inn, where travellers may put up while exploring its basaltic causeways, its domes of ashes, and craters of scoriæ, on which the chesnut luxuriates. The pedestrian and equestrian can pass from Le Puy, by Langogne, direct to Thueyts and Montpezat. (R. 121.)

Bordering upon the Ardèche to the S. extends the wild mountain chain of the Cevennes, which may be termed a moral extinct volcano, the last strong hold of persecuted Protestantism in France, "Le Desert," as its own inhabitants called it, while further in allusion to the children of Israel, they styled themselves "Les Enfans de Dieu." The Cevennes fill a large part of the departments of La Lozère and Gard; and, by tracing up to their sources on the map the rivers Tarn, Gardon, Vidourle, and Herault, the reader will ascertain the theatre of that dire struggle, in the course of which 30,000 Cevenols perished in battle or on the scaffold; and a much larger number of royal troops fell, between November 1702 and December 1704. The boundaries of the Hautes Cevennes are precisely marked by the lozenge-shaped outline formed by the head waters, or forks, of the Tarn, and the two Gardons, that of Andouze and that of Alais. The Basses Cevennes lie S. of this, between the Gardon d'Andouze and the Vidourle. These mountains are a natural citadel, an inextricable labyrinth of gorges and defiles well fitted for desultory warfare, where a handful of bold defenders could hold out against a host; with mountain peaks and ridges for camps; passes and gorges for ambuscades; forests to rally in, in the event of defeat; and for escape and refuge, mountain paths, trodden only by the wild goat, and caves haunted by the fox; but which the Cevenols converted into arsenals and storehouses. The best disciplined troops availed nothing in storming these bulwarks of nature; and army after army sent forth by the bigot Louis XIV. at the instigation of the Jesuits was annihilated by rude peasants, and their leaders were recalled with disgrace. But the miseries of war, the assassinations, burnings, pillagings, slaughter of females and infants, were not confined to these mountains: they spread far and wide down into the plain, to the ocean on the S., to the Rhone on the E., and N. beyond the Ardèche: the incursions of the peasants in their forays, pouring down from the hills, repeatedly spread consternation up to the very walls of Nismes, Uzés, Alais, and Montpellier; and their leaders in disguise boldly penetrated into the interior of these towns when in search of provisions or intelligence. And who were these chiefs? Simple peasants, shepherds, labourers, carders of wool, and weavers, who exercised the double office of military leaders and prophets; a singular compound of psalm-singing and throat-cutting, combining the strongest religious fanaticism with much worldly vanity, love of fine dresses, and of plunder; and, above all, the most dauntless courage. One or two had served as soldiers in the ranks, during the war of the Alps; but this could not have given them that skill in generalship which enabled them repeatedly to bring their wild hordes to face troops four, six, or eight times more numerous, not only in the mountains, in advantageous positions, but also in the plain, with so much skill as to call forth the admiration even of Marshal Villars. The story of the poor peasants of the Cevennes differs but little from that of the Covenanters in Scotland, except that the oppression which the Cevenols endured was more cruel. It affords a remarkable proof how fruitless are the efforts of bigoted persecution and tyrannic cruelty, even when backed by unlimited power, in procuring passive submission. When, in an evil hour for France, Louis XIV., listening to the advice of Louvois and Bossuet, backed by the Jesuits, revoked the Edict of Nantes, made it a crime to pray except according to his own religion, banished the reformed pastors to distant lands, pulled down the churches, and let loose the dragonnades to torture the people into conformity, a strange fermentation was produced in the public mind, heated by the perusal and misapplication of particular parts of the Bible. Prophets and prophetesses began to spring up among the Protestant community. That wild enthusiasm, bordering on insanity, which roused up the Maid of Orleans to resist the oppression of the English, here seems to have developed itself among a whole community. The disease of prophesying seems first to have broken out in Dauphiné, but soon spread, like an epidemic, across the Rhone, and a large proportion of the cases were mere boys and girls, and all untaught peasants. The ignorant peasantry, believing the ecstasies of these preachers to be inspired by the Holy Ghost, flocked from far and near to listen, and, deprived of the sober guidance of their own exiled pastors, imbibed the fervour of fanaticism. The spirit of resistance began to show itself, drawn forth by the recital of their wrongs, the denunciation of their tyrants, and the assurance of support from heaven: conventicles were held, in spite of the terrors of prison, torture, and the soldiery, in the open air among rocks and caverns. The desire of vengeance on the instrument of their suffering, a bigoted priest who had acted the part which Archbishop Sharp is supposed to have done in Scotland, and who was assassinated by a fanatic French Balfour of Burley, was the signal for denial of mercy on the part of the ministers of Louis, and of open rebellion on the side of the Cevenols. Hereupon commenced the insurrection of the Camisards, as the persecuted outcasts of the Cevennes were called by their enemies, it is supposed from the white shirt (in Languedocian, Camisa) which they wore over their clothes to distinguish themselves. The whole of the Protestant communities were organized chiefly by the leaders Roland and Cavalier; troops were levied from the different parishes, and each furnished its quota to the ranks and the commissariat or a contribution of money; and losses in the ranks were filled up by fresh levies. The Cevenol force never exceeded 3000 in arms at one time, and was divided into three brigades under different chiefs, each of whom had his own post and district (generally near his own home) among the hills. Such troops and commanders, intoxicated by the wild harangues of prophets and prophetesses who accompanied the expeditions on horseback, and made their hearers believe that their bodies should be as stone against sword and musket, and who led them into action with some inspiriting psalm, produced acts of most dauntless daring and prowess and a total disregard of the numbers brought against them. The seizures, tortures, executions, by breaking on the wheel and burning alive (the common modes of punishing a Camisard), led to reprisals on their part, to murders of priests, sacking and burning of popish churches. Yet, horrible as were the acts of vengeance and violence committed by the Cevenols, they were equalled, if not surpassed, by the crimes, plunder, and murder of women and children, perpetrated by the ruffian soldiery in the pay of Louis, especially by the guerilla bands called Florentins. The royal troops carried fire and sword into every village; and the unscrupulous generals and governors of Louis acting in Languedoc, resorted to the atrocious measure of devastating the whole of the Upper Cevennes; destroying by fire and axe 400 hamlets and villages, and driving away the inhabitants. The Camisards did not attempt to defend their homesteads, but retorted by carrying fire and sword over the fertile plain, and spreading terror into the cities of Nismes and Montpellier. The rebellion was at length arrested, less by any successes gained against the Protestants in the field, by the number of troops employed against them, and the skill and generalship of the four marshals of France dispatched in turn to take the command, than by the cautious policy of one of them, Marshal Villars, in cajoling and bribing the Cevenol leaders.

Though the struggle of the Cevenols ended in failure — though the tolerance of their faith, according to the Edict of Nantes, the chief object for which they contended, was denied them — though the insurrection was followed, not by alleviation of their wrongs, but by persecution continued for half a century, — yet these misguided sufferers, who bled upon their native mountains, who were broken alive on the wheel, burnt alive on the pile, tormented in dungeons, or pined away their lives in gaol, gave a terrible lesson to tyranny and religious bigotry, and shook the "grand monarque" on his throne. Even at the present time their country has not recovered from the desolation inflicted by the destruction of its houses and temples. Many parishes, destitute of places of worship, meet for prayer in the open air, and the traveller in passing through them may be arrested by the distant sounds of psalmody, or in passing an abrupt turn in his road may come upon a congregation of peasants attentively listening to the pastor, who holds forth from the top of a rock, or from beneath the shade of a venerable tree. Many families trace their descent from the chiefs of the insurrection. The people are poor, and the greater part of their country, especially the Upper Cevennes, is not easily accessible for want of roads. There is but little traffic along the two highways from Mende to Nismes (R. 118.), and from Aubenas to Alais (R. 121.), which skirt or traverse it. Manufactures, however, are gradually creeping up its remote valleys from the S.; and the railway completed between Nismes and Alais, and the neighbouring coal field, cannot fail to give an impulse to traffic and commerce. The traveller will find little picturesque beauty, owing to the bare aridity of the hills, the want of foliage and of verdure.

Its history and ancient associations form its chief interest. An Englishman may be willing to be reminded, as he traverses this district of former strife, that many of the Irish officers and soldiers who fought at the battle of the Boyne on the side of James II., and afterwards accompanied him to France, were employed here against the Protestants; that the Cevenol leaders were encouraged by the ministers of William III. and Queen Anne, and received promises of assistance, but promises only; that on two occasions British fleets, under Sir Cloudesley Shovel, approached the coast of Languedoc to support the insurrection with troops and arms, but failed in effecting their purpose; that the band of Cevenol insurgents expelled from France by the intrigues and negotiations of Villars was formed into a regiment under their chief Cavalier, and fought in the English army commanded by Peterborough in Spain, at Almanza, where they were almost cut to pieces by their own countrymen; and that Cavalier, their leader, died a pensioner in Chelsea Hospital.

A full account of the war of the Cevennes, and the events which led to it, will be found in Peyrat, Histoire des Pasteurs du Desert, Paris, 1842.

For the geology of Auvergne, Velay, and the Vivarais, there is no work so good as Scrope's Central France, with illustrations from the author's sketches. Consult also the French works of MM. Lecocq and Bouillé, and of M. Bertrand de Doux; not forgetting our own countrywoman Miss Costello's Summer in Auvergne. Merimée's Notes d'un Voyage en Auvergne contains the most complete account of the monuments of that district. There is an admirable Map of Auvergne by Desmarest.

ROUTE 103.

ORLEANS TO BOURGES AND CLERMONT.

112 kilom. = 69½ Eng. m. to Bourges.

A railroad is projected.

Diligences daily.

This road is the same as Route 70, as far as 80 Vierzon. About a mile out of the town, on the banks of the Canal, is the village Les Forges, consisting of very extensive furnaces, where the iron of Berry is wrought in large quantity.

The post road passes through

18 Beauregard, having on the rt., near to the river Yèvre, the town of Mehun, where a fragment, consisting of 2 machicolated towers, alone remains of the castle in which Charles VII. spent much of the early part of his reign in indolence, and at last ended his days; allowing himself to die of starvation, through the fear of being poisoned by his son, afterwards Louis XI., 1461. The demolition of the building has been chiefly effected since 1812, down to which time the chamber of the king, and that of his mistress, Agnes Sorel, were still pointed out.

14 Bourges.—Inns: H. de France: — La Boule d'Or, near the Diligences:— Le Bœuf Couronné.

Bourges, anciently capital of Berry, and now of the department of the Cher, is situated nearly in the centre of France, upon a considerable eminence, rising abruptly out of an uninteresting and flat country, watered by the river Auron, and has 20,000 inhab. It possesses little trade and no extensive manufacture; though some cloth is woven and some iron ore is smelted in it. Its streets may be divided into 2 classes: those of very ancient houses with gables facing outwards, many of them having frame fronts of timber, generally occupied by shops; and streets of dead walls and portes cochères, denoting the habitations of families of independent fortune, and in easy circumstances, in which class Bourges abounds. The number of silversmiths is remarkable in a provincial town. The highest platform of the hill on which the town is built is occupied by the Cathedral of St. Etienne, a colossal and magnificent edifice, one of the finest in France, conspicuous, with its 2 solid towers, far and near. Its W. façade presents a row of no less than 5 deeply recessed portals, all ornamented in a style of peculiar richness and originality with sculpture; that in the centre, higher than the rest, is decorated, above the carved wood doors, with a bas-relief, of admirable execution, representing the Last Judgment. In the centre, Christ seated amidst Archangels, and the Virgin and St. John on either side, on their knees: below, on his rt., the Good led to the Gate of Paradise by St. Peter; on the l. the Wicked seized by Demons and hurled into a fiery Cauldron, which divers Imps are exciting with the Bellows: 6 rows of niches, filled with figures of the Angelic Choir, Saints, Patriarchs, &c., line this deep porch on either side. The varied expression of the countenances, the elevated character of many, the easy flow of the drapery, and the good execution of the whole, bespeak the work of an eminent sculptor, but his name, as well as that of the architect of the building, is unknown. The portals have been lately restored, with great care and skill, in a species of clay. The injuries are attributed to the Protestants; but if they be the result of a popular commotion, and not of the mere progress of time, they are wonderfully slight. The other portals have smaller reliefs, from scriptural and legendary stories, and fewer niches, but equally deserve examination. Those on the rt. of the spectator represent the Stoning of St. Stephen, and the Acts of St. Ursin; on the l. the Death of the Virgin, and St. Ursin and St. Just preaching the Gospel in Berry. The foliage between the mouldings can scarcely be surpassed for delicacy.

The oldest part of the church is the lateral doorways on the N. and S. sides; they are circular arches, adorned with florid Norman ornaments and statues, in a stiff style, dating, probably, from the 12th century. The N. door is covered by a projecting porch of later date. The N. and most perfect tower was founded 1508, and finished 1538. Its builder was Guil. Pellevoisin: it is 199 ft. high; it is called the butter tower, because built with the money raised from indulgences to eat butter in Lent. The S. tower is inferior in elegance.

The interior consists of one long and vast parallelogram, without transept, but, to make amends, provided with double aisles on each side, those next the centre being 65 ft. high, and furnished, like it, with triforium and clerestory, worthy of a cathedral nave, extending all round the choir. Beyond the outer aisle are 18 chapels. The vaulted roof, 117 ft. high in the centre, is supported by 60 piers, with capitals in the early English style, presenting the most varied and striking perspective.

One of the chapels is said to have been built by the celebrated jeweller, Jacques Cœur, and his son John, 88*th Archbishop* of Bourges, 1446. The sculpture of the portal of the sacristy is very delicate. One of the chief boasts of this cathedral is the quantity, excellence, and good preservation of the painted glass of the windows of the choir and chapels. They include specimens of the art from the 13th down to 17th century. The oldest, confined chiefly to a beautiful arrangement of patterns, may be called a transparent Mosaic, unsurpassed in the beauty of the colour; these were succeeded, in the 15th and 16th centuries, by glass pictures, groups, and single figures, well drawn, and also of good colouring. The chapels containing the finest examples of the latter state of the art are those of Jacques Cœur, St. Loup, St. Denis: those in the chapels of Tullier and Coppin are the work of Lècuyer, an artist of Bourges, (d. 1556). One of the most modern specimens is a beautiful Ascension of the Virgin, given, 1619, by the Maréchal de Montigny, whose portrait, with that of his wife, is seen in the corner below.

In the crypt, an early Pointed structure, running below the choir, in a semicircle, is deposited the monument of Jean le Magnifique, Duc de Berri, son, brother, and uncle of kings, and nephew of Charles V. of France, erected by his own nephew, Charles VII. His effigy, in marble, of good execution, was brought hither from the Sainte Chapelle, which he built, now destroyed. Here are also the effigies, in marble, of the Maréchal Montigny and his lady, and a statue of the Virgin, of good design.

Adjoining the cathedral, on the S., is the archeveché, a handsome edifice, in the Italian style, with gardens attached, traversed by fine avenues of limes; and a little way from it the Caserne d'Artillerie, an immense building, formerly the grande Seminaire, surrounded by numerous detached buildings, stables to accommodate the men and horses, of whom 800, with all their train and equipments, are commonly stationed here.

The city of Bourges is still surrounded by ramparts, converted, for the greater part of their extent, into a public promenade, and planted with trees. It was formerly defended by 60 watch towers, all of which have been demolished except 6 or 8. Two of these, behind the archeveché and cavalry barrack, opposite the promenade called the Cours Seraucourt, deserve notice, as being undoubtedly Roman. One is formed of huge blocks of stone, now much worn at the edges, a style of durable masonry (opus incertum) employed by the Romans in their great works; the other is of smaller stones, with layers of large tiles in bands: the substructure of the wall, as far as the garden of the préfecture, is of the same kind. These Roman relics are of some interest. Joseph Scaliger and D'Anville are satisfied that Bourges is the ancient Avaricum (named from the river Avara, now E'vre), chief town of the Bituriges (Berry), mentioned by Cæsar in his Commentaries (viii. 13.), "Oppidum quod erat maximum munitissimumque, in finibus Biturigum, et totius Galliæ urbs prope pulcherrima." On account of its importance and beauty it was the only city of the Celtic Gauls which they spared to burn to the ground, when, like the Russians in Moscow, they resorted to that expedient as a last resource to check the conquering armies of Julius Cæsar.

At the entrance of the Garden of the Préfecture, close to the Promenade de Seraucourt, is a Romanesque portal of the 11th century, removed from the Church of St. Ursin, now destroyed. It is a circular arch, enclosing curious sculptures in relief, representing the 12 Months of the Year, a Boar Hunt, &c., Scenes from Æsop's Fables, as the Stork and the Fox, a Fox drawn by Geese, of very good execution.

Next to the cathedral, the most interesting building is the Hotel de Ville, originally the private mansion of Jacques Cœur, a citizen of the town, a great capitalist and successful merchant and jeweller, and finance minister to Charles VII., who, after lending his master 200,000 gold crowns, was torn from his palace, cast into prison, and condemned to death and confiscation of his property, a sentence commuted by the king into perpetual banishment. The cause of his accusation and condemnation remain a mystery. The building, begun 1443, is in the late or florid Gothic style, of great magnificence, yet not overladen: the walls alone cost 135,000 livres. There is no uniformity of parts; no one wall or window corresponds with another; all is varied, yet all is harmonious. The entrance is flanked by a most elegant tourelle, and is surmounted by a projecting balcony, or open oriel, of elegant tracery. Two figures, sculptured in stone, on each side, are said to be the servants of Jacques Cœur, on the look out to warn him of danger from the officers of justice, but are more probably a mere freak of the architect. This elegant palace is distinguished, like many other French domestic edifices of the 15th century, by its circular cone-roofed towers, containing spiral staircases, its windows surmounted by flat arches, ornamented below with open tablets of quatrefoils, among which is introduced the punning device of Jacques Cœur, the heart, and the scallop shell of the pilgrim to St. James's Shrine. On a little Gothic balustrade between the outer gateway and its flanking turret the motto of Jacques Cœur, "A vaillants Cœurs rien impossible," is most elaborately carved in tall Gothic characters of stone. Over the doorways in the court are singular bas-reliefs: observe that on the left of the great entrance, and that over the kitchen. The chapel over the gateway deserves to be seen, but especially the upper part, divided from the lower by a modern floor, its groined roof being elegantly painted in fresco, probably by Italian artists, with angels in flowing robes of white upon a blue ground, representing the multitude of the angelic host, bearing scrolls, inscribed, "Gloria in excelsis Deo, et in terrâ pax," &c.: the figures are well foreshortened, and in good preservation. In the lower part of the chapel are 2 elegant niches, much blocked up. The rest of the interior has been sadly mutilated and altered, to fit it for becoming the law courts, stripped of panelling, cornices, and chimney-pieces, so that the chapel alone is now worth entering. This palace was appropriated as a residence to the youthful Condé, destined to become Le Grand Condé, while pursuing his studies at the Jesuits' College here.

The Caserne de Gendarmerie, in a street behind the Hôtel de Ville, not far off from it, was the house of Cujas, professor in the University, which existed here from 1465 to the Revolution. It is of brick, of very solid construction, in a style resembling the Tudor of England, built towards the end of the 16th century, and displays about its door, windows, and turrets, some fragments of elegant decoration.

The Convent of the Sœurs Bleus, in the Rue des Vieilles Prisons, originally the mansion of the family Lallemand, and built probably about 1512, has an irregular front, flanked by tourelles, gracefully decorated with arabesque patterns, bas-reliefs, &c., in the style of the Renaissance, which will please an architect. It contains a little family oratory, about 10 ft. by 15, surmounted by a roof of 3 stone slabs, divided into 30 compartments, each filled with some device, as a Globe on Fire, a Hand gathering a Chesnut, or other pattern, rebus, relief, or ornament, alternating with the letters R E, often repeated, most elaborately carved, but of which the meaning is difficult to explain. According to the popular story, Louis XI. (a native of Bourges) was baptised in this chapel; but the late style of architecture contradicts this. Bourges was the residence and refuge of Charles VII., at a time when three fourths of his kingdom of France belonged to the English, when he was little more, in fact, than "king of Bourges."

Bourges has a museum, a receptacle of antiquities, of various ages, and other curiosities, without order or arrangement. A series of 6 weeping figures (pleureuses), in alabaster, from some monument; a model of the Sainte Chapelle, mentioned above, now destroyed; an ebony cabinet, ornamented in the style of the Renaissance, from Agnes Sorel's castle, Bon-sire-aimé, and some portraits, including those of Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette, merit notice.

Bourges is the birth-place of Louis XI., and of Bourdaloue, one of the first pulpit orators of the French church.

It is at present the forced residence of Don Carlos, of Spain, who lives here under the surveillance of the police, never stirring abroad without an escort of gens-d'armes.

Diligences go hence daily to Paris by Orleans; to Tours by Chateauroux and Loches; to Toulouse by Limoges; to Nevers; to Clermont, and the Baths of Néris.

There is little to interest in the flat, but fertile, country across which we proceed by 18 Levet to Montlucon.

13 Jariole.

A little on one side of the road is the ruined Abbey of Noirlac, so named from a dark pool near it. It is now converted into a China manufactory, including The Church, a large and still perfect structure, and a good example of the transition Gothic of the latter part of the 13th century, 1189. The kitchen and refectory, supported on pillars, still remain, as well as the cloister.

13 St. Amand Montrond, a neat town of 6636 inhabitants, on the Marmande, about a mile from the rt. bank of the Cher. Only a few shapeless ruins remain of its castle, once an important stronghold belonging to the princes de Condé, in which the sickly infant who grew to be Le Grand Condé was nursed and reared. His heroic wife, the Princess Clemence de Maillé, after her escape from Chantilly, 1650, threw herself and her son into this castle, whence, after gathering around her the dependants and retainers of the house of Condé, she set forth to cross some of the wildest provinces of France in order to join the Dukes of Bouillon and La Rochefoucauld, and put herself at the head of the army of the Fronde, which kept possession of Bordeaux against Mazarin. Montrond, after enduring a siege of a whole year's duration, 1652, from the royal forces, was compelled to surrender to the Comte de Palluau, who levelled the fortifications. The last tower which remained standing has been pulled down, in order that the proprietor may make gardens and terraces on the site.

About 21 m. S.W. of St. Amand is the Château de Meillant, built 1511, for Charles, Seigneur de Chaumont, somewhat in the style of the house of Jacques Cœur at Bourges, with similar external ornaments, balustrades, and projecting towers to contain the snail shell stairs, but vastly inferior to it. The blazing hill, sculptured in various parts, is intended as a sculptured pun on the owner's name, Chauds Monts. The decorations of the interior are not supposed to be later than the 18th century. On the towers are sculptured figures of sentinels threatening all who approach, like those on the battlements of Alnwick.

The road from St. Amand is very agreeable, running by the side of the Cher. At Drevant, on its rt. bank, traversed by the road, extensive substructions of a theatre, and other Roman buildings, have been laid bare.

A branch of the Canal du Cher runs parallel with the Cher and the high road from St. Amand to Montlucon, and the coal mines of Commentry, where it terminates.

19 Meaulne.

16 Reugny (Dept. Allier.).

15 Montluçon (Inns: H. de France: — and de l'Ecu), a very ancient town of the province of the Bourbonnais, having 5400 inhabitants, picturesquely situated on the slope of a hill, whose base is washed by the Cher, and its summit crowned by a castle. During the middle ages it was a strong fortress; and, from its position near the frontier of the French king's domains, had often to sustain the attacks of the English. A part of its old walls, and their flanking watch towers, still remains, constructed with great solidity. The donjon, and a few towers on the summit of the hill, is all that remains of the castle of the Ducs de Bourbon, which commanded the town, as its ruins still command an extensive view.

A hilly and uninteresting road to

8 Néris (Inns: Grand Hotel: — H. Leopold), a watering place of considerable resort within a few years, but well known to the Romans, who must have had a magnificent establishment here, judging from the architectural fragments, — columns, friezes, foundations of walls, discovered from time to time. Yet it is only since 1821 that the French have begun a bath-house, which is not yet finished, and which, with several boarding houses attached to a poor village of 800 inhabitants, compose the place. The mineral waters are warm, alkaline, but nearly tasteless, so that the inhabitants employ them for culinary purposes and for drinking; they are furnished from 4 sources, one of which, La Source Nouvelle, burst forth, 1757, at the time of the earthquake at Lisbon. They are exclusively used for baths, being introduced into the houses. They resemble the spring of Schlangenbad, have the same unctuous feel to the touch, the same smoothing effect on the skin, and sedative influence on the nerves. It is usual to go to bed after taking the bath, in order to promote perspiration. There are also douche and mud baths, and 3 piscines, or public baths.

The very pretty promenade, or Jardin des Bains, occupies the site of an amphitheatre, built by the Romans for the recreation of visitors to these remote baths of Aquæ Neri, as Nèris was anciently called. Concentric terraces mark the stages on which the seats were placed; and traces remain of one of the passages which divided them into cunei or wedges. There are considerable fragments of walls.

The church is a very ancient Romanesque edifice, in the form of a basilica, ending in 3 apses. The arches in the nave are pointed, in the choir round. From the rude sculpture of the capitals, its date has been referred to the 11th century.

The country around is pleasing, and the situation very healthy.

The road to Clermont is carried through a wild hilly district, passing out of the coal formation into a country of primitive rocks shortly before reaching 18 Montaigu, a little town appropriately named from its site on a pointed hill, crowned by a castle, situated in the Dépt. Puy de Dome.

At Menat are quarries, whence tripoli or polishing slate is obtained: it is produced by the spontaneous combustion of iron pyrites among beds of bituminous clay. It contains impressions of vegetables, fish, and insects. Near this the road ascends a long and steep hill, commanding a very extensive view over the volcanic ranges of Auvèrgne, and near at hand looks down upon the Castle of Blot, seated amidst rugged rocks. The river Sioule is crossed before reaching 27 St. Pardoux. The very peculiar forms of the volcanic mountains of the Puy de Dome cannot fail to arrest attention.

We now enter the fertile plain of the Limagne d'Auvèrgne.

23 Riom } described in Route
15 Clermont } 109.

ROUTE 105.

PARIS TO LYONS. — ROUTE DU BOURBONNAIS, BY FONTAINEBLEAU, MONTARGIS, NEVERS, AND MOULINS. — THE BATHS OF VICHY.

462 kilom = 286½ Eng. m.

The Marseilles Malleposte follows this route daily, but only as far as Roanne, to which place it takes 31 hours.

Diligences go to Lyons in 48 hours. By the route de Bourgogne (R. 106.) 52 hours are required; and the traveller may enjoy a night's rest at Chalons, and go thence by water to Lyons.

The road, soon after quitting Paris by the Faubourg St. Marceau and the Barrière d'Italy, passes, at a short distance on the rt of Bicêtre, an hospital for old men, a lunatic asylum, and a penitentiary. Its name is said to be a corruption of Winchester, because it is thought to occupy the site of a country house built, 1290, by John, Bishop of Winchester; a more probable derivation is from its owner in the 15th century (1410), John, duc de Berry, in Latin, "Dux Bituricensis." The oldest of the existing buildings are chiefly those constructed by Cardinal Richelieu, as an asylum for wounded soldiers, which was afterwards transferred to the Invalides.

Nearly 4500 criminals are confined here, including convicts awaiting their transmission to the hulks.

The road, which is paved, runs through an avenue of trees along the table land, which sinks down into the valley of the Seine.

7 Villejuif. At the entrance of this town, on the l., stands an obelisk, marking the N. base of a triangle, established for the construction of Cassini's Map of France; a similar obelisk, at Fromenteau, marks the other extremity of the base.

11 Fromenteau.

Napoleon, hastening to the relief of Paris, March 30th, 1814, here met the head of the column of dejected troops who informed him of the surrender of the capital to the allies; in consequence, he was forced to return to Fontainebleau, where he soon after signed his abdication. Near Juvisy our road crosses the railroad to Orleans (R. 49.), and runs for some distance parallel with the branch to Corbeil.

12 Essonne, a small town on the Essonne which falls into the Seine, 1½ m. below, at Corbeil (R. 49.), where the branch-railway terminates.

Essonne lies in a hollow.

There are several châteaux near this part of the road, Villeroy on the rt., Coudray on the left, but they contribute in no respect to adorn the road, as the parks, and lodges, and seats of England. On the l. the Seine, winding through its fertile valley, is a pleasing feature.

11 Ponthierry.

8 Chailly. The postmaster here furnishes only grey horses, of which he has 40 or 50.

About 5 m. short of Fontainebleau we enter its noble Forest, which extends over an area of about 23,700 hectares, the attractive hunting ground which induced the monarchs of France, ardent lovers of the chase, to build a palace within it, and make it their favourite resort. At the Revolution of 1830, however, all the deer were exterminated. Only a small portion of the forest is occupied with full grown trees; but here and there it has preserved noble groves of oaks and beech, of majestic size and luxuriant foliage, which may have sheltered the jovial Francois I., the Bon Roi Henri IV., Louis XIV., and Napoleon. A large space is covered with broom, heath, and underwood, and with extensive plantations of black fir, from the midst of which picturesque masses of bare sandstone rock (Grés de Fontainebleau) break through, and give great variety and picturesqueness to the forest scenery. The points best worth visiting are — to the rt. of the road from Paris, the Gorges d'Apremont and de Franchard, above which are remains of a hermitage, as old as the days of Philippe Auguste, destroyed by Louis XIV.; and to the l. of the road La Vallée de la Solle.

"La Croix du Grand Veneur," an obelisk on the grande route, at a place where 4 roads meet, receives its name from a spectral Black Huntsman, who was supposed to haunt the forest, and who appeared here to Henri IV., according to the story, shortly before his assassination. The forest is so intersected with roads radiating in all directions, that it is difficult to find one's way without a map or a guide.

10 Fontainebleau. — Inns: H. de France: it is necessary to agree about charges before-hand: — La Poste, opposite the palace (Ville de Lyon), good and moderate.

This town, planted in the midst of the Forest of Fontainebleau, has swelled, under the influence of the presence and smiles of royalty, to a populous town, from a poor hamlet in the time of Louis VII. (1162), who first built a castle here. It owes its consequence entirely to its Château Royal, a palace of much historical interest, but not very imposing as a building externally, in spite of its extent, the masses of building composing it, though they enclose 6 courts, being limited to low ranges of 2 or 3 stories, chiefly of brick. The oldest, and the greatest part of the existing edifice, dates from the reign of Francis I., excepting the chapel.

Time, neglect, and violence had greatly dimmed the splendour of this venerable seat of kings, when Louis Philippe undertook to revive it; and his judicious and splendid restorations, following closely the style and character of the different periods at which it was originally constructed, have added greatly to the magnificence and interest of the building.

The entrance is by the "Cour du Cheval Blanc," so called from a plaister cast of the equestrian statue of Marcus Aurelius at Rome, which Catherine of Medici set up in it, but it no longer exists. In the midst of this court, near the foot of the horse-shoe stair, Napoleon took leave of the remnant of the old guard, who had followed him to the last, amidst his reverses, previously to his departure for Elba, 1814, an event commemorated by the well-known picture of "Les Adieux de Fontainebleau."

The apartments first entered are those recently fitted up for the late lamented Duc d'Orleans, on the occasion of his marriage; they had been originally occupied by Catherine de Medici, and Anne of Austria, whence they got the name Appartements des Reines-Mères. Here Pope Pius VII. was lodged, rejecting all the magnificence and comforts prepared for him by his imperial jailor, who desired that his forced residence of 3 years should have the appearance of a visit rather than an imprisonment. The ceiling of the salon, recently restored, is very gorgeous.

In the Chapelle de la Trinité, whose paintings are inferior and faded, the marriages of Louis XV. with Maria Leckzinska (1725), and of the late Duc d'Orleans (1837) were celebrated. The Gallerie de François I. is one of the most striking in the palace; perfectly characteristic of the style of art of the period of the Renaissance, and it supplies specimens of some of the productions of the Italians attracted, at that king's bidding, to France, where they founded a school of art. Its roof is of walnut wood, its walls are richly panelled and covered with stucco, scroll work, carvings, trophies, devices, among which the Salamander of Francis is often repeated, alternating with Terms, or Caryatid figures, medallions, bas-reliefs. These serve partly as frames to 14 pictures, in fresco, the work of Rossi (Maitre Roux), a Florentine, and his scholars. One of Danae, however, is attributed to Primaticcio, who is supposed also to have designed the ornaments. The paintings, now too much faded or injured to be appreciated, are chiefly mythological subjects chosen for their allegorical reference to the life of Francis. In the 1st he is represented opening the Temple of Art and Taste to a crowd of blind persons; next comes a Triumph, in honour of the victory of Marignan, led by a caparisoned elephant; then the Rape of Europa; the Burning of Troy; Æneas carrying off Anchises, &c. In the centre is a bust of Francis. The Cabinet de Travail contains the little, round mahogany table at which Napoleon, in 1814, signed his abdication, a fac-simile of which, blotted and scrawled, is suspended on the walls. His bed-room remains nearly as he left it. The Salle du Throne is of the age of Louis XIII. and XIV., but the throne was set up by Bonaparte. The Boudoir de la Reine was fitted up for the unfortunate Marie Antoinette by Louis XVI., and the metal window bolts (Espagnolettes) are said to have been wrought by his own hand, and are masterly specimens of his skill in smiths' work. The Gallerie de Diane is a long corridor decorated with paintings relating to that goddess, by modern artists. Below it runs the Gallerie des Cerfs, which was in 1657 the scene of the atrocious murder of an Italian, the Marquis Monaldeschi, by 3 assassins hired for the purpose by Christina of Sweden, at that time residing in the château as the guest of Louis XIII. The reason assigned by her for the crime was some alleged betrayal of secrets of his mistress by Monaldeschi, who was her high chamberlain, and had enjoyed her full confidence. She subjected him to a sort of mock trial, in which she acted as judge and jury. She sent for a priest to confess him before she gave orders for his murder, which was executed in the confessor's presence. Monaldeschi seems not to have been free from suspicions of his mistress; for he wore under his dress a coat of mail, which turned the first thrusts of the sword of the assassin. The French court was content to give a hint of displeasure at this atrocity, but the queen remained here until 1659. This gallery is now subdivided into small apartments and is not shown.

The suite of rooms called Salons de Reception comprises one called De François I., containing Gobelins tapestries, of recent date, as brilliant as oil paintings, and a chimney-piece ornamented with Sèvres china. A second is named after Louis XIII. because he was born in it, and the Salle de St. Louis is ornamented with a high relief of Henri IV. on horseback, over the fireplace. The Salle des Gardes is admirably and most richly restored: the paintings on the walls are in the style of those of the Loggie of Raphael. The chimney-piece rests on 2 figures of Strength and Peace, and in the centre is a bust of Henri IV.

The Salle du Bal, or Gallerie de Henri II., is the most splendid of the recent restorations, and one of the finest things in the palace. The paintings have been renovated with as much care as possible, yet, it is to be feared, retain little of the master pencils of Primaticcio and his pupil, Niccolo del Abbate, by whom they were executed. The ceiling is most gorgeous and elaborate with ornaments: the walls are of consistent richness. Every where appears the crescent of Diana of Poictiers, and her initials linked with that of her royal lover, H[illegible]. The chimney-piece, glittering with fleurs-de-lis, and resplendent with marbles, was the work of the sculptor Rondelet.

The Chapelle of St. Saturnin, on the ground floor, is said to be of the time of Louis VII., and the oldest part of the palace; but the repairs of Francis I., who found it in ruins, have disguised and altered it so that little of its primitive structure can be traced. It was originally dedicated by Thomas à Becket. In its windows is some good modern painted glass, from the designs of the late talented Princess Marie d'Orleans.

The Porte Dorée, a splendid portal, decorated with revived frescoes, originally by Rosso, leads from the Cour Ovale to the Allée de Maintenon, "named by the proudest and vainest king in Europe after his plebeian wife." The Oval Court is also called Cour d'Honneur, from the tournaments held in it in the time of Henri IV., and Cour du Donjon, from an elevated pavillon on an archway in the style of the Renaissance.

The gardens at the back of the palace are not, on the whole, very remarkable to one accustomed to those of England. That called Jardin Anglais is bordered by a triangular pond, in the midst of which rises a pavillon surrounded by water. The "Fontaine de Belle Eau," which gave the name to the palace, rose, it is said, within the garden; but the source has been lost in forming the artificial ponds.

In the old church of the village of Avon, a little to the E. of Fontainebleau, the miserable Monaldeschi is buried, at a spot marked by a small square stone near the benitier.

Farther to the E., on the borders of the Seine, at Thomery, are grown the fine Chasselas grapes, called Fontainebleau grapes. 5000 or 6000 baskets of them, packed in heather, are sent down the Seine every week in autumn, to supply the markets of Paris. The vines are trained along the houses and walls of the village, sheltered by narrow roofs from the rain. Even the streets are vineyards, and every foot of wall is covered with vines.

The Sandstone quarries around Fontainebleau furnish paving stones, not only for the road we are traversing, but for many others, and are transported in vast quantities down the Seine to Paris. The rock sometimes presents very pretty groups of crystals, covered over with fine sand, well known to every mineralogist.

A steamer goes from Valoin, a village about $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. from Fontainebleau, down the Seine to Paris, a pleasant voyage.

Travellers may gain the road to Chalons (R. 106.) from Fontainebleau through Moret and Fossard, 21 kilom.

On quitting Fontainebleau our road passes an obelisk or Pyramid, planted in the midst of a star (étoile,) formed by the divergence of 11 roads; among them those to Orleans, to Montereau, and to Nemours, the last of which we follow.

For 4 or 5 m. the road continues through the forest; then issues out into a plain of sand, amidst which the traveller's carriage flounders; in summer enveloped in tormenting dust, in winter sinking up to the axles in mud. The pavement ceases near 17 Nemours, a town of 3830 inhabitants, deriving its name from the wood (nemora), which once surrounded it. There are some remains of the old castle, the residence of the Ducs de Nemours, of the line of Savoy, and a fine church.

Mirabeau was born at Bignon, near Nemours, in 1749.

We continue by the side of the small river Loing all the way to Montargis, through 13 La Croisière.

7 Fontenay.

13 Montargis (Inns: Poste:—H. de Lyon), a town of 7757 inhabitants, on the borders of an extensive forest, at the junction of the Canal de Briare with that of Orleans, by the side of which there are public walks. The castle, on the eminence overlooking the town, originally belonged to the family of Courtenay, but the present edifice was built by Charles V., and for a long time formed part of the domain of the crown. It was of vast extent; but of its 8 large towers only one remains; the building having been sold, in 1809, to a démolisseur for 60,000 fr. Over one of the fireplaces in its great hall (for it had no less than 6) was a fresco painting, representing the combat between "the Dog of Montargis," and the murderer of its master, Macaire, which is said to have taken place, in the presence of Charles VI., in the lists of the Ile Nôtre Dame at Paris. The sagacity of the dog had indicated the spot where his master was buried in the forest of Bondy, as well as the murderer, and the king, according to the spirit of the laws of the time, directed that the cause should be tried by a duel between the dog, as accuser, and the accused. After several attacks, the dog seized his adversary, who was armed with a club, by the throat, and compelled him to confess his crime. In 1652, the Grand Condé, then a rebel against the royal authority, arriving before Montargis with a small force, summoned it to surrender. The magistrates hesitated, but Condé taking out his watch, declared he would sack the town and slay the inhabitants if it were not given up in an hour. This produced the desired effect, and gave rise to the saying, "que M. le Prince avait pris Montargis avec sa montre."

The country in which Montargis lies belongs to the district anciently called Gâtinois; it has little interest. The road is carried, in a straight line, through a dull district to 17 Nogent-sur-Vernisson.

A road strikes off from this to Gien on the Loire, (R. 52.) whence a steamer descends to Orleans.

About 5 m. to the E. lies Chatillon-sur-Loing, in whose ancient castle the Admiral Coligny was born, 1516. After his murder on the Bartholomew's night his body was cut down from the gallows of Montfaucon, upon which it had been shamefully hung by his Romanist assassins, and conveyed by his cousin Montmorency to his wife, who concealed it for many months before she could venture to commit it to the tomb at Chantilly. Chatillon belonged to the family of Condé.

12 La Bussière has a handsome château of the 15th century. From the summit of a hill, on approaching Briare, the valley of the Loire bursts into view: the pleasing effect of the broad winding river, and its vine-clad banks is much enhanced by the previous barrenness and monotonous road.

12 Briare (Inn, Poste), a town of 2730 inhabitants, on the rt. bank of the Loire, has given its name to the Canal, begun by Sully, and completed 1642, remarkable as the first attempt to open a communication between 2 river basins by means of supplies of water stored up on the summit level (point de partage). It runs from the Loing at Montargis to the Seine at St. Mamet, thus opening a communication between Paris and the S. and centre of France.

17 Neuvy. Across an undulating country, commanding, from time to time, peeps of the Loire, the road proceeds through 14 Cosne, where there are iron forges; and a little way above which the town of Sancerre is seen, on the opposite bank of the river.

15 Pouilly.

13 La Charité (Inn, La Poste), an ancient town of 5000 inhabitants, still partly surrounded by ramparts, flanked by watch towers, of the 14th century. It is said to have derived its name from the benevolence shown to travellers by the Monks of St. Benedict; and its arms are 3 open purses, on a field azure. Its church must have been originally a fine building; but its nave is, in part, destroyed, and the aisles and other portions modernised. The choir, however, surrounded by pointed arches, on light piers with elegant capitals, and the front, are probably as old as the latter part of the 12th century. There were some curious bas-reliefs over the doors, formerly covered up by hovels built against the walls. The church was, in great part, destroyed by fire, 1204, and was restored by Philippe Auguste.

The road to Bourges here crosses the Loire on a stone bridge (R. 103.); there is also a suspension bridge. A diligence daily.

At La Marche are ruins of a Romanesque church, which, from the rudeness of its architecture and carved capitals, is probably as old as the 10th century. Under its E. end is a crypt.

13 Pouges.

There are mineral springs about a mile from this.

From the top of a hill surmounted in the course of this stage, a fine view is presented of the valley of the Loire and of that of the Allier, which joins it a little below Nevers; the latter river, however, is not visible.

At Fourchambault there are extensive iron furnaces and forges, perhaps the largest in France, where the iron conservatories in the Jardin des Plantes, the arches of the Pont du Carrousel, the frame-work for the roof of Chartres cathedral, and the piers for the bridge of Cubsac, were cast. They employ between 2000 and 3000 workmen.

12 Nevers (Inn, H. de France), an unprepossessing, dirty, but ancient city of 17,085 inhabitants, chef lieu of the department Nièvre, formerly capital of the Nivernois, is situated on the rt. bank of the Loire, at the confluence of the Nièvre. It is mentioned by Cæsar in his Commentaries, "Noviodunum oppidum Æduorum, ad ripas Ligeris opportuno loco positum." He deposited here his money-chest.

The oldest ecclesiastical edifice here is the Church of St. Etienne, in the Romanesque style, and very plain, both within and without, probably of the 11th century. It is entered by descending several steps. The transepts are separated from the body of the church, opening below in a wide arch surmounted by smaller arcades. The date of the foundation of this church is proved, by the charter, to be 1063. St. Sauveur, near the Loire, another Romanesque church, is turned into a warehouse; St. Genest, an example of the Transition into the Pointed style, is also desecrated into a brewery, and is possibly pulled down ere this.

The Cathedral of St. Cyr, on the hill, somewhat heavy externally, consists of a nave and choir, built in the 13th, 14th, and 15th centuries, with an apse at both ends; that at the W. is Romanesque, and probably of the 10th century; beneath it is a large crypt. The nave and choir have not the same axes, the choir inclining perceptibly to the l. The tower is flanked at the angles by colossal figures, in bad taste. The decoration of the interior is praiseworthy; the capitals of the columns exclusively sculptured with rich foliage, of admirable workmanship. All the statues were mutilated at the Revolution. There is some painted glass in the choir; and in the N. transept a rich flamboyant doorway, leading to a fanciful spiral staircase, is a remarkable example of what Mr. Willis calls "interpenetration," or the running of several series of mouldings into one another: these complicated interlacings pervade not only the canopy of the arch, but even the pinnacles.

The Hôtel de Ville, also on the height, facing an irregular place, formerly palace of the Dukes of Nevers, built by the princes of the line of Clèves, is an edifice in the flamboyant style, retaining several of its picturesque turrets and gables.

One of the old town gates, a relic of the fortifications erected by Pierre de Courtenay, Seigneur de Nevers, at the end of the 12th century, rebuilt 1393, still exists in the Porte des Croux, black with age and dirt. Another entry into the town is by a triumphal arch, erected to commemorate the battle of Fontenay, 1746.

Behind the H. de Ville is a public garden, formerly the park of the palace.

Nevers is a thriving, busy manufacturing town; its manufactures of earthenware are 8 centuries old, and employ 700 persons: in its iron works, chains, and cables for suspension bridges are made; the iron used is that of Berry. There is a royal cannon foundery, for the navy, where 125 pieces are cast annually.

The road crosses the Loire by a heavy bridge of 20 arches on quitting Nevers, and, leaving that river on the l., proceeds to ascend the valley of the Allier, its tributary. "The country, though generally fertile, is uninteresting. The river Allier is seldom seen, concealed as it is by trees, in the flat valley through which it passes."

12 Magny.

11 St. Pierre le Moutier. Near this is a large pond.

8 St. Imbert.

10 Villeneuve sur Allier (Dept. Allier).

12 Moulins (Inns: Poste: — H. d'Allier, good and moderate), a cheerful town, without the activity of much trade or commerce, pleasantly situated on the rt. bank of the Allier. It is chef lieu of the Dépt. Allier, and contains a population of 15,231.

It is a comparatively modern town, and has no fine buildings. The castle is reduced to a square tower, called La Mal Coiffée, of the 15th century, and some buildings erected by Catherine de Medicis.

The Cathedral of Nôtre Dame, consisting of a small choir in the Florid style, is only remarkable for its very fine painted glass, chiefly of the 16th century. It contains an old painting of the Virgin and Child, the two shutters of which, now detached from it, and hung against piers, bear portraits of Pierre I., Duc de Bourbon and his wife, Anne of France, attended by their patron saints, attributed to Ghirlandajo.

In the Chapel of the College is the monument of Henry Duc de Montmorency, who suffered, under the heavy hand of Richelieu, for having conspired against him and his master, Louis XIII., and was executed at Toulouse, 1632. His widow, Marie Orsini, conveyed his remains to this chapel, then attached to the Convent of the Visitation, of which she became superior, spending in it the rest of her days. The monument, attributed to an Italian sculptor, Agheri, consists of the reclining statue of the duke, in Roman armour, resting on his helmet, with his duchess beside him in an attitude of grief and resignation; the expression of profound sorrow in her countenance is perfect, and the draperies are very beautifully executed. On either side is an allegorical figure, Valour, a sort of Hercules, and Liberality, a coarse female. The fact of this monument being in honour of a man beheaded for conspiring against a king preserved it from demolition at the Revolution.

Marshal Villars, the opponent of Marlborough, and Marshal Berwick, natural son of James II. by Arabella Churchill (Marlborough's sister), who won the battle of Almanza from the English in Spain, were both born here.

The watering place of Bourbon l'Archambault, a town of 3017 inhabitants, frequented on account of its mineral waters, is about 19 miles W. of Moulins. The waters are saline, and are supplied by a hot spring, and another cold, called Source de Jonas. There is a bath-house in the middle of the town. There are very considerable and picturesque remains of the ancient castle of the early Sires de Bourbon. Diligences run daily from Moulins to the Baths in summer, and the road thither passes through Souvigny, a poor village 5 m. from Moulins, containing an Abbey Church, which is one of the most remarkable Gothic monuments in the province for size. It displays different styles, from the early Romanesque to the latest flamboyant, the oldest parts dating from the 11th century, the more recent from 1446, when the church was rebuilt. Of the first period are probably the central nave, the apses at the E. end, and the crypt below the choir. The nave is flanked by double aisles, the outer ones nearly as broad as the centre. In the N. aisle is a curious bas-relief in the Byzantine style. The Chapelle Vieille, on the S. side, is separated from the choir and transept by a stone screen, beautifully carved with flamboyant tracery. It encloses the monument of Louis Duc de Bourbon and Anne his wife, bearing their recumbent figures, of white marble, sadly mutilated by the Revolutionists. A recess, or niche, in the wall opposite displays, amidst most rich decorations of flamboyant tracery, the word "Espérance," the mottoe of the Order of the Thistle, founded by the Duke. This chapel, the greater part of the choir, the vaults, and windows of the nave, 4 divisions of the outer S. aisle of the nave, and the remains of the cloisters on the S. side of the chapel, are supposed by M. Merimée to have been built 1441. On the N. side of the choir is La Chapelle Neuve, similarly decorated, and even more injured by the Vandals of 93, containing the tombs of Duc Charles, and his wife, Agnes de Bourgogne. The date of this chapel is somewhere about the end of the 15th or beginning of the 16th century.

All persons who take an interest in Gothic architecture should visit Souvigny from Moulins: in spite of its mutilations, it is a very interesting church. The Auberge de la Poste is the ancient Priors' palace. At St. Menoux, not far from Souvigny, is another ancient church, once attached to a Benedictine abbey, but much decayed. The choir is the most interesting portion, and a good example of the florid Romanesque.

Some cutlery, of an inferior kind, is made at Moulins; the manufacture has much fallen off.

At Moulins the very interesting road through the Limagne, Clermont, and the Volcanic district of Auvergne, strikes off up the valley of the Allier (R. 109.). Diligences run daily, and a Malleposte to Clermont and Montpellier. It is possible to go this way to Lyons, by Montbrison, and to Marseilles, by Le Puy and St. Etienne, though, in both cases, it is a détour.

Diligences go hence also to Vichy (see below). No one will quit Moulins without thinking of Sterne and his Maria. The scene of her melancholy story being laid here.

14 Bessay.

16 Varennes.

10 St. Gerard le Puy. From this a road turns off to the fashionable watering place of Vichy, on the Allier, 61 Kilom. from Moulins = 39¼ Eng. m.

Vichy. Here are no Inns; every one lives in boarding houses; of these there are 6 or 8. H. de Paris is most frequented by Parisians: H. de Corneil; civil people; in none is the accommodation first-rate. The guests live together, taking their meals in public, consisting of a breakfast à-la-fourchette at 10, and dinner at 5. Nobody is allowed to be served in his own room, unless illness prevent his appearance in public.

Vichy consists of an old town, seated on the rt. bank of the Allier, in nowise remarkable, and of a new external quarter, or suburb, of handsome lodging and boarding houses, connected with old Vichy by a fine promenade, shaded by avenues of plane trees. This is the watering place, now one of the most frequented in France; and here rise the mineral springs, of acidulous alkaline water, in taste resembling soda water, their principal ingredients being carbonate of soda and carbonic acid gas, and their peculiarity the small quantity of iron, in proportion to these ingredients, which accompanies them. They operate with advantage on the digestive and urinary organs, and are efficacious in long standing stomach disorders, obstruction and enlargement of the spleen.

There are 7 springs, varying in temperature from 86° to 111° Fahr. but differing only slightly in the proportion of the same ingredients; 3 of them are received in the bath-house (Batiment Thermal), a very handsome building, faced on the ground floor by a long colonnade, containing, in the upper story, a cabinet de lecture and ball-room; and in the lateral ranges 72 baths, tolerably well appointed, and 4 douches. The principal source, or the one most used for drinking and exportation in bottles, is that called Grande Grille. The water, received into stone basins, has the appearance of boiling, from the quantity of gas which bubbles up through it. The season begins here in the early part of May, and ends by the middle of September.

The routine of a day is as follows — As early as 6 the crowd assembles to drink the waters, which takes up an hour or two: 10 is the hour of breakfast: to this succeeds, after an interval, the bath, for those who are recommended to bathe, each individual having his hour and turn marked upon a card. The table-d'hôte dinner takes place at 5; and in the evening the company assemble in the drawing-room (salon) of the hotel, where cards or music afford resources for passing the evening. Precedence is determined by the order of arrival, those who have been longest resident occupying the upper seats at table, &c. There are occasional balls at the rooms, but, as the physicians are masters of the ceremonies, they begin at 8½, and usually end before 11: raking is not allowed. Frequent collections (quetes) are made, at the instigation of the curé, for the good of some charity, or parish school, and the poor-box is commonly carried round by a lady and gentleman.

The situation of Vichy is agreeable, but not striking, in an open and highly cultivated country, the celebrated Limagne d'Auvergne (R. 109.); in fact, its main attractions are its waters.

Some pleasant excursions, however, may be made in the neighbourhood, and many troops of donkeys are kept for the use of the guests.

The valley of the Sichon affords pleasant walks or rides.

More distant expeditions may be made to the Château of Effiat, a building of the 17th century, now dilapidated, but still inhabited, and retaining its formal garden flanked by fosses. It was erected by Marshal Effiat, who was ambassador to England to negotiate the marriage of Henrietta Maria with Charles I., and father of Cinq Mars, beheaded by Richelieu at Lyons.

The castle of Randan, in which Bayard tarried so long, paying court to its noble Châtellaine, now belongs to Madame Adelaide, sister of the King of the French, who has become the Lady Bountiful of the neighbourhood.

Diligences go daily to Moulins, on the way to Paris; to Roanne, on the way to Lyons; to Clermont (R. 109.), &c.

The road to Lyons has now quitted the valley of the Allier, and enters on a hilly country. The mountains of Auvergne appearing to the S.W., and those of Forez more to the E., form features in the landscape.

10 La Palisse.—Inn, Poste; said to be good. (?) Between this and la Pacaudière the road traverses a hilly tract.

The road crosses a deep ravine by a very lofty bridge, called Pont de la Vallée, shortly before entering

7 Droiturier.

7 St. Martin d'Estréaux is seated on a height, in the midst of a barren and hilly country.

7 La Pacaudière. Here we are once more in the valley of the Loire, though that river is not reached until, after passing

11 St. Germain l'Espinasse, we arrive at 12 Roanne (Inns: H. du Centre; de Flandres, near the bridge), a town of 11,600 inhabitants, deriving importance from its situation on the l. bank of the Loire, at the point up to which it is navigable against the stream as well as downwards. It has a great transit trade: the manufactures of Lyons, the iron and coal of St. Etienne, the productions of the S. provinces of France, and the imports from the Levant, conveyed hither from the Rhone by railway or canal, are transported hence, down the Loire, to Nantes, or through it, and the Canal de Briare, to the Seine and Paris. There are also considerable manufactures of cotton in the town and its neighbourhood.

The railroad from Roanne to St. Etienne and Lyons is described in R. 119.: it is very inferior, as a line of conveyance, to those in the vicinity of Paris. The malleposte to Marseilles here turns out of our road, and proceeds, by Montbrison, to St. Etienne and Valence. (R. 119). The Loire is crossed by a fine new stone bridge on leaving Roanne, and the road proceeds across the plain for some distance parallel with the railroad. About half way to 16 St. Symphorien en Lay, the ascent of the Montagne de Tarare begins. The ascent has been made comparatively easy by a truly Alpine road, carried up in a series of zigzag terraces, sweeping round the shoulders of the hills, and crossing the gorges on handsome bridges of masonry, protected, at the sides, by stone studs like milestones.

10 Pain Bouchain. Near this is the summit of the Pass, about 3000 ft. above the sea. You reach the foot of the descent at 12 Tarare (Inn, H. de l'Europe; le Soleil), a wonderfully thriving manufacturing town, of 7762 inhabitants, seated in a narrow valley. The weaving of muslins, remarkable for their fineness, is the staple branch of manufacture, and it is calculated that between 3 and 4 millions of pieces are produced annually. It is said that as many as 52,000 persons are employed in the town and surrounding country on this branch of industry. The weavers ply their trade in damp cellars, which are neither floored nor warmed by fire, in order to keep up the moisture necessary for weaving fine webs, and to prevent the breaking of the thread.

The road continues along the narrow valley of the Tardine from Tarare to 11 Arnas, where the country opens out.

17 Salvagny.

A few m. to the l. of the road is the copper mine of Chessy, which produced the beautiful blue ore of copper so well known to the mineralogist, but it is now abandoned.

"As you approach Lyons, the road becomes extremely fine, and immediately above the city you look down upon it, extending along the banks of the two great flowing rivers, surrounded by an amphitheatre of hills. Handsome country seats, gardens, and vineyards are dotted over the landscape, bespeaking the wealth and prosperity (in a mercantile sense) of the district. As the town is entered, by the quay of the Saône, it assumes a most picturesque character, the grey rough rocks forcing themselves, as it were, into the city, protruding between the lofty houses, — a singular mixture of nature and art. One of these rocks is the celebrated "Pierre Scise." See p. 368.—F. P.

15 LYONS (French, Lyon).—Inns: H. de l'Europe; the best, but dear: no table-d'hôte; dinner à la carte, at 4 or 5 fr. It stands near the Saône and Place Bellecour, and commands a fine view. H. de Province: — H. du Parc; cuisine good: — H. des Ambassadeurs. There is no really good inn here; the dirt and insects horrible.

There are few more stately cities, in external aspect, in striking situation, seated as it is on two great rivers, the Rhone and Saône, or in the lively air of bustle and commerce diffused through its interior, than Lyons, the second city of France, the chief seat of manufactures, the focus where the commerce of the North and South converges. Its population amounts to 165,459, including its suburbs.

The appearance of grandeur, however, is limited to its quais, bridges, and noble rivers, to the steep and commanding heights of Fourvières on the rt. of the Saône, and to the two Places de Bellecour and Des Terreaux; it is deficient in fine streets, and long open thoroughfares. The interior is one stack of lofty houses, penetrated by lanes so excessively narrow and nasty as not to be traversed without disgust.

It is worth the stranger's while to remember, as a clue to find his way through this labyrinth, that the streets whose names are written on black plates run parallel with the course of the two rivers, those on yellow plates at rt. angles to them.

Lyons stands on both banks of the Saône and Rhone, but the largest part occupies the tongue of land between these two rivers, extending from the heights covered by the populous suburb of La Croix Rousse, the residence of the silk-weavers, and the hot-bed of insurrection, down nearly to the confluence of the rivers, towards which the quarter of Perrache is rapidly spreading its buildings. On the l. bank of the Rhone are the Suburb of Les Brotteaux, the scene of revolutionary executions and of Guillottière: on the rt. bank of the Saône, the suburbs of Vaise through which you enter Lyons from Paris, of Fourvières, mounting up the face of a slope so abrupt as scarcely to be accessible for wheel carriages, of St. Irenée behind it, and of St. George, lower down, near the water-side. These dry topographical details will be best understood when the traveller has scaled the Height of Fourvières, which he should do the first thing after his arrival, on account of the view it commands. To reach it you pass between the Palais de Justice and the cathedral, ascending the steep and narrow streets above the cathedral, so foul, filthy, and stinking, as almost to be pestilential.

"This is a very steep hill immediately in front of the cathedral. The streets, which partially cover its face, are principally inhabited by weavers, and through every open window you hear the click of the looms, and see the bright webs upon which they are employed in gaining their daily bread—if they can. They are wretchedly poor. Amongst them are very many English, who are in the lowest state of degradation, imbibing, in addition to their own vices, all the corruptions of the country to which they have migrated, without adopting any of the better parts of the French character. They are wholly without religious instruction. The very excellent and pious Protestant minister, M. Monaud, established, at his own expense, a chapel, in which he caused service to be performed in English, but none attended, and it has been since discontinued."—F. P.

You pass behind the huge straggling hospital of Antiquailles, occupying the site of the Roman palace in which Claudius and Caligula were born, now assigned to the reception of 600 patients, the most miserable wretches of this populous city, afflicted with madness and all sorts of incurable and disgusting diseases, to the care of whom 27 Frères Hospitaliers and 67 Sœurs devote their lives. Up narrow lanes, as steep as stairs, partly in zigzag, and in front of a row of shops, in which rosaries, medals, pictures, cast dles, and wax models of different parn of the body for suspension in the church, are displayed before the eyes of devout pilgrims, you reach

The church of Nôtre Dame de Fourvières, recently repaired and enlarged, but only remarkable for the quantity of exvotos, paintings, &c., with which its walls are covered, offered to the altar of the miracle-working figure of our Lady of Fourvières. It is seated on the very summit of the hill, and is said to occupy the site, and retain the name, of the Roman Forum Vetus built by Trajan. Numerous but inconsiderable Roman remains have been brought to light on the hill, the principal being a fragment of an amphitheatre and aqueduct. Close beside the church a speculator has built a tower, by way of observatory, 680 ft. above the Saône, and either from it or the terrace beside it a most magnificent view may be obtained. The city of Lyons appears unrolled as a map beneath your feet, including the two noble rivers visible (nearly) to their junction, the Saône crossed by 8 bridges, the Rhone by 3 or 4. Beyond it stretch fields, plains, and hills dotted over with country houses, and the distance is closed (in clear weather) by the snowy peak of Mt. Blanc, nearly 100 m. off, this being one of the farthest points from which it is seen. More to the S. the Alps of Dauphiné, the mountains of the Grande Chartreuse, and the Mont Pilas appear.

In the faubourg St. Irénée, behind Fourvières, is the church of St. Irénée, an uninteresting modern building, but erected on the grave of that saint and martyr, and upon subterranean vaults, in which St. Polycarp preached, at the age of 86, and where it is said the early Christians met for prayer, and were afterwards massacred, by order of Septimius Severus, A. D. 202. In the midst of this crypt, an ancient Romanesque building, resting on plain columns, is a sort of well, down which the bodies were thrown, until it overflowed with the blood of the 9000 martyrs, for such is the number reported to have fallen, according to the legend; and a recess is filled with their bones.

The upper church was destroyed, and the crypt much injured, by the Calvinists, 1562.

The Cathedral of St. Jean Baptiste, on the rt. bank of the Saône, has 4 towers, two of which flank the W. front, and 2 more, massive but shorter, form the transepts. The W. front is the most recent part, not having been completed until the reign of Louis XI.: its bas-reliefs and statues are curious, but they have suffered from the Calvinistic iconoclasts of the 16th century; These injuries have usually, but unjustly, been attributed to the infamous Baron des Adrets, since he was not in Lyons at the time when they were perpetrated. "The greater portion of the cathedral is of the age of St. Louis; but, though Gothic, the attentive observer will remark some curious imitations of Roman ornaments, particularly in an incrusted band or frieze of red and white marble, composed of masques and foliage, copied from the antique, with considerable exactness, running round the principal apse. The painted glass windows are remarkably fine. The centre tower, which opens into the cross, contains a rose window, which produces a peculiarly good effect. In a side aisle, on the floor, stands the once celebrated clock, made or built by Nicolas Lippeus of Basle in 1508. It is very much like that at Strasburg, exhibiting various processions of little figures, the courses of the sun and moon, and the like; but it is quite out of repair; and to be called in action it requires the administration of half a franc to the sacristan." (F. P.) "The clerestory presents an interesting series of windows, giving, in order, the gradations from plain lancets and circles, without foliation, or even a containing arch, to the perfect mullioned window with flowing tracery" (Petit), a good lesson for the student. The Bourbon chapel, built by the cardinal Bourbon and his brother Pierre de Bourbon, the son-in-law of Louis XI., is remarkable for its ornaments, principally flowers and foliage of the most delicate sculpture. Amongst them the thistle or chardon is repeatedly introduced; a pun or rebus, allusive to the cher-don, which the king had made to Pierre in the gift of his daughter."

"The see of Lyons, the religious metropolis of the Gauls, ascends to the era of the primitive church, its founders having been St. Pothinus, an Asiatic Greek in the 2nd century, and St. Irenæus, disciples of the apostles, both of whom suffered martyrdom here. Before the Revolution, the cathedral enjoyed many high privileges. The canons had the title of Counts of Lyons: and in the service many ancient usages are retained; amongst others, yellow or native wax alone was used for the tapers, and no instrumental music was allowed. Adjoining the cathedral is a building, part of the ancient archiepiscopal palace, which seems to be of the 9th century. According to popular opinion, Becket lodged here; but, as it is not known that he visited Lyons, though Anselm did, the two archbishops may have been easily confounded; several anthems and hymns yet sung in the cathedral are said to have been composed and set to music by Becket."—F. P.

On the quai, a little above the cathedral, opposite the Pont Seguin, destroyed by the flood of 1840, is the new Palais de Justice, a handsome building, faced with a colonnade of 24 Corinthian pillars. Baltard is the architect.

On the opposite side of the Saône, about ½ mile lower down, at the end of a street running up from the Pont d'Ainay, is the Church of the Abbey of Ainay, a very remarkable monument, both of Pagan and Christian antiquity. "The centre of the cross is supported by 4 ancient granite columns, supposed to have belonged to the altar erected at the confluence of the Rhone and Saône (which originally met close to this church), in honour of Augustus, who resided for 3 years at Lyons, by the 60 nations of Gaul. In the representation of that altar existing on medals, there are only 2, placed on either side of the altar, each supporting a statue of Victory; but these lofty columns, each of a single shaft, having been cut in two, now form the 4 supports, of somewhat low proportions, to the central lanthorn." The measurements of the diameter of the sections in each pair show how they were joined. Their capitals, an imitation of the Corinthian, are mediæval. The original capitals were Ionic. The church, as a building, was in existence before 937 (its foundation as a monastery was much earlier), and these are possibly of that æra. The outer tower is probably Carlovingian; but the building has recently been restored, in some parts awkwardly, so as to prepare much perplexity for the antiquarians who are yet unborn. Beneath the sacristy are the dungeons in which Pothinus and Blandina were immured previously to their martyrdom."

"The sufferings of these witnesses for the truth rest upon a document of great authenticity, the Epistle of the Churches of Vienne and Lyons to the Brethren in Asia and Phrygia. Pothinus, chosen bishop of Lyons, and then 90 years of age, was sent back into this dungeon, where he expired after two days' confinement. For Blandina, who was a converted slave, greater tortures were reserved. After being scourged and exposed to the fire in an iron chair, she was exposed to the beasts in the amphitheatre. These events took place during the persecution under Marcus Antoninus, the implacable enemy of Christianity, A. D. 177.

These dungeons are most gloomy cells, without light or air, below the bed of the adjoining river. The apertures by which they are entered are so low, that you must creep into them upon hands and knees. They adjoin a crypt which, until the Revolution, was used as a chapel: traces of Roman work are here distinctly seen.

"The middle-age name of Ainay is Athenacum, and most of the historians of Lyons are unanimous in supposing that it is built upon the site of the Athenæum founded by Caligula, and the buildings of which joined to or included the Augustan altar. It was a school of debate and composition, in which pleaders competed for the prize. Great honours were bestowed upon the successful competitors; but those who failed were liable, according to the statutes of the Imperial founder, to the most severe and humiliating punishments—to be chastised with a ferula or thrown into the river, and to obliterate their own compositions by licking them out with the tongue: hence even the most gifted would approach the altar with trepidation and fear" (F. P.), and hence the line of Juvenal —

"Palleat, ut nudis pressit qui calcibus anguem, Aut Lugdunensem rhetor dicturus ad aram."

Some other remarkable churches, &c. have been spared:—Saint Nizier, a splendid example of the flamboyant Gothic. The bosses of the arched roof are curiously pointed. The portal, in the style of the Renaissance, is a work of the architect Philibert Delorme, in the 16th century. Several hundred of the insurgents in the insurrection of 1834 were pursued within the walls of this church by the soldiery, and killed there.

Saint Pierre has a curious Carlovingian portal, in perfect preservation, though barbarously coated with oil paint.

The Church of the Cordeliers is strikingly monastic.

The square called Place des Terreaux, one side of which is occupied by the Hôtel de Ville, and another by the Museum, or Palais des Beaux Arts, was the scene of the execution of Cinq Mars and De Thou: "they perished on the scaffold, the one like a Roman, the other like a saint," thus atoning for their share in a conspiracy against the unrelenting Cardinal Richelieu. Here also, in 1794, the guillotine was erected, and actively kept at work until the square became so flooded with human blood, that the Terrorist chiefs, fearing to rouse the sensibility of the people, resolved on a wholesale massacre, by musquetry and grape, in the Brotteaux, on the other side of the Rhone.

The Hôtel de Ville (1447-55), with its lofty roofs and bold projections, is not unworthy of the ancient consulate, who, before the Revolution, were a most influential and useful magistracy, though much reduced in authority by Henri IV. In this building sat the Revolutionary tribunal which, under Challier, before the siege of Lyons, and after it under Couthon, Collot d'Herbois, and Fouché, despatched so many thousand victims to perish by the guillotine and the fusilade. Collot d'Herbois, the chief of these tyrants, had been an actor, and, in that capacity, had been hissed off the stage of Lyons. He vowed vengeance against the town, in consequence of this affront, and amply did the savage glut his desire for it.

The Palais des Beaux Arts, or Museum, in the ancient convent of Saint Pierre, contains some very remarkable specimens of Roman antiquity. A Taurobole, or square altar, 5 feet high. "The Bronze Tables containing the speech made by Claudius when Censor, in the Roman senate (A. D. 48), on moving that the communities of Gallia Comata should be admitted to the privileges of the citizenship of Rome, an act of the highest national importance. They are beautifully cut, and the letters are as sharp and as legible as if they had just issued from the engraver's hands. In these engravings we have, probably, the very words, or composition, of Claudius himself. They were discovered in the year 1528, on the heights of St. Sebastian, and were first placed in the Hôtel de Ville."

"Claudius was born at Lyons on the very day when the altar of Augustus was consecrated. Tacitus has given the speech very faithfully in substance, but, treating the emperor as all clever reporters do their subjects, he has condensed and improved the language of the speakers. There are some evident mistakes in the engraving or cutting of the inscriptions, of which the letters are very beautiful, such as RVSVS for RV*R*SVS, and some Archæisms, such as the termination DIV*O*M for DIV*V*M. As a composition, the speech is business-like and solid."

"In contemplating a relic of this description in the city to which it belongs, we become sensible how much of its interest would be diminished by depositing it in any situation out of its proper locality. A very fine mosaic pavement representing the games of the Circus, in which the Spina, and the gates whence the chariots started for the race, are fully given, was found at Ainay, 1800. Several other pavements were found in or near the city, including one of Orpheus and the Beasts, brilliant in colour, with many sepulchral and other inscriptions."— F. P.

The legs of a bronze horse, discovered in the bed of the Saône, are remarkable.

In the Picture Gallery are several paintings of celebrated masters.—

Pietro Perugino: The Ascension, the heavenly choir in the sky, the Apostles and Virgin below; one of the best works of the master; given to the city by Pope Pius VII. Rubens: St. Francis, St. Dominic, and the Virgin, interceding for the world, against which the Saviour is about to launch his thunder; finely coloured, but coarse, profane, and offensive in the composition. The Adoration of the Magi. Spagnoletto: St. Francis after Death, as placed in the tomb by Gregory IV.; the ghastly glare of the eye and rigidity of the frame are truly, but somewhat painfully, represented. Carracci: The Baptism in the Jordan. A portrait of a canon of Bologna. Guercino: The Circumcision. Teniers: St. Peter delivered from the Prison, or rather soldiers gaming in the guard-house; for what is called the subject is rendered merely an accessory. Perugino: St. Gregory and St. James. A. Durer (?): The Emperor Maximilian and the Empress. A Portrait of Jacquart, inventor of the silk loom named after him, by Bonnefonds. Portrait of Mignard, by himself. Portrait of William III. of England. Van Heem. A View of the Rock and State Prison of Pierre Scise, now destroyed, is curious.

A school of design is established here as well as an academy of the fine arts. The productions, judging at least from two exhibitions, are not above mediocrity.

In one of the apartments are placed the busts of some of the illustrious natives of Lyons, as Philibert Delorme, architect; Bernard Jussieu, the botanist; Jacquart, inventor of the silk-loom; Suchet, marshal of France; Poivre, governor of L'Ile de France, who introduced pepper.

The Museum of Natural History is very creditable to the town, by its extent; and most useful and instructive to the student, by its excellent systematic arrangement, according to orders, families, genera. It is tolerably well filled in all the departments of natural history; but where specimens of a genus are wanting, the place is supplied by a drawing.

Among the minerals are a very complete and valuable series of marbles, antique and modern, of Italy, France, &c.; a suite of the blue and green copper ores from the mine of Chessy, on the Saône, now abandoned: they cost 800 francs. The mineralogical and geological topography of France is illustrated in a collection of rocks and fossils from the different departments.

"The Bibliothèque Publique is the best provincial collection in France. The consulate of the city took great pride in this institution, which was originally annexed to the college. It contains many manuscripts, and about 80,000 printed volumes. Amongst them are many valuable and all but unique articles of the early printers, — the delight and despair of the bibliomaniac. During the siege of Lyons in 1793, the library suffered greatly from the bombardments and the cannonade to which the city was exposed. The roof of the library was beat down, large heaps of the books were covered by the rubbish, and it might have been wished that they could have continued so during the reign of the Convention. Some were carried to Paris; others stolen. The foregoing were at least preserved for literature. But the library was turned into a barrack, the National Guard lighted their fires and boiled their coffee with the volumes, which they employed in preference to any other combustible; and a Juge de Paix in a different canton caused a cart-load to be brought to him every decade for the same purpose; for, said he, they are all books of devotion, and we do not exactly seek truth in the age of reason."

The Limoges Enamels belonging to M. Didiers-Petit, form one of the finest collections of the kind in France.

In the suburb of Vaise, on the rt. bank of the Saône, on the line of the old fortifications, and just above the road leading to Paris and Chalons, rise the scanty remains of the escarped rock of Pierre Scise, or encise, so called from its having been cut through by Agrippa, in order to open a military road. It is now used as a quarry, and the proprietors are destroying the picturesque and beautiful by wholesale. Upon this rock stood a castle, formerly the dwelling of the Archbishops, and of which the central tower was remarkable for its symmetry. It was demolished during the Revolution, perhaps in consequence of the odium which it acquired by having been anciently employed as a state prison, and also because it was offensive to the inhabitants from its domineering over the town. In this castle Ludovico Sforza, called Moro, was confined by Louis XII.; he was afterwards removed to the castle of Loches, where, being occasionally confined in an iron cage, he sank under the misery that he sustained. So closely was he incarcerated, that the exact time of his death is unknown: some writers place it in 1508, others in 1510. (See R. 56.)

Here also Card. Richelieu shut up M. de Cinq Mars, for conspiring against his authority, and corresponding with Spain, and de Thou, the son of the historian, for not betraying the conspiracy.

Farther on, upon the opposite (l.) bank of the Saône, is an antique castle, surmounted by a lofty tower, called Tour de la Belle Allemande, from a tradition of a German damsel being immured in it while her beloved was shut up in Pierre Scise. He, as the story goes, having escaped, by leaping into the Saône, was swimming across the river to join her, when he was perceived by the castle guard, and shot at the foot of the tower.

"The charitable institutions of Lyons are numerous. The principal one is the Hôtel Dieu, on the quay facing the Rhone, between the Pont de l'Hotel Dieu, and Pont Guillotière; it is the most ancient, perhaps, now subsisting in France, having been founded by Childebert and Ultrogotha, his queen. The present edifice, built by Soufflot, has a splendid new front. The plan of the building is that of a cross, and it is arranged upon the Panopticon principle. An octagon altar is placed under the central dome. From this the wards radiate, and the crucifix and the officiating priest can be seen from every bed in the hospital. The chambers are very lofty and spacious. Amongst other attendants are 150 sisters of charity."—F. P.

This building was destroyed during the fatal siege of 1793, when filled with wounded, by shells and red-hot shot; a black flag, hoisted upon the building to avert the deadly shower, seemed only to attract towards it a larger share of the fire; and after the flames had been in vain extinguished 42 times, it was finally consumed. From an inscription discovered not long since in a courtyard of the Hôtel Dieu, (once a Protestant burial ground,) it would seem that Mrs. Temple, daughter of Young, author of the Night Thoughts, who died at Montpellier, 1736, was actually buried here. By the archives in the H. de Ville, it appears that 729 livres were paid for permission to inter her.

On the quay of the Rhone, below the Pont Guillotière, is the still larger Hospice de la Charité.

The Place Bellecour, one of the largest squares in Europe, perhaps too large, covering nearly 15 acres, ornamented in the centre by a statue of Louis XIV., has been rebuilt since 1793–4. On the capture of Lyons by the republicans, the total annihilation of the town, and of all its chief buildings, public and private, which had escaped the red-hot shot and the shells hurled against it, to the number of 11,000 shot and 27,000 shells, during a bombardment of several weeks, were decreed by the National Convention, in order to humble the pride of the Lyonnais. The demolition of the houses of the Place Bellecour was directed by Couthon, who, borne on a litter, on account of illness, gave the signal by striking on the door of each condemned house, repeating the words, " Je te condamne à être demolie au nom de la loi." A mob of discharged workmen and others of the lowest classes then hastened to carry into effect these commands. Lyons, the chief manufacturing town of France was reduced to a heap of ruins, and the expense of merely pulling down amounted to 700,000*l.*, a sum larger than that which built the Hôtel des Invalides at Paris. Thus was fulfilled the decree of the Montagne, that " Lyons should no longer exist," that " even its name should be effaced," and that of " Commune Affranchie " substituted. This decree enacted also that a column should be erected on its ruins to bear these words,

" Lyon fit la Guerre à la Liberté, Lyon n'est plus."

The Siege of Lyons, which preceded this wanton razing of the town, was undertaken by the National Convention, to punish and bring back to their side the people of Lyons, who, irritated by the vexations, and horror-stricken by the tyranny, of the club of Terrorists, and the municipality, had risen up in arms against them, and made prisoner, tried, and executed their president, the infamous Challier, a Savoyard, and once an abbé. 60,000 troops were collected from all quarters against this devoted town, whose defence was intrusted to about 30,000 of her citizens, who cheerfully manned the walls, resolving that their oppressors should not capture the place without marching over piles of ruins and heaps of dead. After an heroic resistance of 63 days, during which acts of the utmost bravery and scenes of the direst misery were exhibited; after all the surrounding heights had been gained by the enemy; and 30,000 persons had perished within the walls, famine began to arrest the power of all farther resistance, and the town was yielded, Oct. 9. 1793.

The Suburb of Perrache, between the Saône and Rhone, receives its name from the architect who conceived and executed the plan of removing the confluence of these rivers, which, before 1770, took place a little below the church of Ainay, to its actual situation. He effected this by strong embankments; and the greater portion of the land thus gained is either built over, or is prepared for building. Here is situated the terminus of the railroad to St. Etienne. (R. 118.)

Until the commencement of the present century, the Rhone merely skirted the city, and Lyons may be said to have been confined to its rt. bank; or, as Grey in his letters humorously describes the confluence, " the Saône goes through the middle of the city in state, while he (the Rhone) passes incog. outside the walls, but waits for her a little below."

Since that time the l. bank of the Rhone has been covered over with houses, forming the suburbs of Brotteaux and Guillotière. In the Brotteaux, at the extremity of the street called Avenue des Martyrs, a monumental chapel, in the form of a pyramid, perpetuates the memory of the miserable victims of one of the worst atrocities of the Revolution. After the siege and capture of Lyons, as narrated above, the guillotine proved too slow an instrument of slaughter of the accused or suspected victims condemned, with or without cause, to suffer by the mandate of the revolutionary tribunal. The bloodthirsty and infamous tyrant, Collot d'Herbois, therefore conducted the prisoners, by 60 at a time, under the escort of soldiers, to a field beside the granary of La Part Dieu. Here, with their hands bound behind their backs, they were fastened by ropes to a cable attached to a row of willows; and at the end of the line two cannons, loaded with grape shot, were so placed as to enfilade the whole. At the first discharge few fell dead; a second and third, directed against the poor wretches, mutilated, wounded, and deprived of their limbs a great number, but left the greater part still alive, rending the air with their agonising shrieks, so that the soldiers were obliged to finish the work with their swords or the butt end of their musquets. So laborious was the task, and so imperfectly performed, that some were found breathing 12 hours after, when their bodies were covered with quicklime, and thrown into a hole for burial. These heart-sickening massacres were repeated, by the aid of grape-shot or musquetry fired by platoons of soldiers, until the number of victims amounted to 2100. Collot d'Herbois and Fouché looked on while these deeds were done; and the former, when informed, on one occasion, that a band of prisoners about to be led forth to death exceeded by two the number condemned for execution, replied, "Qu'importe? s'ils passent aujourd'hui, ils ne passeront pas demain."

The miscreant, Collot d'Herbois, exulting in his atrocities, forwarded from time to time to Paris, reports of his proceedings to the Convention, from which these are extracts. He says of himself and colleague, "The sword of the law is falling on the conspirators at the rate of 30 at a time; that they have already despatched 200; and they were occupied, in the most unceasing manner, in the discharge of their functions."

Three days after he writes,

"I send you a second list; the number now amounts to 300. A more grand act of justice is preparing; 400 or 500, with whom the prisons are filled, are one of these days to expiate their crimes; the stroke of powder shall purge them from the earth by a single discharge."

At the extremity of the suburb of La Guillotière is an ancient castle called Château de la Motte, in which Henry IV. was married to Marie de Medicis.

The Bridges. There are 4 over the Rhone: — the Pont Morand, of wood, opposite the Place des Terreaux, leading to Les Brotteaux, named after its architect, who perished by the hand of the revolutionary assassins; Pont Lafayette (formerly de Charles X.), of wood, on stone piers; Pont de l'Hôtel Dieu, a suspension bridge; Pont de la Guillotière, between the Hôtel Dieu and La Charité, leading to the Place Bellecour, is of stone, 539 yards long: it is the oldest of all the bridges, its foundation being referred to Pope Innocent IV., 1190, though no part of the present structure is of that age. The high road to Savoy passes over it. A very curious silver buckler, bearing a representation of the Continence of Scipio, in relief, was found at the base of one of its piers.

The bridges over the Saône, between L'Ile Barbe and La Mulatière, are 10 in number, or rather were, for, by the inundation of 1840, 4 were destroyed, and 2 others seriously injured. The principal are Pont de Tilsit, a beautiful stone bridge, leading from the Place Bellecour to the Archeveché; the Pont Seguin, a suspension bridge (destroyed 1840), named after its engineer, opposite the Palais de Justice; and higher up, the Pont du Change, an old stone bridge.

The Inundations of October and November 1840 were the most fatal in the records of the city. The Saône, usually regarded as a placid stream, submerged the suburb of Vaise, destroyed nearly half its houses, and overspread nearly the entire city between it and the Rhone, from the Place des Terreaux, which escaped, downwards: the Places Bellecour and Des Celestins became lakes, and most of the streets canals. In three places the waters of the Saône forced a passage, through the midst of the city, into the Rhone, cutting a deep bed, owing to the rupture of the dyke of the Tête d'Or. The entire suburbs of Guillo-tière and Les Brotteaux were covered by the swollen waters of the Rhone, which spread over the country to a distance of 1½ m. from its banks, destroying 450 houses. The grand increase of the Rhone began on the 27th October, but abated on the 31st; that of the Saône continued until Nov. 5. It was calculated that the quantity of rain which fell during 7 days preceding this catastrophe equalled that usually distributed over 7 months.

The Quartiers des Capucins, between the Place des Terreaux and Croix Rousse, and of St. Clair, are chiefly inhabited by rich capitalists and manufacturers. The former stretches up the foot of the hill of Croix Rousse, separated from the faubourg of that name by a line of antiquated ramparts and bastions.

The fortifications of Lyons consist of a number of detached forts crowning the heights of St. Croix and Fourvières, on the rt. bank of the Saône, and of Croix Rousse, above the suburb of that name; and the circuit is completed by 7 other forts built round the faubourgs Brotteaux and Guillotière. They owe their origin to the fearful insurrections of the workmen and others, which took place as a consequence of the July Revolution in 1831 and 1834; and are at least as much designed to repress intestine revolt as to withstand invasion from without. The chief work, the Fort Montessay, is so constructed that its guns entirely command, and could level with the dust, the faubourg of La Croix Rousse, the St. Antoine of Lyons, a moral volcano teeming with turbulence and sedition; while a fortified barrack on the Place des Bernardines separates it, at will, from the rest of the city. From this faubourg issued, in 1831 and 1834, the armed insurgents who for several days held possession of the town, having expelled the military, until an army could be assembled large enough to put them down, which was only effected with great loss of life. Indeed, in these recent revolts (for they were far too serious to fall under the name of riots), this ill-starred and ill-conditioned city experienced a renewal of many of the horrors, the bloodshed, and misery of the first Revolution. Many workmen were obliged to quit the town for their share in these disturbances, and settled in Switzerland.

The Croix Rousse is principally inhabited by silk weavers, who live in densely-crowded, narrow streets, where 12 to 20 families are piled, one above another, in the lofty houses.

Silk is the staple manufacture of Lyons; in the extent of it she surpasses every other town of Europe. The manufacture of silk was first established in Lyons, in the year 1450. In variety of design, in taste, in elegance of pattern, and in certain colours, the manufacturers have a superiority over the English. "They can work 25 per cent. cheaper; but the hand-loom weavers of Lyons are nearly as ill off as those of Spitalfields." — Laing. There are no huge factories here; the master, instead of having a certain number of workmen constantly employed in his own premises, merely buys the raw material, and gives it out to be manufactured by the weavers, dyers, &c., at their own houses, by themselves and their families. The patterns are produced by draughtsmen (generally a partner of the master manufacturer), and the laying or preparing of the pattern (mise en carte) is the province of another artiste. There are about 31,000 silk looms in and about Lyons. The silk weavers are, bodily and physically, an inferior race; half the young men of an age for military service are exempted, owing to weakness or deformity. Of late manufactories of cotton, hardware, &c., have been established in Lyons: it is also the centre of money transactions with Switzerland and Italy.

The Conseil des Prudhommes is a commercial tribunal, composed partly of masters, partly of men, designed to settle disputes respecting wages, and such matters, between the two classes, and between masters and apprentices, in a spirit of conciliation. It is of immense service, and exists in other manufacturing towns, and might, perhaps, be imitated with advantage in England. Every workman is provided with a "livret de bonne conduite," in which particulars of his ability, industry, and conduct are entered from time to time, so that it serves as a passport for him when in want of work, provided it shows a good and steady character.

The Condition des Soies is an establishment in which the quality and goodness of raw silks brought hither for sale is tried, by exposing them to heat, at a temperature of 72½° to 77° Fahrenheit, for 12 or 24 hours, after having been moistened. The weight of the silk is then ascertained, and marked by a sworn estimator, and fraud is thus prevented.

There are several Theatres; the chief one behind the H. de Ville, another in the Place des Célestins, which abounds with cafés.

The Post Office is in the Place Bellecour.

Omnibuses traverse the town from end to end; and cabriolets and fiacres stand in the Places des Terreaux and de Bellecour, and on the Quai de Retz.

Conveyances.

Malleposte, Lyons to Paris daily in 34 hours.

Diligences, daily; 4 to Paris (2 morning, 2 evening) in 60 hours in summer, 72 in winter; to Turin, by Chambery in 38 hours; to Aix les Bains; 4 to Marseilles in 2 days; to Strasburg, by Lons le Saulnier, Besançon, Belfort, Colmar; to Clermont, by Montbrizon, to Grenoble.

Railroad to St. Etienne. Office, Place Bellecour, whence omnibuses go to the terminus in the Quartier Perrache. Trains 3 times a day. (See Route 118.)

Steamers on the Rhone start for Vienne, Valence, Avignon, and Arles, every morning at 4 or 5 A. M., from the Quai on the Rhone. (See Route 125.)

Steamers on the Saône, for Chalons, every morning, starting from the Quai (Route 106.), from 4 to 6 A. M.

The environs of Lyons are correctly described by Gray: "the hills around are bedropped and bespeckled with country houses, gardens, and plantations of rich merchants and bourgeois." These villas are much more numerous than in the vicinity of Paris.

"L'Ile Barbe, an island in the Saône, above Lyons, nearly surrounded by escarped rocks, and connected with the banks of the river by a wire bridge, is celebrated as having been the frequent residence of Charlemagne; and at the upper extremity is a species of watch-tower, on which, according to tradition, the emperor sat and contemplated his Paladins, heading his army, as it marched along the banks of the river. This castle seems not older than the 15th century; and a chapel on the island dates, probably, from the 12th. Many curious antique fragments are dispersed in the island. At Easter and Whitsuntide, the good folks of Lyons, rich and poor, visit the Isle of Saint Barbe, with the object of a pilgrimage by carriage, horse, and foot, to the nearest points of embarkation. The island is then filled with gay parties, eating, drinking, and dancing; and more especially in the 'Wauxhall.'" —F. P.

A few Historical Notices of Lyons. — The ancient city of Lyons, the Roman Lugdunum, founded, according to Dion Cassius, by Munatius Plancus (B. C 40.), occupied the heights of Fourvières. Here Augustus and Severus resided. Here still exist traces of the vast Aqueduct, constructed, it is said, by the soldiers of Marc Antony, when his legions were quartered here, to supply the town with water from the distant mountains of La Forez. It may be still traced for miles, crossing the valleys on arches, of which the most considerable remains are at Bionnat (6 arches), Chapponost, Chardonniers, and Oullins.

Remains of Agrippa's 4 great roads, which met at Lyons, radiating thence to the Pyrenees, through the Cevennes, to the Rhine, to the Ocean through Picardy, and to Marseilles, may also be traced.

The settlement of the early Christians, and the persecutions they endured in the 2d and 3d centuries, have been alluded to in pp. 367, 368.

Lyons was possessed and governed by its archbishops, who held it by grant from the Emperor of Germany, during the 12th and part of the 13th century, and was not restored to the French crown until the reign of Philippe le Bel.

The silk manufacture was established here in the middle of the 15th century by Italian refugees, and was nearly ruined by the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, which dispersed most of its best workmen to Spitalfields, Amsterdam, Crefeld, &c.

The events which occurred at Lyons during the first Revolution have been detailed at p. 372.

In 1815, Lyons threw open its gates to Napoleon on his return from Elba; the troops intended to defend it having at once deserted the standard of the Bourbons, to gather round the tricolor, in spite of the exertions of the Comte d'Artois and Marshal Macdonald to keep them to their duty.

ROUTE 106.

PARIS TO LYONS. — ROUTE DE BOURGOGNE BY SENS, AUXERRE, ARNAY LE DUC, CHALONS SUR SAONE, AND MACON. — DESCENT OF THE SAONE. — CHALONS TO LYONS.

466 kilom. = 289 Eng. m.

Malleposte (4 places) daily in 33 ours, returning in 37 hours.

Diligences daily in 41 hours to Chalons, and 8 or 10 thence to Lyons.

This route has the advantage over that by Moulins, that, by taking the diligence no farther than Chalons, you may enjoy a night's rest there, perform the rest of the journey by water, and yet reach Lyons as soon.

The traveller desirous of visiting Fontainebleau on his way to Lyons may follow R. 105. as far as that place, and then strike off into this road at Fossard.

The best point to quit Paris on this route is by the Barrière de la Gare, and the road along the S. or l. bank of the Seine, crossing that river just above the confluence of the Marne.

7 Charenton, a village of 1900 inhabitants, where the road to Troyes (R. 144.) strikes off to the l. Two of the detached forts intended to defend Paris guard the passage of the Seine here, one on each bank. At Alfort, through which our road passes, is a large Veterinary College.

The large building at Charenton is a lunatic asylum.

10 Villeneuve St. George.

The road passes through the forest of Senars, consisting chiefly of plantations of copse, cut down in rotation for fuel. In the midst stands an obelisk which led to a château of Louis XVIII., now pulled down.

13 Lieusaint.

13 Melun (Inn, Hôtel de France), a town of 6622 inhabitants, chef lieu of the Département Seine et Marne.

11 Chatelet.

8 Panfou.

"The traveller who approaches Montereau from the side of Paris involuntarily halts on the summit of the heights of Surville, which overhang the town on the N., to gaze on the lovely scene which lies spread out, like a map, beneath his feet: he would do well to remember that there, beside the little cross adjacent to the château, stood Napoleon during the last and not the least of his many victories, in Feb. 18th, 1814. On the evening of the 17th, the French troops assembled in imposing masses on these heights, (which they had gained only after a severe conflict) and which commanded the bridge and town beneath. The artillery of the guard was placed on either side of the road near the cross, and the emperor took his station, in person, amidst the guns, to direct their fire, for the enemy still held the town. Such was his eagerness to annihilate the dense masses of the enemy crowding over the bridge that he himself, resuming his old occupation of a gunner, with his own hand, as at Toulon, levelled and pointed a cannon upon them."—Alison. The allies were so hotly pursued by the French cuirassiers, that they were driven over the Seine, and out of Montereau, having barely time to blow up the bridge over the Yonne, which checked the pursuit in the direction of Sens.

Montereau is a town of 4153 inhabitants, occupying a pleasing situation, and one most advantageous for commerce, at the junction of the two navigable rivers the Seine and Yonne. The most considerable part lies on the l. bank of the Yonne. Both rivers are crossed by bridges, and the one over the Seine (or rather an older bridge in the same situation) was the scene of the murder of Jean Sans Peur Duke of Burgundy in the presence and by orders of the Dauphin (afterwards Charles VII.), during a conference between them, and in spite of the precautions which had been resorted to of erecting double barricades to divide the persons of the 2 princes. The blow was struck by Tanneguy du Chastel. The conference was designed to bring about a reconciliation, in order that the two parties might combine to resist the invasion of France by Henry V.

Steamers ply on the Seine, between Montereau and Paris.

14 Fossard.—Inn, La Poste; tolerably good. The road ascends the pleasant and fertile valley of the Yonne.

8 Villeneuve la Guiard.—Inn, H. de la Souche, tolerable.

12 Pont sur Yonne, pleasantly situated on green banks, fringed with tall poplars and silvery willows. The country is full of vineyards; and a larger proportion than ordinary of the châteaux of the old noblesse seem to be in existence near the churches of the villages, or peeping over the trees.

12 Sens. (Hôtel de l'Ecu; fairly good). This ancient capital of the Sennones is now but a small city, containing 9279 inhabitants. It is remarkably clean, with little becks of water running through the streets, supplied from a stream called the Vanne, which falls into the Yonne hard by. The cathedral, dedicated to St. Stephen, is one of the finest of its style, early and pure Gothic, resembling Canterbury; it is now undergoing a thorough repair. The tracery in front of the transepts is the perfection of flamboyant detail. The painted glass deserves peculiar attention. It was executed by Jean Cousin, a native of Soucy, a village near Sens, who attained great excellence in this branch of art. The colouring is extremely harmonious. The tomb of the Chancellor du Prat has escaped the general destruction, and it also has been carefully restored. There is also a monument to the dauphin, son of Louis XV. In the Treasury, among other curious relics are shown the vests and mitre of Thomas à Becket, his alb, girdle, stole, maniple, and chasuble, to all appearance genuine; they have been lately repaired. He fled to Sens 1164, when he escaped out of England from the wrath of Henry II.

The altar of St. Thomas is said to be the same at which Becket performed his devotions, and is very ancient. He resided while in this city in the Abbey of St. Columbe, now occupied by the Sœurs de l'Enfance de Jésus.

At Vallery, 12 m. to the W. of Sens, the Grand Condé is buried in the Church, which contains a costly monument of marble. The Château was designed by Philibert Delorme.

The walls of Sens, which, on the south side, extend in a straight unbroken line, exhibit in the lower portions some magnificent remains of Roman, some say, Gaulish masonry.

An open, chalky country follows, till you reach

14 Villeneuve le Roi, a remarkably pretty and peculiar town, with much scope for the use of the pencil and sketch book. The principal street is terminated by a gate at each end, of feudal times, yet apparently more for ornament than defence. The church, in the style of the Renaissance, is richly ornamented.

8 Ville Vallier.

9 Joigny. (Hôtel Duc de Bourgogne.) This town (pop. 5537) is also pleasantly situated on the Yonne. It derives its ancient name (Jovinia-cum) from Jovinian (see Rheims). — F. P.

A fine quay, closed at either end by an iron gate, runs along the side of the Yonne, from one end of the town to the other. The road to Dijon (R. 145.) issues out at the farther end; ours, turning to the rt., crosses the Yonne by a stone bridge. The Abbey of Pontigny, the retreat of Thomas à Becket, is about 20 m. from Joigny. (See R. 145.)

11 Bassou.

16 Auxerre. (Hôtel du Léopard; clean, good, and moderate.) This city, of 12,300 inhabitants, very prettily situated on the l. bank of the Yonne, and chef lieu of the department, is seen to great advantage from the hill above it, from which you descend. The grand mass of the cathedral, and two or three other large churches, and a fine ruined spire, all rise finely above the houses, looking very much like the cities in the background of pictures by old German masters; within, it is not of a common-place character. The Cathedral has a splendid, though unfinished façade in the Flamboyant Gothic style, which style indeed prevails throughout the edifice, except in the choir, in the early Gothic, of the end of the 12th, or beginning of the 13th century. "The transepts are covered externally with the boldest flowing tracery, occasionally standing free from the wall. The doors and rose windows are magnificent." — Petit. Within, it is most beautifully proportioned; and the painted glass, principally in mosaic patterns, is splendid. Here is the tomb of Jacques Amyot, whilome bishop of this see, and celebrated for his racy translation of Plutarch, so excellent in its style as almost to form an era in the history of the French language. The chapter of Auxerre was at one time one of the richest in France, but they freed themselves from most of their superfluous possessions by indulging in the luxury of litigation. In this respect Amyot lent them his aid. Certain members of the chapter claimed, by virtue of an ancient statute, the privilege of having their amices ornamented with a border of ermine; and he instituted proceedings to compel them to renounce this distinction. A minority in the chapter, who acquired the name of the débordés, were willing, for the sake of peace and quietness, to surrender their fur. The majority, who were called the bordés, would as soon have surrendered their heads; and to preserve this suit of clothes, they defied the lawsuit, and all its consequences. The parliament of Paris decided in favour of the bishop. The ermine was stripped off; and with it, property to the amount of about 100,000 livres, equivalent at least to ten times the amount at the present day. — F. P.

St. Germain, now attached to the Hôtel Dieu, on the height, is in a plainer style than the cathedral: it has lost part of its nave, but possesses a lofty choir, and transepts. Underneath are curious crypts, one below another: in the lower are some tombs of early counts of Auxerre. It has an ancient tower, which belonged to the W. front, but is now detached.

St. Pierre is a large and handsome specimen of Italianized Gothic, begun at the end of the 16th century, and finished 1672. St. Eusèbe is a Romanesque church in its nave, and detached tower, with a choir in the florid style, begun 1530.

There is an old clock tower over a gate-house in the Place du Marché.

"The Boulevards, in the place of the ancient walls which surround the town on 3 sides, are unique in the charming variety of prospects they present: the moats are filled with plantations of acacia, gardens, and vines; the fine old towers are covered with festoons of ivy."—Miss Costello.

A considerable quantity of wines (chiefly ordinaires), the growth of La Basse Bourgogne, are sent down the Yonne, hence to Paris. Châblis, about 12 miles to the E. of this, on the road to Tonnèrre, gives its name to a wine of superior quality, prized for drinking at breakfast or with oysters. About 12 miles to the N. E. is Pontigny, whose once celebrated Cistercian Abbey, suppressed at the Revolution, served as an asylum for 2 years to Thomas-à-Becket. The church is still the finest ecclesiastical structure in Burgundy, after the Cathedrals of Sens and Auxerre.

10 St. Bris.

12 Vermanton.

"Near Auxerre the vine is much cultivated, but in France its stunted stumps give no charm to scenery. Further on the soil is worse, but prodigiously manured, and they grow oats and rye in what appears a stiff red clay. Nothing to relieve the eye; not a bush, not a speck of green, not an habitation for miles on either side of the glaring white road; we travelled for ever up the steep rise, and down the sharp descent which succeed, as like each other and uninteresting as if all had been cast in the same mould."—Ride to Florence.

8 Lucy le Bois (a homely inn) stands in a sheltered and rather pretty valley. The rocks around, and the stone heaps at the road-side derived from them, abound in fossils of the lias and gryphite limestone.

About 6 m. from Vermanton, and 9 from Lucy le Bois, to the S., are the Grottes d'Arcy, a series of natural caverns in the limestone, many of vast extent, abounding in stalactites, and in bats, separated from one another by natural divisions, through which it is often necessary to crawl on hands and knees. The entrance to them is by a door inserted in an opening in the rock of a wooded dell, on the borders of the Cure. A guide, with candles, can be obtained at the village: the best time to visit them is during dry weather. The largest cavern is about 25 ft. high, 30 wide, and 400 long.

8 Avallon (Inn, Poste; reasonable.—F. K.), a pleasantly situated town, nearly surrounded by a ravine. Around it runs a broad terrace walk, under lime trees, about 500 ft. above the bed of the Cousin. The church is ancient, and has a curious Romanesque portal. Parts of its interior are singular.

8 m. off the road, to the E., is Vezelay, a decayed town, containing a very remarkable abbey church, dedicated to the Madelaine, finely seated on the summit of a hill. The ruinous W. front lost one of its towers by the attack of the Huguenots in 1569: the lower part of it is Romanesque, the upper, a late Pointed restoration, poor in effect. Another tower rises from the angle between the nave and S. transept. The W. doors lead into a sort of porch destined, like the gallilees in some English cathedrals, for catechumens: 3 other doorways open out of this vestibule into the nave; that in the centre is very rich in sculpture, and supported by an ornamental shaft, on which rests a transom covered with a procession of figures, in relief. The tympanum of the arch above it is filled with a large bas-relief: the figure of the Saviour forms the centre, attended by groups of saints reading or writing. One of the archivoltes above is carved with a zodiac, the signs of which are intermingled with monsters forming 29 medallions. The interior of the nave is very impressive from "its great length, its gloom, and the simplicity of design which pervades its Norman features." It has no triforium, and is surmounted by a cradle roof. These walls doubtless echoed to the voice of Becket in 1168, when he repaired to Vezelay on Ascension day, when the church was crowded, and mounting the pulpit cursed, by bell, book, and candle, all those who maintained in England "the Customs of their Elders." This proceeding so enraged Henry II. that he threatened to confiscate all the Benedictine abbeys in England, if the Order continued to shelter Becket in France. A flight of steps leads up into the choir, which, with the transepts, is a fine specimen of early complete Pointed Gothic. It is surrounded by 8 round pillars, each of a single stone, and it is lighted by lancet windows. The axe of the choir differs from that of the nave, inclining a little to the l.

Attached to the S. transept is the Chapter-house, a low vaulted chamber, its roof resting on 2 clumsy central piers in the Romanesque style. Here, it is said, the monks assembled, with tears in their eyes, before their expulsion in 1154, through the rebellion of their vassals, the townsfolk, aided by the forces of the Comte de Nevers. The oldest part of the existing church is the nave, from the porch E., and the crypt, and they probably date from 1050, the previous church having been destroyed, "prope ad nihilum redactum," in the middle of the 10th century, and its restoration begun 1008. The W. front is probably of the 12th century, and the choir of the early part of the 13th. Scarcely any remains exist of the domestic buildings of the abbey, which were so vast that kings, with their suite, could be lodged in them without discomfort to their monkish inmates. The entire length of the building is 404 ft.; the height of the choir 70 ft.

Vezelay is now a poor wretched town; its church is dropping to pieces, the roof and walls being cracked and crumbling, yet it possesses interesting historical associations. Here, on March 31, 1145, St. Bernard assembled a solemn council of the church, and preached, in the presence of Louis VII., and a multitude assembled in the open field, (the church being too small to hold them,) the necessity of a new Crusade, with such impressive eloquence, that the universal cry for the Cross burst from the crowd around; and the supply of crosses not being sufficient, the Abbot of Clairvaux tore his own red robe to pieces to distribute among his willing hearers. The king, on his knees, first received the sacred symbol from him; the nobles followed his example; and the year following he set out from hence, with his army, for the Holy Land. In 1190 Richard Cœur de Lion, and Philippe Auguste, repaired hither to assume the pilgrims' cross at the head of their armies.

Theodore Beza, the Reformer, and Calvinist theologian, was born at Vezelay, of noble parents, 1519. On the way to Vezelay you pass the church of St. Père, whose tower is "an almost unique specimen of transition, or very early complete Gothic. The detached shafts, and canopies at its angles, and its several stages of open windows, give it an air of lightness and elegance such as I have never seen surpassed in later buildings." — Petit.

To the S.W. of Avallon stretches the extensive tract of woodland called Forêt de Morvan, which supplies Paris with fuel, the wood being cut every 10 or 15 years, by portions at a time, and transported down the Yonne and Seine in rafts of faggots.

18 Rouvray.—Inn, La Poste; a decent country inn, but small. We here enter the Dept. de la Côte d'Or.

8 La Roche en Brenil.

13 Saulieu (Inn, H. d'Angleterre; very good) has a Romanesque church: some of the columns and mouldings are very beautiful.

Here a road branches off, through the very interesting city of Autun (R. 107.), to Chalons; it is $5\frac{1}{2}$ m. longer than the following line.

13 Maupas.

15 Arnay le Duc (Inn, Poste; very decent), rather prettily situated on the Arroux.

17 Ivry.

A fine view over the valley of the Saône and distant Jura is presented a little short of 10 La Rochefort (no good inn), a poor village, surmounted by a ruined castle, flanked by watch-towers.

12 Chagny.

The road runs near the Canal du Centre nearly all the way to 16 Chalons-sur-Saône.—Inns: H. du Parc, good: —Trois Faisans. The Saône, which runs through this town of 12,200 inhabitants, and which, from this point, becomes an important river, navigable for steam-boats, gives it much water-side activity. The Canal du Centre, which joins the Saône to the Loire, commences here, and affords an outlet for a considerable traffic and transit of goods to the Mediterranean and Atlantic from the central departments of France. Chalons is the Cabillonum of Cæsar, whose Commentaries should be one of the hand-books of every traveller through the districts of Gaul. A fine granite column, standing, or rather raised, on one of the places, is unquestionably a relic of the Roman age.

The town is dull, but clean, for France; and there is little worth seeing. But the quai, facing the river, is lined by good houses, and is the most lively portion. The cathedral (St. Vincent), lately restored, in tolerably good taste, with the addition of 2 new towers, is in the early Gothic, when the peculiarities of that style were beginning to mix themselves with the older Romanesque. The Hospital of St. Laurent, on the island in the Saône, has some good painted glass, which, it has been suggested, should be removed to the cathedral. At present it is necessary to traverse the sick ward in order to see it. The date of this vaulted dormitory, and of the hospital itself, is 1528.

Diligences daily to Paris; to Lyons; to Dijon.

Abailard died (1142) at the Abbey of St. Marcel, about 2 m. from Chalons, now destroyed, except the church; he was buried there, but afterwards removed to the Paraclete.

Descent of the Saône. — Chalons to Lyons.

From Chalons the traveller may proceed to Lyons either by land or by water. Steam-boats start every day, and if the traveller avails himself of them, he may complete his journey to Marseilles (or, if he chooses, to Civita Vecchia,) entirely by water. But there are two points to be taken into consideration in forming this plan: the first is, that in the summer he may occasionally be disappointed when he reaches Chalons, as the Saône is not unfrequently too low to be able to float the steamer; the second arises from the circumstance that the steamer cannot convey a four-wheeled carriage. A barge starts at the same time with the steamer, in which the carriage is placed, but it arrives at Lyons several hours later, and, what is worse, the time it takes in making the voyage is uncertain.

When there is water enough, the voyage is far preferable to the land journey, and is performed in 8 hours descending, — 10 or 12 ascending. Meals are served on board.

Diligences run daily to and fro, but take 16 hours, double the time of the steamer. The distance by the river is about 100 m. (35 lieux).

The post road runs along the rt. side of the Saône, sometimes close to it, at others out of sight of it, but so little removed from it that the course by water or land may, without inconvenience, be described together. *

Rt. immediately below Châlons is the mouth of the Canal du Centre, and a basin or dock (see p. 381.) for barges entering or quitting it.

The banks of the Saone are at first tame, but improve as you approach Lyons.

Rt.† Tournus (Inns: Sauvage;—H. de L'Europe: both tolerable;), a town of 5311 inhabitants, possessing a wooden bridge of 5 arches over the Saône.

Its Church, formerly attached to a venerable abbey, now destroyed, is a very plain edifice, in the Romanesque style, but interesting to the student for its architecture and antiquity. It is surmounted by a central tower, flanked with Corinthian pilasters at the angles, and has 2 other towers at the W. end. Its nave, preceded by a narthex or vestibule supported on 2 rows of short thick pillars without capitals, is probably of the 10th century. The nave is roofed with a series of cradle vaults, placed transversely, separated by cross arches, so as to divide it into compartments.

In the Place de l'Hotel de Ville is a granite column, reputed an antique.

The charming painter Greuze was a native of Tournus: the house where he was born is marked by an inscription: he died at Paris, 1805.

L. Fleurville, a bridge over the Saône.

L. St. Albin‡ has a curious, early pointed Gothic church; the windows lancet. The costume of the villagers is picturesque.

Near the river vineyards cover the slopes, which are a prolongation of the distant range of the hills of Charolois.

Rt. Mâcon.§—Inns: Le Sauvage, from which there is a good view of the river; tolerably good:— H. de l'Europe. Macon was heretofore the capital of the country of the Maconnois, and ruled by its own sovereigns from the time of Louis le Debonnaire until it passed to the house of Burgundy. The country was often settled as an appanage upon the younger branches of the family. The present population of the town, which is not flourishing, is 11,994: it is chef lieu of the Dept. Saône et Loire. The conjoint devastations of the Huguenots, who exercised the greatest cruelties and atrocities here, and of the Revolutionists, have nearly denuded Macon of all its ancient religious structures; hence the necessity of erecting a new church, which, until recently, was an unheard-of event in France. The towers of the cathedral are standing, but mutilated together with a very small portion of the body of the building, now turned into a blacksmith's forge. The river is crossed by a bridge of thirteen arches. From the bridge, but still better from a little esplanade planted with poplar trees beyond it, a view of Mont Blanc may be obtained. In the neighbourhood of Mâcon are many very fine prospects of the ranges of the hills of the Bourbonnois and Charolois, the latter being a continuation of the Côte d' Or.

Macon is thus mentioned by Cæsar, "Tullium Ciceronem Matiscone, rei frumentariæ causa, collocat." It is the birth-place of the distinguished living poet and deputy M. Alphonse de Lamartine.

* Post Road.— 18 Sennecy. First relay from Chalons.

From some of the eminences surmounted by the road, towards the East, you see the chain of the Jura, and, in favourable weather, the white snow of Mont Blanc, which may at first easily be mistaken for a cloud, distant as the crow flies about 100 miles.

† There is a pretty view of the winding Saône, and the town of Tournus from a hill at a short distance from 10 Tournus.

‡ Post Road.—16 St. Albin.

§ 14 Mâcon.

Mâcon is the centre of a great trade in the wine grown in its arrondissement, though at some distance from the town itself, and from our road: at the foot of the hills on the W. The best sorts are the growths of Thorins and Moulin à Vent, which are red, and the Pouilly, a white wine. Romanêche, situated in the midst of this wine district, 12 m. from Mâcon, possesses an important mine of manganese, which gives activity to many manufactures.

15 m. N. W. of Mâcon is Cluny, once famous for its ancient and wealthy abbey, of the order of St. Benedict, which, before the Revolution, had 600 religious houses dependant upon it, and enjoyed a revenue of 300,000 fr. a year.

It was so utterly destroyed in 1789, that of its noble Gothic church, which had 5 aisles and double transepts, only the two towers remain, with some fragment of wall, and a chapel of the 15th century. The town which has a population of 4152, and carries on some manufactures, is built on the site and with the materials of the abbatial buildings. The cloisters form a sort of public square, and a fragment of the Abbot's Palace is converted into a private dwelling.

The country on the l. bank of the Saône formed part of the ancient divisions of La Bresse and Dombes; its inhabitants are a primitive race, by no means enlightened.

The banks of the Saône acquire some elevation and picturesqueness below Mâcon; the Jura mountains being all along a feature in the view to the E.: the nearer hills studded with white châteaux and villages. The Château de Corielles, flanked by 4 round towers, stands at some distance off the road to the W.

Rt. At St. Romain, a suspension bridge.

L. Toissey, an ancient town of the principality Des Dombes, partly hid by poplars and willows.

Rt. Belleville. * A bridge.

About 13 m. to the W. is Beaujeu, capital of the province of Beaujolais, in the midst of a district famed for its wines.

L. Montmerle, a village situated below a considerable island, has a suspension bridge: other bridges are thrown across at Fléchère, Beauregard, and at Frans, opposite to Rt. Villefranche. † "A small town founded in the 12th century by Humbert IV., Count of the Beaujolais. It was the custom in the middle ages, when a feudal lord set up a new town, that he would endeavour to attract settlers by granting them advantageous privileges and franchises; and hence there are many Ville Franches in France, and Freyburgs in Germany, all founded in eras when it began to be needful to conciliate public opinion. Humbert did his best to draw custom. He granted to all who would become his burgesses, that the land should be let to them at 3 deniers per toise, and that they might beat their wives as much as they chose without fear or penalty, provided death did not ensue.

"The place has now rather a cheerful aspect, whatever it may have been in the age when the privilege was in vigour. The church has been a beautiful, though small, specimen of the florid Gothic."—F. P.

There is a bridge at St. Bernard.

Rt. Anse is the port of Villefranche.

L. Trevoux, is an ancient town of 2239 inhabitants, on the slope of a concave hill, surmounted by the ruins of its old castle. It possesses now no interest beyond that connected with the recollection of its having once been capital of the principality of Dombes, and the place where the

* Post Road.—12 Pontaneveaux.
11 La Croissée.

† Villefranche. Here the road turns away from the river, avoiding its windings, and following a nearly straight line, by 16 Limonest to
12 LYONS.

Jesuits compiled and printed the very learned works, called the "Journal de Trevoux," 1701, and "Dictionnaire de Trevoux," 1704, a sort of Encyclopædia. Their house remains, marked by the shield of arms of the order of St. Ignatius.

Dombes was acknowledged as an independent state by the French kings (except Francis I.), from Philippe Auguste down to Louis XIV., owing them only allegiance and aids of men in case of war. It had a parliament of its own, which met at Trevoux, and the right of striking money down to 1762. It is supposed to have been the Roman Triviæ, near which Septimius Severus beat the army of his rival, Albinus, and thus secured the empire for himself.

Through pretty scenery, between banks thickly scattered with habitations, the Saône, considerably contracted in width, passes under the richly wooded heights called Mont d'Or, rising 1000 ft. above the river, on the rt., by Belle Isle.

L. Neuville, and its suspension bridge, and

Rt. Couson, opposite to

L. La Roche Taillée, so called from the cutting which Agrippa caused to be made through it, to allow the passage of one of the great Roman highways.

Lower down is L'Ile Barbe, the favourite retreat of Charlemagne, linked to either bank by a suspension bridge. (See p. 375.)

The valley of Rochecorbon, with its wood and fountain of Roset, was a favourite haunt of Rousseau.

L. La Tour de la Belle Allemande (described p. 371.), and Rt. Pierre Scise. See p. 371.

The entrance to Lyons has been compared to the "approach to Bristol under the Slopes of Durdham, and King's Down, and the rocks of the Hot Wells; but the river Saône is larger, and the cliffs not so high."

LYONS, in R. 105. p. 365.

ROUTE 107.

PARIS TO CHALONS SUR SAONE, BY AUXERRE AND AUTUN.

470 kilom. = 291 Eng. m., or 5½ m. longer than R. 106.

The road is the same as Route 106, as far as 253 Saulieu.

10 "Pierre Ecrite, so called from an inscribed stone just beyond the village: that is to say, the stone remains, but the inscription is invisible. Antiquaries, however, maintain that it was in the Celtic language. This is the highest land between Paris and Lyons, and it is curious to observe the effect produced by this elevation, and its corresponding alteration of character, upon the aspect of the country. It might be Yorkshire. Trees and hedge-rows, so rare in other parts of France, are here universal: oak, hawthorn, and briar, not only skirting the road, but dividing the fields."—F. P.

11 Chissey. "The road continues descending, winding round by a species of corniche, from which the views are often fine and extended. In this part of the country there is a fine breed of oxen, generally cream-coloured, their brows and necks being protected by a peculiar thatching of straw, most neatly laid under the yoke, and preventing it from galling as well as affording a shelter from the sun."—F. P.

20 Autun.—Hôtel de la Poste; recently refitted, and very good; La Cloche. The first view of this very interesting city is remarkably grand; and, taken altogether, there are few localities which impress themselves more forcibly upon the imagination. It is supposed to have been the ancient Bibracte, capital of the Ædui, mentioned by Cæsar as "oppidum maximæ auctoritatis apud eos," but its name was changed, in the time of Augustus, into Augustodunum, modernised into Autun. Tacitus describes its importance as a fortress and great city, and states that the most illustrious of the youth of Gaul were educated here. "Autun, now a town of 10,000 inhab., stands at the foot of a lofty range of well-wooded mountains. The Roman ruins, hoary grey, distinguish themselves by their fine and peculiar forms. Amongst the masses of buildings, crowned by the cathedral and its lofty spire, is the Temple of Janus, as it is called, though without any sufficient authority, a square building, of which three sides are standing. It is denuded of ornaments, but very imposing, from its proportions and its solidity. It probably dates from the time of the Lower Empire. The two Roman Gates are very beautiful and very perfect. They are both nearly on the same plan; double arches below, and ranges of smaller arches above, ornamented with pilasters. The Porte d'Arroux is Corinthian, the Porte Saint André, Ionic. They are evidently of the Lower Empire, and the purist will find fault with the details; but if you will put away criticism, and enjoy the objects, the effect is most satisfactory. Nothing can be more charming than the appearance of the delicately-cut arches, coming off against the blue sky."—F. P. The Roman walls of Augustodunum, within which the present city has shrunk, are very massy; and large fragments still exist.

Just without Autun, upon the Dijon road, is a singular pyramid of masonry, called the Pierre de Couars. It is about 50 feet in height, and was probably originally much more lofty. The facing is entirely destroyed. It is quite solid, and is probably sepulchral: antiquaries suppose it to be the tomb of Divictiacus (?).

Autun had a noble amphitheatre. The ruins are now encircled by other buildings, but the general site of the Roman city is a perfect mine of antiquities. Many have been collected by M. Jovet, whose house covers a very magnificent mosaic, representing the Combat between Bellerophon and the Chimæra. "In M. Jovet's collection is another remarkable relic of a different era: it is a fragment of the tomb of the wicked Brunehault, who was buried in the abbey of St. Martin, a most curious structure, of which the last fragment has just been razed to the ground."

"The Cathedral of St. Lazare exhibits a great and interesting variety in its style of architecture. The lofty spire, covered with foliaged crockets, is a masterpiece of Gothic: so, also, is the rood-loft, composed of delicate and elaborate filagree work, almost a prodigy in its construction. But a large proportion of the building is in the Romanesque style, and very remarkable from its exhibiting the closest imitation of Roman art."—F. P. The elegant flamboyant decorations of the chapels in the nave, and especially the door of the sacristy, a charming bas-relief of Christ and the Magdalene, in the chapel which serves as baptistery, the painted glass in the Chapelle St. Nazare, representing the genealogy of the Virgin, deserve also particular attention.

In all parts of the city, you may see the disjointed and lamentable fragments of the ancient edifices by which Autun was once adorned.

Not far from Autun are the two valuable coal basins of Epinac (to the N.) and of Creuzot, which are worked by pits, in some cases more than 650 ft. deep, and employ about 1900 workmen. Mineral oil for lighting the mines is obtained by distillation from the bituminous schists accompanying the coal. The Romans used these very schists to line the walls of their houses at Autun.

At Creuzot are extensive iron furnaces, but the iron ore requires to be brought from a distance. From Epinac (where are considerable glass works for making wine bottles), the coal is transported on a tramway to the Canal de Bourgogne, and thence, by water, to Paris and Alsace. The Canal du Centre traverses the coal field of Creuzot (see p. 381.).

"Soon after quitting Autun, you enter the forest of Morvan. (p. 380.) The road ascends, but with frequent dips. It is richly wooded, and some of the little glens are lovely. The sides of the road are clad with alder and beech, with here and there a fine oak tree lifting up his head above his compeers. The rocks show between and amongst the verdure, and you see and hear the rushing of the little rills, dashing by or into the road."

17 St. Emiland. "Beyond St. Emiland you begin to find yourself in another climate. Vines reappear in great luxuriance, and, unlike other parts of France, they are often trained in festoons and arcades; a mode equally disadvantageous to the produce, and advantageous to the beauty of the scenery."—F. P.

14 St. Leger.

18 Bourgneuf.

12 Chalons sur Saône. (See Route 106, p. 381.)

ROUTE 109.

MOULINS TO CLERMONT AND LE PUY. VOLCANOES OF AUVERGNE.

To Clermont 95 kilom. = 59 Eng. m. A malleposte in 8 hours, daily.

Clermont to La Puy 122 kilom. = 75 Eng. m. Diligences daily.

Moulins is described in R. 105. This road contrasts agreeably with the monotonous dulness of that from Paris to Lyons, and is interesting from the natural beauties and rich cultivation of the country which it traverses; but, more than all, for the phenomena of the extinct volcanic mountains of Auvergne, through the midst of which it passes. It proceeds nearly due S. from Moulins, up the valley-plain of the Allier, the chief tributary of the Loire, first crossing by a bridge to its l. bank. The upper part of this valley above Aigueperse was anciently called La Limagne, and is believed to have been once a lake basin, in which were deposited the freshwater marls, sands, &c., which now contribute so much to its fertility.

19 Châtel Neuve, or de Neuvre. The mountains of Forez, which divide the waters of the Allier from those of the Loire, are seen on the E.

12 St. Pourçain.—Inn, Poste. A town of 4000 inhabitants on the Sioule. An Ecce Homo, carved in stone, in the church here, is praised.

The road, leaving the Allier on the l. at St. Pourçain, ascends the vale of the Sioule. It is a flat and uninteresting stage to 16 Mayet d'Ecole.

8 Gannat. There is a road hence to the Baths of Vichy (R. 105.). Our route is shaded by luxuriant walnut avenues.

The hill rising on the l. of the road, about 1 m. N.E. of Aigueperse, is called La Butte de Montpensier, and is composed of yellow marly limestones. There is a fine view from its top. Between it and the road is a hole which exhales carbonic acid nearly pure, so that small animals which come to drink from the pool of water which often collects at the bottom are apt to be suffocated. The common people, attributing this to the water, call it La Fontaine empoisonnée.

9 Aigueperse (Inn, Poste) is the first town in the department Puy de Dôme, and is celebrated as the birthplace of the Chancellor d'Aguesseau, born in the Château de la Roche: his statue may be seen in the Hôtel de Ville. Its name is derived from "aqua sparsa," from the streams around it. The choir of the principal church, attached to an ugly modern nave, deserves notice as a pure specimen of the Gothic of the 13th century; its lofty roof is sustained by long graceful columns. Here is a painting of the Nativity, attributed to Ghirlandajo, in a stiff style, (the figures said to be portraits of princes and lords of the Bourbonnais,) and a St.

Sebastian (?), locked up. There is also a Sainte Chapelle here, founded, 1475, by Louis, Dauphin d'Auvergne, inferior to one at Riom.

The Abbé Delille, author of "Les Jardins," was born here 1738.

"O champs de la Limagne, ô fortuné séjour, J'ai revu les beaux lieux qui m'ont donné le jour."

The hill of Chaptuzat, on the rt. of the road, is quarried for building stone; the rock is an oolite. Above it, and on many other eminences throughout the Limagne, beds of a tertiary limestone occur, entirely formed of the cases of insects resembling the caddis-worm, or May-fly, incrusted by carbonate of lime and formed into a hard travertine, called calcaire à friganes, or indusial limestone. The cases, or tubes, are coated over with shells of Paludina, often to the number of 100 around one tube, and 10 or 12 tubes are packed within the space of a cubic inch. These insects must have inhabited the lake which once covered the valley of the Limagne.

Near Riom the country becomes interesting, and exhibits the characteristic features of the scenery of Auvergne, a rich vegetation and beautiful verdure, produced by the abundant irrigation; a varied outline of country, with towns, castles, and villages perched on the tops of eminences commanding the Limagne.

16 Riom (Inns: Colonne: Ecu: de France) is a town of 12,500 inhab., the second in the dept. Puy de Dôme, in a cheerful situation, but built of dark lava from the quarries of Volvic, and paved with volcanic stones. It is encircled by boulevards planted with trees, in one part widening out into a platform called Pré-Madame, where a monument of granite has been raised to the memory of General Désaix.

The Sainte Chapelle, attached to the Palais de Justice, is, like that of Paris, a light and lofty lanthorn of stone, built 1382, the piers which support the roof forming the separations between the windows. It has, however, suffered material injury from being divided horizontally, by a floor, into two stories: the lower one is converted into a law court (Cour Royale), and is stripped of its painted glass in order to throw a light upon the proceedings; the upper one, turned into a record office, is filled with old musty deeds, so that its really beautiful stained windows can scarcely be seen.

St. Amable is a curious church, which will interest the architect and antiquary. The date of the nave, the oldest part, seems uncertain. The lower arches are Pointed, and rest on piers, having engaged pillars on three sides, but plain on the inner face; above them runs a gallery of circular arches roofed with a demi-vault, which serves the purpose of a range of flying buttresses to support the roof of the central aisle. The little sculpture employed is very rude. The choir is in the Gothic style of the 13th century, the arches alternately pinched up and expanding. The W. front and cupola above the cross are tasteless additions of the 17th century.

About a mile from Riom, on the W., is the village of Mosac or Mozat, whose church has been attributed to Pepin; but the only part which can be referred to the 8th or 9th centuries is the W. porch, now walled up. The nave, in the Romanesque style, seems to belong to the early part of the 12th century, and is remarkable for the beautifully executed capitals of its columns: the only windows are in the aisle. The choir and rest of the church are of the 15th century, and uninteresting. In the sacristy is preserved a silver gilt shrine, in the shape of a sarcophagus, ornamented with enamels, in the Romanesque style, made in the middle of the 10th century. It contained the relics of Saints Calmidius and Numadia.

At Volvic, a few miles farther to the W. of Riom, are the vast quar- ries of lava which have furnished the stones for building that town and Clermont. The lava current in which they are excavated has issued out of the extinct crater called Puy de la Nugère. They are partly subterranean, partly open to the sky; they have been worked since the 13th century, and give employment to the whole neighbouring population. The stone is porous, resembling trachyte, and contains specular iron in its cells; it is easily worked, and the bed furnishes blocks 20 ft. by 6 ft. in size. When first extracted, it is of a grey or slate colour, but darkens by exposure to the air: it is used for rude works of sculpture. The church of Volvic is ancient.

Volvic is built at the foot of the volcanic cone called Puy de la Bannière, on the lava current which has flowed from it, and appears to have crossed and covered that from Puy de la Nugère.

On an eminence near Volvic stands the ruined Castle of Tournoëlle, in ancient times one of the strongest in Auvergne, so that it resisted long and stoutly a besieging army under Guy Dampierre and Renauld de Forez, Archbishop of Lyons, in 1213, and again 1590, when it was defended against the forces of the League by Charles d'Apchon. The remains are accessible by a steep path, and part of them are tolerably perfect: the oubliettes, or dungeon entered only by a small hole from above, still exist under the round tower.

There is a foot-path or horse road direct from Volvic to Clermont.

About a mile before entering Clermont, the suburb of Montferrand, a cluster of narrow streets conspicuously seated on a limestone eminence, crowned by an old church dedicated to Notre Dame de Prospérité, is passed. It was anciently an independent town and fortress, and was called Montferrand le Fort. It was surprised and pillaged by the English, under Perrot the Bearnais, 1388. Froissart, in his chronicles, recounts at length the story of its capture.

An avenue of trees, nearly a mile long, leads into 15 Clermont, or Clermont Ferrand.—Inns: Ecu de France; H. de l'Europe; H. de la Paix (Boyers); all dirty, but good cuisine.

Clermont, once capital of Lower Auvergne, now of the dept. Puy de Dôme, is in itself an unprepossessing and gloomy town; from its irregular and confined streets, and especially from the dull hue of its houses, all built of lava. Some improvements have been made of late years, but enough of the old remains to justify Arthur Young's description of parts of it, as "one of the worst built, dirtiest, and most stinking places I have met with. There are many streets that can, for highness, dirt, and ill-scents, only be represented by narrow channels cut in a dunghill." Its principal interest is derived from its situation on a hill, composed chiefly of volcanic tuff, in the fertile Limagne, in the midst of a mountainous country, at the foot of that extraordinary range of extinct volcanoes which rear their conic or crater-shaped forms around, surmounted by the mountain of the Puy (i. e. pic) de Dôme, whence the department is named, which, though apparently overhanging Clermont, is nearly 5 m. distant. The population amounts to 32,427, including the suburbs.

On the outskirts of the town, nearly all round its circuit, except on the N.W., runs a line of boulevards, or "places," the chief of which are the Place de Jaude, a wide oblong dusty space on which fairs are held, surrounded by houses; the Place de Taureau, on which a monument has been raised to Gen. Désaix, a native of Clermont; and the Place Delille, by which the Paris road enters the town, named after the poet, who was also an Auvergnat.

Clermont is destitute of fine public buildings: the principal edifice is the cathedral, externally an irregular pile of dark lugubrious hue; it suffered serious injury from the phrenzy of the Revolution, being stripped of its ornaments and monuments, and condemned by the mob to be levelled with the ground, but was saved by the exertions of a citizen and magistrate, M. Verdier Latour, under the pretext that it would be useful to hold popular meetings in. It is, notwithstanding, an interesting example of the mature pointed Gothic, begun 1248, and carried on till 1265, by the architect Jean Deschamps (J. de Campis), but never completed. The interior, therefore, is all of a piece, presenting one harmonious whole, remarkable for its lightness and loftiness, the vaulted roof (of tufa) being more than 100 feet above the pavement. There are fine rose windows in the transepts. The painted glass is very beautiful; that in the choir is of the age of St. Louis (13th century), and displays his arms quartered with those of Spain: the glass in the large window of the nave is of the 15th and 16th centuries, and inferior; it has, besides, suffered from a hailstorm in 1835.

In one of the side chapels of the choir is an ancient sarcophagus of white marble, adorned with sculptures well executed.

The N. portal suffered least at the Revolution, is very richly adorned with sculptures, and deserves notice.

From the top of the tower the stranger may survey to advantage the town, and the volcanic mountains, the valley of the Limagne, and the plateau of Gergovia, the scene of Cæsar's discomfiture. (See p. 394.)

The most ancient and interesting church, in an architectural point of view, is Notre Dame du Port, a Romanesque edifice of the 10th or 11th century, judging from the evidence of style, but said to date from 870, and perhaps portions of the very curious crypt may be of that age. It is encrusted externally with rude mosaics. The tower above the W. door is modern (1823), but in tolerable taste: the S. doorway is surmounted by curious bas-reliefs, much mutilated, and partly hidden behind woodwork; yet Christ, between two six-winged cherubims, and the Adoration of the Magi, and the Baptism of Christ, may be distinguished below. The interior possesses some modern painted glass by a native artist, M. Thévenot, and in the crypt is a black image of the Virgin, said to have been found at the bottom of a well, which is supposed to work miracles, and is resorted to by pilgrims on the 15th May.

In the N.E. corner of the town, not far from the last-named church, is the Place Delille, in the midst of which has been placed a fountain of elegant design in the style of the Rénaissance, with some mixture of Gothic, executed 1515, for the Bishop Jacques d'Amboise. In the same quarter, on the l. of the road to Montferrand, is the Cimétière de la Ville; in whose chapel a curious antique sarcophagus, richly sculptured, has been converted into an altar.

In the Faubourg St. Alyre, to the N.W. of Clermont, and at the foot of the eminence on which it is built, rises a remarkable calcareous spring, called Fontaine petrifiante, issuing out of a volcanic peperino resting upon granite. It resembles that of Matlock, except that its deposits are more copious and quickly formed, from the larger quantity of calcareous matter suspended by the carbonic acid with which it is impregnated. It has deposited in the course of ages a mass of travertine or limestone, 240 feet long, 16 feet high, and 12 feet wide at its termination. It has formed over the rivulet a sort of natural bridge, Pont de Pierre, which is in fact nothing more than a huge stalactite, while a second bridge is in progress, and gradually increasing. So abundant is the quantity of lime held in solution in the water, that the pipes and troughs through which it passes would be choked up with stone, were they not cleared out every 2 or 3 months. By breaking the fall of a jet of the water, and allowing its spray to descend upon any articles subjected to it, such as bunches of grapes, baskets, nests, eggs, hedgehogs, &c., they become encrusted with the calcareous sediment, or petrified, as it is vulgarly called; and in this way even very fine casts are obtained from medals, &c.

The fountain and bridge are situated in a garden, within which is a bathing-house, supplied from its waters.

The Musée, or Etablissement Scientifique, a building situated on the S. side of the town within the ill-kept but beautifully-situated botanic garden, contains:—1. a collection of Natural History, particularly rich in the mineral products of Auvergne, which may be studied with advantage by the geological traveller previous to travelling through the country, as the specimens are arranged topographically. 2. The Public Library of 15,000 vols., including some curious ancient MSS. and a folio bible of the 12th century, illuminated with vignettes.

Here is a statue of Pascal (b. 1623), and a bust of Delille, both Auvergnats.

In a corner of the Jardin Botanique, a number of antiquities, inscriptions, fragments of columns, &c., and a head in relief of the Gallic Mercury (?), dug up in the vicinity, have been deposited, but are very little cared for, being exposed to the weather in the open air.

The terraced walks called Place du Taureau and Place de la Pôterne command fine views of the surrounding mountains.

Clermont has been the seat of several ecclesiastical councils: the most remarkable was that held in 1095, which may be said to have lighted the spark of the Crusades in Europe, the train having been laid by Peter the Hermit. It was convoked by Pope Urban II., who presided in person over the vast assembly, at the head of his cardinals, of 13 archbishops, and 205 bishops. The place of meeting is supposed to have been an open space to the rear of the church of Nôtre Dame du Port. Here, from a throne raised in the midst, around which were grouped the tents of tens of thousands of enthusiastic hearers, the pope pronounced that eloquent discourse which melted all to tears, and was followed by the universal shout of "Diex le volt" (Dieu le veut); when the cloaks of red cloth worn by the noble bystanders were torn into shreds, to form the badge of the cross, then first adopted and laid on the breast of all who took the vow.

Clermont is supposed to be the ancient Augustonemetum.

Conveyances.—Mallepostes to Paris by Moulins; to Montpellier, by St. Flour, St. Chely, Marvejols, and Lodève.

Diligences daily to Paris, by Moulins; to Lyons; to Le Puy and St. Etienne; to Montpellier, to Aurillac, to Alby and Toulouse, to Limoges and Bordeaux.

Several persons in the town let for hire carriages and saddle-horses, by aid of which numerous interesting excursions may be made in the Environs, the beauties of which, however, can be reached only by passing over a dreary intervening space of dusty road between high walls.

The ascent of the Puy de Dôme, the highest mountain in the neighbourhood, 4,846 ft. above the sea level, is very interesting on account of the insight it affords into the geological phenomena of the district. It may be performed in the following manner:—you may hire a char-à-banc at Clermont for 8 or 10 fr. to go and return. No carriage can advance farther than to the foot of the cone, the rest of the ascent must be performed on foot; it is practicable on horseback if the beast be sure of foot: the distance is about 6 m. A steep, but well engineered road, commencing at the barrier passing, at first, over black basalt, and afterwards over the more modern lava, scoriæ, and calcined stones, which have issued from the Puy de Pariou, leads, in about an hour and ½, to the hamlet and cabaret of la Barraque, where the road divides, the l. hand branch leading to the Puy de Dôme and Mont Dore, the rt. hand to the Puy de Pariou and Pont Gibaud, and passing on the l. the ruined Castle of Montrodeix. A guide may be hired at la Barraque, and the carriage may proceed nearly to the base of the Dôme, beyond which is a very steep ascent, partly over coarse grass, mixed with bilberry bushes, partly over the bare crumbling rock, of which the mountain is composed; a variety of trachyte, called Domite by the French geologists, because peculiar to this locality. It is so porous, that it retains no water on its surface, and the mountain in consequence does not possess a single spring. The summit is most easily accessible from the S., where a sort of zigzag path has been carried up its side. The Puy (pic) de Dôme rises to a height of 1,600 ft. above the table land around; it is the largest in mass, and the most central of the group of volcanoes of Clermont. Viewed from the W. only has it the form of a dome, but its name is said to come from dumum, the thickets which once covered its sides. From the top, the eye surveys the singular range of igneous mountains, craters, domes, lava currents (called cheires in the dialect of the country), and heaps of scoriæ, the produce of volcanoes, which, though extinct within the period of all human tradition, were once as active as Ætna or Vesuvius, and converted the surrounding district into the Phlegræan Fields of France. In many instances the vast lava currents flowing across the country for miles, may be traced up to the funnel-shaped craters which poured them forth. The fertile Limagne lies expanded to view, traversed by the winding Allier. On the S. W. rises the rival group of volcanoes of the Monts Dore; the remainder of the panorama is somewhat uninteresting over a monotonous country. The range of hills of the Monts Dôme rise from a granitic platform, and stretch "18 m. in length by 2 in breadth. They are usually truncated at the summit, where the crater is often preserved entire, the lava having issued from the base of the hill; but frequently the crater is broken down on one side, where the lava has flowed out. Had these cones of loose sand and ashes been in existence previous to the Deluge, they must have been swept away, or greatly altered, by the power of a current of water. Had these volcanoes, again, been in activity in the time of Cæsar, he would scarcely have failed to observe them, when encamped on the neighbouring plateau of Gergovia (p. 394.), or to have mentioned them in his Commentaries." — Lyell's Geology. See Scrope and Daubeny on Volcanoes.

The experiments instituted by the philosopher B. Paschal, to determine the weight or pressure of the atmosphere, were made on the Puy de Dôme within view of his native town.

A chapel, dedicated to St. Barnabe, formerly stood on the summit; and the blocks of basalt, brought from a distance to build it, still strew the mountain side.

In descending from the summit, every one should visit the crater called the Hen's Nest, Nid de la Poule, at the base of the Petit Puy de Dôme, a regular bowl-shaped hollow 294 feet deep, and nearly the same in diameter.

Still further to the N., the Puy de Pariou deserves to be ascended, because it is one of the most beautifully regular and perfect volcanic cones and craters existing in Auvèrgne. The sides of this bowl-shaped hollow are composed of scoriæ and pozzolana, thrown up so regularly from below, that they taper upwards into a narrow ridge so little degraded by time or by the weather, that in many place it is barely wide enough for one person to walk along it. The crater is 300 feet deep, and 3000 in circumference, measured along the brim of the bowl. It has the figure of an inverted cone. "It is clothed to the bottom with grass; and it is a somewhat singular spectacle to see a herd of cattle quietly grazing above the orifice whence such furious explosions once broke forth. Their foot tracks, round the shelving side of the basin, in steps rising one above the other, like the seats of an amphitheatre, make the excessive regularity of its circular basin more remarkable." — Scrope.

The lava from this crater flowed down in one undivided stream, bristling and rugged on its surface, like that of a river blocked up by floating masses of ice. After descending as far as la Barraque it encountered a small knoll of granite. The lava has accumulated against this impediment into a long and elevated ridge, "which still bears the appearance of a huge wave about to break over the seemingly insignificant obstacle; but an easier issue offered itself in two lateral valleys." The rt. hand branch "entered the valley of Villar, a steep and sinuous gorge, which it threaded, exactly in the manner of a watery torrent, turning all the projecting rocks, dashing in cascades through the narrowest parts, and widening its current, where the space permitted, till, on reaching the Limagne, it stopped at a spot called Fontmore, where its termination constitutes a rock, 50 feet high, still quarried for building-stone. From the base of this rock gushes a plentiful spring, the waters of which still find their way from Villar, beneath the lava which usurped their ancient channel." — Scrope.

The left-hand branch "plunged down a steep bank into the valley of Gresinier, replacing the rivulet which flowed there with a black and shagged torrent of lava; entered the limits of the Limagne at the village of Durtol, and, following the course of the stream, did not stop till it reached the site of the village of Nohanent. Here, as at Fontmore, an abundant spring bursts forth from the extremity of the lava current. The springs of the valley of Durtol find a passage beneath the lava concealed among the scoriæ, which always form the lowest part of a bed of lava, and flow on in these subterranean channels, till they burst forth at the limits of the lava, in the same manner that the Arveiron and other Swiss rivers issue from beneath, under the termination of a glacier. Above Nohanent, consequently, is seen the anomaly of a valley without any visible stream; and the inhabitants of Durtol are condemned, in seasons of drought, to the strange necessity of seeking at Nohanent, a distance of 2 m., the water which flows below their own houses. A similar phenomenon is common throughout Auvèrgne, wherever a current of recent lava has occupied the bed of a mountain rivulet not sufficiently copious or violent to undermine the lava above, or open a new side channel through its former bank." — P. Scrope.

"A little to the N.W. of the Puy de Pariou is the Puy de Clersou, whose 'figure is most precisely that of a bell,' and which is curious from the numerous perforations made in it for the purpose of obtaining trachyte for sarcophagi." — T. J. T.

Instead of returning from the Puy de Dôme by la Barraque and the high road, you may strike down into the Val de Fontanat to Royat, a poor and filthily dirty village, 8 m. from Clermont, which has twice been nearly swept away by inundations of the torrent which flows past it. It is built on one of the branches of the lava current which has issued from the Puy de Gravenoire. The torrent, flowing through the valley, has cut through the bed of basaltic lava to a depth of 65 feet, exposing, at the bottom, a sort of grotto, out of which gush numerous copious springs, some of which, conducted in an aqueduct to Clermont, supply the town with fresh water. There are many other sources higher up the valley, issuing out at intervals from the rocky sides. The scenery of the vale of Royat is overpraised by the French; but a fine view is gained of the Puy de Dôme from some part of it. The church is remarkable for its antiquity (anterior to the 11th century): it has a curious crypt supported by low columns, and a spring rises in the midst of it; it is in a very dilapidated state.

The Puy de Gravenoire is composed of scoriæ and pozzolana; the latter is used in the country to make mortar, and is commonly called "gravier noire," whence the name of this hill.

"The conical basaltic summit of the Puy de Girou, 3 or 4 m. to the S. of Clermont, is an excellent point for obtaining an extensive view over a considerable portion of Auvergne." — T. J. T.

At Pontgibaud, 13 m. from Clermont, on the road to Limoges, may be seen an old feudal castle of the 14th century, which once belonged to the family Lafayette, and was visited by Montaigne, and the smelting-houses, where the argentiferous lead, from mines in this neighbourhood, is refined and separated. The village and castle stand on a lava current, which has issued from the base of the very perfect and regularly-conical crater, called Puy de Come. The course of this current deserves observation: descending the granite slope, it has covered the ground on which Pontgibaud now stands; then, pouring in a broad sheet down a steep granite hill into the valley of the Sioule, it has usurped the ancient bed of that river for more than a mile, and crossing the more ancient stream of Louchadière, near Pichadoire, terminates there. The river has, in consequence, worked out for itself a fresh bed between the lava and the granite of its W. bank, and in one place has laid bare a singular basaltic colonnade, formed of jointed pillars, partly vertical, partly twisted. "In the ravine between the smelting house and the castle is a small isolated knob of granite which separates the two great lava currents of Louchadière and Come. The former continues a short way down the rt. bank of the river, and then crosses it." — T. J. T.

At some little distance to the N.W. of Pontgibaud are the ruins of the Chartreuse de Port Sainte Marie, while in an opposite direction, a little to the S., near the margin of the lava current, from the Puy de Come, is the Fontaine d'Oule, a grotto, whence issues a streamlet which is partly frozen in the hottest weather of summer; but in winter preserves a temperature considerably higher than that of the outer air. "Several of the more interesting Puys are easily accessible from the road between Clermont and Pont Gibaud, and of these two may be particularly specified, viz., the Puy du Grand Sarcouy, 3799 feet above the sea level, composed of domite, of a striking, flattened hemispherical form, and having on its S.E. side a large artificial excavation, about 70 feet long, 30 wide, and 35 high, from which the trachyte was quarried in ancient times for sarcophagi; and the conical Puy de Chopine, 3910 feet above the sea, of a singularly complicated and confused geological structure, and composed chiefly of domite, granite, and basalt: the view from it is very fine." — T. J. T.

The Puy de Louchadière may be visited from Pont Gibaud by the cross-road leading to Volvic.

The excursion to the volcanoes and baths of Mont Dore is described in R. 110.

The Puy de la Poix, about 3 m. from Clermont on the Lyons road, is mentioned in R. 112.

The Limagne, or Valley of the Allier, is far more interesting above Clermont, on the way to Le Puy, than below it. Here it is truly a luxuriant garden, teeming with the most varied productions.

Soon after quitting Clermont, by the road to Issoire, we skirt a lava current from the mountain Gravenoire, called Plateau de Beaumont, a most characteristic specimen of a lava stream, which, although partly covered with vines, exhibits, even to the unscientific eye, in a manner not to be mistaken, compact and porous lava, ashes (scoriæ), and volcanic dust (pozzolana). Beyond rises the singular peak of Montrognon, a basaltic dyke bursting through fresh water strata, crowned by an old castle, built by the 1st dauphin of Auvergne (not by Cæsar), and demolished, like so many other feudal fortresses, by the Cardinal Richelieu. The basaltic prisms on which it is founded are the most regular which occur in this district. Our road next passes, within a short distance on the rt., the Hill of Gergovia (4½ m. from Clermont), memorable as the site of the chief city of the Arverni (whence Auvergne), so nobly defended by the Gauls and their chief, Vercingetorix, against Cæsar, who was more seriously worsted here than in any other of his numerous campaigns, having run great risk of being made prisoner, and having left his sword in the enemy's hands. The hill of Gergovia is as interesting for its geology as for its history: it is a table-land, composed of a base of fresh water marls, capped by a sheet of basalt, surrounded by steep escarpments, absolutely inaccessible on the N. and W., while on the S. and E. it presents a slope, in the form of steps, occasioned by the horizontal strata of rock composing it. At the base of the eminence flows a small stream, the Auzun, whence the Gaulish garrison are supposed to have drawn water, there being no springs upon the plateau itself; and one of Cæsar's first objects was to cut them off from this supply. The hill called La Roche Blanche, surmounted by a tower of the middle ages, though called Tour du Cæsar, is conjectured to be the Gaulish post seized by two Roman Legions in order to effect that object. Cæsar's camp is supposed to have been formed on a detached and lower eminence, called Le Crest. The only traces of human habitation on the top of the table-land of Gergovia are some scanty foundations of walls. Some Roman coins and Gaulish axes of flint, found from time to time, and a rampart or agger of loose stones, which may be traced near the margin of the plateau. In the ravine above the village of Merdogne, a section of the strata composing the hill is exhibited, consisting of beds of white and greenish marls, nearly 300 ft. thick, intersected by a basaltic dyke, which has greatly altered the marl in contact with it. In the flanks of this hill also are found extensive deposits of the limestone formed of the cases of insects mentioned before (p. 387.).

The road to Le Puy, unlike the monotonous chaussées of most other parts of France, winds and undulates between and over varied heights, sometimes crossing a lava current or basaltic dyke, and is generally shaded from the sun by luxuriant walnut trees. Scarcely an eminence but possesses some interest, either from its volcanic origin, or from its picturesquely-placed castle in ruins, or village, which, in this district, is almost invariably perched on the hill-top. The country is very populous as well as fertile, and intersected by numerous roads.

"The Puy de Marman, a little to the N. of Vayre, is celebrated among mineralogists for the beautiful crystallized specimens of mezotype contained in the volcanic tuff and basalt of which it is composed. In the same neighbourhood interesting fragments of charred wood, whose bark has been converted into mezotype, are met with in the tufa of the Puy de la Pignette, situated a little to the N. of Mouton." — T. J. T.

After passing the populous village

Vayre, we reach, by a steep descent, the post station,

23 Coudes, situated on the bank of the Allier. The castle of Montpeyroux, on an adjoining eminence, now reduced to a round tower, and some fragments of walls, belonged to Philip Augustus. "Near Coudes a variety of sandstone termed Arkose is quarried for millstones. Between Coudes and Montpeyroux veins of fibrous arragonite occur in travertine, and farther down the river Allier at Corent there are gypsum quarries which afford fine specimens of fibrous gypsum."— T. J. T. From Coudes through a lovely country, which keeps the attention constantly alive,

In the Ravine des Etouaires, near the village of Perrier, an interesting geological section is presented. Here fossil remains of extinct quadrupeds, mastodon, tapir, rhinoceros, elephant, &c., have been found in alluvial beds, covered by volcanic breccias, and alternating with them. Near Vayre and at Perrier the rock has been excavated, to form cave-dwellings; above Perrier rises the tower of Maurifolet.

A view of the Monts Dores rising on the W. may be obtained near 11 Issoire (Inn, La Poste), an ancient town of 5990 inhabitants, situated on the Couze, a short way above its exit into the Allier. The church of St. Paul will interest the architect and antiquary, as a characteristic specimen of Auvergnat architecture, as it prevailed in the 10th and 11th centuries. It is in the Romanesque style, ending in 5 apses at the E., surmounted at the cross by a tower, the upper part of which, and also the W. front, are modern. The exterior of the wall at the E. end is singularly decorated with rude mosaics, and with 12 medallions, representing the signs of the zodiac, let into the wall under the cornice. Under the window of the N. transept are 2 bas-reliefs, representing the Angel appearing to Abraham, and the Sacrifice of Isaac. In the interior the arches are semicircular, the side aisles and transepts being covered with a stone roof, forming the quarter of a circle, and thus serving as a buttress to support the tower and central walls of the nave. There is an extensive crypt under the choir.

The chancellor Duprat was born here. The chief manufacture is that of copper kettles.

After passing through St. Germain Lembron, and leaving a little on the l. the coal mines and steam engines of St. Florine beyond the Allier, we quit the volcanic country, and the Department Puy de Dôme, to enter that of La Haute Loire, shortly before reaching 20 Lempde (Inn, Poste) situated on the rt. bank of the Alagnon. Here the road to St. Flour, Montpellier, and Aurillac (R. 114.), branches off. It is the line of a malleposte.

14 Brioude. — Inn, H. du Commerce. The very fine Romanesque church of St. Julien is curious for its semicircular E. end, with chequered patterns in a coarse mosaic of particoloured stones on the outer walls, and round its 5 projecting apsidal chapels, of elegant design. The interior is lofty; the arches of the choir are pointed, and the capitals of the columns adorned with foliage; the arches of the nave are round, and the capitals of the columns supporting them are partly very grotesque, partly display a nearly pure classic character. At the W. end, which is almost bare externally, is a sort of inner vestibule, or narthex, supporting, on low arches, 3 chambers, one of which, the chapel of St. Michel, is decorated with curious antique frescoes of the 13th century. The canons of the church of St. Julien the Martyr anciently bore the title of counts.

The very curious Church of La Chaise Dieu is distant 18 m. from Brioude, nearly due E.

The monastery of La Chaise Dieu (Casa Dei) now ruined, and attached to a dilapidated little village (Cheval Blanc is the inn), is situated at a considerable elevation, on a high mountain. It was founded in the 11th century by St. Robert, a canon of Brioude, and became the most opulent convent in Auvèrgne. Of this original structure nothing exists except, perhaps, an external gateway. The monastic buildings were destroyed at the Revolution. The church alone remains, and is a noble edifice in the pointed Gothic style, begun 1343, chiefly at the expense of Pope Clement VI., a native of Chaise Dieu, who laid the first stone, and is buried under a mutilated monument, surmounted by his effigy, wearing the triple crown. The carved woodwork of the 156 stalls in the choir is much admired and deservedly. On the N. wall, which encloses the choir, are traces, now nearly defaced, and obliterated by moisture, of a Dance of Death, painted in fresco, probably in the 15th century. Here are preserved some of the most curious ancient tapestries remaining in France, executed probably at the beginning of the 16th century, woven partly with gold thread. The tomb of another pope, Gregory XI., and of an abbot, in the S. choir aisle deserve notice. Two sides of the cloisters remain tolerably perfect, and are of a good style. Contiguous to the church rises a tall square donjon tower, the only remains of the ancient fortifications which surrounded the monastery. It is surmounted by a bold cornice.

2 m. beyond Brioude, on the road to Le Puy, at the wretched village of La Vieille Brioude, the Allier, here running in a deep and rocky bed, is crossed by a Bridge of a single arch of stone, which was long celebrated as being the widest in span of any known, measuring 181 English ft. and 90½ ft. in height, but now surpassed by the stone arches of Turin and of Chester (200 ft. span). It is a very noble arch, and constructed of Volvic lava. It replaces a more ancient bridge (b. 1451), of equal dimensions, which fell down in 1822. Immediately beyond the bridge, the road begins to ascend, and continues over a hilly and uninteresting country, almost constantly mounting higher, for many leagues. A little beyond the poor village of 18 St. George d'Aurat, the château de Chavagnac is passed, at the distance of 1½ m. on the l. of the road: it is remarkable as being the birthplace of Gen. Lafayette.

By a long, though gradual ascent, which the diligence takes 3 hours to surmount "au pas," the Montagne de Fix, separating the valley of the Allier from that of the Loire, is passed. Measured at the village of Fix, this road is 3197 ft. above the sea level, and one of the highest carriage roads in France.

20 Limandre.

We are now again upon volcanic rocks, belonging to the basin of Le Puy. The small river Borne, which runs into the Loire below Le Puy, is crossed, and the road is carried down its valley, passing, at a distance of 4 m. from Le Puy, under the black rock of basaltic breccia, escarped and inaccessible on all sides but the N., which bears the ruined castle of Polignac, seat and cradle of that ancient family, the branche aîné of the name, whence sprang the Cardinal, a diplomatic servant of Louis XIV., and the well-known minister of Charles X. It was pulled to pieces during the fury of the Revolution, and all the lands sold; but the mouldering and picturesque ruins, which still bristle on the top of the rock, were repurchased by the family. They consist of rude but strongly-built walls, often double and treble, with flanking towers at intervals, surmounted by a square donjon tower. Part of the pile of buildings which served as dwellings may be as old as the 12th century. There is little to be seen except an enormous mask, rudely carved in granite, of a bearded human face, with a wide orifice for the mouth. According to the tradition a Temple of Apollo occupied the summit of the rock before the castle, and from this mouth-piece (somewhat after the fashion of the Bocca della Veritâ at Rome), oracles were delivered: hence some have gone so far as to derive Polignac from "Apollinis Arx." (?) Sunk in the platform of the castle is a well, called Puit d'Oracle, from a tradition that the oracles were delivered from it through the mask, which is said to have covered the well. At a depth of 20 ft. this well communicates with a vaulted chamber, supported on circular arches, resting on square piers, designed doubtless as a cistern, into which rain water was conducted by pipes, now stopped up. About 25 paces from the well is the abyme, a hole about 40 ft. deep, and 15 wide, cut in the rock, probably designed as a storehouse. The church of Polignac, at the foot of the castle rock, is an ancient Romanesque edifice.

Upon a sudden turn of the road, here bordered by basaltic columns, a very striking view is presented of Le Puy and its volcanic rocks; the "spirey pinnacle" of St. Michel's, resembling more an artificial obelisk than a natural eminence, and Corneille, starting up from amidst the masses of buildings, while on the rt. appears Espailly.

16 LE PUY.—Inns: Palais Royal:—H. du Commerce, neither first rate. Le Puy, anciently capital of the Velay, and now of the Department of Haute Loire, with 14,924 inhabitants, is, at a distance, one of the most striking, uncommon, and picturesque towns in France. Excepting the broad modern Boulevard, through which the high roads from Clermont and St. Etienne pass, which stands on level ground, the buildings and narrow streets of the old town are carried up a steep slope, surmounted by a towering, table-topped mass, called Rocher de Corneille, whose summit, vertically escarped and moldering in the form of turrets, is surmounted by the ruins of an old castle, the stronghold and place of retreat from danger of the former bishops. This rock is a volcanic breccia, resting on a calcareous base.

Far more remarkable, though less lofty, is the Rocher de St. Michel, an isolated rock of basaltic tufa, which, from its needle shape, gives the name De l'Aiguille to the suburb in which it stands. It rises from the margin of the stream of the Borne to a height of 265 ft., with a thickness of 500 ft. at its base, and 45 or 50 on its top. It is a fragment of a vast bed of volcanic rock, once covering the country around. The rocks of Corneille and Polignac are also relics of it, and because harder than the rest, have resisted the erosive processes of rivers, and the atmosphere, which have scooped out into valleys the intervening portions, and have washed away the débris. Faujas de St. Fond absurdly supposes the Aiguille of St. Michel to have been projected by a volcanic eruption from below, and consolidated in its actual form. The sides of this truncated cone, or sugar-loaf, are nearly vertical, and its top is surmounted by a small chapel, which just fills the platform, dedicated to Michael, the saint who loves such airy sites (see p. 93.). This building, rendered accessible by a winding stair partly cut in the rock, is in the Romanesque style, and was constructed at the cost of a dean of the cathedral in the 10th century. Its Moresque portal, a circular arch under a trefoiled arch, is ornamented with curious sculptured mermen, bas-reliefs, and chequered stone work, composed of black scoriæ, white sandstone, and red tile, in the style of Marquetterie. The interior presents a low irregular choir, supported by short pillars with carved capitals.

From the top of the rock a good view is obtained of the vine-clad hills covering the slopes of the valley, dotted over with white country-houses, boxes, and pavillons, built in the midst of the vines, also of the white escarpments of the tertiary strata, laid bare here and there.

Near the foot of this rock stands an octagonal building which has long passed for a heathen temple of Diana, though destitute of any pretensions to such a title, being, in fact, a Christian edifice in the Romanesque style, and perhaps originally a baptistery: some say a chapel of St. Claire. A small apse projects from its eastern side, and it is entered by doors on the N. and W. It has an octagonal roof, with a hole in the centre, resting on columns placed in the angles. It may have been built by the Templars, who had property in this suburb.

A road slopes upwards from St. Michel, under the Rock of Corneille, past the Hospital, and the little turning box, in which enfans trouvés are deposited after ringing a bell to announce their arrival, through the "Rue de la Raison," to

The Cathedral, which rears its singularly streaked W. front high over the other buildings. The regular approach to it is up the steep streets leading from the market-place to the long flight of steps under the huge cavernous vaulted portal, which is prolonged in a sort of corridor beneath the church. As the slope of the hill denied to the architect level ground sufficient to extend his church to the W., he was forced to raise an artificial platform for it upon these vast substructions. The doorway is flanked by two pillars of Egyptian porphyry. It is a heavy ungainly building in the Romanesque style; its interior not improved by the repairs and stucco applied at the expense of Louis XVIII. The oldest part of the church is the choir, including 4 compartments of arches on either side and the transepts; each compartment is cross vaulted; the probable date is the 10th or 11th century. This church is chiefly remarkable for a miracle-working image of Nôtre Dame du Puy, which for many centuries has attracted thousands of devout pilgrims, who still repair hither, though in less number than formerly. Among its visitors in former times are numbered several popes, and the following kings, Louis VII., Philippe Auguste, Philippe le Hardi, Charles VI. and VII., Louis XI., Charles VIII. and François I.: its visitors at present do not exceed 4000 annually, and are chiefly of the lower order of peasants. One cause for this falling off may be that the existing image deposited over the high altar, a black figure of the Virgin and Child with shining faces, is a modern work, executed by a sculptor in the town, whose name is well known, from recollection of the original, which was destroyed at the Revolution. The original Nôtre Dame du Puy, believed to have been made by the Christians of Mount Lebanon, or, according to some accounts, by the prophet Jeremiah himself, and brought to Europe at the time of the Crusades, was of cedar wood, singularly swathed round with bands of papyrus glued to it, and partly inscribed. Upon this the features of the face, the flesh of hands and feet, and the draperies were painted in distemper, in a rude style, probably by some artist who copied from Egyptian models.

A marble tablet on one side of the church records the names of 20 priests of the diocese slaughtered in the Revolution 1793-4 and 8.

The monument raised to the Constable Du Guesclin, whose body reposed some time at Le Puy, after his death at Châteauneuf de Randon, and whose entrails were buried here, has recently been restored in a chapel on the N. side of the Gothic church of St. Laurent, in the lower part of the town. His effigy represents him in armour, except the helmet, lying on his back, his hands raised in prayer. The head is modern, but copied from a cast of the original destroyed by the Baron des Adrets and his followers, and is considered to have some claim to be looked on as a portrait.

The collections in the Musée, not far from the cathedral, are of considerable interest as local curiosities in art and nature. Besides some mediocre paintings, (among them Henrietta Maria, queen of Charles I., a copy from Vandyke; a faint, but curious portrait of Henri II., in the style of Janet, and a good landscape by Huysman,) are some Roman antiquities, a bas-relief of a Stag and Boar Hunt, found on digging the foundations of the Eveché; also 3 Genii or Cupids fishing, (one with 2 Dolphins of very fair execution) from Margeaix; a cippus hollowed out into a sarcophagus, bearing figures of arms, cut in relief, among them a cross-bow (?); cast of a bronze hand, with a Greek inscription, recording a treaty of peace; a cast from the so-called Mask of Apollo, at Polignac, (see p. 396.); one or two groups of Gothic sculpture, nuns, female saints, &c.; carvings in ivory, in Byzantine and Gothic styles; a portion of the inscribed papyrus in which the image of N. D. de Puy was swathed, preserved at the time the image was burnt, at the Revolution; some old furniture; an abbot's seat, carved in the style of the Renaissance, and an arm-chair of Gothic work, bearing the arms of Polignac. Those who take interest in the geology and mineralogy of the district will find the collections here not only the best part of the whole museum, but one of the best arranged and best named cabinets, which any provincial museum in France possesses, under the inspection of M. Bertrand de Doue, the able expositor of the geology of Velay. The formations of La Puy en Velay, the Vivarais, and the Ardèche may be studied in distinct series of specimens topographically arranged, side by side with a series of the volcanic rocks of Vesuvius for the sake of comparison.

Here are preserved the bones of rhinoceros, hyæna, deer, &c., found by Dr. Hibbert, a Scotch geologist, at St. Privat d'Allier, in a matrix of scoriæ, between 2 layers of basaltic lava; a discovery of great interest, as proving the recent date at which the volcanoes of the Velay were in activity; also fossil bones of Palæotherium, of Anthracotherium Velaunum, so named by Cuvier from Le Puy, the locality where it was found, of hippopotamus, found in the terrain du transport near Polignac, and fossil fruits from the coal measures at Longeac.

The manufacture of cotton lace gives employment to the females of the lower classes in and about the town, and some specimens are shown at the museum of great beauty.

About 1 m. W. of the town is the village of Espaly, surmounted by another castle-crowned rock of volcanic breccia. Charles VII. was residing here during the occupation of France by the English (1422), when news was brought of the death of his father, and his scanty train of followers proclaimed him King of France in the ancient fashion, by raising him aloft on a shield, at the same moment that the infant Henry VI. of England was proclaimed, with all pomp, at Paris, the successor to the French throne. There are good displays of basaltic columns here, called Les Orgues d'Espaly; and on the opposite side of the river, in the eminence of Denise, several coarse varieties of precious stones, sapphires, zircons, and garnets, are found in the basalt, and in the sands of the neighbouring streamlet of Riou Pezzouliou. Fossil remains of Anthracotherium and other extinct animals have been found in the marly limestone near Espaly.

The castle of Polignac is a walk of about an hour, not far from the road to Clermont (p. 396.).

The Roche Rouge, an isolated mass of basalt, rising abruptly out of the granite rock to a height of 60 ft., about 3 m. to the E. of Le Puy, will interest the geologist. Its name is probably derived from the colour of the lichens which grow on it. It is nothing more than the expanded portion (renflement) of a basaltic dyke; which, from superior hardness, has resisted the action of the weather; while the softer granite around has been disintegrated. The dyke is continued on either side in a vein often not more than a foot wide.

Diligences twice a day to St. Etienne; daily to Clermont, and to Langogne.

"The views of the town from the surrounding heights, from the roads to Espaly, Polignac, St. Etienne, are very striking. Mr. Scrope prefers the extensive panorama from the more distant Mont d'Ours, and observes with some geological enthusiasm,—"There are, perhaps, few spots on the globe which offer a more extraordinary prospect than this. To the eye of a geologist it is superlatively interesting, exhibiting in one view a vast theatre of volcanic formation, containing igneous products of various natures belonging to different epochs, and exhibited under a great diversity of aspect."

"The traveller bound from Le Puy to the Volcanic District of the Vivarais and Ardèche may take the diligence to Pradelles, and thence strike across the country, by bad cross roads, to Aubenas, by Thueyts (R. 118. 121), or, more directly, by a mule-road to Montpezat; in the course of which he may visit the Mt. Mezene, the highest in Central France which is volcanic, and presents some wild and singular views. He may also pass the curious mountain called Gerbier des Joncs, at the foot of which rises the Loire. There is scarcely any accommodation on this route, which can hardly be performed in a day; and the people are rude and forbidding."—P. F.

ROUTE 110.

CLERMONT TO MONT DORE LES BAINS.

I. Grande Route, 53¼ kilom. = 33 Eng. m.

II. Petite Route, 42 kilom. = 27 Eng. m.

I. Diligences run daily in summer.

It is a hilly journey by either of these routes, beginning to ascend from the Barrier of Clermont to La Barraque (see p. 390.), then leaving the Cone of the Puy de Dôme on the rt. and the ruined castle of Montrodeix on the l.; its walls formed of basaltic prisms.

The road reaches the summit level of the chain of the Monts Dôme, at a spot called Moréneau, between the Puys de Leschamps, covered with wood, and de Montchié, a volcano, furnished with 4 craters, which has been cut away at the base to give passage to the road; and trunks of trees charred have been disclosed by the section of the trachytic rock. Descending the opposite slope it crosses the stream of the Sioule, here in its infancy. At St. Bonnet, near Pont des Eaux, a basaltic clinkstone is quarried, to serve as roofing slate, bridges, fences, &c.; the thin slabs ring like a bell when struck.

29 Rochefort.

The ruined castle, on the summit of a basaltic rock, once belonged to the Dauphins of Auvergne.

The road continues to ascend through a hilly and bleak country, often blocked up by snow in winter. About 3 m. beyond the village of Laqeuille the road to Mont Dore branches off to the l., out of that to Aurillac by Muriac, and, crossing another ridge, descends upon the village Murat le Queire, in the valley of the Dordogne, and proceeds up the rt. bank of that stream to 24 Mont Dore les Bains.

No. II. La Petite Route is the same as No. I., until reaching the village Laschamp, 3 m. beyond La Barraque;

"or, on foot, more directly and agreeably by Thadde. As there are few villages, the route may most conveniently be traced by the Puys, which are passed, viz., Gravenoire and Charade on the rt.: La Bache and Lassolas, also on the rt., are extremely well preserved, and are completely thrown open on the S. W. side, towards which they have diverted their lava streams. There is here quite a circle of craters, among which Mont Jughat and Mont Chat are conspicuous."—P. F.

21 Randanne (a tolerable road-side Inn). In the vicinity, at the foot of the Puy de Montchal, is the residence of the patriotic philosopher Le Comte de Montlosier, who settled himself down here, after his return from exile in 1816, in the midst of an unproductive wilderness, the home of his fathers having been destroyed in the Revolution, and by the enlightened agricultural improvements which he introduced redeemed a large track from unproductive barrenness, and "bid the desert smile." He is buried in a small Gothic chapel, erected on a pretty spot within his estate; the priests having refused enterment to his remains within consecrated ground, on account of his writings against the Jesuits.

About 3 m. on the l. is the sheet of water called Lac d'Aidat, formed by the volcanic current from the Puy de la Vache, damming up the course of 2 rivulets. On its borders Sidonius Apollinaris is said to have lived, and an inscription on the wall of the church has been supposed (?) to mark it as the place of his enterment. "To the rt. is the Puy de la Rodde, a fine crater opening to the S., and commanding an extensive view of the Puys, the streams of lava, and the mountains of Mont Dore. Abundance of fine crystals of Augite are found in it."—T. J. T.

After attaining the table land of Baladaud, which commands an extensive view, but is bleak and uninteresting it is an uninterrupted and steep descent into the vale of the Dordogne. It is clothed with wood, and interesting. At Quereilh the traveller turns abruptly to the l., and enters the valley enclosing 21 Mont Dore les Bains. The p'ace is filled with lodging-houses, which supply the place of Inns: there is a daily table-d'hôte at most of them. The rivers and lakes furnish trout, and the mountains roe venison. This small watering-place is a village at a height of 3411 ft. above the sea-level, in an upland valley, the cradle of the river Dor-dogne, surrounded by an amphitheatre of volcanic hills, their sides clothed with verdant meadows or black pine forests, but torn and gashed at intervals by ravines and gullies, down which numerous streams dash in small cascades from the bare table-land above. The village lies at the distance of about 2. m. from the Pic du Sancy, the highest summit in central France, 6217 ft. above the sea level, and the culminating point of the Mont Dore, that vast volcanic excrescence which has broken through the fundamental granite rock, and, stretching from this point to a distance of 8 or 10 m., measures 18 leagues in circumference. It is seamed and fissured by deep valleys radiating in all directions from the common centre, the chief of them, on the N. side, being the valley of the Dordogne, or of Mont Dore. The crater from which this eruption burst forth is not distinctly marked, owing to the dilapidations in its sides caused by volcanic convulsions, by the wearing down of torrents, and even by the effects of the weather; but there can be no doubt that we see the traces and remains of the lava walls which surrounded "the elevated peaks which still bristle over the circus-like gorge occupying the very heart of the mountain, and was probably the site of its central crater, but now, branching off into deep and short recesses, forms the upper basin of the principal valley, and the recipient into which 2 mountain rills, the Dor and the Dogne, unite, at the source of the noble river which henceforward bears their joint names." — Scrope, 98.

The mineral springs, on account of which Mont Dore is resorted to from June to the end of September, are 8 in number, 2 being cold, the rest of a temperature of 106° to 113° Fahrenheit; they issue out of the trachytic rock, at the foot of the eminence called Plateau de l'Angle. They are alkaline, and are efficacious in complaints of the lungs, when unattended with inflammation, in disorders of the stomach, and in rheumatism. They are conducted into a very handsome bathing establishment, built, like the rest of the houses, of a trachytic lava, resembling that of Volvic, but obtained from a neighbouring quarry. The most copious source, La Madelaine, is also used for drinking, and large quantities are exported in bottles. It, as well as that called Le Bain du Cæsar, is enclosed in Roman masonry, proving that bath-loving people to have made use of these warm springs. Numerous architectural fragments, columns, &c., have been discovered here, supposed to have belonged to a temple whose foundations exist, and go by the name of Le Panthéon.

Horses may be hired at the rate of 3 fr. a day; also guides, and chaises-à-porteurs with bearers for ladies, for the numerous interesting excursions in the vicinity of these baths. In front of the bath-house is a pretty green promenade, encircled by the windings of the Dordogne, over which a suspension bridge has been thrown, conducting to a path which leads to the base of the Capucin, the isolated, cowl-shaped rock, conspicuous from all parts of the valley, named from a detached pinnacle, jutting forward on one side, said to resemble a monk in a hood.

The direction of the valley of the Dor from its head, at the base of the Pic de Sancy, to a short distance below the baths, is nearly due N. and S. In its E. side, not more than ½ an hour's walk above the baths, a singular breach or fissure is perceptible, worn away by the descent of a stream called La Grande Cascade, which has cut through the rock, and exhibits, in the face of the precipice, an instructive geological section of a series of beds of trachyte, tufa, and basalt. Vast blocks have been detached and hurled below, so that the stream, after its leap of nearly 80 feet, is almost hidden from view.

The Valley of Mont Dore is a region of woods and waterfalls; the latter, though not of any great elevation or grandeur, add an interest to the many pretty scenes around; the principal falls are the Cascade de Quereilh and de Vernière.

On the W. side of the valley, opposite to the Grande Cascade, is the gorge called Vallée d'Enfer, excavated out of a volcanic rock, consisting of scoriæ and other fragments, bearing the marks of fire, over which rise the naked summits of the Pic d'Aiguiller. The breccia is in many places penetrated by vertical dykes of dark porphyritic trachyte; and such a dyke forms the separation, called Les Fernes, between the gorges of Enfer and La Cour. Similar dykes are seen traversing the precipices of the Pic d'Aiguiller exposed to view at the end of the Val d'Enfer.

The ascent of the Pic de Sancy may be made in 2 hours from the baths, on horseback, or in a chair; proceeding to the head of the valley past the gorges D'Enfer and De la Cour, and turning to the l., near the ravine of La Craie, where a steep ascent begins, through a fir wood, in the depths of which lies the Cascade du Serpent, passing the marsh in which the Dore rises. The Pic is reached by passing the high Col between it and the Puy Ferrand. The distant objects seen from it are the volcanic group of the Cantal, to the S., and the Monts Dôme to the N., while near at hand yawns a labyrinth of valleys and gorges, with peaks bristling around on all sides; and numerous small lakes glitter in the depths, among them the crater Lakes de Pavin and that De Chambon.

Another very interesting excursion is to the castle of Murol, situated to the E. of the baths, crossing the mountains by the Puy de Diane and the pretty little Lac Chambon. Murol, the village, is built at the base of the red scoriaceous volcanic hill called Puy de Tartaret, upon a lava current which has issued from it, at a period long after the formation of the volcanic rocks of the Mont Dore. Murol is nearly surrounded by a dense forest, one of the finest in Auvergne.

The castle, a most picturesque object, crowns the summit of a detached eminence topped with basalt, affording a platform just large enough to hold the fortress, whose walls rise up, as it were, in continuation of the vertical precipices beneath them. It consists of a double enclosure, an outer wall flanked with bastions, dating from the 16th century, and an inner circular wall, surmounted by machicolations of the 15th. In the midst rises a round tower, or donjon, commanding the country far and near, and affording a most interesting view of the plain and valley around, covered with lava vomited forth from the Tartaret. Some of the existing constructions of the castle are as late as the 18th century, and none appear older than the 15th; the first mention of it occurs in 1223, when its seigneur was named Jean Chambre Chevarier. There is a small homely inn at Murol, where a tolerable bed may be procured.

The Puy de Tartaret deserves the attention of the geologist; it consists of loose scoriæ, lapilli, and fragments of granite, which have been forced up through the fundamental granite rock. "It has 2 deep and regular bowl-shaped craters, separated by a high ridge, and each broken down on one side:" the lava current which they have furnished first spreads over the plain, then, contracting, confines itself to the valley, whose sinuosities it follows as far as Neschers, a distance of 13 m., occupying the channel of the former river. Near Neschers and Champeix it assumes a regular columnar form.

Rather more than an hour's walk (4½ m.) from Murol, passing partly over the lava from the Puy de Tartaret, and near the waterfall Des Granges, one of the prettiest in Auvergne, lies St. Nectaire, a village possessing hot incrusting springs, which issue from the granite, and deposit large quantities of lime, and a curious Romanesque church, a very ancient and unaltered but much dilapidated specimen of the style, no part of it apparently older than the 12th century. It is surmounted at the cross by an octagonal tower, and terminates at the E. end in 3 apses. The capitals of the pillars in the choir, carved with bas-reliefs of scriptural and legendary subjects, are curious. In this church are preserved a curious Byzantine crucifix of copper gilt, and a reliquiary, in the form of a bust, of embossed copper gilt, also Byzantine, and probably of the 11th century. The Castle of St. Nectaire, the cradle of a noble family, whence sprang 2 marshals of France, has been destroyed.

On the heights above the Bains de Boite, not far from St. Nectaire, are some Druidical remains, consisting of a dolmen or altar formed of the unhewn blocks of the granite found in the country. On the summit of the hill of Cornadore are extensive excavations, supposed to be of great antiquity, formed, perhaps, by the Gauls as storehouses, or places of refuge: they are now used as sheep-sheds. "Another interesting excursion, especially for the geologist, may be made to the Rocks of La Thuilliere and La Sanadoire, 1½ hours from Mont d'Or. The columnar feldspar or phonolite of the Roche Sanadoire is curious, and the view fine. 1½ hour more takes the traveller to the Lake of Servières, from which he may gain the great road to Clermont by descending the valley of the Sioule by Vernines (old Castle) and St. Bonnet."—P. F.

The above is but a very imperfect enumeration of the curiosities and excursions of the neighbourhood of Mont Dore, which affords many other objects of interest, well calculated to repay the traveller for exploring. A full and excellent description of them will be found in the work of M. Lecocq, "Le Mont Dore et ses Environs." *

ROUTE 112.

CLERMONT TO LYONS, BY THIERS: — MONTBRISON.

180 kilom. = 111 Eng. m.

The road out of Clermont runs nearly due W., passing on the l. the Puy de la Poix, an eminence of basaltic tufa, having on the N. side a spring of bitumen, or mineral pitch, which issues out of the earth along with a source of water.

15 Pont du Château, a prettily situated town, named from a bridge over the Allier, by which our road crosses it. "About ½ m. above the bridge, on the rt. bank of the river, there is an interesting geological display of fossiliferous freshwater limestone strata, alternating with calcareous beds containing volcanic substances. — T. J. T.

The Château of Beauregard, a little on the l. of the road, was formerly the country seat of the Bishops of Clermont, and the residence of Massillon as such.

11 Lezoux, a small town on the verge of the Limagne, has an ancient church.

The castle of Ravel belonged to Philippe le Bel. Our road is hilly, threading a part of the chain of the mountains of Forez, which separate the Allier from the Loire.

16 Thiers (Inns: Poste: — Hôtel de l'Europe; new and good), an industrious manufacturing town built on the top and slope of a peaked granitic hill, at whose base the Durole flows in a deep rocky bed, turning many paper-mills, and forges, where various articles of cutlery are wrought, the staple manufacture of the town, giving employment to a large portion of its 9,830 inhabitants. The town, so picturesque at a distance, with its houses rising one above another, on nearer approach is found to consist of dirty lanes; but from the upper part of it, especially from the high terrace, fine views are obtained over the Limagne, and the distant chain of the Monts Dôme. Here also is situated the antique church of St. Genès, a Romanesque building, chiefly of the 12th century, though the vaults of the roof are newer: the end of the S. transept is ornamented with coarse mosaics. More curious to the antiquary is the church Du Moutier, in the lower part of the town; the E. extremity of the choir has been referred to the 8th century.

A portion of the old castle remains.

The road for about 4 m. is carried along the edge of a precipice, and is called Le Cordon.

12 La Bergère.

14 Noiretable, a village at the foot of the high Montagne de l'Hermitage.

12 St. Thurin.

15 Boën. Inn, Leon d'Or; dirty, but good cuisine.

This little town is about 11 m. distant from Montbrison, chef lieu of the Dep. of the Loire, though inferior in extent and population both to Roanne and St. Etienne. It stands at the base of a lofty and precipitous rock, from the top of which, or from the tower of the neighbouring church, as some say, the ferocious leader of the Calvinists, Le Baron des Adrets, compelled his Roman Catholic prisoners

* For any corrections and additions to the above Route, derived from personal knowledge, the Editor will be much obliged.

to leap, to their certain destruction. When one of the condemned, after twice approaching the brink, faltered in taking the leap, the tyrant exclaimed, "Two chances are too much." "I'll lay you will not do it in ten," was the ready reply; and, it is said, saved the man's life. The cathedral is a Gothic building of the 13th century (1205), and contains the tomb of its founder, Guy IV., Comte de Forez. (Inns: H. du Nord:—Du Centre.)

From Boën the road to Lyons crosses the flat and marshy plain of the Loire, and runs parallel with the Lignon, which is seen on the rt.: it is crossed, and at a short distance the river Loire also, before entering 18 Feurs, which occupies the site of one of the most important cities of the Gauls—Forum Segusianorum. In this name may be traced the modern one of Forez, given to the district of which it was the capital, during the middle ages. Extensive fragments of Roman walls, aqueducts, inscribed stones, &c., attest its ancient consequence. Population 2250.

The railroad from Roanne to St. Etienne (R. 119.) runs past the town on the E., directly across our line of route.

Soon after, the road ascends out of the fertile valley of the Loire.

11 St. Barthélemy l'Estrà.

19 Duerne.

A high mountain ridge, a continuation of the hill of Tarare, described in R. 105., commanding an extensive view over the valley of the Rhone, and extending even, it is said, as far as Mont Blanc, is traversed in this stage.

11 La Braly.

14 Grand Buisson.

12 LYON. (Route 105. p. 365.)

ROUTE 114.

CLERMONT TO TOULOUSE BY THE CANTAL AND AURILLAC.

322 kilom. = 199½ Eng. miles.

Those who wish to avail themselves of a public conveyance must take the Montpellier diligence as far as St. Flour, whence a private vehicle may be procured to Aurillac.

The most direct road from Clermont to Aurillac is by Rochefort (R. 110.) and Mauriac, but it is not provided with post-horses, and it avoids the picturesque district of Cantal, so interesting to geologists, through the heart of which the following road through Murat is carried.

It is the same as Route 109. as far as 56 Lempde, where it turns to the l., ascending a long hill as it quits the town. By another hill, du Grenier, you descend in zigzags to 18 Massiac (dept. Cantal), where you turn to the l. out of the St. Flour road, by a very pretty branch line carried up the vale of the Alagnon, not yet passable for diligences to 35 Murat. Inn: Chez Dolly; tolerable, excepting the dirt. Fine trout here and elsewhere in the Cantal.

Murat is a dirty and antiquated town of 2941 inhabitants in the upland valley of the Alagnon; here bare of trees, but surrounded by hills of uncommon appearance, capped by basalt. One of these rises immediately behind Murat, in a tall cliff called Roche Bonnevie, composed of tall and regular basaltic pillars 30 to 50 ft. long. The castle on its summit was razed by Louis XI., after he had put to death its owner, Jacques d'Armagnac, 1477.

Opposite the town is another remarkable hill, also topped with basalt, on which stands the pilgrimage chapel of N. D. de Bredom.

Soon after quitting the town, the convent of St. Gal, now an hospital, is passed on the l., and the Castle of Anterroches on the rt. An excellent road is carried up the valley of the Alagnon, constantly ascending, amidst cliffs and precipices of granite. Near the Pont de Pierre Taillée, a bridge thrown over a stream which falls in a pretty cascade, a good geological section of the trachyte and tufa has been exposed. Above this, the fine fir forest of Lioran, which clothes the upper part of the valley, commences. The additional steepness of the valley near its head, has hitherto been surmounted by a series of tourniquets or zigzags; but in order to avoid this as well as the snow which blocks up the highest part of the road, frequently for weeks and months in winter and spring, a Tunnel is now (1842) being carried through a saddle-shaped ridge, which divides the waters of the Alagnon from those of the Cère, a little to the E. of the highest point of the old road, and about 400 or 500 ft. below it. This Tunnel is driven through the trachytic rock for a distance of about 4593 ft. (1400 metres); it is nearly 18 ft. high, ascends slightly in the centre, and terminates a little below the village of les Chazes. On emerging from it, the Puy de Griou, a pointed, wedge-shaped peak of white rock, with a stream of débris descending from it, is seen on the rt.; and the Plomb de Cantal, a boss like a camel's hump surmounting a precipice, rises on the l. Those, however, who are content merely to pass through the tunnel, will miss altogether the grand and striking scenery of the vast volcanic amphitheatre, through the midst of which the old road is carried, in proximity to the sources of the Alagnon and Cère.

The traveller, whether geologist, or merely a lover of picturesque, will be well rewarded by making the ascent of the Puy de Griou, which may be effected in about an hour from the hamlet of les Chazes, even without a guide. It is fatiguing from the extreme steepness of the slope; but the only difficulty is in surmounting the bare crest of white clinkstone, covered with loose fallen masses, which rattle down under your feet into the depths below. But even here a sort of path has been formed, over the scanty grass tufts springing up between the stones. The summit itself is a mere crest only 3 or 4 ft. wide and 20 yds. long, plunging precipitously down on all sides. The Puy de Griou rises in the midst of an irregular circle of precipices, supposed by geologists to have been the fiery mouth or crater whence the volcanic rocks of the Cantal were erupted, and whence they spread for 15 or 20 m. around, from this centre as far as Aurillac, Murat, and St. Flour. It is also supposed, that, at a later period, the volcanic forces acting from below, at the same point, burst through these deposits of trachyte, tufa, and basalt, fracturing the strata, with radiating cracks like those in a starred pane of glass, and that these cracks gradually widening, became the valleys of the Alagnon, Cère, Jourdanne, Dienne, &c. The circuit of precipices which composed the walls of this crater, is broken by gaps formed by the openings of the different valleys radiating from this point like the spokes of a wheel. These walls are most perfect on the E. below the basaltic hump, called Plomb de Cantal, the highest summit in the district, 6095 ft. above the sea level; on the N. in the Puy Mary; 5459 ft. and on the W. in the Puy Chavaroche. Through the gaps between them, the eye ranges down the vistas of the valleys over an extensive horizon of plain and distant hills. The dimensions of this crater greatly exceed those of any in Auvergne, as it is more than 6 Eng. miles in diameter. Within and beneath its bounding walls are rounded slopes, wooded or covered with turf, forming the lining of the crater, and presenting a pleasing picture. Quite at the foot of the Puy de Griou, is a remarkable kettle-shaped hollow, covered with the brightest verdure, and dotted over with 2 or 3 cabins, and with herds, for it is the best piece of pasturage in the district. From its shape it might be mistaken for a minor crater, hemmed in by wooded eminences. It is called le Font du Vacher.

Quitting the volcanic amphitheatre at les Chazes, we commence the descent of the valley of the Cère, which is far more picturesque in its scenery than that of the Alagnon, but is best seen in ascending, as the forms of the mountains at its head lend to the views their most striking features. The first village, St. Jacques des Blats, produces excellent cheeses of goat's milk, called cabeçons. The numerous projections on either side of the valley conceal the villages from view, until you are close upon them. The river cuts through a rocky bed, and the road, skilfully engineered, is carried in terraces cut out of the trachytic rock, along the edge of deep precipices, the most remarkable of which, called Pas de Compain, terminates within a few hundred yards of the village of 26 Thiézac, where the poste (Tête Noire), though most forbidding externally, by reason of its dirt, can afford 2 clean beds and a tolerable supper, with trout; for which and a breakfast only 5 fr. are charged. Below Thiezac calcined flints shattered by heat like unannealed glass, may be seen embedded in the trachyte rock at the road side.

The most strikingly picturesque scene in the whole valley is at a spot called Pas de la Cère, a little way above the solitary projecting rock (Rocher de Murat), rendered conspicuous by the single round-headed lime tree which crowns its summit. Here the valley at once expands considerably, and makes a deep descent or step, and the river has forced for itself a passage, at a great depth below the road, in a fissure lined by smooth walls of rock, and nearly shrouded by a luxuriant growth of trees. The rocks towering above the road imitate the forms of old castles. The little town of Vic (Vic-en-Carladés, or Sur-Cère) is the chief place in the very picturesque valley. (Inn, Chez Vialette.) Close to it there are mineral springs of acidulous water, received into a bathing establishment. 1 m. out of the town, at the roadside, stands the Château de Comblat, belonging to an ancient and loyal family settled here for ages, the present owner being the Comte Charles de la Baume. At Polminhac is a far more picturesque castle, towering over the road, a fit subject for the artist's pencil. The valley of Vic, here widening out into a small plain, covered with meadows and corn fields, is yet enlivened by a pretty distribution of wood and hedgerows, amidst which rise numerous châteaux and modern country houses, indicating that the proprietors reside on their estates. At this point our road quits the vale of the Cère, gradually ascending in a sloping terrace cut through the white tertiary limestone, containing flints, in appearance closely resembling the upper chalk of England, though of a very different age, which has been disturbed and baked by the trachytic rocks. Turning the shoulders of the hills, we enter the valley of the Jourdanne, a tributary of the Cère, at the mouth of which stands

26 Aurillac (Inn, Trois Frères; best and good), chef lieu of the dept. of the Cantal, and anciently one of the 6 good towns of la Haute Auvergne, is a dull town of 11,000 inhab., without objects of interest, in a tame and bare valley watered by the Jourdanne. The churches, convents, and palace of the abbot, were destroyed by the Huguenots, who took the town, 1569, by assault, and kept it for a year: the existing public buildings are modern and commonplace. The Castle of St. Etienne, rising on a rock above the town to the W., is said to have belonged to the ancestors of St. Géraud (d. 918.), the patron of the town: it was held by the abbots, and now belongs to the bishop of Clermont, but is not worth visiting.

The chief manufactures carried on here are of copper kettles and coarse lace.

The infamous J. B. Carrier, the author and inventor of the Noyades at Nantes (p. 165.), was born, 1756, in the village of Yolet, close to Aurillac.

Diligences daily to Paris, to Rodez, 3 times a week to Toulouse, by Figeac. The road to Figeac, after crossing the level verdant valley of the Cère, and the river itself, mounts into a hilly district of gneiss and mica slate rocks, barely covered with heath. From the high ground fine views are obtained of the volcanic group of the Cantal.

17 St. Mamet.

A very long and winding descent doubling the shoulders of the hills, and diving deep into the recesses of the glens, leads down a wooded valley to 27 Maurs.

Another hilly tract intervenes before we reach

23 Figeac.— Inn, Poste.

A town of 6400 inhab., in the dept. of Lot, lying snugly at the bottom of a small valley, so shut in by steep hills that the high roads are obliged to make the most singular and circuitous contortions in order to reach it. The town, whose naturally obscure name has become familiar through its illustrious citizen Champollion, who was born here, and to whom a monumental obelisk has been erected at the water side, contains a great number of antique houses, and 2 curious churches. The abbey Church of St. Sauveur, in the lower part of the town, consists of a Romanesque basement, with a later pointed superstructure of the 15th century, and a modern front of the 19th. The choir, however, seems almost entirely of the 11th century. Attached to the S. transept is a small chapter house, resting on pointed arches.

On an eminence, above the town, stands Nôtre Dame de Puy, a church of the 11th century, though much altered, in the form of a basilica, ending towards the E. in 3 apses. At the bottom of the choir is a very fine altar screen of wood richly carved and ornamented, a masterly work of the early part of the 17th century, judging from its style.

The Château de la Baleine, now Palais de Justice, fortified and moated, also deserves attention.

A high table land of limestone, bounded by very abrupt slopes, separates Figeac from the valley of the Lot. After reaching its summit by a steep ascent, the road to Villefranche passes near a singular stone pillar, or obelisk, rising on the brow of the hill above Figeac. Its use and age are equally unknown. Some consider it to have been a beacon: it was more probably a landmark to designate the boundary of some jurisdiction. There is a similar pillar on the other side of Figeac.

From the high ground a view is obtained, on the l., of the town of Capdenac, on the rt. bank of the Lot, supposed by Champollion to be the ancient "Uxellodunum" besieged by Cæsar, and mentioned in his Commentaries.

The Lot is crossed by a wire suspension bridge: the hills bordering on the river sides are very steep.

18 La Remise.

17 Villefranche.— Inn, Grand Soleil.

This is a town of 9540 inhab., on the Aveyron. Its principal building is the large Collegiate Church, in the pointed Gothic style of the 15th and 16th centuries, standing in a place surrounded by arcades. Its W. façade, though bare of ornament, is imposing from its proportions, and is surmounted by a lofty tower, supported by obliquely set buttresses, at the base of which a porch, furnished with triple arches, gives entrance to the interior.

There are many ancient houses of the 15th and 16th centuries, very picturesque in their architecture, in the principal street.

Steep hills lead into and out of 33 Caylus, a town of most picturesque character, both in itself and in its situation, buried as it were in the deep recess of a valley. In the midst its castle rising on a rock towers above the houses clustering round its base; and by its side rises the church spire.

The road emerges from this bowl-shaped hollow, by being carried in bends round its nearly vertical sides.

22 Caussade
22 Montauban
51 Toulouse
} described in R. 70.

ROUTE 116.

CLERMONT TO TOULOUSE BY ST. FLOUR — THE BATHS OF CHAUDES AIGUES, RODEZ, AND ALBY.

385 kilom. = 238½ Eng. m.

The route is identical with R. 109 as far as

54 Lempde — Inn, la Poste. At

18 Massiac (Cantal), it turns to the l., away from the road to Aurillac, and reaches by an ascent requiring 1½ hour to surmount, an elevated plain called la Fageole, formed by a great basaltic plateau.

9 La Barraque, is a solitary post house, surrounded by a few farm buildings, in a desolate spot.

About 5 m. short of St. Flour, a good view of it, and of the volcanic group of the Cantal beyond, is obtained.

22 St. Flour.—Inn, Chez Aubertot; tolerable; supper, bed, and coffee, cost 3 fr. 5 sous; H. de France.

St. Flour, the 2d town in importance of the Cantal, is strikingly conspicuous at a distance, owing to its elevated position on the top of a table mount, whose platform is of basalt. The high road from Clermont to Montpellier passes through a suburb at its base; but the upper town is rendered accessible for carriages by a road carried in winding terraces cut into the basaltic rock, and laying bare a regular natural colonnade near the crest of the hill. Beyond its singular and picturesque situation, bounded on 3 sides by escarped precipices, the town, consisting of narrow streets and houses built of basalt, and containing 6464 inhab., is deficient in attraction. Its Cathedral, the chief edifice, is a Gothic structure, not remarkable, dedicated 1496, but not finished till 1566; its towers, demolished in 1593, have been recently rebuilt. The roof is finely groined, and rests on piers without capitals.

From a little terrace behind the cathedral, from another behind the seminaire, and from the Promenade, or Cours Chazeret, occupying the neck of land by which the town is alone connected with the adjoining high ground of the Planèse, views may be obtained over the country and distant hills, but it is arid and bare, and over the contiguous valley watered by the Arder, on whose banks the suburb, the most busy part of the town, is planted. The basaltic rocks in the neighbouring mountains are covered with the lichen archil (orseille) used in dyeing, which is collected and largely exported hence.

St. Flour was anciently a very strong fortress, and withstood many sieges from the English in the 14th century.

At this point the road to Chaudes Aigues and Rodez separates from that to Montpellier; a malleposte from Clermont follows the latter through St. Chely, Marvejols, and Lodève.

The road to Chaudes Aigues traverses for a considerable distance the elevated basaltic plateau called la Planèse. The volcanic group of the Cantal mountains is visible for a long time on the W.

On the way to Chaudes Aigues, but considerably to the l. of the road, lies Alleuzes mentioned by Froissart under the name Louise, a castle which belonged to the celebrated robber chief of the 14th century, Aymerigot Marcel, whence his band used to sally forth to pillage on the highways. A little further in the same direction is Montbrun, another castle, which was taken and held for the English, 1357, by John Chandos, constable of Guienne.

The approach to Chaudes Aigues is by the steep hill called Côte de Laneau, where the road has been terraced through rocks of gneiss and mica schist, whose contortions are laid open in sections, at the edge of ravines and precipices. After passing the ravine called Saut du Loup, from a fanciful resemblance in the rock to a wolf's head, it descends into the valley or gorge of the Truyère, a tributary of the Lot. That river is passed on a handsome stone bridge.

32 Chaudes Aigues. — Inns : the best is Chez Fabre, recently rebuilt: H. Felgère, furnished with baths.

This is an old but rustic-looking town of 2351 inhab., planted in a narrow and picturesque gorge, which about 3 m. below opens into that of the Truyère. The mineral waters from which it has obtained some resort as a watering place are almost pure, warm water: they issue out of the slate rock, and are 4 in number. That called Source du Par is the hottest spring in Europe, except the Geysers in Iceland; having a temperature of 177° Fahrenheit, and is one of the most copious sources in France; the others, de Felgère, du Ban, and de la Grotte, vary in heat between 135° and 162° Fahr. The waters are taken in baths, and are drunk, being considered efficacious in rheumatism, swellings of the joints, and some cutaneous disorders, though by no means richly impregnated with mineral particles. They are also turned to various domestic and economic purposes; they have the property of discharging most rapidly the grease from sheep's wool, and a vast number of fleeces are sent hither from the dept. Aveyron to be washed. From the month of Nov. to April, the hot water is used for warming the town, being conducted in pipes into some of the houses, called in the patois of the country Maison Caoudo; and it thus saves the inhabitants the cost of many tons of coal or whole forests of firewood: the equal distribution of the waters is watched over by the police. The hot streams are also partly employed for cookery, for boiling eggs, preparing soups, and scalding pigs. They have also been turned to the artificial incubation of chickens with considerable success.

There is no object of interest in or near the town except the waters: a ruin at a short distance, near the chapel, is called le Fort des Anglais; indeed the English are said to have captured the town in the 14th century, in the two incursions which they made, in 1357, under the command of Robert Knollys, and in 1387. A large portion of the inhabitants of Chaudes Aigues migrate every winter to Paris, to obtain employment in various menial offices, as water carriers, décrotteurs, &c., a practice common among the lower orders throughout Auvergne. From Chaudes Aigues it is possible to ascend on foot the Plomb de Cantal, and descend on Thiezac (p. 406.), but this cannot be accomplished in a single day.

Scarcely a human habitation occurs on the long stage from Chaudes Aigues, except the poor hamlet of Lecalm, where the road enters the dept. Aveyron; a hilly road.

32 Laguiole, built on the slope of a basaltic hill, trades in the excellent cheese made in this district.

The road skirts on the l. a valley, in whose recesses, once shrouded by forests, stood the venerable and wealthy Bernardine Monastery of Bonneval, now entirely swept away. The descent into the fertile and verdant valley of the Lot is very pleasing. Above the winding course of the river, which is bordered with wooded and vine-clad slopes, rise the escarped peaks crowned with the ruined castles of Caumont and of Roquelaure.

23 Espalion; is a prettily situated small town, residence of a sous-préfet, on the Lot. There is nothing of interest in the town itself, but in its vicinity the two castles already mentioned, and a curious chapel in the cemetery of the village of Perse.

The road to Rodez ascends out of the valley of the Lot after crossing it, under the castle-crowned height of Caumont. From a distance of many miles, the traveller discerns the picturesque towers of 31 Rodez. — Inns: H. des Voyageurs: — des Princes: — Ville de Paris.

Rodez, chef lieu of the dept. Aveyron, is a town of 9685 inhabitants, and occupies a commanding site on an escarped peninsula, surrounded on three sides by a curve of the Aveyron, which flows at a depth of 150 ft. below. The tongue of land, which alone connects it with the neighbouring plain, is traversed by the road from Paris and Espalion; from all other sides the town is accessible only by steep ascents.

The Cathedral, so imposing and conspicuous at a distance, will probably not altogether justify the impression it has produced on a near approach, though it is of large size and possesses some elegant details. It was founded 1274, but carried on slowly through the two following centuries, and never finished. The W. end is destitute of entrance, because fitted up internally with a high altar as well as the E. end. The entrances are at the sides, and, though mutilated, display some rich ornaments; near the N. transept rises the belfry, the pride and boast of Rodez, 265 ft. high, consisting of a square base supporting an octagonal summit, richly ornamented in the upper part with florid tracery. It is surmounted by a statue of the Virgin, and was finished 1531.

The interior of the church, 110 ft. high, rests on piers without capitals, and the style of its decorations resembles the perpendicular of English Gothic. At the entrance of the choir is a fine jubé (rood loft), which, though mutilated, exhibits workmanship of surprising beauty, in the delicate sculpture of its curled foliage. A part of the screen intended to surround the choir is of like beauty. The wood-work of the stalls and bishop's throne in the choir are of good execution, and were well preserved until painted recently. One of the side chapels contains a fine altar screen of wood, elaborately carved with bas-reliefs, arabesques, and ornaments partly Gothic, partly classic, in the style of the 16th century. The whole is painted and illuminated. The partition screen to this chapel is of rich open work in stone, flamboyant in its style. The wood-work of the organ loft, a tomb in the form of a sarcophagus, adorned with bas-reliefs of the 9th century; another tomb of Bishop Guirbert, 14th century; an altar table of white marble, 6 ft. long, with Byzantine ornaments, 10th century, now used as an altar screen, and painted with a figure of the Virgin, — also deserve attention.

The town abounds in antique houses of the 15th and 16th centuries, and contains some of perhaps a still older date. In the Place d'Omet, there is a house charmingly decorated, in the style of the Renaissance, with arabesques, medallions richly framed, and in the upper story with a range of fantastic consoles. — (See Merimée, 157—169.)

Terraced gardens run round the town upon the line of the old fortifications, and afford agreeable views, though the country round Rodez is not particularly attractive, the valley of the Aveyron being bare, and not very fertile.

Rodez was the Segodunum of the Romans, and capital of the Gaulish tribe, the Ruteni, whence comes its present name.

Fromage de Roquefort, the finest cheese which France produces, which was sent to ancient Rome, and was enthusiastically praised by Pliny, is made with ewe milk, in the mountains of La Lozere, about 28 m. E. and S. of Rodez, in the district around St. Rome, St Afrique, St. Georges, and Milhau. It is kept in cellars belonging to the cheesemongers to ripen. About 10,000 cheeses are made annually. The village of Roquefort, where are the principal cellars, is situated near St. Afrique, in the midst of the pastures of Larza, which support more than 100,000 sheep.

Diligences go to Toulouse and Montauban.

The Valley of Marcillac, beginning at Salles Compteaux, about 5 m. N. of Rodez, forms an agreeable contrast to the barren district immediately around the town. This beautiful green dell, gushing with springs and waterfalls, covered with trees and orchards, is excavated out of a high plain destitute of vegetation, which must be crossed to reach it. At the head of the valley rises an old castle, near which a copious spring bursts forth. Following this valley past Marcillac (5 m.) along the banks of the Dourdou for about 12 m. below that town, you reach Conques, a small town half hidden in a rocky ravine, in the midst of the wildest mountains of the Rouergue, scarcely accessible at some seasons, owing to the badness of the roads. It owes its origin to an ancient abbey, whose site it occupies, but the buildings of which have all disappeared except the Church of St. Foy, constructed to all appearance at the beginning of the 11th century by Abbot Odalric. It is entirely in the Romanesque style, with semicircular vaults and arches; it terminates at the E. in 3 apses, and is surmounted at the cross by an octagonal tower more modern than the rest (14th century). The W. end is flanked by 2 towers; the central portal is ornamented with a curious bas-relief in the tympanum, representing the Last Judgment, divided into three horizontal friezes; in the centre, Christ within the Vesica piscis; on his rt. the good, on his l. the wicked; above, angels; below, on one side, the gates of Paradise, with bolts and a huge lock, and the dead rising from beneath their gravestones; in the centre, below Christ, an angel and devil weighing souls; on the other side the gate of hell, an enormous open jaw, into which the devil is thrusting the condemned. Each group and portion of the relief is designated by inscriptions in Leonine verses. The figures are coloured.

The Trésor of the church contains the following curious and valuable relics of ancient art, which at the Revolution were entrusted to the care of different inhabitants of the town, and were most carefully preserved, and religiously restored by them when the political storm had passed away. An ancient reliquiary, called Charlemagne's A, from its triangular form, and the tradition that it was given by that monarch to the abbey; it is of silver gilt and partly enamelled, and set with polished gems and some antiques: at the base are two little figures of gilt bronze, supposed to be less ancient than the upper portion. A statue of St. Foy, 18 inches high, of silver gilt, and studded with precious stones and antique gems, cameos, &c.; a Byzantine enamel of the figure of a saint, on a plate of copper; a silver crucifix of beautiful workmanship; a square slab of red porphyry in a frame of silver, covered with heads of Christ, the Virgin, and Saints in niello. There are also some tapestries of the 16th century.

About 3 m. below Conques the Dourdou falls into the Lot.

The high road from Rodez runs through 26 La Motte.

30 Farguette.

At Carmeaux a coal field is worked, which furnishes a good fuel.

22 Alby. — Inns: H. des Ambassadeurs, and de l'Europe: — du Nord.

An ancient city, chef lieu of the dept. of the Tarn, in the midst of the flat but fertile plain of Languedoc, watered by the river Tarn, has 11,662 inhab. Its buildings are of brick, as is the case throughout the plain of Languedoc; the ramparts are thrown down and planted, and especially on the side next the new Quartier de Vigan, there are extensive walks, avenues, and gardens, partly on the site of the ancient lists (les Lices), where tournaments were held.

The Cathedral of St. Cecile is the chief building in the town; it is a gothic edifice of brick, founded 1282, and not completed till 1512. The nave, without transepts, and unsupported by pillars, is 88 ft. wide and 98 ft. high; the roof and walls are covered with paintings on an azure ground, begun 1502. The choir is separated from the nave by a rood-loft (jubé) of extreme beauty of design, and elaborate delicacy of execution in its gothic tracery, foliage, &c.; the choir screen is of equally rich workmanship.

The Préfecture, formerly the Episcopal Palace, but at a still earlier period the residence of the counts of the Albigeois, is, in part, a heavy castellated edifice of brick, at the margin of the Tarn on its l. bank.

The Church of St. Salvi presents some architectural features of interest.

Some manufactures are carried on here of coarse linen cloths, candles, and tools, files, scythes, also of woad (pastel), which has been made here from a very early period. Its chief commerce is in grain; the plain of Alby being one of the richest corn countries in France.

Alby has given its name to the sect of dissenters from the Church of Rome, the Albigeois, who abounded in the district during the 12th and beginning of the 13th centuries, and who were condemned as heretics by a council held here, 1254, and soon after nearly exterminated at the siege of Beziers. Route 126.

Alby is the birth-place of the unfortunate sea captain and circumnavigator of the globe, La Peyrouse.

At Saut de Sabot, about 3 m. off, the course of the Tarn is intercepted by rapids of considerable descent, by the side of which a furnace and forge for the manufacture of steel is established.

The Castle of Castelnau de Levi, on the rt. bank of the Tarn, is a picturesque object. The Tarn is crossed at the village of Marsac.

21 Gaillac stands on the rt. bank of the Tarn, in a country producing abundance of wine. Its population exceeds 7000.

23 Pointe Sainte Sulpice.

16 Montbert.

15 TOULOUSE. Route 70.

ROUTE 118.

LYONS TO LE PUY, AUBENAS, AND MENDE, BY ST. ETIENNE. — RAILWAY TO ST. ETIENNE, ARDÈCHE, AND CEVENNES.

220 kilom. = 134 Eng. m.

Railroad from Lyons to St. Etienne, 14½ leagues = 35½ Eng. m. Trains go 3 times a day in 4 hours, returning in 3½; the line is not well made, the jolting is great, and the carriages are large and dirty, and filled with workmen and market people; stoppages are frequent at the numerous villages near the line. It was opened 1837. It is carried through more than a dozen tunnels. Its chief use is to supply Lyons with coal from St. Etienne. The terminus, or depôt, is situated outside the town of Lyons, in the suburb de Perrache, between the Saône and Rhone, but passengers are conveyed thither in huge omnibusses, which start from the Place Bellecour. The railway is carried over the Gare, or safety dock for barges, opening into the Saône, and crosses the Saône itself just above its junction with the Rhone, by the new suspension Pont de la Mulatière, and thenceforth skirts the rt. bank of the Rhone as far as Givors, sometimes close to the river, sometimes separated from it by low meadows and rows of plantations of willows, which intercept much of the view.

The course of the Rhone is described in Route 125.

Rt. The first village is Oullins, surrounded by country seats of Lyonese manufacturers; in its churchyard Jacquard, the inventor of the loom named after him, is buried. The line is carried through several small tunnels and cuttings past the villages Irigny, Vernaison, and Grigny, before reaching Givors.

12 Brignais, the first post station on the high road, is about 5 m. to the W. of the railway. At Irigny the high road crosses a hilly range between Brignais and Rive de Gier.

Givors, a dirty and smoky town abounding in manufactories, especially of glass bottles, on the rt. bank of the Rhone, at the point where it receives the stream of the Gier, and the Canal de Givors, which transports much coal and ironstone. Population about 5000.

Omnibusses go hence to Vienne (R. 125.), 5 m., in about an hour, corresponding with the railway trains.

The railroad here quits the side of the Rhone, and ascends the valley of the Gier, keeping that stream and the canal on the rt. hand. Industry prevails every where; manufactories occur at every step, and envelope the country with their dense smoke.

A tunnel about ¾ m. (1500 metres) long is driven through a hill of the coal measures, near Terre noire, before reaching 22 Rive de Gier, a very flourishing and increasing manufacturing town of 12,000 inhabitants, on the rt. bank of the Gier, at the commencement of the Canal de Givors, situated in a productive coal field, which is the chief source of its prosperity. More than 40 coal mines in the vicinity are provided with steam engines. There are very large glass works here, and a manufactory of steel carried on by Englishmen, Messrs. Jackson, which produces the best steel in France.

Here are also manufactories of steam engines and other machinery, and some silk mills. Lyons is chiefly supplied hence with fuel; but Marseilles, Mulhausen, Paris, and Nantes, also receive fuel in large quantities from this coal field, the most important in France, from its extent and position. Above this, owing to the steep inclination of the railway, horse power has hitherto been alone employed; but a new and more level line is being cut (1843) to admit of the use of locomotives. The railroad and post road run side by side to St. Chamond, another manufacturing town, where ribbons and stay laces are made. More than 1200 frames (métiers à la poupée) are employed in weaving stay laces, which are largely exported. Here are besides numerous iron furnaces, founderies, and forges, and several silk mills. Population, 8246. This place has been much injured by the railway not passing through it. Between St. Chamond and St. Etienne runs the ridge separating the waters flowing into the Mediterranean, through the Rhone, from those which go to the Atlantic, through the Loire.

Another tunnel, about 1 m. long, traverses a hill under a considerable village, immediately before reaching St. Etienne. It is very narrow and low, affording space for only one line of rails. The latter part of the line is an inclined plane, which the train descends by its own impetus in going to Lyons.

12 St. Etienne, in Route 119.

The diligence takes 12 hours to make the journey from St. Etienne to Le Puy. The road is very hilly and varied: crossing a long ridge out of the valley of the Furens, it continues to traverse a district very populous, and abounding in manufactures as far as the coal measure extends. At Le Chambon are manufactures of cutlery, nails, saws, &c. At Firmigny there are many coal mines, some of them worked after the fashion of quarries, open to the sky, in a coal bed more than 32 feet thick; also glass works, ribbon and silk mills. The valley is bristling with chimneys, coal heaps, manufactories, but they cease before you reach St. Ferreol, just within the borders of the department Haute Loire. The road is admirably engineered, and partly cut through the granite rock in a terrace winding round the shoulders of the hills.

20 Pont Salomon on the Semone. At Monistrol there is a château, formerly a country seat of the Bishop of Le Puy, now a ribbon manufactory. Some ribbons are woven here, but the manufacture extends no further. 4 m. beyond Monistrol our road approaches the Loire, and crosses, by a very long and steep descent and ascent, the deep and picturesque gorge of the Langon, which falls into the Loire about ½ m. below the bridge. The course of that river and its deep and wide valley may be traced for a considerable distance on the rt. from the heights beyond the Langon.

29 Yssingeaux. — Inn, H. de l'Europe; not good.

A town of no particular interest; pop. 6700.

Near this we enter the volcanic district of the Velay: on either side of the road rise hills of basalt and trachyte, and from the summit of the trachytic ridge of the Montagne de Pertuis, which it traverses by a long ascent, an excellent panorama is presented of the country. A part of Le Puy itself is visible. The hills generally assume a conic form, and are frequently capped with basalt. The top of the Mt. Pertuis is of slaty clinkstone, which is used for roofing houses.

On the rt. of the road is passed the ruined Castle Lardeyrolles, perched on the top of such a volcanic eminence.

Within 3 m. of Le Puy the Loire is crossed, here an insignificant stream descending from its source at Gerbier des Joncs, at the base of the Mont Mezene in the dept. de l'Ardèche. The pedestrian may proceed direct from Le Puy to Montpezat and Aubenas by the Source of the Loire. See page 400.

A good view is obtained of the town of Le Puy in approaching it, though it is partly concealed by the Rocher de Corneille.

27 Le Puy, in Route 109.

The road to Mende is now furnished with post horses; it is very hilly, being carried over part of the range of the Cevennes, in which some of the principal rivers of France take their rise. At first it ascends the valley of the Dolaison. From that stream as far as Pradelles the country is all volcanic.

19 Castaros.

About 3 m. W. of this is the Lac de Bouchet, a mountain tarn occupying the basin of an ancient crater, 91 ft. deep in the centre, without visible outlet.

At the small and elevated town of Pradelles, near which the granite rock shows itself, a cross road strikes off to Aubenas, by Savilatte, over the mountains into the valley of the Ardèche, near its source, and follows its course downwards, by Mayras, to Thueyts. Thueyts (Inn, Chez Burine) is built on a current of basaltic lava, which has flowed from a crater a little to the E. of it, and has occupied the bed of the Ardèche; but the river has cut for itself a passage on one side, laying bare a majestic colonnade of basalt 150 ft. high, stretching with a few interruptions 1½ m. down the valley. Its situation and environs are most picturesque and interesting (see p. 426). About 4 m. below Thueyts, the river Alignon enters the Ardèche from the S. The course of that stream for about 3 m. up lies at the base of vertical cliffs formed of columns of basalt 150 ft. high, the section of another lava current, made by the Alignon, which has gnawed for itself a channel between the granite and the basalt. This lava current is traced up to a large volcanic crater, called, from its regular cup shape, La Coupe de Jaujac. It has been breached and broken down on one side. Its cone and slopes are covered with Spanish chesnut trees, which grow in the greatest luxuriance on volcanic soils, as is especially seen on the slopes of Mount Etna. This crater of Jaujac has burst forth through a coal formation, which lines the bottom of a triangular-shaped valley, bounded by mountains of granite and gneiss. The village of Jaujac stands in a very striking and singular position, on the edge of the basaltic precipice, on the rt. bank of the Alignon, near the base of the crater, whence a mineral spring and copious jets of carbonic acid gas issue. Another lava current enters the Alignon about 300 yards above its junction with the Ardèche: its origin is to be sought in another volcanic cone, the Gravenne de Souillols. It has spread for a considerable distance down the valley of the Ardèche. Numerous picturesque ranges of columnar basalt are presented on the river banks from time to time. Some of the most striking occur near Pont de La Beaume, at the junction of the Fontaulier, which flows from Montpezat, with the Ardèche. The excursion to Montpezat and the rest of the road to Aubenas are described in Route 121.

The road from Pradelles descends into the valley of the Allier, which it crosses before entering 21 Langogne, a town of 2720 inhab., in the dept. La Lozère. It has an ancient church, which belonged to a monastery founded in the 10th century.

19 La Vitarelle. About 6 m. to the S. and E. of this the rivers Allier and Lot take their rise. A stone has been set up here to commemorate the death of the chivalrous Dugueselin, who breathed his last while besieging a company of marauding mercenaries of the bands called "compagnies" in the petty fortress of Chateauneuf le Randon, a little on the rt. of the road, which still retains the ruins of its castle. The commander had promised to yield the place to Dugueselin in a fortnight, provided no succour arrived; but the constable, who was adored by the compagnies as their father, who had spent his own fortune in ransoms for them when taken prisoners, died in the interval. The governor of the fortress nevertheless kept his word by placing the keys on the dead warrior's coffin on the appointed day.

The road is carried over a very high pass in the granitic range, a part of the Mont Margaride, often blocked up with snow, called in irony Le Palais du Roi.

29 Mende (Inn, H. du Pavillon), chef lieu of the dept. Lozère, anciently of the province Gévaudun, is a feudal and monastic town of 5909 inhab., in a hollow, surrounded by mountains, on the Lot. It has a fine cathedral, surmounted by 2 spires.

The ancient Bishop's Palace is now the préfecture. On the slope of the Mont Mimat, above the town, is perched the Hermitage de St. Privast, over the grotto of that saint, the apostle of the Gévaudun.

Some considerable manufactures of serges and other coarse cloths are carried on here.

The direct road from Paris to Montpellier runs through Marvijols, about 12 m. W. of Mende.

About 6 m. S. E. of Mende rises the Mont Lozère, whence the department is named, whose summit, 1490 metres above the sea level, is covered with extensive pastures occupied in summer by large flocks of sheep, to the number, it is said, of 200,000, which migrate in the winter to the plains of Languedoc, and its base is girt round with large forests, which still abound in wolves.

At 3 m. from Mende our road quits the valley of the Lot, and crossing a calcareous table land, utterly bare and arid, destitute of habitation, cultivation, and almost of soil, called Causse de Sauveterre, descends into the valley of the Tarn, and the country of the Cevennes. (Introduction, Sect. V.)

24 Molines.

The principal source of the Tarn is in the plateau de l'Hôpital: on its borders lies Grisac, birth-place of pope Urban V., and about 6 m. from its source the Pont de Montvert, a small village, deep sunk between the Mont Lozère and Bougès, the scene of some remarkable events in the war of the Cevennes. The insurrection in fact commenced here by the murder of the archdeacon Chayla, a cruel persecutor of the Calvinists, who had scoured the country, backed by a troop of dragoons, seizing, imprisoning, and torturing women and men. On the night of July 24, 1702, the house, still standing at the N. end of the bridge, at that time occupied by Chayla and a party of priests and soldiers, was beset by a band of armed Camisards, headed by one of their prophets, Seguier, who, after breaking down the door with the trunk of a tree and releasing the prisoners, set fire to it, and slew those who attempted to escape.

A few of its inmates were allowed quarter, but Chayla, whose death was the motive for the assault, having broken his leg in letting himself down from a window, was discovered and killed without mercy. He fell, pierced with 52 wounds, 24 of which were mortal. The prophet and his companions having perpetrated this act of vengeance, passed the night on their knees around the corpses singing psalms, and did not withdraw before the morning. Seguier was captured shortly after, and expiated his crime by being burned alive on the 10th August, 1702. As Pont de Montvert was the cradle, so was it also the tomb of the insurrection: the last bold act of the Camisard chief Roland before his death was an assault upon the Miguelets or Spanish soldiers posted in the village, from which he was repulsed. Joani, one of the last of the Camisard leaders, having been made prisoner near this (1710), slipped off from behind the horse of the "archer" or policeman who was conveying him to a dungeon, as he was passing the bridge, like Rob Roy in Scott's novel, and leaped down into the Tarn, a height of 20 ft. He was shot, however, by the captain of the archers, and perished in the river. Our road quits the Tarn to follow its tributary, the Tarnon, shortly before reaching 11 Florac, a town of 2200 inhab., situated under a hill, whose bare cleft ridge rises in the form of castellated towers on the Tarnon, close to the influx of the Mimente. The 3 valleys of the 3 head waters of the Tarn lead into the inextricable labyrinth of defiles composing the mountainous district of the Hautes Cevennes. The Mimente rises in the mountain of Bougès, whose N. summit is crowned by the forest Altefage, in the depths of which the murderers of the archpriest Chayla had their rendezvous under 3 huge beech trees, one of which was standing in 1837, reduced to a shattered trunk. At Cassagnas, a village near the source of the Mimente, 13 m. from Florac, many of the caverns which were converted into storehouses and arsenals by the

Camisards still exist, and serve as habitations. They were filled with corn, wine, oil, chesnuts, and other provisions taken from convents and Romish villages, or contributed by the Protestants to their leaders. The provisions were conveyed thence to the spots where the insurgents met, either in conventicle for prayer, or in battle array, and there distributed in rations. The corn was for the most part ground in hand-mills, the water-mills having been destroyed by the military commander of Languedoc, who, at the same time, laid waste and burned all the villages in the Upper Cevennes, to the number of nearly 400, driving away their inhabitants. Other caves were filled with living flocks and herds or with meat salted, while others again were used as powder magazines and mills, for the Camisards made powder for themselves from the saltpetre collected in their caverns, and the ashes of the willows growing on all the streams. Their principal supply, however, was purchased at Papal Avignon, so that the papists were shot chiefly by the pope's own powder. The most airy and wholesome caverns were transformed into hospitals for the wounded, and stored with drugs from Montpellier. To such an extent was the commissariat organised by Roland and other leaders of that fearful civil strife. The mountains skirted by the road on the l., from Molines down to Ledignan, may be regarded as the citadel of the Camisard insurgents; but their ravages and incursions extended S. of the Gardon, and as far as the sea. Among these desolate solitudes they met, like the Cameronians of Scotland, with arms in their hands, in secret conventicles, where the harangues of their prophets and their hymns and prayers were often interrupted by an onset of the royal troops, and the congregation arose from their knees to do battle. After some miles, we ascend out of the valley of the Tournon, leaving it and the road to Montpellier on the rt., and, crossing the high land of Hospitalet, enter the valley of the Gardon, in which lies 23 Pompidou.

The road runs along a sort of hog's back or ridge, dividing the dept. Lozère from that of Gard, and traverses a sterile and dreary country.

30 St. Jean du Gard, on the l. bank of the Gardon, contains silk mills: 4128 inhab.

Within this canton, 6 or 8 m. to the N. E. among the mountains, lies Mialet, a village of 1358 inhab., the stronghold and head quarters of Roland, chief of the Camisards, who was born at Massoubeyran, close to Mialet. It also is remarkable for the caves and grottoes around it, converted by him into arsenals and storehouses during the war of the Cevennes. Another position of strength held by him was Durfort, among the mountains on the rt. of the Gardon and considerably to the S. of Anduze.

To the S. W. of St. Jean rise the mountains of the Basses Cevennes, the chief of which is the Aigoal, at whose base the river Herault rises.

Anduze (no post), is a town of 5554 inhab., on the rt. bank of the Gardon, and protected from its furious inundations by a strong dyke forming a terrace and promenade. It is overhung by escarped rocks of the Monts Peyremale and St. Julien. It was the centre of the religious wars which followed the death of Henri IV., and the head quarters of the Calvinist leader Rohan. A large portion of its inhab. are still Calvinists. During the Camisard insurrection this town as well as Alais was constantly beset by the Camisards up to its very walls.

Florian, the agreeable author of "Gonzalvo de Cordova," was born in the castle of Florian, between Anduze and St. Hyppolite. The valley of the Gardon below Anduze, between Fornac and Ners, is called Vallée de Beaurivage, and is described in his pastoral romances Estelle and Némorin, but with so much exaggeration as scarcely to be distinguished.

Near Lezan our road quits the valley of the Gardon.

27 Ledignan.

Ribaute, a village situated among the hills to the N. of this, was the birth-place of Cavalier, who, having been bred a shepherd, and afterwards apprenticed to a baker at Anduze, was elected at the age of 17 second in command of the Camisard insurgents, and proved himself a most able general, as well as powerful prophet or preacher. He died a pensioner in Chelsea Hospital.

13 Les Barragues de Fons.

17 NISMES, in Route 126.

ROUTE 119.

ROANNE TO VALENCE ON THE RHONE, BY ST. ETIENNE AND ANNONAY. — RAILWAY FROM ROANNE TO ST. ETIENNE.

173 kilom. = 107 Eng. m.

The malleposte from Paris to Marseilles takes this route, thus avoiding the long detour by Lyons.

Diligences go daily.

Roanne is described in Route 105.

A railroad, about 49½ m. long, has been carried from Roanne to St. Etienne: the portion of it between Andresieux and St. Etienne was the first railway constructed in France: horses and not locomotives are used on it, and, though passenger trains traverse it, in about 6 hours, it is chiefly used for the conveyance of coals and merchandize: its construction is very imperfect, and it is not recommended to English travellers.

From Roanne it is carried up the valley of the Rhins, a small tributary of the Loire, parallel with the post road to Lyons, as far as St. Symphorien de Lay, where it turns S. The post road to St. Etienne turns off previously at L'Hôpital to 19 Neulise, beyond which it meets the railway, and the two proceed side by side up the valley of the Loire along its rt. bank. Near the village Pouilly the Loire is confined between huge dykes, faced with stones cemented and clamped together, called Mole de Piné, the original construction of which is attributed to the Romans. The rapids thus produced in the river prevent the ascent of boats.

20 Feurs, in R. 112.

11 Montrond, a village on the rt. bank of the Loire, 1½ m. W. of the railway. Above it rises the majestic ruins of its old castle, burned at the Revolution by order of an itinerant representative of the people.

Montbrison (R. 112.) is 10 m. distant from Montrond.

14 La Gouyonnière.

The railway reaches the banks of the Loire at Andresieux, to which place large quantities of coal are conveyed from St. Etienne, to be embarked on the Loire for the supply of the centre and W. of France. At Andresieux the line quits the side of the Loire, and ascends the industrious valley of its tributary the Furens, which, in the course of 9 m., sets in motion more than 100 forges and mills. The line from Roanne meets that from St. Etienne at a place called Quérillère, near La Fouillouse.

13 ST. ETIENNE. — Inns: H. du Nord; one of the best inns in S. France, large, clean, and comfortable, in the Rue Royale: Poste, also good.

St. Etienne, the largest and most populous town in the department de la Loire, although not its chef lieu, now numbering with its suburbs about 48,700 inhabitants, is a remarkable example of a sudden rise, and of still increasing prosperity, owing to two very dissimilar but flourishing branches of manufacture, the making of fire-arms and the weaving of ribbons. To use the words of a French topographer, "ce sont les ateliers de Mars, à côté de ceux de Venus." The town is advantageously situated on the banks of the Furens, which furnishes water power to move its machinery, in the midst of one of the most productive coal fields of France. It may be called a French Birmingham, and, like that of England, it is "the child of coal," surrounded by mines, and even seated on coal deposits, so that some galleries are driven beneath its very streets, though under strict superintendence of the authorities. It is by no means an inviting place to tarry in: little regularity is preserved in the building of streets so suddenly thrown up; and the fine white sandstone of its houses, many of them 5 and 6 stories high, is soon tarnished and blackened by the coal smoke which constantly hangs in clouds over it. It has one fine broad street, divided into 2 "Places," planted with trees, by the Hôtel de Ville, which stands in the centre of it and of the town. It is a building of no great merit, but of large size. It contains the Bourse and the commercial tribunal called Conseil de Prudhommes (see p. 374.).

Within its walls is an incipient Museum (Musée Industriel) containing specimens of the staple manufactures of the town, ribbons of all kinds, gun barrels, locks, and stocks engraved and carved by local workmen; also a collection of the minerals of the neighbourhood, and of the fossils of its coal field, &c.

There are more than 200 master manufacturers of Ribbons here. The number of persons in the town and neighbouring communes employed in this branch of industry has been estimated at 40,000, and the number of looms at about 20,000. The weavers live chiefly on the outskirts of the town and in the adjoining villages, where they avoid the smoke, and live cheaper, by escaping the octroi.

The beauty and varied invention shown in the patterns, and the delicate combinations of colours, are admirable. An English traveller should not omit to visit a ribbon weaver's atelier. About 60 artists are employed in designing and drawing patterns. The total annual value of ribbons made here is estimated at 45 millions of francs.

The gunsmiths' shops may be better seen at Birmingham, or even at Liege, both which places produce a large quantity of arms. About 30,000 or 40,000 stand of arms are made here annually in time of peace, besides 30,000 fowling pieces and 1500 pair of pistols; and during the sway of Napoleon not less than from 60,000 to 100,000 were turned out; but it is stated that at a push 300,000 muskets might be produced in 12 months. A musket may be bought for 12 or even 10 francs; but the price paid by government is from 24 francs to 35 francs a piece. About 500 men are employed in the Manufacture Royale des Armes, which is carried on by contractors, under the superintendence of artillery officers, but many more out-labourers are employed. All the barrels made must pass through a trial at the proof house (Maison d'Epreuve), open twice a week. There are also considerable manufactures of quincaillerie, hardware, and cutlery.

The making of bayonets, gun locks, gun stocks of walnut wood seasoned by steam, employs a great number of hands.

St. Etienne has the merit, rare in France, of being well lighted with gas. Its Cathedral exhibits in its choir an ancient specimen of Romanesque architecture.

There is a Theatre here.

Chemins de Fer.—Two short railways branch off from St. Etienne—1. to Lyons: the terminus is at the end of the Rue Royale, on the E. of the town, and there are 3 trains daily (see Route 118.); 2. to Roanne. The station is also about ¼ hour's walk from the centre of the town. Trains go once a day. (See p. 419.)

Diligences daily to Lyons (3 times); to Le Puy; to Annonay and Valence; to Clermont; to Roanne.

Malleposte in 33 hours to Paris; — ditto to Marseilles, by the following route.

The road to Annonay, almost immediately on quitting the town, passes out of the coal basin, and commences a long, but gradual ascent, through a rugged valley, over the high mountain ridge separating the waters flowing into the Atlantic from those which run into the Mediterranean, and the valley of the Loire from that of the Rhone. These two rivers run parallel to each other, but in an opposite direction, for not less than 120 m. A short way below the summit stands 12 La Republique, the first relay, a solitary cabaret, which will furnish a tolerable meal, and glass of wine. The ridge which our road crosses is a continuation of the granitic range of the Mont Pilas (pileatus), so conspicuous from the banks of the Rhone, near Vienne (R. 125.), whose peak is visible on the l. near La Republique. The summit of the pass, and country around, is occupied by a vast forest of firs, le Grand Bois, on emerging from which, and beginning to descend, a fine view opens out, at the end of the valley, of the Alps of Dauphiné stretching along the horizon, of the minor chain running from them down the valley of the Isère, and more near, on the rt., of the mountains of the Ardèche.

The road is finely engineered, carried gradually down along the flanks of the mountains, following their sinuosities. It passes above the ruined Castle d'Argental, planted on a sort of promontory, where the rocks are naked and inaccessible. The Bourg, once attached to it, has prudently descended from this feudal platform, (16 Bourg d'Argental), and now occupies a more genial and sunny site lower down, in a part of the valley where the vine grows and the white mulberry flourishes. The white silk produced here is the best in France for the manufacture of blonde lace, and bears a high price.

A little below this town, the road passes out of the dept. of the Loire into that of the Ardèche.

The valley of the Dieune, in which lie both Bourg d'Argental and Annonay, has no very striking features of beauty; naked rocks intermixed with formal mulberry plantations, with green meadows, aspens, and willows, are the components of its scenery. Lower down, the river is bestridden by several large paper mills, chiefly belonging to the respected family Montgolfier. The road, carried high up, looks over slopes occupied by vineyards, beyond which rises the Alpine chain, and between which, in a deep ravine, runs the river. Numerous country houses, or boxes, among the vines announce the approach to Annonay.

15 Annonay. — Inns: H. du Midi: — H. du Nord.

This active and increasing manufacturing town, the largest in the dept. de l'Ardèche, containing a population of 10,000 souls, is situated in the rocky gorges of the Dieune and the Cance, which join their streams in the very centre of the town. The houses are either crammed in between the rocks, or carried up their sides in tiers, or in ranges along their tops, so that its ground plan is very irregular, and from no point can the whole town be seen at once. It has no public buildings of the least interest, merit, or good taste. The Grande Place includes in its centre the Bascule, and on one side an Obelisk to the memory of the ingenious brothers, Joseph and Etienne Montgolfier, natives of Annonay, the inventors of the air balloon, and founders of the celebrated paper mills near this, erected "par leurs concitoyens." Their first ascent into the air was made from this spot, June 1783, in the presence of the estates of the province. The descendants of the brothers still reside in the neighbourhood, where the family is distinguished by its well-earned opulence and intelligence. Boissy d'Anglas, the firm and unbending president of the convention, was also born here.

The chief manufacture of Annonay is that of paper, celebrated all over France, produced in 7 paper mills on the neighbouring streams. The preparation of kid and other glove leather occupies 64 master manufacturers, and 600 men: 350,000 dozen of skins are prepared annually, of which half are sent to England. The cultivation of the silk worm, and the production of silk, chiefly the white kind, prized for tulles and blondes, is rapidly advancing in the neighbourhood. Vast quantities of mulberries have been planted within a few years, and numerous silk mills (filatures) established. The name Annonay is said to come from the Latin annona, corn magazines, established by the Romans on this spot (?).

12 Diligences run daily to St. Etienne; to Paris; to Lyons; to Grenoble; to Valence and Marseilles.

A steep ascent leads out of Annonay: from the heights above it, and nearly all the way to the Rhone, the Alps form a fine feature in the view.

The borders of the Rhone are reached a little below Tour des Martyrs, near Andance, picturesquely situated among granitic hills, on whose sides every inch of space opening to the sun is occupied by vines. A crag rising above the village is surmounted by a Calvary. Near this the sad effects of the inundations of the Rhone, in 1840-41, meet the traveller's sight, in fields and vineyards overwhelmed with sand, broken bridges, and ruined houses, until the Rhone is crossed, by a wire bridge, at

18 St. Vallier,
31 Valence (Inn, Poste), } described in Route 125.

ROUTE 121.

VALENCE TO NISMES, BY PRIVAS. — AUBENAS AND ALAIS. — VOLCANOES OF THE ARDÈCHE.

192 kilom. = 119 Eng. m.

A post road, but not good in places, and very hilly. A diligence goes daily to Aubenas, but it takes 12 hours, owing to the defects of the road, which, while it continues along the Rhone, is carried through several rivers by fords, and beyond is very hilly. Throughout it is interrupted by numerous villages, the passage of whose narrow and ill-paved streets is very difficult and tedious.

The Rhone is crossed by the wire bridge at Valence to the rt. bank: the Route as far as 23 La Voulte is described in Route 125.

The Valley of La Payre, up which the road turns on quitting the Rhone, is not remarkable for beauty; owing to the extreme aridity of the hills, which are of bare limestone, with a drapery of vines too scanty to cover their nakedness. There is some pasture in the low ground; but the district must properly be considered one vast grove of mulberries, for rearing the silkworm, — the source of wealth to the Ardèche (see R. 125.)

The large white buildings which line the banks of the useful stream traversing the valley are, for the most part, silk mills, for the moulinage (reeling) and filature (throwing) of the silk. They are very numerous near Chomerac, the most considerable place in this valley. A low ridge separates it from that in which is situated

25 Privas.—Inns: La Croix d'Or; tolerable, but dear: — H. du Commerce. Avoid stopping here for the night, if possible, in autumn, on account of the mosquitoes.

Privas, chef lieu of the Dépt. l'Ardèche, 4219 inhab., and the smallest chef lieu in France, is situated on a steep ridge, a root of the range of the Coiron, projecting between the valley of the Ouvèze, and that of a smaller stream falling into it, within an amphitheatre of rugged and arid hills. Its principal street, running along this backbone, is prolonged, at either end, into terraces planted with trees, whence a good view is obtained of the valleys around, their slopes clad with vines, and dotted with country houses; their depths, along the line of the streams, studded with silk mills.

The town contains nothing worth notice except its establishments for the reeling and throwing of silk. It was in the 16th and 17th centuries a fortress, and stronghold of Protestantism, so that in 1612 a synod of all the Reformed Churches of France was held here. It has now quite a modern appearance, owing to its having been burned to the ground, and levelled with the dust, by Louis XIII., who assisted in person to besiege it, in the train of Cardinal Richelieu. The defence was conducted by the brave St. André de Montbrun, and a garrison of 1200 men, assisted by the inhabitants. At the end of 2 months a general assault was made by the royal forces, who were repulsed with a loss of 500 men, but the place being no longer tenable was abandoned by Montbrun, who retired to the Fort de Toulon, where the want of provisions compelled him soon after to surrender. The king caused him and all his companions to be hung; he confiscated the property of all the inhabitants of the town who were in it during the siege, and forbade, by an edict, any person living there without letters issued under the great seal. Privas had, in a previous war of Religion, 1574, successfully resisted the royal forces, under the Duc de Montpensier, and had become a sort of metropolitan church to the Protestants: hence the exasperation of the Roman Catholic party against it.

The road to Aubenas surmounts the chain of the Coiron mountains, which traverse the dept. Ardèche, from N. W. to S. E., by a steep ascent, requiring 2 hours to climb to the summit of the pass. It passes through large plantations of sweet chesnuts. The famed "Marrons de Lyons" come chiefly from the Ardèche. The country is not interesting, the extreme nakedness of the hills being a great drawback. The mountains on either side of the gap or col over which the road passes are capped by basalt. From the slope and top of the pass the mountains of the dept. of the Drome beyond the Rhone are well seen. On the opposite slope, a little way down, stands 17 Les Moulins, a single house. On the descent towards Aubenas, the hills are not less parched and naked, nor more picturesque, than on the side of Privas. The vine grows very high up, and it is curious to see it flourishing upon the dry disintegrated debris of rock fallen from the tops of the mountains, streaking their whitened flanks with the faintest tinge of verdure. The descent is very long, and the road, towards the bottom of the valley, as bad as possible; not properly made.

The river Ardèche is crossed immediately before reaching Aubenas, in a suburb of that town composed chiefly of silk mills. A series of zigzags carried up the face of the hill are surmounted in order to enter 13 Aubenas.—Inns, H. de l'Union; kept by Barry, good, and tolerably comfortable, with capital cuisine, and not expensive. Truffles abound here: chesnuts, figs, ortolans are to be had in perfection. The house being situated on the brow of the hill commands a fine view from its terrace.

Aubenas (4685) is a town of very striking appearance at a distance, from the commanding height on which it stands, and the picturesque forms of its old Gothic castle, feudal walls, and other chief buildings. From this elevated platform, the foot of which is washed by the Ardèche, you command a view of some interest over its industrious and productive vale, clothed in its lower slopes with vines, fig trees, and mulberry groves, surmounted, in the distance, by the usual bare arid mountains. You trace the river's course upwards, to the point where it issues out of the more confined gorge of Vals, and, as it were rejoicing in riotous liberty, widens its bed, and overspreads the valley with gravel, bare at most seasons but winter, and after autumnal storms, when the whole channel is covered by its muddy stream. It is nevertheless useful; serving to irrigate the fields, and turn the machinery of a long array of silk mills which line its banks.

Aubenas is of importance as a place of trade, having become the staple for the silks of the Ardèche, Drome, Gard, and L'Hérault, which are deposited here in commission houses, sometimes to the value of 3 millions of francs, to be disposed of and distributed to the consumers in Lyons, St. Etienne, &c., who find here an assortment of all the different qualities of silk, suited to the exigence of the various manufactures. The canton of Aubenas furnishes about the 30th part of the silks sold in its market: in 1838 it possessed 60 mills for reeling and throwing the silk, which employed 1600 persons, chiefly females; the number has since greatly increased.

The College Royal was originally placed under the care of the Jesuits, established here in the 16th century, for the conversion of the Protestants, who abounded in the Vivarais, as well as for the dissemination of learning. Neither the building nor its church merit notice.

The castle, an ancient and picturesque edifice, flanked by round and square towers, was occupied alternately by Romanists and Huguenots during the wars of Religion: it is now converted into municipal and police offices; and the public scales for weighing all the silk brought to market are deposited in it.

Diligences daily to Privas and Valence; a courier to Bourg St. Andeol; and 3 times a week to Montelimart.

Although there is little worth seeing in Aubenas itself, it makes capital head quarters (more especially considering the goodness of its Inn) for exploring the surrounding district of the Vivarais, so interesting in a geological point of view.

The course of the river Ardèche and its tributaries, above Aubenas, and within a range of 15 or 20 m., exhibits a series of interesting volcanic phenomena, which the geologist will not fail to explore, and which may be visited with interest even by the ordinary traveller, merely on account of the picturesqueness and singularity of the scenery.

Some of the valleys of the Bas Vivarais present an exquisite combination of beauty and magnificence. Their scenery has been compared by Mr. Scrope, in his excellent geological description of this district, to that of the Apennines, but with a more luxuriant vegetation. The rich glow of the chesnut forests, tinted by a soft and brilliant atmosphere, are admirably adapted to painting.

Excursions.—1. Antraigues and the Coupe d'Ayzac are distant about 8 m. above Aubenas. A good road leads thither turning out of that to Le Puy at La Begude, and crossing the river Ardèche, by a wire bridge, to the village of Vals (H. de l'Europe; a good inn, and convenient head quarters for geological excursions), resorted to on account of its mineral baths, supplied by a spring of cold acidulo-ferruginous water. Vals lies on the l. bank of the Volane, a tributary of the Ardèche; and for nearly 6 m. above Vals the valley, which is very picturesque, and alternately well wooded or bounded by rocks of gneiss and granite, is studded, at intervals, by patches of basalt, forming platforms and regular colonnades, like those of the Giant's Causeway, but on a much smaller scale, although, at times, 100 or 150 ft. high. These fragments are all that remain of a lava current which once, undoubtedly, filled the bottom of the valley, but was cut away by the Volane, in order to form a passage for itself. They appear to be composed of 3 beds, or stories, of which the lower one presents the most regular columns, and the upper is nearly amorphous. In places the current of the river, or of some minor rivulet, still saws through or undermines the basalt, and strews the bed of the Volane with detached pillars, mostly regular prisms of 5 or 6 sides. In some places you look down on the top of the lava stream, which presents the appearance of a gigantic tesselated pavement. The origin of this eruption is to be traced in a volcanic cone, called La Coupe d'Ayzac, rising on the l. bank of the Volane, opposite Antraigues, a picturesque village, which occupies a commanding platform, on the top of a high rock of gneiss, near the head of the valley. Around the base of this rock still cluster numerous groups of columns, corresponding with a much finer colonnade, on the opposite or rt. bank of the river, at the same level, which were, doubtless, originally united. Antraigues affords no accommodation but a miserable cabaret. To reach the Coupe d'Ayzac is a walk of ¾ hour from the bridge over the Volane, leaving, on the rt. hand, the road up to Antraigues. It is a very regular crater, but slightly broken down on the N. W. side, facing the Col d'Ayzac, and from this breach the stream of basaltic lava which has flowed down the course of the Volane may be seen to issue.

The stout pedestrian may find his way over the mountains from this to Burzet and Montpezat, but the aid of a guide may be desirable; otherwise he must retrace his steps down the Volane to Vals.

2. To Montpezat, Thueyts, Jaujac. It is a long day's excursion to Montpezat alone, which is probably 16 miles from Aubenas, — a ride of nearly 4 hours by a bad road. The road to Le Puy, up the valley of the Ardèche, is followed; but instead of crossing the bridge at La Begude, you continue along the rt. bank, leaving on one side the dirty village of Prades, where coal in small quantity is found, and proceeding to La Baume, (6½ miles from Aubenas), a village picturesquely situated, under a mass of basalt, exhibiting in the face of its cliffs a fine architectural façade of columns, and occupying an angle in the valley, nearly opposite to the junction of the Fontaulier with the Ardèche. The top of this platform of basalt, called Chaussée du Pont la Baume, is covered with vines, and its mass is penetrated by a sort of grotto, lined and vaulted with natural pillars. This chaussée is probably the production of no less than 4 or 5 extinct volcanoes situated in the side valleys opening into the Ardèche, above this, whose lava streams united at this point, just as the waters flowing out of them now do. Between the 2 rivers, on the top of a domineering rock, its shattered towers and walls picturesquely draped with ivy, rises an old Castle, which once belonged to the Ducs de Ventadour: it is one of the finest feudal relics in the district.

The road to Montpezat (a bridle or cart road only) here quits that to Thueyts and Le Puy (see R. 118.), crosses the Ardèche by the Pont de la Baume, and ascends the valley of the Fontaulier, having the castle on the l., and commanding a fine view of it and the 2 valleys. Ranges of basalt appear from time to time on either side of the valley.

On the rt., a little beyond the village of Meyras, the valley of Burzet opens out on the rt.; a bed of basalt occupies the bottom of it, and the river frequently flows over the tops of its columns, instead of cutting through them. About 6 miles up this valley is a village.

The vale of the Fontaulier expands as you ascend it; its lower slopes are covered with one vast forest of sweet chesnut, which flourishes in the congenial soil, composed of volcanic ashes, many of the trees being centuries old. The roads are strewn with their fruit in September, yet, productive as they are, and valuable to the peasant, who exports the best to Lyons or Paris, and feeds on the inferior fruit himself, in winter, they are gradually giving place to the still more profitable mulberry trees. The higher slopes, nearly to the tops of the hills, are terraced to plant vines. The red ashes, or scoriæ, which compose the soil of the valley, have issued from a volcanic crater near its head, easily distinguished for some distance below by its red hue, called La Gravenne de Montpezat. It is a regular bowl-shaped crater, composed of porous scoriæ, roasted like the slag of a furnace, or of puzzolana (here called gravier). The crater is slightly inclined on one side; and from the lowest edge of its rim the lava current which occupies the valley below Montpezat has been discharged, filling the beds of the streams to a depth of 130 ft., and for the width of nearly ½ a mile. The road to and from the bridge leading to Montpezat passes under cliffs cut through this eruption of lava, and showing on their face columns of considerable regularity. A branch of the lava current from the Gravenne has descended, on the opposite side of the crater, towards Thueyts, into the Ardèche. Volcanic tears, bombs, black and white cinders, are among the productions of its lava.

Montpezat (Inn, a dirty, miserable cabaret, de France), is a poor and dirty town, composed of singular gloomy houses, in a narrow street, at the foot of the granitic range of the Coiron mountains. A carriage road has recently been made from the town up the valley, and over the bridge behind, as far as the village Pal (1¼ hour's walk), beyond which, on the opposite slope, is the very perfect volcano of Pal, in the midst of which rise 3 cones.

About 15 m. N. of Montpezat, near Gerbier des Joncs, at the base of the Mount Mezène, is the source of the Loire, 4711 ft. above the sea level. There is a bridle path by it to Le Puy.

It is possible to cross the mountain from the Gravenne of Montpezat direct to Thueyts: the only other way is to return to Pont de la Baume.

A short way above La Baume, the Ardèche is joined by the river Alignon, in whose valley are situated the singular craters of Jaujac and Souillols. (See Route 118.) There is a road from Jaujac down the valley of the Liane to L'Argentière.

Thueyts (Inn, Chez Burine; far better than that at Montpezat) lies on the l. bank of the Ardèche, surrounded by the most splendid volcanic scenery, about 4 m. above La Baume, (see Route 118. p. 416.); it stands on a volcanic current, which has issued from the same ridge as the Gravenne de Montpezat, if not from that very crater. For nearly 1 m. below Thueyts the river is lined by the majestic colonnade of basalt proceeding from it. A stair, the steps of which are basaltic prisms, has been formed up the rock, and is called *Escalier du Roi.

The road from Aubenas to Nismes is that by which the silk produced in the S. is transported to the market of Aubenas, and thence transferred to the manufactories of Lyons and St. Etienne. It leaves the town of L'Argentière a little on the rt. before reaching 22 Joyeuse, a small town on the Baume, at the foot of the Cevennes.

* Additional information respecting the valley of the Ardèche is desired by the Editor.

An excursion might be made hence by Ruoms and Vallons (famed for the caves in its vicinity) to the Pont de l'Arc, a natural bridge of limestone spanning the river Ardèche, open to a height of 90 ft. above it, and 160 ft. wide. It was once the common line of passage from the Vivarais into the Cevennes, and was fortified in the religious wars.

29 St. Ambroix in the Dept. Gard, a town of 3000 inhabitants, on the Cèze, surmounted by an old castle.

The coal mines of Bessège, near which the road passes, are remarkable for the quantity and size of the fossil vegetables occurring in them.

The rivers Cèze and the 2 Gardons take their rise in the mountains of the Hautes Cevennes, — the wild theatre of the insurrection of the Protestant mountaineers, known as Camisards, or "Enfans de Dieu," as they called themselves; while they distinguished their native mountains, whose roots our road may be said to skirt on the rt. from St. Ambroix to Ners, by the name "le Desert." Their desolating irruptions and bloody contests with the forces of Louis XIV. spread far and wide over the country we are about to traverse, on both sides of our route, up to the very gates of Nismes and Alais; and almost every step will recal to those familiar with the history of that fearful contest some melancholy memorial of bloodshed and violence.

20 Alais, (Inns, H. du Commerce: — Lion d'Or) an important manufacturing town, containing 15,884 inhab., in the midst of a productive coal field, which has only recently begun to be worked to any extent, and which furnishes iron as well as coal. The chief collieries are at Grande Combe on the railway. There are in the vicinity of Alais numerous iron furnaces, silk mills, glass works, and many steam engines hard at work.

The Place de la Maréchale is surrounded by low porticoes or arcades.

The town contains no fine buildings. It was taken by Louis XIII., as a stronghold of Protestantism, and its fortifications destroyed.

A railroad connects Alais with Nismes; trains go twice a-day. Distance 45 kilom. = $27\frac{3}{4}$ Eng. m.

At la Tour de Bellot, a deserted sheep farm and watch tower to the W. of Alais, between it and Anduze, a band of 1500 Camisards, betrayed by a miller on the Gardon, who had supplied them with provisions, were surprised at night by the troops of Louis XIV., 1704. The Camisard outposts had barely time to sound an alarm when they were cut to pieces, so that only the leader and a part of the band were able to issue forth from the tower before it was invested. The Camisard chief, Cavalier, made furious efforts to drive back the soldiery, and relieve his brethren in the tower, but in vain. They, however, blocked up every entry, pouring a deadly fire from every window and cranny, and were only subdued after an obstinate resistance of 8 hours, by fire being set to the building, in which 298 of them perished, besides 100 left dead outside the walls. The loss of the king's troops was estimated at 1200 killed and wounded. Wild justice was soon after done by the Camisards on the traitorous miller; he was seized, condemned to death, and led out to execution in front of the insurgents, who, as was their custom, knelt around him the while, offering up prayers for his soul. His two sons, who served in their ranks, refused his parting embrace, and looked on unmoved during his punishment.

Vezenobre, through which the road passes, is frequently mentioned in the history of the Cevenol war; and the inhabitants of Euzet, a village a few miles to the E., were put to the sword, 1704, by a king's officer, Lalande. Entering the town suddenly he found great store of provisions, heaps of bread, hams, sausages, and a bullock skinned, evidently destined for the Camisards, whom a brief search disclosed concealed in the neighbourhood. They were the remains of the force of Cavalier, defeated at Nages, (R. 126.), and were here again routed with a loss of 170 killed, including several prophetesses. Further evidence that the inhabitants of Euzet were aiding and abetting the rebels was furnished by the discovery in their vicinity of one of those caverns which the Camisards converted into hospitals and arsenals. It was filled with wounded, medicines, arms and ammunition. This sealed their fate; they were all slaughtered, including the patients in the cavern, and Euzet was destroyed. Such was the system on which this exterminating war was carried on. The Camisard commissariat was supplied by requisitions upon towns and villages, both Catholic and Protestant: when not furnished with good will, a missive of this sort preceded their appearance, addressed to the chief men of the place: — "M. M. vous ne manquerez point de nous préparer demain le diner, sous peine d'être assiégé et mis à feu et à sang. Cavalier."

14 Ners is a village on the l. bank of the Gardon, at the angle formed by the junction of its 2 branches, the Gardon d'Anduze and d'Alais. The river in winter rolls down a flood of water with the force of a torrent, but in summer is dried up to a few rills or threads. Owing to its impetuosity and sudden rising, no attempt to throw a bridge across it has succeeded.

Not far from Ners, on the W., is the Castle of Castelnau (8 m. S. of Uzès). It is remarkable as the spot where Roland, the chief and generalissimo of the Cevenol insurgents, ended his career, Aug. 13, 1704. His presence on the spot had probably been betrayed to Marshal Villars, for in the middle of the night, when Roland and his companions (including a female called Mademoiselle de Cornelli) were fast asleep, their sentinel on the tower heard the noise of horses' feet approaching at a gallop. He gave the alarm just as the cavalry were about to enter. The Camisards started up half naked, rushed to the stable, and mounting the bare backs of their horses, galloped off for their lives, but without saddles, belt, or spurs. They were soon overtaken, compelled to dismount, and, having been discovered trying to conceal themselves in a hollow way, were forced to face about. Roland, planting his back against the trunk of an old olive tree, made a desperate resistance, answering to the summons, "Rendez-vous! Bas les armes!" by killing 3 of the dragoons with 3 successive shots of his blunderbuss, and he was drawing his pistols, of which he carried a row at his girdle, when a musket shot brought him down. The wound was mortal, and his companions, seeing his fall, at once threw themselves on his body, and allowed themselves to be seized and bound like lambs. The body of Roland was publicly burned at Nismes.

Near Ners rises the tall tower of the modernised Castle of Boucoiron on a rock.

14 La Calmette.

The road passes near the limestone quarries, whence the Romans obtained the materiel for the amphitheatre of Nismes.

15 Nismes. (Route 126.)

SECTION VI.

PROVENCE AND LANGUEDOC.

ROUTE		PAGE
125	THE RHONE (B). — Lyons to Avignon and Arles, by Vienne, Valence, Orange, Vaucluse, Tarascon, Beaucaire, and St. Remy . . .	428
126	Avignon to Narbonne, by the Pont du Gard, Nismes, Montpellier, and Beziers. — St. Gilles and Aigues Mortes	461
127	Nismes to Marseilles and Nice, by Beaucaire, (Railway), Arles, The Crau, Toulon and Hyères . . .	474
128	Avignon to Marseilles and Nice, by Aix, Frejus, and Cannes	486

1. FEATURES OF PROVENCE. — CLIMATE. PEOPLE. — 2. MISTRAL. — 3. MOSQUITOES. — 4. FERTILITY AND VARIED PRODUCTIONS. — 5. THE TRUE GARDEN OF PROVENCE. — 6. THE ROMAN ANTIQUITIES. — 7. GOTHIC ARCHITECTURE. — 8. THE RHONE.

§ 1. The Englishman who knows the S. of France only from books ; who there finds Provence described as the cradle of Poetry and Romance, the paradise of the Troubadours, a land teeming with oil, wine, silk, and perfumes, has probably formed in his mind a picture of a region beautiful to behold, and charming to inhabit. These anticipations may probably be strengthened by Mrs. Radcliffe's well-known, but perfectly unfounded, descriptions of scenery in the "Mysteries of Udolpho." Nothing, however, can differ more widely from the reality ; and at least it is not from this quarter that France deserves the epithet "La Belle." Nature has altogether an arid character ; — a sky of copper, an atmosphere loaded with dust, the earth scorched rather than parched by the unmitigated rays of the sun, which overspread every thing with a lurid glare. The hills rise above the surface in masses of bare rock, without any covering of soil, like the dry bones of a wasted skeleton. Only on the low grounds, which can be reached by irrigation, does any verdure appear. There is a sombre melancholy sternness in the landscape of the South. The aching eye in vain seeks to repose on a patch of green, and the inhabitant of the North would not readily purchase the clear cloudless sky of Provence with the verdure of misty England. Neither the bush-like vine, nor the mop-headed mulberry, stripped of its leaves for a great part of the summer, nor the tawny green olive, whose leaves look as though powdered with dust, will at all compensate in a picturesque point of view for forests of oak, ash, and beech.

"After Aix, the austere South of France, silent, burnt up, shadeless, and glaring, with houses all shut up, showed the misery of a hot climate, while in Italy its luxury had struck us. The sun had bleached every thing, and the universal atmosphere was thickened with the perpetual dust of habitual drought, for here it is said not to rain for seven months together in summer. The roads were of a dusky buffy white ; the farm-houses, built of the materials nearest at hand, of the same colour ; roads, soil, houses, men, trees, animals, all partaking of the same hue of universal dust, as the caterpillar does of the leaf on which it feeds. Now and then parched and scanty grass sprang up among the clodded earth, and long-legged sheep were feeding anxiously upon it, in the scorching sun, without a single tree of shelter. All the inns, however miserable, have large remises, to afford coolness and shade, during the middle of the day, for travellers and horses."—P.

The character of the people appear influenced by the fiery sun, and soil which looks as though it never cooled. Their fervid temperament knows no control or moderation; ferocious in disposition, they are led by very slight religious or political excitement, on sudden impulses, to the committal of murders, assassinations, and other acts of violence unknown in the North. They are rude if not brutal in manner, coarse in aspect, and harsh in speech, their patois being unintelligible, even to the French themselves. From the loudness of tone and energy of gesture, they appear always as though going to fight when merely carrying on an ordinary conversation. The traveller who happens to fall into the hands of the ruffianly porters at Avignon will be able to judge if this be an exaggerated picture. Those who are prone to complain of the climate of England should be sent to try that of the South of France. If they expect an unvarying serene sky and warm temperature they will be wofully disappointed. The variations between summer and winter are marked by the dead olive, and vine trees killed by the frost; and the torrid influence of summer by the naked beds of torrents left without a drop of water. In many years not a drop of rain falls in June, July, and August, and the quantity is commonly very small: the great heats occur between the middle of July and the end of September, yet even in summer, scorching heat alternates with the most piercing cold; and the vicissitudes are so sudden and severe that strong persons, much more invalids, should beware how they yield to the temptation of wearing thin clothing, and of abandoning cloaks and great coats.

§ 2. The cause of these sudden changes in temperature is the mistral or Vent de Bize, the N. W. wind, one of the scourges of Provence, from the occurrence of which no season is exempt. It is a most violent, bitterly cold, and drying wind, which fills the atmosphere with a yellow haze, and is most painful to the eyes and face. It prevails chiefly in spring all along the coast, and up the Rhone as far as Valence.

"Voilà le vent, le tourbillon, l'ouragon, les diables déchainés qui veulent emporter votre château; quel ébranlement universel!" are the words in which Madame de Sevigné describes it: it overthrows at times the largest trees; the branches are generally turned in a direction contrary to its cutting blasts, and while it rages vessels are not unfrequently prevented putting out to sea in the teeth of it. It was well known to the ancients, and is supposed to be the Melamborias of Strabo, which he describes as sweeping stones and gravel from the ground. It is sufficient to blow a man from his horse. "In the winter months, December, January, February, the weather is truly charming, with the mistral very rarely."

§ 3. Another plague of the South of France is the mosquitoes, cousins, or moucherons, which, to an inhabitant of the North, unaccustomed to their venomous bite, will alone suffice to destroy all pleasure in travelling. They appear in May and last sometimes to November; and the only good which the mistral effects is that it modifies the intensely hot air of summer, and represses, momentarily, these pestilential insects. They are not idle by day, but it is at night that the worn-out traveller needing repose is most exposed to the excruciating torments inflicted by this cruel insect. Woe to him who for the sake of coolness leaves his window open for a minute; attracted by the light they will pour in by myriads. It is better to be stifled by the most oppressive heat than to go mad. Even closed shutters and a mosquito curtain (cousinière), with which all beds in good inns are provided, are ineffectual in protecting the sleeper. A scrutiny of the walls, and a butchery of all that appear, may lessen the number of enemies; but a single one effecting an entry, after closing the curtains and tucking up the bed-clothes with the utmost care, does all the mischief. The sufferer awakes in the middle of the night in a state of fever, and adieu to all further prospect of rest. The pain inflicted by the bites is bad enough, but it is the air of triumph with which the enemy blows his trumpet, the tingling, agonising buzzing which fills the air, gradually advancing nearer and nearer, announcing the certainty of a fresh attack, which carries the irritation to the highest pitch.

The pain and swellings usually last for several days, and there is no remedy but patience. The state of the blood at the time, however, considerably modifies or increases the amount and duration of suffering. It is said to be the female only which inflicts the sting. Mosquitoes, of course, are not peculiar to the S. of France, but there the traveller from the N. will probably first encounter them; and it is necessary that he should be prepared.

The scorpion is not uncommon in Languedoc and Provence, and even now and then makes his entrance into the houses, being brought in along with fire-wood; and it is even not uncommon to discover it in the folds of the bed curtains or sheets. Instances, however, of persons being bitten by this foul insect are very rare indeed; from its nature it is fearful, and when discovered endeavours to run away and hide itself.

§ 4. The foregoing description of Provence and Bas Languedoc has hitherto been limited to the dark side of the picture; it remains to examine its resources, its fertility, and its curiosities.

Its valleys and lowlands accessible to irrigation are most fertile; and the earth, where it can be sufficiently supplied with moisture, teems with varied productions all the year round. Before the spring is over the mulberry trees, which line the roads and cross the fields, in ugly cabbage-headed rows, are stripped of their juicy foliage to feed the silk-worm, — silk alone being a source of immense and increasing wealth in the S. provinces of France. Early in summer comes the corn harvest, the crops having grown, for the most part, under the boughs of the mulberry, olive, or vine; sunshine and soil sufficing for both. Autumn is the season of the vintage; and the wines of Lunel and Frontignan have a widely established reputation, though the bulk of the produce is used in the manufacture of wines and for mixing with other sorts. Chesnuts are another crop collected in the same season, and furnishing a store of wholesome food for the peasant during winter. The winter has set in before the olives are gathered and pressed. A visit to the market-place in every town will show with what abundance the earth brings forth fruits and vegetables of endless variety, — grapes, figs, melons, almonds, citrons, mushrooms, tomatas, truffles, &c. The drying and preserving of fruits of various kinds is a great source of mercantile wealth to Provence.

§ 5. There is, however, one little corner of Provence which combines remarkable picturesque beauty with a climate so serene and warm, and well protected from injurious blasts, that its productions are almost tropical in their nature. This is a narrow strip in the Department of the Var, bordering on the blue Mediterranean, extending from Toulon to Nice, stretching inland to Grasse and Draguignan. In this favoured region, the true garden of Provence, the real paradise of the Troubadours, in the valleys, and on the S. slopes of the small mountain chains of Les Maures and Les Estrelles, sheltered from the injurious mistral, and open only to the S., the aloe, the cactus, the pine of Aleppo, the umbrella pine, the pomegranate, the orange, and even the palm tree, may be seen flourishing in the open air. This is especially the case at St. Maxime, Hyères, Antibes, and Cannes, whose gardens, luxuriant with aromatic herbs, heliotropes, orange flowers, jasmines, &c., supply the perfume distilleries of La Grasse, where more scents, pomades, essences, &c. are made than in any town in Europe, save Paris.

§ 6. The chief attraction, however, of these southern provinces is their Roman remains, not surpassed in beauty and preservation by any in Italy. The Pont du Gard, between Avignon and Nismes, and the walls of the Theatre at Orange, are stupendous and most impressive structures, perfectly characteristic of the great people that raised them; the amphitheatres of Nismes and Arles, though far less enormous than the Colossæum, are more interesting, on account of their better preservation. The Maison Carrée is a gem of architecture: the monuments at St. Rémy, and the arch at Orange, are also of great excellence, besides many other curious relics, which are described in their proper place.

§ 7. The student of Christian architecture will find much to interest him in the churches of Arles and its vicinity, of St. Gilles, of Avignon (the cathedral), where the stupendous Papal palace is also a most interesting historical monument, of Aix, and many more.

In these, and other mediæval monuments of S. E. France, the traveller will not fail to observe the long perpetuated influence of Roman architecture on the ecclesiastical edifices of the district which still retains its Roman name of THE Province, par excellence.

§ 8. The Rhone, the great highway to Provence and to Italy, since the establishment of steamers, is not of commercial utility proportioned to its length and volume, owing to its turbulence and shifting sand-banks. Yet it is a noble river, and its scenery very striking, and some have preferred it to the Rhine; but, in truth, the two have a totally different character, and each its own excellences: the writer of this, however, cannot conceal his preference for the German stream. The traffic upon the Rhine is at least fourfold greater than that on the Rhone: the Rhine is navigated by 42 steamers, and, although there are 28 at present on the Rhone, they make on an average only 50 passages in the year, while a great part of the Rhenish steamers are, with the exception of a few weeks, in action all the year through.

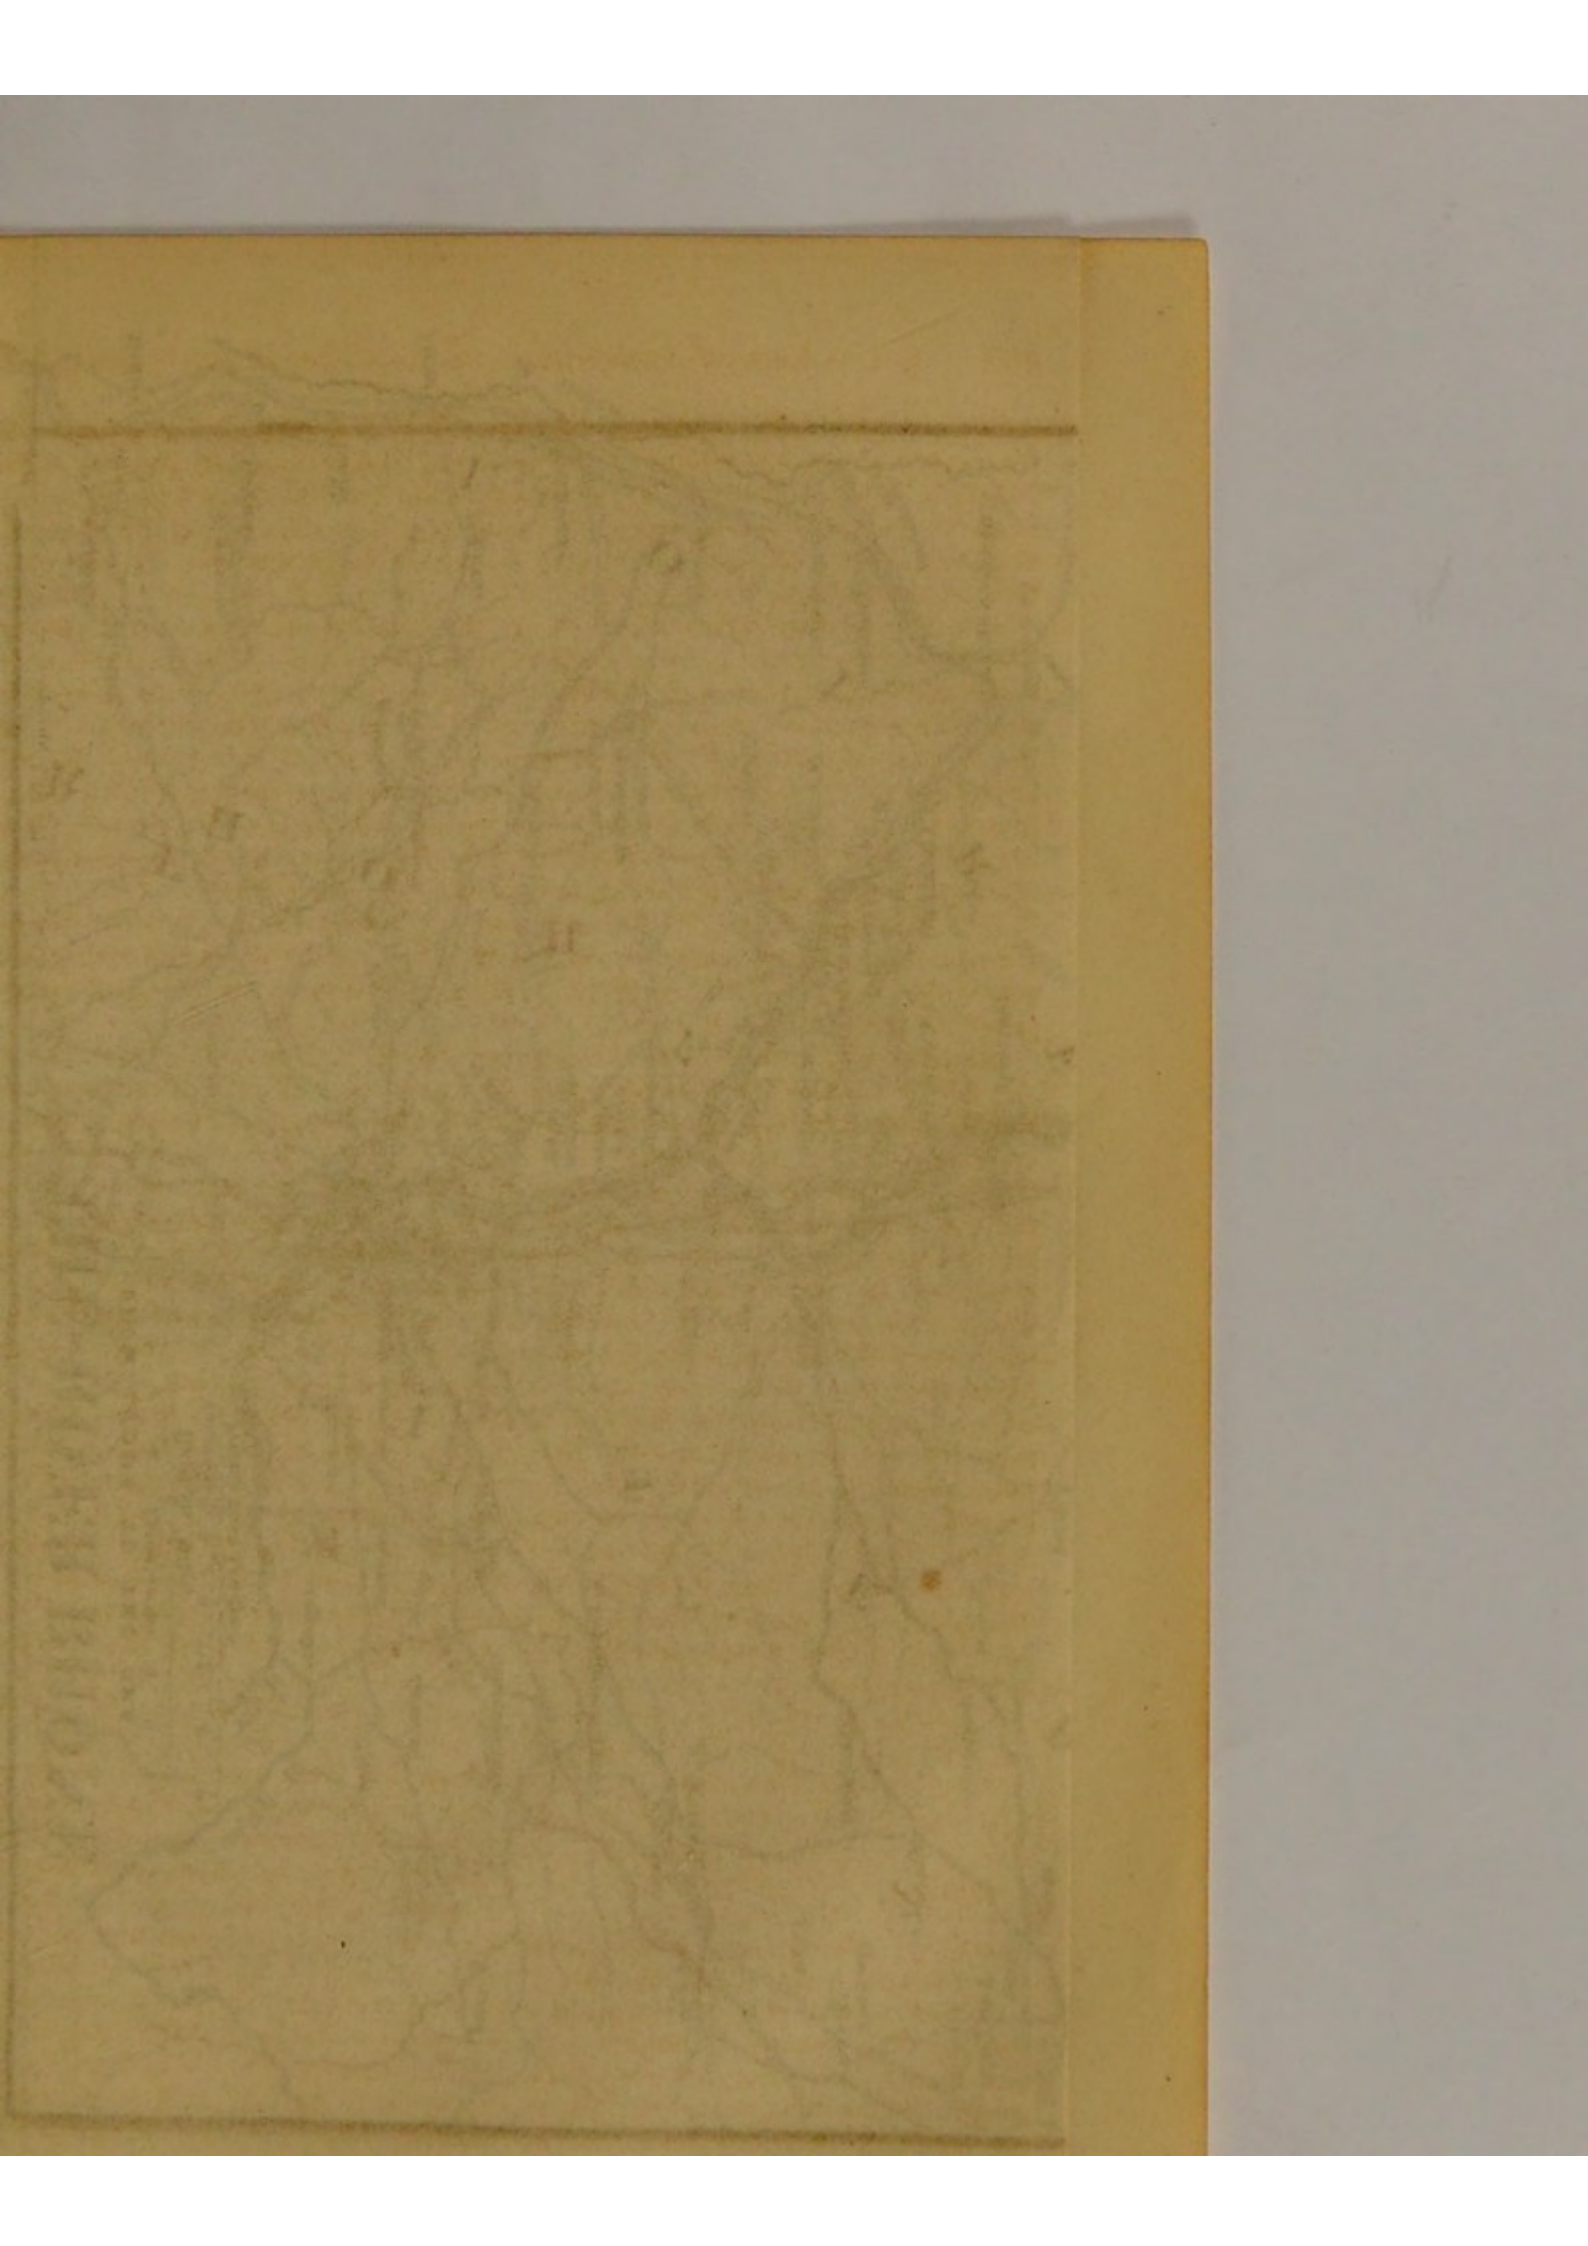
The works which will best afford detailed information respecting Provence and the south of France are, Millin, "Voyage dans le Midi de la France," Frossard, "Tableau de Nîmes," Merimée, "Rapport sur les Monumens du Midi de la France" (for architecture), and Hughes' "Itinerary of Provence and the Rhone."

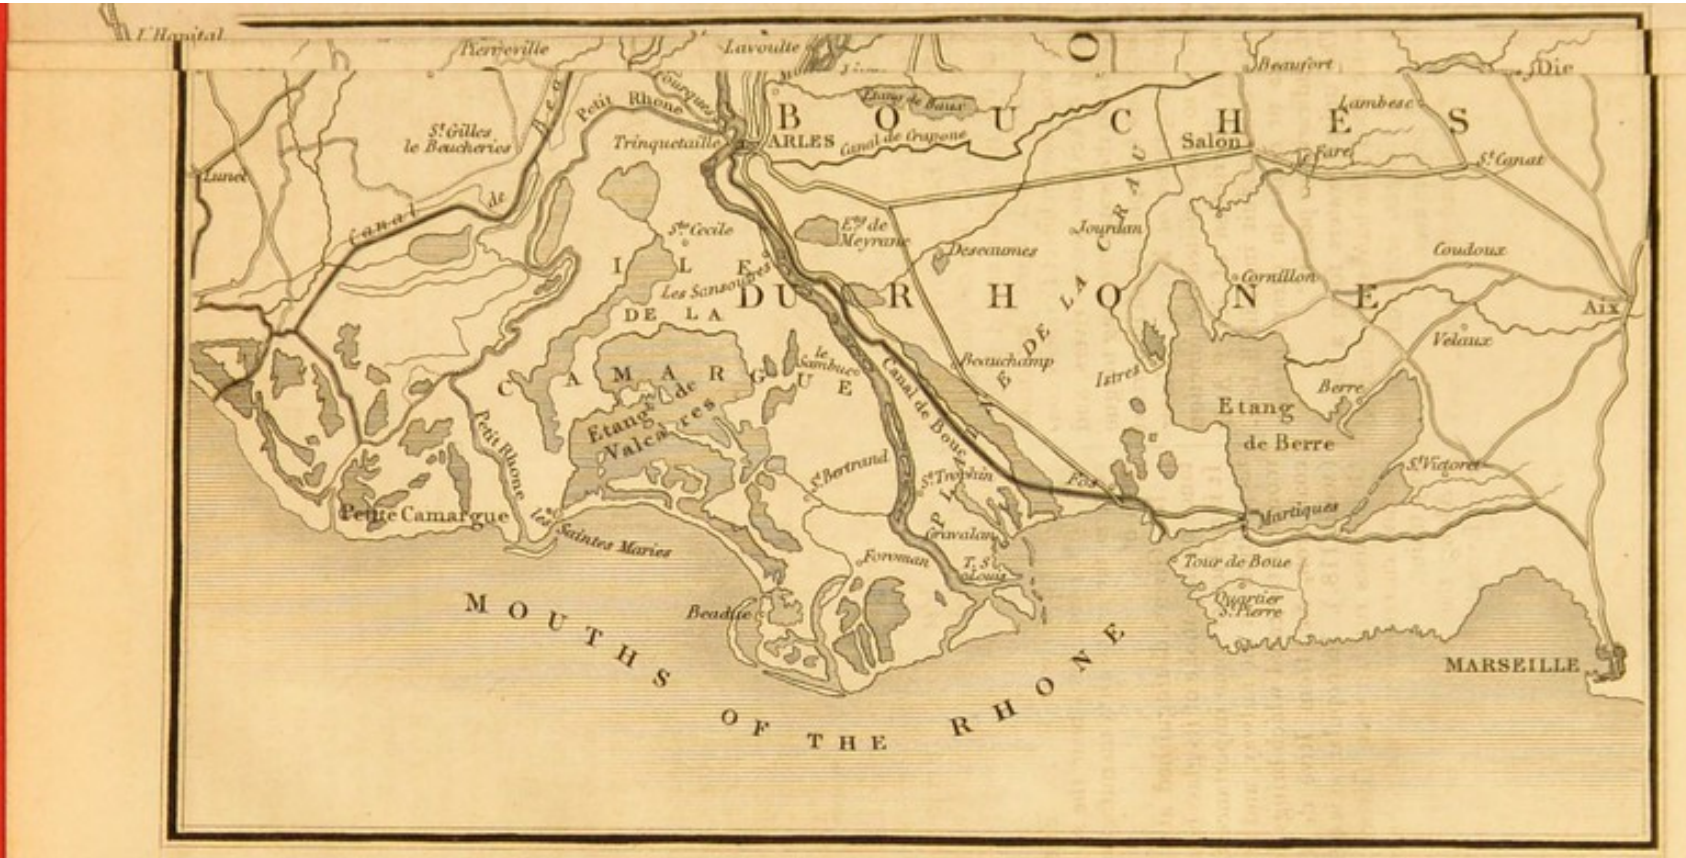
ROUTE 125.

THE RHONE (R.)—LYONS TO AVIGNON AND ARLES, BY VIENNE, VALENCE, ORANGE.

By land, 263 kilom. = 163 Eng. m.
By water to Arles, 285 kilom.

Steamers, belonging to several companies, but almost without exception managed by English engineers, start every morning from the Quai on the rt. bank of the Rhone, except when the river is too high to allow them to pass under the bridges, or too low, which sometimes happens. The hour of departure varies, according to the season, from 5 to 7 A.M. They make the voyage to Avignon, a distance of at least 135 Eng. m., in 11 hours; and to Arles in 13. They take carriages at a charge of 100 francs, while the passengers' fare varies from 10 to 20 or 30 fr., so that it is no cheaper than posting for a party. They are by





Published by John Murray Albemarle Street London 1843.

Drawn & Engd by J. & C. Walker.

no means clean, and are often crowded with merchandize. There is a restaurant on board. They touch at Vienne, Tournon, Valence, Avignon, Beaucaire, Arles. Steamers also run between Lyons and Valence. It scarcely answers for passengers to ascend the river, as the vessels take as long as the diligences, requiring 40 or 50 hours from Arles, and at least 2 days from Avignon to Lyons.

4 *diligences run daily, along the l. bank, to Marseilles, and many more between the intermediate towns.

There is little interest at first in the banks of the Rhone, after getting clear of Lyons, its bustling quays and tall stately houses, and passing,

Rt., the junction of the Saone with the Rhone, —

"Ubi Rhodanus ingens amne prærapido fluit,
Ararque dubitans quo suos cursus agat
Tacitus quietis alluit ripas vadis,"—Seneca, under the new wire suspension bridge of La Mulatière, which carries the railway to St. Etienne over the Saône (R. 118., p. 414.). The original junction of the Rhodanus and Arar took place nearly 2 m. higher up until 1770, when the architect Perrache constructed dykes between the rivers, and gained from the water the long tongue of land now occupied by an important suburb or quarter of Lyons. Cæsar appears to have visited the junction from his description of it: "Arar in Rhodanum influit incredibili lenitate, ita ut oculis in utram partem fluat, judicari non possit."

The united waters form a broad majestic flood; the banks are studded with small villages, scattered among willow and poplar avenues.

L. The high road along the l. bank of the Rhone is one of the worst in France; a series of ups and downs, liable to constant injury from the torrents descending from the hills across it; but, above all, tremendously cut up by the immense number of broad-wheeled waggons which traverse it at all seasons. Even though the Rhone, the largest river in France, runs parallel with it, such is the rapidity of the current, and the perversity of the navigation, from shifting sand-banks, that the transport up its valley of most of the bulky articles the produce of Provence, soap, oils, silk, dried fruits, &c., and of the colonial imports of Marseilles, is made on the axle. Every mile or two the road is studded with enormous barn-like Remises, whose open portals yawn invitingly to receive in their shade the loaded waggon and its 6 or 8 horses, each with a cabaret or carter's hostel attached to it.

The traveller "journeys onwards in the dazzling dreariness of the sunshine, amidst clouds of intolerable dust, crossed ever and anon by long caravans of roulage, drawn by tall mules."

Rt. The railway to St. Etienne (R. 118.) continues near the water's edge as far as the dirty manufacturing town of

Rt. Givors, distinguished at a distance by the smoke of its glass houses. It is a place of some importance from its position on the railway, and at the mouth of the canal which brings down coal, iron, &c. from Rive de Gier (see R. 118.). Its population is 4,900. Omnibuses run between Givors and Vienne corresponding with the railway trains.

Along the banks of the Rhone, from Lyons to Valence, a "poste aux ânes," or relays of donkeys, for the convenience of bargemen and such persons, was at one time established. The cultivation of the vine is very general in the neighbourhood of Vienne: vineyards here cover all the slopes.

* By land, 263 kilom. = 163 Eng. m.
The post road quits Lyons, after traversing the Rhone, by the Faubourg Guillotière, passes on the l. the detached Fort de La Motte, one of the modern defences of Lyons, named after an old castle occupied by Henri IV., at his marriage with Marie de Medicis, and shortly before reaching 6 St. Fons enters the Dept. de l'Isère.

L.* Vienne.—Inn, La Table Ronde; the best, passable, but not clean.

Vienne, a town of 17,000 inhabitants, stretches its buildings along the l. bank of the Rhone, faced by a tolerably handsome quay, at the foot of precipitous hills, and runs up a small valley between 2 heights, the one, Mont Salomon, crowned by a ruined castle of the middle ages, the other Mont Pipet, originally a fortified camp of the Romans. The Castle of Salomon passes with the common people for the prison of Pilate, who was banished to Vienne in Gaul, according to Eusebius and others, after his return from Judæa to Rome.

From the valley behind Vienne, the Gere issues out into the Rhone, turning in its passage many mill wheels, and giving activity to manufactures of coarse cloth, pasteboard, iron forges, &c.

Vienne is one of the most ancient towns in France, having been already a flourishing place before Lyons is known to have existed. It is mentioned by Cæsar, by Ausonius, in the line,

"Accolit Alpinis opulenta Vienna colonis," and by Martial, who calls it "opulenta Vienna," and it is natural to expect to find some remains of its Roman possessors. Besides numerous water conduits and substructions of masonry, the chief Roman building is a Temple, supposed to have been dedicated to Augustus, in form somewhat like the Maison Carrée at Nismes, but much injured during the middle ages by having the interstices of its columns built up with masonry, and the columns themselves rasped to bring them to a level with the walls, in order to convert it into a church. It is now a museum, and contains a number of sculptured and architectural fragments found in and about the town, a very rich frieze, capitals of columns, &c. A Greyhound, in marble, two Boys quarrelling about a Bird (a common subject of antique sculpture), and 2 copper Dolphins found in the Rhone, are worth notice.

Behind the Place du Pilori is a lofty double arch and vault, with pillars inside, called Arche de Triomphe, but in reality part of the portico of the ancient Forum. It now leads to the modern theatre, and is unimportant.

On the slopes of Mont Pipet the remains of the seats of a Roman theatre may, it is said, be traced among the vineyards, but they are very inconsiderable. Lastly, outside the town, below it, is the Roman obelisk, or Aiguille, described p. 435.

The cathedral of St. Maurice is a stately edifice in the lower part of the town, raised upon an elevated basement or parvis, facing the river, on a line with the bridge, and approached by a broad flight of steps. Its W. front, flanked by 2 massive towers, is rich in flamboyant ornaments, but they are clumsy and without delicacy; and it was much mutilated, like all the churches on the Rhone, by the fanatic Huguenot soldiery (1562), less than 30 years after its completion. The interior wants height. The pointed roof, painted blue, and sprinkled with stars, and the 4 compartments nearest to the W. end seem of the same age as it, viz. 15th or 16th century. The pillars of the choir, and the apses at the E. end, are said to be of the 12th century. There are no transepts. A marble monument of an Archbishop Montmorin, on the rt. of the altar, though much vaunted, seems a heavy piece of work; its artist was called Michel Angelo Slodtz. The N. porch retains some statues in a stiff style.

The Romanesque tower of St. André le Bas will be admired by the architect for its composition and proportions; but the cloister, so interesting for the varied sculpture of its capitals, is now included in a private garden, and its pillars built up in a wall.

* The post road continues through 8 St. Symphorien, at a considerable distance from the river, but approaches it at 13 Vienne.

In the suburb Pont l'Evêque, in a hill on the l. bank of the Gere, there is a lead mine.

Many who have occupied themselves in tracing the route of Hannibal over the Alps suppose that he quitted the l. bank of the Rhone at Vienne, (which was one of the chief towns of the Allobroges,) proceeding hence, by Bourgouin and Yenne, to the Little St. Bernard.

Vienne is interesting as the cradle of Christianity in the W.: the Epistle of its Early Martyrs to their brethren in the E. is a very instructive and perfectly authentic document.

Vienne was capital of the 1st kingdom of Burgundy in the 5th century; and at a later period was the capital and residence of the Dauphins. A celebrated ecclesiastical council held here 1307, and presided over by Pope Clement V. and Philippe le Bel, condemned the Order of the Templars. The archbishops long enjoyed considerable temporal sway: they had the privilege of naming the governor of the forts Salomon and Pipet, who was always a canon of the cathedral, but had a military deputy under him.

A suspension bridge, recently reconstructed, the previous one having been washed down by the inundation of 1840, connects Vienne with,

Rt., its suburb, St. Colombe, where stands, by the water side, an old square tower, sometimes called "Tour de Mauconseil," from a tradition that Pilate threw himself off from the top of it, but in reality built by Philippe de Valois as a tête du pont to the original stone bridge, which was destroyed by the Rhone, 1651, except the trtnks of some of its piers still visible, when the water is low.

Diligences go daily to Grenoble (Route 131.) and Lyons, and omnibuses run hence along the rt. bank of the Rhone to meet the trains on the railway to St. Etienne and Lyons. (Route 118.)

L. Immediately below Vienne, in the midst of a field, on one side of the road to Avignon, stands a Roman obelisk, called L'Aiguille, 76 feet high, rising from a square base, pierced by a double arch, and supported at the angles by pillars of clumsy proportions. The whole is of excellent masonry, the stones being fastened together, not by mortar, but by iron clumps. Its destination is unknown, and it bears no trace of an inscription, but was probably a sepulchral monument.

Rt. The uniformity of the vine-clad slopes which border the river is relieved by the lofty irregular ridge and picturesque outline of Mont Pilas, 3516 ft. above the sea level, a member of the chain of hills which divides the Rhone from the Loire.

Rt. Ampuis,* at its base, is a small village, on the flat behind which rise the sunny slopes of Côte Rotie, called "the burnt side," from their happy exposure to the sun, which, striking full on them, as on a forcing wall, matures the excellent wine named after them. 3 m. below the hills of Côte Rotie is

Rt. Condrieux, a town of 4000 inhabitants, famed for its wines; it has a suspension bridge over the Rhone.

The soil of the valley of the Rhone abounds with rolled pebbles, which in places almost exclusively compose it; yet upon this grows the mulberry tree in vast quantities, planted in rows across the fields, while beneath, and in spite of its shade, luxuriant crops of corn are produced.

Rt. There is another suspension bridge at Serrières, and hence a road strikes off to Annonay. (R. 119.)

Rt. The church of Champagne is a Romanesque edifice of the 13th century, well worth the attention of the antiquary, on account of the singular bas-reliefs with which its outer walls

* The Post Road continues near to the Rhone, until almost opposite Ampuis, where it turns away to the station

13 Auberive, situated outside the village, which it leaves on the rt.

5 Peage de Rousillon.

are incrusted, consisting of heads of animals, monsters, &c., and for the sculptured cornice running under the roof. Some of these carvings have been conjectured to belong to a more ancient structure. Two of them represent David and Goliah, and Judith and Holofernes. The interior ends in an apse at the E. Under the cornice supporting the tribune are 6 medallions, including sculptured groups whose meaning seems difficult to explain.

Before the Revolution the towns of Andance, Champagne, Annonay, though on the rt. bank of the Rhone, belonged to Dauphiné, having been ancient possessions of the Dauphins of Vienne.

L. * St. Rambert. Just below this the Rhone passes from the Dépt. de L'Isère into that of La Drôme.

Rt. The direct road from Paris to Marseilles, by Annonay, descends through a gap in the vine-clad granite hills near

Rt. Andance (R. 119.), and crosses the Rhone, a little lower down, by the suspension bridge of

L. St. Vallier (Inns: Poste:—Grand Sauvage; not good), a town of 2455 inhabitants, consisting of a long street, extending on a terrace above the Rhone. It has a large modern château.

There are numerous silk mills here.

Behind the town, in the gorge of the Galaure, rise the picturesque ruins of the castle of Vals; and near it is the Roche Taillée, a passage cut in the rock, through which a small road is carried.

L. The Château de Ponsas (derived, by the vulgar, from Pontius Pilate, who, according to the tradition, ended his days here by throwing himself from the rock, see p. 435.) is a fine object, frowning with towers and battlements over river and village from the summit of a lofty rock.

The valley of the Rhone is narrowed to a pass, by rocks projecting on either side, on approaching Tain. Nearly opposite the mouth of the considerable river Doux, which is crossed by a wire bridge,

L. a lofty, round topped hill, with a scanty scarf of black bushes round its shoulder, pushes forward its naked and almost precipitous sides into the river, which, along with the road, winds closely round its base. On doubling the sort of cape which it forms, its southern side will be found to consist of a more gradual slope, descending in a succession of steps, or terraces, formed by the natural divisions of the slaty beds of gneiss rock, all covered from top to bottom with vines. This is the celebrated vineyard of L'Hermitage, named from the ruin on its summit, once, perhaps, a hermit's cell. On its favoured slopes the sun plays all day long, maturing the juices of its grapes, which produce the Hermitage wine, one of the finest which grows on the Rhone. The white sort will keep for half a century; the red, of the best quality, is sent to Bordeaux, to be mixed with clarets of first growth, principally the kinds exported to England, which derive from it, and not from brandy, as is commonly supposed, that body which fits them for exportation, and adapts them to the English palate. The whole extent of the vineyard does not, perhaps, exceed 300 acres, and of this only a part near the centre, where a calcareous band traverses the gneiss rock, produces first-rate wines; the soil below is too rich, and above is too cold. The hill is divided among numerous proprietors; it is cultivated with vast labour, and at great expense; the vines are manured with sheep or horse-dung. The grape grown for the red wine is called Ceras, and is said to have been brought from Shiraz, in Persia, by one of the hermits of the mountain.

L. ‡ Tain (Inn, L'Assurance; mid-

* Post Road — 9 St. Rambert.
† 13 St. Vallier.

‡ Post Road.—13 Tain.

dling), a town of 2338 inhabitants, connected by a wire suspension bridge, the first, on a large scale, erected in France, with

Rt. Tournon, one of the chief towns of the Dept. of l'Ardèche, 3971 inhab. Above the bridge, the picturesque towers of the old castle of the Counts of Tournon and Ducs de Soubise rise on a precipitous rock, at the foot of the hills; it is now a prison. Below the bridge, at the water side, stands the College Royale, originally founded by the Cardinal de Tournon, and once an Ecole Militaire.

Diligences run from Tain to Romans on the Isère, on the way to Grenoble. (R. 132.)

L. The valley of the river Isère, one of the chief tributaries of the Rhone, rising at the foot of the Little St. Bernard, now opens out into a wide and monotonous plain, after traversing which, and being crossed itself by the high road, on a handsome bridge of 7 arches, the river falls into the Rhone. Its waters have usually a black tint contrasting with the white muddy Rhone. Hannibal is supposed by some to have reached the foot of the Alps by ascending this valley, having passed the Rhone lower down, perhaps near Roquemaure.

L. The vista, opening out through the valley of the Isère, is terminated by the majestic snowy mass of Mont Blanc, clearly distinguished from among the Alps of Dauphiné; a magnificent object, although 70 or 80 m. distant as the crow flies. The deck of the steamer is probably too low to command it, but it is well seen from the road, or rt. bank Rt. Mr. L. Giraud, the owner of the picturesque white feudal castle, the Château Bourg, perched on a pedestal of rock, projecting into the Rhone, with a little hamlet at its foot, is much to be envied: his dwelling stands in the eye of Mont Blanc, and the everlasting snows of the monarch of mountains add magnificence to the distant horizon of a view in which the exulting and abounding Rhone forms the foreground.

Rt. Cornas, at the foot of limestone hills of considerable elevation, produces a tolerable red wine.

Rt. On approaching Valence, the bare limestone precipices, rising behind the village of St. Peray, and crowned by the picturesque castle of Crussol, arrest the attention. (See p. 439.)

L. *Valence. — Inn, Poste; not at all bad, with some pretensions to English comforts, but rather dear. Travellers should try here the sparkling St. Peray, an excellent wine, not inferior to Champagne.

The steamer passes the town and the Citadel, which is conspicuous from the Rhone, but is separated from it by a considerable space of garden ground, and comes to her moorings below the wire Suspension Bridge, one of the handsomest on the Rhone, supported in the centre by a fine lofty arch of classical architecture.

The high road from Lyons to Avignon skirts the outside of the town, which lies between it and the river, through a faubourg, in which the Poste aux Chevaux and other inns are situated.

Valence is an ancient town of 10,967 inhabitants, still surrounded by its feudal ramparts, battlemented, flanked by towers, and entered by arched gates. It is chef lieu of the Department de la Drôme, and was formerly capital of the Valentinois, created a dukedom for the infamous Cæsar Borgia, by Louis XII.

The Cathedral, a Romanesque building, small in size and very plain, is yet interesting to the architect for its age and constructive peculiarities. It is a cross, with long transepts. Outside the nave, above the aisle roof, runs a small arcade of arches, alternately round and straight-sided. The interior is simple; the piers, surmounted by nearly pure Corinthian capitals, support round arches, from which rises the cylindrical roof, without triforium or clerestory. The E. end is an apse, roofed with a semi-dome. The Church contains a bust and bas-relief, by Canova, to the memory of the unfortunate Pope Pius VI., who, after having been carried off a prisoner from the Vatican, and loaded with insults by the French, which he bore with resignation, died here, 1799.

* Post Road. — 18 Valence.

On the S. side of the church is a singular building, known as Le Pendentif, of classical architecture, erected 1548, as a monument to the family Mistral, whose arms are still visible on it. It is square in form, consisting of 4 piers, with pillars in the angles, and arches between them, supporting a vault, the first of its kind erected, and regarded as a type in architecture. In the rusticated space occupying the sides, carvings of monstrous birds may be discovered.

The ancient Eveché, now subdivided, and partly destroyed, was often visited by Madame de Sevigné.

The semicircular E. end of the cathedral adjoins the Place aux Clercs, a small square, about to be ornamented with a statue of the Napoleonist General Championnet, a native of Valence.

In the "Grand Rue," leading out of this Place, will be found a very rich and interesting specimen of domestic architecture, in a Mansion of the 16th century, now converted into a bookseller's shop. Its origin and destination are not clearly known. It has a Gothic front, covered with elegant Florid tracery, now sadly mutilated, combined with a certain mixture of classic ornament, such as rows of heads and statues, the upper heads representing the 4 Seasons. The doorway is an elegant flattened arch; the transoms of the windows have unfortunately been knocked out. The front of the house is not in one plane, but projects forward; only one part of it is ornamented, and that which is unadorned retreats backward at a slight angle, so as to be partly concealed from view as you approach it from the Place aux Clercs, probably with design on the part of the architect. The groined and vaulted passage, and the walls towards the inner court, also deserve notice. In the same street, at No. 4., on the 1st floor, Napoleon lodged, while yet a poor and obscure sous-lieutenant of artillery; and some of his first essays in the art of war were made in the Champs de Mars here. The staircase at the back of the house of Madame Duprè, Rue Perolierie, is a good specimen of the Renaissance in architecture, enriched with sculpture.

The Citadelle, begun by Francis I., and bastioned only on the side facing the town, but of no use now as a fortress, is converted into a Caserne du Genie. From the finished bastion there is a good view over the river, of St. Peray, and the Castle of Crussol on its arid rock beyond the Rhone.

Valence is the seat of an Ecole d'Artillerie, and the practice of gunnery is taught on the polygone, a large sandy area on the outskirts of the town, bordering on the Lyons road.

The reeling (filature) and throwing (moulinage) of silk affords employment to a large number of persons at Valence. (See p. 441.)

Steamers up and down the Rhone daily. The ascent to Lyons is made in one day.

Malleposte, by Annonay, to Paris and Marseilles.

Diligences daily (4) to Lyons and Marseilles; 2 to Grenoble (R. 132.); 1 to Aubenas and Privas (R. 121.); to St. Etienne and Annonay.

Rt. St. Peray, famed for one of the best wines of the Rhone, is 2 Eng. m. from Valence, on the opposite side of the Rhone, within the Dept. of the Ardèche: an omnibus goes thither several times a day.

The little village of St. Peray lies snugly in the quiet nook of a sheltered valley running down to the Rhone opposite Valence. Its most conspicuous buildings are the house of M. Faure, the chief proprietor of the vineyards around, and on the height, a little above it, the Château de Beauregard, a singular mansion on the plan of a mimic fortress, bastioned and curtained, with loopholed walls, portcullis, &c., built, it is said, by Marshal Vauban, as a freak, reminding one of Uncle Toby and Corporal Trim, now converted into a depôt for the wine of the district, for which it is better suited than for a dwelling, being constructed over cellars of vast extent.

The slopes of the hills around St. Peray are covered with one uninterrupted vineyard, and wherever they present an aspect to the S.E., so as to receive the sun's rays during nearly the whole day, the best wines grow; such are the Côte de Hongrie, Chapelle de Crussol, and the Prieuré vineyards. The soil is a decomposed granite, and the vine seems to flourish most on this mere dry gravel. Great pains are taken in digging about the roots, but the only manure employed is the leaves of the box, cut small. The grape, when ripe, assumes a beautiful golden hue; its taste is cloyingly sweet, and the saccharine matter exuding often covers the bunches with a brown stain.

The sparkling St. Peray wine is distinguished from Champagne in this respect, that its sweetness arises from the natural juice of the grape, and not from the addition of sugar to sour grapes; and it is consequently a far more wholesome, and not less palatable wine. The red St. Peray derives its colour, a delicate rose tint, from the hue of the skins of the grapes. The vintage takes place about the middle or end of September, and the juice is at once transferred to the cask before the fermentation has begun, and rests there for 6 or 7 months, during which time it is fined. In March or April it is bottled, and remains 2 or 3 years to mature, and allow the dregs to deposit. The bottles are piled up in stacks, each row separated by laths to allow of the bottles which burst (and they form 14 or 15 per cent. of the whole) to be withdrawn. After this the wine is racked, i. e. every bottle is taken out, and is thrust, with its neck downwards, into a hole cut in a board. By this means the dregs sink down gradually into the neck, and, as they descend, day by day, the bottle is tilted more and more until its position is nearly vertical. To expedite the falling of the sediment the bottles are lifted and set down with a jerk once or twice a day; and after receiving 200 or 300 of these jerks, the bottle is taken up, and the sediment is discharged by cutting the string and letting the cork fly, and with it the lees at the neck of the bottle, but as little as possible of the wine. This is called "disgorging." The vacancy thus caused is filled with clear wine; and this process of corking and uncorking is repeated 2 or 3 times, until no more sediment is deposited. The wine is then fit for use, and an excellent wine it is, the "St. Peray grand Mousseux" of M. Faure being at least equal to a first class Champagne.

Rt. A very conspicuous but unsightly line of cliffs of limestone, naked, arid, and partly stained black and yellow, bounds the W. side of the Rhone valley, opposite to and below Valence. Quarries of building stone are worked in these rocks. The highest peak of all, a castled crag, rising above the entrance of the valley, in which lies St. Peray, is crowned by the ruins of the Castle of Crussol, called, from its two projecting chimneys, Les Cornes de Crussol, and conspicuous from a great distance. It belonged to the family of the Ducs d'Uzès, and once enclosed within its fortifications, which may be seen running down the rock, a small village long since swept away.

Rt. Lower down, on the top of the same escarpment of limestone, stands Soyons Castle, betrayed into the hands of Louis XIII. by its traitorous commander Brison, who held it for the Protestants, 1628.

L. Among the Dauphiné mountains the Roche Courbe becomes a conspicuous feature in the landscape, from its precipitous sides and horned brow. A little farther down it changes its aspect, presenting a series of peaks as seen from the river.

Rt. Lavoulte, a little town, piled up in a heap against a rock, is distinguished by the large castle, on the summit of the height above it, and the clouds of smoke rising from the 4 large iron furnaces at its base. The Castle, an ancient possession of the house of Ventadour, and residence of Louis XIII. in 1629, is now occupied by an iron company, and partly serves as a fire-brick kiln: 1 or 2 picturesque towers remain of its older feudal part. The furnaces at its base are supplied with a very rich ore (red carbonate or hæmatite), from mines a short way up the valley. More than 300 persons are employed in them and in the iron works; and the red tinge from the ore pervades the hideously filthy streets, and its dirty inhabitants, whose flesh, clothes, and even hair acquire the same ruddy stain. The coal comes from St. Etienne, and the metal is sent hence in barges, for whose reception a little basin has been formed here at the water side.

A little below Lavoulte, on the opposite side of the Rhone,

L. the river Drôme, which gives its name to a department, pours itself into the Rhone.

L. On either side of the Drôme, about 2. m. above its confluence, stand the towns of Livrons (half of whose 3457 inhabitants are Protestants), and Loriol* (Inn, Chariot d'Or). A fine bridge over the Drôme connects them, and the high road passes through both.

On the l., in the valley, is the Château of Crest, well placed. Loriol was the birth-place and residence of Faujas de St. Fond, who wrote a bulky tome on the extinct Volcanoes of Central France, in his own neighbourhood, which, as the author had never seen an active volcano, abounds in fallacies and is now little valued.

The road to the volcanic district of the Ardèche, by Privas and Aubenas (Route 121.), turns away from the Rhone, near Pouzin.

One of the most striking scenes on the banks of the Rhone is Rt. Rochemaure, a small village, at the base of a hill, from which project 3 peaked masses of black basalt, contrasting vividly with the light-coloured limestone around. The middle peak, rising precipitously 300 ft. above the river, is surmounted by the ruins of a feudal castle, which belonged to the families of Ventadour and Soubise. In these precipices of Rochemaure you behold the last root or limb of the Coiron chain of hills, which, after traversing the whole of the Ardèche, terminates here, on the margin of the Rhone. The black rocks are 3 dykes of basalt, branches of the vast lava current which caps that mountain plateau. The basalt assumes in places a columnar form, and some of the houses and a part of the castle are built of regular prisms. From the top of the rock of Rochemaure there is a fine view over the course of the Rhone, the Alps of Dauphiné, &c.

About 3 m. lower down, but 1½ from the river-side, stands

L. Montélimart† (Inn, Poste; good, but dear), an ancient town of 7956 inhabitants, entirely surrounded by Gothic ramparts flanked with watch towers, and entered by 4 gates. On a rising ground within it stands the castle or citadelle. It obtained its name, Monteil d'Adhemar,

* Post Road. — 11 Paillase.
11 Loriol.

† Post Road. — 13 Derbières.
10 Montélimart.

from a powerful family of magnates, who held possession here from the days of Charlemagne, and from whom many of the old noblesse of the province traced their lineage. Some morocco leather is made here, and the manufacture is mentioned by Rabelais. The almond cakes (nougat), in texture resembling a piece of soap, enjoy some celebrity. Near this the olive is first seen, though it cannot be said to flourish farther to the N. than Avignon: black truffles abound; and the mulberry tree is cultivated to a very great extent for the silk-worm.

At a small village called Allan, about 9 m. S. E. of Montelimart, and the same from the Rhone, there existed, down to 1802, the first white mulberry planted in France. It was brought thither from Naples, by Guy Pope de St. Auban, seigneur of Allan, one of the soldiers who accompanied Charles VIII. on his Italian campaign, 1494. It spread hence all over the S. of France, where the culture of the silk-worm is now one of the chief sources of industry and prosperity to the people. The silk-worm is here called magnan, and the establishments in which it is reared magnaneries. A single tree will furnish 5 or 6 quintaux of leaves, and not unfrequently as much as 9 or 10 quintaux.

At the time when the eggs (la graine) are beginning to be hatched, sheets of paper pierced with holes are laid upon them, and through these the worms, extricating themselves from the shells, climb to reach the mulberry leaves hung over them, whence they are transferred to hurdles formed of reeds, arranged like shelves, for their future habitation. The worms live in that state (as larvæ) about 34 days, and in the course of that period change their skin 4 times. Before each sloughing, called "ages" by the peasant, they become torpid, and cease to eat, but, having changed their skin, their appetite increases enormously. The periods of appetite preceding the 4 first changes are called petites frèzes, and that before the 5th change, grande frèze. The consumption of leaves increases with each age. The worms produced by an ounce of eggs devour 7 lbs. of leaves during the 1st age, and as much as 200 to 300 lbs. of leaves during the final period. At that time they make a noise in eating which resembles that of a heavy shower falling. On the 10th day of this 5th age they cease to eat, and try to climb up to the small twigs of heath or other plants purposely hung over the shelves, in order to spin their cocoon, which they complete in 3 or 4 days. Formerly it was usual to bake the cocoons in an oven, in order to kill the worm and prevent its biting through the silk; a more effectual method, unattended by risk of burning the silk, is to enclose the cocoon in a copper filled with steam, and hermetically sealed, and thus to stifle the worm. It is then fit for reeling (filature).

---

17 m. S. E. of Montelimart is Château Grignan, celebrated in the letters of Madame de Sevigné, and the residence of her son-in-law. It was originally a stately pile, "un château vraiment royal," as Madame de S. calls it, seated on a commanding height above the town, fronted with a terrace raised partly on a rock, partly on masonry, 100 ft. high, commanding an extensive view, bounded by the Mont Ventoux. But it was burnt and gutted at the Revolution by a band of robbers composed of the scum of Orange and the neighbouring towns, and now stands a mere shell; yet the window of the bed-chamber and boudoir of the Sevigné is still pointed out. In the church adjoining the castle, whose tower rises to a level with its terrace, Madame de Sevigné (who died at Grignan) is buried. A black stone in the pavement marks the entrance of the family vault, which was saved from desecration at the hands of the Revolutionist pillagers of the church by the removal of this stone, so as to conceal the position of the vault.

The traveller may regain the banks of the Rhone from Grignan by a different road, leading direct to La Palud, near Pont St. Esprit. The cross-roads, however, to and from Grignan, are very bad indeed.

Rt. The inundation of 1840 carried off the suspension-bridge across the Rhone at Le Theil, nearly opposite Montelimart.

The superior transparency of a southern atmosphere becomes perceptible hereabouts, in the remarkable blueness of the distant hills, approximating in intensity to ultramarine. The inhabitant of a northern climate, who has, perhaps, regarded as exaggerations the azure mountains in the backgrounds of the paintings of Titian, will be surprised to find them here realised in nature.

The Rhone is confined between high but arid limestone cliffs abreast of Rt. Viviers, a town of only 2500 inhabitants, yet a bishop's see, and anciently the capital of the province of Vivarais, which is named after it. The town, inclosed within its old walls, is a complicated labyrinth of narrow streets, partly crossed by arches, not unlike the interior of a hive. On an eminence above the buildings rises the Cathedral, small, and not very remarkable; the nave modern, surmounted by a tower, and near it the Eveché. At the upper end of the town stands the Seminaire, a huge modern edifice of 6 stories, for the education of priests. A private house in the principal Place presents in its richly ornamented front a good specimen of domestic architecture. Viviers suffered much during the wars of Religion, having been one of the first towns to declare against the king in favour of the Prince de Condé and the Protestant party, 1562. It was several times besieged and captured by both parties.

L. The majestic summit of the Mont Ventoux, the extreme buttress or root, pushed forth from the French Alps towards the Rhone, continues in view, a noble object and landmark from this as far as Avignon.

Below Viviers * the river expands, and its current is divided by numerous willowy islands. A fine suspension-bridge of 3 curves, rebuilt since 1840, when the inundation destroyed it, crosses tle Rhone at

Rt. Bourg St. Andeol, a town of 4300 inhabitants, built on a slope. Close to it is a copious source rising from the base of a rock, on the face of which, about 20 ft. from the ground, is a rudely-sculptured group, representing the Sacrifice of a Bull to the god Mithras, to whom the source seems to have been dedicated. It is now nearly effaced.

Those who intend to visit the antiquities of Orange, on their way to Avignon, must quit the steamer at Bourg St. Andeol.

L. Opposite to St. Andeol, but removed 1½ m. from the river, is Pierrelatte, so called from the broad isolated mass of rock rising out of the plain behind it, to a height of 300 or 400 ft. For many miles beyond this, nearly as far as Avignon, the road runs at such a distance from the Rhone that it is rarely seen at all.

L. La Palud †, the first place in the Dept. Vaucluse, is about 2 m. distant from the Rhone, but the crocketted stone spire of its Gothic church may be distinguished. A few miles to the E. of the road is St. Paul Trois Châteaux, the Roman Augusta Tricastinorum.

Rt. The river Ardèche pours its waters into the Rhone nearly opposite La Palud; and its deposits seem to have formed the numerous islands occurring near its mouth.

Rt. About 2 m. lower down, at Pont St. Esprit, a town of 4500 inhabitants, whose citadel was built by

* Post Road.—14 Donzere.
† Post Road.—16 La Palud.

Louis XIII. to keep in awe the Protestants, the Rhone is crossed by a bridge of 26 arches, the longest stone bridge in the world, and down to 1806 the only one over the Rhone. It was built 1310 by an associated brotherhood formed in the town, then called St. Saturnin, and 45 years were occupied in its construction, the first stone having been laid 1265 by the prior of the convent. The cost of this great public work was defrayed by subscriptions raised among the inhabitants of both banks of the Rhone, and by offerings made by the pious at a little chapel dedicated to the Holy Ghost at the end of the bridge, whence its actual name. The stones for it were brought by water from the quarries of St. Andeol, and a company of monks and nuns was established on the bank, the one to superintend the works, the other to attend the sick or wounded workmen. It is 2550 Fr. ft., or 2717 English ft., long, more than three times as long as London Bridge, and 17 ft. wide: the arches are irregular in size; the widest have an opening of 108 ft.; the piers are pierced with small, round-headed, flood-water arches. It is not straight, but makes an angle against the stream. The passage under the Pont St. Esprit used to be thought an achievement like that of shooting old London Bridge, owing to the violent rapidity of the current through its arches; but the experience of the pilots is a guarantee from all danger, and the steamers pass in perfect safety, although the eddying river, rushing like a cataract through the low arches, has an alarming look, increased by the sudden twist which the steersman is obliged to give to the vessel the moment it has passed through. The bridge is about 2 m. distant from the high road to Avignon. Roads branch off from it E. to Gap, and S.W. to Nismes, by the Pont du Gard. (R. 126.)

L. The Avignon road, having crossed that from Pont St. Esprit to Gap, skirts the towns of Montdragon and Mornas, both seated at the foot of precipitous cliffs crowned by ruined castles. From that of Mornas, as the story goes, the ferocious Huguenot leader, the Baron des Adrets, forced his prisoners to leap down on the pikes of his soldiers below.

L. After passing a small stream, the Aigues, a glimpse may be obtained from the river of a huge structure surmounting the town of Orange, 3 m. inland from the Rhone: it is the wall of its Roman theatre. (See p. 444.) The post road, just before it reaches Orange, flanked by poplars, is carried in a double sweep round the antique Roman arch.

L. *Orange.—Inns: Griffon d'Or; tolerably good. — Croix Blanche; both dear: mosquitoes are to be much dreaded here. (§ 3.)

This town of 9223 inhabitants, situated about 3 m. E. of the Rhone, was the ancient Arausio, and is remarkable for the interesting Roman remains which it possesses. Its name has been rendered familiar and illustrious by having been borne by the noble family of Nassau. It was the chief town of a small but independent principality which had existed from the 11th century, and on the death of Philibert de Chalons, Prince of Orange, 1531, without children, became the inheritance of his sister, who was married to the Prince of Nassau Dillingen. The family of Nassau was confirmed in the possession by the Treaty of Ryswick; but upon the death of William III. of England the King of Prussia claimed it, as a descendant of the princes of Nassau-Orange, and in spite of other, rightful perhaps, but weaker claimants, he was allowed by the Treaty of Utrecht to make over the principality, in exchange for other possessions, to the King of France, from whose dominions it has never since been separated. The house of Nassau consequently retains at present no more than the title of Prince of Orange, which is borne by the heir to the throne of Holland.

* Post Road. — 12 Mornas. 11 Orange.

The principal Roman remains are, 1. The Triumphal Arch, situated about ¼ m. outside the town, on the road to Valence. It is a handsome structure in a good, if not in the best, style of Roman architecture; its preservation is remarkable, considering that it was incorporated in the palace of the Princes of Orange; and the deep yellow tints of the stone (a tertiary limestone abounding in fossils) of which it is composed have a rich effect. The bas-reliefs with which it is adorned represent chiefly naval trophies, — rostra, masts, yards, shrouds, anchors, and a number of barbaric shields skilfully disposed; others consist of groups of figures, but the subjects are not satisfactorily explained: one female holds her finger to her ear. The sunken panels (caissons) in the vault of the central archway are very elegant. The date and destination of this arch are unknown: no inscription is visible, excepting certain names inscribed on the shields, among which the most distinct is MARIO, and some have, in consequence, supposed that it was raised in commemoration of Marius' victory over the Cimbri near Aix. But arches of triumph were not known, it appears, until the time of the emperors, and the generally-received opinion at present refers it to the reign of Marcus Aurelius, and to his successes on the Danube and in Germany.

The building has been very judiciously repaired.

Quite at the other end of the dirty little town stands, 2. The Roman Theatre, at the foot of a hill, whose side, with skilful economy, was excavated into semicircular ranges of seats for the spectators, and whose top was crowned by the citadel of the Romans first, and afterwards of the Princes of Orange, finally razed by Louis XIV. The colossal wall forming the scena, the chord of the semicircle, built over against the hill, overtops all the puny edifices of modern times, and is conspicuous for miles around. Few such walls, it may safely be asserted, exist in any part of the world: its dimensions are, 34 met. = 121 ft. high, 102 met. = 334½ ft. long, and 4 met. = 13 ft. thick. It is formed of huge blocks, fitted accurately together without cement. It had 3 entrances below, and near the top ran 2 rows of projecting corbel stones, those nearest the extremities being pierced with holes for the masts, by which an awning was stretched over the scene. Owing, however, to the projection of the crowning cornice, the masts must have inclined outwards. The inner face of the wall is denuded of ornament; in its centre is an arch, and on either side a curious and lofty recess. The interior has recently been cleared of the miserable hovels which filled it, and whose tenants, in some instances, burrowing like moles, had formed cellars in the thickness of the walls, regardless of the risk of undermining them, and being buried in its ruins. The removal of 100 of these cabins now enables the spectator to judge, to a certain extent, of the arrangement of the scene on its inner face. It is still accessible by stone stairs nearly to the top. Some of the corridors are vaulted with long stone beams. Near the top the stone is calcined and reddened by the action of fire. The apartments at the side were destined for the actors, scenery, and other accessories of a theatre. A few seats remain on the slope, formed by excavating the limestone rock; on one may be seen the letters Eq. C. III., (Knights' 3d row). — Round the semicircle run 3 passages, lined with masonry of small stones. A great many fragments of architecture and sculpture, slabs of marble, pillars of granite, &c., dug up within the enclosure, are preserved here.

Side by side with this theatre ran a circus, or hippodrome, the greater part of which has disappeared, quarried out to build the houses of the town, except a few arches of the portico, which joined it to the theatre.

The ancient Arausio, which could construct and maintain edifices of such splendour and magnitude as these, far exceeded in extent the present provincial town; and, judging from the range of the Roman walls, part of whose circuit still remains, they may have enclosed a population of 40,000. A good survey of it may be made from the heights above the theatre, where the citadel, now reduced to fragments of masonry, and the base of a round tower, once stood.

The people of Orange have a character for ferocity, of which they certainly displayed a sample during the Revolution; 378 persons perished here by the guillotine, in the space of 3 months, by the decree of the revolutionary tribunal.

At Vaison, 15 m. N. E. of Orange, are some scanty ancient remains, 2 arches of a theatre, and a Roman bridge, of a single arch, over the torrent Lou Veze, beyond which, in the modern town, are 2 old Romanesque churches, St. Quinin, partly of the 8th century, and the cathedral, calculated to interest the antiquarian architect.

The most curious of the bas-reliefs and other antiquities, built into the walls of the house called Château Maraudy, have been removed to Avignon.

The Rhone, below Orange, traverses a wide plain, with little variety of surface.

Rt. Roquemaure, distinguished by its tower, perched on the edge of a cliff, excavated below by stone quarries, is fixed on by various authors as the spot where Hannibal passed the Rhone with his army and elephants, 4 days' march below the junction of the Isère, on his way to the Little St. Bernard, where he crossed the Alps.

L. Nearly opposite, is Châteauneuf des Papes, where the Popes had a country residence.

L. The stony plain on the E. of the Rhone is nearly barren, but supports a few olives and willows. The road passes by Courthezon, near which is a salt lake, the only one in France, in whose bed salt is collected when the waters dry up. There is a greater fertility near Bédarrides (Biturritæ, from 2 towers which it possessed), and Sorgues, a village named from the clear stream flowing through it, which rises at Vaucluse. At its junction with the Rhone, that river divides into 2 branches, separated by broad islands.

The spires of Avignon, and the gigantic towers of the Papal palace, now rise conspicuously to view, whether we approach by land or water.

The steamers stop at the quay, outside the lofty battlemented city wall, just above the broken stone bridge of St. Benezet, and its little chapel, which is about a mile from the Inns. Passengers are left in the hands of the porters of Avignon, who are notoriously a brutal set, and whose exactions and insolence ought to be repressed by the police.

L. AVIGNON.* — Inns: Hôtel de l'Europe; very good; a most attentive landlord; one of the best inns in France: — H. du Palais Royal, also good.

This ancient city of the Popes is seated on the l. bank of the Rhone, a little above the influx of the Durance into it, and is still enclosed by the lofty walls, surmounted by a cornice of machicolations, battlemented, and flanked by watch towers, which were constructed for its defence by Clement VI. in the middle of the 14th century. They are very perfect and picturesque, interrupted only on the side towards the Rhone by the cliffs of the Rocher des Dons, which, starting up abruptly, nearly from the water's edge, is let into the wall, serves as a rampart, and renders other defence needless. Within the circuit of these fortifications, however, will be found large spaces now vacant once covered with habitations, for Avignon, though now numbering only 31,786 inhabitants, possessed down to the time of Louis XIV. a population of 80,000. It has indeed several thriving suburbs outside its walls. A wooden bridge is thrown over the 2 branches of the Rhone, from the Porte d'Oulle to Villeneuve les Avignon, on the rt. bank of the river. In the Place d'Oulle, just within this gate, stand the two principal hotels, and a small theatre, designed by the architect Mignard, now a warehouse. On this Place Marshal Brune was dispatched by an infuriated Provençal mob in 1815. After having been shot with a pistol of an assassin in his chamber at the Hôtel du Palais Royal, his body was thrown into the Rhone, and his murderers escaped justice.

* Post Road. — 18 Sorgues.
10 Avignon.

To obtain an idea of the leading features of Avignon and its vicinity, the traveller must penetrate through its ill-paved and dirty streets, so narrow that an awning is often stretched across from house to house to keep off the sun, to the height of the Dons. On reaching its platform of bare rock, about to be converted into a promenade, close to the Telegraph, he will find himself on the brink of a precipice, looking, over the Rhone, here divided by an island, towards the towers of Villeneuve, which was long a frontier fortress of France, on the opposite bank. In the S. appears the barren range bordering the valley of the Durance, and the Durance itself hurrying on to join the Rhone. On the N. E. rises the Mont Ventoux, and the blue hills at whose feet lies Vaucluse, and close at hand the buildings of the city are spread out, surmounted by the cathedral, the palace of the popes, and its ill-omened tower of the Glacière, planted side by side.

The Cathedral, called Notre Dame des Dons (de Dominis) is founded on the rock, and approached by a long flight of steps. It is entered by a projecting porch, calculated to interest and puzzle the architect and antiquary, consisting of a circular arch, flanked by 2 Corinthian columns at the corners, so completely Roman in character that some have supposed it to have formed the porch of a Roman building, a temple of Hercules; and, judging from a juncture perceptible in the masonry behind, it is probably of a different date from the body of the church. The pediment surmounting it is rather higher pitched than is usual in classic buildings; its tympanum is pierced with a circular opening, and over the doorway are the remains of frescoes of the 14th century. Behind this rises a massy W. tower, and the cross is surmounted by an octagon, supported at the angles by fluted Corinthian columns. The roof is Pointed; the side chapels date from the 14th century; that of St. Joseph was once a passage leading into the papal palace. The tomb of Pope Jean XXII. is a florid Gothic canopy, richly carved, but mutilated, and its niches emptied since the Revolution; beneath it reclines his broken effigy. Benedict XII. is also buried here under a plainer monument. Here is preserved a very ancient altar, a slab of marble supported on 5 pillars with classic capitals. In the choir is placed the papal throne, now the seat of the archbishop, of marble, carved with the Winged Bull of St. Luke, and the Lion of St. Mark. 4 or 5 popes were consecrated in this church.*

* The Popes gained possession of Avignon on the strength of a grant made by Joanna of Naples, while yet a minor, 1348: she was to receive for it 80,000 gold crowns, which were never paid.

List of the Popes who reigned at Avignon. —all Frenchmen:

1305. Clement V. Born near Bordeaux.
1316. John XXII. Born at Cahors.
1334. Benedict XII. Born at Verdun, Comté de Foix.

Besides what it suffered at the Revolution, this edifice was, in 1814, made the receptacle for some hundred Spanish prisoners. It has lately undergone repairs, and has been modernised with bad effect. One chapel is decorated with frescoes by Deveria; in one a statue of the Virgin, by Pradier, has been placed.

The ancient Palace of the Popes, now degraded into a barrack and prison, is magnificent from its vastness, in spite of its present degradation and mutilations, and partakes of the mixed character of a feudal castle and convent. "Every thing is irregular and colossal about it, and its vastness cannot fail to produce an effect upon the spectator." Its walls are 100 feet high, and some of its towers 150 feet, with a proportionate thickness of masonry. But above all how rich in associations! During the greater part of the 14th century, the period of its construction by successive rulers, it was the seat of the Papal court, which had become a bye-word for its luxury, profligacy, and venality. In those halls, now echoing to the blasphemous oaths of prisoners, or subdivided and filled with soldiers' cribs and accoutrements, the conclave of cardinals sate by whom the pope was elected: here Petrarch was a guest. Giotto or his scholars adorned its walls, and in its dungeons Rienzi was a prisoner. Here the once formidable Tribune of Rome, who had ruled from the Capitol with the sway of the Cæsars, now humble and despicable, owed his life to the intercession of his friend the poet. He was imprisoned in the tower Des Oubliettes, and fettered with a single chain, fastened into the vault of the dungeon; in other respects kept in honourable custody, and had his meals from the remnants of the papal table, which were distributed to the poor. He could pursue his beloved studies: the Bible, and the history of the ancient Romans, particularly the books of Livy, were his companions in his prison, as formerly at the height of his prosperity." These battlemented walls and towers defied for several years a French army under Marshal Bouçicault, who in vain besieged within them the anti-pope Benedict XIII. (Pierre de Luna), who finally escaped by a postern.

1342. Clement VI. Born near Limoges.
1352. Innocent VI. Born near Limoges.
1362. Urban V. Born in diocese of Mende.
1370. Gregory XI. Born in Limousin. Quitted Avignon for Rome, 1376. Thus ended the Babylonish Captivity of the Romish Church, as it is called; "L'Empia Babilonia," Petr. Sonn. 91.

Afterwards the following schismatic Popes set up their throne at Avignon, and resided there 40 years:

1378. Clement VII.
1394. Benedict XIII. (Pierre de Luna.)
1424. Clement VIII.

On the termination of the schism Avignon became the residence of a papal Legate. Louis XIV. seized Avignon to revenge a pretended affront on his ambassador at Rome. Louis XV. held possession of it for 10 years. It was not united with France until 1791.

Above the entrance, originally defended by drawbridges, portcullis, and iron gates, now removed, is the balcony whence the popes bestowed their benediction upon the people. The first court is disfigured by new buildings. A wide stone staircase, under a depressed arch, on the rt. hand, leads up to what was once the great hall of the palace, called Salle Brûlée, ever since Pierre de Lude, papal legate in 1441, caused it to be blown up with the guests assembled in it, consisting of the nobles of Avignon, in revenge for their having murdered his nephew, a young libertine, who had outraged them by his excesses! Attached to it are side chapels, and the Salle du Consistoire, having traces of frescoes executed in the 14th century; but they are partly effaced or concealed from view by the modern division of this lofty range of halls by floors, into 3 stories, to convert them into dormitories.

Another stair, on the opposite side of the building, leads to the chamber occupied by the Inquisition, which was established here in the 13th century. The Chapelle du Saint Office, vaulted and groined, still retains some of the frescoes with which it was decorated by Giottino (pupil of Giotto): a large portion, including the Last Judgment, is so much effaced as scarcely to be distinguished; but figures of prophets, &c., have escaped. Here the Jews inhabiting Avignon were assembled at stated times, to hear a sermon, designed to promote their conversion to Christianity. The chamber of torture (salle de la question) adjoining, is built with funnel-shaped walls, contracting upwards, in the manner of a glass-house, a form devised, it is said, to stifle the cries of the miserable victims. In the thickness of the wall, in one corner, are the remains of a furnace for heating torturing irons, according to the tradition. Near it are the holes to which was attached the instrument called La Veille, a pointed stake, upon which the condemned was seated, suspended by cords from above, so as only to prevent his falling, but allowing his whole weight to bear upon the point. These are the associations of the dark ages, and they are dismal enough; but this building has beheld events in modern and enlightened times which far distance them in their horrors and atrocities. The crimes accumulated during a few hours of the French Revolution exceed those dispersed through previous ages. Who has not heard of the Glacière of Avignon? The tower so called, from an ice-house in a garden near it, stands close to that of the Inquisition. The stranger is invited to gaze into it, through an aperture in its walls, and he will discern near the bottom long black stains; they are streaks of human blood; and into those dark depths below were hurled from above no less than 60 unfortunate and innocent persons, females as well as men, massacred by a band of democrats more savage than wild beasts, in Oct. 1791. The prisoners were dragged from their cells, and poignarded or struck down in the door; but in the blind haste of the ruffians, it is believed that some of their victims were precipitated from above before life was yet extinct; but to finish the deed of infamy, quick lime in large quantities was thrown down from above upon the mangled heap of dead and dying.

In the narrow passage, shut up by lofty walls, by which you approach this part of the castle, some of the prisoners of the revolutionary executioner Jourdan, called Coupetête from his butcheries, were thrust, and, cannon being brought to the gate, were dispatched by grape-shot, the marks of which still indent the walls.

The modern building facing the Papal palace, now Caserne de Gendarmerie, fantastically ornamented in front with large garlands, carved in stone, was the Papal mint.

A little way behind the castle, passing into the Rue Peirollerie, under a huge flying buttress, which supports the castle wall, and leaving on the rt. an ancient building, once the residence of the Podestat or Governor of Avignon, we reach the church of St. Pierre, having a richly florid front, built 1512, nearly in the Perpendicular style, but mutilated. It contains a stone pulpit, carved and surrounded by little statues, in canopied niches. Scarcely any other of the numerous churches here deserve notice; but to give an idea how completely ecclesiastical Avignon was before the Revolution, we may mention that it contained 8 chapters, 35 convents of both sexes, 10 hospitals, 7 fraternities of penitents, 3 seminaries, a university, and 60 churches, of which 18 now remain: ⅓ of its population were dedicated to the church, and it possessed between 200 and 300 towers and spires. Rabelais, in consequence of the number of bells, called it, "La Ville sonnante."

The Place d'Horloge is overlooked by the clock-tower, or belfry, called Jacquemart, from the figure in armour who strikes the hours, attached to the Hôtel de Ville, a semi-Gothic edifice, originally a palace of the Colonna family. Here are situated the principal cafés and the theatre.

In the Rue Calade is situated the Musée, founded by Calvet, a native of Avignon. Its collections are of considerable interest. The Roman antiquities found in the neighbourhood are numerous, though few are derived from Avignon itself, the ancient Avenio. Several large monuments, carved in high relief, have been brought from Vaison near Orange (p. 445.), among them a Chariot carrying 2 Persons, and a Driver drawn by Horses harnessed with Traces, and shod, (this use of horse-shoes has been attributed to later times); another represents the Sacrifice of a Bull (?Mithraic). They are overladen with ornament, and in the debased style of the Lower Empire. An amphora or wine jar, 5 ft. high, and 8 or 10 in circumference, deserves notice for its size.

In the upper rooms are a large collection of antique bronzes, arms, utensils, &c. found in Provence, and the Comtat Venaissin, in fine preservation; some of them have a Greek character. Among them is the Head of a Roman Standard, (the Eagle of a Legion?). The collection of Roman glass is large and perfect. Many of these objects were obtained from the Roman town Vaison by excavations in 1838—1840. There are 2 perfect Egyptian paintings on papyrus, and other Egyptian antiquities. The coins and medals amount to 14,000: among them is a suite of Papal medals struck at Avignon; also the seals of the Popes and their Legates, and the last seal used by the Inquisition here.

In the Picture-Gallery, besides many early paintings of the 15th and 16th centuries, which seem to have been retouched, there are 2 portraits attributed to Holbein; another head, like John Knox, 1535, in an oval; and a Holy Family of the Milanese school. A Crucifixion, by Eckhout, is not unworthy of Rembrandt, and is perhaps the best picture in the gallery. There are paintings by the 3 Vernets: by Joseph, a Native of Avignon, one of his best landscapes; by Carl, several landscapes; and by Horace, (whose bust, by Thorwaldsen, is placed in the room) Mazeppa on the Wild Horse. Many of old Vernet's sketches for the views of French sea-ports in the Louvre exist here.

The library amounts to 42,000 vols. derived from suppressed convents in the town; it includes 700 MSS. and many early printed editions of the 15th century.

In the same street, further on, is the Gothic church of St. Martial, remarkable for the elegant florid windows at its E. end, in one of which the tracery assumes the form of the fleur-de-lis.

The large Benedictine convent adjoining it has been converted into a Museum of Natural History. In this collection may be seen specimens of the flamingo caught in the delta of the Rhone, where it frequents the ponds (etangs) of the Camargue. (See p. 460.) It is stated to be a permanent inhabitant of that part of France, forming a nest of mud, in the form of a truncated cone, on which it sits over its eggs, with its long legs dangling down on the outside. The bird does not assume its red plumage until it is 2 years old.

Here is the beaver of the Rhone, an animal now nearly exterminated, since the late inundations drove most of them from their retired haunts. Its colour is tawny, and its hair harsh compared with the American beaver. It does not build houses, nor lay up stores in Europe, but burrows in the dykes or river bed, and feeds on willows or other brushwood, whole plantations of which are often laid prostrate by its sharp teeth. Here are collections of the minerals and fossils of the Dépt. Vaucluse; also of fossil insects and fishes from Aix.

The museum has been enriched by the splendid bequest of M. Riquet, and the whole appears well arranged. Behind is the botanic garden.

Continuing in the same direction, as far as Rue des Lices (No. 8), a street abounding with dyers and tanners, at the back of the Maison des Orphelins, a charitable institution for the education of 50 poor children, we shall find the last relic of the church of the Cordeliers, in which Petrarch's Laura, a married lady of the family De Sades in Avignon, was buried. The church, destroyed at the Revolution, is now reduced to a fragment of the tower and side walls, sold probably for the value of the materials, but not worth pulling down.

Laura's tomb, described by Arthur Young as "nothing but a stone in the pavement, with a figure engraved on it, partly effaced, surrounded by an inscription in Gothic letters, and another on the wall adjoining, with the armorial of the family de Sade," has entirely disappeared, having been broken open, and the contents of the tomb, as well as that of the brave Crillon, scattered by the Revolutionists. In a sort of tea garden behind the fragment of the church, a vulgar, tasteless monument has been raised to Laura, bearing the pompous inscription, "Hunc cippum posuit Carolus Kelsall Anglicus." Petrarch has recorded that he first saw Laura in the church of St. Claire, 1327, in the time of his early youth.

In this church of the Cordeliers, June 1791, the mob of Avignon, irritated at the tyranny, spoliations, and sacrilegious acts of the democratic municipality, put to death its agent and secretary Lescuyere: the chief actors in this deed of blood were women, who actually tore out his eyes with their scissors.

Behind the church and convent of St. Martial is the Hôtel des Invalides, "succursal" to and dependant on that of Paris, founded for old soldiers, after the expulsion of the French from Egypt. It occupies the buildings of 2 suppressed convents, between which a park extends. The Lingerie occupies the upper part of a chapel, in the roof of which are traces of fresco. The establishment is furnished with a good library for the use of its inmates.

A crucifix of ivory, 26 inches high, executed by one Guillermin, according to the story, to save his nephew from execution, and preserved in the chapel of the Hospice des Insensés, is much vaunted in the guide books; but is not, after all, of high merit.

Conveyances. Steamers, 2 daily to Lyons in the morning; 2 to Arles in the afternoon.

Diligences, daily, 3 or 4 to Marseilles; to Nismes 3 (in 4 hours); to Arles twice a day; to Lyons and Paris 4 daily; to Narbonne and Toulouse.

Rt. Opposite to Avignon, on the rt. bank of the Rhone, at the extremity of the wooden bridge, stands Villeneuve-les-Avignon, an ancient town of 4000 inhabitants, which was much encouraged by the kings of France, as a border fortress, on the frontier of Languedoc, confronting the foreign territory of the Pope, on the opposite shore of Provence. It contains several objects of curiosity. In the chapel of the Hôpital is placed the elegant Gothic tomb of Pope Innocent VI., composed of tabernacle work, and niches beautifully carved, though much mutilated. It has recently been removed from the ruined convent of the Chartreuse, and carefully restored. In the same hospital is preserved a curious painting of the Last Judgment, an ancient work of the 15th century, of good design; the heads of careful execution, but much injured. It is in water colours (? distemper), varnished, and is attributed, but with slight probability, to King René, Duc d'Anjou.

In the Gothic church, a heavy building of the 14th century, there is a Descent from the Cross, attributed to Bellini.

The ruins of the Gothic church of the Chartreuse, and the tower which formed the Tête du Pont of the broken bridge of St. Benazet, faced with stones cut in diamond facettes, built by Philippe le Bel, also merit notice. The Fort St. André, on an elevated platform above the town, is a nearly unaltered citadel of feudal times.

The climate of Avignon is described in the proverbial line, — "Avenio ventosa, sine vento venenosa, cum vento fastidiosa."

The following very interesting excursions may be made from Avignon: — a. To Vaucluse; b. To the Pont du Gard, on the way to Nismes (R. 126.); on no account to be omitted; c. To Orange, on the way to Lyons (p. 443.); d. To St. Remy (p. 455.); e. To Carpentras. The Roman remains of Nismes (p. 462.) and Arles (p. 456.), more distant from Avignon, are scarcely inferior in interest to any in Italy.

a. Vaucluse. 29 kilom. = 18 Eng. m.

A carriage, with 2 horses, costs 18 or 20 fr. to go and return; the excursion will take about 8 or 10 hours.

It is incumbent upon all travellers to perform this "sentimental journey," not only on account of Petrarch and Laura, but because Vaucluse itself is a striking scene. You quit Avignon by the Porte St. Lazare, traverse long avenues of willows and poplars, leaving on either hand numerous country houses, each fronted with an avenue of planes; and after crossing the Canal de Crillon, which conducts the waters of the Durance to fertilise the fields of madder around Avignon (R. 128.), reach the village of Le Thor, so named from a bull, which, by constantly falling on its knees, when brought to water on the margin of a pond, led to the discovery of a miraculous image of the Virgin, which was fished out of the mud, and deposited in the church of St. Marie du Lac! This is an ancient and curious Romanesque building; its W. doorway resembles that of Notre Dame des Dons, and is probably of the 11th century; an ornamented portal at the E. end is rather later. The country is dreary as far as 22 L'Isle (Inns: H. du Petrarque et Laure; not very good, and dear: Poste; better), a town of 5000 inhabitants, 12 m. from Avignon, on an island surrounded by branches of the Sorgues, whose waters, employed in irrigation, spread fertility and verdure around. This is a green oasis in the desert, affording bubbling streams and grateful shade. There is a road from L'Isle to Carpentras. (See p. 453.)

The valley of the Sorgues, whose course we now trace upwards, is excavated in a mountain chain, branching from the lofty Mont Ventoux. Near its head lies the little village

7 Vaucluse.—Inn, H. de Laure; small, and not very clean. The landlord is a capital cook, and, judging from the stranger's book, a singular record of frivolous sentiment and selfish "gourmandise," his fried trout and eels, soupe à la bisque, and coquille d'Ecrevisse, have made a far deeper and more lasting impression on his visitors, than the souvenir of Laura; and, indeed, they are not to be despised; even Petrarch himself has mentioned the fish of the Sorgues with praise. Close to the village stands a tasteless monument to Petrarch, which the Academie of Avignon planted at the mouth of the grotto itself, whence it was judiciously removed by order of the Duchesse d'Angoulême, when she visited the spot. A path leads from the village to the fountain by the side of the Sorgues, whose exquisitely limpid waters are dried up near the head in summer, and, instead of bursting out exuberantly from the cavern, filtrate underground, and issue out, some hundred yards lower down, in numerous streamlets, out of holes in the limestone rock.

The valley of Vaucluse (vallis clausa) is a complete cul de sac, a semicircular excavation in the side of a mountain, which seems to have been split from top to bottom, so as to disclose the secret storehouse of water within it, whence the sparkling Sorgues derives its supplies. All around rise walls of rock from 500 to 600 ft. high, intermixed with bristling pyramids, all arid, destitute of verdure, and glaringly white. The sides and bottom are strewn with broken fragments of stone, which, where the Sorgues rolls over them, are covered with a luxuriant mantle of green moss. It is a desolate and arid scene. On a ledge half way up, to the rt., is perched a ruined castle, which belonged to the Bishops of Cavaillon, one of whom, the Cardinal de Cabassole, was Petrarch's friend. Though popularly known as Petrarch's Castle, it never belonged either to him or to Laura; but the site of his house is pointed out between the castle and the village. Here, beside a natural grotto in the rock, mentioned in his letters, one of the gardens which he formed with so much care was probably situated.

At the extremity of this majestic recess, at the base of the precipice, yawns the cavern which contains the fountain of Vaucluse. According to the season, and the abundance of the water, it presents, alternately, a gushing cataract, tumbling over the moss-clad stones, from step to step, or a quiet, pellucid, dark blue pool, sunken within its grotto, so that you may enter under the vault beside it, and, gazing into its funnel-shaped basin, watch the stones which are thrown in gradually descend into its fathomless depths. A wild fig tree, springing from a crevice in the face of the rock, above the natural vault, marks, with its roots, the height which the waters attain when they fill the cave.

Around this spot must have been the other garden mentioned by Petrarch in his letters; that consecrated to Apollo, adapted to study, "where art surpasses nature."

It is more agreeable to contemplate Petrarch in these haunts, as the laborious student retired from the world, than as the mawkish lover, sighing for a married mistress, and converted, as in the sentimental verses of Delille, into a sort of Italian Werther. Listen to his own account of his occupations at Vaucluse.

"The Sorgue, transparent as crystal, rolls over its emerald bed; and by its bank, I cultivate a little sterile and stony spot, which I have destined to the Muses; but the jealous Nymphs dispute the possession of it with me; they destroy, in the spring, the labours of my summer. I had conquered from them a little meadow, and had not enjoyed it long, when, upon my return from a journey into Italy, I found that they had robbed me of all my possession. But I was not to be discouraged: I collected the labourers, the fishermen, and the shepherds, and raised a rampart against the Nymphs; and there we raised an altar to the Muses; but, alas! experience has proved that it is in vain to battle with the elements. I no longer dispute with the Sorgue a part of its bed; the Nymphs have gained the victory.

"Here I please myself with my little gardens and my narrow dwelling. I want nothing, and look for no favours from fortune. If you come to me, you will see a solitary, who wanders in the meadows, the fields, the forests, and the mountains, resting on the mossy grottoes, or beneath the shady trees. Your friend detests the intrigues of court, the tumult of cities, and flies from the abodes of pageantry and pride. — Equally removed from joy or sadness, he passes his days in the most profound calm, happy to have the Muses for his companions, and the song of birds and the murmur of the stream for his serenade . . . . I have but few servants, but many books. Sometimes you will find me seated upon the bank of the river; sometimes stretched upon the yielding grass: and, enviable power! I have all my hours at my own disposal, for it is rarely that I see any one. Above all things, I delight to taste the sweets of leisure."

e. Carpentras. 23 kilom. = 14 Eng. m. and The Mont Ventoux.

The road thither from Avignon lies through Entraigues and Monteux, crossing the Sorgues, here as limpid as at Vaucluse, between the two villages. The country around Carpentras is a fertile plain, which, by means of irrigation, and of a southern sun, produces crops of all kinds in abundance.

23 Carpentras is a flourishing town of 10,000 inhab., still retaining, like most of those in the old Papal territory (the Comtat Venaissin), its feudal walls, towers, and gates; the Porte d' Orange being particularly perfect and stately. It was an important Roman station; but almost the only relic of that people remaining is an Arch of Triumph, formerly built up into the bishop's palace, and serving as his kitchen, but recently set free from that degradation, and detached from the buildings surrounding it. It is a ruin, reduced to the mere stone vault, without the attic, resting on the side piers. Upon these are curious sculptures in relief, representing Barbarian Captives, their hands bound behind their backs to trophies. Nothing is known of the date or destination of this arch; but it is doubtless a work of the Lower Empire.

The cathedral, rebuilt 1405, has a tower attached to it of the 10th century, and contains a nail of the Cross, made into a bit, and used for that purpose by Constantine, if we may believe the tradition.

There is a musée here containing antiquities, and a public library of 12,000 volumes, and 700 MSS.

The aqueduct of Carpentras, a massive structure of 48 arches, was finished 1734.

The ascent of the Mont Ventoux may be made from Carpentras by way of Malaucène, whence it is 6 m. distant. Its top, reached by Petrarch in 1345, is 6427 feet above the sea level, and is covered for half the year with snow, which supplies the department with ice in summer. The view from it includes a portion of the chain of the Alps, the Cevennes, the Coiron, the course of the Rhone and Durance, and, it is said, extends to the Mediterranean. At the foot of the mountain stands Bedouin, a miserable village rising from amidst the blackened ruins of a former village destroyed at the Revolution. There is no darker spot in the black history of that period than the burning of Bedouin and the massacre of its inhabitants by the revolutionary committee. Their agent, the apostate priest Maignet, directed this atrocious crime, and Suchet, afterwards so eminent a general, with his soldiers, carried it into execution, setting fire to the houses, blowing up the public buildings, hurrying the peaceful inhabitants to the scaffold, and picking off with musquetry those who tried to escape, until 180 had perished. And these horrors were enacted, not in a hostile country and in time of war, but upon fellow countrymen, women, and children, Frenchmen being the executioners; and all because a tree of liberty planted within the parish had been sawn through in the night.

Descent of the Rhone continued: — Avignon to Arles.

The Rhone opposite Avignon always belonged to the King of France, even when its l. bank formed the territory of the Pope, and, in consequence, during an inundation of the river, which had laid a quarter of the town under water, the royal bailiff entered the streets in a boat, and claimed all those parts which the river had occupied for his master.

L. Within 2½ m. of Avignon, the Rhone is joined by the Durance, a turbulent and injurious stream, part of whose course is described in R. 128.

The course of the Rhone below this possesses very little interest. The high road to Arles is equally uninteresting, but more direct than the river: traversing at first a country rendered fertile by irrigation, it crosses the Durance, at a distance of 1½ m. from Avignon, by a very long suspension bridge, rendered necessary by the broad bed of gravel, not half of which is occupied by the wild river, except in times of flood.

L. At Barbautane there are extensive quarries.

L. A low ridge of hills, called Alpines, remarkable for their utter nakedness, now approaches the Rhone, running from E. to W. In the distance, upon their flanks, the white houses of St. Remy, and its 2 Roman monuments, may be distinguished.

Rt. Aramon is a town of 2800 inhab.: and a little below it the river Gardon, which gives its name to the department, flows into the Rhone.

A wire bridge, suspended from 4 piers, 1446 feet long, over which the high road from Marseilles to Nismes and Narbonne passes (R. 126, 127.), connects

L. Tarascon, whose massive square castle at the water side is overtopped by the spire of its Gothic church behind, with

Rt. Beaucaire, lying at the base of cliffs of bare rock, one of them surmounted by a Calvary, the other by a ruined castle. The bridge was erected in 6 months in 1829 by M. Seguin, of Lyons, at a cost of 600,000*l*.

Passengers disembark or go on board the steamer from a pier descending from the bridge.

L.* Tarascon (Inns: H. des Empereurs, close to the bridge) is a town of about 11,000 inhab. Etymologists have been bold enough to derive its name from the Greek ταράσσω, disturb, connecting it with the tradition of a dragon, called Tarasque, which, once upon a time, infested the borders of the Rhone, preying upon human flesh, to the great terror and disturbance of the inhabitants. They were at length delivered from the pest by St. Martha, sister of Lazarus, since adopted as the patron saint of the town, who conquered the monster with no other weapon than the Cross, and made him a prisoner with her girdle. This deliverance was commemorated until within a few years by a procession of mummers, attended by the clergy, who paraded the town, escorting the figure of a dragon, made of canvas, and wielding a huge beam of wood by way of a tail, to the imminent danger of the legs of all who approached. The ceremony was attended by numerous practical jokes, and led to acts of violence, in consequence of which it has been suppressed. The effigy of the dragon now slumbers in the lumber-room of the playhouse.

The church of St. Martha is a pointed Gothic building of the 14th century, with the exception of the S. portal, which is circular and recessed with deep mouldings; between these the dog-tooth ornament appears; it dates from 1187. In a crypt beneath the nave of the church is the shrine and tomb of St. Martha, ornamented with her reclining effigy of white marble, not badly executed, but modern. Against the walls the history of Martha is represented in a series of bas-reliefs. Here also is the tomb of a Neapolitan knight, a follower of Roi René, and a well in the floor, the water of which is said to rise and fall with the Rhone.

The picturesque Castle, remarkable for its massive construction and perfect preservation, was begun by Henri II. in 1400, and finished by King René of Anjou, who frequently resided here, spending his time in festivities and fêtes, during one of which he and his queen appeared in the attire of shepherd and shepherdess: it is now a prison, and contains nothing remarkable.

The road from Tarascon to Marseilles and Nismes is in R. 127.

* Post Road.—23 Tarascon.

Rt. Beaucaire (Inn, H. du Luxemburg), though it contains only 9967 inhabitants, is a town of more life than its opposite neighbour Tarascon. It stands at the mouth of the Canal de Beaucaire, which joins the Canal du Midi, and thus unites the Rhone and Garonne, and it is the terminus of a railway to Nismes and Alais. It is, besides, the locality of the celebrated fair, held here every year between the 1st and 28th of July, on the wide space of ground, planted with rows of trees, extending between the Rhone and the castle rock. This space is then covered with booths and sheds, arranged in streets, forming a sort of supplemental town of wood and canvas, within which the various kinds of merchandise are deposited, each classed by itself. The shore is lined by a flotilla of barges, the roads are choked with waggons, and the inns are filled to overflowing. Though somewhat fallen off of late, this fair collects together about 100,000 persons, and is attended by merchants not only from all parts of France, Spain, Italy, Portugal, but by many Jews, Turks, Armenians, Greeks, and even Moors from Barbary, who sell dates, &c. It terminates July 28, at midnight. It is said to date as far back as 1168.

The Castle, standing on the top of an escarped rock, was an ancient possession of the Counts of Toulouse, and was recovered by Count Raymond VII., when only 19 years of age, from the usurping Simon de Montfort and his sons, after a long and memorable siege (1216), in which he, besieging the garrison, was himself surrounded by an army from without. It is now reduced to a complete ruin; one stately triangular tower, and a curious Romanesque chapel of great antiquity, in which St. Louis is said to have heard mass before he embarked for the Crusade, alone surmounting the crumbling walls. There is a good view, from the castle rock, of the Rhone, the bridge, the scene of the fair, the distant arid range of the Alpines on the opposite side of the river, and the equally naked hills of the Calvary and gallows (fourche patebulaire) on this side, but verdure is wanting. The rock, which serves as the pedestal to the castle, is being cut through, to allow the passage of a road to the Rhone.

Beaucaire is the scene of the old Provençal romance of Aucassin and Nicolette.

St. Gilles (see p. 467.) is about 15 m. distant.

From Tarascon an excursion may be made to St. Remy (10 m.), a deserted town, remarkable only for two well preserved Roman buildings, detached from all others, and about ¾ m. from the town: the one is a funereal Monument, of most elegant design, about 50 ft. high, ornamented on its square base with bas-reliefs. On the N. side is a Skirmish of Cavalry; on the W. a Combat of Infantry; on the S. the Sacrifices and Erection of Trophies after a Battle; on the E. a winged Victory supporting a wounded Soldier: above this rises a double arch with engaged columns in the angles, and the whole is surmounted by a circular temple enclosing 2 statues. It bears this inscription, which throws no light on its date,—

SEX.L.M.IVLIEI.C.F.PARENTIBVS.SVEIS.

The Arch of triumph, standing within a few yards of it, is less perfect, having lost its upper story, but the stones of its vault remain, beautifully carved in hexagonal compartments, or sunk pannels. Much of the sculpture has perished; the bas-reliefs remaining represent captives, bound, with women beside them. The date of this monument is as little known as that of the former: it has been supposed to commemorate the victories of Marc Aurelius. St. Remy was the ancient Glanum; it stands on the slope of the naked Alpines, and one of the limestone crests near the town is pierced through and through by a natural orifice. St. Remy was the birth-place of Nostradamus, 1503, the astrologer and fortune-teller.

Orgon, on the road to Marseilles, is about 10 m. from St. Remy (R. 128.).

Rt., close to the bridge of Beaucaire, is the mouth of the canal joining the Rhone to the Canal du Midi. The plain around was transformed into a sandy desert by the inundation of 1840, the Rhone having burst its banks at this point.

L. The country between Tarascon and Arles is a flat and uninteresting alluvial marshy plain, intersected by ditches, and the olive here gives place to the willow.

L. A little on the l. of the road, about 2 m. from Arles, a singular isolated rock rises, like an island, above a marshy pond, crowned with the ruins of the once celebrated abbey of Montmajeur, founded in the 10th century, and continued down to the 18th. Of the latter period are the vast palatial constructions of Italian architecture, which formed the convent, now rapidly falling to pieces. The church is partly Romanesque, partly Pointed, but beneath it is a vast crypt, of the 11th century, running under nearly the whole upper church. Behind the altar of this crypt stretches a semicircular wall, pierced with windows so as to render the altar visible from the side chapels. Attached to the church is a ruined cloister, in which 2 mutilated monumental effigies remain of princes of the house of Anjou.

At the foot of the rock, on the N. E., is the very curious chapel of Sainte Croix, consisting of a central square tower, from which project 4 equal semicircular apsides, that on the W. having a porch attached. It is in the Romanesque style, but destitute of all ornament. It is proved by records to have been dedicated by Pons de Marignan, Bishop of Arles in 1019. An inscription, forged by the monks of Montmajeur at a comparatively late period, attributed its origin to Charlemagne, to commemorate a victory here gained over the Saracens. Down to 1789 this chapel was resorted to every year, on the festival of the Discovery of the True Cross, by infinite multitudes of pilgrims, anxious to reap the advantages promised by papal indulgence to all who then flocked hither. The rock on which the chapel is built is honeycombed with tombs of all sizes excavated in it: some are said to have been the last resting place of early Christians.

L. The Rhone first forks off into 2 branches, forming the head of its delta, about a mile to the N. of Arles. The branch which it sends off to the W., called Petit Rhone, is crossed by a wire suspension bridge at the village Fourques.

L.* Arles.— Inns: H. du Nord, in the Place du Forum; dirty:—H. du Forum. The Inns here are decidedly bad.

Arles one of the most ancient, and once the most important city in France, the Rome of Gaul, ("Gallula Roma Arelas," as Ausonius calls it,) the residence of a Roman Prefect, and, after the fall of the Roman Empire (A. D. 476), the capital of the kingdom of Arles, or of Trans-Jurane Burgundy, is now shrunken up into a dull provincial town. It is, however, rich in ancient remains of the period of its greatness; and the stranger who succeeds in threading its labyrinth of dirty narrow streets, more intricate than any other perhaps in France, will be duly rewarded, if he takes an interest in antiquities.

It is a sea-port town of 20,000 inhabitants, standing on the l. bank of the Rhone, near the apex of its delta, about 28 m. from the sea. The river bank is lined by a quay, at which may be seen moored a number of heavy barges, with one mast, and a very long yard, and a prow not unlike that of the antique galleys. A bridge of boats unites the town with its suburb

* Post Road.—15 Arles.

Rt. Trinquetaille, and supplies the place of an old bridge, over which passed the Aurelian Way, extending from Rome to Cadiz,

> "Per quem Romani commercia suscipis orbis," to use the words of Ausonius, in his description of Arles.

The most interesting ancient monuments existing at Arles are,

1. The Amphitheatre, a magnificent and most interesting relic of former days, larger than that of Nismes, (measuring 459 feet by 338 feet, and capable of holding 25,000 spectators,) but by no means so well preserved, owing to the devastations of human hands, rather than those of time. It consists of 2 stories of 60 arches, the lower Doric, the upper Corinthian, both rude in style, and of most massive construction, formed of enormous blocks, most exactly fitted together. Owing to the unevenness of the ground, it is supported on one side by vast substructions. The outer wall is now nearly separated from the second by the removal of the vaults, and the interior is completely gutted. Yet the lower portion, including the podium, or parapet surrounding the arena, faced with marble slabs, is even more perfect than at Nismes, having been covered up with earth until within a few years. Scarcely 12 years have elapsed since this building was entirely filled within, and choked up without, by an accumulation of mean hovels, occupied by the poorest and worst part of the population of the town, to the number of 2000, part of whom burrowed under the vaults, or nestled in its recesses, reminding one of the fungi and parasites springing up over the trunk of some venerable monarch of the forest. One of these houses is still allowed to remain to give an idea of the former condition of the amphitheatre. Another excrescence, not forming part of the original structure, are the two square towers surmounting the entire edifice. But they are interesting historical relics, having been raised in the 8th century, either by the Saracens, who, under Jussouf - Ben - Aldelrahman, Wali of Narbonne, then obtained possession of Arles, or by Charles Martel, who expelled them from the city, 739. At all events the amphitheatre, like the Coliseum of Rome, was at that period converted into a fortress, and withstood sieges and assaults, while 4 towers of defence were erected at the 4 cardinal points. From the top of the loftiest remaining tower the best view is obtained of the amphitheatre, and of the city of Arles, of the course of the Rhone upwards to Beaucaire, of the distant outline of the Alpines, and Mount Ventoux, and of the plain of the Crau : the sea is not visible.

The stranger will not fail to remark the beauty of the masonry of the amphitheatre, the arches some times turned flat, of small stones, some times replaced by huge single beams of stone. The vaulted chambers communicating with the arena are supposed to have been the dens for wild beasts. The very scanty traces of inscriptions remaining on this building throw no light on its date, but it is supposed to be older than the arènes of Nismes, and is attributed to the age of Titus.

The Roman Theatre, more recently disinterred from the earth than even the amphitheatre, has suffered equal if not greater dilapidations in the course of ages. It is said to have been demolished by order of the early Christian bishops, who regarded it as the focus of idolatry and vice. Although reduced to a mere fragment, the costly marbles, the columns, the sculptured friezes, (some preserved in the museum,) and the statues found in it, one of which, called the Venus d'Arles, forms an ornament to the Louvre, attest its ancient magnificence. The portions remaining are two Corinthian columns, surmounted by part of their entablature, which stand isolated like those in the forum of Rome; they formed part of the scene, the rest of which is reduced to the pedestals of other pillars on a line with these, to truncated walls pierced by openings for doors, by which the actors made their entrance and exit, and furnished with niches for statues. Opposite to this wall is the semicircular space destined for the audience, scooped out of the rock, and still retaining some of its stone seats, rising in steps one above the other. In the middle are some very curious substructions, attached apparently to the orchestra, consisting of 3 parallel walls, 6 or 8 feet high, stretching quite across the building, leaving a space of about 1 foot between them, which is set with grooved ridges projecting alternately from either wall at regular distances. Within these was probably placed the wooden support of the proscenium or pulpitum, the stage in fact.

In the midst of the Place Royale, or de l'Hôtel de Ville, in which are situated the church of St. Trophime, the Hôtel de Ville, and the museum, rises an Obelisk of a single shaft of grey granite, antique, but not Egyptian, since it is ascertained to have been brought from a quarry in the Esterelle mountains, near Frejus; and it differs in shape from those of Egypt, tapering more rapidly from its base to its summit. After having been for centuries prostrate in the mud of the Rhone it was elevated in its present position in 1676. It is supported on 4 lions, and surmounted by a very tasteless gilt asterisk. It is supposed to have stood upon the spina in an ancient circus, all traces of which are gone; it is 47 ft. high, (the Luxor obelisk is 72 ft.,) and is destitute of inscription or hieroglyph.

The Museum occupies the suppressed church of St. Anne; it is filled with an interesting collection of ancient remains discovered in or near Arles, a large proportion in the theatre, including a very rich marble frieze, and numerous statues, whose merit as works of art is small, except a head of a female (? a goddess, or the Empress Livia) without a nose, and a head of Augustus found in 1834, belonging to a torso previously sent to the Louvre, both very fine. An altar to Apollo bears representations of the Delphic Tripod and of Marsyas flayed alive. A leaden pipe, more than 40 ft. long, stamped with the name of the Roman plumbers, was discovered in the bed of the Rhone, and is supposed to have conveyed freshwater to the opposite bank. The cemetery called Eliscamps (p. 459.) has furnished a great number of sarcophagi, some pagan, but the majority Christian, ornamented with bas-reliefs of good design and execution, showing that Roman art survived long after the extinction of paganism, though the subjects on which it was exercised were taken from the Bible. Those most commonly represented are Adam and Eve, the Deluge, the Passage of the Red Sea, Moses striking the Rock, Jonah and the Whale, the Sacrifice of Isaac, &c. On one is seen the Oil Press and Olive Harvest. A mutilated statue of the god Mithras, wanting the feet and head, is very curious. It is a human body entwined by a serpent, between whose folds the signs of the zodiac are sculptured.

The cathedral of St. Trophimus, who is said to have been a disciple of St. Paul, and to have first planted the Cross here, is entered from the Place by a very curious projecting porch, constructed in the 12th or early in the 13th century. It consists of a deeply recessed semicircular arch, with mouldings not unlike our late Norman, resting upon a horizontal sculptured frieze which forms the lintel of the door, and is continued from beneath the arch on the rt. and l. of the façade, supported on pillars. There are 6 of these pillars, round, square, and octagonal, on either side of the door, of stone, resembling metal in colour, and one in the middle of the door forms the support of the lintel. They are based upon carved lions, some of them devouring men. Between the pillars are statues of Apostles and Saints, those in the angles being St. Trophimus and St. Stephen. The tympanum over the door is occupied by the figure of the Saviour as Judge of the World with the attributes of the 4 Evangelists; and the sculptured frieze below represents in the centre the 12 Apostles, and on the sides the Last Judgment; the Good being on the l. of the spectator, the Bad, bound by a rope and dragged by devils, on the rt. The archevolt is filled with the Heavenly Hosts in the shape of rows of cherubims.

The interior is modernised, and less interesting; it contains 3 antique sculptured sarcophagi, one of which serves as a font.

The cloisters on the S. side are very curious; two of the sides have round arches, and two pointed, resting on double shafts, or square piers carved on the sides with figures of saints, and projecting towards the court-yard in the form of fluted Corinthian pilasters. The capitals of the pillars are very curiously but rudely sculptured, in part with Scripture groups.

The square tower is also ancient, and in its upper story Corinthian pilasters again appear.

The Hôtel de Ville was built 1673, from designs of Mansard, contiguous to the clock-tower, which is somewhat older. It contains a collection of natural history.

Besides the more important Roman remains already described, there are, within the town, in the Place du Forum, two granite pillars and part of a Corinthian pediment, let into the wall in front of the Hôtel du Nord; they are supposed to have been moved, from some building now destroyed, into their present position. Other constructions, which may have belonged to the forum, are known to exist beneath the houses. In a narrow street, near the Rhone, is a tower of brick, called Tour de la Trouille, supposed to have been built by Constantine the Great, who resided much at Arles, and whose eldest son was born here.

Beyond the walls, to the E. of the town, is situated the ancient Cemetery of Arles, still called Aliscamps, a slight variation from the original name (Elisii Campi) by which it was known 18 centuries ago. It was of vast extent, a complete Necropolis, and the dead were brought hither from other cities, as far distant as Lyons, for interment. Dante mentions it in the Inferno, IX. 112.:

"Si come ad Arli ove 'l Rodano stagna, Fanno i sepolcri tutto 'l loco varo."

And Ariosto alludes to it in the Orlando Furioso:

"Piena di sepolture è la campagna."

One portion of the ground was used for burials in pagan times; another, marked off with crosses, was afterwards designated for the interment of Christians. The ground teems with gravestones, sepulchral memorials, and sarcophagi, but the most curious have been removed to the museums of Arles, Toulouse, Marseilles, &c. In the neighbouring farms the cattle drink out of stone troughs which are nothing but empty coffins; and with their lids the ditches are bridged. Several chapels were erected within the area of this vast churchyard: the most remarkable is that of St. Honorat or of Notre Dame de Grace, now falling to ruin. It is surmounted by an elegant octagonal tower, of two stories, having 2 circular-headed windows in each face; the interior, except the crypt, is not older than the 14th century.

The ecclesiastical constructions of the middle ages on the Montmajeur are described at p. 456.

Although in the days of the Romans, Arles was plentifully supplied with spring water, conveyed to it from the chain of the Alpines in aqueducts of masonry many miles long, the modern town is destitute of this important commodity, and the inhabitants suffer severely from the want of drinking water. Owing to the marshes and pools in the vicinity, the town and the district around Arles is unhealthy at certain seasons: and intermitting fevers are very prevalent; but less so now than formerly, in consequence of the extended drainage.

A Canal has been formed from Arles to Bouc, on the sea-coast, at the mouth of the salt lake called Etang de Berre, which opens a more direct communication to Marseilles than the course of the Rhone. This canal, begun 1802, with the double object of draining the marshes on the l. bank of the Rhone, and of facilitating traffic, by avoiding the bars and sandbanks at the mouth of the river, was not completed until 1835. It is about 30 m. long. It was traversed regularly by barges until 1840, when the great inundation of the Rhone overwhelmed a part of it with sand.

A steamboat plies between Arles and Marseilles; but the navigation at the mouth of the Rhone is intricate, and there is little accommodation for passengers on board. Steamers ascend daily to Avignon and Lyons, but the voyage to Lyons takes 3 or 4 days.

Diligences daily to Marseilles, to Nismes, to Narbonne, and to Avignon.

The wide uninterrupted plain stretching from Arles to the sea, S. and E., nearly as far as Marseilles, including the delta of the Rhone, or the island of Camargue, (derived from Καμαξ, marsh, and αγρος, field?), presents some singular phenomena not unworthy of attention. Indeed, both its climate and its soil, of mud banks, arid sand, or vast bare gravel beds, alternating with salt marshes and lagoons, raised from 2 to 7 feet above the sea, assimilate it rather to Africa and the borders of the Nile than to France. Even some of the animals which resort to it, the ibis, the pelican, and the flamingo, properly belong to the African continent. (See p. 449.) The ground is so impregnated with salt, that the water is brackish; the surface of the soil is, in summer, covered with a white saline efflorescence, like a coating of snow, and, when the pools are dried up, the salt forms in a cake 2 inches thick. Here, as in the deserts of Asia and Africa, the mirage constantly occurs during the heats, transforming the arid plain in appearance into a wide lake. Cultivation can only be pursued by excluding the sea by dykes, which entirely surround the Camargue, and the saline influence is counteracted by covering the surface with the muddy deposits brought down by the Rhone. In this manner, the district produces extensive pastures, on which large flocks of sheep are fed, together with herds of small cattle, and wild horses or rather ponies, said to be of a stock originally brought from Africa by the Arabs, in their frequent invasions of this part of France. At stated times the young bulls are chased and separated from the herd by horsemen armed with tridents, in order to be branded, and receive the marks of their different proprietors: this is called La Ferrade. A considerable portion of the district is ploughed land, furnishing crops of corn, madder, &c., which are produced in abundance; but this fertility, as well as the rich pasturages, arises entirely from irrigation, and the distribution in all directions of the waters of the Rhone, derived from the river in cuts and canals. The salt marshes and lagoons are unprofitable except in producing salt. There is only one village in the Camargue, that of Saintes Maries, but many isolated farms are scattered over it. At harvest time, in the month of July, the corn is threshed in the oriental fashion, by driving 10 or 12 young horses, held with a long rein by a man in the centre of the threshing floor, over the sheaves laid in heaps around. The winnowing is performed by tossing the straw, chaff, and grain into the air, and allowing the wind to separate them.

The Crau, or stony plain to the E. of Camargue, is described in Route 128.

The very curious church of St. Gilles is described in Route 126.

ROUTE 126.

AVIGNON TO NARBONNE BY THE PONT DU GARD, NISMES, MONTPELLIER, AND BEZIERS. — EXCURSIONS TO ST. GILLES, CETTE, AND AIGUES MORTES.

200 kilom. = 124 Eng. m.

Malleposte from Nismes to Narbonne daily, in 12 hours.

Diligences from Avignon to Nismes, 3 times a day, in 4 hours; daily thence to Narbonne.

9 kilom. extra are charged by the postmaster for making the detour by the Pont du Gard.

From the slope and summit of the steep ascent which carries the road from the foot of the bridge of Avignon over the hills which form the rt. bank of the Rhone, you have a fine view of it, and of Avignon, and then a dreary country succeeds, hills bare as dry bones; but in the low ground olives, mulberries, and vines.

12 Begude de Saze.

The point where our road approaches nearest to the Pont du Gard is at Remoulins ($1\frac{1}{4}$ m. distant from it), a small town on the l. bank of the Gardon, now at length connected by a bridge of wire with 11 La Foux (Fabre's restaurant), a village and post station on the rt. bank. 9 kilom. extra are charged if the traveller posting chooses to be driven round by the Pont du Gard. The sight of this noble edifice, one of the grandest monuments which the Romans have left behind them, in France or any other country, would well repay for a very long détour. Like Stonehenge, it is the monument of a people's greatness, a standard by which to measure their power and intellect. It consists of 3 rows of arches, raised one above the other, each smaller than the one below it; the lowest of 6 arches, the central tier of 11, and the uppermost of 35; the whole in a simple, if not stern style of architecture, destitute of ornament. It is by its magnitude, and the skilful fitting of its enormous blocks, that it makes an impression upon the mind. It is the more striking from the utter solitude in which it stands, a rocky valley, partly covered with brushwood and greensward, with scarce a human habitation in sight, only a few goats browsing. After the lapse of 16 centuries, this colossal monument still spans the valley, joining hill to hill, in a nearly perfect state, only the upper part, at the N. extremity, being broken away. The highest range of arches carries a small canal about $4\frac{1}{2}$ ft. high, and 4 ft. wide, just large enough for a man to creep through, still retaining a thick lining of Roman cement. It is covered with stone slabs, along which it is possible to walk from one end to the other, and to overlook the valley of the Gardon. The height of the Pont du Gard is 188 ft. and the length of the highest arcade, 873 ft. Its use was to convey to the town of Nismes the water of 2 springs, 25 m. distant, the Airan rising near St. Quentin, and that of Ure near Uzès. It forms only a small portion of the conduit constructed for this purpose, whose course, partly raised on low arches, some of which exist on the N. of the Pont du Gard, partly cut in the rock round the shoulders of the hills, may be traced at the village of St. Maximin near Uzès, and above that of Vers, to the Pont du Gard; thence, by St. Bonnet and Sernhac, to the hill of the Tour Magne, and Bassin des Thermes at Nismes.

The conveyance of this small stream was the sole object and use of this gigantic structure, an end which would now be attained by a few iron water-pipes. Its date and builder are alike lost in oblivion, but it is attributed to M. Agrippa, son-in-law of Augustus, B. C. 19. The quarry whence the stone was obtained is a little way down the Gardon, on its l. bank. The bridge by which the road crosses the Gardon, on a level with the lower tier of arches, and formed by merely widening them, is a modern addition to the ancient structure, erected in 1743 by the States of Languedoc.

A little below La Foux, (which is 1½ m. from the Pont du Gard,) the road to Nismes turns out of the valley of the Gardon, and traverses a more fertile and productive, but uninteresting country, by

10 St. Gervasy to

10 Nismes.—Inns: H. du Luxembourg; very good; tolerably clean; the best, but much frequented by Commis Voyageurs; good cuisine:—H. du Midi.

Nismes, chief lieu of the Dépt. du Gard, a flourishing manufacturing town of 44,240 inhabitants, consists of a central nucleus of narrow intricate streets, and old houses, encircled by a girdle of open boulevard, which separates it from its modern faubourgs, composed of wide streets and new houses. The boulevard is itself a fine broad street, planted with trees, lined with handsome buildings; and there is little need for the passing traveller to penetrate into the old town, as the chief curiosities and objects of interest are situated on the edge of this boulevard, or at a short distance from it. They consist almost exclusively of Roman monuments, relics of the ancient city of Nemausus, which, though passed over in oblivion by classic authors, so that its origin is unknown, and barely mentioned in the geographical catalogues of Strabo and Ptolemy, yet affords more palpable testimony of its ancient extent and splendour than most cities celebrated in classic page. While the renowned cities of Marseilles and Narbonne have few relics and no existing edifices of the ancient masters of the world, the obscure Nismes is richer in well-preserved antiquities than any town in France or Northern Europe.

A walk along the boulevard, starting from the H. du Luxembourg, and keeping to the l., will bring you first to the Esplanade, a square terraced platform, planted with trees, furnishing a promenade of considerable extent. Facing it is the new Palais de Justice, fronted with an imposing portico, and a little further on stands

The Amphitheatre, Les Arènes, now isolated by the removal of the buildings which obstructed it within and without, in the middle of a wide place, allowing unimpeded view of its very perfect oval circuit. It consists of 2 stories, each of 60 arcades, 70 ft. high; the lower arches serving as so many doors: the arches of the upper arcade are double, but the inner arches are not concentric with the lower. It is far better preserved, externally, than the Coliseum at Rome, although like it converted into a fortress during the middle ages, and retains even its projecting stones, pierced with holes, for inserting the masts to which the awnings (velaria) were attached.

The interior, though less perfect, retains some of the original seats, especially of the lower and upper rows. The modern French architect employed on the building, not content with preserving and protecting the parts which remain, has committed the fault of restoring, or rather reconstructing, in a somewhat clumsy manner, part of them and some of the arcades. There were originally 32 rows of seats, and the number of spectators which it is supposed the building may have contained is estimated at from 17,000 to 23,000.

A long corridor, surrounding the building, runs within the arches on the ground story, and a smaller corridor encircles the upper story. It is worth while to make the circuit of these, and, indeed, to penetrate every part of this extraordinary structure. The vaults of the lower corridor or portico are like some vast natural cavern; the upper one, instead of being arched, is roofed with huge stone beams, 18 ft. long, reaching from side to side, many of them cracked, either by an earthquake, or by the conflagration which consumed the Arènes in the time of Charles Martel. It is interesting to penetrate the wedge-shaped passages, radiating from the centre, and widening outwards, so contrived as to facilitate the egress of the hastening crowds and allow them to depart without any check; to ascend the stairs, by which ready access was given to every part of the huge structure; to clamber over the broken seats, some still marked with the line indicating the space allotted to each spectator, scaring the frightened lizard, which starts away from under your foot, out of the sunshine in which it has been basking, to the shelter of the tufts of grass or weeds springing up among the crevices of the masonry; and, finally, to stand on the topmost stone, the rim of this huge oval basin, surveying its whole interior, dismantled, and almost gutted. Here you may examine the round holes cut in the projecting stones, and corresponding with hollows in the exterior cornice below, into which the poles were put, in order to fasten the awnings stretched over the spectators. A very narrow stair in the thickness of the wall, near the N. side, was destined, it is supposed, for the men who had charge of the awning. The zones of seats, as is well known, were divided into 4 tiers (præcinctiones) by spaces wider than the seats themselves and were destined for spectators of different ranks; the patricians occupied the lower, equivalent to the dress circle, the plebeians the upper, corresponding with the gallery. These spaces, or landing-places, were each reached by 10 passages or vomitories. The 3 uppermost rows of seats rest upon a half arch, whose only support is the outer wall.

The dimensions are, length 437 ft., width 332 ft., height 70 ft.

The founder of this building and its date are unknown: it is attributed to Antoninus Pius, whose ancestors came from Nismes, but by others to Titus and Adrian.

The Visigoths converted it into a fortress, and it was known as the "Castrum Arenarum." The Saracens occupied it as such in the beginning of the 8th century, until expelled by Charles Martel, who endeavoured to destroy the building altogether, by filling its vaults and passages with wood, and setting fire to it; finally, down to the middle of the 18th century, it was occupied by mean hovels, all of which are now swept away. Until within a few years the people of Nismes used the Arènes for an entertainment called Ferrade, which consisted in teasing a number of wild bulls from the Camargue (p. 460.), previous to branding them: the sport was but a poor imitation of a Spanish bull-fight, nearly as cruel, without being so exciting, and it has properly been prohibited.

Continuing through the boulevard, from the Arènes, and passing on the l. the Great Hospital, you reach the modern Theatre, remarkable only for its tasteless portico, contrasting very unfavourably with a neighbouring building, which, though of an age deemed barbarous, shows yet a far greater refinement in taste,

The Maison Carrée, the vulgar name given to a beautiful Corinthian temple, a gem of architecture, which has come down to the present time in a state of wonderful preservation, considering its various fortunes, and the purposes to which it has been converted. Originally a temple, consecrated in the reign of Augustus, according to some; of Antoninus Pius, according to others: it became afterwards a Christian church, and in the 11th century the Hôtel de Ville; still later, it was degraded into a stable, and its owner, to extend his space, built walls between the pillars of the portico, and pared away the flutings of the central columns to allow his carts to pass; it then became attached to the Augustine convent, and was used as a tomb-house for burial; its next changes were into a revolutionary tribunal and corn warehouse, and finally, at present it is converted into a museum.

It is surrounded by 30 elegant Corinthian columns, 10 of them detached, forming the portico, and 20 engaged: their height is equal to $10\frac{1}{4}$ diameters; and learned architects will tell you that these proportions are contrary to Vitruvian rules, and that the building is debased and defective in consequence. This, however, appears a case in which ignorance is bliss; the ordinary and unlearned spectator will scarcely fail to be impressed with the elegance of its general effect, as well as with the simplicity of its form, the beauty of its fluted Corinthian columns, and the richness of the capitals, frieze, and cornice which they support.

M. Séguier, an antiquary of Nismes, first hit upon the ingenious idea of restoring the inscription on the frieze above the portico from the holes left in it, by which the bronze letters composing it were attached, the letters themselves having long since disappeared. According to his reading, it ran thus: —

C. CAESARI. AVGVSTI. F. COS. L. CAESARI. AVGUSTI. F. COS. DESIGNATO. PRINCIPIBUS. JUVENTUTIS.;

thus attributing the dedication of this temple to "Marcus and Julius Cæsar, grandsons of Augustus, Consuls Elect, Princes of Youth." The style, however, of the building, and the profusion of ornament, indicate a period, much later than Augustus; and another antiquary, on examining the original state of the holes in the frieze, discovers 3 holes preceding the 2 to which M. Seguier's first letter C was fastened, and thus converts the C into an M. This slight alteration shifts the date of the Maison Carrée from the era of Augustus to that of Antoninus, for it appears that the only 2 princes bearing such names who enjoyed together the title Principes Juventutis, after the sons of Agrippa, were Marcus Aurelius and Lucius Verus, adopted sons of Antoninus. It is evident, however, that the determination of the letters from such data must, in a great degree, be a mere piece of guess-work, owing to the confusion and number of the holes. Recent excavations have laid bare the foundations of walls extending on either side of the temple, showing that it was only the centre of a larger edifice, from which two long colonnades extended, in the manner of wings, on either hand, and it is supposed that it occupied one end of the ancient forum of Nemausus.

The whole is now enclosed by an iron railing, within which are deposited numerous antique fragments found in and about the town.

The contents of the Museum (into which the temple is now turned) consist of other antiquities, including a bronze head (of Apollo?); a marble bust of Venus, and a quantity of pictures, very poor and common-place for the most part, excepting Paul de Laroche's master-piece, Cromwell opening the Coffin of Charles I. (? if removed), and Nero trying upon a Slave the Poison destined for his Brother Britannicus, by Sigalon.

Returning to the boulevard, and continuing along it as far as the irregular Place de la Bouquerie, you come upon a handsome canal, supplied with water from the ancient Fountain of the Nymphs. It must not, however, be judged of at first sight, for at this point nothing can be more unclassical; its limpid rills are stained with soap-suds, and in the place of nymphs a swarm of blanchisseuses convert it into a public washing tub. Trace it upwards however, and you will find its source within a fine Public Garden, planted with trees, in the midst of which it bursts forth in exuberant copiousness from the foot of a hill, and is received into a large reservoir, originally a Roman bath for women. It is surrounded by a large colonnade below the level of the ground, and is conducted through a formal canal lined with masonry like the ditch of a fortification, and bordered with a handsome stone balustrade. A part of this enclosure is of antique masonry, but the whole has been restored in modern times. It is a very handsome, but formal construction, and it and the garden which it traverses form a principal ornament of the town. On one side of it is a ruined Roman building, supposed at one time to have been a temple of Diana, but now regarded as a Nymphæum (or fane dedicated to the Nymphs), and connected with the neighbouring baths. It appears to have had a semi-cylindrical roof rising from an entablature, supported by columns. It is proved by inscriptions to have been built, along with the baths, by Augustus. It was reduced to ruin 1577. The ancient aqueduct which the Pont du Gard carried across the valley of the Gardon (see p. 461.) terminated in the fountain at Nismes, into whose basin it discharged its waters, at a point not far from this edifice.

The hill rising behind the fountain, planted with trees, and rendered accessible by zigzag walks, is surmounted by another singular ancient monument, known as La Tourmagne, a dismantled tomb of rough ashler, not unlike several still existing in the vicinity of Rome, but which has passed at different times with learned antiquaries for a lighthouse (50 m. inland, and remote from any river!), a Gallic temple, and a treasury. It is hollow within having a rude conical shape, resembling that of a glass-house. The walls are very thick below but taper upwards; externally it was an octagon, but the surface-stonework is for the most part removed. It is, perhaps, the oldest building in the town. Some have referred its origin to times preceding the Romans: in their time it was included in the defences of the town, and connected with the walls. It was originally filled with earth, and it seems not unlikely that it was built upon a nucleus of earth, for its cone is not properly vaulted, but consists of small stones, held together by the strength of the cement alone. It was cleared out by a gardener, who obtained leave from Henri IV. to search the building for treasure, a scheme which turned out eminently unprofitable.

The situation of the Tourmagne is very commanding; at the foot of the heights on which it stands the whole city is displayed, and the distant horizon includes the bifurcation of the Rhone, and, perhaps, the site of Aigues Mortes on the Mediterranean.

Nismes retains two of its original Roman gates, the Porte d'Auguste, founded in the reign of that Emperor, B. C. 16, consisting of a double arch with two side doors for foot passengers, flanked by 2 towers, and the Porte de France.

In the heart of the old town stands the Cathedral, an ancient building, but so injured during the wars of religion of the 16th and 17th centuries, and now so much modernised, as to possess little interest. High up, on the W. front, above a circular window, a curious sculptured frieze, representing events from the book of Genesis, is introduced; it is very ancient.

The cabinet of antiquities of M. Pelet, and the cork models made by him of the ancient buildings in Nismes, are well worth seeing.

There are 12,000 Protestants at Nismes, who have 2 churches (temples), and a chapel: they have endured severe persecutions at different times, and so late as 1815 a horrid massacre of them was perpetrated here.

The Maison central de Detention was originally a citadel, erected by Louis XIV. to keep down the Protestants.

The manufactures of Nismes consist of various articles of silk and cotton, which change with the fashion and the demand; it has large printing and dyeing works; but cotton handkerchiefs seem the staple production at present.

The want of water is severely felt for 3 months of the year, the town being dependant for the supply required by its inhabitants and its manufactories on the single source already described. A considerable trade in the wines and spirits of Languedoc, in raw silks, and in oil, is carried on here.

In the garden of the Convent of Recollets, now occupied by the Theatre, Marshal Villars had an interview in 1704 with the celebrated chief of the Camisards Cavalier, who, originally a baker's boy, and at that time a mere youth, had raised himself by his talents for command and his fanatic eloquence to be the head of the formidable rebellion of the Cevennes. He appeared on that occasion magnificently mounted, and attired in laced coat, cocked hat, and plume of white feathers, escorted by a body-guard on horseback. The result of this memorable conference was to detach him from the insurgents by flattery and promises of rank and reward in the service of Louis XIV., as the price of his defection, coupled with assurances of justice and tolerance in religion to the persecuted Protestants of the Cevennes. Neither the one nor the other were destined to be kept or fulfilled. Villars, however, thus dealt a death-blow to the insurrection, by depriving it of one of its heads; and Cavalier, despised and hated for his desertion by his own party, and neglected by the court, was soon driven into exile, and died a pensioner at Chelsea.

On the Place de Boucairie in 1705 were erected the gibbet, the wheel, and the stake, at which a vast number of the Camisards concerned in the rebellion of the Cevennes perished miserably, after suffering the most horrid tortures in the prison of the fortress. The most memorable execution was that of the chiefs (April 22) Catenat and Ravenel, who were burnt alive, almost within sight of the battle field where 2 years before they had defeated the royal forces under the Comte de Broglie; while their companions, Jonquet and Villas, were broken on the wheel and then burnt. On the 16th August, 1704, the body of Roland Laporte, general of the Camisards, (see p. 428.) was dragged into Nismes at the tail of a cart and burnt, while 5 of his companions were broken on the wheel around his funeral pyre.

Nismes has been, even in recent times, the scene of bitter conflicts between the Roman Catholics and Protestants, and a fearful and atrocious persecution of the latter, accompanied by horrible murders and massacres, committed by ruffians called Bandes Verdets, broke out in 1815, on the restoration of the Bourbons. The murderers in many instances went unpunished, and justice seemed almost denied to the sufferers, until in 1819 the advance of a body of Protestants from the Cevennes upon Nismes, and the threat that "30,000 of them were ready to assist their brethren with the weapons of despair," put an end to the cruel persecution.

Nismes is the birth-place of Nicot, a physician who first introduced from Portugal into France tobacco, (called after him Nicotiana). Some one proposed to raise a monument to him in the form of a snuff-box, bearing the inscription, "Dieu vous bénisse." M. Guizot, Minister of France, also comes from Nismes.

Railroads connect Nismes with Alais and its coal-field (R. 121.); trains twice a day; and with Beaucaire (R. 127); trains 4 times a day. Another line is nearly finished to Montpellier and Cette.

Mallepostes to Marseilles and Narbonne.

Diligences daily to Marseilles; to Montpellier, Narbonne, and Toulouse; to Avignon, 3 times; to Alais (railway); to Lyons; to Mende, St. Flour, and Clermont; to St. Gilles and Aigues Mortes; to Uzès, by Alais.

M. C. B. D. Frossard's "Nismes et ses Environs" is a charming book: the author is a Protestant clergyman.

The Pont du Gard (p. 461.), distant about 15 miles from Nismes, on the way to Avignon, ought to be visited expressly by those whose route does not lead them past it. It is about 2 hours' drive; a carriage may be hired for 12 fr. to go and return.

About 13 miles, nearly due S., of Nismes, is St. Gilles, a town of great antiquity, originally Rhoda Rhodiorum, a colony founded by the Rhodians according to Pliny, situated on the Petit Rhone, chiefly remarkable at present for its magnificent abbey church, which will interest the antiquary. The upper church was begun 1116, on a scale of great magnificence, by Alphonso, son of Raymond IV., Count of St. Gilles, called Jourdain, because baptised in the Jordan, but was destroyed during the wars of religion, having been turned into a fortress by the Huguenots in 1562, and demolished, when no longer tenable as such, by the Duc de Rohan, 1622. It has been replaced by a temporary structure of late date and inferior architecture.

The lower church, however, which is not subterranean, but on a level with the cloister, is, perhaps, of the 11th century, having been dedicated, 1096, by Pope Urban II.; and the West Front is a masterpiece of the Romanesque style, upon which every species of ornamental decoration and rich sculpture seems to have been lavished. It has been described as one immense bas-relief, crowded with pillars, statues, panelling, foliage, &c., combined with a strange infusion of the elements of classical architecture, columns, capitals, entablatures, and friezes. Sculptured lions are frequently introduced as supports to the pillars, and in other parts; and, as the abbots of St. Gilles, powerful seigneurs in ancient days, used to sit at the gate of the church to dispense justice, many of the old charters begin with the words, "Domino NN. sedente inter leones." In the vestibule of this church, Raymond VI., Comte de Toulouse, accused of favouring the persecuted Albigenses, was compelled to suffer, in 1209, the ignominious penance of being scourged on his naked back, in the presence of the papal legate and of 12 French bishops. The lower church is supposed to be a little older than the porch.

A detached pile of ruin, behind the actual church, is the only relic of the old priory which escaped being destroyed in the 16th century; it contains a corkscrew staircase, called Le Vis de St. Gilles, and is celebrated for its masterly construction as a piece of masonry. It was again saved from destruction at the Revolution by the influence of M. Michel, a lawyer of St. Gilles. In a narrow street facing the church is a curious old house, deserving attention as a remarkable specimen of the civil arcitecture of the middle ages.

The road from Nismes to Montpellier lies across an extensive plain, reaching from a range of low rocky limestone hills on the N., the extreme roots of the Cevennes, to the salt marshes bordering on the Mediterranean, S. A railway is in progress from Nismes, to join that made from Montpellier to Cette ($6\frac{1}{2}$ leagues). It passes by Lunel.

The fertile district to the W. of Nismes is called the Vaunage or Valley of Nages, from a small and reduced town of that name a little to the N. of our road. It was the scene of one of the most remarkable engagements in the war of the Cevennes, (April 6, 1704,) in which Cavalier, at the head of 900 foot and 300 horse well equipped, intending to waylay the Maréchal de Montreval on his way to Montpellier, was himself betrayed into a vast ambuscade, surrounded on all sides by the royal troops (among whom were 100 Irish from the Boyne), and caught as in a trap. Undismayed by numbers 6 times exceeding his own, the Camisard chief, perceiving the design of the enemy to outflank him, wheeled his column rapidly round under the hottest fire and in the face of a charge of bayonettes, and drew off his men, retreating en échelon—a masterly manœuvre of the baker's boy which drew forth the admiration of Marshal Villars. Cavalier's retreat, however, was cut off; the royal army occupied every pass, every height; not an opening remained; and his only course was to cut his way through. Throwing aside his magnificent uniform and white plume, he put on a common dress, and, bidding his followers close their ranks, dashed forward directly against the enemy. With the fiercest struggle he broke through the first line, but was soon singled out and discovered: at one time a soldier caught his horse's bridle, but a Camisard behind cut off the hand; another dragoon who had seized him he shot with his pistol. But in front now appeared a second rank barring his way, and a squadron of dragoons occupying the Pont de Rosni, the only issue. The fugitive cavalry, pouring down upon it, forced their way through, forgetful of their leader, who was in the rear, and would probably have been cut off after all but for his brother, a boy 10 years old, who drew up his horse across the bridge, and, with a pistol presented to the fugitives, summoned them to defend their chief and not abandon him. Cavalier, with the rest of his infantry, escaped into the wood of Cannes. This battle, or series of combats, extended from the mill of Langlade to the village of Nages; 1000 dead were left on the field, half of whom were Camisards.

At the commencement of the fight one of the Prophets of the Enfans de Dieu, named Daniel Gui, planted on the top of a rock, surrounded by 5 or 6 prophetesses, 3 of whom were afterwards found among the slain, called on the God of battles to favour their cause.

12 Uchau, anciently Ad Octavum Lapidem, (the 8th milestone).

The turbulent torrent Vidourle, which separates the Dépt. du Gard from that of L'Herault is crossed shortly before reaching 15 Lunel, a town of 6385 inhabitants, owing its celebrity and prosperity to the sweet wine and brandy which form its chief articles of commerce. The best Lunel wine is grown on the Côte de Mazet. The lower ground in which the town is situated is often inundated in winter and spring, is infested with mosquitoes in summer, and with fevers in autumn. Human bones, with pottery, have been found in caves in the tertiary limestone at Pondres, 6 m. N. of Lunel.

About 5 m. S. of Lunel is Aigues Mortes, singularly situated in the midst of salt marshes and lagoons, whose exhalations render it very unhealthy. It is approached by a causeway raised above the marsh, and spanned midway by an ancient gate tower, La Carbonnière. Aigues Mortes, itself a miserable and deserted town, is of interest only as a perfect example of a feudal fortress; its walls and gates, more entire and less altered than even those of Avignon, give a perfect idea of the art of fortification in the 13th century. Its fosse has been filled up, on account of the malaria produced by its stagnant water. In advance of the place, to the N., is a single round tower, which served as a citadel, 90 ft. high, 65 in diameter, surmounted by an old light-house turret of 34 ft. In the centre of each floor is a hole, communicating with a reservoir for water below. Some of its chambers served as a prison, in which Protestants, chiefly females, who refused to abjure their faith, were confined after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. Some of them had been shut up here for 35 years, when they were released in 1769. From the upper story of this tower the Camisard chief Abraham, with 17 companions, made a wonderful escape, letting themselves down from a height of 80 feet, by their blankets tied together. This tower is called Tour de Constance, for what reason is unknown. It is proved to have been built by St. Louis, who embarked here on his unsuccessful Crusade in 1270, having assembled at this spot a fleet of 800 galleys, and an army of 40,000 men. As Aigues Mortes lies nearly 3 m. inland, some have supposed from this that the sea must have retired since the 13th century; modern investigations have proved, however, the existence of a small port close to the town, in whose walls the ancient mooring rings still remain; and of a canal, now filled with sand, extending thence to the harbour of Grau du Roi, on the sea, doubtless the place of rendezvous for the royal fleet. The walls of the town were built after the death of St. Louis, in Africa, by his son Philippe le Hardi, on the plan, it is said, of those of Damietta. Salt is the chief article of commerce produced in the vicinity; and after the massacre by the royal forces, aided by the townsfolk, of the Burgundian troops, who had obtained possession of the town in 1421, the bodies of the slain were thrown into the tower still called Tour des Bourguinons between layers of salt, it is said in order to prevent their putrefying and breeding maisma in the town. In 1538 an interview took place here between the Emperor Charles V. and Francis I.; and in 1542 the Turkish corsair Barbarossa, the ally of the French king against the emperor, moored his fleet in the harbour.

—

There is little to observe on the road between Lunel and Montpellier; the country rich and monotonously flat.

10 Columbier, a land of oil and wine.

13 Montpellier.—Inns: H. du Midi; best, very good, but insects:—H. de Londres; good:—H. des Ambassadeurs. The name of Montpellier, familiar to every one who has been in an English watering-place, as the type of salubrity and mildness of climate, will not in reality answer the expectations of those who anticipate either a soft air or a beautiful position. Indeed it is difficult to understand how it came to be chosen by the physicians of the North as a retreat for consumptive patients; since nothing can be more trying to weak lungs than its variable climate, its blazing sunshine alternating with the piercingly cold blasts of the mistral. Though its sky be clear, its atmosphere is filled with dust, which must be hurtful to the lungs; and the glare from the chalky ground and white houses, unmodified by shade, are exceedingly painful to the eyes. The town is chef lieu of the Département de l'Hérault, and a place of importance, since it contains 40,746 inhabitants; in its streets and buildings it is not much distinguished.

The Promenade de Peyrou (a provincial form for pierreux, stony, the spot having been originally a bare rock), an elevated platform, reached by flights of stairs, and surrounded by balustrades in the style of the time of Louis XIV. was constructed 1766, and is referred to as the ne plus ultra of a public walk; but its avenues are stunted and chary of shade, and its grass plats are rubbed bare. At the extremity of it rises the Château d'Eau, a sort of fountain-temple, which receives and distributes through the town the waters conveyed across the fertile valley from the opposite hill by the Aqueduct, a very noble construction, though modern, begun 1753, consisting of 53 large arches, surmounted by 183 smaller, measuring 2,896 ft. The source whence the water is derived is about 2 m. distant. The beauty of the view from the Peyrou has been somewhat exaggerated; the Pyrenees are too distant to give it interest, though the peak of the Canigou is said to be sometimes visible; the Mediterranean is ill represented in its border of marshes and lagoons, and the Alps (in spite of what the guide books say) are out of the scope of vision. The chief feature is the bare Pic de St. Loup, a buttress of the Cevennes projecting from the N., visible from the road to Nismes. On the S. is seen the church tower of Maguelonne.

The town gate on one side of the Peyrou was erected to commemorate the glories of the reign of Louis XIV. The bas-reliefs towards the town are meant to represent the union of the Mediterranean to the Atlantic by the Canal du Midi, and the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, the one a benefit, the other a curse to France. There are, indeed, mournful recollections connected with the Peyrou; here was raised, during the reigns of Louis XIV and XV, the scaffolds on which perished, by being burnt alive or broken alive on the wheel, not only many of the fanatic Camisards, among others their chief Castanet, but also many "Pastors of the Desert," protestant ministers whose only crime was praying to God according to the impulse of their own conscience.

The Jardin des Plantes was the first established in France, in the reign of Henri IV., and it is well kept up. Here may be seen the Galactodendron, the cow or milk tree of S. America, mentioned by Humboldt. In one corner of the garden, shaded by cypress, is an arched recess, fenced with a trellis rail, within which a simple tablet bears these words, "Placandis Narcissæ manibus." This is pointed out as the tomb of Mrs. Temple, the adopted daughter of Young, the poet, who died suddenly here, at a time when the atrocious laws which accompanied the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, backed by the superstition of a fanatic populace, denied Christian burial to Protestants. Such a refusal gave rise to the following passage in the "Night Thoughts"—

"Snatch'd ere thy prime! and in thy bridal hour!
And when kind fortune, with thy lover, smiled!
And when high-flavour'd thy fresh opening joys!
And when blind man pronounced thy bliss complete!
And on a foreign shore, where strangers wept!
Strangers to thee; and, more surprising still,
Strangers to kindness, wept: their eyes let fall
Inhuman tears! strange tears! that trickled down
From marble hearts! obdurate tenderness!
A tenderness that call'd them more severe;
In spite of nature's soft persuasion steel'd;
While nature melted, superstition raved;
That mourn'd the dead, and this denied a grave.
Denied the charity of dust to spread
O'er dust! a charity their dogs enjoy.
What could I do? What succour? What resource?
With pious sacrilege, a grave I stole;
With impious piety, that grave I wrong'd;
Short in my duty; coward in my grief!
More like her murderer, than friend, I crept,
With soft-suspended step, and muffled deep,
In midnight darkness, whisper'd my last sigh.
I whisper'd what should echo through their realms;
Nor writ her name whose tomb should pierce the skies."

Evidence has been brought forward to prove that Narcissa (Mrs. Temple) was, in reality, buried at Lyons.

The student of medicine should not fail to see the Ecole de Médecine, situated in the old building formerly the bishop's palace. It contains valuable anatomical collections, and the doctor's robe, with which Rabelais was here installed, and which is employed for the same purpose at present; but so much patched and mended that scarcely a thread of the original garment remains. The school of medicine here is of great antiquity, having been founded, it is said, by Arab physicians, driven out of Spain, and patronised by the Comtes de Montpellier. Adjoining this building is the Cathedral, modernised, and of no interest. It has a singular porch, projecting from the wall, and resting on 2 round piers, or turrets. The building suffered much from the Huguenots. It contains an altar piece by Sebastian Bourdon, a native of Montpellier, the Fall of Simon Magus.

The principal object of curiosity here, however, is the Musée Fabre, named from its founder, a native of Montpellier, an artist, and the friend of Alfieri. It comprises a collection of paintings, of an excellence rarely found away from the capital; among them a portrait of Lorenzo de' Medicis, father of Catherine de' Medici (d. 1519), by Raphael, probably genuine, and good; and a head of a Young Man with a Beard, also attributed to Raphael, brought from a villa near Sienna; and at least a good copy by his scholars, if not original. There are also many other pictures of the Italian schools, and a number by artists of the modern French school.

The library of Alfieri, extending to 15,000 volumes, including many works on art, is also deposited in this museum.

Cambacères, Grand Chamberlain of Napoleon, Seb. Bourdon, the painter, and Chaptal, the chemist, were born here.

Montpellier has some considerable manufactures of cottons, dye works, &c.; and some which are nearly peculiar to itself and its neighbourhood, such as the making of verdigris, which is obtained by laying plates of copper between layers of grape husks, and allowing them to remain in cellars for 18 or 20 days, after which the coating of green rust (acetate of copper), produced by the oxidising of the metal plates by the grape juice, is scraped off. There are extensive chemical works here, founded by the Comte de Chaptal, consisting of alum, Prussian blue, sulphuric and nitric acids; also a considerable quantity of perfumes, essences, and liqueurs. The distilleries of brandy from the wines of the district are very numerous.

The excellent Roquefort cheese is made about 15 m. to the N. of this, in the Département de la Lozère. (See p. 412.)

Diligences daily, to Nismes and Marseilles; to Toulouse; to Perpignan.

A railway, about 20 m. long, has been formed from Montpellier to Cette. It passes through Villeneuve, whose church is in part as old, probably, as the 8th century, and Frontignan, celebrated for its sweet wine, the best being of the kind called Muscat.

The flourishing town and sea-port of Cette (H. du Grand Galion), contains a population of 13,413, and is situated on a tongue of land running between the sea and the salt lake, called Etang de Thau: it stands at the foot of an eminence, surmounted by a fort. The town is entered by a causeway elevated above the lagoon, and by a bridge of 52 arches. The town was founded by Louis XIV.; and the works of the harbour, piers, &c. were executed by Riquet, the engineer of the Canal du Midi. There is an extensive manufacture here of the wines of all countries, port, sherry, claret, champagne for the English and other markets, by the mixture of various kinds of French and Spanish wine and brandy; Benicarlo wine being imported from Spain to mix with inferior claret. The salt works on the lagoon are numerous. In 1710 a descent was made here from the fleet of Commodore Norris by a small British force designed to cause a diversion on the side of Spain, and effect a junction with the insurgents of the Cevennes. They took possession of Cette, but after holding it for a few days were driven back to their ships with some loss.

Steamers ply hence to Marseilles; passage in 10 or 12 hours.

A steamer navigates the Etang de Thau to the mouth of the Canal du Midi; 36 hours are required to reach Toulouse from Cette by the canal, owing to the number of locks. A canal passes through the series of lagoons from this to Aigues Mortes, fenced in by dykes of stone or mud, and thence to Beaucaire. The Canal du Midi opens out also into the Etang de Thau, and thus Cette communicates both with the Rhone and Garonne.

The ruined church of Maguelonne, on an island between the sea and the lagoons, beyond the Canal du Grave, will interest the antiquary, but he will require a guide to it across the heath and marsh, though the distance is only 6 m. from Montpellier. It appears more like a castle than a church, little ornament being expended on its exterior. Its W. doorway is curious, consisting of a pointed arch of coloured marble, resting on a sculptured frieze, with a bas-relief of the Saviour in the tympanum, and a triangular bas-relief on either side of the door, representing St. Peter with the Keys, and St. Paul with the Sword. The body of the church, a nave ending in an apse, contains some ancient tombs of bishops, but is filled with hay. The building dates from 1110 to 1180. It is the sole relic of a populous town which existed on this spot down to the 16th century.

The road from Montpellier to Narbonne passes through a country abounding in vineyards, which cover all the low ground, while olives occupy the hills: it is very thickly inhabited.

11 Fabrègues.

8 Gigean; from this the town of Cette, rising on a promontory out of the sea, is well seen. Skirting the margin of the lagoon of Thau we proceed to 12 Mèze. Near this are the baths of Balarue, supplied by a hot salt spring: they are good for rheumatism, paralysis, &c.

Beyond Mèze the road turns away from the sea; the country is very pretty, especially in the vicinity of 18 Pezenas, a town of 7800 inhabitants, agreeably situated on the l. bank of the Hérault, at the confluence of the Peine. It was anciently called Pissenacum. Molière wrote here his comedy Les Précieuses Ridicules, while director of a troop of strolling players. The chair in which he used to sit, to be shaved by the barber, is still preserved in the town. Pezenas is one of the chief brandy markets in Europe.

10 La Begude de Jordy.

11 Béziers.—Inns: H. du Nord, C.; — Poste; dirty, but civil: — Croix Blanche.

Béziers, an ancient town of 16,779 inhabitants, has an imposing appearance at a distance, seated as it is upon a commanding eminence, its topmost building being its cathedral. The interior, however, is confined, gloomy, and filthy, with a poverty-stricken air. The view from the Terrace, in front of the cathedral and eveché, is fine, extending over the course of the Orbe, and of the Canal du Midi, both of which pass near the foot of the hill, and pursue their way to the sea in different directions. The Cathedral of St. Nazaire is a Gothic building, surmounted by battlements, so as somewhat to resemble a castle externally, and contains some old painted glass. It was the chief scene of the horrible slaughter of 1209, with which the name of Béziers is always associated, at that terrible siege by the crusading army raised at the call of the Romish church to exterminate the unfortunate Albigenses, who were numerous in this devoted city. The inhabitants refusing to yield, the crusaders forced their way into the town, their leaders being its bishop and the abbé of Citeaux, who had prepared a list of the proscribed persons. In the confusion of the assault, however, the soldiers were perplexed to distinguish the heretics from the orthodox; "Kill all," exclaimed the abbot; "the Lord will recognise his own;" (Cædite eos, novit enim Dominus qui sunt ejus). The result was the massacre of every living soul, to the number of 60,000, according to some historians, though the abbot of Citeaux himself, in his letter to Innocent III., humbly avows that he could only slay 20,000.

The chief trade here is in Eau de Vie, produced in the numerous distilleries. On the Promenade is a Statue in bronze of Paul Riquet, Baron de Bonrepos, a native of Béziers, the engineer of the Canal du Midi, which is carried through 9 locks close to the town. (See Route 93.) It opens into the sea, 13 m. S. of this, at Agde, called "Ville Noire," from the black volcanic basalt of which it is built. Agde (8230 inhab.) has a curious cathedral, and a cloister, whose arcades are perfect, though walled up. The Herault is here crossed by a suspension bridge.

Hence, to Narbonne, the country is very uninteresting.

10 Nissan. The Etang de Capestang is passed on the rt., and the river Aude (Atax), which gives its name to the dept., is crossed between this and 16 Narbonne. — Inns: H. de la Dorade: — de l'Europe.

This very ancient town, was the Narbo Martius of the Romans, one of the first colonies established by them beyond the Alps, and capital of the vast province of Gallia Narbonnensis, which extended from the Alps to the Pyrenees. It was the spot where Julius Cæsar settled the remains of his 10th Legion, at the termination of the civil wars, and the "pulcherrima Narbo" of Martial; yet it retains surprisingly scanty vestiges of its ancient masters compared with the importance and celebrity which it maintains in history. Not one Roman building remains; and the chief traces of its former splendour are the numerous bas-reliefs, friezes, inscriptions, &c., built into the town walls, erected by Francis I., who fortified the place with the ruins of Roman buildings. The ramparts may consequently be looked upon as a museum of antiquities. A local antiquarian society, however, has recently collected together in its museum a number of fragments, and several antique tombs of the 3rd and 4th centuries, a bas-relief of 2 Eagles supporting a Garland, &c.

Attached to the Archevêché, a heavy castellated building, rises a square tower, the lower part of which, of large cubical stones, dates probably from the time of the Lower Empire, and the upper part from the 8th century. This building retains one curious doorway. Within it Louis XIII. signed the order for the delivery of Cinq Mars and De Thou to a commission named by their enemy the Cardinal Richelieu for trial.

The Cathedral of St. Just is a fine Gothic edifice, of which the choir only is finished. It was founded in 1272; the height of the roof is 40 metres, (? 131 ft.). The side chapels were added during the 13th century; and some of the windows having flamboyant tracery are of the 15th. There is a good deal of painted glass in them. The high altar is rich in marble of the country. The magnificent white marble monument of Bishop de la Jugie (1272) is a model of Gothic art of the 13th century, and well worth study. The statues of saints and bishops are admirably executed, in reference to expression, attitude, and drapery. There are several other tombs of the 16th century, and a fine organ of the age of Louis XIII.

Behind the altar are some curious iron seats, in the form of an X., of considerable antiquity. Sebastian del Piombo's celebrated picture, The Raising of Lazarus, now in the National Gallery, was painted for this church: there is a copy of it here. The church of St. Paul, founded 1229, may interest the architect. The carved capitals of the columns are most singular, and many, representing devils, &c., as unsuitable as possible to a church.

Narbonne is a city of 10,792 inhabitants, but, though once so important, it is now not even chef lieu of the department. It is about 8 m. from the sea; and a branch of the Canal du Midi, called La Robine, runs through it to the Mediterranean. It is an intricate, curious, but lifeless place, though it possesses some manufactures. The honey of Narbonne is the best in France; it is very white, and has a highly aromatic flavour. A distant view of the Pyrenees is obtained from hence.

The two great roads, to Perpignan (R. 94.), and to Toulouse (R. 93.), branch off from this. Diligences traverse both daily.

The Canal du Midi is shortly described in R. 93.

ROUTE 127.

NISMES TO MARSEILLES AND NICE, BY BEAUCAIRE, ARLES, TOULON, AND HYÈRES.

A Railway from Nismes to Beaucaire; trains 4 times a day and 10 or 12 times during the fair of Beaucaire; it takes carriages; the journey is performed in 35 min.; the distance 24 kilom. =15 m. This railroad is a continuation of that from Alais to Nismes (R. 121.). It is carried through olive grounds and vineyards, and on approaching Beaucaire is terraced along the shoulder of a hill overlooking the muddy Rhone, and the canal leading to Cette. It passes one or two small tunnels and cuttings.

The post road from Nismes is carried through

11 Carbussot to

14 Beaucaire (Inn: H. du Grand Jardin, tolerable), where there are no post-horses, and it is therefore necessary to cross the Rhone to

1 Tarascon,

Both described in R. 125, p. 454.

There are 2 roads hence to Marseilles, either by St. Remy, whose 2 Roman buildings are described (R. 125., p. 455.) and Orgon (in R. 128.), or along the left bank of the Rhone to 15 Arles, described in R. 125., p. 456.

The road on issuing out of Arles passes the antique Necropolis of Aliscamp (p. 459.), and near an aqueduct, comprising part of the line of a Roman one, which conveyed the waters of the Durance by St. Remy to Arles. Between Arles and Salon our road traverses the Crau, a singular stony plain extending S. to the Mediterranean, covered all over with rolled boulders and pebbles, deposited doubtless by the Rhone and its tributaries, especially the Durance, under circumstances differing from their present physical condition. This "campus lapideus" was well known to the ancients; not only is it described by Strabo, Pliny, and Mela, but Æschylus, in a fragment preserved by Pomponius Mela, lays on it the scene of the combat between Hercules and the Ligurians, when the son of Jove, having exhausted his arrows, was supplied with artillery from heaven by a discharge of stones from the sky sent for his use by Jupiter.

Ἰδὼν δ' ἀμηχανοῦντα σ' ὁ Ζεὺς εἰκτειῖ, νεφέλην δ' ὑποσχὼν νιφάδι στεγνώλων πέτρων ὑπόσκιον θήσει χθόνα, εἰς ἕκητα συμ-βαλῶν δηώσεις ῥᾳδίως λίγυν στρατόν.

One ancient writer remarks that the assistance of Jupiter would have been more effectual had he showered down the stones at once on the heads of the Ligurians. Such is the mythological history of the Crau. Its modern name is traced by some to the Celtic craig, a rock. (?) "It is composed entirely of shingle, being so uniform a mass of round stones, some to the size of a man's head, but of all sizes less, that the newly thrown up shingle of a sea-shore is hardly less free from soil; beneath these surface stones is not so much a sand as a cemented rubble, a small mixture of loam. Vegetation is rare and miserable; some of the absinthium and lavender so low and poor as scarcely to be recognised; and 2 or 3 miserable grasses, with Centaurea calycitropes and solstitialis, were the principal plants I could find."—A. Young.

Through the greater portion of its extent its condition is that of a semi-desert, but under the stones which cover it grows a short sweet herbage, which the sheep, accustomed to the locality, obtain by turning over the stones. It is consequently covered over with flocks in the winter months driven hither from the French Alps, where they spend the summer, and passing annually to and fro like the merino flocks of the Mesta in Spain, where the practice of migrating from the plains to the Pyrenees, and vice versâ, is as old as the 7th century. Here, however, it must be traced to a far earlier period, since it is mentioned by Pliny, "e longinquis regionibus pecudum millibus convenientibus ut vescantur."

The small portion of the Crau, however, which can be reached by irrigation is exceedingly fertile, producing vines, olives, mulberries, and corn. Arthur Young says: "the meadows I viewed are among the most extraordinary spectacles the world can afford, in respect to the amazing contrast between the soil in its natural and in its watered state, covered richly and luxuriantly with clover, chicory, rib grass, and avena elatior." The chief means by which this useful purpose is effected is the Canal de Craponne, so called from its projector, who began it in 1554; it is cut from the Durance at a place called La Roque, and extends to the Rhone at Arles, a distance of 33 m., sending out branches to Salon and elsewhere. The whole agriculture of the district depends upon this canal as Egypt does upon the Nile. It is besides of considerable use in turning oil and corn mills. It is followed for a considerable distance, and crossed by our road. Previous to its construction the stony desert reached up to the very outskirts of Arles and Salon. In the remoter and uncultivated parts of the Crau, the mirage, which so often in the African deserts cheats the parched traveller with the appearance of inland lakes in spots most destitute of water, is of frequent occurrence. The irrigation and evaporation from a vast body of stagnant water renders this district very unhealthy, and the funereal cypresses, thickly planted around all the houses, are symbolic of the fate of their inhabitants worn out with fever and ague.

16 Le Lion d'Or is a solitary post-house. The plain ends and hills are reached near 22 Salon. — Inns: Poste: Croix de Malte.

A rather considerable town of 6000 inhabitants, carrying on an important trade in olive oil. The high road is carried through a sort of Boulevard, in the neat modern quarter enclosing the old town; and passes the Castle, said to be that of Nostradamus, now a barrack. That celebrated astrologer died here 1566, and is buried in the parish church, a handsome Gothic building.

The road hence to Aix is hilly; it passes on the l. the Château de Labarben, a striking edifice of large size, part modern but flanked by feudal towers, belonging to le Marquis de Forbin. At 17 St. Cannat we enter Route 128, and follow it to 16 Aix, described Route 128.

A considerable range of hills intervenes between Aix and the sea coast; the sandy and dusty road, cut up by carts, is generally in bad order; it passes on the rt. the Château of Albertas, and on the l. the older feudal tower, belonging to its former owners, and constantly mounting higher and higher, reaches the relay of 14 Le Pin. At the hamlet of Les Tours, 3 m. from Marseilles, it reaches the brow of a hill called la Vista, from its beautiful view of the Mediterranean, whose deep blue compensates in part for the want of verdure on the land. From this height the city of Marseilles, and its countless bastdies, and the islands off the harbour mouth, are well seen, while a clump of umbrella pines forms a pleasing foreground. Down this hill the road proceeds by an uninterrupted descent into the suburbs of 15 MARSEILLES — Inns: Hôtel d'Orient; a first-rate hotel, splendidly furnished with all comforts, has a good and respectably-attended table-d'hôte, but it is dear; table d'hôte, 4 fr.:—Hôtel Richelieu; good, quiet, and moderate, kept by three old ladies. Déjeûner à la fourchette, 2 fr.; table d'hôte, excellent, 3 fr.:—Hôtel Beauveau; like all the inns near the port, suffers the evil of horrid smells:—Hôtel des Empereurs and Hôtel du Paradis.

Marseilles, capital of the Department Bouches du Rhone, is a busy and flourishing city, and the most important sea-port of France, having a population of 170,000 souls; but it has few fine public buildings or sights for strangers. The entrance from the side of Aix is by an Arch of Triumph, remarkable not for elegance of design, originality of elevation, or elegance of decoration. It was intended to commemorate the campaign of the French in Spain in 1823, but its destination is now changed to that of celebrating "all the glories of France." From this arch a fine broad street, called the Cours and Rue de Rome, stretches entirely across the town to the Porte de Rome. Near the centre of it, another wide street, called Rue de la Cannebière (Κάνναβις, Greek, flax?), strikes off from it at right angles, down to the Port, or Harbour, a natural oblong basin, 1,000 yds. long by 330 broad, extending into the heart of the town occupying an area of 45,000 metres (nearly 70 acres), about equal to two of the docks at Liverpool, — the Queen's and the Brunswick. The depth of water varies from 18 ft. at its mouth to 24 ft., and it is capable of holding 1000 or 1200 merchant vessels. This is the focus of that extensive commerce which renders Marseilles the first sea-port of France and of the Mediterranean. The number of vessels entered in 1837 amounted to 6834, and their tonnage to 652,507, about one fourth of that of Liverpool. To this harbour Marseilles is indebted for her commercial consequence, which dates nearly 3000 years back, from the days when the Phocœans first set foot on her shore, inoculating the barbarous realms of W. Europe with the civilisation of the East. The connection of France with Algiers has given a great impetus to the prosperity of Marseilles, as it engrosses nearly the whole trade with the new colony in Africa. It has risen also to considerable importance within the last ten years as a steam-packet station (see p. 480.). Most of the steamers have English-made engines, English engineers, and English coal, which was supplied in 1840 at 30*s.* a ton.

From the margin of the harbour, lined with quays, the ground rises on all sides, covered with houses, forming a basin or amphitheatre, terminating only with the encircling chain of hills. From this disposition of the ground, the port becomes the sewer of the city, the receptacle of all its filth, stagnating in a tideless sea and under a burning sun, until a S. E. wind produces that circulation in its waters which the tide would do on other seas. The stench emanating from it at times is consequently intolerable, except for natives; and dredging machines require to be constantly employed to cleanse it. Were it not for this, its Quays would be an agreeable walk, presenting as they do an amusing scene of bustle and variety, Greek, Turkish, and Neapolitan costumes; among its shipping, the picturesque latteen sails of the Mediterranean are very common.

The direction of the harbour is from E. to W. On its N. side, and within the angle formed by the rue Cannebière, and the Cours, lies the old town of narrow dirty streets scarce worth entering. In the line of the quay, on this side, stands the Hôtel de Ville, a heavy building, and overloaded with tasteless ornaments, attributed to Puget, but not by him, his really beautiful design having been rejected: — farther on, near the harbour mouth, is the Consigne, or health office, where every thing relating to quarantine is transacted, and whence the permission for vessels to enter the harbour is issued. To this office the captains of vessels come to give an account of themselves (raisonner), and to show their bill of health. The council room contains a few paintings, chiefly having reference to the plague; by Gerard, the Plague at Marseilles, in which Bishop Belzunce is introduced; and another showing the self-devotion of the Chevalier Rose in burying the dead, when the galley-slaves had refused; by David, St. Roch healing the Sick; a bas-relief, by Puget, of the Plague at Milan; the Cholera at Marseilles by Vernet; the yellow fever at Barcelona, 1822. The subjects are all horrible, and the execution not good enough to compensate.

The mouth of the port is narrow, and was once closed by a chain. It is defended by two forts; on the N. by the old castle and tower of St. Jean, built in the 15th century, in which Philippe Egalité was imprisoned with his youngest son, and whence they after a time escaped. On the S. the Fort St. Nicholas, recently repaired and extended, guards the entrance. It was founded by Louis XIV., who, after capturing the disobedient city, and entering it by a breach in the walls, observed that "he also would have a Bastide at Marseilles;" and forthwith laid the foundation of this fort, of which the first stone bore the inscription, "Ne fidelis Massilia, aliquorum motibus concitata vel audaciorum petulantiâ, vel unicâ libertatis cupiditate tandem ruerit, Ludovic. XIV. optimatum populique securitate hâc arce prodivit." Close beside Fort St. Nicholas a new wet dock, Bassin de Carénage, has recently been formed, by costly excavation out of the rock, on the site of an ancient cemetery.

Not far from this is St. Victor, the most ancient church of Marseilles, though its crypts and substructures alone are of the 11th century. The upper part dates from 1200, except the two battlemented towers, which give it the air of a castle, erected, 1350, by Pope Urban V., who had been abbot of St. Victor. The entrance under the tower is by a round arch: near it is a curious pointed arch; its mouldings relieved with the dog tooth ornament. St. Victor was one of the most celebrated abbies in Christendom, and possessed a host of other abbies and religious houses dependant on it.

Above St. Victor, to the S. of the town and harbour, rises the bare rocky hill of Notre Dame de la Garde, so called from the curious chapel situated within a small fort on its summit, a spot exposed to all the winds that blow. An image of the Virgin, carved, in olive wood, and of great antiquity, is enclosed within this humble shrine; it is held in the highest veneration throughout the Mediterranean by the sailors, fishermen, and their wives, and its walls and roof are hung with ex-votos, chiefly paintings representing moving accidents by flood and field; all the veriest daubs, but very curious, as illustrating the religious feeling of the people. Besides a vast number of shipwrecks, storms, steam-boat explosions, escapes from British vessels of war, there is a whole host of surgical operations, sick beds, road-side accidents, &c.

The cholera produced numerous offerings; among them a silver tunny fish, presented by the Marseillaise fish wives. Many ostrich eggs and models of ships are suspended from the roof, and one corner is filled with cast-off crutches, the gifts of grateful cripples now no longer lame, and with ropes' ends by which men have been saved from drowning! The silver statue of the Virgin, 4 ft. high over the altar, is modern.

The view from the top of the hill, beside the chapel, is perhaps the best that can be had of Marseilles itself, spread over a gradually-sloping basin, surrounded by hills which are covered with vineyards and olive gardens, and speckled with white country houses, called Bastides, to the number of 5000 or 6000, belonging to the citizens and shop-keepers. It is an arid prospect of dazzling white, interspersed, but unrelieved by dark streaks of dusky green. From this the eye is delighted to turn and repose upon the deep blue of the Mediterranean, the graceful curves of the coast of the gulf of Lyons, and the little group of islands, If, crowned by a castle, once a state prison, in which Mirabeau was shut up, and Pomègue and Rattoneau, behind which a small fleet of vessels find shelter. The stripe of blue sea is prolonged into the heart of the city in the harbour, partly hidden from view by its forest of masts.

The Fort de la Garde was built by Francis I., and was never of great importance as a defence: hence the verses,

> " Gouvernement commode et beau,
> Où l'on ne voit pour toute garde,
> Qu'un Suisse, avec sa hallebarde,
> Peint sur la porte du château !"

Along the lower slope of the same hill, within the town, stretches a wide promenade planted with trees called Cours Buonaparte; and lower down, at the water side, stands the Custom-house, with its piles of warehouses isolated by a canal cut round it from the port. The Prado is a fine walk, with a sea view.

The Museum, situated beyond the Marché aux Capucins, contains the few relics of antiquity which alone remain of the time-honoured city Massilia, founded (B. C. 578) by Phocæan exiles flying from Asia Minor. In spite of its wealth, power, and progress in civilisation, the ancient city has left no remains of buildings, nor any traces of its existence beyond inscriptions (some in Greek), sarcophagi, mostly of the 5th, 6th and 7th centuries, and a few fragments of sculpture. Among the antiques is a draped torso of a female with a child, wearing a peaked cap, of Greek workmanship; a marble sarcophagus (No. 13), brought from Arles, sculptured with a combat between centaurs and lions: several Christian tombs, brought, for the most part, from the crypt of St. Victor; one (No. 27) of marble, designed for a child, contained the relics of St. Victor, and seems to be the most curious; another of Abbot Isarn (d. 1048), whose effigy is covered with his epitaph in Latin verse, allowing only his head, which exhibits the tonsure, and the feet to appear. None are so old as the capture of the city by Julius Cæsar.

The Picture Gallery in the same building contains about 150 very badly lighted pictures, of which the following seem the best. St. John carried up on the Eagle, inspired to write the Revelations; a portion of the isle of Patmos appearing below; a copy after Raphael. Perugino—the 3 Maries, as mothers, with St. Joseph, St. Cleophas, St. Simeon, &c. a very pleasing and genuine picture, though faded; very like Raphael's early manner. Rubens: (perhaps by Jordaens) —a boar hunt; spirited, but the figures rather huddled together. A Prince of Orange with his family, attributed to Rubens; Lord Strafford, a copy from Vandyk. One or two small paintings by Puget merit notice, as he was a native of Marseilles, and architect and sculptor as well as painter.

It is remarkable that so extensive and wealthy a mercantile community as that of Marseilles should not possess a permanent Exchange, yet the bourse is a mere temporary structure of wood and canvass, not much better than a show-booth in a fair. In front of it is a fountain of heavy design, basins resting on griffins. Some wag wrote upon them when the fountain was first erected: "N'approchez pas, ils sont mauvais."

Another fountain surmounted by a bust of Homer bears this inscription: "Les descendants des Phocéans à Homère," 1803. ! !

The Lazaret, to the W. of the port, is a well-regulated establishment; one of the first placed on a sound footing in Europe, and so large that it held the entire French army on its return from Egypt. It covers an area of 50 acres, is enclosed within a double wall, and is of course not accessible to any persons but such as enter it for quarantine. Vessels arriving from the Levant cast anchor at the island of Pomegues.

If a case of plague shows itself, the vessel is sunk and the goods burned. Merchandize is released from quarantine after exposure to the air, and especially to the dew. The Lazaret owes its foundation to the fearful ravages of the plague at Marseilles in 1720, which destroyed between 40,000 and 50,000 persons, i. e. half the population of the town. Amidst the general despair, selfishness, and depravity, which accompanied this dire calamity, many individuals distinguished themselves by their noble self-devotion. One of them has been commemorated by Pope:

> "Why drew Marseilles' good bishop purer breath,
> When nature sickened, and each gale was death?"

The name of the good bishop was Belzunce, who offered a rare example of courage and piety by his intrepid intercourse with the sick in the hospitals, where, aided by pious nuns, he constantly ministered to the support and consolation of the plague-stricken inmates. The 2 échevins of the town, Estelle and Moustier, likewise exposed their lives. The streets soon became choked with dead, and of the galley-slaves, supplied at the rate of 80 a week to conduct the dead carts, none survived. The Chevalier Rose with his own hands then helped to bury the dead, when the very galley-slaves refused the dangerous duty. 3 physicians, also, from Montpellier, repaired to the city of death to aid the sick and dying, when all the native doctors were dead or had fled. The pestilence, which had broken out in the spring, continued with dreadful fury till September, but abated after a violent storm, and disappeared in November.

One of the chief manufactures here is that of soap, which is said to employ 700 men. The process is worth seeing, and, as it is made exclusively of vegetable oil, it is not so unsavoury as in England. The manufacture of Coral, celebrated in the earliest times, has greatly fallen off, and has been transferred to Leghorn, Genoa, and Naples. Shipbuilding is a very important branch of trade. The manufactory of steam-engines, belonging to Mr. Philip Taylor, is one of the most considerable in France.

The fish-market displays a number of the finny inhabitants of the Mediterranean unknown in the seas of the N.; among others, the Tunny is abundant at certain seasons.

The climate of Marseilles for a large portion of the year is delightful, but in summer and autumn the heat is at times intense; the streets like an oven, so that it is scarcely possible to move abroad during the day time, and all rest during the night is liable to be destroyed by the mosquitoes. To this not unfrequently succeeds the Mistral, or cutting dry N. W. wind, whose effects are described p. 430.

Consuls reside here from the principal states of Europe. Mr. Turnbull is the worthy representative of England.

The English Church Service is sometimes performed at the French Protestant Church, in the Rue Grignan, on Sundays, but there is no resident clergyman.

Baths. The Bains de la Méditerranée, about 1½ m. out of the town, on the S. of the road to Aix, in an agreeable situation, commanding a view of the bay, and receiving the sea breeze, is a very well-conducted establishment, affording not only open sea and other baths, but apartments, at the rate of 6 or 7 fr. a day for 1 sitting and 2 bed-rooms. There is a restaurant attached to the house.

With this exception the Environs of Marseilles possess but slight attractions — nothing but dust, scorched rocks, and bare high walls, amidst which the eye in vain seeks for some verdure to rest on. The Bastides already mentioned are little country boxes, which entirely dot the slopes around town, prolonging it apparently to the tops of the surrounding hills. Some of them are handsome, and surrounded by gardens, but the greater part stand in mere bare enclosures, between 4 walls, destitute of shade and water, their only recommendation being that they are out of town. Every merchant, citizen, or shop-keeper, must have one, and their number is said to exceed 6000. The stupendous Canal to supply Marseilles with water from the Durance now in progress, which will entirely alter the aspect of the country around the town by the irrigation which it will furnish, is described at p. 486.

A common excursion is a "promenade sur eau," from the harbour's mouth to the islands of If, &c. (p. 478.) Courty's Restaurant, "La Muette de Portici," at the Prado, on the beach, 2 m. out of Marseilles, affords a good specimen of la Cuisine Provençale.

Some of the best shops are in the Rues St. Ferreol, and de Paradis, and the Post Office is in a street running out of it, ? Rue d'Anacharsis. Letters reach this from England on the 5th day.

Conveyances. Malleposte daily to Paris in 66 hours; to Nismes and Toulouse in 36 hours.

Diligences, daily to Lyons (in 34 hours), and 5 or 6 to Paris; to Aix, Avignon, Nismes; to Arles and Tarascon; to Toulon and Nice; to Grenoble in 38 hours.

Steamers. French government steamers carrying the mails to Leghorn, Civita Vecchia, Naples, and Malta, start at 5 p. m. on the 1st, 11th, and 21st of every month, corresponding there with steamers to Constantinople, Smyrna, Athens, Syria, Alexandria. The voyage to Constantinople or to Alexandria is made in 15 days.

The food on board is good, and you pay 6 francs a day.

To Genoa, Leghorn, Civita Vecchia, Naples, 4 or 5 private companies — 2 French, 1 Tuscan (Leopoldo II.), a capital boat with a very obliging English captain, 1 Neapolitan, said to be excellent, 1 Sardinian. These vessels afford the traveller an opportunity of setting out for the above ports 3 or 4 times a week.

The Neapolitan Company's boats Montgibello, Herculaneum, &c., make the passage to Naples in 4 days, stop there 4 days, and then start for Malta, a voyage of 4 more days, arriving in time for the English government steamers for India, which start on the 13th of every month. N. B. The English and Neapolitan consuls' visas, and a Bill of Health, are necessary before embarking for Naples: they cost five or six fr. each; the bill of health 1 fr.

Steamers to Cette (16 m. from Montpellier, on the way to Toulouse), — to Arles, chiefly for merchandize: the accommodation not good; — to Port Vendres and Barcelona twice a week; — to Barcelona, and the coast of Spain as far as Cadiz, touching at Tarragona, Valencia, Alicante, Carthagena, Malaga, and Gibraltar 5 or 6 times a month. The voyage takes up about 10 days exclusive of stoppages of 2 or 3 days at Barcelona.

To Algiers (?) twice a week in summer.

History. Classical tradition assigns the foundation of Massilia to a colony of Phocæans, who left their native country, Asia Minor, with their wives and children, rather than submit to Cyrus, and sought for liberty on the then barbarous shores of Gaul. Their emigration (B. C. 5.) is described by Herodotus, and alluded to by Horace:

"Phocæorum
Velut profugit execrata civitas,
Agros atque lares patrios, habitandaque rura
Apris reliquit et rapacibus lupis:
Ire pedes quocunque ferent, quocunque per undas
Notus vocabit, aut protervus Africus."

Favourably received by the inhabitants of the country, the settlement increased and prospered; became great in commerce and navigation, eminent in the arts and literature; was sought and esteemed by Rome as an ally until, wishing to remain neutral in the wars between Cæsar and Pompey, and finally siding with the latter, she was besieged, taken, and reduced to great distress by his successful antagonist, who records that he preserved it "magis pro nomine et vetustate quam pro meritis in se." — Cæsar. Lucan has described the siege, but evidently without local knowledge. Cicero says in his Oration for Flaccus, that Greece alone could compete with Marseilles as a seat of learning; Tacitus calls her "magistram studiorum." Her importance continued during the middle ages; she formed a sort of independent state, electing her own magistrates, and forming alliances with other states. She furnished alone all the gallies required by St. Louis to transport his army on the Crusade. The famous commercial code Le Consulat de la Mer is supposed to have been drawn up here. At length, conquered by Charles d'Anjou, Comte de Provence, she yielded to the rising superiority on the sea of Pisa, Genoa, and Venice.

Marseilles held out against Henri IV. long after Paris had submitted; when at length he was informed of its surrender, he exclaimed, "C'est maintenant que je suis Roi." Yet was its turbulent spirit of independence not subdued, since, in consequence of an outbreak against Louis XIV., that monarch entered the city by a breach in its wall (see above p. 477.).

At the Revolution, which inflamed to madness the fiery spirits of the people of the south, among whom moderation and restraint are unknown or little practised, Marseilles furnished from the dregs of its population, and the outcasts of other lands, the bands of assassins who perpetrated the greater portion of the September massacres in Paris. The Reign of Terror at Marseilles itself, under the rule of the infamous Fréron and Barras, produced more than its usual proportion of atrocities and follies. The usual wholesale murders were committed, amounting to 400 persons, attended by confiscation of their property.

But not satisfied with this, it was proposed by one of the Representants du Peuple to fill up its harbour. The name of Marseilles was absolutely abolished by a decree, which enacted that it should pass under the denomination of "La Commune de sans Nom!" Even the death of Robespierre, which, for the most part put an end to the reign of terror in other places, was here and elsewhere in the south the signal for fresh assassinations. Vengeance against those who had been the instruments of the revolutionary massacres was now the cry; the Fort St. Jean, in which about 200 of them had been confined, was broken open, and they were all murdered by an irritated mob of insurgents, employing cannon loaded with grape to finish their victims in their cells.

Marseilles is the birth-place of Mascaron, the preacher, of Bishop Belzunce, and of Puget, the architect who built the old British Museum.

It takes about 5 hours to post from Marseilles to Toulon (40 m.). The first part of the road is as dreary as can be imagined, running between white stone walls which enclose Bastides and intercept all view and fresh air. "The most dusty I ever saw; the vines for 20 rods on each side like a dressed (powdered) head: the country all mountains of rock with poor pines."—A. Young.

17 Aubagne. Near this a little verdure is visible in the pretty vale of Gemenos. The Abbé Barthélemy, author of the "Voyages du Jeune Anacharsis," was born at Aubagne.

The Caper, a pretty flowering plant, is cultivated near 12 Cujes, a miserable looking town (like most of those on the road) of 3000 inhabitants, but the country around most productive and well cultivated.

A hilly road leads to the poor town of 13 Beausset, in the department de Var. The sea is now and then seen through breaks on the rt.

About 3 m. farther the road penetrates the mountains, through a deep chasm or defile of wild and savage features, called the Pass of Ollioules. Bare, bleached, and nearly precipitous rocks of limestone, surmounted by a ruined Castle, which once guarded the passage, hem in on either side, for a distance of nearly 3 m., a scene of desolation, nakedness, and solitude. On emerging from it, the landscape is rather more cheerful; the orange-tree is first seen; the pomegranate grows in the hedges.

17 Toulon.—Inns: Croix de Malte; fallen off, F. K.;—Croix d'Or, good table-d'hôte at 5:—Hôtel de France.

Toulon is the Plymouth of France, the seat of her naval power in the Mediterranean, and one of her chief naval arsenals, inferior only in some respects to Brest. It is a strongly-fortified town situated at the bottom of a deep double bay, which forms the roads. Behind it runs an amphitheatre of hills, rising on the N. into the heights of Mount Pharon, too bare to be picturesque, which stretch their arms as it were round the bay, so as nearly to landlock it, rendering it a safe anchorage, except from the S. and E., where it is somewhat unprotected. 6 forts on the land side defend the town, while the mouth of the harbour and hills commanding it are studded with forts and redoubts.

The Port is divided into the old and new, separated from the road-stead by moles, hollow and bomb proof, begun in the reign of Henri IV., formed externally into batteries on a level with the water's edge,—most formidable against ships. The Port de Commerce, or Darse Vieille, on the E., is appropriated to merchant vessels, and is bordered by a quay. The Darse Neuve, on the W. is surrounded by the dock-yard, slips, the arsenal, the storehouses for provisions, &c., equipments, cannon foundery, park of artillery, &c.

The town itself contains 28,419 inhabitants, exclusive of the garrison; but, confined within ramparts, its streets are narrow, its shops inferior, and its buildings (exclusive of those of the dockyard) unimportant.

The Hôtel de Ville, facing the harbour, is ornamented in front with two colossal thermæ, serving as caryatides to support a balcony, executed by Puget, and of good design. Behind the Hôtel de Ville, at the corner of the Rue d'Orleans, is a house built by that variously-accomplished artist.

The dockyard and fleet of Toulon were destroyed by a British force under Sir Sidney Smith, detached from the fleet of Lord Hood, in November, 1793, previously to the evacuation of the town by the British. It was a work of danger, as the republicans, having already gained possession of the surrounding forts and heights, poured in a merciless hail of shot and shells, and the work was but imperfectly performed, that is to say, the great magazine escaped, and several vessels on the stocks. 27 vessels were destroyed, being ignited in the harbour by a fire-ship, 2 of them blowing up; 15 ships were brought away. It must be remembered that the English gained possession of Toulon not by force of arms, but by convention with the royalist portion of its inhabitants, on condition of their being protected from the cruel vengeance of the republicans. The means at the disposal of Admiral Hood with a fleet of 21 ships, aided by a Spanish squadron of 17, were totally inadequate to effect this; 5000 British troops, the amount of his land force, were far too few to garrison so vast an extent of works, and little good was done by our 8000 Neapolitan and Spanish allies. Although the surrounding forts were manned and put into a state of defence as far as possible, the important pass of Ollioules, commanding the only approach to Toulon on the W., was left unguarded, and the republican forces, reeking from the massacres of Lyons and Marseilles, marched in and speedily invested the town to the number of 50,000, breathing vengeance against the inhabitants of Toulon for the defection of a place so important. When at length, at the end of 3 months, the harbour became no longer tenable, and the Briaish fleet was obliged to weigh anchor, nearly 15,000 of the inhabitants were embarked on board the British fleet, by the light of the burning ships and dockyards, amidst the cries and groans of the multitude that remained behind, praying for the means of escape from the hands of the merciless republicans. Nor were their worst anticipations unfounded: more than 6000 miserable victims were sacrificed to the vengeance of the agents of the Committee of Public Safety, in spite of the remonstrances of Dugommier, the French general, and his lieutenant Buonaparte. With such blind rage did the besieging soldiery rush into the town, that they murdered, without question, 200 Jacobins who had gone forth to meet them. The horrors of the fusillades and the butcheries of the guillotine were then exercised against the inhabitants with a blind rage, which did not wait to distinguish those who had opposed, from those who had favoured the English. Fréron and the other members of the Committee of Public Safety, including the younger Robespierre, presided in person over the fusiliades (thank God, the word has no equivalent in English). They sent orders for 1,200 masons to raze the town of Toulon, but their commands were only partly carried into execution, and they decreed that its name should be abolished, and that it should in future be known only as Port de la Montagne.

The Dockyard (Port Militaire), entered from the town by a handsome and appropriate gateway, is not readily shown to foreigners; the introduction of the English consul will, generally, obtain admission for Englishmen. Excepting, however, the Bagne, or prison for the forçats (convicts), they will see nothing here that they may not see as well at home, at Portsmouth or Plymouth, &c. The description already given of Brest (Route 36.) renders a farther detailed account of a French dockyard unnecessary. This arsenal covers a space of 55 acres, of which 35 are occupied by the Basin, which has a depth of water throughout for the largest ships fully equipped. In 1841, 13 vessels were building here; only 2 of the slips (cales) are roofed; but there are nearly twice as many vessels laid up in ordinary here as in any other French port. The store of oak timber is very large. The rope-house (corderie) is nearly 1200 ft. long, of 3 vaulted aisles of masonry, fire-proof, except the floor. In the centre of the surface of the yard is an opening out into the Petite Rude, and a line-of-battle ship fully armed and stored may sail at once from the basin or port right out to sea. Immediately after crossing this opening on the rt. is Le Bagne, a large airy building. The number of forçats here varies from 3000 to 3500; they are most rigidly superintended, chained each night to their beds, as at Brest (p. 123.), while loopholes for guns in the wallsat the extremity of the dormitory would sweep it from end to end in the event of a mutiny. The number of free workmen, in 1841, was about 4500.

The Musée de la Marine contains a large collection of models of inventions, ship-building, &c.

"2 first-rate Docks have been constructed at the S. angle of the Bassin. They are not excavations from the land but formed by quays carried into the port. A large frame of wood (caisse) was sunk with ballast at the spot and of the size of the dock, and the masonry was built in around it." — W.

A new or supplemental dock-yard has been formed at Mourillon, in the S. of the town, between it and Fort la Malgue; here are 5 large slips.

The Roadstead and Harbour is the most picturesque and interesting feature about Toulon, and the views of it from the neighbouring heights are very pleasing. A small steamer plies across to the village of La Seyne. The inner road is divided from the outer by 2 capes or headlands; that on the E. is defended at its point by an advanced fort, called Grosse Tour, and on its neck or root, between the little and great "Rade" stands the Fort la Malgue, a citadel of great strength, surrounded by ramparts 30 ft. high, capable of holding 800 men, and defended by 200 pieces of cannon. Opposite to this, from the W. side of the bay, stretches forth a two-horned hilly promontory, the 2 points of which are occupied by the strong forts of Eguillette and Ballaguier, at the water's edge, while the commanding heights above them are crowned by the fort le Petit Gibraltar. Eguillette was occupied in 1793 with a garrison, of which unfortunately only a small part were British, the rest Spaniards and Neapolitans, and was regarded as the key of the British position. After keeping possession of it between 3 and 4 months, in spite of the besieging French force from without; on the 16th December a range of batteries, which had been formed secretly by the French and concealed behind the olive gardens, suddenly opened their fire upon le Petit Gibraltar and the fort, Eguillette, from the heights behind, throwing, in the course of 36 hours, 8000 shot and shells. Early the next morning the French, led by Dugommier, their commander-in-chief, advanced to the attack, but were so warmly received that, at first, there seemed no hope of success until the brave Muiron, followed by his men, entering by an embrasure, on the side of the line entrusted to the Spaniards, overpowered them, and cut to pieces the British detachment of 300 men.

The planner of this attack, the constructor of the concealed batteries which now opened by hundreds of fiery mouths from the crests of all the hills upon the detachment of the allies below, was a young officer of artillery, aged 23, named Buonaparte, who for the first time received a command and enjoyed an opportunity of displaying his vast military genius on the heights above Toulon. On arriving 2 or 3 months previously to take the subordinate command, he found that the incapables who had preceded him had raised their batteries at a distance of 2 gun-shots from Toulon, and were directing vain efforts against the place itself. His quick eye at once perceived the defect, and singled out the points where an impression was to be made. In 5 or 6 weeks under his directions, batteries were constructed, mounting 200 pieces of cannon, on all the heights commanding the forts held by the British, and were pushed as far forward as possible. While awaiting the time when all should be ready to make his great effort, the Representatives of the People, discovering so many guns lying idle, would have caused an immediate cannonade, and would in their ignorance thus have spoiled all. Then it was that the young officer had the boldness to reply to one of them, Barras, "Tenez-vous à votre métier de Représentant, et laissez-moi faire le mien d'artilleur. Cette batterie restera là, et je réponds du succès sur ma tête." He promised that, in 2 days after gaining the fort, Toulon would fall, nor was he wrong: the morning after the capture of Petit Gibraltar, Eguillette, and Fort Pharon (an important work on the heights to the N. of the town), whose guns together swept the roadstead from end to end, the British and Spanish fleets had weighed anchor, and were standing out to sea.

A previous attempt was made upon Toulon, in 1707, by the Austrian and Sardinian army, under Prince Eugene and the Duke of Savoy, aided by an English and Dutch fleet, under Sir Cloudesley Shovel, but after an ineffectual bombardment of the town, they found it so stoutly defended that they were compelled to retire.

The Outer Road is formed by a hilly peninsula, stretching from W. to E. terminating in Cap Sepet, corresponding with Cap Brun on the opposite side of the bay.

There is an extensive Naval Hospital at St. Mandrier, on the S. side of the roadstead, farthest from the town; a splendid building with 2000 beds. Near it is the Lazaret.

A Government Steamer sails every week to Algiers, but takes no passengers except French officers.

Steamers go twice every week to Corsica, touching at Ajaccio (22 hours' passage) and Bastia (24 hours) alternately.

The view from the hill to the S. E. of Toulon, on which stands Fort La Malgue, is perhaps the finest in the S. of France.

The Botanic Garden, outside the town, is worth a visit, on account of the number of plants of tropical or southern countries which here first begin to flourish in the open air; among others, the date palm. Several palms may also be seen in the neighbourhood of 18 Hyères (Inn, H. de l'Europe; good), a town of 10,042 inhabitants, on the slope of a hill, sheltered from the N. E. wind (bise) by the chain of Les Maures, and open to the S. It faces the Mediterranean, but is separated from it by an intervening space, partly common, partly marsh, 3 m. broad, so that it enjoys little view of the sea.

The mildness of its climate causes Hyères to be some times chosen as a winter residence for invalids, but the exhalation from the marshes in summer renders it unwholesome. The place has certainly been too much cried up in other respects: there is little beauty in its situation, and its vaunted orange groves, where alone in France the orange bears fruit, though a novelty to strangers from the N., are not an agreeable feature in the landscape, the trees being shut up in walled gardens. The palm tree, of which there are 4 or 5 in the neighbourhood, produces no fruit in this latitude. The old or upper town, composed of narrow streets, steep and dirty, retains a fragment of its old Castle, and part of the line of the former fortifications still climbing up the steep. It is the birth-place of Massillon, the preacher, to whom a marble pillar and bust have been raised in the Place Royale.

The low ground is richly cultivated: olives, vines, figs, mulberries abound; the pomegranate, pistachio, capers, myrtle, jessamine flourish, but the hills are bare. On the shore, about 3 m. to the E., are large salt works, and off the coast is the group of Islands called

Iles d'Hyères (anciently Stœchades) named Ile Du Levant or Titan, Port

Gros, Porquerolles and Bagneau. They are barren and rocky, with a few pine trees, thinly inhabited and fortified, and enclose a roadstead in which the fleet destined for Algiers anchored in 1830. These islands, though several m. farther S. than Hyères, do not enjoy the same favoured climate, being withdrawn from the protection of the hills.

Diligences run daily between Toulon and Hyères.

The road hence to Nice passes through

23 Cuers.

15 Pignan.

15 Le Luc, where it falls into R. 128.

ROUTE 128.

AVIGNON TO NICE BY AIX (MARSEILLES), FREJUS AND CANNES.

274 kilom. = 170 Eng. m.

Diligences several times a day.

The road on quitting Avignon runs along the rt. bank of the Durance (Druentia), a turbulent and ill-conducted stream, whose wide and desolate bed of gravel, laid bare in summer, bears so large a proportion to the reduced stream flowing in threads towards the Rhone, that a passing traveller has no idea of the considerable volume of water poured down by it even at that season from the supplies furnished by the melting snows of the Alps. In winter, swollen in a few hours to a torrent, it not only fills its channel, but often inundates its banks. Its waters are employed in irrigating the neighbouring land. One considerable Canal called de Crillon, from the grandson of le Brave Crillon, who caused it to be made, is passed by our road near Bonpas. Here we cross the Durance by a long wooden bridge. A road runs hence to l'Isle by which the traveller visiting Vaucluse (p. 451.) may gain the route to Marseilles without returning from Avignon.

Near Bonpas is the village Noves, reputed the birth-place of Petrarch's Laura.

Higher up the Durance, on its rt. bank, is Cavaillon (7000 inhabitants), where are some mutilated Roman remains, an Arch of Triumph, half buried in the ground, attributed to the Empress Constantine, and a curious Romanesque Cathedral (St. Veran) of the 13th century, with an apse of the 12th; attached to it is a curious Cloister.

The Durance separates the department of Vaucluse from that of Bouches du Rhone.

19 St. Andeol. There is a cross road from this to St. Remy, whose Roman monuments are described at p. 455. It lies at the foot of the low chain of bare limestone hills, visible to the S., extending from Tarascon to Orgon, called Les Alpines.

9 Orgon. Inns: Poste; dear, and not to be recommended. — I. K.

This is a town of 2000 inhabitants, near the l. bank of the Durance, at the foot of a hill crowned by a ruined castle.

The Canal de Boisgelin, a branch of the Canal de Craponne, which conveys the fresh water of the Durance to the Rhone at Arles, fertilising the land on its passage, is here carried through the rock in a Tunnel, known as the Pierre Percée, of no great length.

Napoleon on his way from Fontainebleau to Elba, was nearly torn in pieces here by the infuriated populace, and became so much alarmed as to disguise himself as a courier, and ride on before his own carriage.

The Canal de Craponne is crossed at 17 Pont Royal: there is a pretty fountain near the post house.

Canal to Marseilles from the Durance.

"A highly-important hydraulic work has been projected, and is now in rapid progress of execution under the able direction of M. de Mont-richer. This Canal will derive its water from the Durance, near to the suspension bridge at Pertuis, and this will be conducted by open cutting and tunneling for a distance of 51 miles, through a most mountainous and difficult country, until it reaches the arid territory of Marseilles, where it will be employed for the supply of the city, as well as for irrigation, and giving activity to various branches of industry which require water power.

"The section and fall of this canal is calculated to pass 11 tons of water per second, and its levels are so disposed, that this quantity of water will arrive near to the city, at an elevation of 400 ft. above the level of the sea.

"Perhaps no work of this description has been attempted either in ancient or modern times more hardy in its conception, or more really useful in its effects.

"Three chains of limestone mountains are already nearly pierced by the 10 miles of tunnels which are required to conduct this stream; and an aqueduct, which is to convey it across the ravine of the river Arc (about 5 miles from Aix) is now in construction; its elevation above the river will be 262 ft. and its length across the ravine 1230 feet. The design for this gigantic structure is in excellent taste, and as a work of art, it will not suffer from comparison with the famous Pont du Gard, which it will much surpass both in altitude and size. The estimated cost of this canal is about 450,000*l.* and this sum is raised by the city of Marseilles without aid from the government. The revenue arising from this work will be principally from supplying water for irrigation, as the value of land in such a climate is quadrupled if water can be so applied to it."—*P. T.

* It is not expected that the canal of Marseilles will effect the purification of the port. The water will be otherwise employed, and another plan for effecting this has been proposed by Mr. P. Taylor.

Lambesc is passed on the way to 14 St. Cannat, where our road is joined by that from Arles and Nismes. (R. 127.)

A hilly country succeeds, bare and bleak, but abounding in olives, and not interesting. A long and steep hill leads down to Aix; on its brow, close to the road, are subterranean Quarries of Gypsum, in connection with which a great number of well preserved fossil fish and insects are found. They occur in a fresh-water shale, whose laminations are so minute as to resemble the leaves of a book; on splitting them open the fossils are found between.

The Montagne de St. Victor, rising to the E. of Aix, is a conspicuous feature in the landscape (see p. 489.).

16 Aix.—Inn: H. des Princes, excellent: (F. K.)—Poste and Palais Royal, both good.

Aix is a flourishing town of 22,575 inhabitants, agreeably situated in a basin surrounded by hills of abundant fertility, amidst almond groves and plantations of olives, which furnish the much esteemed sweet oil of Aix, the best produced in France.

The broad street called the Cours, by which you enter the town, is very striking: it is lined with handsome modern houses including the chief hotels, closed at one end by an iron rail, and ornamented with 3 fountains, one of which bears a statue, by David, of le Bon Roi René, who is represented holding a bunch of Muscat grapes, which he introduced into France. During his reign, Aix was the scene of gaiety and luxury, and the seat of art and literature. Within the modern and external quarters of the town, which assume somewhat the aspect of boulevards, is the Old Town, the ancient capital of Provence, the resort of the troubadours, the home of poetry, gallantry, and politeness; the theatre of the courts of love, and of gay fêtes and tournaments, during the reign of Raymond Beranger IV. as well as of René of Anjou. It still retains in part its feudal walls and gates, and its streets are narrow. Here stands the Cathedral of St. Sauveur, parts of which are very ancient, as the S. aisle of the nave, resting partly on a wall of Roman masonry, entered by a curious portal flanked by 2 Corinthian columns, probably antique, within which is a plain round arch. Attached to the aisle is a Baptistery recently restored, around which are arranged a number of antique pillars of polished granite, supporting round arches. These portions are all Romanesque, of the 12th century, as well as the Cloister remarkable for the variety of the columns supporting it. The central aisle is later, in the florid Gothic, and the N. aisle shows traces of the Italian style. The main W. entrance resembles in character somewhat the perpendicular English Gothic, overloaded with ornaments. The heads of the statues ornamenting it, destroyed at the Revolution, have been restored in the worst manner. The carved wooden doors merit notice; they were executed 1503. The bas-reliefs upon them represent the 4 Theological Virtues (? the Sibyls), and the 12 Prophets; the ornaments, a mixture of Gothic and Renaissance, are very delicately executed. The doors are covered with a sort of shutter to protect them, which the sacristan will remove for a small fee.

Within the church is a very good old picture of the Virgin and Child, on the top of a tree surrounded by a glory. Below, an angel appears to a shepherd, probably intended to represent Moses and the burning bush. On the outside of the two wings or shutters which cover the picture, painted in black and white, are the angel Gabriel appearing to the Virgin, and within are King René, and his second wife, Jeanne de Laval, both evidently portraits; he, attended by his patron saints, the Magdalen, St. Anthony and St. Maurice; she accompanied by St. John, St. Nicholas and St. Catherine, the last a beauteous and most elevated countenance. This picture is attributed, like many others in different parts of France, to the pencil of King René; it is probably the work of a Flemish artist of the school of Van Eyck: its date must be posterior to 1455, as René did not marry Jeanne de Laval until that year.

There are some marble bas-reliefs, which probably belonged to an antique sarcophagus, representing Christ and the Apostles in the chapel of St. Mitre, and others of the 15th century, behind the altar of St. Maurice.

The sacristy of the modern church of La Madeleine contains a curious painting of the Annunciation, attributed to Alb. Durer.

The Museum contains numerous fragments of antiquity, inscriptions, mosaics, sculpture, bronzes, chiefly found in the neighbourhood, including a torso of a youth, a tripod carved with a dancing female in relief, and a statue, said to be Hercules.

The Pictures, as usual, are for the most part very mediocre; but among the modern works is a sample of Granet, a native of Aix.

The Public Library contains not less than 100,000 vols.

Aix, the Aquæ Sextiæ of the Romans, derives its origin from a Roman colony sent hither to defend the Phocæan colonists of Marseilles from the attacks of the Salyes, in the year 630 after the building of Rome. Its warm mineral waters served probably as an inducement for them to select this spot. The hot saline spring still exists, but it is neither very strong, nor in high repute.

A bath house is erected over the source in the suburb, and there are remains of vaults near it, said to be Roman. The water is so weak that the baths may with safety be taken as ordinary warm baths. The chief spring, called Source de Sextius, from the founder of the Roman Colony, Caius Sextius Calvinus, has a temperature of 78° Fahr. At the beginning of last century it diminished greatly in quantity, in consequence of wells being dug at a place called Barret, 2 m. off, which brought to light, at a short distance from the surface, very copious springs, similar in nature to those in the town, but cold. The magistrates, however, ordered these sources to be stopped up; and 22 days after, the warm spring of Sextius had regained ¾ths of its original volume. It would appear from this remarkable occurrence, that the source of heat must lie between the Source de Barret and that of Sextius.

Few provincial towns in France have produced a greater number of remarkable men than Aix: among them the learned Peiresc, the Marquis d'Argens, the naturalists Tournefort and Adanson, the painters J. B. Vanloo and Granet, and General Miollis.

The commerce in the sweet oil of Aix has greatly fallen off since 1830, when an unusually severe frost killed a large proportion of the olive trees in this neighbourhood.

Diligences to Marseilles 4 or 5 daily; to Nice; to Avignon; Arles: Nismes to Gap; Digne; Toulon. Malleposte daily to Paris (in 64 hours) and Marseilles; to Nice in 20 hours.

The road to Marseilles and Toulon is described in Route 127.

The road to Nice passes under the precipitous heights of the Mont St. Victoire, and not far from the spot where Marius is supposed to have defeated the Cimbri, B. C. 125. 100,000 of the barbarians are stated to have been slain or taken prisoners, and the battle-field on the banks of the Arc was long known by the name "Campi Putridi," whence the modern village Pourrières.

12 Châteauneuf le Rouge.

11 Grande Pugère.

22 Tourves, a town of 2800 inhabitants, in the department of Var. No inn. St. Maximin has rather a fine Gothic church, very lofty within, but destitute of a W. front, without transepts, but ending in 3 apses. It was founded by Charles II., King of Naples, and Count of Provence, 1279, but seems chiefly of the 15th century. The woodwork of the pulpit and sacristy are well preserved.

12 Brignolles. — Inn, La Poste, very good. In this town of 6000 inhabitants, an extensive trade is carried on in dried fruits. The "prunes de Brignolles," though sold here, are in fact produced in the country around Digne (Basses Alpes.)

14 Flassans. — Inn, La Poste; decent.

9 Le Luc. Here the road from Toulon and Hyères falls in. (See R. 127.)

12 Vidauban. — Inns: Hôtel de Provence (?): — Poste; good beds.

13 Le Muy.

15 Frejus.—Inns: Hôtel du Midi, very clean and comfortable:—Poste; braves gens. — F. K.

Outside the walls of this small and dirty town, the once celebrated Forum Julii founded by Cæsar, on the W., are the remains of a small Circus, recently cleared out, far inferior in size and preservation to those of Nismes and Arles. The direction of the old Roman town walls may also be traced by existing fragments of them. The ancient harbour in which Augustus posted the fleet of 300 galleys captured at Actium from Antony, is now sanded up by the deposits of the Argens (Argentius) and is hardly to be discovered. Near the sea-shore a sort of low pyramid resting on a square base is pointed out as an ancient lighthouse.

Between the sea and the town is a Roman arch, formed of small stones alternating with layers of tiles, called Porte Dorée. The Cathedral of St. Etienne is neither large nor handsome, but may interest the antiquary as a Romanesque edifice of the 11th or 12th century. Adjoining it is a Baptistery, resting on 8 antique columns of grey granite with marble capitals.

The most considerable and interesting Roman remains here are those of an Aqueduct, passed on the way to Cannes. It has been traced for more than 24 m. up the valley of the Ciagne, whose clear water it conveyed to the town. Many of the arches and piers remain perfect. It is a picturesque subject for the pencil.

Napoleon landed at the small port of St. Raphael near this, 1799, on his return from Egypt, and embarked hence, 1814, for Elba. This is the birth-place of the Abbé Sieyes, and is said to be that of Julius Agricola.

The French coast between Toulon and Nice is bordered by 2 small hilly chains called Les Maures (because once occupied by Saracen brigands) and Les Esterels. They are, as it were, the roots or footstool of the Alps, whose higher ridges protect them from the N. Consequently in their recesses and on their S. slopes they seem to enjoy a peculiar and privileged climate. Though their peaks are bare, near their bases the aloe, cactus, and palm flourish in the open air; and the umbrella pine, as in Italy, raises its graceful head close to the seashore. This is the true "garden of Provence." The Esterels mountains are partly of porphyry, and are highly picturesque in their forms, as is invariably the case where that rock occurs. The red porphyry was worked by the Romans, and used by them for the buildings of Frejus, and was even sent to Rome; the ancient quarry has been discovered about 1½ m. from the shore.

The scenery of the pass of 14 L'Esterel, varied by the fine foliage of the cork tree, arbutus, and evergreen oak, is very pleasing, and is diversified by fine sea views.

20 Cannes. — Inns: La Poste, uncomfortable — F. K.: — Hôtel du Nord.

This is a neat and cheerful small town, finely situated in a mountainous country at the bottom of a beautiful bay.

About ½ a mile off is the villa Louise Eléonore, built by Lord Brougham, in one of the most charming situations in the S. of France. It is plainly but well furnished.

Napoleon landed at Cannes from Elba in March 1815, with an army composed of 500 grenadier guards, 200 dragoons, and 100 lancers without horses. He took the road to Grasse and bivouacked the first night in an olive garden there.

Opposite Cannes, about 2½ m. from the shore, lies the Ile Ste. Marguerite, one of the group of 2 isles called Lerins, in whose fort, once a state prison, the man in the iron mask long lingered. The dungeon in which he was confined 17 years is still pointed out; its walls are 12 ft. thick, and its solitary window is guarded by treble iron bars. The only approach to it was through the governor's rooms. In the midst of a small garden is a curious square building with a door in each face. On the Ile St. Honorat are remains of a fortified convent, a church and a baptistery, all deserving the attention of the antiquary.

Grasse, 10 m. N. of Cannes, (12,888 inhab.) has, after Paris, the most extensive manufacture of perfumery in France, made from the flowers, roses, &c. which flourish in its neighbourhood, favoured by the mild climate. Some of the nursery gardens near Cannes produce annually 200,000 francs worth of flowers of orange, lemon, heliotrope, hyacynthe, which are sent to Grasse to supply its distilleries.

11 Antibes is a flourishing little seaport, finely situated on a height commanding views of the Maritime Alps.

It is a delightful ride hence to Nice. The torrent Var, crossed by a bridge of wood, divides France from the Sardinian states. The French custom-house is strict. See Introduction.

24 Nice (Inn, H. des Etrangers) is described in Hand-book for North Italy.

SECTION V

DAUPHINÉ.*

ROUTES.

ROUTE		PAGE
181	Lyons to Grenoble, by Vienne, or by Bourgoin. — Excursion to the Grande Chartreuse	492
182	Valence on the Rhone to Grenoble and Chamberry, through the Valley of Grésivaudan	500
184	Grenoble to Marseilles, by Gap and Sisteron. — Protestant Valleys of Dauphiné.	501
185	G
187
189

INTRODUCTION. — SKETCH

This province has been as much neglected of France, yet its scenery is of first-rate nothing among the Alps," says Arthur Yo scenes as the N. parts of Dauphiné." The a series of beautiful scenes, and the part of vaunted Vallée de Grésivaudan, combines wi stand the luxuriant vegetation and umbrag riorise the S. slope of the Alps.

The Grande Chartreuse has been rarely vis and Horace Walpole first drew their attentio from St. Laurent is by a gorge as fine as an is a striking city in a very romantic situation by Napoleon, and at length nearly finished,
Bourg d'Oysans and the Col of the Laute
Alpine pass.

In addition to all this, however, Dauphin tains which separate the basin of the Rhone the sources of the Drac, the highest mountain i

* The name Dauphin (Delphinus, whence Dauphi of France down to 1349, is of unknown origin, bu who also carried a dolphin as their crest or arms to 1349, when Count Humbert III., the last name to the eldest son of Philip

SECTION VII.

DAUPHINÉ.*

ROUTES.

ROUTE		PAGE
131	Lyons to Grenoble, by Vienne, or by Bourgoin.—Excursion to the Grande Chartreuse	492
132	Valence on the Rhone to Grenoble and Chamberry, through the Valley of Grésivaudan	500
134	Grenoble to Marseilles, by Gap and Sisteron. — Protestant Valleys of Dauphiné.	501
135	Grenoble to Marseilles, by the Croix Haute . .	504
137	Grenoble to Briançon, by Bourg d' Oysans and the Col de Lauteret, and by the Mont Genèvre to Susa . .	505
139	Gap to Briançon, by Embrun. — Protestant Valleys (continued) : Val Queyras, Val d'Arvieux, and Val Fressinière . . .	508

INTRODUCTION. — SKETCH OF THE COUNTRY.

This province has been as much neglected by travellers as many other parts of France, yet its scenery is of first-rate beauty and grandeur. "I saw nothing among the Alps," says Arthur Young, "that offered such pleasing scenes as the N. parts of Dauphiné." The valley of the Isère is made up of a series of beautiful scenes, and the part of it about Grenoble, the deservedly vaunted Vallée de Gresivaudan, combines with the mountain forms of Switzerland the luxuriant vegetation and umbrageous foliage which usually characterise the S. slope of the Alps.

The Grande Chartreuse has been rarely visited by the English since Gray and Horace Walpole first drew their attention to it, yet the approach to it from St. Laurent is by a gorge as fine as any in the Alps. Grenoble itself is a striking city in a very romantic situation. The new carriage-road begun by Napoleon, and at length nearly finished, from Grenoble to Briançon, by Bourg d'Oysans and the Col of the Lauteret, will lay open a magnificent Alpine pass.

In addition to all this, however, Dauphiné includes, in the block of mountains which separate the basin of the Romanche from that of the Durance, and the sources of the Drac, the highest mountain in France, the Mont Pelvoux, whose culminating peak, the Pointe des Arsines or Des Ecrins, attains an elevation of 13,123 ft. above the sea level. Yet, though the loftiest summit in the Alpine chain between Mont Blanc and the Mediterranean, and considerably higher than Monte Viso, its name rarely appears on maps and in books of geography even published in France. Among the few persons who have visited it, besides engineers employed in the vicinity, are M. Elie de Beaumont, and our own countryman, Prof. Forbes, of Edinburgh, who have examined it geologically. The scenery around the Mont Pelvoux will well repay the trouble of a visit: it is of a sublime, but desolate and savage character. It is best approached from Bourg d'Oysans, whence a path runs by Val Christophe to Berarde, a desolate village, at its base, buried by snow 7 months of the year, and hemmed in by precipices, with the scantiest vegetation around, and beyond it moraines and the glacier of La Condamine. It is destitute of any accommodation; indeed, the traveller who explores the Montagnes d'Oysans must be prepared to rough it; the mere tourist is an animal nearly unknown as yet among them. Mont Pelvoux is surrounded by other lofty peaks, all inclining their heads to him as in homage to the monarch of the French Alps, but presenting sides nearly precipitous, surrounding the desolate valley of Berard as it were with a colossal circus, 36 miles in circumference, forming an arrangement which has been compared to the petals of a flower.

* The name Dauphin (Delphinus, whence Dauphiné), borne by the eldest son of the King of France down to 1830, is of unknown origin, but belonged to the Counts of Vienne, who also carried a dolphin as their coat of arms, from the eleventh or twelfth century down to 1349, when Count Humbert III., the last native Dauphin made over his title and domains to the eldest son of Philip of Valois.

The Valleys of the Hautes Alpes, including the Val Fressinière to the S. of Mont Pelvoux, and the Vals Queiras and Pragelas, running E. from Embrun and Mont Dauphin towards the Monte Viso, although destitute of roads and accessible only by the pedestrian, will be explored with a double interest not only for their noble scenery, but also as the refuge of persecuted Protestants, the kindred of the Albigenses and Vaudois, and also in recent times as the scene of the labours of the virtuous pastor, Felix Neff.

Bourcet's "Carte du Haut Dauphiné" is an indispensable travelling companion, and is not to be surpassed for accuracy.

Gilly's "Life of Felix Neff," of which there is a pocket edition, will be read with interest amidst the scenes of his ministry.

ROUTE 131.

LYONS TO GRENOBLE BY VIENNE, OR BY BOURGOIN.—EXCURSION TO THE GRANDE CHARTREUSE.

a. By Vienne 113 kilom. = 70 Eng. m. A diligence daily. The road is the same as R. 125. as far as 27 Vienne.

15 La Detourbe.
14 Chatonay.
17 La Frette.
13 Rives.
13 Voreppe, p. 494.
14 Grenoble, p. 497.

b. The route by Bourgoin is shorter than the preceding by 7 kilom.; it is the road to Chamberry and Turin as far as Bourgoin.

4 Diligences go daily; and 1 or 2 to Chamberry and Turin follow the road by Bourgoin and Pont de Beauvoisin.

The road quits Lyons by the Pont Guillotière, and the long suburb of that name, emerging between two of the recently erected detached forts. It enters the Department of the Isère before reaching 6 Bron, a solitary post-house.

11 St. Laurent des Mûres, ? so called from the mulberry trees.

11 La Verpillière.

12 Bourgoin (Poste; good), a neat manufacturing town of about 3750 inhabitants, whose industry is promoted by the Bourbre and 2 other small streams flowing through it. Here are manufactures of cotton, calico, cloth, and paper. A considerable trade is carried on in flour and wool; and the prosperity of the place is promoted by its position at the point where the roads from Lyons to Chamberry and Grenoble branch off.

The way to Chamberry and Turin runs through 14 La Tour du Pin (Poste; tolerable), a town of 2484 inhabitants.

9 Gaz (no inn); a road runs hence by Voirons, a town of 6924 inhabitants, where great quantities of sail-cloth and other coarse cloths are made, to Voreppe and Grenoble.

7 Pont du Beauvoisin (Poste; fallen off), a frontier town on the Guier, which here separates France from Sardinia. The respective custom-houses of the two countries are situated at the two extremities of the bridge over it.

The road runs along up the rt. bank of the Guier, but high above it, through a picturesque and fertile country at first, and afterwards through the grand gorge of La Chaille.

15 (2 posts) Les Echelles, a village situated at the junction of 2 streams, the Guiers Vif and Mort.

About 8 m. S. of this, up the Guiers Mort, is St. Laurent du Pont, the point from which the Grande Chartreuse is visited (see p. 494.).

A good road leads from Les Echelles to Grenoble, through St. Laurent.

Chamberry is fully described, together with the road thither from Pont Beauvoisin, in the SWISS HAND-BOOK.

Road to Grenoble, the direct road from Lyons to Grenoble, turns off from the preceding route at 40 Bourgoin.

11 Eclose.

15 La Frette. We here fall into the road a to Grenoble by Vienne, p. 492.

The Château of La Frette was the birth-place of the terrible Baron des Adrets, a sort of French Alva, at whose name and war-cry "Beaumont" squadrons used to turn and fly. At the age of 60 he led on the Huguenots against the Romanists, and especially against the party of the Guises. He died here, after having become himself a Romanist, at the age of 80.

La Côte St. André, a little to the W., is famed for its distilleries of liqueurs.

13 Rives, on a stream called La Fure.

After surmounting a hill the road descends at Moirans into the beautiful valley of the Isère. The portion of it extending upwards from Voreppe to Chapareillan is called the Valley of Grésivaudan, and is deservedly celebrated as one of the most productive and beautiful in France. In culture, abundance, and variety of crops it is scarce surpassed by those luxuriant valleys stretching down into Italy on the S. side of the Alps. Up to the point where the mountains rise in bare precipitous rocks, or are girt with dark forests, every portion is constantly subject to tillage, and produces a vast variety of crops. Besides corn and clover, hemp, for which the valley is celebrated, grows often to the height of 15 ft. Orchards, chestnuts, and mulberry trees rise above these; and the vine, also very abundant, instead of being allowed to crawl along the ground, or being clipped like a currant bush, slings its graceful festoons from tree to tree, or is trained along wooden trellis. The roads are lined and shaded with trees, and it is difficult to see across the valley for the dense screen of foliage, but it hides the somewhat arid hills from view, and thus modifies an unpleasing feature. Industry, abundant irrigation, and manure have brought the whole to the condition of a luxuriant garden, and a great portion of the bottom is carpeted with meadows.

13 Voreppe, a flourishing village abounding in inns, chiefly resorted to by waggoners, of which the Petit Paris seems the best.

THE GRANDE CHARTREUSE.

" Per invias rupes, fera per juga,
Clivosque præruptos, sonantes
Inter aquas, nemorumque noctem."
GRAY.

" There are certain scenes that would awe an atheist into belief without the help of other argument. I am well persuaded St. Bruno was a man of no common genius to choose such a place for his retirement." — Gray's Letters.

N. B. — Those who cannot content themselves with Carthusian fare, viz. soupe maigre, herbs, and an omelet, had better take some cold meat and wine with them on this excursion.

A tolerably good cross road, practicable for carriages, strikes off from Voreppe N. to Les Echelles, up a side valley shaded by walnut trees, ascending steeply at first. At a distance of about 6 m., where the valley has widened out, the road from Voirons and Le Gaz (p. 493.) falls in, and 4 m. further lies St. Laurent du Pont, a small village, with a poor and not very moderate inn. Here the traveller bound to the Chartreuse must turn out of the carriage road, which continues on to Les Echelles, and the rest of the way must be performed on horseback or on foot. A mule or horse may be hired here for 5 fr.; a guide is unnecessary.

St. Laurent lies on the stream called Guiers Mort, up whose valley our way lies: it is at first bounded by gentle slopes covered with pasture below, and above with wood, but it soon contracts into a wooded gorge, not exceeded for picturesque grandeur among the Alps. At Fourvoirie, a little more than a mile from St. Laurent, near an iron forge, now bankrupt and deserted, the mountains close together; the river, hemmed in by vertical precipices of vast height, is spanned by a single-arched bridge, and gushes forth from between the smoothed rocks with the swiftness of a cataract, in one deep sea-green flood. The jaws of the gorge seem barely rent asunder sufficiently to allow the stream to pass. The space cut out for the road between the torrent and the mountain precipice is occupied by a gateway, a pointed arch, faced by a modern and less picturesque one. It originally served for defence, and marked the limit of the domain of the monastery or of the " Desert of St. Bruno," as it was styled. The bridge, the forge, the gateway, the river, and the precipices, combine to form a most romantic natural picture, which will gratify the artist's eye, and has often employed the pencil. Within this grand portal the sides of the defile, up which the rough mule path is carried, are rocks and precipices of limestone many hundred feet high; but their savageness is subdued by the dense foliage which lines them, so that it is a ride through a forest the whole way. The varied combinations of rock, tree, and river, — of rocks at a vast height overhead, inclining over the tree tops and the wayfarer, — of the torrent foaming and rushing in the depths below, now spanned by a bridge, now studded by saw-mills, its constant roar, as it frets and worms its way, indicating its presence, even when lost to view by the bends of the gorge or the intervention of rocks and trees, — and the varied forms and tints of the foliage especially in autumn, — redeem the defile from all monotony. The road, though narrow, must have cost the monks much, and could only have been executed in a long time, and with great labour, being cut out of the rock great part of the way. Since the Revolution, however, which ruined the monks, it has gone to decay also, and in places is now barely passable, intersected by holes in which you might bury a mule, filled with mud, in which your animal plunges knee-deep. In places the torrents from the mountains have adopted it as their bed; in others it is no better than a steep staircase of bare rock. Owing to the badness of the road, no wheeled cart can pass, and the timber cut in the surrounding forests, and sawn into planks in the mills on the Guiers, is transported down the valley slung with ropes by the middle to the sides of mules. The deals thus nicely poised "traverse" like the needle of a compass, and at every movement of the animal perform segments of circles sweeping the road, and all that is upon it. It is by no means agreeable to meet a train of beasts so laden, with a precipice on one side of the narrow path, and a wall of rock on the other; nor are the huge sacks of charcoal more pleasant to encounter, as they at least leave their marks on the clothes, if they do not push you down the abyss, as the loaded animal brushes past. About half way up, the path is carried by a narrow bridge, destitute of parapet, across the Guiers to its rt. bank, and after a very severe ascent it reaches a second gateway, jammed in as it were between the precipice and an obelisk of limestone (pain de sucre), beyond which, in former times, no female could pass, — such was the rigid regulation of St. Bruno. A guard of soldiers was anciently posted here to keep the pass. The mountains here separate, and from the height you look down upon their sloping sides covered with nearly unbroken forest, stretching over several minor valleys. The path, quitting the defile, turns to the l., still through woods but slightly thinned, though the charcoal-burners are habitually settled in them. At the end of a ride of 1¼ hour, the traveller reaches La Grande Chartreuse, the Escurial of Dauphiné, seated at a height of 1210 met. (4268 ft.) above the sea, shrouded in umbrageous woods, with only small patches of meadow and little or no level ground about it, being quite hemmed in by wooded heights. The position is not grand, but solitary, desolate, and monotonous, from the confined prospect. The convent is a huge unpicturesque pile, having neither age nor architecture to recommend it, since, owing to repeated conflagrations, which destroyed 6 or 8 previous buildings, very little of it is older than the 17th century. Externally, its tent-like roofs of slate, higher than the body of the building which they cover, are its most conspicuous feature. Various straggling outhouses surround the main edifice: one is a cowhouse, another the infirmary, and one tenement is now set apart for females, who, though no longer restricted to the limits of the gateway, are not permitted to set foot in the convent itself. Male visiters are received by one of the fathers, called père procureur, who is absolved from the obligation of silence, and conducted along its cold corridors, one of which is 660 ft. long, and includes part of a Gothic cloister, perhaps of the 15th century, to the burial-ground, a simple inclosure without tombstones. The graves of the generals of the order alone were formerly marked by stone crosses, but these were destroyed at the Revolution. When one of the monks dies, a cross of lath is set up over his head; but it soon disappears. Each father has a small habitation and garden to himself, in which a crucifix and a skull invite him to prayer and the contemplation of death. The cells are lined with plain deals, and furnished with bookshelves. The chapel is a lofty apartment, quite plain, in which service is performed by night and day. The chapter-house has lately been painted with portraits of the generals of the order, of no great merit, and contains a marble statue of St. Bruno. The number of monks (pères) is now reduced to 33, who are dressed in white cloth, and 18 servitors (frères), clad in brown. By the rule of the order, the members were originally prohibited from speaking except on Sundays and fêtes; but this seems now not rigidly enforced. On certain days the monks walk abroad, and ascend in company to the chapel of St. Bruno: this they call "le Spaciment," and they afterwards dine together in the refectory: on other occasions they eat alone, excepting on fête days. Previous to 1789, the monks were owners of St. Laurent du Pont and of many other villages; their tenants were well off, the ground well tilled, and they gave away much in charity. They were excellent landlords, managing their estates prudently, and were just to their tenants. The convent was stripped of its vast possessions at the Revolution, and escaped being sold only because no purchaser could be found for it; but the woods around, forfeited at that time, still belong to the government, and all that remains to the monks is a garden, and the right of cutting wood in the forest, and of pasturage for their cows, of which they have about 50. They depend much upon charity, and it is customary for strangers who visit the convent to make a small donation to the alms-box, and, if they remain for the night, to pay for board and lodging. Male visitors are entertained with the humble fare of the convent, eggs, fish, and vegetables, and are lodged in a little cell provided with a small bed.

About 1½ m. higher up the mountain is the Chapelle de St. Bruno, where the founder of the order, descended from an opulent family at Cologne, established himself, 1084, having resolved to abandon the world. He retired to this spot, pointed out to him by Hugues, Bishop of Grenoble, as a desert quite beyond the haunts of man, and named, from a neighbouring hamlet, Cartuse, or Chartreuse, whence the order derived its name. Bruno lived in a cave or cleft of the rock, which is pointed out still higher up, and left no written rule for his order; that was compiled 44 years after his death by Dom Guignes.

At a less elevation than St. Bruno's is the chapel of the Virgin.

From Le Grand Som (sommet), the highest neighbouring cliff or peak, many hundred ft. above the convent, marked by a crucifix, an extensive view may be obtained, including part of the Lac de Bourget, on the side of Savoy.

There is only one other outlet from this upland valley, besides the road to St. Laurent du Pont. It is a path leading to the small hamlet of St. Pierre de Chartreuse, and Sapey, 3310 ft. above the sea level. It is much shorter than the other, and Grenoble may be reached by it in 3 or 4 hours. From the summit of the heights, as you descend towards that city, a beautiful view is obtained of the Vale of Gresivaudan (see R. 132. p. 500.).

The foundation of the Grande Chartreuse by Saint Bruno is attributed, in the legendary histories of him, to the effect produced on him by the apparition after death of a learned doctor of Paris, who, as the funeral procession was proceeding to the place of burial, burst from his coffin, exclaiming, "I am accused by the just judgment of God." This occurrence sank so deeply on St. Bruno's mind that he, with 6 friends, determined to quit the world, and retire into the wilderness. At first his only habitation was in the clefts of the rock, as the spot was inhabited at that time only by wild beasts. The first cells were higher up than the present convent, near the chapel of St. Bruno. These mere huts were swept away by an avalanche. The first convent, on the actual site of the present one, was built of wood by the 5th Prior, Guignet, who died 1137. He first committed to writing the rules of the order, one of which runs thus: — "Nous ne permettons jamais aux femmes d'entrer dans notre enceinte; car nous savons que ni le sage, ni le prophète, ni le juge, ni l'hôte de Dieu, ni ses enfans, ni même le premier modèle sorti de ses mains, n'ont pu échapper aux caresses ou aux tromperies des femmes. Qu'on se rappelle Salomon, David, Samson, Loth, et ceux qui ont pris les femmes qu'ils avoient choisies, et Adam lui-même; et qu'on sache bien que l'homme ne peut cacher du feu dans son sein sans que ses vêtemens soient embrasés, ni marcher sur des charbons ardents sans se brûler la plante des pieds."

Between Voreppe and Grenoble is, perhaps, the most picturesque portion of the Vale of Grésivaudan; the valley is here bounded by mountains precipitous as well as lofty. The road winds under such a one near the village of La Buisserade, which is particularly imposing. Under the dark woods and heights on the opposite bank lies Sassenage, and near this the river Drac pours itself into the Isère.

Little is seen of Grenoble, at a distance, in approaching from this side. A tall mountain buttress, nearly precipitous, projects forward to the Isère, leaving barely space for the road at its foot and hides the town from view. This shoulder of rock has been recently studded with fortifications, rising one above another nearly to the clouds, 918 ft. above the river. They have taken 10 years to construct; the natural strength of the height having been increased by blasting and scarping the rock with gunpowder. The position of this fortress, the citadel of Grenoble, at an angle in the valley where the Isère makes a bend, and opposite the opening of the Vale of the Drac, gives it the command of these valleys, which would be swept by its guns. The chief work is the crowning battery, to defend the place in the rear, where it is surmounted by the superior heights of the Mont Rachet. It is called La Bastille from an old feudal castle, a bit of which remains in the midst of modern works. It is worth while to ascend the hill of the bastille, the Ehrenbreitstein of the Isère, for the sake of the view. It embraces the town of Grenoble at your feet, laid open as on a plan, surrounded by its stellated ramparts on a flat and fertile tongue of land watered by canals, bounded on one side by the Isère and by the Drac on the other. The courses of both rivers may be traced from their junction upwards; that of the Isère is very winding, and its valley is terminated by the snowy mass of Mont Blanc. In front stretches the straight road leading to Vizille, and pointing to the mouth of the valley of the Romanche, bounded by mountains of very picturesque outline.

Permission to enter the fortress must be obtained from the commandant.

At the foot of the rock crowned by the bastille, stands the narrow suburb of St. Laurent, wedged in between precipices and the river. One side of its confined street has recently been pulled down and converted into a cheerful quay.

St. Laurent occupies the site of the original Gaulish town, called Cularo, mentioned in the letters of Plancus to Cicero; it changed its name, out o compliment to the Emperor Gratian, into that of Gratianopolis, whence Grenoble.

A handsome stone bridge, and a suspension wire bridge, replacing an old one of wood, connect this suburb with

14 GRENOBLE.—Inns: H. des Trois Dauphins, Rue Montorge; good, but not very clean, and somewhat dear; excellent table-d'hôte at 3 fr.; breakfast à-la-fourchette, 2 fr. In this house Napoleon lodged on his return from Elba: the room he occupied remains nearly in the same state: — H. des Ambassadeurs; "very good: — bread excellent." — F. R. K.

Grenoble, formerly capital of Dauphiné, and now of the Dept. of the Isère, is a fortified city of 28,967 inhabitants, pleasingly situated on the Isère, in a basin of great fertility and beauty, surrounded by high mountains, within which the Romanche and the Drac unite with the Isère, joining it a little below Grenoble. The full and rapid flood of the Isère, which is here confined within handsome quays, lined with fine houses, contributes much to the beauty of the town. Grenoble has been much improved and enlarged of late, and it is proposed to extend it considerably, and reconstruct the fortifications around it, so as to enclose a much larger space of ground. It has scarcely any fine public building: its churches are not remarkable: the Cathedral is a heavy mixture of ancient and modern masonry, having been ravaged and almost destroyed in the 16th century by the ferocious Baron des Adrets, who also destroyed, in the church of St. André, the monuments of the Dauphins.

One of the most pleasing features of the town is its Public Garden, on the l. bank of the Isère, shaded with umbrageous trees, planted with flowers, and set out with orange trees in pots. It was originally laid out by the Duc de Lesdiguières, and attached to his palace, now the préfecture.

In the midst of the neighbouring Place St. André is a bronze colossal statue of Bayard, the "chevalier sans peur et sans reproche," who was born in the valley of the Isère, and buried in the neighbouring church of the Minimes, (?) some say in the cathedral, where there is an inscription to his memory. It is meant to represent him in the moment of death, mortally wounded, kissing the cross formed by the hilt of his sword, but it is theatrical, and unworthy of the hero. It stands opposite the Palais de Justice, originally the palace of the dauphin, the most interesting old building in the town, retaining a Gothic oriel, and other portions in the style of the Renaissance. The Place Grenette is the largest open space in the town: in it are the chief cafés and diligence offices.

Attached to the College is a Museum, in which may be seen some of the old busts of the dauphins removed from their palace. Here is a large collection of paintings, mostly mediocre: the best seem to be a portrait by Philip de Champagne of Jean Devergier de Hauranne; a Venetian in Velvet, by Tintoret, (?); the entry of the Emperor Sigismond into Mantua; a sketch by J. Romano; Pope Julius II. do. (?).; St. Gregory, with Prudence and Force, by Rubens, (or one of his school). Here are 2 bronze lions of Byzantine art, brought from an abbey at St. Marcellin.

In the cabinet of natural history may be seen specimens of the minerals of Dauphiné, — its huge rock crystals, 2 feet long and 1 foot broad, its axinite, anatase, &c. with silver ore from Allemont, and gold from La Gardette, both mines, near Bourg d'Oysans, no longer worked: but the collection is dirty and ill-arranged. Here are stuffed specimens of the wild animals from the neighbouring Alps, the bear and wolf.

The library contains some books brought from the Grande Chartreuse; also, portraits of some of the celebrities of Grenoble, Vaucanson, the mechanician, and Dolomieu, with busts of Mably and Condillac.

Diligences daily (4 or 5), to Lyons; to Vienne; to Valence; to Chamberry (2); to Marseilles, by Sisteron; to Gap; to St. Laurent; to Bourg d'Oysans.

Though Grenoble itself is deficient in objects of curiosity, the country around has great beauty, and many interesting excursions may be made from it: the chief of these are,

1. To the Grande Chartreuse described at p. 494. There are two ways, either a. by Voreppe (p. 494.) and St. Laurent du Pont, practicable as far as that place in carriages, and traversed by a daily diligence in summer, by which one can go in the morning, and return in the evening; or b. By Sapey, a mule path, the shorter of the two, by which the convent may be reached in 4 hours. The most interesting part of the excursion, however, is the wooded gorge on the other road between St. Laurent du Pont and the convent.

2. To Sassenage, a beautifully situated village on the opposite side of the Drac, in the midst of thick woods, and falling waters, and fine pasturages, producing an excellent cheese, resembling that of Roquefort. The distance is about 5 m.: a one-horse carriage may be hired in Grenoble to go and return for 5 francs. It is a pleasant drive. A turning to the rt. leads out of La Cours, the long avenue extending from Grenoble to Vizille, and conducts you to the iron suspension bridge over the Drac. The river is here retained within stout dykes, originally the work of Lesdiguières; the plain is intersected with canals for the sake of irrigation. A small streamlet, a tributary of the Furon, which traverses the valley of Sassenage, bursts out of a hole in the limestone mountain above the village. The rock is pierced by several small caves, rather difficult of access.

3. Château Bayard, the birth-place of the model of French chivalry, is about 27 m. up the valley of the Isère, on the left bank. (See Route 132.).

4. Six m. from Grenoble, at the mouth of the gorge of the Sonnant, is the fine feudal castle Uriage; and near it mineral baths, with a large hotel.

5. La Tour St. Venin, on the hill of Parisot, on the l. bank of the Drac, classed among the wonders of Dauphiné, from a vulgar belief that no poisonous reptiles can live on it, is a fine point of view, 4 or 5 m. from Grenoble, commanding the junction of the valleys of Isère and Drac. It appears to have been a chapel or hermitage, attached to a castle now swept away, dedicated to St. Verin; and that a misprint or mispronunciation gave rise to the present name, and to the vulgar fable.

The staple manufacture of Grenoble is that of leather gloves: it is the most considerable in France. They are made of the skins of kid; the best sorts of which are obtained from Annonay, of chamois (beaver) and of lamb. Much leather also comes from Romans and Milhau. The gloves are chiefly sewed by the hand, by women, between 4000 and 5000 being employed, in and about the town, in cutting out and sewing.

Grenoble was the first place which openly received Napoleon on his return from Elba. After having been joined at La Mure by the troops sent out against him (see p. 502.), and still nearer at hand by Labedoyère, he approached the walls, which were strongly guarded by troops and cannon. Although the garrison dared not disobey their commandant by opening the gates, yet not a shot was fired on him; he was permitted to come up to the gates, and direct against them a howitzer to blow them open. Once within the walls he was received both by citizens and soldiers with the utmost enthusiasm, and borne in triumph, amidst shouts of "Vive l'Empereur," to the Hôtel des Trois Dauphins. The Bourbonist governor was obliged to retire leaving him at the head of a force of 7000 men. Before the emperor retired to rest, the gates of the Porte de Bonne, which he had been obliged to burst open, were unhinged and brought before his windows by the young men of the town, instead of the keys, of which they could not obtain possession to present them to him.

ROUTE 132.

VALENCE ON THE RHONE TO GRENOBLE AND CHAMBERRY, THROUGH THE VALLEY OF GRESIVAUDAN.

147 kilom. = 92 Eng. m.

Diligence daily in 11 hours.

The ascent of the valley of the Isère is a most agreeable journey, the country being alike remarkable for its beauty and fertility. The river is spanned by 12 or 15 iron wire suspension bridges erected for the most part within a few years. Our road crosses it at Bourg du Pèage, by a stone bridge, connecting that place with 18 Romans (Inn: Coupe d' Or?), a thriving town of 9972 inhab., in a picturesque situation, still partly surrounded by ramparts and flanking towers, one of which leans considerably out of the perpendicular. The church of St. Antoine is said to be a curious Gothic edifice.

At this place the last dauphin, or native prince of Dauphiné, Humbert II., having lost his only son, who leaped from his nurse's arms out of a window of the castle of Mazard into the Isère, and was drowned, signed his abdication, 1349, by which he resigned his domains to Philippe de Valois, on condition that they should be an apanage of the heir to the French crown, and that he should bear the title of Dauphin.

18 Fauries in the Dept. de l'Isère.

At la Sône, where the Isère is crossed by a wire bridge, is an old castle, now turned into a silk mill, part of the machinery for which was made by Vaucanson, who was a native of Dauphiné.

14 St. Marcellin.—Inn, Petit Paris, not good.

This little town of about 2700 inhab. is situated near the Isère. On the height above it, called Mont Surjeu, is a fine terrace walk, commanding one of the best views of the valley.

11 L'Allegrerie.

From the top of the descent to Tullins, commencing at the inn of Morette, a beautiful view opens out over the valley of the Isère, and the serpentine windings of the river, backed by the chain of Alps, and by the Grand Som, which surmounts the Grande Chartreuse, in front. The charms of the landscape, the diversified nature of the ground, the variety of crops, the number and denseness of the trees, and the luxuriant productiveness of the valley, one of the very finest and richest in France, appear to be constantly increasing as far as 11 Tullins (Inn, La Poste), a town of 3500 inhabitants, only remarkable for its situation in a spot teeming with fertility, so as to give rise to the saying "Si le Dauphiné étoit un mouton Tullins en serait le rognon." This is a great market for hemp grown in the vicinity.

The stream of the Fure, crossed a little beyond Tullins, is studded with iron forges.

At Moirans, a town of 2500 inhab., we enter the high road to Lyons (R. 131. p. 493.), and the valley of Grésivaudan at 13 Voreppe, which, with the excursion thence to the Grande Chartreuse, and the remainder of the route to 14 GRENOBLE, is described in Route 131. p. 493. 497.

There are two roads up the valley of the Isère above Grenoble.

a. On the rt. bank of the river is the post road, and the shortest way to Chamberry. It is carried along a sort of terrace at the roots of the mountains, which rise abruptly towards the Grande Chartreuse. The bridle road thither turns off to the l. by Sapey at Montbonot, (p. 496.). The lower slopes are sprinkled with the country seats of the Grenoblois.

20 Lumbin.

On the opposite side of the Isère rise the ruins of Château Bayard.

A little farther on, our road passes on the rt. Fort Barraux, commanding it and the passage up and down the valley; it was built by Charles Emmanuel Duke of Savoy, in the presence of a French army, commanded by Lesdiguières. That general, on being reproved by Henri IV. for his inertness in allowing this to proceed, replied, "Your Majesty has need of a fortress on the side of Savoy, to hold in check that of Montmeillant; and since the duke is willing to undertake the expense, we may as well permit it, and as soon as it is properly furnished with cannon and provision I undertake to capture it;" and he kept his word, surprising the fort by moonlight, March 13. 1598. It was afterwards strengthened by Vauban. It commands a charming view from its elevated position. The country hereabouts is enchanting.

19 Chapareillan. Here is the French custom-house.

Hence to Chamberry, described in the HANDBOOK FOR SWITZERLAND, is 15 kilom.

b. The road on the l. bank of the Isère is interesting and picturesque; but is not furnished with post-horses.

At St. Domène there is a wire suspension-bridge over the Isère: others have recently been erected at Brignon and La Gache.

At Tencin, which is about half-way, the traveller, while his horses rest, may explore a pretty shady glen, traversed by a gushing stream, leaping in a miniature fall down the rocks.

Goncelin. A road strikes off to the rt. from hence to the iron mines and works of Allevard, 6 m. distant.

About 27 m. from Grenoble stands Château Bayard; a foot-path leads up to it from the church of Grignan.

Its remains are situated on a height which commands the road, and a fine view of the beautiful valley from its terraces. In the mouldering turrets and shattered walls there is but little beauty, but as the birth-place of the "Chevalier sans Peur et sans Reproche," they possess great interest. A gateway with the two flanking towers is the part best preserved. The walls of the castle are, in some places, 6 feet thick. The situation of the room in which Bayard was born (1476) is pointed out by those who show the place, but without authority for what they state. Nearly opposite, beyond the Isère, is the modern fort Barraux. The conspicuous mountain of La Tuille, remarkable for the contortions of the strata in its limestone precipices, appears to close the valley at its upper end.

Pontecharra, the frontier town of France, is about a mile distant. (Inns very dirty and uncomfortable.) Near this, Lesdiguières, marshal of France, with a force not exceeding 5700, beat the Savoyard army, 14,000 strong, in 1591.

Before a hired carriage can cross the frontier, it is necessary that the driver procure from the douaniers a permit, termed in French, caution, in Savoyard, Bolla, or Bolletone. It is a paper containing a description of the horse and carriage, which enables them to pass and repass without paying duty.

ROUTE 134.

GRENOBLE TO MARSEILLES BY GAP AND SISTERON. PROTESTANT VALLEYS OF DAUPHINE.

171 kilom. = 106½ Eng. m.

A courier goes daily to Gap in 14 hours taking passengers: — also a diligence.

This is a very hilly and more circuitous way to Marseilles than the new road by La Croix Haute. (Route 135.)

The road on quitting Grenoble is carried within an avenue of trees across the plain of the Drac, at a short distance from its rt. bank, in a straight line from the Porte de la Graille, as far as Claix, where there is a fine bridge of a single arch, built on dry land by Lesdiguières, who afterwards turned the course of the river below it. Here the new road by Croix Haute crosses the river while ours, turning to the l. along high dykes, passes near the junction of the rivers, the Grèze on the l., and the Romanche on the rt., with the Drac. We here bid adieu for the present to the Drac, and follow up its tributary the Romanche as far as 18 Vizille (Inns wretched), an ancient town of 2750 inhab., on the rt. bank of the Romanche, carrying on some manufactures of cotton-spinning, calico-weaving, &c. chiefly founded by the Périer family, one of whom was the French minister Casimir Périer.

The château, partly destroyed by fire 1825, was built, between 1611 and 1620, by Lesdiguières, the Protestant commander, and governor of Dauphiné under Henri IV., "ce fin reynard," as the Duke of Savoy called him, who compelled the peasants on his estate to contribute their unpaid labour in constructing it, comformably with the old tax called Corvée. In 1788 the Estates of Dauphiné, assembled by Louis XVI., to appease the discontent and outcries of the people of the province, met in this building, and here prepared the bold remonstrance against aristocratic privileges, and in favour of popular representation by the assembly of the Tiers Etat, which served as a signal for the Revolution. This event occurred a year before the opening of the States General at Versailles; Barnave and Mounier were the leading orators. The actual building is now a calico and silk-printing work, and belongs to the family Périer. One apartment is preserved as it was in the time of Lesdiguières, and a bronze bas-relief of him, on horseback, still exists.

The route to Briançon and the Mont Genèvre, across the grand mountains of Bourg d'Oysans, here turns to the l. (R. 137.)

The road to Gap crosses the Romanche beyond Vizille, and proceeds by a very steep ascent, requiring 2 hours to surmount. The view from its slope over Vizille and the Romanche, and over an intervening hilly ridge to Grenoble and the valley of the Isère, is very fine.

7 Lafrey.

On the l. of the road 3 small lakes la Motte, L'Aveillan, and Pierre Châtel, are passed in succession. Napoleon on his way from Elba, with little more than 200 men, was encountered, a little to the S. of Lafrey, by a battalion despatched by the governor of Grenoble, and drawn up across the road to intercept his march, between the hill on one side, and the stream which runs out of the lake on the other. Napoleon, on coming in sight of them, turned off into a meadow on the rt., and sent forward Bertrand to parley with the commanding officer and soldiers opposed to him. The two parties remained thus an hour in view of each other, when Napoleon, advancing to the battalion, opened his grey riding-coat, and baring his breast, so as to show the Star of the Legion of Honour, exclaimed, "Si quelqu'un de vous veut tuer son Empereur, qu'il tire." They were most of them soldiers of his own armies, and their commanding officer had served under him in Egypt. The command to "fire" was unheeded by them; the ranks were broken, and the old veterans crowded around him; some, embracing his knees, swore never to quit him; many burst into tears, while the air resounded with the cry of "Vive l'Empereur!" On his way hence to Grenoble, at the head of this reinforcement, he was met by the regiment of Labedoyère, who at once joined his ranks, their colonel at their head.

After leaving behind the 3 lakes, some coal mines are passed on the rt.; they are worked to a considerable extent, and produce the species of coal called anthracite (charbon-à-pierre).

14 La Mure (Inn, Poste, dear), an industrious town, on the top of a high hill, visible from afar; it abounds in mean cabarets and cafés; the chief occupation of the people is nail making.

A long-continued, and very circuitous descent leads into the valley of the Drac; the road, however, does not approach it closely, but skirts the shattered and deep gorges of its tributaries until a favourable opportunity occurs for crossing them. It is a hilly stage to 11 Souchons. The mountains of the district are mostly of the Jura limestone formation, and are readily disintegrated by the washing of the rivers, and by the weather. One very conspicuous conical summit rising on the W. is called the Mont Aiguille, or Mont Inaccessible, and was regarded as one of the wonders of Dauphiné. It is 6562 ft. above the sea level. Another mountain, still higher, called L'Obieux, rises above

14 Corps; no good inns.

On the opposite (l.) bank of the Drac are the shapeless and uninteresting ruins of the château Lesdiguières, built by the Constable as a resting place after death, for he never inhabited it living. His body, transferred hither from Italy, was torn up at the Revolution, and his monument removed to Gap.

We enter the Department of the Hautes Alpes, and cross the Drac, before reaching the relay of 14 Guinguette de Boyer.

St. Bonnet, on the rt. bank of the Drac, was the birth-place of Lesdiguières, 1543.

The upper part of the valley of the Drac, which we now leave on the l., is called Champsaur (campus aureus); it is fertile and picturesque, and a large portion of its inhabitants are Protestants. They formed part of the flock of Felix Neff, who often resided at St. Laurent. This valley communicates at its upper extremity, by the difficult pass of the Col d'Orcières, with the village of Dormilleuse, and the sterile and dreary Val Fressinière (Route 139.)

10 Brutinel. In this stage, the high chain which separates the vale of the Drac from that in which Gap is situated is crossed by a long and tedious ascent, requiring 2 hours to surmount.

14 Gap. — Inns: H. du Nord: — De Provence; only tolerable.

This little mountain capital, and the chef lieu of the Department Hautes Alpes, with 7854 inhabitants, has little to detain the traveller, since it possesses no objects of curiosity, but is pleasingly situated, approached by avenues of walnuts, and surrounded by slopes on which the vine still flourishes, although the height above the sea amounts to 2424 ft. In the préfecture, a modern building, is deposited the monument of the Duc de Lesdiguières, Francois de Bonne, who, after having been the successful leader and defender of the Protestants in Dauphiné, abjured his faith for the rank of Constable of France, imitating, in his apostacy, the example of his master Henri IV. The monument was originally erected over his grave, in his own castle on the Drac, the spot chosen by himself, but was torn thence by revolutionary spoilers. It is of little merit as a work of sculpture, and consists of a white marble effigy, stiffly reclining on his side, in armour.

Gap was the ancient Vapincum: it was burnt, 1692, by Victor Amadeus of Savoy.

William Farel, the Reformer, was born in the hamlet of Tareau, just outside of Gap: his first sermon was preached in the mill of Buree, but his followers soon drove out the Roman Catholics from Gap, and he took possession of the pulpit of St. Colomb.

The road from Gap to Briançon is given in R. 139. That to Marseilles descends a tributary valley of the Durance, and reaches the borders of that turbulent river at 17 La Saulce: passing previously, a little on the l., the ruined castle of Tallard, once the property of the family d'Auriac, now of that of Béranger: the ruins are extensive and picturesque.

17 Rourebeau.

The considerable river Buech is crossed before entering 14 Sisteron (Inn, H. du Bras, d'Or, or Vers d'Or, a poor sort of inn). This antiquated fortress, which once commanded the passage from Dauphiné into Provence, is composed of narrow dirty streets, cooped up within useless ramparts. It is surrounded by a citadelle on a rock, once the prison of Casimir, brother of Ladislaus VII. of Poland; but so many attempts were made by his friends for his rescue that he was removed to Vincennes. Sisteron has nothing remarkable but its picturesque exterior, and its position in a sort of defile of the Durance, here hemmed in by cliffs, and worthy of the pencil of the artist.

Here the new road to Grenoble by La Croix Haute (Route 135.), falls into our route.

15 Peyruis.

12 Brillane. The Durance, throughout the greater part of its course, is nothing better than a large devastating torrent, at no time a picturesque object, and in summer so far diminished as to be incapable of covering its bed, so that, though its volume is always considerable, its shrunken rivulets of water seem nearly lost amidst beds of gravel and rolled stones, so broad as in places to appear like a dried lake bed.

15 Manosque (Inns: Poste, fair:—Petit Versailles), is a flourishing little town, with double the population of Digne, the chef lieu of the Department Basses Alpes. The olive is cultivated to a considerable extent in its vicinity.

20 Mirabeau. About ½ m. from the post house, on a height, is the ruined château, flanked by round towers, of the family of the celebrated leader and orator of the French Revolution. He frequently resided here in his early years, but was not born here. It is flanked by 4 round towers; and a group of poor houses form a hamlet about its base.

We are now within the limits of scorched and dreary Provence (Sect. VI.). About a mile from the post house the Durance, hemmed in between high cliffs, is spanned by a suspension bridge, by which the road is transferred to its l. bank, and is carried along it partly on terraces.

10 Peyrolles.

The road begins to ascend near Meyrargues, and a little beyond the village, which is surmounted by a stately castle, the remains of an ancient aqueduct of brick, designed by the Romans it is said (?), to convey the water of the Durance to Aix, are passed. From the top of the hill which succeeds, the eye wanders for many miles down the vale of the Durance, traversed by two more suspension bridges in this part of its course.

The new and wonderful Canal which is to supply Marseilles with water is to commence on the Durance, near the suspension bridge of Pertuis. See page 486.

A considerable tract of well cultivated table land is traversed, commanding a view of Mont St. Victoire on the E. (see p. 487.), before descending the long hill which leads into 20 Aix.

29 Marseilles. } in Route 128.

ROUTE 135.

GRENOBLE TO MARSEILLES, BY THE CROIX HAUTE.

This road was opened 1841, and is excellent, but neither post-masters, postilions, nor post-horses appeared, in the month of September in that year, to understand their business; and as there are many precipices, and few parapet walls, the journey is sometimes attended with danger. An English gentleman, with his lady and daughter, the first English party, in a private carriage, who attempted this route, narrowly escaped overturning more than once, had the panels of their carriage and parts of the harness broken by unruly horses, and owing to the carelessness of drunken postilions, and, finally, failed in obtaining any redress or compensation from the French postmaster-general, partly owing to the "enormous lying" of the parties implicated, viz., the post-master and his servants. No one, therefore, should attempt this road without being prepared to rough it, and without having engaged post-horses to be in readiness, at a fixed time, a day or two beforehand.

There is no inn at all fit to sleep in before reaching Sisteron, and there only a very bad one.

The relays, after crossing the plain of the Drac, below Vizille (R. 134.), are Vif.

Monestier.

The country near Grenoble is very beautiful; woods of walnut and chestnut abound; in the distance snowy peaks appear.

Clelles.

Lallez.

Luz, or Croix Haute. In approaching Croix Haute the mountains assume a very wild and desolate appearance, and there is scarcely any vegetation.

Lafoue.

Aspres les Vignes.

Serres.

Larogne. No inn but a wretched cabaret.

Sisteron. — Inn: H. du Vers d'Or; a poor kind of inn (in Route 135.).

MARSEILLES. (R. 128.)

ROUTE 137.

GRENOBLE TO BRIANÇON BY BOURG D'OYSANS AND THE COL DE LAUTERET, AND BY THE MONT GENÈVRE TO SUSA. — EXCURSION UP THE VAL ST. CHRISTOPHE.

To Briançon is about 50 Eng. m.

This magnificent carriage road, begun by Napoleon in 1804, has been many years in progress, under the direction of the meritorious engineer of Mont Cenis, M. Dausse, but owing to the extent and difficulty of the works to be executed, will, probably, not be completed until 1844–5. It is, however, perfect and fit for carriages as far as Bourg d'Oysans, between which place and Grenoble diligences run daily; and is practicable for the whole distance, with a light carriage, when the ground is clear of snow. The accommodation on the way, as yet, is bad. "It abounds with some of the finest scenes in the Alps." As far as Vizille the road is the same as R. 134., but, instead of crossing the Romanche, it adheres to its rt. bank, and enters a narrow and finely-wooded glen, threaded by the river for many miles, called Combe de Gavet.

In 1081 a landslip, or fall of a mountain, washed down by the fury of the torrents, formed such an accumulation of earth at the upper end of this defile as to dam up the river Romanche until it formed a lake, which covered the entire plain of Bourg d'Oysans, and rose to a height of 60 or 80 ft. It lasted for two centuries, until 1229, when the dyke burst, and the emancipated flood swept all before it, cultivated lands and villages, as far as the city of Grenoble, part of which it also destroyed.

At the upper end of the combe, where the valley opens out, the river Olle flows into the Romanche from the N.: a few miles up it are the iron foundries of Allemont, and the silver mine of Chalanche. At the head of the valley of Allemont are the Sept Laux, 7 small lakes, one of the "wonders" of Dauphiné, abounding in trout. By the Sept Laux a passage may be effected to Allevard in the valley of the Isère, p. 501.

Bourg d'Oysans, 7½ leagues, (Inns, very bad: Poste, civil: — Chez Manuel, (? Etoile), a town of 3052 inhabitants, possessing a manufacture of cotton.

"An interesting excursion may be made from Bourg d'Oysans to La Bérarde, in the upper part of the valley of St. Christophe, between 7 and 8 hours' walk from the Bourg. The only inn on the whole route is at the finely situated village of Venos, 2½ hours from Bourg d'Oysans, where there are tolerable quarters, but the traveller must carry his own provisions thither. St. Christophe is 2 hours above Venos, and La Bérarde lies at the foot of Mont Pelvoux, the highest mountain in France or in the S. Alps, its loftiest summit, the Point d'Arcines or des Ecrins, being 13,123 ft. above the sea level. The scenery of the whole valley, and especially at and above La Bérarde, may vie in grandeur with any in the Alps. The valley is less known than Chamouni was before the time of Wyndham and Pococke; but a day devoted to visiting it from Bourg d'Oysans will always be remembered with gratification by the lover of sublime scenery."

A coach starts every evening from Bourg d'Oysans for Grenoble. A char might be hired here, to cross the Lauteret to Briançon, for 18 or 20 fr. in 12 or 14 hours. About 3 m. above Bourg d'Oysans the plain terminates, and the Veneon, coming from the l., pours itself into the Romanche. Between these two streams rises the snowy Mont de Lans. The road is carried along a tremendous gorge called Les Infernets, on the N. side of this mountain, through which the Romanche forces its way, by terraces and tunnels cut out of the solid rocks. Two very long galleries have thus been formed for the passage of the road. The first of these, more than 234 yds. long, and very wide and high, is one of the finest works of the kind in the Alps.

The gorge of Infernets is succeeded by a sterile upland valley, strewn with rocks. The road is nearly completed, and fit for carriages, with the exception of some cuttings near the mouth of Les Infernets, as far as Le Dauphin (4 leagues) in a bare and dreary situation, with scarce a habitation around.

A little above this, on the l., is a fine waterfall, called Le Saut de la Pucelle.

Between Le Dauphin and la Grave a stupendous gorge is traversed by the Romanche, remarkable for the extraordinary grandeur and utter nakedness of the precipices of gneiss which form its sides. It is called La Combe de Malval. These precipices are the escarpments of vast mountains covered over with eternal snow and glaciers, which terminate at the edge of the cliff overhanging the combe; and numerous streams descend from them in falls across the road.

Several small torrents, after circulating among the upland pastures, called Prés de Paris, leap down from the N. brow of the gorge, in falls more than 300 ft. high. Beyond, the valley is strewn with blocks of gneiss, fallen from above, some of them as big as a house.

We pass from the Dept. d'Isère into that of the Hautes Alpes, about a m. before reaching the miserable village of La Grave, grandly situated on a projecting rock, backed on the S. by vast snowy heights. There is a small and tolerably clean cabaret at La Grave. The church is worth looking at, and the view from it is splendid. A long day's walk leads hence over the Col des Infernets, a wild and high but not difficult pass, to St. Jean Maurienne.

There is a grand scene a little short of Villars d'Arène, where the road is carried through a dark and deep defile, overhung by the precipices above, while the Romanche dashes down in a fine fall into the depths below.

Villars d'Arène, (4 leagues) another wretched village, is situated at the foot of the pass of the Lauteret, which the route now ascends, leaving on the rt. the Romanche, whose source is in an upland valley to the S., at the foot of the snowy Mont Pelvoux.

The Col of the Lauteret, which separates the waters of the Romanche from those of the Guisanne, is 6863 ft. above the sea level, about 500 ft. higher than the Mont Genèvre. Its summit is covered with perhaps the most beautiful pasturages in the Alps. Near the crest of the Col, which is not more than 50 yards broad, is an ancient Hospice (2 leagues) founded by Humbert II., Count of Dauphiné. The view from the summit is fine: the Montagne d'Oursine is a grand object on the S.W.: from the glacier at its base rises the Guisanne, while in that of Tabouchet, to the S., is one of the sources of the Romanche. The Mont Pelvoux from this point appears lower, because more distant.

A steep descent leads down the valley of the Guisanne by Le Lauzet and Le Casset, near the glacier of Lusciale, to Monestier (4 leagues), a town of 2500 inhab., has several indifferent Inns, 12 m. from Briançon, having in its neighbourhood hot sulphureous springs, used for baths, and so abundant that within a short distance of the source they serve to turn a mill. The valley around, and from hence to Briançon, is fertile, well cultivated, and studded with numerous villages; the upper slopes clothed with fir woods, while the view of the course of Guisanne, backed in the distance by Briançon and its extraordinary group of forts, piled one over the other, forms a magnificent scene. According to Brockedon the peak of the Monte Viso is visible in clear weather surmounting the Alps in the extreme back-ground.

From Monestier to Briançon (15 kilom.) the road is completed: and this part of the valley is remarkable for its populousness, there being not less than 22 villages between the foot of the Lauteret and 15 Briançon.— Inn, H. de la Paix, not very clean; but great civility and attention, with tolerable cuisine.

Briançon, a first-class fortress of great strength, a sort of Alpine Gibraltar, commanding the passage from Italy into France by the Mont Genèvre, is a most picturesque and imposing object at a distance. It stands at the meeting of 3 valleys, at the foot of an isolated and escarped rock, whose summit is crowned by the Fort du Château, so named from an old castle, now demolished. Many of the streets of the town are so highly inclined that they are impassable for vehicles, and the carriage road makes a circuit, and enters it by a series of zigzags. All the heights around are converted into points of defence; fort rises over fort up to the very clouds, which frequently shroud from view the upper works. Where the position is not inaccessible, through natural precipices, it has been rendered so by artificial escarpments. The rivers Guisanne and Clairée, which unite beneath the walls of the town with the infant Durance, run in deep gullies, whose sides are precipices which form as it were natural ditches to the fortress. The principal works are on the l., or E., bank of the Clairée, whose deep and savage gorge is crossed by a bridge of a single bold arch, 130 ft. span, and 168 ft. above the water, constructed 1734. An excellent road leads, in zigzags, up the abrupt heights from this bridge to the different forts, which communicate with each other by subterraneous ways. The largest fort is called Les Trois Têtes, because it occupies a triple-headed crag; on a level with it is Fort Dauphin; 330 ft. higher, towards the Durance is Fort Randouillet, whose batteries are partly excavated in the rock: nearly 2000 ft. above this is the Donjon, and finally the Point du Jour, commanding all the other defences. The different points, or mammalons of rock on which these forts are built, all belong to the Mont Infernet, whose summit still supports the ruins of a fort built in 1814, at a height of 9350 ft. above the sea level. From its crest the Mont Pelvoux is a magnificent object, and the valley Des Prés or De Neuvache, down which pours the Clairée, and that leading up to the Mont Genèvre, are well seen. Permission to visit the forts may be obtained from the commandant in the town. If the weather be clear, it is worth while to ascend to Randouillet, on account of the view up the beautiful valley of Guisanne, studded with villages, and towards the Col de Lauteret (p. 507.), otherwise the traveller may content himself with seeing the Fort du Château. The fortifications of Briançon have been greatly strengthened of late, and the improvements are not yet (1842) completed.

In the town itself there is nothing to see. The Porte d'Embrun bears this inscription: "Aux braves Briançonnois, pour la conservation de cette ville, Louis Philippe reconnaissant;" alluding to the refusal of the inhabitants, in spite of the orders of the préfet, to deliver up the town, though defended by a weak garrison, to the Allies in 1815.

Briançon has 3455 inhabitants; it stands at an elevation of 4285 ft. above the sea level, and may be said to endure 7 months of winter. It has hitherto been cut off, in a manner, from the rest of the world, being accessible by only one carriage road from the side of Gap; the Sardinian government having refused to render the Mont Genèvre practicable for 4-wheeled carriages. The carriage-road, however, direct from Grenoble over the Lauteret, has been many years in progress, and may be finished in 1844-5. It is even now practicable in a light char.

It takes 12 or 14 hours to reach Bourg d'Oysans by this route, in its present state. A diligence goes daily to Embrun and Gap. (R. 139.)

The passage of the Mont Genèvre leads from Briançon to Susa, a day's journey with a one-horse char. The road leaves the Val des Prés on the l., traversing thick forests of fir, and at the end of about 2 leagues of ascent, by zigzags, reaches the summit of the pass at Bourg Mont Genèvre, a hamlet on a plain, 6476 ft. above the sea level, on which barley ripens. From this plain, at a short distance from each other, rise the Doira, which flows through the Po into the Adriatic and the Durance; hence the verses

> "Adieu ma sœur la Durance,
> Nous nous séparons sur ce mont;
> Tu vas ravager la Provence,
> Moi féconder le Piedmont."

An obelisk erected on the summit commemorates the construction of this road, under Napoleon.

This pass was crossed in 1494 by Charles VIII. of France with the army with which he invaded Italy, including several hundred pieces of artillery.

The descent into Piedmont lies through

Cesanne	2	leagues.
Oulx	2	—
Salabertrand	2	—
Fort Exilles	1	—

Susa (22 m. from Cesanne) described in the HAND-BOOKS FOR SWITZERLAND AND N. ITALY.

ROUTE 139.

GAP TO BRIANÇON, BY EMBRUN, AND EXCURSION INTO THE VAL DE QUEYRAS, VAL D'ARVIEUX, AND VAL FRESSINIÈRE.

88 kilom. = 54½ Eng. m. to Briançon.

A diligence (very slow) daily.

The valley above Gap is stony and dreary.

17 Chorges appears to have preserved the name of the ancient inhabitants of this district, the "Caturigæ."

After crossing a high ridge the road descends in a gradual sweep into the valley of the Durance, which it reaches at the foot of a precipitous mountain. The valley hereabouts is a scene of unmitigated desolation: the turbulent river rolls along a furious flood of dirty water, undermining the loose shaley rocks (? jura limestone) composing its sides, strewing the bottom with rubbish, and constantly forcing its banks. The road is frequently swept away by inundations, and for some distance is carried along temporary causeways. The Durance is crossed by a wooden bridge at 12 Savines, and again before reaching

11 Embrun.—Inn: the best is indifferent. Embrun (anciently Ebrodunum), an old-fashioned fortress, surrounded by loop-holed ramparts, overlooks the valley from the top of a singular platform or table of pudding-stone rock, escarped on the side facing the river, and separated by a ditch from the mountain behind it. The cathedral has a fine lofty Romanesque tower ornamented with circular arches, and a N. portal, whose round mouldings rest on pillars of the red marble of the country, the two outer ones being supported on rudely-carved lions. The W. end is chequered with slabs of yellow limestone and black shale. It has a tolerable wheel window, filled with stained glass. The interior is not otherwise remarkable; the roof is Pointed. Against the N. door is nailed a horse-shoe, said to have been thrown by the horse of Lesdiguières, the Protestant leader, which is reported to have stumbled and thrown its master in the porch as he was spurring on his steed to enter the church, and thus saved it from desecration. Such is the Romanist legend. The image of Notre Dame d'Embrun was held in great reverence by Louis XI., who, as Dauphin, resided long in Dauphiné. (See "Quentin Durward.")

Beside the cathedral stands the building formerly the archbishop's palace, now a barrack; and near it rises a curious tower of ancient masonry called Tour Brune.

The first church at Embrun is said to have been built by Constantine the Great. The line of its archbishops is traced back, uninterruptedly, to his time: they were made princes, and endowed with the sovereignty of a large part of Dauphiné by the emperor Conrad II. A portion of their archives, captured with the town by Lesdiguières in 1585, are now in the public library of Cambridge.

Embrun is a poor town of narrow dirty streets; the view from its ramparts is striking, but the mountains around are bare in the extreme.

Little occurs worthy of remark in pursuing the course of the Durance upwards, until, after crossing the river to its l. bank, we approach the very picturesque and strong fortress of Mont Dauphin, the key of the pass into Italy, standing conspicuous on an elevated platform of rock, appearing to close the mouth of the lateral valley of the Guil, which here enters the Durance from the N.E. It was fortified by Vauban, who constructed its bastions of the rough pink marble of Eygliers, a neighbouring village, and completely commands the 2 valleys, —presenting escarped precipices on either side, so as to be almost impregnable. Our road is carried under the base of the rock of pudding-stone, crowned by the fortress, 500 or 600 ft. above the river, and near it is the post-house.

17 Plan de Phazy.

The river Guil rises at the base of the Monte Viso, on the Piedmontese frontier; its valley, called Val de Queyras, consists chiefly of a series of narrow defiles, through which the river seems to have forced its passage.

About 1½ m. up, on its l. bank, is Guillestre, which was one of the stations for English prisoners during the war. Above this the valley is rent by an extraordinary fissure called gorge de Chapelue, bounded by precipices from 700 to 800 ft. high, described by Brockedon as "one of the finest in the Alps." Nearly 2 hours are required to traverse it. In places the rocks almost meet over-head, and the road crosses the depths, in which the Guil flows far below, from side to side, as the rocks present a shelf for its passage, but at times they are so completely precipitous that it is necessary to ascend the heights, and go over their summits. At the upper end of the defile, about 4 hours' walk from Mont Dauphin, is the castle of Queyras, an ancient feudal stronghold of the seigneurs of Chateau-Ville-Vieille, perched on the top of a monstrous rock, which seems to have been detached from the neighbouring peak in order to guard the passage. It is now converted into a military post, and is occupied by a company of infantry. A tolerable inn here, chez Bosi.

Two passes, the Col des Hayes and Col d'Isoard, lead N. over the mountains to Briançon.

In the remote valleys around Queyras, the Protestants are very numerous, especially in the Val d'Arvieux, reached by a rough road branching off on the l. about 1½ m. below Château Queyras; as well as in the Commune of Molines, and its hamlets, St. Veran, Pierre Grosse, and Fousillarde. They have churches at Arvieux, St. Veran, and Fousillarde, in all of which service is performed once in 3 weeks by a minister who resides for a week in each parish alternately.

Felix Neff's residence was at La Chalp in the Val d'Arvieux, above the village of that name; a foot-path runs thence over the mountains to Briançon. St. Veran, where he had also a small Protestant flock, is situated in another valley, 8 or 10 m. to the S. of Château Queyras, on the very verge of vegetation; it is the loftiest human habitation in France, 6692 feet above the sea level, and the nearest towards the snowy summits of the Viso. Neff said of it that it was "the highest, and consequently the most pious village in the Val Queyras."

About 2 m. above Queyras is Abries where the Guil bends to the S. E. towards the Monte Viso, whose unscaled peak forms a striking object amidst the wild and savage scenery of this upland valley, here contracted and strewn with rocks. It is very grand, and well worth exploring, not only on its own account, but because through the two passes issuing out over the mountains at its head most interesting excursions may be made into Piedmont.

a. The Col de la Croix leads from the village Ristolas and Monta (French custom-house) to the Protestant valleys of the Vaudois, and their capital la Tour.

b. The Col de Viso conducts from La Chalp, a hamlet 1½ m. above Monta, along the rt. bank of the Guil, by a path only practicable on foot, in 5 hours, from Abries to the summit of the Pass, 10,150 ft. above the sea level, whence the view over the valley of the Po and plains of Piedmont, comprising an horizon of 100 m., "is one of the most magnificent in the world."—B. The traveller may enter Italy by the Col de Viso, and return by La Tour and Col de la Croix: the routes are described in the HAND-BOOK for SWITZERLAND.)

From Mont Dauphin to Briançon the road constantly follows the course of the Durance, sometimes on a level with it, at others at an elevation of many hundred feet above it. The river runs for a long distance at the bottom of a deep gash, whose sides, rarely susceptible of cultivation, slope at a very high angle. About 6 m. above Mont Dauphin, near the village of La Roche, prettily situated beside a small lake, a long timber bridge crosses the Durance, and an abrupt shepherd's path, scaling the mountain, leads up into the Val Fressinière, the poor Alpine valley once blessed by the ministering care of Felix Neff, and which now serves as his last resting place. "The path creeps up the mountain in an oblique direction, and then over some rugged ground leads to a defile through which a torrent rushes, bordered on each side by groups of cottages, crossed by an Alpine bridge, below which is a cascade. This hamlet is Palons, and the torrent, called the Rimasse, is the guide which conducts to the Val Fressinière. There is no mistaking the way. The villages passed are Fressinière (whence the valley is named) (1 league), in a lovely fertile vale producing grain of several kinds and fruit trees: Violins (1 league); here is a Protestant church, built by Neff, to which a tower has lately been added: Minsas (2 m.). Then comes the toilsome, rough, and clambering path, through a country perfectly savage and appalling, to Dormilleuse (3 m., or 5 leagues from La Roche), a miserable village at the very foot of the glaciers, constructed like an eagle's nest upon the side of a mountain, the most repulsive, perhaps, of all the habitable spots of Europe. Nature is here stern and terrible, offering nothing to repay the traveller, but the satisfaction of planting his foot on the rock which has been hallowed as the asylum of Christians of whom the world was not worthy. It consists of a few poor detached huts, from which fresh air, comfort, and cleanliness are all banished; some without chimneys or glazed windows, others consisting of a mere miserable kitchen and stable, seldom cleaned out more than once a year, where the inhabitants spend the greater part of the winter along with their cattle, for the sake of the warmth. Their few sterile fields hang over precipices, and are partly covered with blocks of granite. In some seasons even rye will not ripen. Many of the pasturages are inaccessible to cattle, and scarcely safe for sheep. Yet in this gloomy spot did the virtuous Protestant pastor, Felix Neff, sit himself down, because his services seemed here to be most required, where he had every thing to teach, even to the planting of a potatoe." — Gilly's Memoir of Neff.

A mountain pass leads over the Col d' Orcière, at the head of the Val Fressinière, into the valley of Champsaur, traversed by the Drac. (R. 134.)

Near Palons are several caves in the rocks, which served the inhabitants in time of persecution as places of refuge and of worship, one of them is called Glesia (L'Eglise).

---

16 La Bessée. Near this a step or rise occurs in the valley, which seems barred by a high bank or natural dam. Up this the road toils in zigzags. A little above La Bessée, the ruins of an embattled wall are visible, running across the valley from either bank of the Durance to the summit of the heights commanding it on the rt. and l., evidently designed to close the passage up, and check the incursions of a people from the S.

Nearly opposite La Bessée to the N.W. opens out the Val Louise, which terminates in the glaciers and peaks of the Mont Pelvoux, whose top rises 13,440 ft. above the sea level. "The poor village called La Ville de Val Louise is the chief place. Its environs are very picturesque. The valley branches into two; that on the rt. leads to Mt. Pelvoux; through it 2 French engineers most nearly attained the summit, but not quite. By the other branch there is a difficult pass into the Val Godemar, called Col de Celar." — Pr. F.

Within this valley is a cavern called Baume des Vaudois, from a number of those unfortunate professors of an ancient faith who concealed themselves within it in 1488, carrying with them their children, and as much food as they could collect, relying on its inaccessible position, and the snows around, for their defence. When the officer despatched by Charles VIII. arrived with his soldiers in the valley none of its inhabitants were found; but at length tracing out their hiding-place, he commanded a great quantity of wood to be set fire to at the mouth of the cave to burn or smoke them out. "Some were slain in attempting to escape, others threw themselves headlong on the rocks below, others were smothered; there were afterwards found within the caverns 400 infants stifled in the arms of their dead mothers. It is believed as a certain fact that 3000 persons perished on that occasion in this valley." — Gilly's Mem. of Neff.

Above this the valley is more wooded, while low down little patches are cleared of stones to allow the grass to grow.

15 Briançon, in R. 137. p. 507.

SECTION VIII.

BURGUNDY. — FRANCHE COMTÉ.

ROUTE		PAGE
144	Paris to Dijon, by Troyes	513
145	Paris to Dijon, by Sens and Tonnerre	521
148	Dijon to Geneva, by Dôle	523
150	Dôle to Lausanne, by Pontarlier	524
152	Dijon to Châlons-sur-Saône, by Beaune and the Wine District of the Côte d'Or	525
155	Descent of the Haut Rhone. — Aix in Savoy to Lyons	528
156	Lyons to Geneva, by Nantua and Bellegarde	530
159	Lyons to Besançon, by Bourg and Lons-le-Saulnier	531

ROUTE 144.

PARIS TO DIJON, BY TROYES.

304 kilom. = 188½ Eng. m.

Malleposte (3 places) in 24 hours.

Diligences daily.

The road turns out of Route 106. beyond

7 Charenton.

13 Grosbois. The château here was the property of Monsieur, afterwards Louis XVIII.

8 Brie Comte Robert. The name of this little town comes from its situation in the district of Brie, an ancient dependance of the province of Champagne, and from Robert Comte de Dreux, and seigneur of Brie, its founder or benefactor.

The parish church is Gothic of the 13th century, and contains some ancient tombs (?).

15 Guignes.

Near this is the château La Grange, the residence of Lafayette, a moated mansion, whither he retired during the rule of Napoleon, occupying himself with agricultural pursuits; here he was visited by Fox.

8 Mormant.

11 Nangis. — Inns: Lion d'Or: — Sauvage. There is an ancient church and ruined castle here. (?)

10 Maison Rouge.

11 Provins. — Inn, Hôtel de la Fontaine. The ancient walls, flanked by watch towers, of this venerable but decayed town, enclose, besides the houses, a wide open space now occupied by gardens and vineyards. It lies between 2 hills, the old town on the highest ground, the new town on the lower slopes.

In the upper town, conspicuous far and wide, rises an ancient tower of great size and solid masonry, known as the Grosse Tour de César, though undoubtedly a work of the middle ages. It is square at the base, but in its upper story 4 turrets detach themselves from the centre, which becomes octagonal, and is connected by flying buttresses with the turrets. This building, containing 2 curious halls and dungeons, now serves as bell-tower to the neighbouring church of St. Quiriace, remarkable for its early date and plain massive architecture; it is surmounted in the centre by a cupola, and beneath is a curious crypt.

The church of St. Croix, much modernised, but supported in the interior by piers of primitive form, two of them twisted, and containing fine carved wood, and that of St. Ayoul, a simple nave without transepts or apse, in the Round style, may reward the notice of the antiquary.

Under various buildings in the high town run extensive cellars and caves, the uses of which are not explained; and two of the old gates still lead through the bastioned antique fortifications into the town.

The chapel of the hospital contains the monument in which was deposited the heart of Thiebault VII., Comte de Champagne, who founded here, 1050, an hospital for pilgrims.

Provins has for centuries been celebrated for roses, (commonly, but improperly, called Provence roses); and though the cultivation of them for purposes of commerce has now nearly ceased, they are still partially grown to make "conserve," and to colour bonbons. The Provins rose has a rich crimson hue, and is said to have been originally brought by the Crusaders from the Holy Land.

The two small rivers, the Durtin and Vouzie, at whose confluence Provins is built, turn no less than 50 or 60 corn mills; their waters are thought to be well fitted for dyeing, and there are consequently numerous dye works on their banks.

The population of the town amounts to 6009.

The road affords little subject for remark, until you reach 17 Nogent sur Seine (Inns: Cygne d'Or: — Cygne de la Croix), a thriving town, prettily situated on the l. bank of the Seine, at the point where it becomes navigable. It is intersected in the middle by the Ile des Ecluses, which is connected with either bank by stone bridges, one of which was blown up on February 11, 1814; when Nogent was bravely defended, step by step, and house by house, by a small body of French, under Bourmont, against the Allies, who finally carried the place by storm.

Here is a handsome church, in the late Gothic of the 15th century, surmounted by a fine tower, constructed between 1521 and 1542; also agreeable walks round the town.

Nogent is famous for soft cheese.

At St. Aubin, about 4 m. beyond Nogent, the road passes within view of the chimneys and roofs of an iron-forge now abandoned, which occupies the site of the famous monastery of the Paraclète, founded by Abailard, 1123. It afterwards became the retreat of Heloise, and the final resting place of both. In 1792, when the abbey was sold, the coffin containing their bodies was removed to Nogent, and afterwards transferred to Paris, where it is now deposited in Père la Chaise, under a Gothic monument, originally erected at the monastery of St. Marcel, near Châlons, over the remains of Abailard. The monument raised over the two lovers at the Paraclète, ornamented with a figure of the Trinity, was destroyed at the Revolution, 1794.

A marble pillar was placed over the mouth of their burial vault, within the area once occupied by the church of the Paraclète, by Gen. Pajol, the owner of the ground, and within it still remains the stone sarcophagus which once enclosed their leaden coffin.

13 Pont le Roi, a town of 2000 inhab. at the junction of the Aube with the Seine: the Château was built by Casimir Perier in 1830.

16 Granges.

19 Grès. The country possesses slight interest.

19 Troyes (Inn, Grand Mulet; good, clean, and cheap), is chef lieu of the Dept. de l'Aube: its population amounts to 25,563, and it is seated on the l. bank of the Seine, branches of which, conducted through the town in canals, contribute to its industry and cleanliness. In the reign of Henri IV. Troyes had 60,000 inhabitants, so that it will be perceived its present state is one of decay; many of its most industrious citizens having been banished by the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. "This ancient capital of Champagne, in which the peculiar provincial character of the "Francs Champenois" is thought to be exhibited in its most genuine aspect, still contains much that is interesting. The greater part is of timber and plaster, or pargetting, exactly in the old English style, though, as in England, the number of these venerable buildings diminish day by day.

"The Cathedral, dedicated to St. Peter, is a splendid specimen of the flamboyant Gothic, full of bold inverted curves, open borders of festooned pendants, and all those luxuriances which preceded the abandonment of the style. The church is 374 feet long, 96 feet high to the point of the roof, and has five aisles, producing beautiful combinations of perspective. Those who are fond of painted glass will here have much enjoyment, for the windows are most brilliant and elegant. They exhibit the finest and most delicate mosaic patterns, which are more rare than other styles in this species of art. The clerestory is here really a clear story from the size of its windows, filled with as fine painted glass as the rest. In this church, and before the high altar, May 20, 1420, was our Henry V. affianced to the Princess Katherine; and on the following day was signed the memorable treaty of Troyes, — that treaty so full of disaster, by which the victor of Agincourt was declared to be the heir of Charles VI., and his successor in the kingdom. Charles VI. was present, together with very many magnates and nobles, English and French; but, above all, Philip Duke of Burgundy, by whose intervention the treaty was negotiated and concluded.

"The Church of St. Urbain is unfinished. It contains a great deal of open tracery, such as is found at Cologne, but of which there are very few examples on this side of the Rhine. Maréchal Vauban, who studied Gothic architecture attentively, used to say of this church that it was built of coupons." — F. P.

The marriage of Henry V. took place June 2, 1420, in the Church of St. Jean, now much mutilated externally. It encloses a well, which furnishes water to the neighbouring quarter of the town, and possesses an altar-piece, painted and given by Mignard, who was born in the parish.

The Sainte Madeleine possesses a stone rood-loft (jubé) of great beauty and richness of decoration, the work of John Gualdo, an Italian, 1518. Most of the statues have been destroyed, and some replaced by wood. Those which remain are good. In this church, at St. Nicholas, and at St. Nazaire, are painted glass windows.

St. Pantaleon is ornamented internally with statues, the best of which are attributed to an artist named François Gentil.

The Public Library is said to contain 50,000 vols. and 5,000 MSS.: the hall in which they are deposited is decorated with painted windows representing events in the life of Henri IV.

"The ancient Boucheries consist of several long low ranges of timber buildings, evidently quite as old as the time of our Henry V. It used to be an article of popular belief that flies never entered this building, which some writers ascribed to a property of the wood, others to the construction of the edifice, and others to a spell or charm of St. Loup. The immunity, however, like all other privileges, has disappeared.

"Troyes would delight an architect. The houses are generally old and picturesque, and there are several churches besides those which we have noticed, Troyes having suffered less than many places during the Revolution." — F. P.

The Hotel Mescrigny is a good specimen of the architecture of the Renaissance, flanked by 2 turrets.

"The name of Troyes will always be familiar to us from our Troy weight, which obtains its name from the standard of this town.

"In the early history of French typography, Troyes has much celebrity. Many ancient romances were printed here, which, somewhat modernised in language, and abridged, became the Bibliothèque bleue, so well known to the lovers of ancient fiction. The Oudot family have monopolised this branch of the book trade for centuries. From their press issued over and over again the Danse Macabre, the Jeste of the Four Sons of Aymon, Charlemagne and Freratias, Fair Helen, and Patient Grizzle, the delectable history of Valentine and Orson, and many others, which in their original black letter garb constitute the delights of the Bibliomaniac, but which, for most purposes, may be read to quite as much advantage in their re-printed form. The Oudots began printing in the reign of Charles IX., from whom they had a patent or privilege, and the business went on in its regular line de père en fils till about twenty years ago, when the then M. Oudot died, leaving only a daughter; but the Salic law did not prevail in the family. She inherited the trade, and wisely married. The shop still subsists, and the firm is probably the oldest in Europe. The city has little commercial activity; it is evidently the centre of an agricultural community." — F. P.

A new Canal, however, is in progress to form a communication from Troyes to the navigable part of the Seine, and also to the Canal of Burgundy: it will doubtless contribute to the prosperity of the town.

The chief manufacture carried on in and around Troyes is that of night caps.

Troyes is a very important place in a military point of view, being the centre where various roads meet on the l. of the Seine, in the midst of a plain cut up by streams and woody morasses. As a proof of this, in the course of the wonderful campaign of 1814, when Napoleon kept at bay so many enemies pressing on him from all sides, it was twice taken by the Allies and once by the French. In the month of February, the portion of the Allied armies encamped round the walls amounted to 100,000 men, and they required 12 hours to march through it. Here the first steps for the Restoration of the Bourbons were taken, and the white cockade was publicly displayed in France for the first time after a lapse of more than 20 years.

At Troyes, the high road from Paris to Bâle (Route 162.) branches off from that to Besançon and Dijon. Mallepostes run on both.

19 St. Parre les Vaudes.

13 Bar-sur-Seine. Pleasantly situated on the banks of the infant Seine, here a clear rivulet. A quiet country town. The Church has great elegance.

19 Mussy. — "The wine character of the country now becomes very apparent. The vineyards are, however, principally in strips, alternating with corn, potatoes, haricots, hemp, clover, altogether conveying a cheerful impression. This country begins again to vary from its hitherto swelling or undulating monotonous level. Towards the west, hills of a tabular shape appear, which continue increasing until they form almost a connected chain. This is the commencement of the well-known Côte d'Or, of which more hereafter." — F. P.

61 Châtillon-sur-Seine, (Inns: Poste?: — Hôtel de la Côte d'Or; dirty, and barely tolerable), a neat small town. A Congress of representatives of the allied sovereigns, at which Lord Castlereagh appeared on behalf of England, was held here, February 1814, to offer to Napoleon the throne of France, provided he would be content with its limits previous to the Revolution; he rejected these terms, and, emboldened by the successes he gained in the course of the campaign, broke off the negociations, and the result was his dethronement. Marshal Marmont was born here, and has built on the spot a fine château.

"The road now becomes more hilly, masses of grey rock, coloured and stained with iron hues, starting abruptly from the sides of the hills. The fields and soil generally stony, yet pleasantly watered by sparkling streams. On the hill sides many little ancient towns or bourgades are seen, even now strongly bearing the impress of feudality. Surrounded by walls and gates, it seems as if not a house could venture to stray out of the protecting circuit, indicating the ancient unsettled state of the country, or, at least, of the habits which arose from its insecurity."—F. P.

14 Aisey le Duc.

14 Ampilly le Sec.

15 Chanceaux, celebrated for the manufacture of preserved barberries (épinettes). Here is a comfortable little inn, where a good stock of the preserve is kept.

The Seine takes its rise in the high land of the Côte d'Or, within about 1 m. of Chanceaux.

The road from Paris to Dijon, by Tonnerre (R. 145.), falls into our road here.

"The country now begins to assume a picturesque character; you begin, as it were, to cross the fibres of the roots of the Jura, and the beauty of the scene gains as you advance.

"12 St. Seyne, beautifully situated amongst a range of bold hills, almost of a mountainous character. The town, which contains about 1000 inhabitants, is at the bottom of the valley. Above, on the brow of the hill, are the remains of a celebrated Abbey of Benedictines, founded by St. Seguanus before 580. The church, whose construction dates from the beginning of the 15th century, is yet standing, and contains much that is remarkable; amongst other things, a series of ancient frescoes representing the life of the patron founder. This church has some peculiarities in its architecture, and the stalls of the monks continue undisturbed."—F. P.

10 Val de Suzon, so called from the torrent Suzon, which flows through the very pretty valley. "The general aspect of the village, which you reach by a steep descent, continues to remind the traveller of his gradual approach to Switzerland; and indeed, throughout the whole of this district, he will observe how overcharged is the opinion of the monotony of French scenery, even in the provinces which are not professedly mountainous.—F. P.

16 DIJON.—Hotels: de la Cloche; good, and well situated, near the Cathedral, close to the Paris gate:—H. du Parc. "The ancient capital of the Duchy of Burgundy, now the chef lieu of the department of the Côte d'Or, contains 26,000 inhabitants. The first view of this once important and opulent city is peculiarly agreeable and striking. It bursts upon you after the long ascent of the Val de Suzon, when you reach a species of table land. The Jura faintly bounds the horizon. Dijon lies outspread on the plain below. The great fortress-like masses of the churches, and the Palace of the Dukes of Burgundy, standing out boldly from the buildings of the town, mark themselves forcibly on the landscape, quite as advantageously as the greater richness of battlemented turrets and of open spires. All the ecclesiastical buildings of Dijon are more or less remarkable for their castle-like solidity; and even the Flèche of St. Benigne (now the Cathedral) is scarcely an exception to the rule. This spire, by the way, though it enjoys a species of celebrity, is merely an elongated pyramid or obelisk of wood, and possesses no beauty, except from its height and its general harmony with the rest of the structure. St. Benigne before the Revolution was conventual, but it became the cathedral when the hierarchy was restored; the original cathedral having been destroyed during the Revolution. St. Benigne also suffered much. The present cathedral is upon a grand scale, particularly the front, but in every part it shows the ravages it has sustained.

"Notre Dame is a singularly fine church in the purest Gothic, somewhat like Ely, and remarkable for the boldness of its construction. This also was one of the churches which were studied by Vauban, as affording lessons in vaulting, and for the best employment of materials. The front exhibits a beautiful play of light and shade; but its effect is impaired by the absence of the towers, which were intended to complete the elevation. At one corner of this façade, where it was intended a tower should rise, still stands the clock brought in 1382 by Philip le Hardi, an epithet which his general conduct deserved, though, in this achievement, le cruel would have suited him better, for he plundered and burnt the town, and massacred the inhabitants. Jacques Marques, a Flemish mathematician, was the maker of this clock, which, in the opinion of Froissart, was the most curious existing, whether in Christendom or in the heathen lands, and hence selected by the duke as his trophy. The bells are struck by two hammer-men (the ancestors of our defunct black men at St. Dunstan's, as well as of those whom we still find at Venice), and who are called Jacquemars by the badauds of Dijon, a corruption of their maker's name.

"Amongst other churches, and fragments of churches, St. Michael deserves attention. It is a splendid example of the style which in France is now called 'la Renaissance,' less Gothic than the schools at Oxford, and less Italian than the Castle of Heidelberg. The portal is composed of three circular arches, with a very fine frieze above. The ornaments of this front are generally Italian or Roman in their details, yet so put together that the whole becomes a perfect Gothic cathedral."—F. P.

There are a great many desecrated churches here, degraded into stables, coach-houses, warehouses, &c., though in tolerable repair, and worthy the attention of the architect; such are St. Jean, remarkable for the span of its roof; St. Etienne, a covered market; St. Philibert, cavalry stables.

"The ancient Palace of the dukes of Burgundy, which, after the union of the Duchy to the crown of France, became the Palais des Etats, has been so completely modernised in its principal front, that the great interest possessed by the building would hardly be anticipated. But the front is merely a mask, and within, as well in the quadrangles and in other aspects, it retains very many of the features which distinguished it when it was the residence of the premier dukes of Christendom. This was the rank possessed by these powerful sovereigns who, as such, ranked immediately after royalty.

"The style prevailing in this and the other buildings of the 15th century in Dijon, and which may be properly called the Burgundian style, has many of the features which we afterwards find in our Tudor architecture, and the aspect of the building softens down from the castle to the palace or mansion; not that strength was neglected, the ducal palace being surmounted by a large and very massy tower, and all the lower stories of the building being vaulted, but still the castellated character is no longer retained. The building is now used for public offices. A portion of it is employed as a "Museum, and the ancient halls and chambers have been very judiciously chosen as the place of deposit for the very rich and important monuments of the middle ages which are there preserved. Most of the articles have certificates of origin; and they form a collection second only to that which existed in the now dispersed museum "des Monumens Français" in the Petits Augustins. They are extremely valuable as illustrations of the progress of the arts in what was one of the most opulent and civilised portions of the European commonwealth. The following articles may be particularly noticed. The crozier of St. Robert, the first abbot of the Cistercian order (ob. 1098.) The wooden cup of St. Bernard, undoubted relic of this truly great and pious man, whose memory cannot be, however, relieved from the atrocities occasioned by the Crusades. The ornaments were probably added after his canonization. Toilet furniture of the Duchesses of Burgundy; caskets and boxes of ivory, beautifully carved. A purse supposed to have belonged to Isabella of Portugal, third wife of Philip the Good, of leather richly embroidered, and apparently of oriental workmanship. The chief ornaments of the collection are the magnificent tombs of Philip le Hardi, the founder of the second race of the Dukes of Burgundy (1342—1404), and of Jean-sans-peur, his son and successor (1371—1419). These tombs, the sculptures on which are perhaps the finest specimens existing of mediæval art on this side of the Alps, have suffered strange vicissitudes. Both were erected in the Chartreuse of Dijon, founded and endowed by Philip, and selected by him. Upon the suppression of the Chartreuse, they were removed to St. Benigne, where they rested but a short time, as in 1793 the Council of the Commune decreed their destruction. The bases remained at St. Benigne, but the figures were dispersed: some were placed in the Museum, others in private cabinets, and some abandoned in a lumber-room. In 1818, the department determined upon their restoration. This labour, though very costly, was comparatively easy, for the agents who executed the orders at the Revolution evidently contemplated the possibility of a restoration of the monuments, because, although pulled to pieces, these pieces were as little defaced as possible. The statues and architectural ornaments were disjoined, but not broken or mutilated. After the labours of nine years, we see them in a state very little different from the original splendour. The tomb of Philip le Hardi represents him in a recumbent posture, in his full ducal robes. He is crowned with the ducal coronet (and it may be remarked that this ornament is a plain circle without flowers), and his hand grasps the ducal sceptre. Two angels are placed below the head of the figure, holding the helmet, which has for its crest the fleur-de-lys of France. By the side is a space for the statue of his consort, but it never was filled. The sides of the tomb are ornamented with singular beauty. Instead of niches or panels filled with statues in basso-relievo, the dado is here surrounded by a miniature cloister, worked most delicately and elaborately in the finest alabaster. The little pillars, which stand quite free, sustain canopies and finials of the richest pattern, and in each division are the statues of one or two friars. All are represented as mourners, but with the most skilful variety of feeling: one, in all the anguish of grief; a second, equally afflicted, but tranquilly resigned; a third, stupified with sorrow; all as true as if you had the convent before you. The draperies are admirable; and whether we consider the goodness of the drawing or the skill of the execution, we must confess that it would be hardly possible to rival the skill of Claus Slater, the Dutchman, for he was the artist, at the present day.

"The tomb of Jean-sans-peur matches entirely with that of his father, both in material and in design. His ducal robe is semé with the device which he adopted, the rabot, or carpenter's plane, assumed by him in opposition to the ragged staff of his political adversary, the Duke of Orleans. By his side is his consort, Margaret of Bavaria. Her robe is white, semé with the well-known little flower which bears her name. The coronets of both these personages are like those of Philip le Hardi, circles of gold richly studded with gems, but destitute of crosses and flowers. In general design, the miniature cloister, which surrounds the base of the tomb, resembles that of its prototype, but the canopies and pinnacles and finials are even more delicate and elaborate. The mourners within are the exact fellows of the other company, and are executed with equal taste and skill, and the groups are equally true to nature. One monk is telling his brother the sad news of the Duke's death. Another, with his cowl drawn down, and his hands clasped, evidently displays, though his face be concealed, the deepest sorrow. The satisfaction at seeing these truly exquisite specimens of ancient art will be enhanced by the remembrance of those at Bruges, equally splendid in their kind. If the traveller has visited those, containing the remains of the sovereigns, in whose persons the line of Philip le Hardi became extinct, he will have seen the dynasty beginning and closing with the tomb.

"Jean-sans-peur was slain on the bridge of Montereau, 10th September, 1419, in the presence of the Dauphin, afterwards Charles VII. (R. 106. p. 377.) The first blow came from an unknown hand, but he was struck down by the battle-axe of Tanneguy du Chastel. When Francis I. visited the Chartreuse the bodies were shown to him; and, pointing to the gash in the skull, he said, 'Through that the English entered France.'

"The chimney-piece of the Great Hall is said to have been built in 1504, after a fire which destroyed the roof in 1502; but it was probably only restored. It is perhaps 30 ft. in height by 20 in breadth, and it is a most magnificent specimen of Gothic art. The general outline resembles that of some of our English pedimented tombs, but the ornaments are on the boldest scale, and in the richest style. Here is preserved a model of the beautiful Sainte Chapelle, the chief Gothic ornament of Dijon; desecrated at the Revolution; pulled down and sold, 1807.

"The paintings in the Museum are numerous, but much of the usual kind found in provincial collections: some of the portraits are interesting, especially those of the Duchess of Burgundy. A head of John the Baptist on a Charger is attributed to A. Durer.

"The cabinet of M. Baudot still contains some very curious articles, though he has, with much spirit, placed several which he had in the Museum. The most curious are, the marotte, or bauble, of La Mère Sotte, under whose auspices whilome existed one of the farcical festivities of the middle ages. It is of carved wood, and represents La Mère at the top, with a bottle and a drinking glass in her hand, and groups of little fools creeping up, about, and around her. Here are tablets covered with wax, according to the ancient Roman custom, upon which Philip le Hardi noted his expenses; the book (if it can be so called) upon which the Dukes of Burgundy took their inauguration oath: it is composed of leaves of wood, upon which are painted the symbols of the Evangelists, and the first verse of the Gospel according to St. John in four languages—Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and French."—F. P.

Some curious relics of domestic and other architecture are to be met with in the town; the wells, for instance, (especially the Puits de Moïse, executed by Klaus Slater, the sculptor of the ducal monuments). In a street near St. Michael's is a very elegant stone seat or sofa. "In a house entered through a shop, not far from Notre Dame, is a Gothic staircase, on the top of which stands the figure of a man with a basket on his shoulder, whence spring, in the form of a plant or tree, the vaulting ribs of the roof; these are foliated in a very bold manner. The whole is of good execution, though evidently late in the style.

"The artist may pass several days here pleasantly as well as profitably, as it is a clean, cheerful, and handsome town, and the park or pleasure grounds will always form a delightful walk." —Petit.

The Public Walks are, indeed, a leading feature in Dijon, surrounding the walls as with a belt of foliage, and there is perhaps no other provincial town in France so well provided. They run partly in the form of Boulevards, outside of and parallel to the old ramparts, which themselves form elevated terraces. The Parc, about a mile out of the town, reached by the Cours du Parc, was laid out by Le Notre for the Princes de Condé, its owners, who gave free admission to the public.

Dijon has the renown of being the native place of Bossuet, the divine, born in the house No. 12. Place St. Jean; — of Crebillon; of Guyton Morveau, the chemist, and of the Duc de Bassano. St. Bernard was born in the village Fontaines, about a mile beyond the wall, and his father's castle is still in existence beside the curious church.

The trade in the wines of Burgundy is concentrated at Dijon; the district which produces the most celebrated wines lies to the S. of the town, and is traversed by the road to Châlons-sur-Saône, passing Clos de Vougeot, Nuits, and Beaune. (R. 152.)

Conveyances. Mallepostes to Paris, to Besançon, to Bâle, and to Strasburg, daily.

Diligences to Paris, morning and evening, by Tonnerre, (R. 145.), and by Troyes, (R. 144.); and to Châlons and Lyons, (starting in the evening you reach Châlons in time for the steamer next morning); to Nancy; Strasburg; to Dole and Geneva; to Besançon.

ROUTE 145.

PARIS TO DIJON BY SENS AND TONNERRE.

299 kilom. = 185½ Eng. m.

Diligences daily.

The road is the same as R. 106. as far as 108 Sens (see R. 136. p. 377.), where our road turns E.

11 Theil.

17 Arces.

16 St. Florentin. A pretty town at the junction of the Armance and Armançon. Its Church, founded 1376, is said to possess fine painted glass, and a curious double staircase. The walk of the Prieuré commands a view. About 16 m. S. of St. Florentin lies the Abbey of Pontigny, remarkable as having been the residence of many English prelates, and the retreat of Thomas-à-Becket during his exile, 1164-66. While here he carried the practice of the austerities of the Cistercian order to the very extreme, and while in prayer before one of the altars in the church had a divine vision, accompanied by the words, "Thomas, Thomas, my church shall be glorified by thy blood:" such, at least, is the Romish legend. The Abbey was devastated by the Huguenots, who unroofed and burnt the church and abbey, and broke open the tombs, 1567; and the destruction of the conventual buildings and confiscation of the revenues were effected at the Revolution. The Church, however, still remains, and, though dilapidated, is a grand edifice, in a severe style of early Gothic, erected 1150. It is 351 feet long, and 68 feet high, and is lighted by narrow lancet windows. Behind the high altar is the Shrine of the English Saint Edmund, archbishop of Canterbury, an ark or chest of wood, carved and gilt, with a top in the form of a roof, and statues of saints around it, supported by 4 stone statues of angels as large as life.

Attached to the S. transept is a chapel, now in ruins, dedicated to St. Thomas the Martyr, who was driven from Pontigny by the threat of Henry II. to banish the Cistercians from England, if they sheltered him in France. It retains some traces of frescoes, executed 1520. Among the English refugees who found shelter here was Stephen Langton, archbishop of Canterbury, when banished from England by King John, together with his suffragans. The church of Pontigny is about to be repaired by the government.

The high road from St. Florentin follows the valley of the Armançon, and the line of the Canal de Bourgogne upwards, through 13 Flogny, where is a wire bridge to 15 Tonnerre.—Inn, Poste. This is an old and dull town of 4,247 inhabitants on a steep slope, on the summit of which stands the Church of St. Pierre, commanding a fine view of the town from its rocky platform, and containing the interesting monument, in marble, of Marguerite of Bourgogne, Queen of Sicily, who founded the noble Hospital in this town, endowing it with large revenues, which it still enjoys. Her effigy, finely sculptured, in the costume of the time, reclines upon the tomb. Here is also buried, under an imposing monument, Michel le Tellier, Marquis de Louvois, Minister of War to Louis XIV. It is the work of Girardon.

About 6 m. E. of Tonnerre is Tanlay, one of the finest châteaux in Burgundy, and tolerably well kept up by its owner. It is a good specimen of the style of the Renaissance, the oldest part having been begun 1559 by Coligny d'Andelot, brother of the Admiral Coligny, the leader of the Protestants, and the chief victim of the St. Bartholomew's night. A chamber in the Tour de la Ligue is pointed out as the place where he and the other leaders of the party, the Prince de Condé, &c., were in the habit of meeting; and it is still covered with faded frescoes, representing, under the disguise of the gods of Olympus, the leading characters of the time; Catharine de Medicis as Juno, (but with a double face?), and her son, Charles IX., as Pluto; Condé as Mars. The larger and more splended portion of the château, including numerous additions to the original plan, was built between 1643 and 1648 by Particelli d'Emery, Surintendant de Finance under Mazarin, from designs of Le Muet, except the Petit Château at the entrance of the great building, which is a beautiful specimen of the Renaissance of the 16th century. At the extremity of the grand Canal, flanked by avenues, beneath which Coligny and Condé may have walked, is the Château d'Eau, from which artificial streams burst forth.

The first stage on the road to Dijon is 18 Ancy le Franc.

The Château was begun in 1555, from designs, it is said, of Primatice, and decorated with frescoes still existing. In 1683 it became the property and residence of Louvois, minister of the Grand Monarque, who owned besides the Comté of Tonnerre, and other vast neighbouring possessions brought to him by his wife, Anne de Souvré, the richest heiress in France. The Marquis de Louvois, its present owner, has established iron forges here. The château is well kept up, and surrounded by a park and woods.

16 Aisy-sur-Armançon. Soon after quitting this place, you enter the department of the Côte d'Or, so famous for its vineyards.

11 Montbard. — Inn, Point du Jour. This unimportant and dirty town was the residence of the naturalist Buffon, who was born 1707, and lived in the Château, which still exists. The Gardens attached to it are arranged in terraces along the slope of the hill, and decorated with orange trees. In an isolated antique tower rising in a corner of them, now going to decay, and stripped of its furniture, Buffon formed his study, and composed most of his works. Nothing but bare walls now remains. The Gardens, now open to the public, were laid waste and destroyed by the Revolutionists, but one relic of their ancient condition was preserved in a small pillar of marble raised by the son of Buffon in front of the lofty tower which contained his father's study, and bearing this inscription,

"Excelsæ turris humilis columna, Parenti suo filius Buffon, 1785."

"The Château, now occupied by the widow of Buffon's son, who was one of the first victims of the guillotine at the Revolution, contains portraits of Buffon and his assistant Daubenton. Two of the rooms are lined with coloured prints from the natural history of its great owner. His tomb, in the parish church, was destroyed at the Revolution, the lead of his coffin melted, and his bones scattered."—Costello.

Fontenay is a sequestered abbey, a few miles from Montbard, whose founder was one Evrard, Bishop of Norwich. It was devoted to monks of the Cistercian order. Its ruined buildings are now converted into a paper manufactory, belonging to the highly respectable family of Montgolfier. The chapter-house and cloisters are still fine specimens of Gothic architecture. The church, converted into every-day purposes, is less striking; but it contains several mutilated ecclesiastical monuments.

22 Villeneuve-les-Couvers.

14 Chanceaux.

Here our road falls into R. 144.

38 DIJON (p. 517.).

ROUTE 148.

DIJON TO GENEVA BY DÔLE.

193 kilom. = 119½ Eng. m.

Diligences, 2 or 3 daily.

The journey may be divided into 2 days posting; 1st day to Champagnole, 8 or 9 hours; 2d day, Geneva, 10 hours.

For some distance along the road there is little worth description or notice; the country fertile, but flat and monotonous. As you advance, the distant blue outline of the Jura mountains is discovered on the horizon.

19 Genlis must not be confounded with the place of the same name in Picardy, whence Madame de Genlis derived her title.

A causeway 1½ m. long, pierced with 23 arches, to allow the escape of the water of the Saône during inundations, leads into 15 Auxonne (Inn, Grand Cerf), a second class fortress of minor importance, owing to its distance from the frontier, in the rear of Besançon. It stands on the l. bank of the Saône, here crossed by a bridge. The fortifications were planned by Vauban. It was taken by the Austrians 1815. The population 5150.

From the heights above Dôle the snowy mass of the Mont Blanc, more than 100 m. distant as the crow flies, is apparent in clear weather.

16 Dôle (Inns: Ville de Lyon:—H. de Paris; said to be good,) is a town of 10,137 inhab., in the department of the Jura, seated on the Doubs. It belonged for a long time to Spain, having been the capital of Franche Comté, which was not united to France until the reign of Louis XIV. The Emperor Charles V. fortified it; but the works were destroyed by Louis.

The Parish Church is Gothic, and the Tour de Vergy, which now serves as a prison, is one of the few ancient edifices.

The Canal which joins the Rhine to the Rhone passes near the town.

[The road to Besançon turns off here, passing through 14 Orchamps.

13 St. Wit.

18 Besançon. (R. 159.)]

---

18 Mont-sous-Vaudrey, a town of 1000 inhab.

A road branches off here to Lausanne, by Salins and Pontarlier. (R. 150.)

19 Poligny (Inn, H. de Genève) is a town of 6492 inhab., situated at the extremity of the plain, at the foot of the Jura, the first ascent of which commences on quitting Poligny. The road was made by Napoleon, and commands from the summits, after an hour's march, a good view into the valley called Culée de Vaux, and over the plains of Franche Comté and Burgundy, as far as the Côte d'Or.

13 Montrond.

The Mont Blanc appears over the top of a saddle-backed hill.

10 Champagnole.—Poste; a very fair inn. This is a town of 3150 inhabitants on the Ain, here crossed by a high bridge.

A picturesque road, passing Billaude on the first platform or step of the Jura at the base of the second, to 11 Maisonneuve.

9 St. Laurent. (Inn, Poste.) French custom-house on entering France. The staple productions of the Jura are cheese (resembling Gruyère) and timber; saw-mills stud all the streams.

In this stage we reach the culminating point in the ascent of the Jura, and soon after begin to descend by a fine road, recently completed, to Morbier, and 11 Morez (Inn, Poste; comfortable), an industrious and rapidly increasing bourg of 2508 inhabitants, seated at the bottom of a defile, on the Bienne, which turns the machinery of numerous mills and works where clockwork, jacks, nails, &c., are made.

7 Les Rousses (Inns: not good; Poste, best), a hideous village on the Swiss frontier, in a cold, arid, upland country. It is proposed to convert Les Rousses into a fortress for the defence of the French frontier.

Here is the first French custom-house encountered by travellers coming from Switzerland. Geneva trinkets, boxes, &c., must be declared; watches are admitted on paying a duty of 5 fr. each.

Those who wish to ascend the Dôle, one of the highest summits of the Jura, on account of its surprising view, must turn out of the high road at Les Rousses, and proceed to St Cergue (12 kilom.), whence the top may be attained in 3 hours. See Swiss Hand-book.

The descent of the Jura to Gex is now made safe and easy by an excellent new road. About a mile beyond the douane you pass out of France, but re-enter it before 15 La Vattay.

A little beyond La Faucille, at the extremity of a narrow gorge, on a sudden turn in the road, opens out the celebrated and sublime view over the Lake of Geneva and the Alps; a view not to be forgotten in a lifetime.

13 Gex (Inn, La Poste), through Ferney Voltaire to 17 Geneva (described in Swiss Hand-book).

ROUTE 150.

DÔLE TO LAUSANNE BY PONTARLIER.

100 kilom. = 62 Eng. m. to Jougne, or the French frontier.

A journey of 2 days, stopping the first night at Pontarlier, 8 hours; thence to Lausanne, 10 hours.

A very agreeable road, quitting that to Geneva by Morez at 18 Mont-sous-Vaudrey.

15 Mouchard.

8 Salins (Inns: Poste :—Tête Noir; tolerable), a town of 8000 or 9000 inhabitants, which had the misfortune to be almost entirely consumed by a fire, which lasted for 3 days, in 1825. It is romantically situated in a narrow rocky gorge, and owes its name to the salt-works, Salines Royales, a vast edifice, 918 ft. long, surrounded by walls, in the midst of the valley. The salt is obtained from brine-springs rising below vaults of ancient construction. The weaker springs are conducted in pipes to the forest of Chaux, 15 m. off, where, after being evaporated in "maisons de graduation," they are boiled.

There are quarries of gypsum here.

The road ascends, on quitting Salins, through a country having much of the Swiss character, abounding in rocks and dark fir-woods.

20 Levier.

20 Pontarlier. —Inns: Poste; very good: — Croix Blanche:—Lion d'Or. This is the frontier town of France, a place of considerable antiquity and interest, containing 4890 inhabitants, seated at a height of 2716 ft. above the sea level, at the foot of the second ridge of the Jura, and at the debouché of the principal routes leading through that chain. It is the loftiest town in France.

The road hence first ascends by the side of the river Doubs, and through the pass of La Cluse, which may be called a mountain gateway between France and Switzerland, to St. Pierre de Joux. The defile is commanded by the Château de Joux, situated on the summit of a precipitous and nearly inaccessible rock, at the foot of which the roads from Pontarlier, Neufchâtel, and Lausanne unite. This frontier-fort was the prison of the unfortunate Toussaint L'Ouverture, when treacherously carried off from St. Domingo by command of Napoleon. He ended his days here, some say by violent means; but the sudden transition from the climate of the tropics to a dark dungeon, so dank and cold that the water drops from the roof in summer, and icicles congeal on the walls in winter, in the elevated region and biting atmosphere of the Jura, sufficiently explains the cause of his death, without the need of violence. His miserable cell still exists, and has been described by Miss Marineau. He was buried in the prison church, with nothing to mark the grave, but it was bricked over, and is included in the new wall of the church. Here also was confined previously, "dans ce nid de hibous, egayé par une compagnie d'invalides," as he termed it, another remarkable prisoner, Mirabeau. He was sent hither (1776) by virtue of a lettre de cachet obtained by his father, "L'Ami des Hommes," as he called himself, and the tyrant of his own family, as he proved himself. Mirabeau, having by his insinuating manners obtained leave from the governor to visit the town of Pontarlier on parole, made love to Madame de Monive, the wife of a magistrate there, and eloped with her to Holland. She was the Sophie to whom he addressed some of his obscene writings.

A desolate country, chiefly of forest, inhabited by charcoal-burners succeeds.

19 Jougne. Here is the French custom-house.

$2\frac{1}{2}$ Orbe.
$1\frac{3}{4}$ Cossonay.
2 Lausanne.

} The distances for these three last stages are in posts.

The routes from the Fort de Joux to Neufchâtel by Val Travers, and to Lausanne by Orbe, are described in the HAND-BOOK for SWITZERLAND.

ROUTE 152.

DIJON TO CHÂLONS-SUR-SAÔNE BY BEAUNE, AND THE WINE DISTRICT OF THE CÔTE D'OR, CHAMBERTIN, CLOS-VOUGEOT, NUITS, ETC.

67 kilom. = $41\frac{1}{2}$ Eng. m.

This road carries the traveller along the skirts of the vineyards, producing the finest Burgundy wines which rank amongst the best and most famous in France. The country, wherever it presents an advantageous slope, is entirely laid out in vines, and what it loses in picturesqueness it gains in richness. It is besides very populous; there are said to be 40 or 50 villages between Dijon and Beaune, a distance of 26 m.

"About a mile to the S. W. of Dijon begin those hills which form the celebrated Côte d'Or, which, judging by the eye, average from about 800 to 1000 feet in height, continuing to range at the distance of about a mile from the carriage-road. It is a wall of hills, covered with vineyards, which ascend in terraces their sunny sides, and then spread along the table land on the summit. The colour of the soil, as seen through the well-trimmed tufty vines, is of yellowish red; and it may be asked whether the name of the range arises from this prevailing colour of the ground, or from the richness of the product. The tract from the road nearly to the summit of the hills is covered with vineyards. Here the best Burgundy is grown, and here, as in almost all other vine countries, we find the singular and perplexing phenomenon (but perhaps no where so forcibly apparent as here), that whilst one tract of small extent produces the finest and "most particular" quality, another hard by, enjoying the same aspect, and, as far as we can judge, either by our unaided senses or by chemical tests, the same soil, can never be made to bring forth a wine of equal flavour. In richness of flavour, and in perfume, and all the more delicate qualities of the juice of the grape, they unquestionably rank as the finest in the world; and it was not without reason that the Dukes of Burgundy were designated as the "princes des bon vins." The soils on which these valuable wines are grown consist, in general, of a light black or red loam, mixed with the debris of the calcareous rocks upon which they repose. The principal vineyards of the Côte d'Or are all situated between Dijon and Chagny, and describe an arc of a large circle exposed to the S. E., and protected from the N. W. by the range of hills that stretches behind them. The vines are planted in trenches, at the distance of about two feet apart, and are trained on poles to the height of 30 to 40 inches. In the best vineyards they are extremely old, and when old vines are replaced by others, a larger crop, but of an inferior quality, is obtained. The choice red growths of the Côte d'Or are the Clos-Vougeot, Nuits, Beaune, Volnay, Pomard, Chambertin, Richebourg, Romanée, and St. George. They are all distinguished by their beautiful colour and exquisite flavour and aroma, combining, in a greater degree than any other wines, the qualities of lightness and delicacy with richness and fulness of body. Many other crops are intermixed with the vineyards, — potatoes, clover, and maize, — whilst cherry, almond, and walnut trees are dotted over the fields. One need not wonder that the Kings of France should have coveted this rich Burgundian territory. This is about the highest latitude N. where maize can be grown to any advantage."—F. P.

12 La Baraque. At Givray, a little to the rt. of the road after quitting this relay, lies the vineyard of Chambertin about 7 m. from Dijon. It is about 15 or 20 acres in extent, but divided among numerous proprietors.

Farther on, the road passes under the wall of the enclosure (Clos) de Vougeot, the prince of Burgundy wines. It originally belonged to the monks of the neighbouring Abbey of Citeaux, who carried its culture to the highest perfection, never selling it, but making presents of what they did not consume themselves. At the Revolution it was bought by MM.

Tourlon et Revol, and still later was resold to M. Ouvrard? and Aguado, the loan contractor. Its recent proprietors have enlarged it by taking in some of the neighbouring land; but the present extent of the vineyard is only 112½ English acres (48 hectares): the average annual produce is about 200 hogsheads. The soil near the top of the hill consists of small fragments of whitish limestone, mixed with shells, of which the hill is composed: in the lowest part of the vineyard it merges into a nearly pure clay. The vines nearest the top, in the dry soil, produce the best wine; on reaching the clay it falls off, and becomes the mere vin du pays.

"The vintage is in general soon over, the proprietor employing often from 400 to 450 vintagers at the same time. For the red wine, the grapes as they are brought in are thrown into large cases or troughs, and there trodden by a number of men, with large wooden shoes, till the grapes are nearly all broken. They are then taken up in baskets, with interstices wide enough to allow the grapes to pass through, when a portion of the stalks, generally about two-thirds, are taken out. If the whole of the stalks were taken out, the quality of the wine, as has been repeatedly proved, would be inferior. The whole is then put into the vat into which the must, as it ran from the treading, had been previously carried. With the number of people employed, it requires a very short period to fill a vat. A space of about 12 inches is left unfilled at the top, and a sliding lid is then put over, which floats upon the surface. As soon as the fermentation becomes violent, the swelling of the mass lifts the lid to the height of six inches above the mouth of the vat. As, however, the skins and the stalks had previously risen to the surface, none of the liquor escapes. A very small space, formed by the looseness of the lid, is considered sufficient to allow the gas to escape, until the rising of the lid allows a greater space. And it is perhaps owing to the confinement of the gas that the lid is raised to such a height. If the weather had been very warm when the grapes were gathered, and still continues warm, while the fermentation is going forward, the wine is soon made. The fermentation is sometimes over in 30 hours, at other times it continues 10, 12, and even 15 days. The best wine is always produced from the most rapid fermentation. When the fermentation slackens, the liquor begins to subside, and when it is entirely over, sinks within the top of the vat, but not so low as when the vat was first filled, for the marc, or, in other words, the stalks and skins, are completely separated from the liquor, and float upon the top.

"As soon as it is known by the subsiding of the head, and by the taste and examination of the wine, that the fermentation has ceased, the wine is drawn off into large vats, which contain about 700 gallons each. Every 3 or 4 months it is pumped by means of the syphon and bellows into another vat of the same dimension, when a man enters by the small opening left in the end of the vats, and washes out with a brush and cold water any lees which may have been deposited. The Burgundy of the Clos-Vougeot receives no other preparation, and it is treated in this manner as often as may be judged requisite, till it is disposed of. They commence selling it when 3 and 4 years old, but the wine of very favourable seasons is retained by the proprietor till it is 10 or 12 years old, when it is bottled, and sold at the rate of 6 francs a bottle. The price of the wine of ordinary vintages, from 3 to 4 years old, is from 500 to 600 francs the hogsheads, but seasons occasionally occur when the wine is not better than the Vin Ordinaire of the country. The wine of 1824 was given to the labourers as their ordinary drink, that of 1825 is now ripening in the large vats, and will be worth, in 3 or 4 years more, 6 francs a bottle." —Busby.

10 Nuits, a town of 2700 inhabitants, in the midst of the celebrated vineyards, Romanie, Richebourg, La Tache, &c.

The vins de Nuits were brought into fashion, 1680, by Louis XIV, for whom they were exclusively prescribed by the chief physician Fagon, as a means of restoring his strength.

6 or 7 m. E. of Nuits is the celebrated Abbey of Citeaux founded 1090 by Robert de Molesme, in which St. Bernard assumed the cowl 1113, which sent forth to assume the keys of St. Peter no less than 4 popes, and which numbered 3600 tributary convents of the Cistercian order, of which it was the head. Remains of the abbatial buildings still exist. [Information respecting their present condition is desired by the editor.]

16 Beaune (Inns: Poste: — H. d'Angleterre), contains 10,000 inhabitants, and owes its prosperity to its being the chief seat of the wine trade in Burgundy, about 80 mercantile houses being engaged in it, and the annual exportation amounts to 30,000 or 40,000 butts.

The Hospital founded by Nic. Rollin, chancellor of Philip, Duke of Burgundy, 1443, presents in its court some good bits of Gothic, and there is a fine Gothic hall. There is a remarkably early painting, a Last Judgment, by Albert van Ouwater, in the Hotel Dieu. The Bouzeoise, a limpid stream full of green weeds floating with its current, traverses the town.

Beaune is the birth-place of the senator Monge, the savant, and favourite of Napoleon.

At Cussy la Colonne, 12 m. S. W. of Beaune, is a Roman pillar or monument, bearing bas-reliefs; but it is accessible with difficulty by cross roads. At Nolay, near it, Carnot, the republican general and engineer, was born.

"The country immediately about Beaune has much amenity, and in its neighbourhood are produced the celebrated vines of Volnay and Pomard, the former being characterised by its light and grateful aroma and delicate tint, the latter having more body and colour: they are sometimes mixed with the red wines to give them fire. Savigny, Beaune, Meursault, and several other vineyards in the neighbourhood, all produce excellent vines, and, generally speaking, all the growths of that district are remarkable for the purity of their flavour."

13. Chagny. "This town is full of interesting subjects for the sketch-book, particularly of domestic architecture; one house in the principal street, with a row of trefoil windows, is particularly striking. The tower of the church is also curious; it is a perfect specimen of the transition into the Pointed from the Norman style.

"From Chagny, the spot where the range of the Côte d'Or, properly so called, ceases, there is still a scattered line of lower hills, but the slopes are less rich and the plains less fertile." —F. P.

16. Châlons-sur-Saône. (R. 106.)

ROUTE 155.

DESCENT OF THE HAUT RHONE. — AIX IN SAVOY TO LYONS.

The upper Rhone is now navigated, in summer, by a steamer, which performs the voyage, descending from Aix to Lyons, in 9 hours, but requires 1½ days, or 22 hours, for the ascent, which is somewhat tedious. A vexatious delay also of 2 or 3 hours takes place at the custom-houses of France and Savoy.

The voyage across the Lac de Bourget from Aix, passing the Abbey of Haute-Combe, at the foot of the Mont Du Chat, is described in the Swiss HAND-BOOK, and is very delightful. The outlet from the lake is a narrow winding channel, called Canal de Savières, traversing the flat meadows in a most serpentine course, which some have supposed artificial, but which has, probably, only been enlarged by art. By this issue the Lac de Bourget disgorges its waters into the Rhone, near the Savoyard village of Chana. The course of the Rhone hereabouts is nearly due N. and S., and parallel with the lake, from which it is separated by the mass of the Mont du Chat, whose ridges are called Dents, and over whose shoulder Hannibal is supposed to have led his army to the foot of the high Alps. On entering the Rhone we have this mountain on the l.

The Rhone has been navigated by steam above this, as high as Seyssel, a small town on both banks of the river, one part belonging to France, the other to Savoy; a project has been started for making the river navigable as far as the Lake of Geneva. (See Swiss HAND-BOOK.)

Except at one or two points, the scenery of the Upper Rhone is not very remarkable. It runs through a series of basins, terminated at either end by gorges (étranglemens, i. e. throttlings, as the French expressively term them), caused by the approximation of the hills on either side. Below Seyssel

L. the Fière, a turbid river, which drains the Lake of Annecy, enters the Rhone.

L. at Yenne, opposite Belley, is a suspension bridge, traversed by the high road from Chamberry to Châlons. A monotonous sandy plain extends thence to Chana, across which the navigation is difficult, on account of sand-banks in its bed.

The Rhone, however, narrowed within a reduced channel, traverses a contracted defile, abreast of

Rt. Pierre Châtel, a fort belonging to France, built on the summit of a rock 400 or 500 ft. high. The river rushes through the gorge at its base with a furious speed; but the steamer, steered by a skilful pilot, passes safely over the rapids, which, at the point of greatest fury, are crossed by a wire suspension bridge.

The river below alters its course, turning to the N. W., and emerging upon an open country, it is intersected by numerous low islands, the resort of smugglers. Between St. Genis and (l.) St. Didier the river Guiers, which descends from the Grande Chartreuse (R. 131.), joins the Rhone: it is the boundary of Savoy, separating it from the Department de l'Isère; below this, therefore, both banks of the Rhone are French.

Rt. the ruined Castle of Groslée.

L. Castle of Quinsonas.

To this succeeds the defile of St. Albin, where the channel is contracted to a width of 60 ft.; it is walled in by bare rocks, destitute of verdure.

The Rhone is traversed from side to side by a reef of rocks a little above the (rt.) village of Le Sault, so called from the leap, or rapid, formed by the river over them. They are smooth, and not very dangerous, but the steamer in ascending has difficulty in stemming the torrent which sweeps over this inclined plane. Here the river is crossed by a handsome stone bridge, the central arch being 105 ft. span. On either side are extensive quarries of limestone, furnishing building materials for Lyons and other towns on the banks of the Rhone below.

Rt. St. Sorlin, with the remains of ancient fortifications.

L. Vertrieux, a modern château in the foreground, near the river; and behind it, on an isolated rock, its ancient castle rises in picturesque ruins.

Rt. at Lagnieux, where a suspension bridge of wire spans the Rhone, the hills subside into a monotonous plain, stretching away to Lyons

L. The entry of the cave called

Grotte de la Balme is about 10 minutes' walk from the river.

Rt. We pass the embouchure of the l'Ain, which gives its name to the department extending along the rt. bank of the Rhone from fort l'Ecluse nearly to Lyons. The Rhone below this assumes a very tortuous course between islands and sand-banks, unrelieved by objects of interest. Nothing announces the approach to a vast city, the borders of the river are so desolate and lonely. The steamer at length brings to under the fortress-crowned heights of La Croix Rousse, at the quai in the Faubourg of Bresse, on the outskirts of Rt. Lyons, described in R. 105.

ROUTE 156.

LYONS TO GENEVA, BY NANTUA AND BELLEGARDE.

151 kilom. = 93½ Eng. m.

Diligences daily.

The road for some distance, after quitting Lyons, runs parallel with the Rhone, up its rt. bank. The river, left to its own wayward impulse, straggles onward, overspreading the plain with wrecks of sterile sand and stones. The slope of la Pape, whence there is a good view of the river and the distant Alps of Dauphiné, is next ascended.

13 Miribel.

9 Montluel is a small town, of about 3,000 inhab., on the Seraine, which is crossed on quitting the place.

14 Meximieux. We reach the borders of the river Ain at Mollon.

11 Bublanne.

11 Pont d'Ain (Inn, Poste?), a town of 1,266 inhab. on the rt. bank of the Ain, at the foot of a height crowned by a castle, built by the dukes of Savoy. Here the road to Bourg strikes off (R. 159.).

The Ain is crossed by a stone bridge at Neuville, and its valley is quitted by the road at Poncin, remarkable for the ruins of a feudal castle, in order to reach 13 Cerdon.

From this the road ascends along the flank of a mountain, forming one side of a gorge, varied by the pretty fall of St. Marcellin, and by the ruined castles of Labatie and St. Julien.

The approach to Nantua, along the borders of its lake, is very pleasing, surrounded by mountains. It is about 1½ m. long.

19 Nantua (Inns: H. du Nord:— L'Ecu de France) is a town of 3,700 inhab., finely situated in the midst of the Jura mountains, at the extremity of its lake, hemmed in by bare precipices and dark woods. It possesses some considerable manufactures.

The Parish Church, originally attached to an abbey, is a "venerable and picturesque edifice, in the Romanesque style." The entrance, a round-headed arch, is surmounted by a circular window, and nearly all the rest of the building is early Pointed. The centre is surmounted by an octagonal lanthorn. Charles le Chauve, who died at Briord 877, was buried here.

The lake produces capital trout and craw-fish.

The scenery of the Jura mountains, through which the road winds, continues very interesting for the rest of the way. A little beyond Neyrolles we attain the summit of the pass, and, descending, skirt the shore of the Lake Sylant, about 2 m. long.

12 St. Germain de Joux.

At Chatillon de Michaille we cross the Valserine, and leave on the rt. the road leading to Seyssel (R. 155.). We reach the valley of the Rhone at 12 Bellegarde (Inn, Poste), the frontier town of France, placed at the junction of the Valserine with the Rhone. Passports are here called for, and baggage examined likewise, on entering France. Ten minutes' walk from the inn is the Perte du Rhone, a contracted portion of the channel, encumbered with rocks, where the river plunges into the earth, and continues its subterraneous course through caverns neither explored nor fathomed, which it has probably excavated by its own torrent in the limestone rocks, for about 120 yards. This phenomenon, however, is seen to perfection only when the river is low. At other times, when its volume exceeds that which the subterranean passage is able to contain, it flows along its upper bed, open to day, as well as below ground. At such times, says M. Simond, "la Perte du Rhone est perdue pour les voyageurs." The vault of rock which covers the subterranean canal has of late been partly removed by blasting, to facilitate the flottage of timber in detached trunks down the Rhone at high water; this tends to diminish the wonder of the Perte.

The width of the Rhone, which, on quitting the Lake of Geneva, is about 115 ft., is contracted at the Pont de Grezin, in the neighbourhood of the Perte, to 15 or 16 ft.

"The bed of the Valserine is more picturesque, and scarcely less curious than the Perte. It is worth while to descend from the garden of the inn into the worn channel of this little river, which is almost dry in summer time, except when a rivulet of its water burrows into the clefts and fantastic bends of its calcareous rock." — H. R.

The wild and narrowly contracted gorge through which the Rhone forces its way between Bellegarde and Collonges, formed by the Mont Vouache on the side of Savoy, and the Mont Credo, the extremity of the Jura, on that of France, is thus described by Cæsar, "Angustum et difficile inter Montem Juram, et flumen Rhodanum, quâ vix singuli currus ducerentur; mons autem altissimus impendebat, ut facile perpauci prohibere possent." Near the upper end of this defile, commanding the entrance into France, stands the very strong and picturesque fortress Fort de l'Ecluse, originally planned by Vauban, but ruined by the Austrians, and repaired since 1824 by the French government, who have used infinite labour and expense to strengthen this position. Additional batteries have been cut in the rock above the lower fortress, and these communicate with the barracks below by a broad staircase, 100 ft. high, hewn inside the solid mountain." — H. R. The high road is carried through the fortress. Permission to see it in detail may generally be obtained from the governor.

13 Collonges. Here the defile opens out. On quitting

16 St. Genix, you enter Switzerland. (GENEVA, in HAND-BOOK for SWITZERLAND).

ROUTE 159.

LYONS TO BESANÇON, BY BOURG, AND LONS-LE-SAULNIER.

217 kilom. = 134½ Eng. m.

A malleposte daily in 18 hours.

Diligences daily.

The road from Lyons is the same as R. 156., as far as

58 Pont d'Ain.

20 Bourg.—Inns: H. de l'Europe (?): — du Nord (?). This place was capital of the ancient division of La Bresse, and is now chef lieu of the Department de l'Ain; its population is 8996. It belonged to the Dukes of Savoy from the 11th to the 17th century, and was not finally gained by the French until 1600. It has neither trade nor manufactures, and the only object of interest is the Church of Nôtre Dame de Brou, outside the walls, a very remarkable edifice in the latest style of Gothic, verging into the Renaissance, constructed between 1511 and 1536 by Margaret of Austria, who was created by her father, the Emperor Maximilian, and confirmed by her nephew, Charles V., governor of the Netherlands. Her motto, fortune—infortune—fort une, is repeated in various parts of the building. The architect was "Maistre Loys Van Boglem," and the sculptor "Maistre Conrad." The W. front is surmounted by 3 gables, that in the centre being the most lofty; under it is a portal, consisting of a flattened arch, highly enriched with carvings, arabesques, and other ornaments. The decorations of the interior are concentrated upon the choir: rich and varied marbles, and peculiarly fine painted windows contribute to the splendour of the shrine, which contains the superb monuments of Margaret, the founder of the church, of her mother-in-law, Margaret de Bourbon (wife of Philip II. prince of Savoy), who made the vow, which her daughter accomplished, of building this church; and in the centre that of her husband, Philibert le Beau, which is the finest of all. The prince is represented above as dead, and below as dying. These tombs, all of white marble, are the work of an artist of Dijon named Colomban. The carving and decoration of the rood screen, the wood-work of the choir, and the altar-piece delicately sculptured out of alabaster, all deserve minute attention. The sun-dial in front of the portal, originally made in the 16th century, was reconstructed by the celebrated astronomer Joseph de Lalande, who was born at Bourg, 1732.

The district of La Bresse is famed for its poultry, honey, &c.

10 St. Etienne du Bois.

Coligny, a little beyond this relay, is the cradle of the illustrious family which sent forth the leader of the Protestants, the Admiral Coligny. He was born at Châtillon-sur-Loing.

18 St. Amours.

19 Beaufort.

15 Lons-le-Saulnier (Inn, Chapeau Rouge) is situated in a basin nearly surrounded by the mountains of the Jura, whose lower slopes are covered with vines. It is chef lieu of the Department of the Jura, and a flourishing town of nearly 8000 inhabitants.

At one end of the town is the brine spring, or well, 60 ft. deep, supplying the salt works, Salines, (whence the town received its ancient name, Ledo Salinarius), situated about a mile from the town, including vast evaporating houses for sparing fuel, by strengthening the brine before it is boiled.

Above the salt well rise the ruins of the Castle Montmorot.

This is the birth-place of the revolutionary general Lecourbe.

15 Mantry.

14 Poligny, on the high-road from Dijon to Geneva, R. 148.

9 Arbois. A good sparkling wine is grown here. It is the native place of General Pichegru.

9 Mouchard.

17 Quingey, in the Department of the Doubs.

12 Larnod.

10 Besançon.—Inn, H. National; very good and cheap.—F. P.

This ancient and interesting city, and first-rate fortress, originally capital of Franche Comté, and a free city of the empire, now chef lieu of the Department of the Doubs, is seated on the Doubs, which divides it into 2 parts, and nearly surrounds the ville haute, the larger and older portion. Its population is not less than 30,000. It is defended by a Citadel, built by Vauban, on an inaccessible rock, occupying the isthmus of the peninsula on which the town stands, and by several detached forts. There is a fine view from the citadel.

Besançon was the ancient Vesontio mentioned by Cæsar, and his description of it is so exact that no other will better pourtray its position. He tells us that it was the largest town of the Sequani, and so strong by nature as to form an excellent basis for a campaign, because nearly surrounded by the river Dubis (Doubs), making a curve like a horse-shoe about it, except for the space of about 600 ft.,

occupied by an eminence washed by the river on either side. A wall which surrounds this height converts it into a citadel, and unites it with the town. "Oppidum maximum Sequanorum; natura loci sic munitetur ut magnam ad diuendum bellum daret facultatem: propiora quod flumen Dubis ut circino circumductum, pene totum oppidum cingit: reliquum spatium quod non est amplius pedum DC qua flumen intermittit; mons continet magnâ altitudine, ita ut radices montis ejus ex utrâque parte ripæ fluminis contingant."—L. i. It is interesting to find the classical description backed as it were by still existing remains of the Roman city, which are both numerous and curious, consisting, not only of inscriptions, mosaics, pillars, and other fragments, but of buildings, the chief and oldest of which is a Triumphal Arch, still tolerably perfect, ornamented with niches, statues, and reliefs, called Porte Noire.

The old and narrow bridge over the Doubs is said also to rest on Roman foundations.

The porte Taillée is an ancient gateway of solid masonry, constructed in a cleft of the rock, which was cut through by the Romans to give passage to an aqueduct, constructed by them, to convey water to the city from the village Arcier, 7 m. distant, considerable fragments of which are still visible along the road leading to that village from the porte Rivotte. Outside the walls are the remains of an Amphitheatre.

The extensive promenade of Chamars, traversed by two branches of the Doubs, is said to occupy the site, as well as retain in part the name of the Roman "Campus Martius."

Cathedral of St. John has a fine Gothic nave.

The other churches are comparatively mo was built of the par moved h

XIV.

The C minister and of P tries, him Comté, b years here, intrigues himself w contribute College fo be built style of (like th various above a

The tensive
In th a native objects degrees

Wate
Switzer
the mos employi at home

Besa line of connect partly by ble: it w
Mouzieu,
Rhin.

History. city Cæsa sançon w person h it was c peace of lessly bes

Country
Paris by Dijon
burg; to

occupied by an eminence washed by the river on either side. A wall which surrounds this height converts it into a citadel, and unites it with the town. "Oppidum maximum Sequanorum; naturâ loci sic muniebatur ut magnum ad ducendum bellum daret facultatem: propterea quod flumen Dubis ut circino circumductum, pene totum oppidum cingit: reliquum spatium quod non est amplius pedum DC quâ flumen intermittit; mons continet magnâ altitudine, ita ut radices montis ejus ex utrâque parte ripæ fluminis contingant." — L. i. It is interesting to find the classical description backed as it were by still existing remains of the Roman city, which are both numerous and curious, consisting, not only of inscriptions, mosaics, pillars, and other fragments, but of buildings, the chief and oldest of which is a Triumphal Arch, still tolerably perfect, ornamented with niches, statues, and reliefs, called Porte Noire.

The old and narrow bridge over the Doubs is said also to rest on Roman foundations.

The porte Taillée is an ancient gateway of solid masonry, constructed in a cleft of the rock, which was cut through by the Romans to give passage to an aqueduct, constructed by them, to convey water to the city from the village Arcier, 7 m. distant, considerable fragments of which are still visible along the road leading to that village from the porte Rivotte. Outside the walls are the remains of an Amphitheatre.

The extensive promenade of Chamars, traversed by two branches of the Doubs, is said to occupy the site, as well as retain in part the name of the Roman "Campus Martius."

Cathedral of St. Jean has a fine Gothic nave.

The other churches are comparatively modern. The Palais de Justice was built 1749 to receive the court of the parliament of the province, removed hither from Dôle by Louis XIV.

The Cardinal Grandvelle, the able minister of the Emperor Charles V. and of Philip II., in the Low Countries, himself a native of Franche Comté, born at Ornans, spent many years here, when disgraced through the intrigues of his enemies, occupying himself with literary pursuits. He contributed to the enlargement of the College founded by his father, and he built the Palais Grandvelle, in the style of the Renaissance, uniting (like the schools at Oxford) the various orders of architecture, one above another.

The Hôpital St. Jacques is an extensive edifice, containing 500 beds.

In the Musée, partly the bequest of a native named Paris, are assembled objects of art and antiquity of various degrees of interest.

Watchmaking, introduced from Switzerland about 40 years ago, is the most important manufacture here, employing 2000 persons, who work at home for large houses.

Besançon stands on the important line of inland navigation, formed to connect the Rhine with the Rhone, partly by making the Doubs navigable: it was originally called Canal du Monsieur, now Canal du Rhone et Rhin.

History. In the vicinity of this city Cæsar defeated Ariovistus. Besançon was taken by Louis XIV. in person 1660, and the possession of it was confirmed to France at the peace of Nimeguen. It was fruitlessly besieged by the Allies in 1814.

Conveyances. Malleposte daily to Paris by Dôle and Dijon.

Diligences daily to Paris; to Strasburg; to Lyons.

SECTION IX.

CHAMPAGNE. — LORRAINE. — ALSACE. — THE VOSGES MOUNTAINS.

ROUTE		PAGE
162	Paris to Muhlhausen and Bâle, by Troyes, Bar-sur-Aube, Chaumont, Langres, and Vesoul, and the Baths of Bourbonne-les-Bains	534
164	Paris to Strasburg, by Sézanne, Bar-le-Duc, and Nancy or Luneville	537
166	Paris to the Baths of Plombières, by Ligny, Domremy, and Epinal	546
168	The Vosges Mountains. — Strasburg to Epinal, by Mutzig and St. Diey. — Excursion to the Ban de la Roche	548
170	Strasburg to Bâle. — Railroad by Schlestadt, Colmar, and Muhlhausen	550
171	Strasburg to Besançon, by Colmar, Thann, Belfort, and Montbelliard	553
175	Paris to Metz and Forbach, by Meaux, Château Thierry, Epernay, Châlons-sur-Marne, and Verdun	554
178	Paris to Mezières and Sedan, by Soissons and Rheims	560
180	Rheims to Luxembourg, by Stenay and Longwy	568
181	Nancy to Treves, by Metz and Thionville. — Descent of the Moselle	569
182	Metz to Luxembourg, or Arlon, by Longwy	570

ROUTE 162.

PARIS TO MUHLHAUSEN AND BÂLE, BY TROYES, BAR-SUR-AUBE, CHAUMONT, LANGRES, AND VESOUL, AND THE BATHS OF BOURBONNE-LES-BAINS.

To Troyes, 158 kilom. = 97¾ Eng. m. Malleposte, 12 hours.

Troyes to Bâle, 329 kilom. = 204 Eng. m.

The road is the same as R. 144., as far as 158 Troyes, see p. 514.

A malleposte runs daily hence to Belfort and Muhlhausen, in 24 hours.

Diligences daily.

The road ascends the valley of the Barse, traversing the theatre of its memorable campaign of 1814. The bridge of La Guilottière over the Barse was stormed and carried by the Bavarians, March 4, after a stout resistance from the French. Lusigny, a little farther on, was the scene of a conference, followed by an armistice, Feb. 24.

19 Montiéramey.

13 Vandeuvre.

The Barse rises at the very foot of the old castle, built, it is supposed, in the 13th century.

A ridge of high land is now surmounted, and the road descends into the valley of the Aube, whence the Dépt. gets its name.

That river is crossed, and the road carried up its rt. bank, as far as 21 Bar-sur-Aube. — Inn, La Poste.

Bar is a town of 3890 inhabitants, at the foot of Mont St. Germaine, on the rt. bank of the Aube, here crossed by a stone bridge, upon which a chapel was erected to mark the spot where Charles VII. caused the Bastard de Bourbon, who had revolted against him, to be broken on the wheel, and his body sewn up in a sack and cast into the river, 1440.

There are two churches here: St. Pierre is very ancient, and its pavement sunk considerably below the level of the ground; and St. Maclou, which has a curious altar-piece of wood, carved and gilt.

An important and hard-contested action was fought here, Feb. 27, 1814, when the Allies, under Schwarzenburg, retreating before the French general Oudinot, turned round and made a stand, the result of which was that the French were obliged to retire across the river, having lost 3000 men, the Allies 2000. Schwarzenburg and Witgenstein were both wounded here. On the preceding 25th February, a conference of the ministers of the allied sovereigns was held here, in which the firmness of Lord Castlereagh in refusing the English subsidies to Bernadotte, who was hanging on the French frontier unwilling to take a part in the invasion of France, unless he detached 2 corps of his army in support of Blucher, contributed in no slight degree to decide the wavering policy of the Allies, and to bring the war to an end. These reinforcements, thus extorted from the Swedish army, enabled the Allies to fight the battle of Laon, and put a stop to Napoleon's successful efforts to arrest the march of the Allies on Paris.

At Brienne le Château, 19 m. lower down the Aube, Napoleon went to school; a poor friendless Corsican boy, not 10 years old, able to speak no language but Italian, 1779. The military college which he attended was suppressed, 1790, and the building sold and pulled down. At this spot, 25 years after, he attempted the masterly manœuvre of cutting the army of Silesia in two, by marching suddenly from Châlons and interposing his forces between Blucher and Schwarzenburg, so as to prevent their junction.

The town is named after its handsome château, built by Louis de Lomenie, last Comte de Brienne, with the fortune obtained by his marriage with the daughter of a fermier general. It was the head quarters of Blucher during the memorable engagement of Jan. 29, 1814, alluded to above. After resisting the assaults and bombardments of the French during the whole day, by which the town had been set on fire, and nearly destroyed, the Prussian commander was very nearly surprised and made prisoner by a party of French grenadiers, who burst into the town at night through the park. He escaped, it is said, by leading his horse down a stair. Almost at the same spot, and at the same time, the career of Buonaparte, who was advancing to enter the town, was nearly cut short by a Cossack, one of a band who had dashed unawares upon the emperor's staff, and, signalling him out from the rest, charged him with his lance in rest, and was only arrested by a bullet from the pistol of Gourgaud, which brought the daring lancer to the ground, when so near to the emperor that he fell at his feet. Napoleon took up his head quarters in the Château, which he promised to make an Imperial residence or military school, to compensate to the inhabitants for the losses his cannon had caused them. But his promises were not destined to be fulfilled. However, he left by his will a million of francs to the town, where he received the first rudiments of his military education.

About 10 m. from Bar-sur-Aube, in an opposite direction, up the valley, is (or rather was) the Abbey of Clairvaux, founded 1114, in a savage glen, previously known as the vallée d'Absinthe, by St. Bernard, then only 24 years old. It is now converted into a very capacious prison, or Maison Centrale de Detention.

Its noble church, in which kings and princes were interred, not inferior to Nôtre Dame of Paris, no longer exists. After withstanding the storm of the Revolution, it was pulled down in the first year of the Restoration, without leaving one stone upon another, not even St. Bernard's monument, in order to make room for a prison yard!

We quit the valley of the Aube on leaving Bar, and soon after enter the Département Haute Marne.

15 Colombey les deux Eglises. About 15 m. to the N. is the Château de Cirey, where Voltaire passed 5 years of his life in a degrading retirement, in the company of the Marquise de Chatelet. He composed in this retreat Mahomet, Merope, L'Enfant Prodigue, and the Discours Philosophique sur l'Homme.

8 Juzennecourt.

In the midst of a country destitute of picturesqueness, but abounding in iron furnaces, works, forges, &c., stands 17 Chaumont (Inn, Ecu de France?), chef lieu of the Dépt. Haute Marne, a dull town of 6318 inhabitants, planted on a sort of elevated platform on the l. bank of the Marne, and retaining some fragments of old fortifications. A square tower alone remains of the Castle of Haute Feuille, which belonged to the Comtes de Champagne.

The Treaty of Chaumont, signed here by the ministers of the allied sovereigns, March 1st, 1814, stipulated that in case Napoleon should refuse to agree to the reduction of the territory of France to the limits existing previous to the Revolution the four allied powers, Austria, Russia, Prussia, and England, should each maintain an army of 150,000 men in the field, and that Great Britain should contribute a subsidy of 5 millions a year towards their support; it also provided for the reorganisation of the other states of Europe.

There are some manufactures in the town, and it has a large trade in the iron made in the neighbouring ironworks; iron is the staple manufacture of the Dépt. Charcoal is chiefly employed in smelting the ore. From Chaumont a road strikes off to Bourbonne-les-Bains.

The country from Chaumont to Langres is such as one would wish to pass in the dark, so few attractions has it for the eye: the road runs up the valley of the Marne.

17 Vesaignes.

A steep ascent leads into 18 Langres (Inns: Trois Marchands; exceedingly good:—Poste?), situated on the slope of a hill skirted by the Marne, at a considerable elevation: 8303 inhabitants. It is of military importance, as commanding the passage from the basin of the Saône into that of the Seine, and the government has consequently decided on making a fortress of it. It is mentioned by Cæsar as capital of the Lingones, and its antiquity is undoubted. The Cathedral is its finest edifice; it is built chiefly in the Romanesque style, with ornaments such as ram's heads, borrowed apparently from classic architecture; some portion, however, is Gothic. The portal, a work of the last century, is quite inappropriate, and the choir-screen, resembling an arch of triumph, built 1555, is not much better. St. Didier, the oldest church, is degraded into a receptacle for fire-engines.

The only vestige of a Roman building is an arch built into the town wall.

Diderot was born at Langres: he was the son of a cutler.

Langres is a sort of French Sheffield, and produces the best fine cutlery.

About 30 m. N. E. of Langres lies the watering-place Bourbonne-les-Bains, (Inns: H. du Commerce:—Vosges:—Tête du Bœuf), resorted to on account of its saline hot springs, which have a temperature of 131° Fahr., and are efficacious in rheumatism, scrofula, and paralysis. The bathing establishment contains about 50 baths, and there is accommodation for more than 1000 visitors. The number usually exceeds 800, exclusive of military, who are received in a government hospital.

The situation is elevated, the climate rainy, and the resources are said to be few.

13 Griffonotes.

11 Fayl Billot. — Inn, Lion d'Or ? 2411 inhabitants.

From the heights surmounted by the road, views are obtained of the Vosges mountains.

13 Cintrey (Dept. Haute Saône).

12 Combeau Fontaine.

12 Port-sur-Saône, 2067 inhabitants, is situated on the Saône, here crossed by a bridge, over which our road is carried. The Romans called it Portus Abucinus. The Saône becomes navigable at Gray, 30 m. lower down; but a canal has been undertaken to extend the water way up to this point. It is a hilly country.

Vesoul. — Inns: Cigogne: — Madeleine. Although chef lieu of the Dépt. Haute Saône this is a dull but considerable town of 16,738 inhabitants, possessing absolutely no interest, but seated in a fertile country.

11 Calmoutier, a dirty village.

A tolerably level road through a country diversified with woodland of oak, birch, and hazels.

18 Lure (Inn: H. de France; clean) a town of 3058 inhabitants, in the midst of a marshy plain.

The road reaches the hills at 19 Champagney, near which there are coal mines employing many hands.

The Dépt. of the Haut Rhin is entered at Essort, a little short of 12 Belfort, described in Route 171.

Here the road to Muhlhausen turns off on the l. (R. 171.) The distance hence is 18 kilom. The road lies through a hilly country, passing the iron mines of Perouse; and from the high hill, surmounted on quitting

15 Chavannes, commands a fine view of the Swiss mountains. Here the Canal du Rhone et Rhin is crossed. (See p. 546.)

20 Altkirch is a manufacturing town of 3028 inhabitants, and a place of some antiquity. Its old castle, in ruins, was occupied by the archdukes of Austria when they visited Alsace. It is seated on the Ill.

15 Lochwürth.

13 St. Louis, the last French town.

A little to the l. of the road lies Huningen, once an important fortress, built by Vauban for Louis XIV., 1681, close to the l. bank of the Rhine and to the Swiss frontier, but now a heap of ruins, having been captured by the Austrians in 1815, and blown up pursuant to treaty.

4 Bâle, in the SWISS HAND-BOOK, p. 1.

ROUTE 164.

PARIS TO STRASBURG, BY SEZANNE, BAR-LE-DUC, AND NANCY, AND BY LUNEVILLE.

454 kilom. = 281½ Eng. m.

Malleposte (3 places) daily in 36 hours.

Diligences daily in 60 hours. In 1842 there were 2 which made the journey in 48 hours. N.B. The diligence which goes by Metz is 10 hours longer on the road.

For those who travel post the journey may be divided into 3 days from Paris, thus, 1st night, Vitry; 2nd, Luneville; 3d, Strasburg; and returning, 1st, Nancy, 2nd, Sézanne, 3rd, Paris. Or, more leisurely, starting from Strasburg, 1st day, Luneville, 12 hours.

2nd day, Toul, 5 hours, exclusive of the time spent in seeing Nancy.

3rd, Vitry-le-Français, 10 hours.

4th, Coulommiers, 10 hours.

5th, Paris, 7 hours.

The Inns on this road generally speaking are dirty and bad, except that at Nancy.

A new post-road has been opened from Paris to Sézanne, which saves 6 kilomètres, by 14 Champigny.

14 Ozouer la Ferrière.

17 Fontenay.

17 Vauday.

17 Courtarou.

15 Courgivaux.

18 Sézanne.

The other road, on quitting the fortifications of Paris, leaves on the rt. the Bois de Vincennes, described in Galignani's Paris Guide, and ascends the valley of the Marne, by 15* Neuilly-sur-Marne (Seine et Oise), to 14 Pomponne, (Seine et Marne).

13 Couilly and Creci are almost one town, separated only by the river.

"The village La Chapelle has a beautiful old church, and a ci-devant château."— I.

20 Coulommiers (Inn, L'Ours; tolerable), is an unimportant town of 3373 inhabitants, in the pretty valley of the Morin, which turns several mills.

18 La Ferté Gaucher, also on the Morin, studded with paper mills near this.

22 Retourneloup.

13 Sézanne, (Inn, H. de France; very decent) (Dépt. de la Marne), a town of 4016 inhab. The church is curious; it is pewed, and contains some painted glass. The Boulevards are good. Sézanne was taken and burnt by the Earl of Salisbury, 1423.

About 15 m. N. W. of this is Montmirail, the scene of one of the most decisive of Napoleon's victories during his so-called "expedition of the Marne," when his arms were 3 times successful in the course of 5 days, (February 9 — 14, 1814,) beating Blucher, and taking 7000 Prussian prisoners, besides cannon and standards.

Montmirail was the birth-place of the Cardinal de Retz, 1614.

"The solitariness of the road from Sézanne to Vitry is most striking and unusual to one fresh from well-peopled England. It crosses a vast, upland, arable plain, whose entire population must exist in towns and villages widely separated from one another, since there are no hamlets or single cottages: the consequence of which must be a loss of time and labour to every cultivator, who must go 3 or 4 miles, or perhaps more, to and from his labour field every morning and evening." — I.

21 Fére Champenoise.

On the 24th of March, 1814, this town of 2049 inhabitants witnessed the decisive defeat of the French, under Marmont and Mortier, by the allied army, vastly superior to them in numbers though, consisting of 20,000 cavalry and artillery alone. Nearly at the same time, and only a short distance off, another French corps, conveying guns and bread, was surrounded by Russian and Prussian cavalry, and having, in spite of the superiority of number opposed to them, bravely refused to yield, was cut to pieces. 3000 French fell here, many of them National Guards. By this victory Paris was laid open to the Allies; 7000 prisoners, 80 guns, 200 baggage waggons, fell into their hands. It is said not a musket was fired on their side, the day having been decided by charges, by the sabre, and by artillery.

16 Sommesous, a hamlet made apparently by the passage of the new road.

14 Coole. "A new hamlet, smaller than Sommesous. Between Coole and Vitry not one house occurs: it is one immense open plain, without a tree or a village in sight."— I.

14 Vitry-le-Français (Inn, La Cloche; landlady English), is a town of modern origin, on the Marne (Matrona), which is here navigable, built 1545 by Francis I., and fortified, to supply the place of Vitry-le-Brulé, 2 m. off, which had been taken and destroyed by Charles V. 6976 inhab.

16 Longchamp.

At the point where the Marne first becomes navigable stands

12 St. Dizier (Inn, Soleil; tolerable), a very long and very narrow town, with 6197 inhabitants, of a modern aspect, having been almost entirely burnt down 1775 through the carelessness of a baker. The Church, at the N. end, has a pretty and singular variety of Gothic windows. A portion remains of the old Castle, which must have witnessed the siege of the place in 1544 by the Spanish army of Charles V., commanded by Ferdinand de Gonzaga, assisted by Maurice of Saxony, Albert of Brandenburg, and the Prince of Orange, (killed at a spot marked by a cross,) who served under him. The town, commanded by the Comte de Sancerre and the Seigneur de Lalande, resisted for a month; and, by thus delaying the march of the Spaniards on Paris, enabled Francis I. to collect his forces to oppose them. The produce of the forges and forests of the Dépt. of the Haute Marne, which is more abundantly supplied with wood and iron than almost any other in France, is embarked here on the river.

* Adding 8 kilom. de faveur, charged 23 kilom.

About 14 m. S. E. of St Dizier is Joinville, (Inn, Soleil d'Or,) an interesting town, prettily situated on the Marne, surrounded by vineyards. The ancient and noble castle of the Princes de Joinville, the cradle of the Ducs de Guise, in which the famous "Ligue du Bien Publique" was signed, 1585, was sold, in order to be pulled down, by Philippe Egalité, Duc d'Orleans, 1790, and no vestiges of it exist. The building called Petit Château was a country seat of the Duc de Guise, the owner of the town. The domain was created a principality by Henri II., in behalf of François Duc de Guise, who was assassinated by Poltrot. The Sire de Joinville, the faithful servant and biographer of St. Louis, was born here. There are many iron works on the borders of the river, the supply of ore being very abundant.

12 Sandrupt (Département de la Meuse).

12 Bar-le-Duc. — Inn, Le Cygne. This town, the chef lieu of the Department of La Meuse, has 12,496 inhabitants, and stands on the Ornain. It was for several centuries the seat of the line of Dukes of Bar, whose castle is destroyed all but a small fragment.

In the church of St. Pierre, in the upper town, is the monument of René de Châlons, Prince of Orange, who was killed before the walls of St. Dizier (p. 534.). It bears an emaciated effigy or skeleton of white marble on a black altar tomb.

There is some trade here in timber, iron, and vins de Bar, which resemble champagne. Marshal Oudinot and General Excelmans were born here.

Diligences to Châlons-sur-Marne, Verdun, and Metz.

16 Ligny (Inn, Sauvage?) is a town of 3,012 inhab. It has pretty walks, formed in what was the park of the old château.

The road to the Baths of Plombières, by Domremy, turns off here. (See R. 166.).

9 St. Aubin.

14 Void. — Inn, Aigle Noir; not recommended.

About 24 m. S. of Void, in the Dépt. des Vosges, is the village of Domremy, the birth-place of Joan of Arc. (R. 166.)

About 16 m. N. of Void is St. Mihiel en Lorraine, where De Retz wrote his memoirs.

In the stage beyond Void we cross the infant Meuse, and afterwards traverse the mountain ridge separating that river from the Moselle.

11 Lay St. Remy.

10 Toul (Inn, H. de L'Europe) is a fourth-rate fortress, irregularly bastioned, seated on the Moselle, and containing a population of 7314 inhabitants. It was not definitively added to France until 1552, having previously maintained a sort of independence as a free city of the German empire, under the nominal control of a long line of bishops.

The chief edifice is the Gothic Cathedral, a fine structure, founded in the 10th century. Its portal and W. front were designed and raised by Jacquemin de Commercy (1447), and are much admired; the façade is 227 ft. high.

The Ch. of St. Gengoult is said also to deserve notice.

The H. de Ville, a modern building, was originally the Bishop's palace.

Toul is the birth-place of Marshal Gouvion St. Cyr.

11 Velaine.

11 NANCY. — Inn, H. de France; very good; the best on the road.

Nancy, formerly capital of Lorraine, now chef lieu of the Dépt. de la Meurthe, is a city of 35,000 inhab., seated on a fertile plain, not far from the Meurthe. It has been styled the prettiest town in France, and it has perhaps some claim to the epithet from the regularity and uniformity of its buildings and breadth of its streets. "Bordeaux is far more magnificent; Rouen and Nantes are more lively; but there is more equality in Nancy: it is almost all good, and the public buildings are numerous. The Place Royale is superb." It is surrounded by 6 or 7 fine public buildings, including the H. de Ville and theatre, and ornamented with a statue of Stanislas Leszczynski, ex-king of Poland, to whom Nancy is indebted for its modern aspect and architectural embellishments. After abdicating the throne of Poland (1735), he resided here many years as Duke of Lorraine and Bar until his death (1766), when these domains fell to the crown of France. The Place Royale communicates by a triumphal arch, also erected by Stanislas, with the Place Carrière, which is prolonged into the Cours d'Orleans, terminating in the gateway called Porte Neuve, erected 1785 to celebrate the birth of the Dauphin, the victories of France, and her alliance with the United States.

In the old town, whose streets, except the Cours d'Orleans and Place de Grève, are irregular, stands a portion of the old Palace of the Dukes of Lorraine, now a barrack of gendarmerie. The portal is admired.

The churches in this part of the town are — St. Epore, from whose tower the Burgundian officers of Charles the Bold, to the number of nearly 100, were hanged in revenge for the death of Suffron du Bachier, chamberlain of René II., Duke of Lorraine, whom Charles had seized and put to death while besieging Nancy (1477). Under the tower is a fine portal, and behind the altar a bas-relief of the Last Supper, by Drouin, a sculptor of Nancy. In the Chapel of the Conception are ancient frescoes, much injured by repainting.

The Church of the Cordeliers, built 1484, contains the tombs of several Dukes of Lorrain. That of René II., 1515, is a curious monument of the Renaissance, ornamented with coloured statues of saints and angels, above which the Almighty is introduced. Beside it is that of the Cardinal de Vaudémont, consisting of a kneeling statue, by Drouin. The other monuments are those of Callot, the artist and clever etcher, a native of Nancy; of Antoine de Vaudémont and his lady, 1447; of Philippa of Gueldres, much praised as a work of art, by the sculptor Ligier-Richier, and two others. From the nave you enter the Chapelle Ducale or Rotonde, an octagonal structure, rich in marbles, prefaced by the arms of Lorraine and Austria, erected as a funeral chapel for the Dukes of Lorraine. The coffins were taken up at the Revolution, and thrown into a public cemetery; but in 1815 the Emperor of Austria, in company with Louis XVIII., having visited the chapel, then degraded and dilapidated, caused it to be restored, and the coffins to be replaced.

The Cathedral is a modern Italian edifice in the new town.

Nancy is well furnished with Gates of modern Italian architecture: that of St. Jean leads out of the town to the Croix du Duc de Bourgogne, raised to mark the spot where the lifeless body of Charles the Bold was discovered in a pond, near what was then the Marais de St. Jean, two days after the battle of 1477, when the might of Burgundy was laid prostrate by hireling Swiss and German lands-knechts engaged to support Duke René of Lorraine, whose domains Charles had unjustly invaded. He rushed on certain destruction with a dispirited army, inferior to that of his opponents, and betrayed by his Neapolitan favourite, Campo Basso.

At the extremity of the Faubourg St. Pierre stands the Church of Bon Secours, occupying the site of one raised by the Duc René to commemorate this victory. Having fallen to ruin, it was rebuilt 1738 by the ex-king of Poland, Stanislas, and contains the tombs, in white marble, of himself and his queen. He was burned to death by his clothes accidentally catching fire as he sat at the fire-side. Here are or were preserved several standards taken from the Turks by various Princes of Lorraine in 1664, 1687, and 1716.

The Cotton manufacture is carried on to a considerable extent at Nancy, as well as that of Cloth; but embroidery, of the kind called "plumetis," upon cambric, muslin, and jaconots, employs the greatest number of hands, amounting in and about the town to 20,000 or 25,000 persons, but only one-third of the number receive constant employment.

Conveyances. Malleposte to Paris and Strasburg daily.

Diligences, ditto, and to Metz; to Luneville and Lyons; to Langres, Besançon, Colmar; to Châlons-sur-Marne, &c.

There are 2 roads from Nancy to Sarrebourg, a. by Luneville, 72 kilom., b. by Bourdonnay, 65 kilom. On quitting Nancy, the former road traverses the faubourg St. Pierre, passing the Church of Bon Secours, and crosses the Meurthe at St. Nicholas, where is a very fine Gothic Church, begun 1494 and finished 1544: the vault of its roof, more than 100 feet above the pavement, is supported on very slender piers.

15 Dombasle: here are remains of an old Castle.

12 Lunéville (Inn, Sauvage; good), a town of 12,636 inhabitants, near the junction of the Vezouse with the Meurthe, consists chiefly of straight streets and regular buildings, but is scarcely otherwise remarkable than for the Treaty of Peace signed here 1801 between France and Austria, by which the frontier of the Rhine was conceded to France, as a consequence of the campaign of Marengo. The Palace was built by Leopold, Duke of Lorraine, at the beginning of the last century, and was sometime occupied by the ex-king of Poland, Stanislas.

This is one of the chief stations for cavalry in France.

15 Bénaménil.

15 Blamont.

15 Heming, where we fall into the other road

---

b. by

14 Champenoux.

17 Moyenvic, a town of 1295 inhab. which formerly possessed salt works, abandoned 1831, since the discovery of a mine of rock-salt at Dieuze, (3892 inhabitants) about 9 m. off, where the most extensive salt-works in France have been established, producing annually 145,000 quintals, supplied chiefly from very copious brine springs as well as rock salt, and employing 400 men. There is also a considerable manufacture of soda and other chemical products.

6 m. N. of Moyenvic is the town of Château Salins.

"From Moyenvic, or even farther W., the country traversed is a vast uninclosed arable plain, uninhabited, save in the towns or villages; scarcely one hamlet or farm-house, hardly a solitary cabaret at the road side." — I.

14 Bourdonnay.

20 Heming.

8 Sarrebourg (Inn, Le Sauvage : — Grand Hotel), a town of 2164 inhabitants, on the rt. bank of the Sarre, or Saar.

8 Hommarting.

9 Phalsbourg (Inn, H. de la Ville de Metz) is one of Louis XIV.'s fortresses, planned by Vauban in the place of older works: it is of importance from its position, under the crest of the Vosges, as commanding the defiles of those mountains, and is itself built on the living rock.

On the next stage the road crosses the hill of Saverne, the dorsal ridge of the Vosges, the ascent and descent of which are not much less than 8 miles. The spire of Strasburg may be seen in clear weather from the top. We now enter the Dépt. du Bas Rhin. The steep slope is traversed by the road in circuitous windings, by which it is brought gradually down. The entrance into Alsace is very picturesque, presenting a pleasing picture of fertility. The people differ much in customs, dress, and language from the French.

9 Saverne, (Germ. Zabern,) (Inn, Poste), a town of 5106 inhab. on the Zorn, once residence of the Bishops of Strasburg. It suffered severely in the 30 Years' War; but has ceased to be fortified since 1696.

Near the town are the ruined castles of Greifenstein and Hoch Barr.

You now enter the level plain of Alsace, inhabited by people of the German race. The way to Strasburg is described by A. Young, as through one of the richest scenes of soil and cultivation to be met with in France.

14 Wasselonne, pop. 4192, a manufacturing town, with numerous cotton mills.

12 Ittenheim.

The road now enters the valley of the Rhine. Not one gentleman's place occurs between Bourdonnay and 17 Strasburg. — Inns: H. de Paris; the best and good; table d'hôte at 1 and 5, 3 fr.; breakfast 1¼ fr.; rooms from 2 to 4 fr. Omnibuses run from the inns to the steamers on the Rhine, and to the railway: — Maison Rouge (Rothe haus): — La Fleur; a new and large house, in a centrical situation, near the diligences, and the cathedral; the landlord speaks English: — Rebstock (the Vine); a second class German inn, but good.

Strasburg, capital of the ancient province of Alsace (Elzass) is a very strong frontier fortress, with 70,298 inhabitants, and a garrison of 6000 men, even in time of peace; situated at the distance of about 1½ m. from the Rhine, on the Ill, which, on its way to join that important river, intersects the town in all directions by canals. Strasburg is the Argentoratum of the Romans.

Though it has now for a long time been united to France, and forms at present the chief town of the department of the Bas Rhin, yet it bears all the external aspect of a German town in the appearance of the streets and houses, and in the costume and language of its inhabitants. German is generally spoken by the lower orders, though French is taught in the schools. Louis XIV. got possession of Strasburg, which was an imperial city of the German empire, in 1681, by an unwarrantable attack during the time of peace.

The principal and most interesting building in the town is the Cathedral, or Münster, one of the noblest Gothic edifices in Europe, remarkable for its spire, the highest in the world, rising 474 feet above the pavement; 24 feet higher than the great Pyramid of Egypt, and 140 feet higher than St. Paul's. The artist who designed this admirable masterpiece of airy openwork was Erwin of Steinbach: his plans are still preserved in the town.

He died in 1318, when the work was only half finished: it was continued by his son, and afterwards by his daughter Sabina. The remains of this family of architects are interred within the cathedral. The tower, begun 1277, was not completed till 1439, long after their deaths, and 424 years after the church was commenced, by John Hültz of Cologne, who was summoned to Strasburg for this end. Had the original design been carried into execution, both the towers would have been raised to the same height. A doorway, in the south side of the truncated tower, leads to the summit of the spire. On the platform, about $\frac{2}{3}$ds of the way up, is a telegraph, and a station for the watchmen, who are set to look out for fires. One of them will accompany those who wish to mount the upper spire, and will unlock the iron grate which closes the passage. There is no difficulty or danger in the ascent to a person of ordinary nerve or steadiness of head; but the stone-work of the steeple is so completely open, and the pillars which support it are so wide apart, and cut so thin, that they more nearly resemble a collection of bars of iron or wood; so that at such a height one might almost fancy one's self suspended in a cage over the city; and, if the foot were to slip, the body might possibly drop through the open fret-work. At the same time, the elaborateness of the tracery, and the sharpness of the angles and ornaments, are proofs of the skill of the architect, and the excellent materials he had chosen; and it is only by a close inspection that the delicacy of the workmanship can be truly appreciated. Within a few feet of the top, the winding stair terminates, under a species of carved rosette. Several instances are recorded of persons who have either fallen, or have thrown themselves, off the top. The upper part of the spire, within and without, is covered with neatly carved names, chiefly of freemasons(?), who have visited it; among them may be read Stolberg, Göthe, Schlosser, Herder.

The view of the multitude of rusty-coloured tiled roofs of the town is not very pleasing; nor is it the bird's-eye panorama of the rich district around, of the Rhine and Black Forest in Germany, and of the Vosges Mountains on the side of France, that will reward the adventurous climber; but rather the exploit, the great elevation, and the near view which it affords of the steeple.

Now to descend to the body of the church. The exterior of the west end deserves the most minute examination.

"The gigantic mass, over the solid part of which is thrown a netting of detached arcades and pillars, which, notwithstanding their delicacy, from the hardness and excellent preservation of the stone, are so true and sharp as to look like a veil of the finest cast-iron, contains a circular window 48 feet in diameter, and rises to the height of 230 feet; i. e. higher than the TOWERS of York Minster." — Hope's Architecture.

"The building," says Mr. Whewell, "looks as though it were placed behind a rich open screen, or in a case of woven stone. The effect of the combination is very gorgeous, but with a sacrifice of distinctness from the multiplicity and intersections of the lines." The triple portal in the W. front deserves minute examination, on account of its sculptures, statues, and bas-reliefs; as does also the porch on the S. side, executed by Sabina, the daughter of Erwin. Although the greater portion of these carvings are modern, the originals having been destroyed by the democrats of the Revolution, who melted down the great doors of brass into sous-pieces, yet they have been restored with a perfect exactness, with great truth of sentiment, and good taste, by MM. Kirstein et Haumack. The group of the Death of the Virgin is executed in a masterly manner.

The nave was begun in 1015, and finished in 1275. The choir, far inferior to it in size and proportion, is part of an older building, attributed to the time of Charlemagne. The most remarkable things in the interior are the vast and beautiful marigold window, the rich painted glass, executed partly in 1348, partly in the 15th century, the pulpit of carved stone (date 1487), and the famous clock, in the south transept, made in 1571, which, after standing still for more than 50 years, has at length been repaired by a watchmaker of Strasburg. At 12, all its clockwork, puppets, and images are set in motion. The part of the church where it is now placed is supported by a beautiful single pillar, ornamented with statues: above the Gothic border, which runs along the wall, appears a figure of the architect of the minster, Erwin of Steinbach, carved by himself: he is interred here; and in 1835 the tombstone was discovered in the little court behind the chapel of St. John. A statue of him has lately been erected in the porch on the S. side of the nave.

The Guild of Freemasons has existed at Strasburg since the foundation of the minster, and is the parent of the lodges throughout Germany.

Two ancient Gothic houses near the Palais have been lately repaired, and deserve notice.

The Church of St. Thomas, appropriated to the use of a Protestant congregation, contains the Monument of Marshal Saxe, erected to his memory by Louis XV., the masterpiece of the sculptor Pigalle, and the result of 25 years' labour. It represents the General descending with a calm mien to the grave, while France, personified in a beautiful female figure, endeavours to detain him, and at the same time to stay the threatening advance of death. It is looked upon as a very successful effort of the chisel: though somewhat theatrical, there is a tenderness of expression about the female figure which is truly charming. This monument was saved from destruction at the Revolution by a citizen of Strasburg, named Mangelschott, who covered it over with hay and straw. Schöpflin, and a brother of the pastor Oberlin, are buried in this church; and there are one or two other small monuments. Two bodies, said to be of a Count of Nassau Saarwerden and his daughter, are shown, on account of the wonderfully perfect state in which flesh and clothes have been preserved after the lapse of more than a century. This is truly a disgusting spectacle.

Some curious portions of a "Dance of Death" were discovered in 1823, painted on the walls of the new Church.

The Mairie, in the Brandgasse, contains a museum of bad or second-rate pictures.

The Academie Royale, originally a Protestant school, founded 1538, raised to the dignity of an University in 1621, but suppressed at the Revolution, has produced several remarkable scholars, as Schöpflin, Oberlin, Schweighäuser, &c.: here also Göthe completed his studies, and took his degree of Doctor in Laws, 1772. His residence at Strasburg is admirably described in his autobiography. The Academy possesses a Museum of Natural History, which ranks far higher than the common average of provincial collections. It is very complete in the productions of Alsace, and especially in the fossils of the grès bigarré; and there is a large series of the fossil plants discovered at Sulz-les-Bains and Muhlhausen. The botanical collection contains the section of the trunk of a silver fir, from the Hochwald, near Barr; its diameter was 8 feet close to the ground, its height 150 feet. There are many other specimens of woods, preserved in such a manner as not only to interest the botanist, but to be useful to the practical man, to the carpenter and the like, by showing the texture and quality of the timber.

The Public Library, near the new Church, boasts of many literary curiosities: the principal are, the "Landsberg Missal," or "Hortus Deliciarum," of Herrade, Abbess of Hohenberg, richly and copiously decorated with illuminations and miniatures in the early Byzantine style, executed in 1180; many early-printed books; Cicero, printed by Faust, 1465; a Bible, printed at Strasburg, 1466, by Eggestein; Mentelin's Bible, printed here in the same year.

Here also is deposited a collection of antiquities, chiefly Roman, and found in Alsace; also some monuments of the middle ages; a statue of Rudolph of Habsburg; and the town standard (carroccio) of Strasburg, and some painted glass from Molsheim.

The earliest attempt at printing was made at Strasburg (about 1436) by John Guttemburg, who finally brought his invention to perfection at Mayence. Peter Schöffer, who assisted him, and made many improvements, particularly in the casting of metallic letters, was a citizen of Strasburg. The total number of volumes in the Strasburg library exceeds 100,000. A statue of Guttemburg has lately been erected on the Marché aux Herbes, now called Place Guttemberg, modelled by David, and it appears, on the whole, not inferior to the one at Mayence.

Strasburg is regarded as one of the strongest fortresses in France or in Europe; its fortifications, including the citadel of 5 bastions, whose outer works extend to the arm of the Rhine, were laid out by Vauban, 1682—84. Persons interested in military matters will be disposed to visit the arsenal of a fortress so important as Strasburg: it contains fire-arms for 155,000 men, and 952 pieces of cannon, 412 of which are required for the defence of the town and the citadel. There is a cannon foundery here, and one of the largest depôts of artillery in France. By means of large sluices, constructed in the time of Louis XV., by Vauban, at the spot where the Ill enters the town, the country around Strasburg, between the Rhine and the Ill, can be laid under water, and the city rendered unapproachable by an army, and almost impregnable.

The Palais du Roi is a handsome edifice, close to the cathedral: it was originally the Bishop's palace.

There is a good provincial Theatre here, near the square called Broglie, from a governor of Alsace of that name: a very splendid Synagogue was erected in 1834 by the Jews. It is curious to contrast the present with the former condition of that people in this city. Nowhere did they suffer more cruel or tyrannical persecutions. The street, called Brand Strasse (Fire-street) was so named, because on the spot where the Prefecture now stands a bonfire was made, in 1348, to burn the Hebrews; and 2000 of that devoted race, accused of having poisoned the wells and fountains, and thus caused the plague which desolated the city about that time, were consumed in the flames. From henceforth no Jew was allowed to live within the walls; and the summons of a horn, blown every evening from the Minster tower, compelled them all to depart.

The body of General Kleber (a native of Strasburg), originally interred in the Minster, has been removed to a vault in the centre of the Place Kleber, and a monument has been erected over it.

Strasburg is famous for its Pâtés de foies gras, made of the livers of geese, which are enlarged to an unnatural size by the cruel process of shutting the birds up singly in coops, too narrow to allow them to turn, and stuffing them twice a day with maize. They are generally kept in a dark cellar, and the winter is the season for fattening them, coolness being essential. There is such a coop in almost every house in the town. Sulphur or garlick is steeped in the water given to the birds, to increase their appetite. Instances are known of a goose's liver having attained the weight of 2 or even 3 lbs. Hummel, No. 9, Rue des Serruriers, is said to make good pâtés. A heavy duty is charged on them in England.

The gates of Strasburg are shut at 10 o'clock, but ingress or egress is allowed after that time for diligences, and for travellers by poste and by steam-boat; and some of the gates remain longer open in summer.

The principal Promenade is the Ruprechtsau, an extensive space, laid out in walks and gardens, beyond the walls.

The daily communication with Paris is kept up by the malleposte in 36 hours, and by diligence in 66 hours; while 2 fast diligences, recently established, make the journey in 48 hours.—N. B. Do not book a place to Paris unless you are assured that you will not be turned out of it at Nancy in favour of passengers from that place, which is the practice of some messageries to do.

Diligences also to Besançon and Lyons; to Metz; to Baden-Baden (2 or 3, and railway); to Freyburg and Schaffhausen; to Carlsruhe and Heidelberg; to Haguenau (several); to Epinal; to Mutzig and Bischweiler.

The Ban de la Roche, or Steinthal (Stone Valley), the scene of the pastor Oberlin's beneficent life and labours, is about 30 miles S. W. of Strasburg. It is described in R. 168.

A steamer descends the Rhine from Bâle to Strasburg 4 times a week, in 6 hours; it takes 24 to return, being drawn by horses through the canals on the French side of the river.

Steamers descend the Rhine to Manheim and Mayence twice a day, starting at 6 from the Canal of the Ill, in the middle of the city, and at 10½ or 11 from Kehl bridge, on the French bank of the Rhine; they reach Mayence in 11 hours: but take 2 long days to mount upwards from Mayence.

The Railway from Strasburg to Bâle is described in R. 170. Trains go 4 times a day. A traveller starting from Bâle by the early train (7 A.M.) may reach Mayence at 10 o'clock the same night.

Owing to the shallowness of the Ill only the smallest steamers can approach the city through it.

The distance from Strasburg to the boat bridge over the Rhine at Kehl, near which the steamers set out, is rather more than 1½ m. On the way thither you pass, in the middle of an island formed by a branch of the Rhine, on the rt., a monumental cenotaph, inscribed "Au Général Desaix — l'Armée du Rhin — 1801," bearing a medallion portrait of him; and bas-reliefs representing the Passage of the Rhine, the Battle of the Pyramids, and the Death of Desaix at Marengo. His body lies on the summit of the Great St. Bernard.

Kehl and the Rhine are described in the HAND-BOOK FOR NORTH GERMANY.

A Railway from Strasburg to Offenburg and Carlsruhe, with a branch to Baden, will be opened in 1843–4.

Strasburg communicates with Provence and the Mediterranean by the Canal du Rhin au Rhone, and with the Loire and Atlantic by the Canals de Bourgogne and du Centre, which supply the manufacturers of Alsace with fuel from the coal basin of the Loire, just at the time when their own coal mines had been exhausted.

ROUTE 166.

PARIS TO THE BATHS OF PLOMBIERES, BY LIGNY, DOMREMY, AND EPINAL.

396 kilom. = 245½ Eng. m.

The road is the same as Route 164. as far as 250 Ligny (p. 539.), where it turns to the S.E. and ascends the valley of the Ornain to

22 Houdelaincourt: thence crosses the hills to

22 Domremy (la Pucelle). This retired and insignificant village, on the Meuse, has been rendered celebrated as the birth-place (1410) of Jeanne d'Arc, the simple untaught peasant girl who quitted her flocks to rescue her country from foreign invaders, and to place the crown of France on the rightful sovereign's head. Here, in the deep shade of the neighbouring haunted wood, Bois Chénus (Nemus Canutum), she heard the mysterious voices of her guardian saints, St. Margaret and St. Catherine, urging her to the enterprise, and counselling her how to act; and here in the village chapel dedicated to them, now in ruins, she would spend whole days in prayer, avoiding the pastimes of her companions. After the accomplishment of her mission, by the coronation at Rheims of Charles VII., Jeanne d'Arc entreated to be allowed to return hither to join her parents, and become a shepherd girl again, an intention she was persuaded to abandon to her own destruction. The only favour that she asked from the king, for whom she had effected so much, was that her native village should be exempt from every tax. This privilege was conceded, and remained in force down to the Revolution. In the registry book of taxes the space opposite the name Domremy was filled up with the words, "Neant, à cause de la Pucelle," instead of the amount of contribution. The humble cottage in which she was born, having always been treated with a sort of veneration, is still preserved. A monument and a girl's school have also been raised in her honour, and King Louis Philippe has presented to the village a cast of the beautiful statue of the Pucelle by his own daughter, "another inspired Maid of Orleans."

At Vaucouleurs, about midway between Void and Domremy, the maid first disclosed her mission to the Sire de Baudricourt, and hence she set forth on a journey of nearly 300 miles, to declare to the king at Chinon, in Touraine, the assistance which heaven destined in support of his cause.

11 Neufchâteau (Inns: Couronne (?): — La Providence (?), a town of 3650 inhab., on a stream which runs into the Meuse not far off.

19 Houécourt.

20 Mirecourt.

23 Darnieulles.

9 Epinal (Inn, La Poste), chef lieu of the Department des Vosges, is a town of 9526 inhab. It stands on the W. declivity of the Vosges mountains, on the infant Moselle, which makes several small falls in passing through it, and it is surmounted by the ruins of an old castle. It has a large Gothic church.

Diligences to Nancy; to Than and Muhlhausen; to Strasburg.

17 Xertigny. The Saône rises a few miles to the W. of this.

11 Plombières. — Inns. There are several tolerable hotels in which visitors take up their temporary residence until they have secured lodgings, of which there is no lack in the town.

Plombières is a town of 1500 permanent inhab., situated on the Eaugronne, at a height of 1382 ft. above the sea level. It possesses celebrated mineral springs, and may be regarded as one of the most fashionable watering places in France. The waters are chiefly saline and thermal; but there are some cold springs, one of them ferruginous, La Bourdeille. They are very numerous; the principal are the Sources du Romains, du Crucifix, de l'Enfer, du Grand Bain (147° Fahr.), des Capucins (127° Fahr.), du Bain des Dames. They are used chiefly for baths; but some, as the Crucifix, Bains des Dames, are taken internally.

The bath-houses belong to government; the principal ones are Bain Royal, containing 2 public baths (piscines), one for male, the other for female bathers, each capable of holding 25 persons, besides private baths. The building also contains a reading room, which serves for balls and concerts. The others are the Bain des Capucins, Bain Temperé, Bain des Dames, so called from the Nuns of Remiremont, to whom it belonged, and Grand Bain, or Bain des Pauvres. In all there is a public as well as private bath, and in some are douche and vapour baths.

The waters are considered beneficial in chronic diseases of the digestive organs, dyspepsia, &c. The season lasts from May till October.

In the neighbourhood of Plombières are some agreeable walks, through the vast forests of oak, beech, and fir, which cover the surrounding mountains.

One of the walks nearest to the town leads to the Fontaine Stanislas, a well on the side of an eminence overhung by rocks, carved with inscriptions recording the benefactions of the Polish king, who also founded a hospital here (see p. 540.). The avenues planted along the sides of the road leading to Remiremont form another frequented promenade. The eminence called La Feuillée commands a fine view over the fertile Val d'Ajol.

ROUTE 168.

THE VOSGES MOUNTAINS. — STRASBURG TO EPINAL, BY MUTZIG AND ST. DIEY. — EXCURSION TO THE BAN DE LA ROCHE.

139 kilom. = 86 Eng. m.

Diligences daily to Epinal, and to Mutzig.

This newly-made road through the heart of the Vosges mountains will possess an interest with many English travellers from its leading them close to the country of the estimable pastor Oberlin. The following account is derived from the journal of an English traveller who visited the Ban de la Roche in 1833. "We left Strasburg by the Porte de Nancy, and, crossing the Ill, passed over a country whose chief productions seem to be tobacco, flax, and potatoes.

9 "Entzisheim. In several villages the houses were hung with double rows of tobacco leaves drying in the sun. 3 m. on rt. is the château of M. Humann, Minister of Finance. At Altorf, the near undulating hills are covered with vineyards; in the distance the mountains of the Vosges show themselves with great beauty. At Molzheim, a prettily-situated village, is a large manufactory of saws, files, and other edge tools." Near this are the saline thermal springs of Sulz-les-Bains, little frequented at present.

"At Darlesheim we cross the river Bruche, and entering a defile of the mountains lose sight of Strasburg spire, hitherto visible far above the level plain."

14 Mutzig, a small walled town of 3551 inhabitants, prettily situated on the Bruche. The Château of the bishops of Strasburg is turned into a manufactory of fire-arms. Behind the wooded hills to the W. rises the bald head of the Donon, 3314 ft.

"At Diersheim, 2 m. farther, a fine view of mountain scenery: the valley only ½ m. broad; on l. a level greensward from which the hills rise precipitously about 500 ft., covered with young oak, beeches, fir, &c.; before us the mountain stream, the narrow but fresh looking valley shut up by the mountains of the Vosges, of which we trace 7 ridges rising one above another in the distance.

22 "Schirmeek, a village prettily situated at the junction of another small stream with the Bruche, has 2 large ribbon manufactories. We are now in the dépt. of the Vosges. 5 m. farther, at Rothau, a village situated at the N. E. extremity of the Ban de la Roche, we turn to the l. out of the road to St. Diey, and crossing the Bruche by a road for which we are indebted to the labour of Oberlin's own hands, reach the quiet village of Fouday, within the Dépt. Bas Rhin, at the entrance of the valley of Waldersbach, which, though naturally sterile, enclosed by schistose hills, rising 1000 ft. above it, is much improved by cultivation and irrigation. A cotton ribbon factory has been established here by M. Légrand, which, unlike most other establishments of the kind, has proved a blessing instead of a curse. The children who are chiefly employed work at home under their parents' eyes, and thus reap all the benefits of industry without the risk of health or morals attendant upon a crowded room." — C. W.

In the churchyard is the grave of Oberlin, a plain stone with his name engraved on it, and the words, "Il fut 60 ans Père de ce Canton," and round the edge, "La mémoire du juste sera en bénédiction."

"His memory is indeed blessed: no cottager in this valley ever mentions his name without the affectionate addition of Father. Look around; every smiling field, every cultivated spot, every tree bearing fruit, reminds them of their lost benefactor: the education of their children, the comforts they enjoy in their cottages, the very roads by which they communicate, and, of infinitely more importance, the knowledge of the road that leads to heaven, which was constantly and faithfully taught them both by precept and example, — all forcibly recal the memory of their 'Father Oberlin.'" — Capt W.

At Waldbach, a few miles farther, is Oberlin's parsonage, where his study, books, MSS., specimens of natural history, and drawings remain nearly as he left them; the walls and doors decorated by him with texts from Scripture.

In the plain village church is a monument to him, a medallion head by Ohmacht. The school established by him, which in one generation redeemed the inhabitants of this district nearly from barbarism, will not be looked on without interest.

There is no inn at Fouday or Waldbach. There is a road from Fouday by St. Blaise and Villy to Schlestadt, (see p. 550.).

The principal mass of the Vosges mountains lies between Giromagny and the valley of the Breusch; they are about 120 m. in extent, running parallel to the Rhine, and separating its basin from that of the Moselle. They consist chiefly of rounded dome-shaped hills, abounding in forests and often turfed on the top. The name "ballon" applied to several of them is doubtless derived from this swelling rounded form. Les Chaumes (Calvi montes), so called from their bareness, form the highest ground in the Ban de la Roche. The bulk, or thickest mass of the Vosges, rises between the Ballon d'Alsace (4124 ft.), the Donon (3314), and the Ballon de Sultz, the highest of all, (4693). The rivers Seine, Saône, Moselle, and Saar, rise in the Vosges.

The road from Schirmeck to St. Diey, runs by 20 Saales.

19 St. Diey or Dié (Inn, La Poste). The name of this town of 7707 inhabitants comes from St. Dieu Donné (Deodatus), to whom it and the valley were given by Childerce II. It stands on the Meurthe, here a mere torrent. Having been burnt down 1756, it was rebuilt, chiefly by the ex-king of Poland, Stanislas.

13 L'Hote du Bois.

14 Rambervillars.

13 Girecourt.

15 Epinal, in Route 166., p. 547.

The Baths of Plombières are about 36 m. to the S. of this, p. 547.

ROUTE 170.

STRASBURG TO BÂLE. — RAILROAD, BY SCHLESTADT, COLMAR, AND MUHLHAUSEN.

36 * leagues = 108 Eng. m.

Trains go 4 times a day: the stoppages by the slow trains are very numerous, 28 in all, and the journey in consequence tedious, occupying 4½ hours.

There is, however, one fast train daily from Strasburg at 5 P.M., and from Bâle at 7 A.M., which makes the journey in 3½ hours. Passengers by these trains pass the Douane without examination, if on their way to the Lower Rhine.

The transport of a carriage costs 50 fr.

The construction of this railway is chiefly due to the enterprise of MM. Koechlin and Brothers of Muhlhausen.

Omnibuses ply to and from almost all the stations on the line; the fare is 30 centimes.

The terminus at Strasburg is at Königshofen, but the rails will be carried within the walls in 1843 to the quarter called Le Marais.

There are no great works on this line, owing to its passing over a dead level country, up the valley of the Ill and parallel with the Canal du Rhone au Rhin, and with the Rhine, though at some distance from them.

It is carried over many hundred small bridges which allow the streamlets descending from the Vosges to pass. It skirts, as it were, the roots of that mountain chain, and commands some pleasing views of them and of their old castles.

Geispolzheim, St.

Fegersheim, St.

Limersheim, St.

Erstein, St., a town of 3550 inhab. The Strasburghers destroyed its walls and the neighbouring fort of Schwanau in the 14th century.

Matzenheim, St.

Benfeld, St. — Inn, Poste. This small town was taken by the Swedes 1632, and fortified by Count Horn.

A little to the W. of Benfeld and Schlestadt lies Barr, a town of 4200 inhab., remarkable for the beauties of the surrounding country. Hence an interesting excursion may be made to the Odilienberg, near which are the ruins of Schloss Landsberg; the Convent of St. Odilia, with a church built 1696, with 5 or 6 ancient chapels near it; and the Heidenmauer.

Hüttenheim, not far from the railway, is distinguished by one of the finest and loftiest church towers in Alsace.

Kogenheim, St.

Ebersheim, St.

Schlestadt, St., (Germ. Schlettstadt) (Inn, Le Bouc), seated on the l. bank of the Ill, anciently an Imperial Free city, has now 10,000 inhab. and some manufactures, and is a fortress of fourth class, laid out by Vauban. It was besieged by the Allies in 1815.

The church of St. George is rather an elegant Gothic building of the 14th century, and that of St. Foy is remarkable for its antiquity, having been built 1094, on the model of the Holy Sepulchre church. Adjoining it is a large convent, called Le Pavillon, occupied in turn by Benedictines and Jesuits, but now a barrack.

The Tour d'Horloge or Fausse-porte is a fine Gothic gate tower pierced by a Pointed archway. Martin Bucer, the Reformer, was born here.

Diligences go hence to the industrious town of St. Marie aux Mines,

* By the post road (145 kilom. = 90 Eng. m.) the stations and distances are:

16 St. Ludan.
12 Benfeld.
17 Schlestadt.
14 Ostheim.
9 Colmar.
19 Meyenheim.
23 Muhlhausen.
17 Sierentz.
12 St. Louis.
4 Bâle.

which is entirely engaged in the cotton manufacture.

From the vicinity of Schlestadt, and from other points on the railway between Strasburg and Muhlhausen good views are obtained of the Vosges Mountains (p.549.), stretching nearly parallel to the Rhine on the W. and gradually sinking into the plain traversed by the railway. They have mostly a tame, rounded outline; here and there an escarpment of red sandstone, of which they are chiefly composed, breaks through the green forest, and ever and anon upon some projecting cape stands forth a ruined castle. The beauties of the Val de Villée, near Schlestadt, are extolled.

About 4 m. from Schlestadt is the ruined castle of Hoher Königsburg, the most extensive in the Vosges range, and very picturesque. From the top of its massive towers a fine view over Alsace and the Rhine valley is obtained. Its origin is unknown, but it is recorded that it was taken and dismantled (1462) by an army of Strasburghers and of Bâlois, who combined their forces, and placed themselves under the Bishop of Strasburg as general, in order to put down the robber knights, its owners, on account of the depredations they had committed. It was ruined and sacked by the Swedes in the 30 Years' War, 1633. The ruins are not far distant from Hypolite, St., and near this there are coal mines.

Ribeauvillé, St. The best wine produced in the Vosges is grown here.

The hill rising on the W. of this town of 6568 inhab. is crowned by the castle of Ribeaupierre, which was besieged in turn by Rudolph of Halisburg and Adolphus of Nassau. Lower down, on neighbouring heights, are the castles of Giersburg and St. Ulrich. Along the crest of the advanced line of hills forming the Vosges range above Ribeauvillé runs the curious and mysterious bulwark, of unknown antiquity, called Heidenmaur, or Pagan Wall. It is composed of unhewn stones, heaped together without cement, from 8 to 10 ft. high.

Ostheim, St.

Bennwihr, St.

Colmar, St. — Inns: Deux Clefs; good: — Ange.

This is a flourishing town of 12,000 inhab. and chef lieu of the Dépt. Haut Rhin. It is situated near the foot of the Vosges, at the distance of 1½ m. from the Ill, on two of its tributaries, which do much service in turning millwheels in their passage through the town. Its chief manufactures are cotton and printed goods. There are many large factories on the outskirts.

In the 13th century it was made a Free Imperial city, and was joined to France 1697. Louis XIV., who took it in 1673, razed the fortifications, and they are now replaced by agreeable Boulevards.

In the Cathedral or minster, built 1363, a respectable Gothic edifice, containing some monuments and painted glass in the choir, is a remarkable painting, of the old German school, by Martin Schön, or Schöngauer, a native of Colmar. It is placed behind the altar, and represents the Virgin Mary in a bower of Roses with the infant Jesus, attended by Angels. It is remarkable for its size and composition: the figures, rather larger than life, are on a gold ground. In the public library (containing 36,000 vols.) are several other paintings by M. Schön; 2 altar-pieces of 6 compartments each, filled with events in the Life of Christ; 6 subjects from the Passion; an Annunciation and Adoration of the Magi, also by M. Schön, with other pictures attributed to Alb. Durer and Grunewald.

The Halle aux Blés is a desecrated church; the nave is very elegant. In the Musée is preserved an aerolite, which fell from the sky here in 1492.

The fine choir of the Protestant Church is now a warehouse; and several other religious edifices are degraded to similar purposes.

General Rapp, celebrated for his defence of Danzig, was a native of Colmar.

The road to Besançon and Lyons (R. 171.) here diverges from that to Bâle.

Diligences to Lyons; to Nancy and Paris; to New Breisach (an octagon fortress, built by Vauban, 1699); to Old Breisach and Fribourg, crossing the Rhine. Also to Munster (15 m.), a manufacturing town, of 4340 inhab., on the Fecht, in a pretty, narrow valley, shut in by hills, where factories and country seats alternate with vineyards and gardens. The principal factory is that of MM. Hartman, for cotton prints, one of the largest in France, employing about 1200 workpeople: there are also spinning and paper mills.

Sulzbad, in the valley of Munster, 9 m. from Colmar, has mineral springs of acidulous water, sometimes called "bain des fous," because considered to be efficacious in hypochondriac and hysterical compiaints.

4 m. W. of Colmar is Turckheim, where Turenne gained a victory (1675) over the Imperialists.

Eguisheim, St. This was the birthplace of Leo IX. Above the town rises the castle, conspicuous for its 3 towers.

Herrlisheim, St.

Rouffach, St., is the birth-place of General Lefèbre, Duke of Danzig.

Merxheim, St. Here stood the castle of Isemburg, inhabited by the Merovingian kings of France.

Bollwiller, St. There is a large nursery garden here, where all the known species of vine are cultivated. Some of the best wines of Alsace are grown near this.

At Guebweiler, a few m. up the valley of the Lauch, is an extensive manufacture of spinning machinery.

The Ballon de Guebweiler, or de Sultz, the highest of the Vosges mountains, is 4693 ft. above the sea level.

Wittelsheim, St.

Lutterbach, St.

Dornach, St.

Muhlhausen, St. (Inns: H. de Paris: — Couronne.) This town, containing many large new buildings, but for the most part old and irregular, surrounded by the Ill, and situated close to the Canal du Rhin au Rhone, was formerly capital of a small, democratic, and independent state, and an ally of the Swiss Confederation from 1466 down to 1798, when it was united to France. Since the beginning of the present century, it has rapidly risen to be one of the most important manufacturing towns in France. Its population amounts to 20,000 by the last census: and 7000 workmen repair daily to the town from the neighbouring communes. The branch of industry from which this sudden progress is derived is the manufacture of cotton prints and muslins. The quantity made here probably exceeds that of any other place in the world; they are particularly distinguished by the perfection and variety of their patterns, and the fineness of the colours. Another manufacture, the spinning of cotton, does not flourish to an equal extent, having difficulty in competing with Manchester and Glasgow. There are several extensive manufactories of machinery.

Cotton printing was first introduced here 1746 by Samuel Kœchlin, (the Orrel, Marshal, or Cobden of France, whose descendants are still at the head of the manufacturers here), in conjunction with J. Schmalzer and H. Dollfus.

At Rixheim, in the vicinity, are made the stained papers for rooms; including those very flashy pictures which commonly decorate the walls of salles-à-manger at inns: and one of the chief establishments employs 200 workmen.

Many of the mills and factories of Muhlhausen are carried on, and set a-going, by the capital of the bankers of Bâle. The condition of the work-people is not good; they are badly clothed, and lodged generally in cellars. (See Bowring's Report.)

Muhlhausen has to contend against the serious disadvantage of its long distance from the sea, (raw cotton being transported hither all the way from Havre and Marseilles), and the want of coal in the neighbourhood. Its supply of fuel is obtained chiefly from St. Etienne and Rive de Gier, through the Canal du Rhin et Rhone.

Malleposte, daily to Paris (Route 162. p. 534.). Diligences to Paris; Lyons.

There is a branch railroad from Muhlhausen to Thann (R. 171.), by Dornach, Lutterbach, and Cernay. Lutterbach is on the line from Strasburg to Muhlhausen, and here the branch to Thann properly begins.

Rixheim, St.
Habsheim, St.
Sierentz, St.
Bartenheim, St.
St. Louis, St. Baggage searched in coming from Switzerland. (p. 537.)

The TERMINUS of the railroad is about 2½ m. from the city of BÂLE (see SWISS HAND-BOOK). An omnibus meets every train, plying to and fro, charge 50 cents.

N. B. — Travellers setting out from Bâle by the early train (7 A.M.) find, on their arrival at Strasburg, a steamer ready to start at 11 A.M., and by it they may reach Mayence at 10 P.M. the same night.

ROUTE 171.

STRASBURG TO BESANÇON BY COLMAR, THANN, BELFORT, AND MONTBELLIARD.

229 kilom. = 142 Eng. m.

A malleposte daily in 16 hours. It is now accelerated doubtless by the railroad.

France.

The railroad is the best mode of travelling as far as Colmar, or even Thann. (See Route 170.)

69 Colmar, p. 551.

9 Hallstatt. The road continues along the level plain of the Rhine as far as 13 Isenheim, where the country becomes hilly.

The pretty little town of Thann (pop. 3937) has a superb Gothic church dedicated to St. Thiebaut, surmounted by a fine spire of delicate open work more than 800 ft. high. The doorway is highly enriched with sculpture, representing saints and scriptural subjects, of very good execution; it is, in short, a miniature of Strasburg, and has lately been repaired.

On the hill above are the ruins of the Castle Engelburg.

There are manufactories of cotton prints here.

A branch railway connects Thann with Muhlhausen (p. 553.), and with the railway from Strasburg to Bâle (Route 170).

19 Asbach. At

14 La Chapelle, the heights which connect the chain of the Vosges with the Jura mountains are crossed; and leaving the fertile and industrious province of Alsace we enter that of Franche Comté.

16 Belfort, or Béfort (Inn, L'Ancienne Poste), a fortress of first class in strength and importance, commanded by a Citadel, defending the entrance into France from the side of Switzerland, by the pass between the Jura and Vosges. It was laid out by Vauban; but, besides its own formidable fortifications, it is protected by an entrenched camp, capable of holding 30,000 men. The town numbers about 6000 inhab., and is seated on the Savoreuse.

The road from Paris to Bâle (R. 162.) passes through Béfort.

Country barren and hilly to 13 Tavey.

19 L'Ile sur le Doubs, a bourg of 1100 inhab., on the l. bank of the winding Doubs, and on the Canal du Rhin et Rhone.

A slight detour from Béfort will carry the traveller through Montbelliard, (Germ. Mümpelgard,) (Inns: Lion Rouge; — Balence), a small walled town of 5000 inhab., the majority Protestants and industrious; it is prettily situated in the valley of the Allan and Luzine. The most conspicuous building is the Château on a commanding height; the greater part a modern construction of the last century, flanked by ancient round towers. It is now converted into a prison. This town has to boast of being the birth-place of the distinguished naturalist, Geo. Cuvier, (b. 1769.): a bronze statue of him, by David, has been raised to his memory by his countrymen, opposite the house in which he was born.

2 m. from Montbelliard the road reaches the Doubs, and continues down its rt. bank at the foot of well-wooded limestone hills to Ile sur Doubs.

Here the river is crossed by a bridge; the road still following its beautiful clear stream, between hills 200 or 300 ft. high, covered with every variety of wild flowers.

The Doubs, a doubling stream, rises in the Jura at the foot of Mont Rixon, 3122 ft. above the sea level, and flows for 60 m. to the N.E., as if to join the Rhine, but is turned to the S.W., on approaching Montbelliard, by the spur or ridge which connects the Vosges with the Jura, traversed by our road between Thann and Béfort. It descends past Besançon and joins the Saône below Dôle. It has been canalised and made navigable for barges of 20 tons, and forms a limb of the inland water communication connecting the Rhine with the Rhone. At 11 Clerval, a pretty village on its l. bank, at the foot of hills 1000 ft. high, the Doubs is recrossed. 10 m. farther a mass of naked rock, 500 ft. high, of the most picturesque form, overhangs the road, which has barely room to pass between it and the river.

A steep hill is now to be surmounted, whose top commands a very extensive view of the mountain scenery of the Jura, to the S. E. Immediately at the foot of this hill lies the retired town of 15 Beaume les Dames, pop. 2447. It is famous for its pâtés and for its fish.

The Doubs is again crossed, and another steep hill succeeds, from whose slope there is a fine prospect of the valley, and of a ruined castle on the opposite side, which belonged to Charles the Bold of Burgundy.

12 Roulans.

The scenery of the Doubs valley in this place is not unlike that of the Meuse between Liege and Namur. A sharp descent brings us to the fortified town of 19 Besançon, (described in R. 159).

ROUTE 175.

PARIS TO METZ AND FORBACH, BY MEAUX, CHATEAU THIERRY, EPERNAY, CHALONS-SUR-MARNE, AND VERDUN.

379 kilom. = 235 Eng. m.

Malleposte daily in 28 hours, returning in 31 hours.

Diligences daily.

The road quits Paris through the faubourg St. Martin, leaves on the l. the road to Senlis, (R. 1.), and traverses the large village Pantin to 12 Bondy.

Through the forest of Bondy, in a direction parallel with the Canal de l'Ourcq. This canal commences at Mareuil on the Ourcq, and terminates near Paris, in the basin of La Villette; it is 57 m. long. It serves to feed the Canal de St. Denis, and furnishes Paris with a supply of fresh water.

16 Claye on the Beuvronne.

The banks of the Marne are reached at 15 Meaux (Inns: La Sirène: — Palais Royal), chef lieu of the Department Seine et Marne, traversed by the Marne and the Canal de l'Ourcq, has a population of 8737. It is a bishop's see, and its Cathedral is a noble Gothic edifice, begun in the 14th and continued until the 16th century, but not finished; its vaulted roof is more than 100 feet high. It contains a Monument to Bossuet, "the Eagle of Meaux," as he has been called, who long time filled the see, erected by the department; it is stiff, hard, and by no means successful as a work of art. Some relics of him are preserved in the Evêché; the study in which he wrote, and the avenue of yews in the garden where he used to meditate. A house behind the cathedral is a good specimen of domestic architecture of the 15th century, of stone, flanked by turrets. Meaux furnishes Paris with a large supply of corn and flour. A sort of cream cheese, (fromage de Brie,) known as Fromage de la Poste aux Chevaux à Meaux, is peculiar to the place, and is considered very delicate.

The Marne is crossed by a wooden bridge; one of stone which preceded it having been blown up by the French in 1814.

11 St. Jean les deux Jumeaux.

9 La Ferté sous Jouarre (Inns: Epée: — France: — H. du Grand Condé), a town of 3907 inhabitants (Jovis Ara?), on the Marne, here varied by islands, in one of which, united to the banks by a bridge of five arches, is an old mill. Here is a pretty Pavillon, of the time of Louis XIII., which, it is said, once belonged to the Duc de St. Simon. La Ferté is famed for its Millstones, the best in the world, quarried in the vicinity out of beds of a siliceous cellular rock, known as Burr stone, almost peculiar to the freshwater basin of Paris, in which it forms nearly the uppermost stratum. The stone is very full of cavities, formed chiefly by shells, which have been turned into flint. The blocks are extracted in cylinders, by driving in wedges of wood and iron. A good millstone, 6½ feet diameter, costs about 48*l.*: but many of those which are used are composed of small pieces (carreaux) bound together with iron hoops. The number of millstones extracted amounts to 1200 pairs yearly, which are chiefly sent to England and America.

On an island in the Marne stands the ancient and half ruined Castle of La Barre; the height opposite La Ferté is crowned by the antiquated town of Jouarre. La Ferté, as before noticed, means la fortifiée. The Marne is again crossed, on quitting this town, by a suspension bridge.

16 La Ferme de Paris, (Department Aisne). N. B. There is another road (? if post), by Charly, along the banks of the Marne, which are very prettily varied, to 12 Château-Thierry (Inns: Sirène: — Poste), a neat and pretty town of 4697 inhabitants, agreeably situated on the Marne.

On the summit of the gently sloping hill on which it is built are the fragments of a castle, which have now nearly disappeared, constructed, it is said, by Charles Martel for the young King Thierry IV. The site, and the ground around these mouldering walls, are converted into a pleasant and well-kept public walk, and command a pleasing prospect of the town and river. The most perfect of the towers is turned into a powder magazine.

The Church of St. Crispin, on the heights, of massive architecture, resembling a fortress, surrounded by a huge tower and entered by high flights of steps, deserves the notice of the antiquary.

In the Rue des Cordeliers (the name given in France to the Franciscan friars from the knotted cord which they wore round the waist) the house is preserved in which the charming poet La Fontaine was born. A statue of him has been erected at the end of the promenade called La Levée.

This town suffered much in the campaign of 1814, when the plain of Brie was covered over with uncouth hordes of Calmucks and Lesghian Cossacks, having been taken and retaken several times (Feb. 8—12).

The borders of the Marne, up whose l. bank our road proceeds, are the prettiest part of the ancient province of Champagne, the country of the champagne wine. "The whole drive is exquisite, constantly varied and picturesque, and glowing with abundance: corn, vines, and fruit, gardens of roses and orchards, with here and there pretty villas belonging to wine-merchants peeping from their shrubberies, and prospects of extreme beauty opening from the summit of the hills, with the bright Marne winding at their feet." — Miss Costello.

9 Crézancy.

14 Dormans (Inn, Lion d'Or?), a town of 2000 inhabitants, in the Département Marne, has a port on the river.

9 Port à Binson.

15 Epernay (Inn, H. de l'Ecu de France), a town of 5318 inhabitants, on the l. bank of the Marne. It is the head quarters of Vins de Champagne, some of the best kinds of which are grown in the vicinity, and are distinguished from those produced near Rheims, as "Vins de la Rivière." Ai, which gives its name to one of the best sorts, is a hill a little higher up the Marne, on its rt. bank. Almost the only "lion" is the cellars cut in the chalk rock; they are of vast extent; a perfect labyrinth, and always contain several millions of bottles, a great part of which are sold on the spot, wholesale, at 2 or 3 francs the bottle. (See Rheims, p. 565.) Large quantities of coarse earthenware are made here from clay called Terre de Champagne, obtained from the neighbouring hill of Montigny.

One of the principal buildings is the house of M. Moet, the eminent wine-merchant, in which Napoleon slept at the time of the battle of Montmirail, 1814.

The town was taken by Henri IV., 1592, after an obstinate siege, in which Marshal Biron was killed. In the hideous modern church remain a fragment of a portal in the style of the Renaissance, and 16 windows filled with curious painted glass of the 16th century.

The journey continues up the l. bank of the Marne, through a region of vines; the vineyard of Ai being conspicuous on the opposite bank. The landscape somewhat monotonous, the river appearing only now and then.

18 Jalons.

15 Châlons-sur-Marne (Inns: H. Cloche d'Or: — H. du Palais Royal; not a fine house, but decent and comfortable: — H. de Nancy.) This is the chef lieu of the Département Marne; and has a population of 12,500. During the middle ages, and under its Count-Bishops, it enjoyed much greater prosperity as a commercial entrepôt, numbering 60,000 inhab. Its privileges were withdrawn, and its celebrated fairs dwindled away, after the union of Champagne with France in 1284.

The town is old; principally of timber, lath, and plaster. The Cathedral was built in the 16th century: the front has been modernised, but in other parts it is in a rich and florid style: at the west end is a bold and elaborate gallery; within which is a pretty chapel in the style of the Renaissance, and some good painted glass, including a rose window. The spires are of beautiful open work, a style of which the finest example is found at Freyburg, in the Breisgau. The Marne runs through the city; and on the banks is another fine Church, Notre Dame, of early architecture, and forming a picturesque object in many points of view.

A School of Design has been established here, and appears to succeed.

Diligences daily to Nancy and Strasburg (R. 164.); to Rheims (R. 178.) and Troyes, as well as to Paris and Metz.

One of the routes to Strasburg turns off here up the valley, to Vitry-sur-Marne (R. 164. p. 538.).

An account of the battle of Attila, near Châlons, is given in Route 187.

6 m. from Châlons the road to St. Menehould passes the beautiful Gothic Church of N. D. de l'Epine, a perfect cathedral in size and beauty, surmounted by a most elegant spire of filagree open work, contrasting forcibly with the hovels of the poor hamlet around it. It was constructed towards the end of the 16th century, partly at the expense of Charles V.; and its present ruinous condition is much to be lamented. Its triple portal at the W. end, richly adorned with sculptures of holy persons and sacred subjects, the fine rose windows surmounting them, the gargoyls round the eaves quaintly carved, the elegance of the piers and arches, the choir screen, or jubé, delicately carved, a bas-relief of wood over the high altar, and some curious painted glass, all merit examination.

The truncated tower was deprived of its spire at the end of the 18th century, in order to erect upon it the Telegraph, which still holds its place.

18 Somme Vesle.

16 Orbeval.

8 Sainte Menehould. — Inn, La Ville de Metz; "c'est une auberge excellente," and its kitchen is a "cuisine modèle," says Victor Hugo.

This town, of 3900 inhab., excepting that it is one of the prettiest places in France, has nothing worth notice; it stands on the Aisne.

6 m. off is Valmy, where the French under Kellerman defeated the Prussian army and compelled it to evacuate the territory of France, 1792. Louis Philippe was present in this battle. The French commander, who became Duke of Valmy, desired at his death (aged 82, in 1820), that his heart should be transported to the battle field, in order that it might rest among the remains of his brave companions in arms who fell there. This wish has been complied with, and a simple monument erected on the spot.

The road to Metz passes through a nearly uninterrupted orchard, as far as the large village of 14 Clermont en Argonne, previously entering the Dept. of the Meuse, across the very pretty wooded valley of the Brième, and the defile of les Islettes. 11 m. to the N. lies the small town of Varennes, where the unfortunate Louis XVI. and his family were arrested, June 21, 1791, while endeavouring to escape across the frontier, by Drouet, post-master of St. Menehould, as the king's carriage was crossing the little Place or square.

The ridge of land called Monts de la Meuse, separating the basin of the Marne from that of the Meuse, is crossed between 10 Dombasle and Verdun. The passes of these hills were the scene of the campaign of 1792, when Dumouriez was opposed to the Prussians; but they have lost their military importance, now that the country of l'Argonne is drained, and its forests cleared.

We now enter the valley of the Meuse and the territory, formerly known as Les Trois Evêchés (Metz, Toul, and Verdun).

15 Verdun (Inns: Les Trois Maures, best: — H. de l'Europe), is an ancient and historical town, and a fortress of the fourth class, containing a population of 10,540; it is seated on the Meuse, which here first becomes navigable. It is well known to many Englishmen as the prison in which they spent 11 weary years from 1803, when so cruelly and unjustly seized by Napoleon on the sudden breaking out of the war, and kept until his fall in 1814.

The citadel, which is alone of importance as commanding the course of the Meuse, was planned by Vauban. The beautiful Gothic chapel of St. Vannes, in the midst of it, was pulled down in 1825 to give place to a barrack.

The great event which renders Verdun distinguished in history is the dismemberment of the vast empire of Charlemagne in 843, between the 3 brothers: Louis, who received all Germany as far as the Rhine; Charles, who took the Gallic provinces S. of a line formed by the Scheldt, Meuse, Saône, and Rhone; and Lothaire, who kept Italy and the E. part of Gaul. This act is known as the "Treaty of Verdun."

Verdun was a free city of the Empire down to 1552, and was not finally united to France until the peace of Munster, 1648.

It was taken by the Prussians 1792, after a bombardment of 15 hours, in spite of the opposition of Marceau, Lemoine, and other brave officers who wished to hold out still longer. It was, however, soon evacuated by the Prussians in consequence of the victory of Valmy. When the French regained possession, the revolutionary tribunal sent to the guillotine 15 young women, all under 15 years of age, for the crime of having danced at a ball given by the Prussian officers.

Verdun is celebrated for its manufacture of sugar-plums (dragées) and liqueurs.

18 Manheules.

10 Harville.

12 Mars la Tour (Dept. Moselle).

11 Gravelotte.

14 Metz.—Inns: H. de l'Europe, best, but exorbitantly dear, R. A. and E. B.: — H. du Nord; H. de France, diligence house, good.

Metz is considered the strongest fortress in France, and forms the centre of defence on the frontier of Germany between the Meuse and the Rhine. It is also chef lieu of the Dept. of the Moselle; and an important city on the score of its population (44,131), of its trade, and of its manufactures. It is seated on the Moselle at the junction of a small stream, la Seille. The streets in the centre of the town are narrow, and the houses lofty, but the river is lined with open quays and crossed by fine bridges. The situation of Metz, its public gardens and quays, will well repay the traveller for a halt of some hours. It possesses a magnificent Gothic Cathedral, whose construction was continued from the 14th to the 16th centuries, with some incongruous additions in the style of Louis XIV. It is surmounted at the cross by an elegant spire of open work 373 ft. high (built 1427), but is without towers at the extremities. It is 373 ft. long, and the elevation of the vaulted roof above the pavement is 141 ft. (?). The painted glass of the choir, executed 1526 by Anthon Busch of Strasburg, is remarkably fine, the design good, and the colours very brilliant. The font, called Cuve de Cæsar, is very ancient, probably Roman, and oblong in shape. Here are preserved the ancient stone throne of the early bishops, and a dragon of pasteboard, or canvass, on a wooden frame, which was formerly carried through the streets in procession, with a man inside of it. It is worth while to ascend to the clerestory gallery, to view the stained glass close at hand, and to pass on to the roof, in order to examine the skilful arrangement of the flying buttresses, and the details of sculpture, as well as to enjoy the view over the city.

Another church, Notre Dame de la Ronde, has a choir built 1130. Within the citadel is a rotunda, which belonged to the Knights Templars, somewhat like the round churches of Cambridge and Northampton, is now converted into a magazine. The church of St. Ségolène may interest the antiquary.

Metz has one of the largest Arsenals in France with cannon foundery, &c., the machinery moved by water; also an immense Military Hospital, capable of holding 1500 patients, and is abundantly supplied with barracks. There is also a School for the application and practice of Artillery and Engineering.

The fortifications were planned by Vauban, and continued by Marshal Belleisle. The most important works are the forts of Belle Croix, a chef-d'œuvre of military construction, begun 1731, and la Double Couronne, surrounded by a triple ditch filled with water. In addition to these, there is a considerable redoubt called le Paté, so contrived that it may be converted into an island, by closing the sluices on the Seille, whose waters may be raised 24 feet, so as to form a lake more than 6 m. in extent.

Metz, for a long time capital of the kingdom of Austrasia, became, under the Emperor Otho II., a free imperial city, and residence of a prince-bishop. At length, in 1552, the Constable Montmorency gained possession of it by stratagem for Henri II. The Emperor Charles V., furious at the loss of so strong a fortress and important a city, containing at that time 60,000 inhabitants, assembled an army of 100,000 men, determined, at all risks, to regain it. The defence, however, had been undertaken by the youthful and chivalrous Francois Duc de Guise, the same who afterwards wrested Calais from the English, who threw himself into the place with the élite of the French noblesse, among them the Prince de Condé. The Guise, by his address and activity, conciliated the citizens, inducing them to endure patiently the horrors of a siege, and strengthened the walls by new works thrown up in an incredibly short space of time. The details of this hard-contested siege are familiar to all who have read Robertson's Charles V. On Jan. 1. 1553, at the end of 10 months, the emperor, experienced general as he was, was compelled to raise the siege, having lost 30,000 men before the place. "Fortune is a woman," he exclaimed bitterly, "and she favours only the young." The Duc de Guise was at that time only 30 years of age.

Metz is the native place of Generals Kellerman, the hero of Valmy, and Custine, who was guillotined.

Though Metz was an important city under the Romans, who called it Divodurum and Metis, yet there are few traces of their buildings in the town itself. Without the walls, however, at the village of Jouy aux Arches, 6 m. off, on the road to Nancy, are the very interesting remains of a Roman Aqueduct, which conveyed the waters of a streamlet from Gorze to Metz, a distance of more than 15 m. Five arches are still standing on the l. bank of the Moselle, and 17 in the village of Jouy on the rt., out of 118: that under which the road passes is 60 feet high.

Steamers every other day to Treves, Pont à Mousson, and Nancy (R. 181.). Travellers entering France must here obtain their passe provisoire (Introduction, § c.), which is attended with some difficulty for those who wish to continue on to Paris with the diligence.

Between Metz and the frontier of Germany, the road passes through 18 Courcelles Chaussy.

8 Fouligny.

17 St. Avold.

18 Forbach, a town of 4281 inhabitants. Custom House.

On the arrival of the Paris malle-poste, another starts for Mayence and Frankfort, which place it reaches in 18 hours.

The road hence to Mayence will be found in HAND-BOOK FOR NORTH GERMANY.

ROUTE 178.

PARIS TO MÉZIÈRES AND SEDAN, BY SOISSONS AND RHEIMS.

256 kilom. = 156½ Eng. m.

Malleposte in 19½ hours, returns in 24½ hours.

Diligences daily.

The road quits Paris by the Faubourg St. Martin, and traverses the village of la Villette. A French guide-book says of this place: "Le 29 Mars 1819, l'Armée Françoise se couvrit d'une gloire immortelle par son héroique valeur: le lieu eut aussi à subir l'insolence tyrannique des Anglais." The meaning of which is, that a part of the British army was cantoned in it.

11 Le Bourget. Napoleon on his way from Waterloo stopped here some hours, in order not to enter Paris by day-light. At the radiation of roads called Patte d'Oie, (goose's foot), you leave on the l. the route to Senlis, Lille, and Amiens. (R. 1. and 185.)

15 Mesnil Amelot (department Seine et Marne).

18 Dammartin.

The great tower of the Castle, mentioned in some of the guide-books, in which the Bishop of Meaux used to take refuge when at war with the Comte de Champagne, is pulled down.

A little on the l. of the road lies the village and forest of Ermenonville, the residence of J. J. Rousseau for six weeks before his death, 1778; he was buried in the Ile des Peupliers, in the grounds of M. de Girardin, his host.

14 Nanteuil le Haudouin (Oise).

The Château of the time of Francis I. no longer exists.

10 Levignen.

15 Villers-Cotterets.

A town of 2,689 inhabitants. Its magnificent manor-house, belonging to the Duc de Valois, of the age of Francis I., is now degraded into a poor-house (Dépôt de Mendicité).

La Ferté Milon, a walled town on the Ourcq, with an old castle, about 9 m. S. of our road, on the way to Château-Thierry, deserves mention as the birth-place of Racine.

11 Verte Feuille.

13 Soissons.—(Inns: Croix d'Or:—Couronne:—Lion Rouge)

This is a truly historical city, and one of the oldest in France as regards its foundation. Cæsar found the territory of the Suessones most extensive and fertile, and under the rule of a king not only the most powerful in the whole of Gaul, but who ruled over part of Britain. Noviodunum, at that time the name of this city, is mentioned thus in the Commentaries: "Cæsar in fines Suessonum, qui proximi Rhemis erant, exercitum duxit, et ad oppidum Noviodunum contendit." Under its walls, Clovis, by defeating Syagrius, in 486, put an end to the Roman rule in France. He established here the throne of the Francs, and made Soissons his capital. Afterwards, and because some of his successors made it the seat of government, they were called Kings of Soissons. Charles the Simple was here defeated 924.

Its importance, in a military point of view, as commanding a passage over the Aisne, is shown by its fortunes in the campaign of 1814, when it was twice taken and retaken within 4 weeks—first, by the Russian general Chernicheff with his Cossacks, by a coup-de-main, February 13th, when its governor, the brave General Rusca, was killed by a cannon-shot on its walls. The French, however, regained it the same day, Chernicheff being compelled to withdraw. Napoleon laid the greatest stress upon the possession of it, enjoining the garrison to hold it to the last drop of their blood; and, if his injunction had been complied with, Blucher and the Silesian army, pursued by Napoleon across the Marne, and pent up between his army and Soissons, with the army of Marmont and Mortier behind it, would probably have been annihilated. Fortunately for the old Prussian Marshal, he obtained possession of the place by a disgraceful capitulation on the part of the French governor, which deranged all Napoleon's plans, March 5th, and he thus escaped out of the trap which Napoleon had laid for him.

Soissons in 1814 was defended only by antiquated ramparts; it has since been converted into a regular fortress. It is a city of 8149 inhab., pleasantly situated on the banks of the Aisne.

Owing to what it has suffered from time and from the wars of 1567, when it was sacked by the Huguenots, and that of 1814, Soissons of the present day is a new town, and has a modern air, with few tangible relics to which one may attach the recollections of ancient times. The chief buildings remaining here consist of the Castle, occupying only the site of that inhabited by the Merovingian kings.

The Cathedral, surmounted by a solitary tower, is a very dilapidated edifice, founded in the 12th century, whose venerable appearance is much injured by injudicious repair. The choir is of the 13th century (1212). The S. transept ends in a semicircle. Soissons is one of the oldest episcopal sees in France; indeed, traditions of the church would refer its origin to the primitive Christians.

Of the once magnificent Abbey of St. Jean des Vignes, where Thomas-à-Becket was received when in exile, which was embattled and mounted, and formed a fortress by itself, detached from the town, only the W. end of the church, surmounted by 2 towers, crowned by spires, remains. These are a great ornament to the town, and were spared at the entreaty of the citizens, when the ruthless democrats destroyed the rest. The towers and the portal are probably of the 13th century, the spires are more modern.

between his army and Soissons, with the army of Marmont and Mortier behind it, would probably have been annihilated. Fortunately for the old Prussian Marshal, he obtained possession of the place by a disgraceful capitulation on the part of the French governor, which deranged all Napoleon's plans, March 3d, and he thus escaped out of the trap which Napoleon had laid for him.

Soissons in 1814 was defended only by antiquated ramparts; it has since been converted into a regular fortress. It is a city of 8149 inhab., pleasantly situated on the banks of the Aisne.

Owing to what it has suffered from time and from the wars of 1567, when it was sacked by the Huguenots, and that of 1814, Soissons of the present day is a new town, and has a modern air, with few tangible relics to which one may attach the recollections of ancient times. The chief buildings remaining here consist of the Castle, occupying only the site of that inhabited by the Merovingian kings.

The Cathedral, surmounted by a solitary tower, is a very dilapidated edifice, founded in the 12th century, whose venerable appearance is much injured by injudicious repair. The choir is of the 13th century (1212). The S. transept ends in a semicircle. Soissons is one of the oldest episcopal sees in France; indeed, traditions of the church would refer its origin to the primitive Christians.

Of the once magnificent Abbey of St. Jean des Vignes, where Thomas-à-Becket was received when in exile, which was castellated and moated, and formed a fortress by itself, detached from the town, only the W. end of the church, surmounted by 2 towers, crowned by spires, remains. These are a great ornament to the town, and were spared at the entreaty of the citizens, when the ruthless democrats destroyed the rest. The towers and the portal are probably of the 13th century, the spires are more modern.

Some fragments of antiquities found in and near the town are stored away in a Museum.

A short walk across the fields, along the rt. bank of the Aisne, leads to an institute for Deaf and Dumb, which occupies the site of the once celebrated Abbey of St. Médard, which has been razed to the ground, the only remnant being a subterranean Crypt, the date of which is referred by some to the 11th century (?). It is remarkable for the beauty of the construction, the sharpness of the stone, and the good preservation of the colours upon it. Here were buried the kings Clothaire and Sigebert; and in a dismal donjon adjoining it, which is still pointed out, Louis le Débonnaire is supposed to have been confined by his own son, Clothaire, 833. The verses on the wall, apparently referring to him, are not older than the 15th century.

Among the natives of Soissons are kings Caribert, Chilperie, and Clothaire II., and the Duc de Mayenne, chief of the League, the opponent of Henri IV., who died here.

Diligences run to Laon (22 E. m.) (see R. 187.); to Compiegne; Amiens, &c.

About 12 m. N. of Soissons is the very curious Gothic fortress of Coucy le Château, the beau ideal in extent, arrangement, and picturesqueness of a feudal castle, and, perhaps, the finest in France, though in ruins. It is attached to an old and picturesque walled town (Inn, Pomme d'Or), situated on the extremity of a high headland overlooking a deep valley. The castle consists of an outer bail or court, whose walls, garnished with circular towers at the angles about 100 ft. high, and with semicircular ones, or bastions, along the curtains, were partly blown up by Mazarin, 1652. Within this is the inner bail or ward, out of which rises the majestic circular Donjon, the prominent feature of the building — fit emblem of the proud barons that built and held it — whose boastful motto was, —

"Roi je ne suis,
Prince, ni Comte aussi,
Je suis le Sire de Coucy."

Time has made little impression on it, and even the earthquake's shock, though it has cleft its walls vertically from top to bottom in 1692, leaving the cracks still perceptible, has not altered its symmetry, nor caused it to swerve out of the perpendicular. It is 187 ft. high and 325 ft. in circumference; and its walls, massive in proportion, are 34 ft. thick. Except a row of windows surmounting its circlet of machicolations at the top, almost the only external openings are mere loopholes. It was entered by a narrow bridge, now removed; over the door is the fragment of a bas-relief, sculptured with the device of the Coucy, a combat between a man and a lion. The interior, divided into 4 stories originally, is now entirely gutted, but around each stage runs an arcade of pointed recesses. On the ground floor, to the rt. as you enter, is a well 200 ft. deep, cut in the rock. Beside it was originally a flour-mill and oven. Excepting the topmost story, the halls of the donjon must have been inconveniently dark. Two of the external round towers are furnished with dungeons, whose only entrance was a hole in their roof, like the mouth of a well. Vast casemates ran under the outer walls.

The construction of Coucy castle dates from the 13th century: its founder was Enguerrand III. de Coucy.

La Belle Gabrielle had a house here, which still exists, where she was visited by Henri IV. Her son, the Duc de Vendôme, was born here.

The road to Rheims follows the course of the Vesle, a small stream, upwards through 18 Braine-sur-Vesle.

13 Fismes.
10 Jonchery.

17 Rheims. — "(Inn, Lion d'Or; a good house, but rather dear, in an excellent situation fronting the Cathedral. This city (35,957 inhab.), so inseparably connected with the history of the Frankish monarchy, retains many vestiges of the Roman domination. The 4 gates of the city were called respectively the Porta Martis, Porta Cereris, Porta Veneris, and Porta Bacchi; the first two still preserve their appellations. The ancient Porta Martis (for there is a modern one beside it) is, though in ruins, a splendid triumphal arch. The fragments of the Corinthian columns are most delicately fluted, and acquire additional grace from the Gothic towers and rough walls around them. This noble relic has undergone strange vicissitudes. It was employed as the city gate until 1554, when earthworks were raised against it, and the adjoining gate opened. It was uncovered in 1595, but afterwards walled over again. In 1677 it was uncovered, but the apertures were walled. M. Guizot's commission brought it to its present state.

"The Cathedral is one of the most sumptuous Gothic edifices in France. It was built 1241. It is, perhaps, the finest shrine of masonry north of the Alps (for Milan must be reckoned as the finest in the world); and highly as the expectations of the stranger may have been raised, they will not be disappointed, particularly if the first impression should chance to be received at that time when the light is most favourable, when it is glittering in the evening sun. The towers are unfinished; they were to have been crowned by open-work spires, such as did exist in the now demolished church of St. Nicaise; and by their absence the elevation loses much of its completeness. The great merit of Rheims arises from the unity of the conception. Whether we consider the interior or the exterior, it is evident that the whole — pillars, arches, niches, statues, painted glass, form, proportion, colour — had presented itself as an unit to the conception of the architect. Completely as the portal is covered and filled with ornaments, not one can be considered as an afterthought. Having massed the whole design, the architect then worked out the details, without interfering with the general effect. The consequence of this unity is, that, whether the building is seen from so near a point of view as to enable you to distinguish all the details, or from so distant a one as to enable you only to see the general outlines and shadows, the effect is equally perfect. Many of the statues on the portal are colossal, and generally elegant, both in design and workmanship; those in the transepts are not so good. But the spectator must not linger: he must hasten into the building, that he may not lose the effect of the declining rays of the sun illuminating the interior, and producing, at such a moment, a truly magnificent spectacle. The rose windows in the western front, of which there are two, one above and one within the vast portal, are filled with the most brilliant painted glass; and the sunbeams darting through them, almost horizontally, fill the cathedral with many-coloured light. The gemmed windows of Aladdin's palace could hardly have been more splendid. In the morning there is another beautiful effect. Then the light flows down the choir. The great centre door is set wide open, and through the aperture the streets and houses are seen in perspective, showing, by their contrast, the real size of the building. Its length is 466 feet, its height 121. The architecture of the interior bears a near resemblance, in the main outlines, to Westminster Abbey, excepting that it is bolder and simpler. It is much less florid and decorated than the exterior; and this has sometimes been considered as a defect; but it is evident that the architect calculated upon the gloom produced by the painted glass, not, as in modern churches, an adjunct or ornament, to be inserted or dispensed with at pleasure, but an essential portion of the edifice; and in the deeply-tinted light which it produces, masses of minute ornament would have become heavy and unmeaning. The western wall shows how the architect acted for the purpose of rendering his decorations effective and forcible. It is ornamented with tiers of statues, placed, not in arches, but in deep cells, so that each figure is brought out by a back-ground of shade. Almost all the monuments have been swept away; but the sarcophagus of Jovinus, prefect of Rheims, is here, brought from the Abbey of St. Nicaise, a curious national monument. It is composed of a single block of pure white marble, about 9 ft. in length, and 4 in height. Jovinus is represented in fine bas-relief, on horseback, having just broken his spear in the neck of a lion, which was leaping on a man. Many figures surround Jovinus; some, as well as himself, apparently portraits, beautiful in countenances, and perfectly made out in dress and accoutrements. A dead boar and other animals are in the foreground. The figures are about half the size of life; and on the sides of the tomb, shaped like an altar, the story is continued in very low relief. Much learned controversy has been excited on the subject of the bas-reliefs. Some antiquarians are of opinion that they refer (though how it would be difficult to conjecture) to the defeat of the Alemanni (A. D. 367) by this consular general. Jovinus was a Christian; but there is no token of his faith upon this very curious monument. Amongst the curiosities of the Cathedral, the clock, standing in the north transept, must not be omitted, inasmuch as it is probably the oldest moving piece of horology in existence. From the style of the Gothic tracery and carvings, it seems to belong to the 15th century. When it strikes, a door opens, and the effigy of a man looks out; other smaller figures sally forth and make the round, as in the common Dutch clocks. This, without doubt, was considered in its time as a masterpiece.

"The Abbey Church of St. Remi is the burial-place of St. Remigius, the Apostle of the Franks (died 545). Clovis and Clotilda founded the Church: the monastery owes its origin to Archbishop Turpin, who will be better recollected from the history which passes under his name, so often quoted in romance, than from any other of his deeds. Amongst its treasures was the Sainte Ampoulle, employed in the coronation of the kings of France, and of which a fragment, said to have been preserved when the rest of the relics were dispersed, was produced at the consecration of Charles X. The original buildings of the Merovingian dynasty have wholly disappeared. As it now stands, the principal portions were erected between 1048 and 1162: the choir is of the latter period, of a fully developed and beautiful Gothic. The front of the south transept, in the florid or flamboyant style, was built in 1481; the Church, which was extremely injured during the Revolution, is now undergoing a thorough repair. The tomb of St. Remi, erected by the Cardinal Abbot, Robert de Lenoncourt, about 1533, escaped the iconoclasts; and though not in accordance with the Church, for it is in a Flemish-Italian style, is grand from its size and sumptuousness. It was reconstructed by a private individual in 1803. It is ornamented with 12 statues, as large as life, of the 12 peers of France, to whom Turpin gave so much chivalrous celebrity: six are the prelates of Rheims, Laon, Langres, Beauvais, Châlons, Noyon; six lay peers, the Dukes of Burgundy, Normandy, and Aquitaine, the Counts of Flanders, Champagne, and Toulouse: the figures are of white marble, finely sculptured, but in the rather theatrical and exaggerated taste of the time.

"Many of the streets of Rheims will remind the traveller of an old English town. In these the houses are low, usually of one story. The smart new portions of the town, in which great improvements are making, are of the usual French character," (F. P.); yet, on the whole, the stranger who has heard Rheims described as one of the oldest towns in France will be surprised to find that it has so very little appearance of antiquity. A few examples of picturesque street-architecture remain; in the Rue du Tambour is the hotel of the Comtes de Champagne; in the Marché au Blé, a house decorated externally with rich and well preserved oak carving. The inn called Maison Rouge, near the cathedral, is interesting as being the same (or occupying the same site as that) in which Jeanne d'Arc was lodged at the coronation of Charles VII., though it then bore the sign of L'Ane Rayé (Zebra). In the Rue de Cérès is the house in which Colbert, the enlightened minister of Louis XIV., was born, 1619; his father is supposed to have been a draper, and he to have served as a shopman and traveller. The Abbé de Pluche, author of the "Spectacle de la Nature," was also a native of Rheims. Mr. Pitt spent some months here in 1786 with his friend Wilberforce, in order to learn French.

The ramparts and fosse have been planted and converted into agreeable public walks surrounding the town.

Rheims is the metropolitan see of France, and one of the nuclei of the civilisation of that country; and has been the place of coronation of the French kings from the time of Philippe Auguste to that of Charles X., with the two exceptions of Henri IV. and Louis XVIII. It was selected for that distinction, probably, as the place of deposit of the Sainte Ampoulle, or holy flask of oil, brought by a dove from Heaven to St. Rémy as he was about to baptise Clovis (496). The persuasion of Clothilda, his queen, and a vow made before the decisive battle of Zulpich, had decided the Frankish conqueror to receive the Christian rite from the hands of the bishop; who, as the new convert kneeled before him, received him as a member of the church with these haughty words: — "Mitis depone colla Sicamber; incende quod adorâsti, et adora quod incendisti." The story of the Ampoulle, however, is said to have been an invention of the Bishop Hinckmar, 360 years after Clovis; it is certain that no contemporary records make mention of it. After having been publicly smashed to pieces by a sansculotte named Ruhl in 1793, it most unaccountably reappeared at the coronation of Charles X.

No celebration of the august ceremony of the "Sacre" in that imposing and well-proportioned pile, the cathedral, can have exceeded in interest that of Charles VII., the result of the enthusiasm of the Maid of Orleans. "The people looked on with wonder and with awe. Thus had really come to pass the fantastic visions that floated before the eyes of the poor shepherd-girl of Domremy! Thus did she perform her two-fold promise to the king within three months from the day when she first appeared in arms at Blois! During the coronation of her sovereign — so long the aim of her thoughts and prayers, and reserved to be at length achieved by her own prowess — the Maid stood before the High Altar by the side of the King, with her banner unfurled in her hand. 'It had shared the danger,' she answered; 'it had a right to share the glory.'

"The holy rites having been performed, the Maid knelt down before the newly-crowned monarch, her eyes streaming with tears. 'Gentle King,' she said, 'now is fulfilled the pleasure of God, who willed that you should come to Rheims and be anointed, showing that you are the true King, and he to whom the kingdom should belong.' She now regarded her mission as accomplished, and her inspiration as fled. 'I wish,' she said, 'that the gentle King should allow me to return towards my father and mother, keep my flocks and herds, as before, and do all things as I was wont to do.'" — Quarterly Review.

In the campaign of 1816, Rheims was surprised and taken by a Russian force, under St. Priest, the French garrison being quite inadequate, from their small numbers, to defend the walls; but Napoleon did not allow the Russians to keep it many hours. Hurrying to the spot with an army broken by the defeat of Laon, he nevertheless completely took by surprise St. Priest, who was mortally wounded while endeavouring to stem the torrent and secure his retreat. This was almost the last military success which Buonaparte gained.

The situation of Rheims is agreeable, on the right bank of the Vesle, surrounded by slopes covered with vineyards.

CHAMPAGNE WINES. — "The city is thriving: the chief article of commerce is the wine, which, in spite of all the powers of revolutionary geography, will perpetually keep the ancient name of the province of Champagne in remembrance. These wines are divided into 'Vins de la Rivière,' and the 'Vins de la Montagne;' the former being for the most part white, and the latter red. The best river wines, strictly so called, are obtained from the vineyards situate in the valleys and on the sides of the hills that border the Marne at Ay, Hautvilliers, Epernay, Dizy, Avernay, &c., and occupy a tract of country of about 5 leagues in extent; but the estate of Cumieres, though in the midst of these vineyards, lying under the same line and with the same exposure, yields red wines only, and of a superior quality to the others that are grown in the same neighbourhood. In general, it may be observed, that the vineyards on the banks of the Marne supply the choicest wines. Hence the vintages of Hautvilliers and Ay have always been preferred to those of Epernay and Pierry; and the latter to those of Ansi, Agen, and Lemesnil. This rule is not, however, without exceptions; for the small vineyard of Closes, which lies in the bosom of the hill, to the S. W. of Epernay, yields a wine fully equal to that of Ay; and at Cranant, about 2 leagues distant, the S. E. slope of the same ridge furnishes a liquor but little inferior to that celebrated growth. For the manufacture of the white Champagne wines, black grapes are now generally used. They are gathered in the morning, while the dew is yet on them; and it is remarked that, when the weather is foggy at the time of the vintage, the produce of the fermentation is considerably increased. The wine obtained from the first pressure is called vin d'élite, and is always kept apart from the rest. The liquor is collected in small vats, whence it is removed early in the following day into puncheons which have been previously sulphured; in these the must undergoes a brisk fermentation, and is allowed to remain till towards the end of December, when it becomes bright: it is then racked, and fined with isinglass, and in a month or six weeks more it is racked and fined a second time. In the month of March it is bottled. After it has been six weeks in bottles, it becomes brisk; and towards autumn the fermentation is often so powerful as to occasion a considerable loss by the bursting of the bottles. The loss thus sustained, which is seldom less than 20 per cent., is one of the causes which tend to enhance the price of the wines. To procure pink Champagne, the grapes are first slightly trodden and freed from the stalks, and the fermentation is allowed to commence before they are subjected to the press, in order to facilitate the solution of the colouring matter. In making the red wines, the grapes are trodden before they are introduced into the vat: sometimes the treading is repeated during the fermentation. The mark is covered by a board, and a layer of straw is commonly employed to protect the head from the contact of the atmospheric air. We owe the foregoing account chiefly to Dr. Henderson; but there are some secrets of the trade which are not fully explained. In Burgundy, where a strong rivalry prevails, they say that all foaming or mousseux Champagne is a made wine, and that this quality is imparted to it by sugar, potash, or other similar ingredients, much as we do to make old gooseberry. In Champagne, they tell you that the main cause is the heating or incipient fermentation, produced in the grape by permitting it to remain in heaps with the dew upon the fruit before the expression of the juice begins; and that the Vin d'Artois, or, in fact, any wine, can be rendered mousseux by this process. But the most correct opinion seems to be, that all Champagne, whether dry or mousseux, is, to a certain degree, a manufacture." — F. P. (See St. Peray, in the Index.)

The road to Mezières lies through an uninteresting portion of that part of Champagne called "La Pouilleuse," passing

17 Isle, beyond which it enters the Dept. of the Ardennes, and reaches 20 Rethel, a town of 6800 inhabitants, prettily seated on the Aisne, whose branches divide it into several parts.

A hilly country succeeds; once forest, now cleared for the most part, and bare, and sad of aspect in consequence.

12 Saulces au Bois.

10 Launay.

19 Mézières (Inn, H. du Palais Royal; very good), one of Vauban's strong fortresses, and at the same time the chef lieu of the Dept. Ardennes, is seated on the rt. bank of the Meuse, on the isthmus of a promontory formed by the river, which washes its walls on two sides, and separates it from Charleville. It has 4083 inhabitants.

The parish church is a very fine flamboyant Gothic edifice, of the 16th century, in which the marriage of Charles IX. with Isabelle d'Autriche was solemnised 1570. Among the good points about it are its main portal, in tolerable taste, and 2 curious bas-reliefs in the choir. There are some bits of painted glass inserted in blank windows, and over the N. aisle is a bomb-shell, one of those thrown by the Allies when they invested the place after the battle of Waterloo, which has remained sticking in the roof ever since the town capitulated.

A more glorious event in the annals of Mezières was the resistance which it made to the Spanish army of Charles V., 40,000 strong, in 1521. The Chevalier Bayard gallantly took the command of the town at a time when Francis I. had proposed to blow it up and abandon it, as too weak to offer any resistance, and to lay waste the country around, as the only means of stopping the enemy. With a force of only 2000 men Bayard endured a siege of 6 weeks, in the course of which bombs were for the first time used, and were most plentifully showered upon the garrison, but with little effect. The banner of Bayard is said to be still preserved in the H. de Ville.

Charleville, a town of 7773 inhabitants, is only a mile distant from Mezières, and is connected with it by an avenue and suspension-bridge. It has become a thriving place since it ceased to be a fortress at the end of the 17th century, and manufactures nails, hardware, fire-arms, &c.

The Meuse makes a wide sweep around, and then dives into a narrow trench or defile cut by it in the slate rocks, which stretch with the most contorted windings nearly as far as Givet. The depths into which the Meuse enters are a narrow and deep chasm in the chain of the Ardennes; the breach is in places no wider than the river itself, its sides often vertical, sometimes 130 ft. high. It widens suddenly at Fumay, a town most picturesquely planted on a holm on the banks of the river, overhung by precipitous rocks, called Les Dames de la Meuse, 130 ft. high, and overlooked by the picturesque ruins of the castle of Hierches. Slate is the chief product of this desolate district; it is sent down the Meuse to Holland from Fumay, where there are extensive quarries. In 1623 slates were sent from the Ardennes to roof the church of St. James of Compostella in Spain.

20 m. N. of Mezières is Rocroy, a small fortress, in front of which le Grand Condé gained the greatest of his victories over the Spaniards, at the age of 22 years. The army opposed to him were veteran bands of Walloons, Spaniards, and Italians, commanded by a mature and experienced general; and it was only after thrice heading the charge against this serried infantry, that Condé at length broke their array. The Spanish general Fuentes, who conducted the battle from a litter, being wounded, was found among the dead. The battle field is on a plain, at that time (May 19, 1643) surrounded by marshes and dense forests on all sides, but now much changed by clearing and drainage.

The road to Sedan lies through a pretty country. The Meuse, is crossed on quitting Mezières, and again twice before entering 22 Sedan. — Inns: Croix d'Or; good: — H. de Turenne (?): — Croix d'Argent; nasty. Sedan, situated on the rt. bank of the Meuse, is both an important frontier fortress, commanding the entrance from Luxembourg into France, and a prosperous manufacturing town of 13,719 inhabitants, but is a dirty disagreeable place. It is celebrated for the fine cloths, especially the black, which are made here, and not less than 11,000 or 12,000 persons are employed in this branch of industry.

Down to the time of Louis XIII. it was capital of a principality belonging to the family of La Tour d'Auvergne, Ducs de Bouillon, but in 1642 the Duc. de B. having engaged in the conspiracy of Cinq-Mars against Richelieu was too happy to give it up to save his head. Marshal Turenne was born here 1611, in a small pavilion attached to the château, which was razed to the ground at the Revolution, and no souvenir of him remains, save a black stone to mark the spot where it stood. An ugly statue of him has been set up in the Place. The château itself is also demolished. In fact Sedan has nothing of interest to detain the traveller.

At Bazeilles, a neighbouring village, is, or was, the château where Turenne was nursed, and an avenue planted by him. At this place the Comte de Soissons defeated the army of Richelieu 1641, but perished on the field of battle.

ROUTE 180.

RHEIMS TO LUXEMBOURG, BY STENAY AND LONGWY.

Rheims, in R. 178.

17 Isle (Marne), in R. 178.

23 Pauvres.

16 Vouziers. (Ardennes), a town of 2000 inhabitants, on the l. bank of the Aisne.

13 Boux aux Bois.

9 Buzaney, a bourg of less than 1000 inhabitants, retaining portions of its old fortifications, and an entrance gate called Porte St. Germaine. On the site of the Citadel is the Château de la Cour, anciently the habitation of St. Remy, Bishop of Rheims. To the north of the village, and in the upper part of it, stands the singular edifice called Mahomet, said to have been a mosque built by Pierre d'Angluré, who having followed St. Louis to the Holy wars, was taken prisoner by the Saracens, and released after a long captivity, on giving his word of honour that he would himself bring back his ransom. He accordingly sold part of his lands to raise the money, and returned, after many adventures, in the course of which he lost an eye, to the Sultan, who was so pleased with his honourable conduct that he restored the gold to the Christian knight, on the condition that he should build a mosque on his return home. The building is constructed of large stones, and the door on the east was originally the only opening; the windows have been broken out.

The department of the Meuse is entered shortly before reaching 21 Stenay, an ancient town of 3140 inhabitants, once an important frontier fortress, but, after its capture by Louis XIV., its fortifications were razed, 1654. It belonged to the family of Condé down to 1791, and the Vicomte de Turenne, when in rebellion against the Court and Mazarin, threw himself into it, and was joined by the Duchesse de Longueville, so celebrated in the wars of the Fronde. They here signed a treaty of alliance with Spain.

The country around is flat, and subject to inundations from the Meuse.

15 Montmedy is a fourth class fortress, consisting of an upper town surrounded by 8 bastions, and a lower one badly fortified. It stands on the Chiers, a tributary of the Meuse, and was taken from the Spaniards 1657. 3169 inhabitants.

28 Longuyon.

18 Longwy (Inn, Croix d'Or; very good, and the only tolerable inn on the road). This is another fortress; the works of the upper town, were laid out by Vauban, 1682, and Louis XIV.

styled it the Iron Gate of France, from its important military position, at an angle of the French territory projecting into Luxembourg. It was taken by the Duke of Brunswick and the Prussians, 1792, and again 1815, when after a severe bombardment, and a noble resistance on the part of the French General Ducos and a small garrison, it surrendered on honourable terms to the Allies commanded by the Prince of Hesse-Homburg.

Mercy, the Bavarian General, the antagonist of le Grand Condé, at Fribourg and Nordlingen, where he fell nobly on the battle field 1645, was born here.

We cross the French frontier and enter the Duchy of Luxembourg before reaching

6 Auhange,

3½ posts, Luxembourg. See HAND-BOOK FOR NORTH GERMANY.

ROUTE 181.

NANCY TO TREVES, BY METZ AND THIONVILLE. — DESCENT OF THE MOSELLE.

A small steamer navigates the Moselle daily between Nancy (Pont à Mousson), Metz and Treves: it takes 1 day to go from Treves to Metz.

The Moselle flows at a distance of about 7 m. from Nancy, and is crossed by our road.

17 Belleville.

11 Pont à Mousson (Inn, Hôtel d'Angleterre), a town of 7218 inhab., on the Moselle, here crossed by a bridge. A fine Gothic church, in the style of the latter part of the 13th century, and in the square or place which is surrounded by arcades, an ancient mansion, curiously decorated externally with sculptures, called Maison des 7 Pechés Capitaux, deserve notice. The buildings of the ancient Abbaye de St. Marie are converted into a Séminaire.

This is the birth-place of Marshal Duroc, the friend of Napoleon, in whose arms he died mortally wounded at the battle of Bautzen, 1813. The high road here crosses the Moselle to its right bank.

11 La Lobe.

The ruined Roman aqueduct, described p. 559. is passed at Jouey aux Arches, 5 or 6 m. before reaching 18 METZ, in R. 175.

17 Mondelange

The small town of Richemont stands prettily on the l. bank of the Moselle, at the confluence of the Orne.

11 Thionville (Inn; H. du Luxembourg: du Commerce: Lion d'Or), a town of 5800 inhab., a fortress of third class, constructed by Vauban, consisting of 11 bastions covered by some external works, and by a fort on the rt. bank of the Moselle. It contains 5600 inhab.; many of its houses bear the date of the 16th century.

It was taken from the Spaniards 1558, by the Duc de Guise, but was restored to Philip II. by the treaty of Cateau Cambresis. The Grand Condé, while yet Duc d'Enghien, captured it, 1643, after 3 months of siege, and 40 days of open trenches.

17 Sierck, the last town in France, is agreeably situated on the rt. bank of the Moselle, between the Stromberg and the rocks of the valley of Montenach, surmounted at a considerable height by an old Castle, commanding the course of the Moselle: it is a fine point of view.

A little below Sierck is the camp of Kunsberg, thrown up by Vauban, a series of fortified lines, in which Marshal Villars arrested the march of Marlborough.

26 Sarrebourg (3 Pruss. posts).

TREVES. HAND-BOOK FOR NORTH GERMANY.

ROUTE 182.

METZ TO LUXEMBOURG, OR ARLON, BY LONGWY.

The Inn at Longwy is the best and almost the only good one on these lines.

a. to Metz.
17 Mondelange.
11 Thionville (p. 569.).
19 Frisange (or $2\frac{1}{4}$ posts) in Luxembourg.
$1\frac{3}{4}$ posts, Luxembourg. Hand-book for N. Germany.

b. to Arlon.
17 Mondelange.
20 Fontoy.
9 Aumetz.
20 Longwy (Inn tolerable), a fortress; the upper town was fortified by Louis XIV., after the treaty of Nymegen.
Arlon. Hand-book for N. Germany.

SECTION X.

ILE DE FRANCE. — FLANDRES. — ARTOIS.

ROUTE		PAGE
183	Paris to Brussels, by St. Quentin, Cambrai, and Valenciennes . . .	571
185	Paris to Lille, by Peronne and Arras, and from Lille to Dunkerque . .	575
187	Calais to Dijon, by Douay, Cambrai, St. Quentin, Laon, Rheims, Châlons-sur-Marne, and Troyes . . .	578
188	Calais to Lille and Tournay, on the way to Brussels, by Cassel . . .	582
189	Calais to Dunkerque and Courtrai, by Gravelines and Bergues . . .	583

ROUTE 183.

PARIS TO BRUSSELS, BY ST. QUENTIN, CAMBRAI, AND VALENCIENNES.

To Valenciennes 208 kilom. = 129 Eng. m.

The Malle estafette takes no passengers. Diligences daily, in about 36 hours. A Railroad is begun at the end next Paris. From Valenciennes to Brussels, the Railway has been completed by the Belgian government.

The road quits Paris by the Faubourg St. Martin.

11 Le Bourget.

13 Louvres.

10 La Chapelle en Serval. On the l. extends the Forest of Chantilly (Route 1. p. 8.).

9 Senlis (Inn, Grand Cerf), a town of 5000 inhabitants, having a handsome cathedral, built by Louis XII.

Here the road to Peronne and Arras (R. 185.) branches off to the l.

12 Villeneuve sur Verberie. The river Oise runs parallel with our road at some distance on the l.

12 Le Croix St. Ouen.

8 Compiègne (Inns: La Cloche (?): — le Lion), a town of 8895 inhabitants, on the l. bank of the Oise, a little below its junction with the Aisne. The Romans gave it the name Compendium, because their military stores and ammunition of all sorts were kept here. It has been a favourite residence of the French monarchs, with few exceptions, from the time of Clovis. They often repaired hither to enjoy the pleasures of the chase in its very extensive park and neighbouring forest.

The Royal Palace, as it at present stands, is a building of the time of Louis XIV. and XV., erected from designs of Girodet. Napoleon added a splendid hall or gallery: it was here that he received his bride Marie Louisa. Charles X. spent much of his time here, in his favourite sport of shooting. The interior of the palace is elegantly furnished. The Gardens are prettily laid out, and a sort of arbour, or berceau walk, 4800 feet long, leads from them to the forest.

The Hôtel de Ville is a curious Gothic edifice, surmounted by a beffroi and turrets.

The Forest occupies an area of nearly 30,000 acres, and contains some fine oak timber.

A camp for military manœuvres is generally formed here in the autumn.

Though the fortifications are now entirely razed, Compiègne was once a strong place; and it was before its walls that the dauntless Maid of Orleans was made prisoner and entered on a captivity, which ended only in her miserable and cruel death, 1436. She had thrown herself into the town, then besieged by the Duke of Burgundy, and had courageously headed the garrison in a sally across the bridge, when, in retreating last of the rear guard, she found the town-gate partly closed, and choked by the throng eager to escape from the enemy, who closely pursued them. In consequence of this, while endeavouring to protect the fugitives, and before she could obtain an entrance, she was seized by an archer of Picardy, and transferred to John of Luxemburg, from whom she was purchased by the English. The spot of her capture is still pointed out, although the old bridge, close to which it occurred, has been removed, and replaced by another higher up the stream.

Steamers navigate the Seine and Oise from St. Germain up to this town.

The road ascends the valley of the Oise on its rt. bank, by 14 Ribecourt, to

10 Noyon (Inn, H. des Chevalets), a very ancient town, on a small stream, the Vorse, about a mile from the right side of the Oise, with 6000 inhabitants, remarkable as the birth-place of the reformer, John Calvin. It was besieged by Julius Cæsar, who calls it Noviodunum Belgarum. Charlemagne resided here; and Hugues Capet was elected by his vassals King of France at this place in 987.

The Cathedral is of interest to the antiquary and architect. It is a fine Romanesque edifice, begun in the 12th century, and completed on a uniform plan early in the 13th. The transepts and nave have semicircular terminations. The lower arches and the 9 side-chapels outside the choir are Round; the triforium gallery running above them has Pointed arches. This church presents an interesting example of the transition from the Round to the Pointed style.

It is a hilly stage to 9 Guiscard.

The road crosses the ridge dividing the basin of the Seine from that of the Somme, and enters the Dept. of the Somme before reaching 10 Ham (Inns: H. de France: — Cornet d'Or), a small town on the Somme, surrounded by marshes, with 1663 inhabitants. Its Citadel has been much strengthened by modern works, so as to be now a fortress of importance: it serves as a state prison, for which purpose it is well fitted. The central tower, or donjon, is 100 ft. high, 100 ft. wide, and the walls are of masonry, 36 ft. thick. It was built 1470 by the Comte de St. Pol, afterwards beheaded by Louis XI., and bears over the gate his motto, "Mon Mieux." The Prince de Polignac, and 3 other ministers of Charles X., who signed the fatal Ordonnances of July 25, 1830, were confined here, and Prince Louis Napoleon now expiates his folly in its dungeons. Strangers are not admitted.

The Church is said to be an interesting building, and contains some curious bas-reliefs.

General Foy was born here.

Between Ham and a village called Nesle, Henry V. crossed the Somme, by a ford which the French had left unguarded, with his brave army, which, 2 days after, fought and gained the battle of Azincour, 1415. (See p. 4.)

11 Roupy.

8 St. Quentin (Inns: H. d'Angleterre (?), a flourishing manufacturing town, whose population has more than doubled in 25 years, and now amounts to 25,000. It was the ancient capital of the Vermandois, the "Augusta Viromanduorum" of the Romans, and is situated on the Somme (Samarobriva of Cæsar).

The principal Church, once collegiate, is less known than it ought to be. It is one of the finest, boldest, and purest Gothic buildings in this part of Belgic Gaul. The vault of the roof is 127 ft. high. It contains some good painted glass. The King of France was premier canon of this church, and the chapter possessed privileges over the municipal community which kept up constant feuds between town and gown, and which continued, more or less, until chapter and community sustained a simultaneous annihilation. The Hôtel de Ville is a very fine specimen of these structures, in what may be termed the Flemish-Gothic style; and this, and many other portions of the town, afford good subjects for the pencil. It probably dates from the 15th century.

The wharfs on the banks of the Somme bear testimony to the increasing consumption of coal in this district. It is brought from the vicinity of Valenciennes, Condé, and Mons, by the canal de St. Quentin, and is of an inferior quality, but it is extensively employed in the various manufactures which are springing up, and which may hereafter become formidable rivals to our interests.

St. Quentin is the centre of the manufacture of Linen Cloths (toile de fil), muslins, and gauzes (battistes et gazes), which spread over the country for 30 m. around, as far as Cambrai, Bapeaume, and Peronne. Flanders and Picardy furnish the flax: the finest quality comes from Marchiennes; that of St. Quentin is coarse. The weavers are obliged to work below ground and in cellars, by the moist and even temperature of which they are alone enabled to prevent the fine thread breaking. It has been calculated that 100,000 persons are employed in weaving and spinning flax. Cotton spinning and weaving also employ a great many hands.

Under the walls of St. Quentin was fought (July 28, 1557) the celebrated battle between the Spanish troops, commanded by Emanuel Philibert, Duke of Savoy, and Ferdinand Gonzaga, and the French, headed by Coligny and the Connétable Anne de Montmorency, in which the latter were entirely routed. Queen Mary of England aided her husband Philip II. on this occasion with a considerable levy of English troops, under the command of the Earl of Pembroke, who contributed not a little to the victory. This defeat left Paris unprotected; and had the victors profited by their advantage, France and Spain might, perhaps, have been united into one vast monarchy. But Philip, who joined the army after the battle, hesitated, and occupied himself in the siege of the town, which, just capable of defence, might with safety have been left in the occupation of the French garrison. Commanded by Coligny and Jarnac, the town sustained eleven assaults before it was taken. The inhabitants were treated with great cruelty, the Spaniards revenging themselves upon the burgesses, who had defended the town walls with great valour. Even the clergy were not spared, and they all quitted the town, and did not return until St. Quentin was restored to France by the treaty of Château Cambresis, 1559.

Diligences daily to Lille and Douai; to Laon and Rheims (R. 187.); to Paris; to Avesnes; to Amiens, and to Brussels.

The canal of St. Quentin is of great importance to the town; it connects the basin of the Somme with that of the Scheldt, and is carried through the intervening hills by tunnels, one at Tronquoi, half a mile long, another at Riqueval, $3\frac{3}{4}$ m. long, cut through the solid rock: it is 20 ft. high and 20 ft. broad; it admits only one barge to pass at a time, towed by men. By means of this canal, a communication is opened between the river Scheldt and the extreme eastern departments of France and the Atlantic, through the rivers Somme, Seine, and Loire; it was completed by Napoleon in 1810; it enters the Oise at Chauny. It runs parallel with our road as far as Cambrai.

14 Bellicourt. The road is hilly to Cambrai. Near the little village of Castelet, traversed by the road, the Scheldt (L'Escaut) rises from behind the gardens of Mont St. Martin; it issues from an arch in the side of a hill.

14 Bonavy.

11 Cambrai (Inns H. de l'Europe; formerly au Grand Canard; good) is an industrious and considerable town and fortress on the Scheldt, with 19,000 inhabitants, principally remarkable for the fine muslin manufactured here, named by the English, after the place where it is made, Cambric. The Revolution stripped it of all its principal ornaments. It was the episcopal see of the venerable Fénélon, author of Télémaque, who was buried here. The sacrilegious hands of the revolutionists, in 1793, tore his body from the peaceful grave, and melted the lead of his coffin into bullets. The beautiful Cathedral was utterly razed to the ground at the same time. By way of making some atonement for the outrage, a handsome monument was erected to his memory in 1825, in the present cathedral, a modern church of indifferent architecture. His statue, "half rising from an altar tomb, apparently ready to obey the sound of the last trumpet, is not ill conceived nor executed." The three bas-reliefs represent memorable events of his life — the education of the Duke of Burgundy, — the Archbishop attending the wounded soldier after the battle of Malplaquet, — and the cow restored to the peasant. His remains are deposited beneath the monument, which is the work of David, the sculptor. An ancient Greek painting of the Virgin, attributed, as is usual with pictures of this class, to St. Luke, is preserved in the cathedral, and is yet carried in procession.

Of the 12 churches which existed before the Revolution, 2 alone remain. The only other public building of consequence is the Hôtel de Ville, of modern construction. Cambrai is called Camaracum in the Itinerary of Antonine.

Cambrai is celebrated in the annals of diplomacy for the famous League against the republic of Venice concocted here in 1508: a treaty of peace between Charles V. and Francis I. was also signed in 1529. Cambrai was taken by a detachment of the British army under Sir Charles Colville, June 24, 1815. It is the native place of the historian Monstrelet, and of General Dumouriez, (1739).

The Canal of St. Quentin begins at Cambrai, where it issues out of the Scheldt: it joins the Oise at Chauny. It is of the highest importance in promoting the industry and prosperity of the district through which it passes.

15 m. E. of Cambrai lies

Le Cateau Cambresis, famous for the treaty signed there (1595) between Philip II. and Henri II. It was also the birth-place of Marshal Mortier, Duke of Treviso, who perished in Paris by Fieschi's assassination-machine. Cateau was the head quarters of the Duke of Wellington when he entered France in 1815: hence he issued his order to his troops to abstain from pillage, and to maintain the strictest discipline.

14 Bouchain, a small second class fortress on the Scheldt.

On quitting Bouchain the road passes, on the l., Denain, the battle-field where Marshal Villars defeated and made prisoner Lord Albemarle, commander of the allied forces, posted in a strong position, 1712. An obelisk was erected on the field to commemorate the success, with these lines of Voltaire:

"Regardez dans Denain l'audacieux Villars Disputant le tonnerre à l'aigle des Césars."

The innermost douane to be passed on entering France is at Douchy.

On approaching Valenciennes the road passes the great coal-field of the Département du Nord, the most important in France, discovered about 1736, in a portion of Hainault which was not ceded to France until 1678. It is a prolongation of the Belgian coal-field. The chief collieries are at Anzin, Denain, Lourches, Fresnes, Vieux Condé, &c.: 40 mines are worked in this district: some of them are 1640 ft. deep. Paris is supplied with a large quantity of coal from hence by the canal of St. Quentin, and the fuel derived from hence imparts life to the numerous and varied manufactures scattered over the industrious Département du Nord, including 3000 manufactories around the walls of Valenciennes, within a circle of 10 or 15 m.

18 VALENCIENNES (Inns: La Poste: — Le Canard: — La Biche: — La Cour de France), a fortress of the second class, with a strong citadel constructed by the engineer Vauban, is a dark and ill-built town lying on the Scheldt, and has a population of 22,000 souls. In 1793 it was taken by the Allies under the Duke of York and General Abercromby, after a siege of 84 days and a severe bombardment, which destroyed a part of the town: it was yielded back next year. In the grand square, or Place d'Armes, are situated the Hôtel de Ville, a fine building, half Gothic, half Italian in style, built 1612, and containing 3 pictures by Rubens (?), brought from the Abbey of St. Amand; the Beffroi, 170 ft. high, built 1237, fell 1843, and caused a serious loss of life; the Theatre. The Church of St. Gery is the principal one.

The celebrated Valenciennes Lace is manufactured here, and a considerable quantity of fine cambric. This is the birth-place of Watteau, the painter, of Froissart, the historian, and of the minister D'Argenson.

On entering France, passports must be delivered up here; and on quitting the country they are strictly examined by the police.

The country around Valenciennes offers no picturesque beauty; the rivers are sluggish, and have flat uninteresting banks.

There is a triple row of French custom-houses on this frontier; and the repeated searches to which the traveller is subjected are often very annoying, and occasion considerable delay.

The great Railroad of Belgium has extended a branch from Brussels, by Mons and Quievrain, to Valenciennes. See NORTH GERMAN HAND-BOOK.

Diligences to Paris; to Mezieres, Sedan, and Strasburg; to Peronne; to Lille and Calais; to Maubeuge and Avesnes.

The road and railway from Valenciennes to BRUSSELS (11½ posts) are described in the HAND-BOOK FOR NORTH GERMANY.

ROUTE 185.

PARIS TO LILLE BY PERONNE AND ARRAS, AND FROM LILLE TO DUNKERQUE.

220 kilom. = 134 Eng. m. to Lille.

Diligences daily in 24 hours. The road is uninteresting.

The Malleposte follows Route 1. by Amiens and Doullens to Arras. The distance, 238 kilom., is performed in 18 hours.

The road as far as 43 Senlis will be found in Route 183.

12 Pont St. Maxence is prettily situated on the Oise, and its Bridge was built by the architect Peyronnet.

12 Bois de Lihus.

10 Gournay-sur-Aronde.
7 Cuvilly.
7 Conchy les Pots.
12 Roye. — Inn, Grand Cerf.
9 Fonches.
7 Marché le Pot.

12 Peronne, (Inns: Hôtel St. Martin:—H. d'Angleterre), a fortress on the N. bank of the Somme. It bore the epithet "la Pucelle," because it never was captured by an enemy down to 1815, when the Duke of Wellington took it by assault, and deprived it for ever of its virgin reputation. He thus describes its capture in his Despatches: "I attacked Peronne with the first division of British Guards, under Major-Gen. Maitland, on the 26th in the afternoon. The troops took the hornwork which covers the suburb on the l. of the Somme by storm, with but small loss, and the town immediately afterwards surrendered, on the condition that the garrison should lay down their arms and be allowed to return to their homes."—June 26th, 1815. The number of the inhabitants in the town exceeds 4000.

It was in the Castle of Peronne that Charles the Bold detained the crafty Louis XI. his prisoner, in the way so admirably described in Quentin Durward, on receiving intelligence of the revolt of the Liègeois, and restored him to liberty only after he had signed conditions most disadvantageous to himself, and known in history as the "treaty of Peronne." The Castle is much dilapidated, and a large part is probably not older than the 16th century, yet there remain many dismal dungeons on the ground-floor. The chamber occupied by Louis is still pointed out in the Tour Herbert, and beside it the miserable cell, on a level with the moat, where Charles the Simple ended his days, a wretched captive. He was buried in the Church of St. Farcy, now destroyed. The Church of St. John, near the Beffroi, in the Place, is a handsome Gothic edifice, apparently of the 16th century; its lythe piers without capitals spread out into multiplied groinings over the roof, and it has a little painted glass. The situation of Peronne is unwholesome, owing to the marshes which surround it.

The road to Cambrai (p. 574.) turns off here. That to Arras traverses a flat open country, through 13 Sailly and Bapeaume, a dull and dirty fortress, where, however, a good deal of linen and muslin is made.

15 Ervillers.

An army of windmills announces the approach to 15 Arras.—Inns: Hôtel de l'Europe; clean, but dear: — Petit St. Paul; the diligence house, and well recommended; the post house is at a considerable distance from both. Arras is a large and fine city, formerly the capital of the Pays d'Artois, and now of the Dépt. du Pas de Calais; population 23,485. It is a fortress of third class, seated on the Scarpe, and the passport regulations are strictly enforced. The entrance, between and amongst the lofty ramparts, shaded by loftier trees, is grand and imposing. In the interior it has quite the character of a Flemish town, especially in its Grande Place, surrounded by gable-faced houses, terminating in scallops and scroll work supported on open arcades. On one side of it stands the Hôtel de Ville, a rather pleasing structure in the latest Gothic, resembling our Elizabethan, built, it is said, by the Spaniards while they were masters of Arras. The Revolution raged here with exceeding violence, a matter of little surprise when it is remembered that Arras was the birth-place of the monsters Max^{e}. Robespierre and his brother. They were the sons of an advocate who abandoned them in their childhood, and went to America, and they were educated at the College here, and maintained by the charity of some of the clergy of St. Waast. It is said that in one street all the inhabitants were guillotined, whence it was called the "Rue sans têtes." One effect of this fury was the desecration of the greater portion of the religious edifices. The Cathedral fell like the rest, and only a fragment of it remains near the Place. The present Cathedral, though in the form of a Latin cross, with flying buttresses, is a pure Italian edifice. Its interior, supported on classic columns, with side aisles and transepts, is plain but handsome.

Damiens, who attempted to assassinate Louis XV., was a native of Arras.

The cotton manufacture is carried on to a considerable extent here.

Diligences to Lille, Cambrai, Douay, Dunkerque, Amiens, &c.

A few miles beyond Arras, a slight ascent is surmounted, and thence a level plain, most fertile and most carefully cultivated, producing vast quantities of beet-root for sugar, and of Colza (Brassica campestris), a sort of cabbage, which is crushed for oil, extends all the way to Lille.

17 Lens. Here Condé gained a victory over the Spaniards 1678. A little farther, and the canal of the Deule is crossed, connecting Lille with Douay.

11 Carvin.

About 200 windmills are grouped around the walls of Lille in the vicinity of the road to Paris: they are used for grinding rape seed and other oleaginous grains for oil. There are however not less than 600 windmills in this commune, which has lately taken the name of Moulins in consequence. The entrance to the city is by a sort of triumphal arch, surmounted by a frontispiece in the fashion of a screen propped up behind, filled with the trophies of the glory of Louis XIV. It was erected 1682.

18 LILLE. Flem. Ryssel. — Inns: H. de l'Europe; good:—de Bellevue: — de Commerce.

This city of 72,000 inhabitants is important both as a fortress of the first order for its strength, forming the central point of the defence of France on her N. frontier, and as a populous and industrious seat of manufacture, ranking seventh among the cities of France. It is chef lieu of the Département du Nord, and was formerly capital of French Flanders. The streams of the Haute and Basse Deule traverse the town, filling its moats and turning the wheels of its mills, and they are connected by a canal, by means of which the country for 1½ m. around the walls can be laid under water.

There are no fine public buildings proportioned to the size and wealth of the city, and its objects of interest for the passing traveller are few, as may be judged of by the following enumeration, unless he be a military man.

Its Citadel is considered a masterpiece of the skill of Vauban, who was governor of it for many years. It is a regular pentagon, furnished with all the accessories which engineering skill can suggest, especially since the siege of 1792, and so strong, because commanded by no point, and capable of isolation by breaking the canal dykes and filling its wide moats, that it is deemed impregnable. A great deal of misery, however, and enormous destruction of property, and injury to agriculture would follow an inundation. The citadel is separated from the town by the Esplanade, a wide drilling ground, which serves also as a public walk, being planted with trees and traversed by the canal. Lille was captured from the Spaniards by Louis XIV. in 1667. At different periods, and under different masters, it has stood 7 distinct sieges; the one most memorable for an Englishman was that by the allied armies of Marlborough and Eugene in 1708, of 3 months' duration, during which the war was not merely waged above ground, but the most bloody combats were fought below the surface between the miners of the opposite armies, each endeavouring to sap and undermine the galleries of his opponent. Boufflers, the French commander, after a masterly defence, was compelled to capitulate, but upon the most honourable terms.

The Hôtel de Ville was anciently the palace of the Dukes of Burgundy. It was built by Jean-sans-Peur, 1430, and inhabited by the Emperor Charles V. It is a quaint rather than a handsome edifice, in the late Gothic style, but it has a prettily groined staircase in one of its tourelles, and a chapel. One division of the building, appropriated to a school of art, contains a most interesting and valuable collection of Drawings by old masters, including 44 by Raphael! wel worthy the inspection of all who take an interest in art.

The town also possesses a Musée, where, among a number of bad pictures, is one by Rubens, St. Catherine rescued from the Wheel of Martyrdom, painted for a church in the town. St. Cecilia and St. Francis are by Arnold de Vuez (a native artist of considerable merit, b. 1642); and there is a series of curious old portraits of the Dukes of Burgundy and Counts of Flanders.

The principal church (St. Maurice) is in the Gothic style of the 16th century, resting on slender piers, but is not very remarkable.

The huge storehouses for corn at the extremity of the Rue Royale, a street nearly a mile long, deserve notice. There are some very handsome shops in the Rue Esquirmoise.

The tall chimneys of numerous mills, even within the walls, announce the active industry which is working here, and show the unusual combination of a fortress and manufacturing town, while the country around, and indeed a large part of the Département du Nord, is like a hive in population and activity, not unworthy of being compared with parts of Lancashire and the West Riding. The chief manufacture is that of flax (which is cultivated in the vicinity), and is spun into ordinary thread, and twisted to form the kind called Lille thread, by old-fashioned machines moved by the hand, besides which much linen is woven here. In the spinning of cotton, Lille is a formidable rival of the English. The making of tulles and cotton lace has fallen off. The extraction of oils from Colza and the seeds of rape, poppies, linseed, &c., and the manufacture of sugar from beet-root are very important, having given a great impulse to agriculture, as well as employing many hands and hundreds of windmills.

A Railway is completed from Lille to Courtrai in Belgium, passing through the industrious towns of Roubaix, (24,000 inhab., 11 kilom.) a minor focus of the cotton manufacture, and Turcoing (20,000 inhab.) famed for its manufacture of table linen.

At present Brussels may be reached in 5 or 6 hours from Lille, by railway. The terminus at Lille is in the Faubourg des Fives. (See HAND-BOOK FOR NORTH GERMANY.)

Diligences daily to Tournay and Brussels, (N. B. Railway); to Dunkerque and Calais; to Amiens 2, and thence to Rouen; to Valenciennes 3; to Paris 4, and a malleposte; to Boulogne.

The road to Dunkerque is the same as that to Calais for the 3 first stages.

16	Armentières,	Described in Route 188.
12	Bailleul,
20	Cassel,
10	Bergues,	In Route 189.
20	Dunkerque,	p. 582.

ROUTE 187.

CALAIS TO DIJON, BY DOUAY, CAMBRAI, ST. QUENTIN, LAON, RHEIMS, CHÂLONS-SUR-MARNE, AND TROYES.

559 kilom. = 346½ Eng. m.

This is the most direct road for travellers hastening to Switzerland or Italy, and not wishing to pass through Paris. By this route they will save 2 or 3 days on their journey, and pass through a series of places possessing great interest. By avoiding Paris, they are allowed to retain possession of their passports. The country is interesting, but the road, as far as Châlons-sur-Marne, is wretched, rough paving worn into holes. Beyond C. s. M. it is excellent. Those who travel by diligence will not find a conveyance direct to carry them from one end of the journey to the other without interruption, and may often have to wait at various points; but they will invariably meet with diligences running from one great town to another.

Calais is described in Route 2.

16 Ardres,
8 La Recousse,
18 St. Omer,
18 Aire,
} Route 1.

13 Lillers, a town of 4620 inhab. Here the first Artesian well, so called from the Province Artois, was bored by the engineer Belidor, in the last century, and hence the practice has extended all over Europe; it had been however previously tried in Italy.

13 Bethune. The post-house is outside the town, which was formerly considered third in importance in Artois. It has 6890 inhabitants. In its large market-place rises a singular old beffroi, a heavy square truncated tower, on which a Gothic spire has been engrafted.

Water is scarce here and wells few and very deep.

There are 2 roads hence to Cambrai.

Branch a. by 18 Souchez. A shady and picturesque village.

"The country, which near Calais is very marshy and bleak, gradually improves. Very few hedges are seen. The crops divide the ownerships, and some growths become apparent to which we are not accustomed at home: flax and hemp in great abundance, and large strips of the white poppy, cultivated for the purpose of extracting oil from the seed. The pale petals have a large lilac fleck at their base, and the crop is handsome when in flower. One unpleasing result of the want of hedges is the absence of their feathered tenants."—F. P.

12 Arras. (p. 576.)

24 Marquion.

11 Cambrai. (p. 574.)

Branch b. from Bethune to 19 Lens. (p. 577.)

21 Douai. — (Inn: H.de Flandres: — du Commerce.

Douai is a town of 19,153 inhabitants, surrounded by old fortifications, seated on the Scarpe, defended by a detached fort, about 1½ m. distant on the l. bank. It is the least thriving place in the Département du Nord, and appears to be falling off in population, and though it covers more ground than Lille does not contain half as many inhabitants. Like the Flemish towns it has a picturesque Beffroi, in its market-place, rising above the Gothic H. de Ville, built at the end of the 15th century. It possesses a library of 30,000 vols., a collection of pictures, and contains one of the 3 Royal Cannon founderies in France.

From the 15th century, the college or seminary of Douai, founded by an Englishman, Cardinal Allen, has educated Roman Catholic priests for England and Ireland. O'Connell studied here. There is a considerable trade in flax here.

The sculptor, called John of Bologna, is supposed to have been born here.

Every year, in the early part of July, a curious procession parades the streets of Douai, consisting of a giant of osier, who is called Géant Gayant, dressed in armour, 30 ft. high, attended by his wife and family, of proportionate size; the giant doll is moved by 8 men enclosed within it.

Diligences to Lille, Cambrai, and Paris.

15 Bac en Bencheul.

11 Cambrai, in p. 574.

---

11 Bonavy,
14 Bellicourt,
13 St. Quentin,
} in R. 183. p. 573, 574.

10 Cerisy, a pretty village.

12 La Fére, a fortified town of 2085 inhabitants, on the Oise, which we here cross. It has a school of artillery.

The country improves in picturesqueness on approaching Laon, which is entered by a long and steep ascent.

24 "Laon.—Inn, La Hure, i. e. the Boar's Head; not a splendid house, but comfortable. Laon is the chef lieu of the Dépt. de L'Aisne (9346 inhab.); and it may here be remarked, that in a small town of this class there is as much difficulty in procuring beds during the sitting of the Cour Royale as there would be in an assize town in England.

"Laon is situated upon a lofty and almost isolated hill, crowned by the noble Cathedral of Nôtre Dame. This edifice, which is in a very pure and simple Gothic style, much resembling Salisbury, was dedicated Sept. 6. 1114, having been built from the very ground in the space of the two years preceding; so that it is a century older than any specimen of the same kind in England. It has five towers, of which four have very large, lofty, unglazed windows, through which the light shines. The façade, with its great receding cavern-like portals and arches, is singularly venerable; and the traveller will do well to mark its outline, for he will here see, in its simplest aspect, the type which at Rheims is expanded to the highest grade of decoration and exuberance. As a matter of taste, however, it may be doubtful whether the simplicity be not as satisfactory. The choir, like our English cathedrals, ends square. The circular window is remarkable for its size, and for its painted glass, of which there is more in the choir. The Cathedral is much neglected, and the cloisters have been demolished quite recently by the Vandalism of the municipality. The Bishop of Laon was one of the twelve ecclesiastical peers of France; but this dignity did not deter the citizens from violently contesting his authority. In this Cathedral is preserved an ancient painting of St. Veronica, brought from a suppressed monastery, with an inscription which strangely puzzled the savans of the age of Louis quatorze. It is in the ancient Sclavonian dialect and character, merely indicating the object which it represents."—F. P.

The Church of St. Martin, on the side of the town opposite to the cathedral, is chiefly remarkable for its 2 fine and lofty towers.

The Prefecture is established in the ancient abbey of St. Jean, which also contains the public library, and the Hôtel Dieu is the former Abbey of Martin.

The grand massive tower of Louis d'Outremer, one of the oldest monuments in France, has lately been pulled down, to make way for a Citadelle, which has been deemed necessary to defend this side of France from invasion. Its massive foundations, however, have hitherto resisted the attempt to remove them. Near the Porte St. Martin is a curious Leaning tower, called Tour Penchée, or De la Dame Eve, inclining nearly 10 degrees out of the perpendicular. Queen Brunehault, who fixed her court at Laon, gives her name to another tower. "The fine masses of the ancient walls and towers which encircle the town, mixing with the rocks, add much to its picturesque aspect. These walls are said to have been built by Guillaume Harulin, the physician who attended Charles VI. during his insanity; so that, if this tradition be correct, they give a great idea of his fees. There are many fine points of view here, and perhaps none of them are more pleasing than those gained from the summit of the ramparts. The landscape is extensive and varied. Vineyards clothe the slopes of the hills, the plains are covered with cultivation, the earth seems literally teeming."—F. P.

One of the finest views of the town is from the road called "Chemin des Creuttes," near the Calvary, on the way to the Abbey of St. Vincent, of which no part escaped the fury of the democrats, except its outer walls (creuttes), moated and embattled like a fortress as it was; they now enclose a private garden.

In March (9 and 10) 1814, a battle, which lasted 2 days, was fought between the Allies, commanded by Blucher and Witzingerode, who occupied the town and neighbouring heights, and the French army, much inferior to them in numbers. Here the success of Napoleon was arrested, for the first time in the campaign, and he was compelled to retire towards Soissons, with a loss of 6000 men and 46 cannon.

21 Corbény. "Crossing the Aisne, the road enters the ancient province of Champagne, which derives its name from the many plains which it contains, and which constitute its great natural features, as soon as you advance beyond the borders."—F. P.

9 Berry au Bac. "From Laon the country continues varied, though less hilly, as you approach Rheims. It is tolerably wooded, and the luxuriance of the wild flowers, French honeysuckle, and many which are cultivated in gardens with us, is very pleasing."—F. P.

19 RHEIMS, in R. 178. p. 562.

"11 Sillery; not the locality which produces the celebrated Sillery Champagne. That wine derives its name from Sillery by a secondary process. Under its name is comprehended the produce of the vineyards of Verzenay, Mailly, Raunent, &c., situated at the N. E. termination of the chain of hills which separate the Maine from the Verle, and formerly belonging to the Marquis de Sillery, husband of Madame de Genlis. Having been originally brought into vogue by the greater care bestowed upon the manufacture of it by the Maréchale d'Estrées, it was long known by the name of Vin de la Maréchale.

"19 Les Grandes Loges.

"The road from Rheims to Châlons passes through plains extending far and wide, in which the course of the Marne may be traced by the long rows of poplars upon its bank, by the Campi Catalaunici, where the great battle took place between the combined armies of Rome and Theodoric, and the 'innumerable host' of Attila (A. D. 451). Here, as Gibbon observes, were assembled the natives of the various countries from the Volga to the Atlantic. The number of the slain amounted to 162,000, or, according to another account, 300,000. Attila, whose valour was always guided by his prudence, had waited for the enemy in these plains, as being best adapted to the operations of his Scythian cavalry. Great as was the slaughter, the conflict was undecided: Attila retreated into his camp, which he had fortified, according to the Scythian usage, by a vast circle of the waggons in which they dwelt. The allied armies separated at the moment when the magnanimous Barbarian had resolved, if his intrenchments should be forced, to rush headlong into the flames of the funeral pile formed of the saddles and rich furniture of the cavalry, and thus to deprive his enemies of the glory which they might have acquired by his captivity. Attila continued for several days within the circle of his waggons after this defeat, dreading some hostile stratagem; but his ultimate retreat beyond the Rhine 'confessed the last victory which was achieved in the name of the western empire.' Near the villages of Chape and Cuperly, about 5 miles from Châlons, there are vestiges of ancient earth-works, traditionally known as the camps of Attila; and the expositors of the productions of the ancient German bards find the battle of Châlons recorded in the Niebelungen Lay."—F. P.

13 Châlons-sur-Marne. (R. 175. p. 556.)

18 Vatry.

10 Sommesous.

"After leaving Châlons, the country becomes less fertile, the crops generally thin and scanty. The vineyards of Champagne seem to be replaced by plantations of Scotch firs, which add nothing to the beauty, and little to the shelter of the scenery. The road continues straight before and behind, marked in white chalk along the yellow and russet fields. At length it begins to undulate; till, after a long ascent and descent, you reach

"23 Arcis-sur-Aube. — Inn, La Poste; small, but decent."

9 Voué.

19 Troyes. (p. 514.)

19 St. Parre-les-Vaudes.
14 Bar-sur-Seine.
19 Mussy-sur-Seine.
15 Châtillon-sur-Seine.
14 Aisey-le-Duc.
15 Ampilly-le-Sec.
} R. 144.

15 Chanceaux.

39 Dijon. (p. 517.) See Note in p. 584.

ROUTE 188.

CALAIS TO LILLE AND TOURNAY, ON THE WAY TO BRUSSELS BY CASSEL.

110 kilom. = 68 Eng. m.
Diligences, 3 or 4 daily.
Calais in R 2. p. 9.

24 La Recousse,
18 St. Omer,
} R. 1. p. 3.

The stage from St. Omer to Cassel may be travelled in about 2 hours. The latter part is a very steep ascent up a high hill, on whose summit lies the village of 20 Cassel.—H. du Sauvage; a very good inn, at which it is worth while in fine weather to stop for a short time to enjoy the view. Cassel is an ancient town of 4234 inhabitants. Here at length the country becomes more interesting. Cassel is most agreeably situated on a hill commanding "one of the most extensive views in Europe. Although it has no striking features, it cannot be contemplated without deep interest, as exhibiting on a clear day an unusually extensive tract of highly cultivated and productive country. Its most remarkable feature is, that the horizon is almost equally distant in every direction, as no rising ground interrupts the sight." It extends over the flat and fertile plains of Flanders, and as far as the white cliffs of England, into 3 different kingdoms; includes 32 towns and 100 villages. St. Omer, Dunkerque, Ypres, Ostend, and the beautiful steeple of Hazebrouk, are the most prominent objects: no fresh-water is visible in this vast expanse. Mont Cassel is only 800 Eng. ft. high: it was one of the principal signal stations of the great trigonometrical survey carried on during the reign of Napoleon. A small map of the country visible may be purchased on the spot for 20 sous.

The gardens and grounds of the late General Vandamme, who was born here, are commonly shown to strangers, and are very tastefully laid out. The stable is worthy of remark, on account of its size.

"Flemish is the general language of the entire population in the northern parts of the Département du Nord: it is spoken at Cassel, and as far as Watel." — G. C. L.

20 Bailleul.—Inn, Faucon.

12 Armentières, a town of 7700 inhabitants, mostly weavers. — The road here almost touches upon the Belgic frontier.

16 Lille, in R. 185. p. 577.

The quickest and best mode of reaching Brussels from Lille is to take the railway by Courtrai and Mechlin. (See p. 578.)

11 Pont à Tressin is the last post station in France; the custom house is about 3 m. beyond it.

14 Tournay,
Brussels, 9½ posts,
} described in Hand-Book for North Germany.

ROUTE 189.

CALAIS TO DUNKERQUE AND COURTRAI BY GRAVELINES AND BERGUES.

51 kilom. = 31½ Eng. m. to Bergues, and 8 posts thence to Courtrai.

Diligences twice a day to Dunkerque in 5 hours.

Calais, in R. 2. p. 9.

It is a good road to 20 Gravelines.

A fortress, and desolate-looking small town, with grass growing in its streets; it has 3000 inhabitants. "It is," to use the words of an old writer, "very strong, by reason that they can drown it round in 4 hours, so as no land shall be within a mile of it." It is surrounded by a plain, once a vast marsh, below the level of the sea, nearly 20 miles long by 12 broad; almost all this can be laid under water in case of need, to ward off a hostile invasion on this side of France. At present this district supports a population of 60,000. It is protected from the sea by the dunes or sandhills, and is gradually being drained by its inhabitants. It would cost the arrondissement 10 millions of francs to repair the damage caused by admitting the waters upon the land.

The Emperor Charles V. here paid a visit to Henry VIII., on his return from his interview with Francis I., at the Field of the Cloth of Gold, 1520.

Beyond Gravelines the road is paved.

21 DUNKERQUE (Inns: Hôtel de Flandres; very good, and not dear. Charges — table d'hote at 6, good, 2½ francs; breakfast, with eggs, 1 fr. 75 c.: — Chaperon Rouge), a considerable fortified town and seaport, with 25,400 inhabitants. Large sums have been expended in endeavouring to clear the mouth of the harbour from the bar of sand which obstructs it, by means of basins and sluices, which are filled by the flowing of the tide, and discharged at low water, so as to scour a channel through the mud. They are said to have failed in producing the results anticipated. Dunkerque nevertheless is the best harbour which France possesses in the N. sea, and ranks fourth in the value of its exports and imports of all the seaports in the kingdom. It serves as the outlet for the manufacturing district of the Dépt. du Nord.

The Quai, usually crowded with vessels, and pier, extending far into the sea, are worth seeing: so is the Corinthian portico of the church of St. Eloi, a handsome but most incongruous frontispiece to a Gothic building; in front of it is a fine detached Gothic Belfry, containing the chimes.

There is an English Protestant Church here, a proof of the number of British subjects settled at Dunkerque.

In the Place Dauphine is the bust of John Bart, a famous sea-captain, born here.

Dunkerque owes its origin to a chapel built by St. Eloi in the 7th century, among the Dunes or sandhills, and thence comes its name, "Church of the Dunes." After having been hardly won by the English under Oliver Cromwell from the Spaniards, 1658, it was basely sold by Charles II. to Louis XIV. for 6 millions of francs.

By the Treaty of Utrecht (1715), the French were compelled to demolish the town and fortifications, and an English commissioner was actually sent hither to ascertain that the stipulations of the treaty were complied with to the letter; a source of deep humiliation to French pride, but of more immediate misery to the poor inhabitants. The port and fortifications were not restored and rebuilt until 1740.

The country around is little better than a dreary waste of sandhills thrown up by the wind. It was in the neighbourhood of them that Turenne defeated, in 1658, the Spanish army under Don John of Austria and the Great Condé, who had sided at that time with the enemies of France, in the Battle of the Dunes. The siege of the town had been commenced by Mazarin, at the dictation of Cromwell, whose fleet blockaded it by sea. The Spaniards, unprovided with artillery, advanced to attack the French, by marching close to the sea. Condé remonstrated in vain with Don John against a measure so perilous: "Vous ne connaissez pas, M. de Turenne," said he; "on ne fait pas impunément des fautes devant un si grand homme;" and just as action began he turned to the young Duke of Gloucester, and asked if he had ever been in a battle before? "No," answered the Duke. "Then you will see one lost in half an hour." The action was commenced by 6000 English soldiers of Cromwell, commanded by Lockhart, his ambassador, who formed the left wing of the French army, and distinguished themselves eminently: their charge carried every thing before it, and contributed not a little to the result. The Duke of York (afterwards James II.) fought in the opposite ranks, at the head of a regiment of Cavaliers, and it was from them that their fellow-countrymen suffered most. The Spaniards lost 4000 men, and Dunkerque surrendered 10 days after, in consequence of this defeat.

A pleasant excursion may be made to the hill of Cassel, about 18¾ m. off, (p. 582.). Marchand, voiturier, is obliging, intelligent, and has a good equipage.

Diligences daily to Paris; to Ostend; to Lille.

Steamers to Rotterdam; to Hamburg; to Havre.

There is a canal from Dunkerque to Furnes, Ostend, and Bruges, traversed daily by a barge, and another canal to Bergues.

10 Bergues (Inn, Poste; small, but cheap), a small and poor fortified town of 6000 inhabitants, situated on an elevation, surrounded by marshes and salt lakes, called Möere, formerly waste and insalubrious; but, having been drained within a few years by the construction of hydraulic works, they are now becoming productive, and less unwholesome. Though only a fortress of the third class, the possession of Bergues has been deemed of such consequence in every war, that it has been 8 times taken and retaken, and 9 times pillaged, in the course of 8 centuries. It has a picturesque Beffroi, 150 feet high. A very important corn-market is held here every Monday. The gates are closed at 10, after which neither ingress nor egress is allowed.

The French frontier and custom-house is reached at Oest Kappel: here the "acquit à caution" must be delivered up. (See Introduction, § e.)

Belgian Posts: —

1¾ Rousbrugge, a Belgian village.
2¾ Ypres.
2¼ Menin, on the Lys.
1½ Courtrai.

} See Hand-book for North Germany.

 Note on Route 187. Calais to Dijon, Lyons, and Marseilles.

The steam-boats down the Saône from Châlons to Lyons are rather uncertain; not all are large enough to convey carriages, and the expense with a carriage exceeds considerably that of posting: for a calèche 80 fr., for a large carriage 100 to 120 fr. are charged, besides the passenger's fare. The steamers are liable to be arrested by too much water as well as by too little, and to be delayed by fogs. The post road is good and picturesque.

From Lyons to Avignon, it is very advisable to go by water down the Rhone; there is no great difference between the expense of steaming and posting; but the road is bad.

Coloorne
Juliers
Siegberg
Bonn
AIX la Chapelle
Hochstenbach
Rheinmagen
Rhine Riv.
Montjoie
Weilburg
Andernach
Coblentz
Kaiserslesch
Cumberg
Boppart
Prum
Wisbaden
Luzerat
R. Moselle
Bacharach
Rhine R.
Simmern
Mayence
Wittlich
Kirchberg
Bingen
Bitbourg
Monzelfeld
Oppenheim
Kreuznach
Hetzerath
Alzey
OLDENBURG
Grevenmachern
TREVES
Bohlanden
Ogersheim
BOURG
Sarrebourg
Hochdorf
LUXEMBOURG
Kaiserslautern
Totes
6 Landshut
Neustadt
Thionville
Hombourg
Deux Ponts
Sarrelouis
Firmassens
Briey
Sarrebruck
Annweiler
Bouzonville
Forbach
Sarreguemines
Weissembourg
Boulay
Faulquemont
Rorbach
Birche
Lauterbourg
METZ
Grostenquin
Bouquenon
Soultz
Vernon
Pacy
Boronville
Ingwiller
Haguenau
Meisson
Fenestange
Nomeny
Hoefeld
Ch.au Salins
Vic
Phalsbourg
Sarrebourg
Saverne
Brumath
Beaumont
Fleming
Wasselonne
STRASBOURG
Dreux
35
NANCY 164
Flesbourg
Kehl
Toul
Luneville
164
Hutzig
168
Offenburg
Flavigny
Schirmeck
Colombey
Barr
170
Gulfis
Rang l'Etape
Ille
Bischwiller
St. Girons
Castillon
Tarascon
les Cr
AN SEA
J. & C. Walker Sculp.

INDEX.

A.

Abbeville, 17.
Abelard (at St. Gildas), 146. 208. 381.
Ablon, 177.
Accous, 290.
Adour, passage of the, 276. Cradle of, 314.
Adrets, Baron des, 404. 493.
Æschylus, 474.
st. Affrique, 473.
Agde, 473.
Agen, 258.
Agincourt, 4.
Agnes Sorel, 195.
Aï, 556.
Aidat, Lac d', 401.
Aigrefeuille, 212.
Aigueperse, 386.
Aiguesmortes, 468.
Aiguillon, 259.
Ailly, 17.
Ain, 530.
Ain river, 530.
Airaine, 17.
Aire, 4. 285.
Aisey le Duc, 517.
Aix, 487.
—— in Savoy to Lyons, 528.
Aix, Ile d', 214.
Alagnon, 406.
Alais, 427. To Nimes, railway, 427.
Albigeois, 334. 413. 472.
st. Albin, 382.
Albret, 275.
Alby, 413.
Alençon, 114.
Alfort, .
Allan, 441.
Allevard, 497. 506.
Allier, 361—386. 393.
Alpines, 454.
Altkirch, 537.
st. Amand, 354.
Ambleteuse, 11.
Amboise, 185.
st. Ambroix, 427.
Amiens, 5. Cath. 5, 6.
Amphitheatre at Nimes, 462.
Amphitheatre at Arles, 457.
Ampilly le Sec, 517.
Ampoule, sainte, 564.
Ampuis, 435.
Ancenis, 207.
Ancy le Franc, 522.
Andance, 422—436.
Andaye, 281.
Andelle, 50.
les Andelys, 49.
st. Andeol, 486.
Andorre, 342.
st. André de Cubzac, .
André de Valborgne, .
Andrezieux, 419.
Andrezy, 46.
Anduze, 418.
Anet, chât. d', 113.
Angers, 156. 161.
Angerville, 178.
Angoulême, 223.
Anisy, 77.
Anjou, 156.
Annonay, 421.
Antibes, 490.
Antraigues, 425.
Anzin, .
Aragnouet, 316.
Arago, M., 338.
Aramon, 454.
Aran, Val de, 330.
Arbois, 532.
l'Arboust, val, 317.
Arc, pont de l', 427.
Arcis sur Aube, 582.
Arcy, les Grottes d', 379.
Ardeche, 346.
—— river, 415. 424.
Ardenne, 77.
Ardevan, 93.
Ardres, 3.
Argelez, 300.
Argental, Bourg, 421.
Argentan, 100.
Argenton, 241.
Ariège, 339.
ARLES, en Provence, 456.
Arles, 343.
Armentières, 582.
Arnay le Duc, 381.
Arpajon, 171.
Arques, 25.
Arras, 576.
Arreau, 316.
Arrhune, 280.
Artesian Wells, 578.
Arthenay, 171.
Artigues-Tellina, 330.
Artix, 284.
Arvieux, val d', 510.
Asnières, 30.
Aspe, val d', 290.
Aspin, 315.
Athis, .
Attila, 581.
Aubagne, 481.
Aube, .
Aubenas, 423.
st. Aubin le Cormier, 102.
Aubusson, .
Auch, 331.
Aude, 334.
Aulnay, .
Aumetz, 570.
Auray, 144.
Aure, val d', 316.
Auriac, 286.
Aurigny (Alderney), 87.
Aurillac, 407.
Ausonius, 266. 457.
Autrerive, .
Auteuil, .
AUVERGNE, 346. 388. 390.
Autun, 384.
Auxerre, 378.
Auxonne, 523.
Avallon, 128. 379.
Avenières, .
Avesne, .
AVIGNON, 445.
—— to Narbonne, by Nismes and Montpellier, 461.
—— to Nice, by Aix, 486.
Avignonet, 333.
Avranches, 92.
Ax, 341.
st. Ay, 180.
Aydat, 401.
Ayzac, coupe d', 425.
Azay le Rideau, 196.
Azincour, 4.
Azun, val d', 297. 300.

B.

Bages, .
Bagnères de Bigorre, 319.
—— to Luchon, mountain road, 315.
Bagnères de Luchon, 324.
Bagnes, the, 124.
Bagnols, .
Bailleul, 582.
Balarue, 472.
Ballons, 549.
Ban de la Roche, 549.
Bapaume, 55. 576.
Bar sur Aube, 534.
Bar sur Seine, 511. 516.
Baraque, 390.
Barbaste, 284.
Barbe Bleu, 206.
Barbe, Ile, 375.
Barbeira, 336.
Barbezieux, 225.
Barcelonnette, .
Barèges, 311.
Barfleur, 82.
Bar-le-duc, 539.
Barr, 550.
Barraux Fort, 500.
Barre y va, 53.
Barsac, 260.
Barse, 534.
Basiège, .
Basques, 231. 279.
Bastan valley, 311.
Bastides at Marseilles, 476. 480.
Batignolles, 30.
Baudean, 314.
Ste. Baume, .
Bayard, 498. Chateau, 501.
Bayeux, 79. Tapestry, 80.
—— to St. Lo, 102.
Bayle, 339.
Bayonne, 275.
—— to Irun in Spain, 278.
—— to Pau, 283.
Bayonette, 280.
Bazas, 273.
Béarn, 290.
st. Béat, 331.
Beaucaire, 455.
—— fair of, 455.
la Beauce, 151. 178.
Beaufort, .
—— Abbey, 128.
Beaugeney, 181.
Beaujeu, 583.
Beaumanoir, 134.
la Beaume, Pont de, 416. 425.
Beaumont, .
Beaumont sur Oise, 19.
Beaune, 528.
Beaupreau, .
Beaurégard, 439.
Beausset, 482.
Beauvais, 17. 19.
Beaver on the Rhone, 449.
Bec Abbey, 69.
Bec d'Ambès, 270.
Becket, Thomas à, 377. 380. 521.
Bedarrides, 445.
Bedeillac, .
Bedouin, 453.
Bedous, 290.
Béfort, 553.
Begude de Saze, 461.
Behobia, 280.
Behuard, Ile, 205.
Bellegarde (Ain), 530.
Bellegarde, .
Belleisle en Terre, .
Bellesme, .
Belley, 529.
Belzunce, Bp., 479.
Benfeld, 550.
la Bérarde, 506.
Bercy, .
Bergerac, .
Bergons, Pic de, 306.
Bergues, 584.
Bernadotte, 286.
Bernay, 16. 68.
Berre, Etang de, 460.
Berri, Duchesse de, 163. 270.
st. Bertrand de Comminges, 324.
Besançon, 532.
Besons, 28.
Bétharram, 298.
Bethune, 579.
Beycheville, 271
Beyzons, 28.
Beza, 380.
Beziers, 472.
Biarritz, 278.
Biaudos, 283.
Bicètre, 355.
Bidart, 279.
Bidassoa, 280, 281.
Bielle, 293.
Bielsa, 316.
Biescas, 294.
Bignon, 359.
Bilhère, 284.
Binic, 127.
Bischweiller, .
Bitche, .
Bize, Vent de, 431.
Blanchelande, 88.
Black Prince, 242. 266, 267.
Blanquefort, 267.
Blaye, 270.
Bléré, 187.
Blois, 181.
Blosseville, .
le Bocage, 100.
Boen, 404.
Bois de Lihus, 576.
Bois Robert, 26.
Bolbec, 64.
Bolinbroke's château, 176.
Bollweiler, 552.
Bonaparte at Malmaison, 29.
—— at Rochefort, 215.
—— at Valence, 438.
—— at Toulon, 484.
—— at Brienne, 535.
—— at Frejus, 490.
—— at Grenoble, 499—502.
Bonavy, .
Bondy, 554.
st. Bonnet, 400. 503.
Bonneval, .
Bonnières, 28. 33.
Bordeau, 45.
BORDEAUX, 260—267.
Bordeaux, Richard of, 266.
—— Wines, 267.
—— Bridge of, 226.
—— to Bayonne, 273.
—— —— by the Landes, 281.
—— to Auch, 284.
—— to Pau, 285.
Bore, in the Seine, 53.
Boscherville, St. Georges, 55.
Bosost, 330.
Bossuet, 565.
Bouc, 460.
Bouchain, 574.
Boucoiron, 428.
Boulogne-sur-Mer, 11—16.
Flotilla, 15.
Boulou, 343.
Bourbon l'Archambault, 362.
—— Vendée, 212.
Bourbonne les Bains, 536.
Bourdonnay, .
Bourg (Ain), 530.
Bourg, 270.
Bourgachard, 69.
Bourg d'Argental, 421.
Bourg Diou or Déols, 241.
Bourg d'Oysans, 506.
Bourg d'Un, 65.
Bourg la Reine, 170.
Bourges, 350. 354.
le Bourget, 560.
Bourget, Lac de, 528.
Bourgouin, 492.
Bourg St. Andéol, 442.
Bourgtheronde, 69.
Bouscaut, 260.
Bout de Bois, 139.
Bout de Lande, .
Brèche de Roland, 307.
—— ascent to, 309.
la Brède, château de la, 273.
la Bresse, 530.
Bressuire, 211.
Brest, 121. 125. Roads of, 124.
—— to Nantes, 139.
Breteuil, 7.
Brétigny, 154.
Bretteville, 78.
Briançon, 507.
—— to Susa, 508.
Briare, 360.
Bricquebec, 88.
Brie, 534. Cheese, 554.
Brie Comte Robert, 513.
Brienne, 535.
st. Brieuc, 119. to Brest, 127.
Brignais, 414
Brignolles, 489.
Brionne, 69.
Brioude, 395.
st. Bris, .
Brissac château, 205.
BRITTANY, 104—109.
Brives, 244.
Brix or Bruis, 83.
Broglie, 68.
Broons, 118.
Brou (Ain), church of, 530.
Brougham, Lord, 490.
Bruges, 269.
Brunel, Mark Isambard, birthplace of, 45.
st. Bruno, 496.
Bruyères, .

Buffon, 523.
Buisson, .
Burgundy, 513. Wines, 526.
Burzet, .
Bussierès, .
Bussy, .
Buzançais, 196.
Buzaney, 565.

C.

Cacolet, 279.
Cadillac, 260.
Caen, 72. 78. Stone quarries, 78.
—— to Cherbourg, 78.
—— to Tours, 98.
—— to Rennes, 100.
Cafés, xxix.
Cagots, 231.
Cahors, 244.
Calais, 9.
—— to Paris, by Amiens, 3.
—— to Paris, by Boulogne, 11.
—— to Lille and Tournay, 582.
—— to Dunkerque and Courtrai, 582.
—— to Dijon, Geneva, and Lyons, 578.
Calas, Jean, 252.
Calmontier, 537.
Calvados, Dépt. 76.
Calvinet, Mont, 254.
Camargue, 460.
Cambiel, 316.
Cambo, 278.
Cambrai, 574.
Cambres, 27.
Camisards, 347. 417.
Campan, Val de, 314.
Campfranc, 291.
Canal du Midi, 253. 333.
—— de Briare, 360.
—— du Centre, 381, 382.
—— de Marseilles, 486.
—— de St. Quentin, 573, 574.
Cancale, Rochers de, 97,
Candes, 200.
Canigou, 344.
st. Cannat, 487.
Cannes, 490.
Cantal, 405. 408.
Canteleu, 52.
Cany, 65.
Capbern, 323.
Capdenac, 408.
Captieux, 274.
Carbon Blanc, .
Carcassonne, 334.
Carentan, 80.
Carhaix, 137.
Carla le Comte, 339.
Carnac, 146.
Carpentras, 453.
Carriages, duty on, xxi.
Carrier, the infamous, 165. 408.
Cassagnas, 417.
Cassel, Mont, 582.
Castanet, 333.
Castel Jaloux, 284.
Castelnau Castle, 428.
Castelnaudary, 334.
Castelnau de Medoc, .
Castel Sarrazin, 257.
Castels, .
Castelton, 257.
Castres, 273.
Cateau Cambresis, 574.
ste. Catherine de Fierbois, 217.
Cauchoise, 64.
Caudebec, 57.
Caumont, M. de, 76.
Caunes, 336.
Caussade, 245.
Cauterets, 301.
Caux, pays de, 63, 64.
Cavaillon, 486.
Cavalier, 419. 466. 468.
Cavignac, 225.
Caylus, 409.
Cazères, .
Cère valley, 407.
Céret, 343.
Cérisy, 102. 579.
Cérons, 260.
Cette, 471.
Cevennes, 347. 417. 427.
Châblis, 379.
Chabrol Castle, 255.
Chagny, 381. 528.
Chailly, 356.
Chaise Dieu, 395.
Chalonnes, 206.
Chalons sur Marne, 556.
Chalons sur Saone, 381.
—— to Lyons, 381. 584.
Chalus, 255.
Chaluzet, 243.
Chamalière, .
Chambertin, 527.
Chambord Chateau, 183.
st. Chamond, 414.
Champagne, 534. 538. 581.
——Vin de, 565.
Champagney, 537.
Champagnole, 524.
Champaubert, .
Champigny, 198.
Champsaur, 503.
Champtoçé, 206.
Champtoceaux, 208.
Chanceaux, 517.
Chanteloup, 187.
Chantilly, 8.
Chapareillan, 501.
Chaptes, .
Chaptuzat, 387.
Charbonnières, .
Charente, 215.
Charenton, 376.
la Charité, 360.
Charleville, 566.
Charmes, .
Charonne, .
Charroux, .
Chartres, 151. Cathedral, 152.
—— to Tours, 194.
Chartreuse, la Grande, 494.
Chasselas grapes, 359.
Château Bourg, 437.
Châteaubriand, 135.
Châteaubriant, M. de, birthplace and tomb of, 98.
Château Chinon, .
Châteaudun, 194.
Château Gaillard, 48.
Château Gontier, .
Château Lafitte, 271.
—— Latour, 271.
Châteaulin, 140.
Château du Loir, 900.
Château Margaux, 270.
Châteauneuf, .
—— du Pape. 455.
—— le Randon, 406.
Château Regnault, .
Châteauroux, 241.
Château Salins, .
Château-Thierry, 555.
Châtelaudren, 119.
Châtelet, .
Châtellherault, 218.
Châtenay, 170.
Chatillon sur Loing, 360.
Chatillon sur Seine, 117. 516.
Châtonnay, .
Châtou, 30.
Chaudes Aigues, 410.
Chaumette, .
Chaumont, 185.
—— Haute Marne, 536.
Chaussay, .
Chauvigny, 226.
Chavagnac, 396.
Chavannes, 537.
Chazes, 406.
st. Chely, .
Chenonceau, château of, 187.
Cherbourg, 83. Digue, 85.
—— to St. Malo, 87.
Chessy, 365.
Chevilly, .
Chevreuse, .
Chèze, .
Chierzac, 225.
Chinon, 196.
Chissey, 384.
Choisy, 176.
Cholet, 211.
Chorges, 508.
la Chouannerie, 108.
Chousé, 200.
st. Christophe, 506, 507.
Cierp, 324.
Cinq Mars la Pile, 199.
Cintègabelle, 339.
Cirey, 536.
Cirque, 230.
—— de Gavarnie, 308.
Citeaux Abbey, 528.
Civray, 222.
Clain, 218.
ste. Clair sur Epte, .
Clairvaux, 535.
Claix, 502.
Clamart, 110.
Clamécy, .
Clarbide, port de, 316.
Claret Wine, 267, 268.
ste. Claude, .
Clemence Isaure, 247.
Clermont en Argonne, 557.
—— Ferrand, 388.
—— to Mont Dore, 400.
—— to Lyons, by Thiers, 404.
—— to Toulouse by the Cantal, 405.
—— —— by St. Flour, Alby, Rodez, 409.
Clermont sur Oise, 7.
Cléry, N. Dame de, 180.

Clichy, 30.
Clisson, 208.
Clos-Vougeot, 527.
st. Cloud, 111.
Clovis, 560, 565.
Cluny, 383.
Cluse, .
Coarraze, 298.
Cocherel, 70.
Cœur, Jaques, 352.
Cognac, 216.
Coiron, 423.
Coligny, 530.
Collioure, 338.
Collonges, 531.
Colmar, 551.
Colombey, 536.
Colza, 577.
Combat des Trente, 138.
Comblat, 407.
st. Comes, .
Comines, .
la Commanderie, 72.
Commentry, 354.
Compiègne, 571.
Concarneau, .
Conches, .
Conchez, .
Conchy les Pots, .
Condé, le Grand, at Chantilly, 8.; at Havre, 60.; at Montrond, 354.; at the Dunes, 583.; at Rocroi, 567.
Condillac, .
Condom, 285.
Condrieux, 435.
Conflans, 47.
Conqueror, Wm. the, his birth, 99. His death, . Funeral, 74. His tomb, 377.
Conques, 412.
Conquet, .
Coole, 538.
Corbeil, 177.
Corbeny, 581.
Corday, Charlotte, 76.
Cordouan, Tour de, 572.
Corèze, 244.
Corméry, .
Cornas, 437.
Cornouaille, 108.
Corps nuds, .
Corseuilles, 77.
Cosne, 360.
Côte des Deux Amans, 50.
Côte d'Or, 526.
Côtentin, 81.
Côte Rotie, 435.
Coucy le Château, 561.
Coudes, 395.
Couësnon riv., 95.
Coulange, .
Coulommiers, 538.
Courbassil, 343.
Coupé, 24.
Courbevoie, 29.
Courcelles, 559.
Couronne, .
Courtenay, .
Courthezon, 445.
Coustouges, .
Coutances, 89.
Coutras, 256.
Crach, 146.
Craon, .
Craponne, Canal de, 475.
Crau, 474.
Crécy, 16.
Creil, 8.
Crépy, .
Cressenzac, 244.
Crest, .
Creuilly, 78.
Creuzot, 385.
Crillon, 486.
Croissy, .
Croix Daurade, 246.
Croix Haute, 505.
Croix Rousse, 374.
Croquelardit, 258.
Croutelle, 222.
Crouy, .
Cruscade, .
Crussol, 439.
Cubzac, Pont de, 225.
Cujes, 482.
Cunault, .
Cussy la Colonne, 528.
Cuvilly, 576.
Cylindre, Mt., 309.
st. Cyr, 112.

D.

Dammartin, 560.
Dampierre, 201.
—— Château de, 150.
Dante, allusion to Arles, 459.
Daoulas, 140.
Darnetal,
Dauphiné, 491.
Dax, 274.
Denain, 574.
st. Denis, 20.
Departments of France, xxxiv.
Dieppe, 20. 25.
—— to Paris, 25.
—— to Rouen, 27.
Dieppedale, 52.
Dieu le fit,
st. Diey, or Dié, 549.
Digne, 485.
Dijon, 517. 521.
—— to Geneva, by Dôle, 523.
—— to Chalons sur Saône, 525.
Diligences, xxiv.
Dinan, 133.
Divonne,
st. Dixier, 538.
Dol, 96.
Dôle, 523.
—— to Pontarlier and Lausanne, 524.
Dolmen, 106.
Dombasle, 541. 557.
Dombes, 384.
Domfront,
Domremy la Pucelle, 547.
Donzenac, 244.
Dorat,
Dordogne, 225. 401.
Dore les Bains, Mont, 401.
Dormans,
Dormeilleuse, 511.
Douai, 577.
Douarnenez,
Doubs, river, 549. 554. Dept. 533.
Doullens, 5.
Drac, river, 503.
Dragonnades, 246.
Draguinan,
Dreux, 113. Battle of, 113.
Droiturier, 364.
Drome, 440.
Duclair, 52.
Duguesclin, 118. 133. His death, 416.
Dunes, battle of the, 583.
Dunkerque, 583.
Dun le Roi,
Durance, 486. 504. 508.
Durfort, .
Durtal, 156.

E.

Eaux Bonnes, 297.
Eaux Chaudes, 293.
les Echelles, 493.
Ecluse, Fort, 530.
Ecouen, 9.
Ecouis, 46.
Effiat, 364.
Elbœuf, 50.
st. Elne, 338.
Elven, 149.
Embrun, 508.
st. Emilleon, 256.
Enghien, 45.
English abroad, xxxv.
Ensesheim, 548.
Entre Deux Mers, 226.
Epernay, 556.
Epernon, 151.
Epinal, 547.
Epinay, 177.
Epouville, 64.
Epte, river, 45. 48.
Erdven,
Ermenonville, 560.
l'Ermitage, 436.
Ers, 253.
Escaledieu, 323.
Escot,
Espalion, 411.
st. Esprit, 442.
Essarts,
Essonne, 356.
Estagel, 338.
Estérels, 490.
Etampes, 171. 178.
Etaples,
Etauliers, 217.
st. Etienne, 419.
—— to Lyons, 414.
Etigny,
Etoile,
Etrecy, 171. 178
Etréssagny,
Etrêtat, 65.
Eu, 65.
Eure, 50.
Euzet, 427.
Evreux, 70.

F.

Falaise, 99.
Faou, 139.

Faouet, 138.
Farel, 503.
st. Fargeau,
Fay,
Fayl Billot, 537.
Fécamp, 64.
la Fère, 579.
la Fère Champenoise, 538.
st. Fereol, 333.
la Ferrade, 463.
Ferrières,
la Ferté, meaning of, 240.
Ferté Bernard,
—— Gaucher, 538.
—— sous Jouarre, 555.
—— Milon, 560.
Feurs, 405.
Field of the Cloth of Gold, 3.
Figeac, 408.
Finisterre, Dept, 121.
Firmigny, 415.
Fitou, 336.
Flamingo, 449.
Flavigny,
la Flèche, 156.
Fleury sur Andelle, 46.
Florac, 417.
st. Florent, 207.
st. Florentin, 521.
Florian, 418.
st. Flour, 409.
Foix, 339.
Folgoat, church of, 130.
Fontainebleau, 356. 359.
—— sandstone and grapes, 359.
Fontaine le Henri, 77.
Fontaines, 521.
Fontanelles, 56.
Fontaulier, 425.
Fontenay le Marmion, 98.
Fontevrault Abbey, 200.
Forbach, 559.
Forcalquier,
Forez, 405.
Forges les Eaux, 26.
Formigny, 80.
Fors,
Fos,
Fossard, 377.
Fossat,
Fouday, 549.
Fougères, 101.
Fourchambault, 360.
Fourvières, 366.
la Foux, 461.
France, introductory information respecting, vii. xxxvii. Modes of travelling in, xix. Inns, &c., xxvii. A traveller's view of, xxx. Departments and provinces, xxxiv.
Francs, table of, ix.
Frejus, 489.
Fresne,
—— Camilly,
Fressinière, 511.
la Frette, 493.
la Frey, 502.
Frillière, 188.
Froissart, 232. 299.
Fromenteau, 356.
Fronsac, Fruges,
Fumay, 567.

France.

G.

Gabas, 295.
Gaillac, 413.
Gaillard, château, 48.
Gaillon, 33.
Gan, 291.
Ganat, .
Ganges,
Gannat, 386.
Gap, 503.
—— to Briançon, 508
la Garaye, .
Gard, .
—— Pont du (Aqueduct), 461.
Gardon, 428. 461.
Garonne river, 257.
—— below Bordeaux, 267.
—— sources of, 329, 330.
Gatteville, 83.
Gaube, Lac de, 303.
st. Gaudens, 332.
Gavarnie, 308.
——Cirque de, 308.
Gave, 230.
Gavr Innis, 145.
Gèdre, 307.
Gelos, .
Gemenos, 482.
Geneva, 524.
st. Genis, .
Genlis, 523.
Gennes, .
Genouilhac, .
Gens d'Armes, xvii.
st. Georges, Boscherville, 55.
st. Gerard le Puy, 363.
Gerbier des Joncs, 415. 426.
Gergovia, 394.
st. Germains en Laye, 31.
—— Railway, 30.
—— de Calverte, .
—— de Joux, .
Gervais, .
Gex, 524.
Gibaud, Pont, 393.
Gien, 178.
Gigean, 472.
Gildas de Rhuys, 146.
st. Gilles, 457.
Giromany, .
Gironde, 267. 276.
Girondins, 267. 276.
st. Girons, 341.
Gisors, 26.
Givors, 414.
Givray, .
Glacière at Avignon, 448.
Godemar, Val, 511.
Goderville, 64.
Goncelin, 501.
Gournay, 261.
Gournay sur Aronde, 26. 576.
Grande Chartreuse, 494.
Grande Combe, 427.
Grandvillars, 17.
Granges, 513.
Granville, 90.
Grasse, 490.
la Grave, 506.
Gravelines, 583.
Graviers, 217.
Graville, 59
Gray, 537.
Grenoble, 497. 499.
—— to Gap and Marseilles, 501.
—— to Marseilles, by Croix Haute, 504.
—— to Briançon, by Bourg d'Oysans, 505.
Gresivaudan, Val de, 493. 495.
Greuze, 382.
Grignan, Château, 441.
Grip, 314.
Grisac, 417.
Groland, .
Grosbois, 513.
Guebwiller, 552.
Guegnon, .
Guerche, Château de, 217.
Guiche, .
Guichen, .
Guiers, 494. 529.
Guil river, 509.
Guillestre, 510.
Guillotière, 372.
Guingamp, 119.
Guinguette de Boyer, 503.
la Guiole, 410.
Guisanne, Val de, 507.
Guise, Duc de, 67, 68.
—— Assassination of, 182.
Guisnes, 3.

H.

Hacqueville, Brunel's birthplace, 45.
Hagetmau,
Ham, 572.
Hambye, 90.
Harcourt, 72.
Harfleur, 59.
Hauteville, 102.
le Havre, 59.
—— to Dieppe, 64.
—— to Caen, 70.
la Haye, 217.
—— du Puits, 89.
Hazebruck, .
Hèas, Val d', 307.
Hectares and Acres, xiv.
Hendaye, 281.
Hennebon, 142.
Henri Quatre, birth of, 286.
les Herbiers, .
Herblay, 45.
st. Herbot, 137.
Hericourt, .
Hermitage, 436.
st. Hilaire de Harcouet, 101.
st. Hippolyte, 551.
la Hougue, Cape, battle of, 82.
Hommarting, 542.
Honfleur, 69.
Honorat, .
Hôpital, .
Hourat, 293.
Hourquette d'Aspin, 315.
Huelgoat, 136.
Huningen, 537
Hyères, 485.

I.

If, 478.
Ile des Faisans, 281.
Indre, .
Indret, 167.
les Infernets, 506.
Ingouville, 61.
Ingrande, 206.
Inns, xxvi.
Inquisition in France, 251.
Isenheim, 553.
Isère, river, 437, 500.
Isigny, 80.
l'Isle, 451.
Isles, 566.
Isle sur Doubs, 553.
Issoire, 395.
Issoudun, .
Issy, 110.
Ivry, 381.
——, battle, 114.
Izard, 232.

J.

Jacquerie, 19.
st. James, .
Jargeau, 179.
Jarnac, 225.
Jaujac, 416.
st. Jean d'Angely, .
—— du Doigt, .
—— du Gard, 418.
—— de Luz, 279.
Jeanne d'Arc, at Rouen, 42.; at Chinon, 197.; at Domremy, 547.; at Rheims, 565.; at Compiègne, 572.
Jeux Floreaux, 247.
Joigny, 378.
Joinville, 339.
Josselin, 138.
Jouarre, .
Jougne, .
Joux, Fort de, 525.
Jouy aux Arches, 559.
Jugon, .
st. Julien, .
Jumièges Abbey, 55.
st. Junien, 243.
Jura, 530.
Jurançon, 284, 291.
Juvigny, .
Juvisy, 177.

K.

Kersanton stone, 108.
Kilogrammes reduced to English pounds, xiv.
Kilomètres reduced to English miles, xii. xxi.

L.

Labarben, 475.
Labourd, Pays de, 278.
Labrit, 274.
la Chalp, 510.
Lafayette, 393.
Lafoux, 461.
Lafrey, 502.
Lagnieux, 529.
Lamballe, 118.
st. Lambert, .
Lambesc, .
Lamothe Fenelon, 2'
Lanbader, 121.
Landerneau, 121.
Landes, 282.
Landevan, 144.
Landivisiau, 121.
Landrecies, .
Langeac, .
Langeais, 199.
Langogne, 416.
Langoiron, 260.
Langon, 260.
Langres, 536.
Lanleff, 127.
Lanmeur, 129.
Lannemezan, 323.
Lannion, 128.
Laon, 581. Battle, 582.
Larochejacquelin, 203, 207.
—— his death, 211.
Laruns, 293.
Lasalle, .
La Tour d'Auvergne, 137.
Laura's tomb, 450.
st. Laurent, 497. 524.
—— du Pont, .
Lauteret, Col de, 507.
Laval, 115.
Lavedan, Val, 300.
Lavoulte, 440.
Ledignan, .
le Leguè, 119.
Lehon, 134.
Lempde, 395.
Lens, 577.
Lescar, 284.
Lescun, .
Lescure, .
Lesdiguières, 502, 503.
Lesneven, 130.
Lesparre, .
Lesponne, 314. 322.
Lestelle, 296.
st. Leu, 45.
Leucate, 336.
la Levée de la Loire, 184.
Lézardrieu, 128.
Liancourt, .
Libourne, 256.
Lieues de poste, xiii.
Liffrey, .
Ligny, 539.
Lille, 577.
Lillebonne, 57.
Lilliers, 579.
la Limagne, 386. 393.
Limetz, 48.
Limoges, 241. Enamels, 242.
—— to Bordeaux, 255.
Limonest, 383.
Limousin, 229.
le Lion d'Angers, .
Lisieux, 72.
Livres Tournois, 193.
st. Lo, 102.
Loches, castle of, 194.
Lochmariaker, 145.
Lodève, .
les Loges, .
Loir river, 194.
Loire river, 163.
—— A. Gien to Orleans, 178.
—— B. Orleans to Tours, 179.
—— C. Tours to Nantes, 198.
—— below Nantes, 167.
Loiret, 176. 180. 240.
Longjumeau, 170.
Longpont, 177.
Longwy, 568. 570.
Lons le Saulnier, 53?
Lorient, 142.
Loriol, 440.
Loubre, 290.
Loudéac, .
st. Louis, 537.
Louis IX., 191.
Lourdes, 298.
Louviers, 34.
Louvigny, .
Louvres, .
Lowendahl, 240.
la Lozère, 417
le Luc, 489.
Luciennes, 3.
Lucon, 212.
Lucques, 78.
Lucy le Bois, 379.
Lunel, 468.
Lunéville, 541.
Lure, 537.
Lusignan, 227.
Luynes, 199.
Luz, 305.
—— to Gavarnie, 306.
—— to Barèges, 310.
Luzarches, 9.
Lyons, 365. 376. Fourvières, 356. Cath, 367. Ainay, 368. Museum, 369. Pierre Scise, 371. P. Bellecour, 371. Siege of, 372. Inundation, 373. Fortifications, 374. Silk trade, 374.
—— to Avignon and Arles, 432.
—— to Besançon, by Bourg, 530.
—— to Grenoble and Chamberry, 492.
—— to Geneva, by Nantua, 530.
—— to Le Puy, Aubenas, St. Etienne, 413.
Lys, Val de, 326.

M.

st. Maclou, Rouen, 381.
Mâcon, 382.
la Madaleine, 245.
Magistère, .
Magnac, 243.
Magny, 45.
Maguelonne, 472.
Mailleraie sur Seine, 52.
Mailly, .
Maine, 212.
Maintenon and its aqueduct, 151.
Maison Carrée, 463.
—— Neuve, .
Maisons, 47.
Malleposte, xxii.

Malmaison, 29.
St. Malo, 97.
—— to Nantes, 132.
Manert,
st. Mamet, 408.
Manosque, 504.
le Mans, 154.
Mansle, 222.
Mantes, 32.
Marans, 213.
Marboré, 310.
Marcadau, 303.
st. Marcellin, 500.
Marché le Pot, 576.
Marchiennes,
Marcillac, 412.
Marcoing,
Marennes,
Mareuil, 212.
Margaux, 270.
Marguerite, Isle Ste., 490.
st. Marie aux Mines,
ste. Maries, 468.
Marignac,
Marigny,
Marlborough, at Brest, 125.
Marly, 29.
Marmande, 259.
Marmoutiers Abbey, 188.
Marquise, 11.
st. Mars la Bruyère, 154.
MARSEILLES, 476. 481.
Marseille sur Oise, 17.
Martial,
Martin,
st. Martory, 332.
Martres, 332.
Marvejols, 409.
Massal,
Massiac, 405.
st. Mathurin, 204.
st. Matthieu, 126.
Maubeuge,
Mauléon, 237.
Maupertuis,
st. Maur, 204.
les Maures, 490.
Mauriac,
st. Maurice,
Maurs, 408.
Mauves, 208.
Maxent,
st. Maximin, 489.
Mayenne, river, 115.
Mayet d'Ecole, 386.
Meaux, 555.
st. Medard, 256.
Medoc, and its wines, 267. 271.
Médous, 315.
Mehun, 181.
Mehun sur Yèvre, 350.
Meillant, 354.
Meilleraye, 136.
Melun, 376.
Menars le Château, 181.
Menat, 355.
Mende, 416.
st. Menehould, 557.
Menez Arrés hills, 136.
Menhir, 106.
Menil sous Jumièges, 52.
ste. Mère l'Eglise, 81.
Méréville,
Merueys,
METRE, the, x.; Table of, reduced to feet, xii.
Mettray, 193.
Metz, 558.
—— to Luxembourg, 571.
Meudon, 110.
Meulan, 32.
Meung, 181.
Meuse, river, 567.
Meximieux, 530.
Mèze,
Mezene, Mt., 430.
Mézières, 566.
Mialet, 418.
Michel, Mont St., 93.
Midi, Canal du,
Milhaud,
Mimet,
Mirabeau, 359. 504. 525.
Mirage, 460.
Mire,
Mirecourt,
Moirans, 489, 500.
Moiselles, 19.
Moissac, 257.
Molesme,
Molière, 472.
Monaldeschi, 358.
Monceaux,
Moncountour,
Monestier, 507.
Money of France, x.
Monistrol, 415.
Montagney,
Montaigne, (Michel de), 27.
Montaigne (Vendée), 212.
Montargis, 359.
Montaubon, 245.
Montbard, 523.
Montbazon, 217.
Montbelliard, 554.
Montbert, 413.
Montblanc, 437.
Montbrison, 404.
Montbrun, 423.
Mont Dauphin, 509.
Mont de Marsan, 274.
Montdidier,
Mont Dore les Bains, 401.
Mont d'Ours, 400.
Montélimart, 440.
Montereau, 377.
Montesquieu's château, 273.
Montferrand, 388.
Montfort, Jean de, 142.
Mont Genèvre,
Montgolfier, 421.
Montigny,
Montivilliers, 64.
Mont Jan, 206.
Mont Lhéry, 170.
Montlosier, 401.
Mont Louis, 344.
—— sur Loire, 188.
Montluçon, 354.
Montluel, 530.
Montmâjeur, 456.
Montmédy, 568.
Montmirail, 538.
Montmorency, 45.
Montmorillon, 227.
Montpellier, 469.
Montpensier, Butte de, 386.
Mont Perdu, 308.
Montpeyroux, 395.
Montpezat, 425, 426.
Montpont, 253.
Montrejeau, 323.
Montrelais,
Montreuil,
Montreuil-sur-Mer, 16.
Montrevel,
Montrichard,
Montrodiex, 395.
Montrognon, 344.
Montrond, 344.
Mont St. Michel, 93.
Mont Valerien, 29.
Mont sous Vaudry, 324.
Mont St. Victoire, 489.
Morbihan, 145.
Moreilles, 213.
Morey,
Morez, 524.
Morlaix, 119.
—— to Nantes, 136.
Mornas, 443.
Mortagne, 114.
—— Vendée, 211.
Mortain, 101.
Mortemar, 46.
Morvan, 380.
Mosac, 387.
Moselle, 181.
Mosquitoes, 431.
la Motte Fénélon, 244.
Moulineaux, 52.
Moulins, 361.
—— to Clermont and le Puy, 386.
Moyenvie, 541.
Mozat, 387.
Mulberry, 441.
Mülhausen, 552.
Munster, 552.
Murat, 244. 405.
la Mure, 503.
Muret, 282. 332.
Murol, 403.
Mutzig, 548.
Myriamètre, xiv. xxi.

N.

Nages, 468.
Nampont, 16.
Nancy, 540.
—— to Treves, 569.
Nangis, 513.
Nanterre, 30.
NANTES, 161.
—— to Poitiers, 208.
—— to Rochelle and Bordeaux, 212.
Nanteuil, 560.
Nantua, 530.
Narbonne, 473.
—— to Perpignan, 336.
Narcissa, 470.
Navarre, châteaux de, 72.
Navarreins,
Nay,
Nazaire,
Neauphie,
st. Nectaire, 403.
Neff, Felix, 510.

Negreplisse,
Nemours, 359.
Nerac, 285.
Néris les Bains, 354.
Ners, 428.
Neufbrisach, 552.
Neufchâteau, 547.
Neufchâtel, 26.
Neuilly, 29.
—— sur Marne, 538.
Neuvy, .
Nevers, 361.
st. Nicolas, .
Nicot, 466.
Nimes, 462.
—— to Marseilles, 474.
Niort, 227.
Nismes, 462.
Nivelle, 280.
st. Nizier, .
Noailles, 244.
Nogent sur Seine, 514.
—— le Rotrou, 454.
—— sur Vernisson, 360.
Noirétable, 404.
Noirlac, 354.
Noirmoutiers île, 167.
Noisy, .
Nonancourt, 114.
Nord, Depart. du, 574. 578.
Normandy, 1. 3. Routes 3—103.
Norrey, 78.
Nort, 136.
Nostradamus, 475.
Nouvion, 76.
Noyades of the Loire, 165.
Noyon, 572.
Nuits, 528.

O.

Oberlin, 549.
Octeville, 88.
Odilienberg, 550.
Oissel, 51.
Oléron, 288.
Olette, 344.
Olivet, 176.
Ollioulles, 482.
st. Omer, 3.
Omonville, 27.
Oo, Lac d', 317.
Orange, 443.
Orcière, Col d', 511.
Orgon, 486.
Orival, 51.
Orleans, 171.
—— siege of, 174.
—— Maid of, 174—179. 217.
—— railroad to Paris, 176.
—— to Toulouse, 240.
—— to Bourges and Clermont, 350.
les Ormes, 210.
Ornans, .
Orthez, 283.
Ossau, val d', 292.
Ossoue, 304.
Ossuary, 107.
Oudon, 208.

P.

la Pacaudière, 364.
Pacy sur Eure, 70.
Paimbœuf, 167.
Paimpol, 128.
Pain Bouchain, 365.
st. Palais, .
Palais du Roi, 416.
Palaiseau, .
la Palisse, 364.
le Pallet, 208.
Palud, 442.
Palus, .
Pamiers, 339.
Panfous, .
Paraclete, church of the, 514.
st. Pardoux, 355.
Paris, 20.
—— to Caen and Cherbourg, 70.
—— to Brussels by St. Quentin, Cambrai, Valenciennes, 571.
—— to Dijon, by Troyes, 513.
—— by Sens and Tonnerre, 521.
—— to Lille by Peronne and Arras, 575.
—— to Mezieres and Sedan by Rheims, 560.
—— to Nantes, 150.
—— to Orleans, 170. Railway, 176.
—— to Rennes, 109.
—— to Rouen (railway), 27.
—— ——, lower road, 28.
—— ——, upper road, 44.
—— to Lyons; Route de Bourbonnois, 355.
—— —— Route de Bourgogne, 376.
—— to Châlons, by Autun, 384.
—— to Strasburg, by Nancy, 537.
—— to Plombières, 546.
—— to Versailles (railroad), 109.
—— to Mulhausen and Bâle, 534.
—— to Metz and Forbach, 554.
Parthenay, 211.
Passe Provisoire, xvii.
Passports and Police, xvi—xix.
Passy, 111.
Patay, 171.
st. Patrice, .
Pau, 286.
—— to Oleron and Val d'Aspe, 290.
—— to Eaux Bonnes and Eaux Chaudes, 291.
—— to Cauterets and Barèges, 298.
—— to Bagnères de Bigorre and de Luchon, 318.
st. Paul, .
—— de Dax, 274.
Pavilly, .
le Péage, .
le Pecq, 30.
Pedauque, la Reine, 250.
Pelacoy, 244.
Pelvoux Mont, 492. 506. 511.
Pendentif, 438.
Penticousa, 296.
st. Peray, 438. Wine, 439.
Perci, 90.
Perdu, Mont, 310.
st. Père, 380.
Périers, 88.
Périgueux, 256.
Péronne, 576.
Perpignan, 337.
—— to Mont Louis and Puycerda, 343.
Perrache, 433.
Perte du Rhone, 530.
Pertignac, 225.
Petrarch, 447. 452.
Pertuis, 339.
Peyrada, 308.
Peyrehorade, 283
Peyresordes, 317
Peyrolles, 504.
Peyruis, 504.
Pèzenas, 472.
Pfalsbourg, 542.
Picade, port de, 330.
Pic du Midi d'Ossau, 295.
Pic du Midi de Bigorre, 313.
Picquigny, 17.
st. Pierre le Montier, 361.
—— Ecrite, 384.
—— les Eglises,
Pierrefitte, 300.
Pierrelatte,
Pilas, Mont, 421
le Pin, 475.
Pithiviers, 178.
Plantagenet, 104. 155
Plessis les Tours, 191.
Pleyben, 140.
Ploermel, 149.
Plomb de Cantal, 405.
Plombières, 547.
Plougastel, 126.
Plouha, .
Podensac, .
Poissy, 31.
Poitiers, 218. Battle of, 221.
—— to Châteauroux, 226.
—— to Rochefort by Niort, 227.
Poix, 17.
st. Pol, 4.
st. Pol de Léon, 129.
Polignac, 395.
Poligny, 524.
Polminhac, 407.
Pommard, 528.
Pommerèval, 26.
Pompadour, 243.
Pompignan,
Pons, 217.
Ponsas, 436.
Pontacq, .
Pont à Mousson, 569
Pont Audemer, 69.
Pontarlier, 525.
Pontcharra, 501.
Pontchâteau, 404.
Pont d'Ain, 530.
Pont de Beauvoisin, 493.
Pont de Cé, 205.
Pont de l'Arc, 427.
Pont de l'Arche, 34.
Pont de Montvert, 417.
Pont de Pany, .
Pont d Espagne, 303.

Pont du Château, 404.
Pont du Gard, 457.
Pontgibaud, 393.
Pontigny, 521.
Pontius Pilate, 431. 436.
Pontivy, 138.
Pont l'Evêque, 70.
Pont le Roy, 514.
Pontoise, 26.
Pontorson, 93. 95.
Pontoux, 222.
Pont St. Esprit, 442.
Pont St. Maxence, 575
Pont Scorff, 143.
Pontrieux, .
Pont sans Pareil, 3.
Pont sur Yonne, 377.
Popes at Avignon, 446
st. Porchaire, 215.
Pornic, .
Port Royal des Champs, 150.
Port sur Saône, 537.
Port Vendres, 338.
Port de Launay, 139.
Portets, 260. 332. 339.
Poste aux Anes, 433.
Posting in France, xix.
Pouges, 360.
Pouilly, .
Poullaouen, 137.
st. Pourçain, 386.
Pouy, 274.
Pradelles, 415.
Prades, 343.
Pratz de Mollo, 344.
Preignac, 260.
Pressigny, .
Pretender, (the) 72. 130.
Privas, 423.
Privat d'Allier,
PROVENCE, 429.
Provins, 511.
Pugère, .
Puiseaux, .
Pujols, .
Puleaux, .
Puttelange, .
le Puy, 396. 399.
Puy de Dome, 390.
—— Gravenoire, 393.
—— Griou, 406.
—— Pariou, 391.
—— Marman, 394.
—— la Poix, 404.
—— Tartaret, 403.
Puylaurens, .
Puymaurins, 342.
Puyoo, 283.
PYRENEES, 229 Routes, 80. 82, 83, 85, 86, 87. 91. 94. 97, 98.
—— directions for travelling, 235. 240.
——, the Eastern, 339. 345.

Q.

Quélern, 140.
st. Quentin, 572.
st. Quentin in Normandy, 99.
Querqueville, 87.
Quesnoy, .
Quévilly, 52
Queyraz, Val, 509.
Quiberon, 147.
Quillebœuf, 53.
Quimper, 141.
Quimperlé, 141.
Quineville, 81.

R.

Rabastens, 332.
Rabelais, 198.
Racine, 560.
Raillière, 309.
RAILROADS, xxv.
—— Paris to Versailles, 109.
—— —— to Rouen, 27.
—— —— to St. Germain, 30.
—— —— to Orleans, 176.
—— —— to Corbeil, 176.
—— Nîmes to Beaucaure, 474.
—— Bordeaux to La Teste, 265.
—— Roanne to St. Etienne, 364. 419.
—— Lille to Courtrai, 578.
—— Lyons to St. Etienne, 413.
—— Strasburg to Bâle, 550.
—— Montpellier to Cette, 471.
Rambaut, .
Rambert, .
Rambouillet, 150.
la Rance, river, 132
Randan, 364.
Randanne, 401.
Raneié, mines de, 340.
Raneogne, .
Raz, Pointe de, 141.
Ré, Ile de, 214.
Rebenac, .
la Recousse, 3.
Redon, 139.
Reignac,
Reims, 562.
st. Remi, 455.
Remiremont,
Remoulins, 461.
René d'Anjou, 487.
Rennes, 117.
——:to Brest, 118.
—— to Vannes, 149.
la Réole, 260.
Rethel, 566.
de Retz at Nantes, 163.
Rheims, 562.
—— to Luxembourg, 568.
Rhins, .
RHONE, 432.
—— Lyons to Avignon and Arles, 432.
—— the Haut, Aix to Lyons, 528.
—— Perte du, 530.
—— Junction with the Saône. 433.
Rhuys, 146.
Ribeauvillé, 550.
Richard Cœur-de-Lion, 37. 201. Death of, 255.
Richelieu, 212.
Richet,
Rienzi at Avignon, 447.
Riom, 387.
st. Riquier, 17.
Rive de Gier, 414.
Rivesaltes, 337.
Roanne, 364.
—— to St. Etienne (Railway) and Valence, 419.
la Roche, .
—— Bernard, 148.
—— Guion, 48.
Roche Corbon, 188.
—— Cotte, 200.
Rochefort, 214.
la Rochefoucauld, 222.
la Rochelle, 213.
Rochemaure, 440.
le Rochepot, .
les Rochers, 117.
Rocroi, 567.
Rodez, 44.
Rohan, 138.
Roland, Camisard chief, 428.
Rolleboise, 28.
st. Romain, .
—— de Colbosc, .
Romanche, Val, 505. 507.
Romans, 500.
Romorontin, .
Roncesvalles, 237.
Roquefort, 274. Cheese, 412.
Roquemaure, 445.
Roscoff, 130.
Rosières,
les Rosiers, 204.
Rosny, Chateau, 33.
Rosporden, 141.
Rostrénen,
Roubaix, 578.
ROUEN, 35. 44.
—— to Paris, (Railroad), 28. 34. 40.
—— to Havre, 51. 55. by Yvetot, 63.
—— to Alençon, 68.
—— to Caen, 69.
—— to Orleans, 178.
Rouffach, 552.
Rougemont,
Rouilly,
Roupy,
les Rousses, 524.
Rousillon,
Rouvray, 51. 380.
Royan, 272.
Royat, 392.
Ruel, 29.
Ruffec, 222.
Ruines, Rumingol,

S.

Sables,
le Sage, birth-place of, 146
—— his death, 14.
Saintes, 216.
Salbris,
Salces, 336.
Salins, 525.
Salles Comteau,
Sallies, 283.
Salon, 475.
Samer, 16.
Sanadoire, 403.

Sancy, Pic de, 402.
Sandrupt, 539.
SAÔNE, River, Chalons to Lyons, 381. 384. 584.
Sapcy, 496.
Sarrebourg, 542.
Sarzeau, 146.
Sassenage, 499.
Saulce, 504.
Saulieu, 381.
le Sault, 529.
Saumur, 201.
Sauterne, 260.
Sauveterre,
st. Sauveur les Bains, 305.
—— Le Vicomté, 88.
Savenay, 149.
Savenières, 205.
Saverdun, 339.
Saverne, 542.
Savigny, 177.
st. Savin, 227. 300.
Scarron, 156.
Sceaux, 170.
Schelestadt, 550.
Schirmeck, 548.
Schœnmartin, 551.
Seculeijo, 317.
Sedan, 567.
Séez, 68.
Seignelay,
la Seillerage, 208.
SEINE RIVER, Paris to Rouen, 46.
—— —— Rouen to Havre, 51.
Semur,
Senlis, 571.
Sens, 377.
Sept Laux, 505.
Sernin,
Serres,
Serrières,
st. Servan, 98.
st. Sever,
Sévignac, 291.
Sevigné, Mad. de, 117. 441.
Sevre, Nantaise, 212.
—— Niortaise,
Sèvres china, 112.
Seyssel, 529.
Sezanne, 538.
Sierck, 569.
Sigean, 336.
Silkworm, 441.
Sillery, 581.
Sisteron, 504.
Skeleton Tour of France, xxxvi.
Soissons, 560.
Solesmes, 156.
Soligny, 114.
le Sologne, 240.
Sommesous, 538. 581.
Sommières,
la Sône, 500.
Sorgues, 451.
Sorigny,
Sotteville,
Souchez, 579.
Soultz les Bains, 548.
la Source du Loiret, 176.
Souvigny, 362.
Souzé, 201.
Steam-boats, xxvi.
Stenay, 568.
STRASBOURG, 542. 546. Pâtés, 545.
—— to Bâle (Railroad), 550.
—— to Epinal, 548.
—— to Besançon, by Colmar, 553.
Succinio, 146.
Sully, 178. His castle, 154. His grave, 154.
Sulzbach, 552.
Suzon, Val de, 517.
Symphorien en Laye, 365.

T.

Tables d'Hôte, xxviii.
Taillebourg, 215.
Tain, 436.
Talbot's death, 257.
Tallard, 504.
Tancarville, 54.
Tanlay, 522.
Tarare, 365.
Tarascon, 454.
—— (Ariège), 340.
Tarbes, 318.
Tarn, 411. 417.
Tartas, 274.
Tencin, 501.
Teste de Buch (Railway), 265.
Tet, 343.
Than, Etang de, 472.
Thann, 553.
Thann, near Caen, 77.
Theatres, Roman, 58.
—— at Orange, 444.
—— at Arles, 457.
Thégonneeh,
le Theil,
Thiers, 404.
Thiézac, 407.
Thionville, 569.
Thorigny,
Thouars,
Thoury, 135.
Thueyts, 415. 426.
Tiffauges, 210.
Tinchebray, 101.
Tocquevelle,
Toissey, 383.
Tombeleine, 93. 95.
Toises, reduced to feet, xiii.
Tonnay Boulon,
—— Charente, 215.
Tonneins, 259.
Tonnerre, 522.
Tonquedec, 129.
Torfou, 210.
Torigny, 102.
Tortes, 299.
Tôtes, 27.
Toul, 539.
Toulon, 482. Siege, 483.
Toulouse, 246 255. Battle of, 253.
—— to Bordeaux, 247.
—— to Auch and Pau, 331.
—— to Bagnères, 332.
—— to Foix, 339.
—— to Narbonne, 333.
Touraine, 169.
Tour de Carol, 342.
Tour de Bello, 47.
—— de Cordouan, 272.
—— du Pin, 492.
—— en Bessin, 80.
Tourcoing, 578.
Tourmalet, 313.
Tournoel, 388.
Tournon, 437.
Tournus, 382.
Tours, 189. 193.
—— to Loches, 194.
—— to Chinon and Saumur, 196.
—— to Nantes, 198.
—— to Poitiers and Bordeaux, 217.
Tourville, 28.
Toussaint l'Ouverture, 525.
Touvres, 489.
Tramesaigues (val d'Aure), 316.
la Trappe pres Soligny, 114.
Trappist Convents, 156.
Tréguier, 128.
Tremblay,
Treport, 68.
Treves, 204.
Trévoux, 383.
Trichery,
Triel, 32.
Troumouss, 307.
Trouille,
Trouville, 70.
Troyes, 514. Treaty of, 515. Weight, 515.
Tulle,
Tullins, 500.
Turcoing, 578.
Turenne, 244.
—— Marshal, 568. 583.

U.

Ubaye,
Uchau, 468.
Urdos, 291.
Uriage, 499.
Urrugne, 280.
Urtubi, 280.
Ussat, 341.
Ussel,
Uzerche, 243.
Uzés, 428.

V.

st. Vaast la Hougue, 82.
Vaison, 445.
Val d'Ante, 99.
Valençay, 241.
Valence, 437.
—— to Aubenas, Privas, and Nimes, 422.
—— to Grenoble, 500.
Valenciennes, 575.
Valerien, Mt. 29.
st. Vallery sur Somme, 17.
Vallery en Caux, 65.
Vallery, 377.
st. Vallier, 436.
Valliquerville, 63.
Vallons, 427.

Vallouise, 511.
Valmy, 557.
Valonges, 81.
Vals, 424.
Val Suzon, 517.
Vannes, 148.
Vanvres, 110.
Var, 490.
Varades, 207.
Varennes, 557.
la Vatay, .
Vaubadun, .
Vaucelles, 75.
Vaucluse, 451. ,
Vaucouleurs, 547.
Vaudémont, .
Vaudencourt, .
Vaudreuil, 34.
le Vaunage, 467.
Vaux de Vire, 100.
Vauxhall, 175.
Vayres, .
le Velay, 398.
Venasque, 329. Port de 326. 330.
Vendéans at Granville, 90.
—— at Laval, 116.
—— at Savenay, 149.
—— at le Mans, 155.
—— at Saumur, 203.
—— at St. Florent, 207.
la Vendée, 116.
Vendôme, 194.
Vendres, Port, 338.
Vénérand, .
Ventoux, Mont, 453.
st. Veran, 510.
Verberie, .
Verdun, 557.
Veretz, .
Vergy, .
Vermanton, 379.
Verneuil, 114.
Vernon, 33.
Verpillieres, .
Verrières, .
Versailles, 112.
Verteuil, .
Vertrieux, 529.
Vervins, .
Vesoul, 537.
Vexin, 45.
Vézelay, 379.
Vie de Sos, 340.
Vichy Baths, 363.
Vic le Comte, .
Vic sur Cére, 407.
Vidauban, 489.
Vieille-Brioude, 396.
Vienne, 434.
—— to Grenoble, 492.
Vierzon, 240. 350.
Vigan, .
Vignecourt, .
Vignemale, 302.
Vigny, 45.
Vilaine, river, 117.
Villandraut, .
Villards, .
Villars, .
—— Bocage, 100.
—— d'Aréne, 506.
Villebon, 154.
Villedieu les Poêles, 103.
—— le Perron, 227.
Villefranche sur Saône, 383.
—— (Aveyron), 408.
Villejuif, 356.
Villeneuve le Roi, 378.
—— de Marsan, 285.
—— les Avignon, 446.
—— la Guiard, .
Villequier, 53.
Villers Bocage, 100.
Villers Cotterets, 560.
Vire, 100.
Virey, .
Viroflay, .
Viry, .
Viso, Monte, 510.
la Vista, 475.
la Vitarelle, 416.
Vitré, 116.
—— le Français, 583.
Vivarais, 416. 423, 424.
Viviers, 442.
Vizille, 502.
Void, 539.
Voirons, 492.
Volane, 429.
Volnay, 528.
Voltaire, 170. 179. 536.
Volvic, 387.
Voreppe, 494.
Vosges mountains (Routes 168. 170), 548, 549.
Vougeot, Clos de, 527.
Vouillé, .
la Voulte, 440.

W.

Waldbach, 549.
Wasselonne, 542.
st. Wandrille, 56.
Weights and measures, x. xii.
Wellington, Duke of, 158, in the Pyrenees, 232. 281; at Bayonne, 276.
Wimereux, 11.
Wimille, 11.
Wissant, 11.

X.

Xantrailles, 285.
Xertigny, 547.

Y.

Yèvre, 350.
st. Yrieix, .
Yssingeaux, 415.
Yvetot, 63. Roi d', 63.

Z.

Zabern, 542.

THE END.

LONDON:
Printed by A. SPOTTISWOODE,
New-Street-Square.

London:
inted by A. Spottiswoode,
New-Street-Square.