Proceedings in an action for debt, between the Right Honourable Charles James Fox, plaintiff, and John Horne Tooke, Esq. defendant / published by the defendant.

Contributors

Tooke, John Horne, 1736-1812. Fox, Charles James, 1749-1806. Royal College of Surgeons of England

Publication/Creation

London: Printed for and sold by the booksellers, 1792.

Persistent URL

https://wellcomecollection.org/works/gvhujsbf

Provider

Royal College of Surgeons

License and attribution

This material has been provided by This material has been provided by The Royal College of Surgeons of England. The original may be consulted at The Royal College of Surgeons of England. where the originals may be consulted. This work has been identified as being free of known restrictions under copyright law, including all related and neighbouring rights and is being made available under the Creative Commons, Public Domain Mark.

You can copy, modify, distribute and perform the work, even for commercial purposes, without asking permission.

Wellcome Collection
183 Euston Road
London NW1 2BE UK
T +44 (0)20 7611 8722
E library@wellcomecollection.org
https://wellcomecollection.org

PROCEEDINGS

IN AN

ACTION FOR DEBT,

BETWEEN

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE

CHARLES JAMES FOX, Plaintiff,

AND

JOHN HORNE TOOKE, Esc. Defendant.

PUBLISHED BY THE DEFENDANT.

LONDON:

PRINTED FOR AND SOLD BY THE BOOKSELLERS.

MDCCXCII.

PROCEEDINGS, &c.

WESTMINSTER-HALL, April 30, 1792.

Sittings before Lord KENYON, C. J. K. B.

The Right Hon. Charles James Fox, Plaintiff,

AGAINST

John Horne Tooke, Efq; Defendant.

JURY.

EDWARD HUGHES, Piccadilly, Colourman, JAMES BUMSTEAD, Ditto, Shoemaker, THOMAS HAWORTH, Ditto, Tinman, HALE MILLER, Swallow-street, Glazier, HENRY VINCENT, Ditto, Spurmaker, SAMUEL CROWTHER, Ditto, Whipmaker, ROBERT FLADGATE, Ditto, Carpenter, BERNARD BUTTER, Ditto, Baker. WILLIAM HIGGINS, Air-ffreet, Carpenter, HENRY DAWES, Brewer-street, Brazier, JOHN HILL. Ditto, Broker, JOHN BRUCE, Windmill-street, Shoemaker.

Infel for the Plaintiff, Messrs. Erskine, Douglas and Barrow.

corney, Mr. Cocker.

the Defendant, the Defendant in person. aorney, Mr. Bonney.

Mr. Garrow opened for the Plaintiff. The Declaration states, that this Action is brought by the Plaintiff against the Desendant to recover the sum of 1981. 2s. 2d. the taxed costs of a petition which was presented by the Desendant to the House of Commons; and which by a Committee of that House was voted frivolous and vexatious. To this Declaration the Desendant has pleaded, that he owes nothing to the Plaintiff: and thereupon Issue is joined.

Mr. Erskine. Gentlemen of the Jury, it will only be necessary for me to say two or three words to you in stating this case. This is an Action of debt, brought by Mr. Fox against Mr. Horne Tooke, to recover from him the amount of a sum of money certified under the warrant of the Speaker of the House of Commons, in consequence of a certain Act of Parliament. This Act does not intitle us to enter into a discussion of the merits, or of any matter or thing relating to them: and therefore I shall certainly say nothing upon this case; but merely put in the evidence that is necessary for Mr. Fox to maintain his Action.

Evidence for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Dunn, Secretary to the Speaker of the House of Commons, was first called. The Speaker's warrant was put into his hand, and on looking on it, he said, "I have no doubt but this was signed by the Speaker of the House of Commons. I have seen him frequently write, and I believe this to be of his handwriting."—The warrant was then read by Mr. Lowten, the Clerk of Nisi Prius; from which it appeared that the sum certified amounted to one hundred and ninety-eighty pounds, two shillings and two pence, for which this Action was brought.

The next piece of Evidence put in was an examined copy of the Journals of the House of Commons, dated the 7th of February, 1791. This was also read by the Clerk of Nisi Prius. Among other things it appeared that the Petition of John Horne Tooke, Esquire, was voted frivolous and vexatious, by the committee which the House had appointed to try its merits.

Mr. Erskine. My Lord, This is our Cafe.

Lord Kenyon. IS there any Defence?

The Defendant. Gentlemen of the Jury, We are called upon this day—both you and I—to perform a very important business of great national concern: the memory of which, I will venture to foretel, will not be buried with ourselves; nor will its consequences sinish with your verdict.

In the performance of this duty to our country, I mult beg you to observe, and carefully to remember it to the and, that there are only three efficient and necessary Parides;—Mr. Fox, the Plaintiff; Myself, the Defendant; and cou, gentlemen, the Jury.—The Judge and the Cryer of the court attend alike in their respective situations; and they are paid by us for their attendance: we pay them swell: they are hired to be the Assistants and Reporters, but they are not, and they never were intended to be, the Controulers of our conduct. For the whole of this business is comprized in Mr. Fox's action, in my defence, and in your everdict.

Mr. Fox's part is the first: and in bringing this action against me, he has discharged the duty of an honest man; and for this at least he deserves the thanks and praise of the public. For you will very much wrong us both, both him and me, if you imagine that there is any thing mean, or spersonal, or mercenary, in this question which you are now to decide between us. No. It is not that he may gain, or that I may save, these two hundred pounds, that is by any means the ultimate object either of his Action or of my Deserve. A great and important national right is at stake. The last and only security which the full-grown corruption and iniquity of the times have left to the people of this land for their lives, their liberties, and their property, this last and only security—a real Trial by a Jury of our country—is now attempted to be wrested from us.

I do not with certainty know, but I am firmly perfuaded, that the Plaintiff and myself shall not be found finally to differ in our sentiments on this question: and I should be highly gratisted, if, instead of being the Plaintiff, Mr. Fox himself was one of the present Jury now to decide it. But he has performed the whole of his duty on this occasion; and in bringing this action against me, he has afforded to us, with whom alone it now remains, a desirable opportunity of discharging our duty also.

For myself, with all possible plainness, I will endeavour, as briefly as I can, to discharge my part of this duty to our country. And I trust that you will, as serious and honest men, discharge your duty also, conscientiously and faith-

It is not necessary on the present occasion, nor do I intend it, to enter into a minute detail of the transactions of the late Westminster elections. The transactions themselves are sufficiently notorious, and more than sufficiently infamous. I shall only generally bring back to your remembrance the great outlines or sketch of what passed in the short space of four years.

In the year 1784, it happened to fuit the views and political purposes of two factions, who have long been contending, and still continue to contend, for the plunder, the government, and the patronage of the whole country; it fuited their views in 1784, to dispute the representation of the city of Westminster. The means by which they difputed this representation, were such as were likely enough to follow from the motives of the perfons who were engaged in the dispute. Nominally indeed the dispute lay between the two candidates, Mr. Fox and Sir Cecil Wray, but the real dispute was between the factions. The confequences were not merely fuch indecencies, improprieties, and irregularities, as commonly attend contested populous elections; but a regular fystem of the most barefaced and feandalous bribery, the most profligate and shameless perjury, the most cruel and audacious riots, and finally murder. A return obtained by fuch means as thefe, could not naturally be very fatisfactory to the excluded party; and this diffatisfaction produced the demand of a fcrutiny.

This attempted scrutiny was very laborious, very tedious, and very expensive. It was repeatedly the subject of questions and strong debate in the House of Commons, for there the factions are in greatest force; and after repeated struggles, they were at length reluctantly obliged to defist from the scrutiny, without any effect, and almost without any progrefs.

In 1788, the factions again disputed the representation of Westminster: the dispute was then nominally between Lord John Townfend and Lord Hood; but again REALLY between the factions as before. The confequences and means were the same as before -- Bribery : Perjury : Riot : Murder. Again, the party who had not the return was diffatisfied with the means by which the return against him had been obtained; and knowing by experience the impoffibility of any redrefs by a ferutiny, he had recourse to the only remaining means, a petition to the House of Commons. The profecution of this petition was extremely laborious, tedious, and expensive; and turned out finally as ineffectual as the former ferutiny had been. About a thirtieth or fortieth part only of its merits was entered into, and its costs -- for the petitioner alone -- amounted to upwards of 14,000l.

Gentlemen, that the struggle was really between the factions, was notorious; because the factions bore the expence on both sides. In the course of a short time, in little more than four years, one hundred thousand pounds, on each side, was expended on the city of Westminster.

Now that fo much mischief was done, is no proof that they are worse men in the city of Westminster than in other places; it is rather a proof that they are better: for if they were naturally bad, one tenth part of the money would have produced ten times more mischies: for do you only consider, what must be the effect of the distribution of two hundred thousand pounds in four years, amongst the worst men of one city: besides all the extravagant promises with which each small portion of it was accompanied, and the foolish and unfounded expectations which each hungry individual entertained as a return for his activity.

Gentlemen, if it were necessary, I could produce to you now from my pocket, a list of those who subscribed to the expences of these Elections; but it is not necessary: and I mean to pass it over as shortly as possible; more shortly than perhaps its importance requires. But the most important part to the country at large, is, that the nation itself, you and I and the public, against whose best rights this expence is incurred, we must ultimately pay this expence ourselves.

The expence on the ministerial side was partly paid by persons in office, at a sort of regular percentage on their places and profits. The Lords of the Admiralty were at first expected to pay two hundred pounds each; but this was thought too much, and on reconsideration it was reduced to 150l. for them: the Lords of the Treasury were expected to pay 200l. each: persons in superior situations 300l. each.

Lord Kenyon. Mr. H. Tooke, I cannot fit in this place to hear great names and persons in high situations caluminated and vilished; persons who are not in this cause; persons who are absent, and who cannot defend themselves. A court of Justice is not a place for calumny: it can answer no purpose: you must see the impropriety of it: and it does not become the feelings of an honourable man.

Defendant. Sir, if you please, we will settle this question between us now, in the outset, that I may not be liable to any more interruptions from you.

Lord Kenyon. Lord Lovat produced the names of perfons of great respectability, and he was stopped in the House of Lords. It was said it was indecent to do it, and that it became a man of his station to refrain from such things.

Defendant. I am perfuaded I shall be able very easily and very shortly to satisfy you that I am not in the wrong path: and it is the more necessary that I should do so now; because it is the path which I most certainly mean to pursue, and will not be diverted from.

You know, at least you ought to know, and I acknow-ledge, that if, under the pretence of a defence in this cause—I say, under the pretence of a defence—I shall wantonly and maliciously say or do any word or thing which would be punishable by the laws of the land, if said or done by me wantonly and maliciously any where else, in the street, upon any other or no occasion, gratis; I shall be equally liable to prosecution and punishment, by the same laws, and in the fame manner, for what I shall fay or do here.

But, Sir, you have made use of some words, which I am willing to believe you used in a manner different from their usual acceptation. You spoke of caluminating and vilifying: those words usually include the notion of falsebood. Now I imagine you did not mean them so to be understood; or to infinuate by them your evidence to the Jury, that I had said what was salse: but that by calumny, you only meant things injurious to the characters of the persons spoken of, such things as would hurt them to hear, whether true, or salse.

Lord Kenyon. Certainly.

Defendant. Well! I thought so; and you see I was not defirous to take advantage of the words to impute to you any other meaning or intention: because had you meant otherwise, and included the notion of falsehood in the word calumny, your Lordship would then have calumniated me. For I have spoken nothing but the truth, as I believe you know, and which I am able and willing to prove. In one thing which has fallen from you, I go farther and am stricter than you are: I think it hard that any persons either IN a cause, or out of a cause should at any time unnecessarily hear what is unpleasant to them though true. I mean to do nothing of the kind. If I fpeak or act improperly, your lordship and any persons thinking themselves injured or offended, will have as full and compleat fatisfaction and remedy as if it had been fpoken or done in the ftreets, without any trial whatever. At my peril therefore I shall proceed; and expect to meet with no farther interruption from your lordship. I will state whatever I judge sit to be stated upon this occasion, whether pleasant or otherwise: for I think this trial of great importance to the nation at large, and not a common trial of disputed property. Had it been merely a common action for two hundred pounds, I should have retained fome professional gentleman to manage the cause in the usual course; but I felt it to be necessary to bring forward those things which I could not fairly put upon any professional man whatever.

Gentlemen of the Jury, -I have no connection with any faction or party. I abhor them all and they me. It is not for any political purpose, or to further any man's views, that I have spoken of these factions. I have mentioned them to you that you may consider and feel the situation in which we all stand.

You are, upon this occasion, the Country: and so you are well called: you, the Jury, are on this occasion the representatives of the whole Land, and should act accordingly.

I was telling you, gentlemen, when I was interrupted, the manner in which some part of the expence was paid on the ministerial side of the dispute: and I have stated, I believe, that upwards of 20,000l. of the expences for the lElection in 1788, were paid by persons most of them in cossice.

Of the higher orders, the Duke of Richmond paid five Ihundred pounds: the Duke of Newcastle five hundred pounds: &c. Those in the next degree of office paid three Ihundred pounds each: The Lords of the Treasury two Ihundred pounds each: and the Lords of the Admiralty one Ihundred and fifty pounds each: but there were some few exceptions: I could take the list out of my pocket and read them to you. They may have their Actions or Informations against me, if they please; and I have no objection to a trial on the question. I can prove the fact.—

As the rest of the money was furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury, he best can tell from whence it came.

I stated to you that the Country at large, you and I amongst others, are finally to pay that monstrous sum of money laid out on both sides on this one borough. We know indeed perfectly well, that the gentlemen on the other side, on the opposition side, could not pay this money out of the offices which they are very forry they do not possess: but they are merchant adventurers; they advance their money on speculation, on promises and expectations of the good things to come hereafter; when their leaders shall distribute the national plunder. Then they are to be made amends. And for as many of these promises and expectations as may be fulfilled, the nation at large must pay.

I took myself a part, and a very strenuous part, in the Election of 1788; and I too was bribed: for promises are bribes; and I was promised two important things by persons who, from their stations and situations, were well able to fulfil their promises. And I will tell you what the bribes were to me. I was assured that two things should most undoubtedly follow—Prosecution and punishment upon the offenders to deter men in suture from the commission of such coutrages, such perjury and subordination of perjury; and an Act of parliament, parliamentary regulations, to make the repetition of such infamous practices impossible in suture: and thus to restore a fair and quiet and real election to the people of Westminster.—I received the promises, but thever received any thing like a sussible them: for in-shead of a profecution of the most atrocious offenders, against whom the evidence was ample, full and compleat; and instead of any parliamentary regulations to prevent these perjuries and subordinations of perjury, and these outrages and slaughters in future;—a Compromise took place between the factions. They had effectually excluded, as they had reason to think, all the rest of the world from disputing an Election in Westminster with them, at such an enormous expence and without any possibility of deciding the merits of the Return. But finding the expence of contending this one single seat too great even for themselves to continue; they imitated the decision which, I think, is called the Wisdom of Solomon.—They cut up the living object for which they had contended, and divided it between them.—Cruel enough! but no wonder.—They had mangled it before in the struggle.

Well, Gentlemen, the reprefentation for Westminster was now, to all appearance, effectually annihilated. Who would contest? Who could contest it with them? There was no third faction in the country frong enough to contend with either of them: where then was one to be found, which could contend with a confederacy of both? They never could foresee, such mercenary dealers as these could not even imagine, that any fingle individual would be fo difinterested, or, in their language, so mad, as to sacrifice himfelf by becoming a candidate at fuch an election, where it feemed absolutely impossible to succeed: and yet it was that very notion of theirs which made me a candidate for Westminster. It was, just at that period, the last office in the world which I should have wished to undertake; and nothing but the infamy of their conduct made me a candidate: the very methods they took, and by which they hoped to deter all men, determined me. For they were not contented with this compromife alone. It did not fatisfy them only to be fure of their present object; but they must also fecure the continuance of possession, and guard, as they thought, against all future possible molestation and expence. To make therefore fecurity itself still more fecure; to cut off all possible contest; and farther to discourage all independent interference; in 1789, upon the very heels of Lord Hood's expensive and ineffectual petition, they passed that act of parliament-The frivolous and vexatious act-upon which this prefent action is brought.

Immediately after the elections in 1784 and 1788, carried on at that enormous expence; after the ineffectual and undecided Scrutiny, at immense labour and cost; and upon the very heels of Lord Hood's ineffectual and undecided Petition, at the expence of sourteen thousand pounds for the petitioner alone; this Innovation, this novel act of par-

Suppose then that this frivolous Act had preceded Lord Hood's petition; that he, as I have done, had contested with two adversaries, and had been found frivolous and vexatious: his own expence of fourteen thousand pounds would not have been thought sufficient punishment for him, or sufficient idiscouragement for others; but he must have been adjudged to pay the whole costs for the three, which would have amounted at least to forty-two thousand pounds: and this only for a fortieth part of his petition. If he had gone through the whole of his petition, and it had been voted frivolous for vexatious, the costs for him to pay would have amounted to above a Million and a half of money. A tolerable penalty this, without the intervention of a Jury; and upon a sman too not necessarily supposed to possess more than a life-estate of 300l. a year, that is, a principal of about 3000l.

And for what crime is this monstrous punishment inslicted? For being a candidate to represent the people. Upon whom think you this storm was intended to fall? Upon any independent friend of his country; who must consequently be of no faction, but against all factions, and must therefore nave all factions against him.

They bring me here indeed only for 2001, to each of my adverfaries: I would have been a candidate in order to have been down here to this trial, though I had foreknown that tt would be for two millions.

Frivolous and Vexatious are new crimes invented in the year 1789: the judgment and application of which crimes, the usurpers of the representation of the people, the private proprietors of stolen boroughs, have reserved to themselves: for this act of parliament does not leave you, the Jury, to enter into the merits of the case—(upon which however you are upon your oaths, to pronounce)—nor into any thing that relates to its merits.

And for this most infamous act of parliament, we are oliged to the pretended Reformer of the representation in parliament, to the present most treacherous and deceitful

Minister.

Gentlemen of the Jury,

The learned gentleman, Mr. Erskine, who leads this ause against me, has told you, and has told you truly, nat this act of parliament "does not intitle him to enter to the merits of the question at issue before you." These think were his words; I took them down, when he spoke uem. Now I must beg you to retain these words in your memory; because they are very important; and upon them I mean to rest my defence; and on this very ground, without absolute perjury on your side, I shall be intitled to your verdict.

B 2

I listened to him with pleasure when he stated it: for it was what I meant to urge to you. I beg not to be misunderstood; I do not mean to impute to the learned gentleman, that he made any slip or mistake in so stating it: on the contrary, he was compelled to it: he could not alter the sact. He has done now, as he always does, the most that can possibly be done for his client. I do not say this so much from my own experience of him, for my little experience of this court is before his time; but it is the general voice, and I believe it.

Gentlemen, This is called an Action of Debt; but it does not require any great degree of understanding, to see that it is, in fact, a Penalty for the commission of a new crime. Now, gentlemen, it is worth our while to confider, at what period of the history of our country, this innovation, this new penal Statute, is introduced; and you will find it comes just at the time when almost all the feats in parliament are become private property. Just in the same manner, when Land was the chief property in this country, and the titles of the landed proprietors were fettled and fecure; thefe proprietors, who were the only perfons concerned in the making of laws, took care for themselves that they should have a speedier, furer and cheaper remedy than any other man could have for any other species of property. They empowered themselves to seize at once upon their land and every thing they found there; and left the other party, the tenant, to feek a legal remedy. So now, when this property in representation is become secure and compleat and fettled; then it is that these thieves, the pretended proprietors of the public, make acts of parliament, not only to fecure to themselves their infamously stolen property; but to guard themselves from all contest in the possession, and all the expences of a dispute. Then it is that Terror and Ruin are held out to deter all independent competitors for the reprefentation of the people.

When men have got good fruit in their gardens, they post up a warning upon their walls and their gates—"Steel Traps and Spring Guns are in these grounds"—This Act is a Spring Gun. This frivolous and vexatious Act, these new-invented crimes, are to operate like the notice of Steel Traps and Spring Guns. This act speaks a very plain language, not to be misunderstood.—"Tread not near our Boroughs: for Woe to the man in future who shall be caught in Our Traps:

thundred pounds, or fix thousand pounds, forty-two thousand pounds, a million of money, without any Jury, or appeal? and for the crime of vexatiously attempting to wrest stolen goods from a thief! If a man cuts his wife's throat, with every aggravating circumstance of deliberate cruelty, and is found guilty by a Jury; he goes to prison for Six rmonths. But if you represent to the House of Commons, and offer proof of a continued series and regular system of sbribery, perjury, riot, and murder, at an election, together with the utter impossibility of any decision of the Return; no fine, no punishment, no ruin, is sufficient for such frivolous and vexatious charges.

Now then, Gentlemen, let us cast our eyes back, and see from what beginnings, to what length this nation has now proceeded. We know, and our ancestors knew, that every nation must have a government, and must have officers appointed to discharge its duties and execute its trusts. What the people cannot do for themselves, they must trust others to perform. And no nation ever did this more liberally or more generously than our own. But there are two things which the people can perform, and which they cannot fafely trust in any other hands : - the choice of their own representatives, to make the laws by which the whole people are to be bound; and the particular application of those general laws and of equal justice to individuals, by a fworn number, an honest impartial Jury, of the people themselves. These two rights and powers the people of this country wifely referved to themselves. They hold them by no law, by no positive statute. No persons did give or could give them. They owe them to no Kings, no Lords, no House of Commons; and neither Kings, nor Lords, nor House of Commons, nor all of them combined and confederated together, can take them away. They may dare to attempt it; but it will be an act of Suicide upon their own Trusts and Stations: and I doubt not that the people of this country would, in fuch a case, pursue the wholesome severity of the old law of the land, and drive the stake themselves through their dead body.

Let us confider then, gentlemen, what is now become of these two necessary referved rights.

Will any man be frontless and hardy enough to deny that the representation of the people is gone; that it has been stolen and usurped from us by those who, little better than beasts themselves, affect to treat other men like cattle.

And having thus established their property in representation, shall these Borough-mongers now be permitted to stretch out their facrilegious hands to ravish from us also our other referved Right of a Trial by Jury? Shall they first take away from us with impunity all the benefit and advantages of representation, and after that take away from us all benefit and advantage of Juries? And shall we without a struggle, proportioned to the importance of the benefits, tamely suffer our safety, security, and peace, to be all torn away from us together? A Jury not intitled to inquire into the merits of the question brought before them, nor into any thing that relates to the merits, is no Jury at all; nor can in any respect answer the object of their appointment: and any Jury that shall give a verdict against any desendant, without having sirst, according to the oaths of the Jurors, Well and truly Tried the question at issue between the parties, is a perjured Jury.

It is not unfit nor improper for you, gentlemen, to confider how the House of Commons first came into possession of any jurisdiction, or of any trial whatever concerning the return upon Elections. The truth is, they had originally no right whatever to it. It was a manifest and gross usurpation upon the rights of the Juries of the people. But the House had indeed, at that time, a plausible pretence for its usurpation ;-the corruption of the Judges and their abject dependence on the crown: for they held their offices at that time during pleafure; and Juries were then, as now, often packed, or cajoled, or bullied, for the purpofes of thefe abject instruments of royal injustice. After the Revolution the commission of the Judges was altered; and it is affected to be faid, that from that time the Judges have been independent. The pretence then for this usurpation of the House of Commons being removed, why were not the Trials of Returns upon Elections restored to their natural and rightful jurisdiction, a jury of the people in the courts below?

I do not however for my own part believe a fyllable of this boasted independence of the Judges. A long experience, and every thing I have seen and heard for many years past have manifested to me the contrary. I do not believe the dependence of the judges on the crown was so great formerly as at present. I believe the judges then were less dependent on the Crown, and more dependent on the people than they are at this hour. The Judges then were frequently displaced, because they did not dare to go the whole length, and do all the wicked business they were ordered to do: they were sometimes too displaced from caprice; and they knew they might be so. They all sat on the Bench, knowing they might be turned down again to plead as common advocates at the Bar; and indeed it was no unusual thing in those days to see a Counsel at the Bar brow-beaten and bullied by a Chief Justice on the Bench, who in a short time after, was to change stations with the Counsel, and to receive himself the same treatment from the other in his turn. And therefore character and reputation were of more consequence to the Judges then, than they are to the Judges now. They are now completely, and for ever independent of the people, and have every thing to hope for, for themselves and families, from the Crown. What they already possess is secure from every possible interference but that of parliament: and the Minister for the time being is salways mafter of the majority of both Houses. Let the Hudges then always take care of every Minister's business in tthe courts of Law, and every Minister will take care to sheltter fuch useful instruments in the Houses of Parliament. Hence it is that the present practice of the Courts is become llittle elfe than a fystem of plunder, oppression, low fraud, and tricking: and will continue fo, until the people have their real representatives in parliament, to watch over and check the conduct of the officers of justice, and the proceedlings of the courts. Almost all the important rights, and all the real benefits of Juries, have been invaded and taken away; by a variety of new doctrines and practices; by fettting aside verdicts, and granting new trials repeatedly, till a werdict fuits the purpose of the Judges; by obtaining verdicts of guilty, without confideration of the only material pointtthe guilt; and then establishing or exaggerating or lestening the guilt or the innocence, by the pleafure of the Judges allone, on posterior affidavits, delivered afterwards in Court: So that in fact, the real trial comes after the Jury are difmissed; and their verdict is of no other use than to introduce and place the charge within the jurifdiction and decision of the Judges. Almost all the scandalous legal practices of which we have cause to complain have had their beginnings, anot only in my lifetime, but most of them fince I am a man, at least fince I first attended this Court. Young men come tto these courts now, and take what they find practifed here for law, without confidering its enormity or its principle, cor how, or when, or by whom, or why it was introduced: But, my Lord, I am afraid I am about as old as your Lord-Thip; and having feen a different practice, and heard and read different doctrines, I cannot witness the present without indignation and abhorrence.

Gentlemen, if you wish to know how we have lost almost all the great benefit of Juries, and by what means the prefent legal doctrines and practices have been introduced; you may look into the list of the Peerage. And there you will find in the last thirty or forty years, in the course of the present unfinished reign, in part of the reign of one King, about half as many peerages given to the Bar! It is a temptation that no other profession offers, and that no profession can withstand. Gentlemen, when a theft has been committed, unattended with the usual circumstances by which such crimes are commonly brought home to the offender; it has frequently happened that an observation of some particular individual's being suddenly slush of money, who was never known to have any before, has led to a certain detection of the thief. If the nation could use the same sagacity concerning their public rights as individuals do concerning their private property; if they would compare the ancient legal doctrines and practices with the present, and the ancient situation of the profession with the present; they would at the same time discover the inestimable value of the blessings they have lost, and by what means and by whose agency the robbery has been effected *.

But I beg pardon, gentlemen, I have wandered fomething from the subject on which I was speaking: I made a few notes to prevent my wandering and to keep myself in some method; but the mention of the Judges and the trumpeted lie of their Independence, have carried me inadvertently too far from my point. I am sure it is not because my mind is not sufficiently impressed with the importance of the matter now to be determined by you: I anxiously wish that your minds may be half as much affected and persuaded as mine is of its importance to the whole country: I protest that if there stood a fire here, and I thought I could by that means affect your minds and the minds of my countrymen the more by it, I would thrust my hand with pleasure into the fire and burn it to ashes whilst I was pleading before you.

But, gentlemen, the fubject from which, after I had begun it, I improperly deviated, and to which I now wish to re-attract your attention, is the conduct of the House of Commons. First, upon a plausible pretence of the dependent state of the Judges on the Crown, they not only without but against law, usurped the trial of Elections. This usurped power, by their own confession, they most scandalously and slagrantly abused; seating men as representatives of the people, not with any regard to right, but partially and unjustly, by openly solicited and canvassed majorities of the House.

When they were compelled to acknowledge this abuse, and the incompetence of the whole House in a body to try ^{*} High-mindedness, spirit, and courage, were anciently the qualities which belonged to, and led to nobility; now servility, meanness, and chicane: and the brilliant apprenticeship to a Peerage is—to carry a bag in Westminster Hall.

Elections; or rather, when they were induced to it by the private interest which the Borough-proprietors had to fecure their respective individual property in representation; What did they then? Restore the jurisdiction to the courts. of law, and to a verdict of a Jury of the country? Why not? The pretence on which they took it away, -the dependence of the Judges on the Crown,-they pretend is now removed: and they acknowledge that the question should be tried by a Jury: then why not by a Jury of the country? No. By an act of parliament, the tenth of the present King, the jurisdiction is transferred to a Jury of the House of Commons, that is, to a Jury of the Boroughproprietors themselves and their nominees. And the natural and intended confequence has followed: These Jurycommittees confider only whether A or B is the proprietor, or has the intrest of the borough; but they never cast a look or a thought on the people's right of representation; they hold all fuch confideration to be frivolous and vexatious.

But even this usurped jurisdiction over the people's dearest and most necessary right of representation does not satisfy them: they must have criminal jurisdiction also, and the power of punishment without any Jury or Appeal; and under pretence of costs, they have passed this penal statute to impower themselves to ruin whom they please without any trial by a Jury of the country: for so they intended this penal statute to operate, and so it has been stated to you this day; the Counsel states himself as not intitled to discuss, because you, the Jury, are not intitled to consider, that is, to TRY any thing that relates to the merits of the case.

This scandalous act of parliament passed in the year 1789. The general Election, for fo it is called .. That is called a general Election, which in fact is generally nothing more than an appointment by the proprietors-This general Election followed the year after, in 1790. The shameful compromise for Westminster between the factions, and this more shameful act of Treason to the country, by which they meant to deter all men, determined me to become a candidate. In fo doing I at that time looked forward to this very day, and to this very action which you are now to decide. This facrifice which I deliberately have made of myfelf, I did then and do now believe necessary to my country. Led by these motives, I became a candidate. I was fure of one vote, and but of one vote-my own. And on that vote I should equally have petitioned the House, well aware beforehand that whatever my petition should contain, it would be voted frivolous and vexatious. And with that one vote I should equally have stood here upon this trial this day. Well then_I was a candidate intirely unaided and unsupported by any set of men or by any individual: and for the first days of the E-lection, I polled about twenty votes a day: but my poll kept regularly increasing, and on one of the days, and only on one day, I polled more than my adversaries. And what was the consequence? Immediately a gang of prepared and hired rushians with their bludgeons issued from an adjoining alehouse, and wantonly and cruelly, without any other pretence of provocation, assaulted the harmless unresisting specators before the hustings. They cruelly wounded many, and one man they murdered, who died a few days after in St. Bartholemew's hospital. My poll was however, in spite of the junction of the sactions, sinally honoured by near seventeen hundred unsolicited and respectable Electors. The return on the Election was, as might reasonably be expected where such means were practised, in favour of my opponents.

Gentlemen, in confequence of this Election, two things now became duties to me. It was my duty to profecute the rioters: and it was my duty to prefent a petition to the House of Commons. Some of the principal rioters were accordingly apprehended. And the man who fits here as affociate of the Judge, or Clerk of Nifi Prius, or whatever may be the name of his office, Mr. Lowten, who conducts the bufiness of this criminal court, and who, notwithstanding his fituation here, is fuffered (to the difgrace of this court and of those who prefide in it and of the country at large) is fuffered to act as an Attorney, and has much business as an Attorney in consequence of the advantages of his fituation here; this man, who had also been an agent for one of the candidates at the Election, this man appeared as Attorney for the rioters; and the rioters were bailed by the two men who keep Brookes's gaming-house for one of the factions in St. James's-street. The Ruffians were however indicted, and, by whose means I know not, the cause was put off for trial to the eighty-ninth on the list; the consequence of this delay was, that for fear of a surprise, which this man appeared to me very capable of producing and feizing, (and this opinion has been well justified fince by my experience) I was compelled to have between twenty and thirty witnesses at a great expence at a public-house ready if called upon for three fuccessive days during the fittings. At length the turn for this trial arrived. The Chief Justice then refused to try it at that time; and it was postponed till the following term; when all my expences were to be again renewed, and all the same trouble and attendance might be again repeated. My Counfel addressed the Chief Justice, who now fits before us, on the occasion: he represented to him my expences and the hardship of my fituation, who was profecuting under every difadvantage, and only for the fake of public justice; that I had no personal motive whatever in the profecution, for that poor men, who committed riots and murder for half a guinea a day, could be no enemies of mine or objects of personal refentment; but that the interests of the public and of public justice demanded example, and by example restraint of these practices. He therefore requested the Judge that a day might be fixed for the trial in the following term. This the Chief Justice resused; and thus fruitlessly ended my expences and efforts for public justice this term.

This cause was afterwards put down in the paper the fecond for trial at the fittings in the following term.

Gentlemen, the Clerk of the court, you fee, is laughing at this.—He may very well laugh. I suppose he is considering how much money he gets by holding these two situations together, of Clerk of the Court and Attorney for the Parties at the same time; and how cleverly he was enabled upon this occasion to take his advantages of this double situation.

This profecution of the rioters was put down in the paper, the fecond cause for trial in the ensuing term. It appeared indeed afterwards that the first cause was to be tried by a Special Jury; but it was not fo marked in the paper, as it ought to have been. My witnesses, between 20 and 30, were again all fummoned, and foon after nine o'clock in the morning were affembled at a public-house in the neighbourhood of Westminster-Hall. But when my Solicitor and my leading Counfel foon after nine o'clock entered the Court, to their aftonishment they found that the Chief Justice and this Clerk of the Court (who was also Attorney for these rioters) had come down early into the Court, and without any inquiry after the Profecutor, the Chief Justice had fuffered this Clerk of the Court and Attorney for the rioters haftily to fwear in a Jury .-- Then indeed the Profecutor was called for -- and the riotors were dismissed for want of a Profecutor. And thus public justice was defeated.

Mr. Garrow. I am extremely forry to stop Mr. Tooke in his Eloquence, were it not that I conceive what he is advancing is extremely improper and indecent. I am not Counsel for many of the respectable persons whom he has named; but that there is no foundation for such affertions may be proved by one of the gentlemen who was Counsel for the gentleman now addressing the Jury. That Counsel is not at present in Court, but he is a man of strict honour, and must say that he was a considerable time in court before that verdict was recorded. He was pressed to address the Jury at any length, in order that the verdict might not be recorded without a Stating. Mr. Nowlan was present, although Mr. Fitzgerald was not. I am very forry to have stopped the gentleman in his address; but it is rather too much for persons to be baited in this manner, and accused of such charges, when one knows of one's own personal knowledge, that they had no more to do in this, whether it was good or bad, than any man in any part of his majesty's dominions.

Lord Kenyon. Certainly not.

Defendant. There can be no doubt at all but that your lordship will at all times find some one, in your own court, willing and ready to get up to recommend himself to your favour by a speech in your defence; and I should have been much surprized if it had not been the case now. I am not forry for it: for Mr. Garrow has given me time to breathe a little.

Lord Kenyon. I want no defence. What has been faid against me, rather deserves my compassion. I do not carry about me any recollection of it, or any of its circumstances.

Mr. Garrow. I certainly did not mean to make a defence for your lordship.

Defendant. I cannot fay that I carry about me any thing in confequence of it: I carry about me fomething lefs, by all the money which it took out of my pocket. But most certainly the fact did fo pass as I have stated it: although your lordship's recollection does not ferve you. Mr. Garrow indeed has rifen up to interrupt me and to deny it. I heard him with much pleasure: for I wanted breath. But I do not think that, upon cool recollection of this proceeding, the Court will be much pleased with its own conduct in fuffering this interruption, and liftening with so much complaifance to this irregular hearfay evidence. I believe there are gentlemen here prefent, who can recollect that when they get up in a court of justice, they do not meet with quite fo much indulgence as he has met with. But he has been permitted at the fame time to go beyond his evidence, to cast a reflection upon my eloquence.

Mr. Garrow. Very far from it. Nothing was farther from my thoughts.

Defendant. I beg your pardon, Sir, it was faid with a fneer; and to infinuate to the Jury, that I was attempting by artful words to mislead them: for that is the meaning and purpose of Eloquence in this court. I have on the contrary spoken in as plain terms as the language will afford. I have not used a single sentence, or a single word, which the Jury do not understand as well as the Judge or yourself. I repeat it then again. I say I had nearly thirty witnesses, attending at my expence, to punish Rioters for whom this Clerk of the Court was Attorney, waiting for three days.

the Sittings after the former Term, from caution to preeent any trick or furprise; which for the reasons I have iven I fuspected, and which has fince happened, and asainst which I from the beginning warned my Counsel and colicitor. I fay that when the Trial of the Rioters should pave proceeded in its turn, the eighty ninth on the lift, the Thief Justice refused to let it be tried, and, to crush me with accumulated expence at least, postponed it to the folowing term. I fay on the first day of the fittings in the folowing Term, my witnesses were again assembled soon after nine at a public house in the neighbourhood of Westminter Hall: that though this cause was marked the second in the lift, and the Chief Justice could not be ignorant of the previous circumstances, he suffered this Clerk of the Court, who was at the same time Attorney for these rioters, in the before of the Counfel and Attorney for the profecution, and without their being called for, instantly and hastily to fwear in a Jury, and by half an hour after nine, I was informed at my own house, that the Rioters were thus difcharged. Is this a proper mode of proceeding in a Court of Justice? And are these the proper means of preventing riot and disorder? This was not a Cause of two pounds, or of twenty pounds, or of the price of an unfound Horse, like tthe general run of causes in this Court; like such as I heard stried that very day after the profecution of the rioters had been thus tricked off and baffled; and like fuch as we have heard this day. It was a cause of great importance to the public peace, and to the exercise of the most important publie rights. Caufes which would make a ferious man ashamed are listened to here by the hour with the utmost gravity and folemnity. It is but the other day that you entertained a long and tedious cause here for a dispute of five shillings, about a Hog; between his owner and a stable keeper in the Haymarket; the learned Counfel, two or three deep on each fide (this fluent gentleman, who is fo ready to interrupt me where he is not concerned, might perhaps be one of the number) laboured the matter for hours with the deepest researches into the laws and the most profound arguments: when any one of the numerous Counfel on either fide, by giving five shillings out of the first fee which he received on the occasion, would still have gained fixteen shillings for faving the honour of the court and avoiding to make himself and the profession ridiculous. I do not know how fuch practices as thefe, which are but too common, may be confidered here; but I believe that all honest men, who are not of the profession, will agree with me, that fuch Counfel on both fides, who receive the fee of a guinea to contest or support such a claim of five shillings, ought to plead for themselves in vain at a Whipping-post. And yet it is for fuch questions and fuch causes as these that the Court has complaifance enough and time sufficient. But for the profecution of Rioters on a charge of the most atrocious fystem of outrage on the Electors in the Exercise of their most important right, the Court has neither time nor complaifance; and a person holding the two dangerously inconfistent offices of Clerk of the criminal Court and Attorney for the Culprits at the same time, is at least suffered to get rid of the profecution in the manner I have flated to you. But it appears to me to be a question of so great importance to the nation at large, that no private confideration, whether I am to rot in a jail, or flarve in a workhouse, or die on a gallows, no consideration shall make me defift whilft I live from endeavouring to obtain fomething that shall look like justice. And so much your lordship shall obtain by the imprudent interference and interruption of Mr. Garrow, that I pledge myfelf now; for I trust the time will foon arrive, when we shall have a very different House of Commons from the present, a House of Commons which will confift of the real representatives of the people; of whom if I shall have the honour to be one, I pledge myfelf now, that I will in my place in fuch a House call you to a proper account for your conduct that day, and Mr. Garrow may referve his justification and defence of your lordship's conduct till that time, when you will want it.

But this fruitlefsly, gentlemen, terminated my attempt to obtain justice for the outraged public by a prosecution in a Court of Law.

I will now proceed to give you a short history of my other attempt to obtain justice by the petition which I prefented to the House of Commons: and I will read it to you from their own Journals. But before I read it, I think it but fair to acknowledge, that if the charges which it contains are not true, the person who should write or should prefent fuch a petition, would deferve to be hanged in any civilized country in the world; but I expect also that it shall be acknowledged to me in return, that if the contents of the petition are true, they who have the means and the power to redrefs fuch grievances, and do not redrefs them, ought to be hanged themselves. This petition was presented to the House of Commons, and fent by them to a Committe, and was strongly debated in the House, both before it was fent to the Committe, and after it was returned from the Committee: and no man was impudent enough even in that House, or in that Committee, to affert, or even to infinuate, that there was a fyllable of falfehood in this petition.

There it stands: I have placed it upon their records, not be got rid of: and there it has stood too, without the mallest attempt for redress of those enormous grievances of mich it truly complains. I will read it to you from their wen Journals.

Jovis, 9º DIE DECEMBRIS, 1790.

A Petition of John Horne Tooke, Esquire, was read; ttting forth, that the Petitioner now is, and at the Time the last Election for Westminster was, an Elector of Westminster, and a Candidate to represent the said City ad Liberty in the prefent Parliament:

"That in the faid City and Liberty there are Seventeen thousand Two Hundred and Ninety-one Householders, radd in the Parish Books, unrepresented in Parliament, and ithout the Means of being represented therein, although, we direct and indirect Taxation, they contribute to the Recenue of the State very considerably more than those who and a Hundred Members to Parliament:

"That at each of the Three last Elections for Westminter, (viz. in 1784, in 1788, and in 1790) notoriously deberate Outrage, and purposely armed Violence, was used, and at each of those Elections Murder was committed:

"That for these past Outrages, as if there were no Atorney General, no Government, and no Legislature in the and, not the least Redress has been obtained, not the least unishment, nor even the least Censure inslicted; nor has my Remedy whatever been appointed, or attempted, to revent a Repetition of fimilar Outrages in future:

"That at the Election for Westminster in 1784, a Scrumy was demanded on Behalf of Sir Cecil Wray, which ras granted on the 17th of May, 1784, and with the Aprobation or Direction of the then House of Commons, was continued till the 3d of March, 1785, when a very small omparative Progress having been made, (viz. through the mall Parish of Saint Anne, and not entirely through Saint Hartin's, leaving totally untouched the Parishes of Saint George, Saint James, Saint Margaret, Saint John, Saint aul, Covent Garden; Saint Mary le Strand, Saint Clement, and Saint Martin le Grand), the faid Scrutiny was, the Direction or Approbation of the House of Comnons, relinquished without Effect, after having lasted Ten Ionths, and with an Expence to Sir Cecil Wray of many housand Pounds more than appears, by some late proeedings in Chancery, to be the allowed Average Price of perpetual Seat in the House of Commons, where Seats for Legislation are as notoriously rented and bought as the

Standings for Cattle at a Fair:

"That on the Election for Westminster, in 1788, there being an absolute and experienced Impossibility of determining the Choice of the Electors by a Scrutiny before the Returning Officer, a Petition against the Return was prefented to the then House of Commons by Lord Hood; and another Petition also against the Return was presented by certain Electors of Westminster; and a Committee was in confequence appointed, which commenced its Proceedings on Friday, April the 3d, 1789, and continued till June the 18th, 1789; when the Committee (as able and respectable as ever were fworn to try and determine the Matter of any Petition) on their Oaths, "Refolved, That from "the Progress which the Committee have hitherto been " enabled to make fince the Commencement of their Pro-" ceeding, as well as from an attentive Confideration of "the different Circumstances relating to the Cause, a final "Decision of the Business before them cannot take Place in "the Course of the present Sessions, and that not improba-" bly the Whole of the prefent Parliament may be confum-" ed in a tedious and expensive Litigation."

"Refolved, That from the necessary Length of the Pro"ceeding, and from the Approach of a General Election, "which must occur not later than Spring, 1791," (nearly Two Years more) "the Prosecution of the Cause on the
"the Part of the Petitioners promises to be fruitless, as far "as it respects the Representation of Westminster in the " present Parliament."

"Refolved, That it be recommended to the Petitioners to withdraw their Petitions under the special Circumstances of the Case:"

"That (notwithstanding this extraordinary, and perhaps unparalelled Application from a Court of Justice to its Suitors) Lord Hood and the other Petitioners having refused to withdraw their respective Petitions, the Proceedings of the Committee continued till the 6th of July, 1789, when a very small comparative Progress having been made, the Petitioners, from a Conviction of the Impossibility of any Decision by the Committee, were compelled to abandon their Petitions without any Effect, or Tendency towards Effect, after a tedious and expensive Litigation of Three Months and Three Days, and with an Expence to the petitioning Candidate of more than Fourteen Thousand Pounds.

"That under these circumstances, as the Petitioner declined demanding a Scrutiny before the Returning Officer, so is he compelled to disclaim all Scrutiny before a Committee of the House of Commons, for although that Act (the 10th of George the Third) by which the faid Committee is appointed, recites in its Preamble, that "where-" as the present Mode of Decision upon Petitions com-" plaining of undue Elections or Returns of Members to " ferve in Parliament, frequently obstructs public bufiness, " occasions much expence, Trouble, and Delay, to the " Parties, &c. for Remedy thereof, &c." yet it would be less expensive and less ruinous to the Petitioner to be impeached (even according to the prefent Mode of conducting Impeachments) and to be convicted too of real Crimes, than to be guilty of attempting to obtain Justice for himfelf and the injured Electors of Westminster, by the only Mode of Decision, which the new remedial Statute (the 10th of George the Third) has appointed for that Purpofe, however well adapted that Mode of Decision may be to settle the disputed Claims of the Proprietors of small Boroughs, for whose usurped and smuggled Interest alone the Framers of that Bill, and of those Bills which have been fince built upon it, feem to have had any real Concern:

"That by the 9th of Anne, Chapter 5, the Right of Electors (before unlimited by Qualification in the Object of their Choice) is restricted in Cities and Boroughs to Citizens and Burgesses, respectively, having an Estate, Freehold or Copyhold, for their own respective Lives, of the annual Value of Three Hundred Pounds above Reprizes:

"That this very moderate Restriction (however vicious in its Principle) leaving all Citizens and Burgesses eligible, possessing Life Estates, Freehold or Copyhold, of the annual Value of Three Hundred Pounds, will henceforth serve only as a Snare to the Candidate, and a Mockery of the Electors, if such Candidate, possessing a life Estate of Three Hundred Pounds a Year, must expend Fifty Thousand Pounds (and there is no probable Appearance that a Hundred Thousand Pounds would be sufficient) in attempting by a tedious, expensive, and inessectual Litigation, to sustain the Choice of his Constituents, and to prove himself duly elected:

"That though the Petitioner complains (as he hereby does) of the undue Election and Return of Lord Hood and the Right Honourable Charles James Fox, to this present Parliament for the City and Liberty of Westminster, yet is the Petitioner, by a Persecution and Proscription of more than Twenty Years, disabled from making that pecuniary Sacrifice, which by the present new Mode of Investigation is (and ought not to be) necessary effectually to prove such undue Return, and yet the Petitioner sully trusts, that, notwithstanding a very great Majority of the House of Commons (for fo it still continues to be stiled) are not, as they ought to be, elected by the Commons of this Realm (in any honest Meaning of the Word "Commons") and must therefore naturally and necessarily have a Bias and Interest against a fair and real Representation of the People, yet the Petitioner fully trufts, that he shall be able to lay before "a Committee chosen and sworn to try and deter-" mine the Matter of this Petition," Evidence of fuch a Nature, as that the Committee will, on their Oaths, "think " proper to report to the House some Resolution or Reso-" lutions other than the determination of the Return, and " that the House will make fuch Orders thereon as to them " fhall feem proper," and the Petitioner doubts not, that, as an Elector at least, he shall in consequence receive such Redrefs as will be much more important to him, and to the Electors of Westminster, than any Determination of the Return."

D

This is the Petition which has been voted frivolous and vexatious. Frivolous, we must suppose, in its matter, and vexatious to the returned candidates in its manner. And yet you may eafily perceive, gentlemen, that forefeeing, as I certainly did, that it would be fo voted, I took most especial care, as much care as possible, that no frivolous matter of any kind should be inserted in it: and undoubtedly there is nothing in it which could be vexatious to any honest candidate; which could require any learned or laborious inveftigation or inquiry; or a fingle circumstance which could cause the opposite party the smallest trouble or expence. But it certainly does contain not frivolous, but most important matter of ferious scandal and offence. It contains complaints of grievances which, by the offenders against whom we complain, (who cannot deny and will not redrefs them), are constantly charged as factious and feditious complaints, and subversive of the government and constitution of the country. When we peaceably and tamely complain that they have despoiled us of our rights; their common Cant and Cry is __ "You wish to subvert the Government."

Why, what then are the parts of the constitutional government of this Land?—The King, the Lords, and the Commons.—And is it not as great a subversion of the constitutional government of the country, is it not a worse and more fatal subversion, if you take away the Commons, as if you were to dethrone the King, or turn the Lords out of their house? Will his Lordship on the Bench, or any one in the Court, venture to tell you otherwise? If from the Firm of a Banking House or any commercial house, confifting of three partners, any one of the partners is removed or withdrawn, it is no longer the same Firm: it is a different House. And so it is with the Government of a country. If the Commons no longer form the fame part of the government of this Land; in that case the Government is subverted of which they did form a part: and it is only the modesty or the timidity of the complainants which prevents them from afferting, what the real fact is; that that constitution and that government, the former boast of this land, and upon which fo many lavish praises and encomiums have been justly bestowed, is now, at this time, absolutely subverted and stolen away.

It is this which has made fome perfons doubt whether we ever had any constitution: and some have even ventured to deny it. But their position is not true. They are mistaken.

We had a good and a glorious constitution. And we still have a constitution-in the Books. But some honest and well-meaning men, who know nothing of the conftitution in the books, and who judge only from the present practices, and from what they fee, deny that we have any constitution; and from what they see too, they may possibly and justifiably not be over fond either of Kings or Lords; and if things continue to go on much longer in the prefent train, the public at length may justifiably, because necessarily, join in their opinion. But, I believe, that if rational and dispassionate and experienced men were at liberty coolly to begin again, they would form exactly fuch a constitution as that which we have a right to. I believe they would by choice, and wifely, again establish hereditary Kings and hereditary Lords: taking better care however that they should not exceed their bounds. But the question concerning Kings and Lords does not in our prefent fituation come fairly before the minds of the People. They cannot at this time impartially consider the question of the propriety of King and Lords, each possessing only their own fair and respective share in a well-balanced government: the people at large can only judge of things by what they fee .- They think of Kings and Lords, who together with their own legitimate share in the government, have seized and are in possession also of all the share and all the rights of the Commons into the bargain .- Such a fituation of Kings and Lords, it is impossible that every honest and rational man in the country should not abhor as much as I do.

I think I fee by the fide of the Judge-I may be miftaken, for my eyes are not very good, and the gentleman fits in the shade; but I think I see a noble Lord-[One of the Counfel behind faid_It is Lord Sidney.]-Well, then, I am right. I fee a noble Lord by the fide of the Judge, who is himself a Proprietor of two boroughs, and sends into the House of Commons any four persons he pleases, and then they are called the Representatives of the People. This gentleman formerly, not many years ago, indeed he was not then a Lord, professed the same principles and opinions which I hold; and co-operated ftrenuously with me and many other gentlemen for a reform in the representation of the People. I hope he is still governed by those same principles: for nothing ever gave me more heartfelt fatisfaction than his virtuous conduct at that time; when he declared himself ready and willing to forego his own private and personal property and interest in those boroughs, in order to do right and justice to his countrymen, and to fecure the peace and happiness and bleffing of his fellowcreatures.

Gentlemen, When my Petition, fuch as you have heard it, was prefented to the House of Commons; although the Act of parliament * expressly commands, that no question shall be put or debate take place on the prefenting any fuch petition; the Speaker of the House of Commons, who but a few weeks before had inclosed me in his arms to prevent the wind of the paffage from giving me cold whilft my carriage was drawing up to his door, this very Speaker took the first opportunity he could find against me, to violate his own duty and to contradict the Act of Parliament; himfelf inviting and encouraging the House to a debate: and a debate took place accordingly on my petition. The House seemed at first to be unanimous that the Petition should be rejected. All the Lawyers in the house were clear that it should be rejected; every one of them. One gentleman (who has lately purchased the property and perpetual right of nominating four members in that house for ever hereafter) proposed that the house should reject my petition, and leave me at liberty to prefent some other; or return of a member or members to ferve in parliament, shall be presented to the House of Commons, a day and hour SHALL by the said house be appointed for taking the same into consideration."

RESOLUTION of the House of Commons, 6 December, 1774.

[&]quot; Refolved,

[&]quot;That according to the true conftruction of the act of the toth year of the reign of his prefent majefly, whenever a petition complaining of an undue election or return of a member to ferve in parliament, shall be offered to be prefented to the house, within the time limited by the order of the house for questioning the returns of members to serve in parliament, the said petition shall be delivered in at the table and read, without a question being put thereupon."

that there were still six days more in which to receive metitions. But there were others in the house who could massly foresee what this gentleman never dreamed of, (and which indeed would have happened;) that if they took his advice and rejected this petition, they might on the same pround be compelled to reject the second, and so the others an succession: as each succeeding petition would probably contain not only all that was offensive in the first; but always something additional, which would be still less palatble than all the foregoing.

Mr. Fox, who generally fees and feizes, more quickly han most other men, whatever will best answer his own mmediate purpose at the moment, saved them from this crape of rejection. Though he was one of the Parties pettioned against, he was suffered by the house, and by the peaker, to take a part in the debate *: and he represented them that it would be better to receive the petition; and the good fense of this proposal the House affented. But cerhaps they did not fee what at the fame time Mr. Fox was cunningly doing for himself: for, he added, that alhough, to be fure, they could not break the Act of Parliment; yet they might break through all their own Orders, tules and Regulations; for that was within their power; and therefore he proposed, that they should take this peticon out of the usual and settled course, and hear it at a very arly day: To this propofal too, made by one of the parees petitioned against, the House eagerly assented: The deeency, propriety, or justice of this sudden partiality, were oot once mentioned: It was within their power! And benuse it was within their power, they readily broke through wery rule and regulation and order of the house, and, upon ae fuggestion of the party petitioned against, appointed the etition to be heard at a very early day +.

" Resolved,

^{} ORDER of the House of Commons, made at the commencement of eve-

[&]quot;If any thing shall come in question touching the return or election of member, he is to withdraw during the time the matter is in debate."

[†] RESOLUTION of the House of Commons, 25 May, 1784.

[&]quot;That whenever feveral petitions, complaining of undue elections or remns of members to ferve in parliament, shall at the same time be offered be presented to the house, Mr. Speaker shall direct such petitions to be of them delivered in at the table, where they shall be classed and read the following order, viz. Such petitions as complain of double returns, the first class; Such as complain of the election or return of members remed to serve for two or more places, in the second class; Such as comain of returns only, in the third class; and the residue of the said petitions, in the fourth class."

By this irregular and partial direction of the house, my adversaries obtained a very important advantage over me; for by that means my Petition must come to be tried by a Committee, before the Rioters could be convicted in a Court of Justice; whereas if with my Petition they had followed the usual and settled method for other Petitions, I should previously have obtained a conviction of the Rioters, and should have had a copy of the record of that conviction to produce to the Committee: But when I fay, I should have convicted the rioters; I must be understood to mean, if the Clerk of this Court had not been at the fame time Attorney for the Rioters: for, in that case, I have found that I can neither have conviction nor trial.

But, Gentlemen, although my petition was at length, thus, perforce, received by the House and ordered to a Committee; the Minister of the Crown dared impudently to interfere with it beforehand, and to direct previously the decifion of this future Committee. He inveighed bitterly against the Petition, and declared, he saw no reason why the Committee should confine themselves only to find it frivolous and vexatious; but afferted that they ought also to find it libellous and fcandalous; in order to ground upon fuch finding, God knows what proceedings of the House of Commons (for no man, who knows any thing of the laws of this country, can discover) to inflict upon me some exemplary punishment for the petition. He saw no reason why they should not find me libellous and scandalous, as well as frivolous and vexatious! Why?-The verieft fool can fee the reafon :- Because they are, by the Act of Parliament, empowered to find the one, and are not empowered to find the other. -See what these Ministers are: and how their lust of domineering, and their infolence in the possession of power, blind their understanding and annihilate their common sense By the Minister's mode of reasoning, the Committee might have found me a Felon or a Murderer. Instead of these two hundred pounds for each of my adverfaries, they migh take from me ten thousand. By this same Act of Parlia ment, coupled with the Minister's interpretation, they migh take away my life: they might hang me to-morrow; an the Speaker of the House of Commons might fign his was rant for it. And indeed they have as good a right to m life, without a trial of the merits by a Jury of the country as they have to these two hundred pounds, without a tri of the merits by a Jury of the country. And if Englishme at last are become so dastardly and degenerate as to be cor tented to hold their life or their property at the mercy these proprietors of boroughs; I care not how foon they tal them both away from me together.

Gentlemen, the Committee of the House of Commons apa pointed to try my petition, was as good a one as could ratrionally be expected from fuch a description of men; -and mot a bit better. They deferve but little mention; but they certainly treated me very unworthily. I tendered them the most unquestionable legal evidence (the verdicts of two Coroner's Juries) of the murders charged in my petition to have been committed at the Elections. The Committee refused to receive this evidence; and easily voted my petition frivolous and vexatious. And for the costs of this proceeding, two hundred pounds are adjudged to be paid by me to each of my adversaries. It must necessarily be supposed hat my expences were equal, indeed much superior to theirs; oecause the chief burthen lay upon me: I had summoned many witnesses, they none. So that, by this reckoning, the expences of the three parties must at least have amountd to fix hundred pounds. Now this Committee fat two ays; three hours each day; in all about fix hours. So that his bleffed new Jurisdiction, when least complicated, goes an at the rate of one hundred pounds an hour. However, he truth is, that my expences were only twenty-eight counds: and yet my adversaries demand from me two hunrred pounds apiece. Undoubtedly they had one expence thich I had not: They had Counfel to pay; and those geneemen are accustomed to take a great deal of money, for being very little or nothing. But if ever there was a case which men ought not to be allowed to charge an adverery with the expence of Counfel, this is that cafe. In all ther cases and disputes, men incompetent and incapable of efence may be involuntarily involved. The great bone of ontention, property, is not always or necessarily accomunied by the understanding necessary for its defence. But se present is the case of Candidates, of men who come forard voluntarily, and beg and intreat other men to trust eem with the conduct of their business in parliament: By doing they profess themselves able and declare themselves Illing to perform their whole duty to their countrymen the face of the whole parliament; and it is therefore an furdity to suppose such men unable to do their own busi-Is before a Committee of the House. Had the the decin of the Committee been in my favour, my adversaries build have been adjudged to pay to me fourteen pounds ch: Judge you then if it is just or fitting that I should pay them four bundred pounds, for the incapacity of the one I the idleness of the other.

Perhaps, gentlemen, you may suppose that the House of Commons had now done their utmost with the Petition.
, not yet. As they had most indecently, and in direct contradiction to the Act of Parliament, had a debate upon it when it was first prefented; they certainly might with less impropriety have another debate upon it after it was reported by the Committee, because this latter would violate no Act of Parliament: and a debate they accordingly had, a very threatening debate, in which the most exemplary punishment was called for to be inflicted upon me by that House of Commons. The precious chairman of the committee made their excuse for not having intirely obeyed the previous mandate of the Minister; but unfortunately the Act of Parliament had not empowered them to find the petition libellous and fcandalous .- There is no Act of Parliament yet which gives that jurisdiction to the House, however willing they are to assume it .- The debate was serious and long, and every word of it bitter against the Petitioner. One gentleman, and one gentleman only, attempted to fay fomething in my favour; but the Speaker-for your everlafting fanwers know, when it is their interest, to be imperious-abruptly forbad him to proceed. However at last the Minister himself came forward, and humbly intreated them to proceed no farther at present: he assured them, that they might rely upon it, that this business should not go over, nor my offence remain unpunished; but that it was a matter of fo much consequence and importance to the privileges of that house-(this man formerly talked of the rights and privileges of the people)-that great and mature deliberation should be used for the punishment to be inflicted up-What right the king's minister has to hang up in this manner the terror of the House of Commons over my head, I do not know; or rather, I know he has none; however there it may hang, till these holders of Boroughs-an event not quite impossible-are hanged themselves. If I had been a mercantile man, this conduct of the minister might have been my ruin; if I had been a younger man, it might have produced my lafting unhappiness: for who would have given credit to, or who would have been connected with, a person in so precarious a situation? Not being so circumstanced, this blow is not so terrible to me, as it might be to others; but in estimating this scandalous conduct, we are not merely to confider how impotent its effects are towards me; but what they may be to other men who, if this is fuffered, may be treated in the same manner hereafter.

Gentlemen of the Jury,

What I have faid to you hitherto, is rather the hiftor previous to the business of this day; an account cumftances which preceded this action and gave rife to it. It is to put you in possession of that history, and to make you acquainted with the nature and circumstances of this action. Under all these circumstances and in this manner I am brought before you. And I shall now apply myself to you only, and to your verdict. But before I make my application to you, which shall be as short as I can possibly make it, I beg leave to read to you an extract from a Judge, who was not made a Peer; that you may know what he has delivered down to us concerning your present office and duty. And I earnestly intreat you, I beg of you all, gentlemen, not to let your minds tire. I defire you to carry along with you all that has hitherto passed; but I especially intreat you to pay particular attention to what I am now going to read to you: for it was written many years ago; when the Judge who wrote it could not possibly foresee this trial, nor imagine that fuch an Act, as this frivolous and venatious act, would ever be endured or attempted in this land. It is in the third book and the twenty-third chapter of Blackstone's Commentaries.

"The Trial by Jury ever has been, and I trust ever will be, looked upon as the glory of the English Law. It is the most transcendent privilege which any subject can enjoy or wish for, that he cannot be affected either in his property, his liberty, or his person, but by the unanimous consent of twelve of his neighbours and equals. A constitution, that I may venture to affirm, has, under providence, secured the just liberties of this nation for a long succession of ages. And therefore a celebrated French writer, who concludes, because Rome, Sparta, and Carthage, have lost their liberties, therefore those of England in time must perish; should have recollected that Rome, Sparta, and Carthage, were strangers to the Trial by Jury.

"Great as this eulogium may feem, it is no more than this admirable constitution, when traced to its principles, will be found in sober reason to deserve. The impartial administration of justice, which secures both our persons and our properties, is the great end of civil society. But if that be entirely entrusted to the magistracy, a select body of men, and those generally selected by the prince or such as enjoy the highest offices in the state, their decisions, in spight of their own natural integrity, will have frequently an involuntary bias towards those of their own rank and dignity: It is not to be expected from human nature, that The FEW should be always attentive to the interests and good of The MANY.

" A competent number of fensible and upright Jurymen. " chosen by Lot, from among those of the middle rank, " will be found the best investigators of truth, and the " furest guardians of public justice.

"This therefore preferves in the hands of the people " that share which they ought to have in the administation " of public justice, and prevents the encroachments of the " more powerful and wealthy citizens. Every new Tri-" bunal erected for the decision of facts, without the inter-" vention of a Jury, (whether composed of justices of the " peace, commissioners of the revenue, judges of a court " of conscience, or any other standing magistrates) is a step " towards establishing aristocracy, the most oppressive of " absolute governments.

" And in every country on the continent, as the trial " by the peers has been gradually difused, so the Nobles " have increased in power, till the state has been torne to " pieces by rival factions, and OLIGARCHY in effect has " been established, though under the shadow of real go-" vernment; unless where the miserable Commons have " taken shelter under absolute monarchy, as the lighter e" vil of the two.

" And, particularly, it is a circumstance well worthy an " Englishman's observation, that in Sweden the trial by " Jury, that bulwark of northren liberty, which continu-" ed in its full vigour fo lately as the middle of last centu-" ry, is now fallen into difuse: and that there, though "the regal power is in no country fo closely limited, yet " the liberties of the commons are extinguished, and the " government is degenerated into a mere aristocracy."

I shall only just observe here. That if the learned Judge had lived a little longer, he would have feen the completion of that circle of which he only faw a part. A faction of the nobles in Sweden robbed the people of their rights. The King robbed the nobles of their usurped power. And now an Assassin has robbed the Tyrant of his life. This is the fame everlafting round: and the figure is always begun to be described, when the people are robbed of their rights.

But I proceed with the words of the Judge.

" It is therefore upon the whole, a Duty which every " man owes to his country, his friends, his posterity, and " bimself, to maintain, to the utmost of his power, this " valuable conftitution in all its rights; and above All,-" to guard with the most jealous circumspection against the " introduction of new and arbitrary methods of Trial, " which, under a variety of plaufible pretences, may in " time imperceptibly undermine this best preservative of

" English Liberty."

Gentlemen of the Jury,

I hope you have well noticed what I have read to you, and that you will keep it for ever in your memory. These are the words of a Judge who could not possibly foresee this trial, nor the occasion which I have now to quote them to you. Remember what he tells you-" It is a duty which you owe to your country, to your friends, to your pof-"terity, and to yourselves, to maintain the rights of Ju-" ries to the utmost of your power, and to guard with the " most jealous circumspection against the introduction of " new and arbitrary methods of TRIAL:"-That is, to guard against the very thing which the learned gentleman, the Counsel for the plaintiff, and the act of parliament on which he relies, endeavour now to introduce-you must guard against the certificate of a Speaker of the House of Commons; which (after you have been fworn well and truly to TRY) the Counfel tells you, forbid him and forbid you to confider in the least " the merits of this case, or any thing that relates to it."

Now then, Gentlemen, I beg you to weigh well in your minds; confider feriously-For what you are called here this day?-Confider, I beg of you ;- What have you now sworn to perform ?- You have folemnly fworn, that "you will Well and Truly TRY the Issue between the parties." You have fworn to TRY it; WELL and TRULY to Try it. Now, pray, What is the Iffue ?- Mr. Fox afferts that I owe him about two hundred pounds: which I deny. Now the question between us is, whether debt or not. That is the Iffue which you have fworn to TRY; and to Try it Well; and Truly to Try it. If then he has proved to your fatiffaction the merits of his case, the existence of the debt; that I am really and truly, to your conviction and perfect fatisfaction, indebted to him two hundred pounds; then you ought and must give a verdict for him: But if he has proved no fuch thing, then you are compelled to give a verdict for me. For, Remember, you have not sworn to give a verdict only; but you have fworn to TRY, that is, to Examine all the circumstances and all the merits of the case; to Try it Well, and Truly to Try it. It must not be a sham Trial: for if it is a sham Trial, then it is but a sham Jury. Your Verdict is, by your oath, to be in confequence of Trial and examination; and you cannot without perjury give a verdict before a trial and examination of the merits, or Without a trial and examination of the merits. Were it otherwise, a Jury would be of no use at all to this country. Now then I defire you will reflect, what proofs of the debt have been brought before you? An examined copy of the Journals of the House of Commons, and the Speaker's certificate have been produced .--- Now what are you to Try and examine?---The Speaker's certificate?---If the Speaker's certificate is sufficient to take away our property; why should not the Speaker's certificate be followed by execution? What occasion is there to call a Jury together to TRY nothing; and yet to make them folemnly fwear to Try, Well and Truly? I ask again, unless it was for the purpose of perjuring a Jury, why might not the Execution have immediately followed the Speaker's certificate, as well as your verdict? Why? There was no reason upon earth but one .--- It was done to colour the transaction. They are not yet quite ripe enough to ftrip from us at once (and let us know it at the time) our right to a Trial by Jury. But they have compleatly done it in effect. They have left us the Jury, but taken away the Trial. They have, by a subterfuge, taken away the Trial, which is the important part; and have left us the Jury, which without Trial is a mere mockery. But the virtual representatives of the people may very confishently think a virtual trial by Jury quite sufficient for us. I wish they would themselves be contented with virtual falaries and penfions, and with virtual taxes too. But if they thought it necessary, merely to colour the business, that it should nominally pass through a fbam Jury; why did they not alter the Juryman's oath, and not compel him to add individual perjury to the bafeness of betraying a public duty? Why compel the Juryman to fwear Well and Truly to Try, as a necessary preliminary to a verdict, what the act directs he shall not Try at all? Perhaps they would have altered your oath, if they had thought of it. Perhaps they would have left out-Well and Truly to Try. For they have Tried it: and then fend these Gentlemen here to tell you-after you have fworn to Try---that you have nothing to Try! It is a mockery equal to the Injury. Why, you cannot, without perjury, give a verdict till you have Tried it. Now, if there can be any verdict under fuch an Act, it is given already; the Trial, if there has been any, is all over before the question comes to you: and the effectual verdict is given before you fpeak. You are only left to fay, that a verdict has been already given by somebody else, but you know not by whom or for what reason. And all that you have to do, if indeed you can do any thing, is, to fay, that you have feen a paper containing the verdict, figned by the Speaker.

Now, Gentlemen, can any man be so blind as not to see that, though this Action comes before you in the shape of an action for debt, the Act of Parliament itself is in fact a cenal statute, and very highly penal; giving to a Commiteee of the House of Commons the power of inflicting very eeavy punishment, absolute ruin if they please, without aby intervention of a Jury; and that too in a case where they are themselves the interested parties. These purloinerrs of boroughs, who after having stolen our representaion are now attempting to rob us of our Trial by Jury, mave not wanted art and cunning fo to juggle and contrive it, as to leave the oppressed and ruined man and the baffled public, without any one fixed and determinate object of complaint. The first actors are an uncertain and moveble Committee, whose general and common interest however never varies though the persons do: and yet even these ix nothing of the quantum of punishment, though they can induce it: for they only vote their victim frivolous or vexatious. It is not the committee therefore who take the money out of your pocket .--- As the Committee know nothing of the quantum of punishment; fo the Clerk of the House and the Master in Chancery (Receivers of fees themlielves and therefore fufficiently indulgent to the fees of others) know nothing, and defire to know nothing of the quantum of your guilt. The Speaker, who figns the certrificate is ignorant of both; he neither meddles with guilt wor punishment: he knows nothing of the magnitude of the crime by which the fine is incurred; nor of the proportion of the fine applied to the offence .- The Jury, (they tell us) is only to determine, that they have feen the Speaker's ccertificate .-- Whilst the Judge washes his hands of the whole: for he only records the Jury's verdict.—Such is the cunning contrivance of gentlemen who hold Boroughs: they do not go in the plain and open way of robbery practtifed out in the world as other thieves do; and fo they expect to escape, and so perhaps they may for some time escape hanging.

Gentlemen of the Jury,

I will weary you and trouble you no longer upon for plain a point. Your duty, as an English Jury, is, I trust, if ufficiently plain and manifest. Your twelve names, gentlemen, must be henceforward recorded for ever in this ecountry, whatever may be your verdict: and if no one was econcerned but myself in its consequences, I think I never should have stood more indisserently and pleasantly than under the expectation of it. You will be pleased, gentlemen, to remember, that when you retire from this court, you will, for the rest of your lives, have to encounter the eyes and looks of your fellow citizens and countrymen:

You will have to liften to the familiar and free conversation of your friends and acquaintance: You will go home and embrace your wives and your children, whose dearest and best inheritance you will this day, as far as depends upon you, have either gloriously preserved, or infamously fquandered away; You will have to endure the fuggeftions of that inward monitor, your conscience; which will inform you truly, whether you have or have not observed and paid a proper regard to that facred and folemn oath which you have this day fworn .-- As men then, as Englishmen, as Christians, or if you have any sense of any other tie or religion, you are compelled to pay a facred regard to that oath which you have fworn; that you will well and truly TRY, and that your verdict shall only be in confequence of having well and truly Tried the merits of the question. Where Crime is the question, the Jury must judge of the guilt charged, and of its extent: and in actions for property, they must judge whether any thing is really due, and to what amount: For if the Jury are not to try and decide upon the whole merits of the question before them, no man in this country can be fafe in life or property for ever hereafter.

Gentlemen, you are all strangers to me. You ought to be, and I believe you to be twelve good and honest men: and if you are so; and act and do your duty accordingly; I will venture to say that you will sleep this night more happily, and with more satisfaction, than ever you slept in your lives.

Lord Kenyon. Gentlemen of the Jury, I shall only trouble you with one or two observations on one part of this long address that has been made to you, which certainly comprehend every thing relating to this bufinefs. Gentlemen, you are bound by your oath to well and truly try this cause as stated on the record: and the question in Issue between the parties, is, Whether by the Law of the Land the Defendant is bound to the Plaintiff in this cause, in the fum of one hundred and ninety-eight pounds two shillings and two-pence. And in order to prove that, by the lawof the land, he is liable; there is an act of Parliament which fays, that if a petition is presented to the House of Commons, (I do not affect to flate the words of the act) which in the opinion of a Committee of the house, is frivolous and vexatious, the act provides that a Master of the Court of Chancery, and the Clerk of the House of Commons, shall tax the bill, that no unreasonable charges may be paid by him whose petition is frivolous and vexatious. And if he refuses to pay those costs so taxed, he may be pon your oaths, that this has been done on this occasion; men you will have well and truly tried this cause, by finding a verdict for the Plaintiff. It is impossible any doubt an arise, as grounded upon the Law, whether the Plainfff has made out that proof which the Law requires.

The Jury, not being agreed, retired from the Court, to confider of their verdict. After they had been out about alf an hour, Lord Kenyon faid,—" Send fome one to incuire of the Jury, whether they are likely foon to agree their verdict: if not, I shall order the Court to be advurned, and order them to bring their verdict to my ouse."—The messenger returned with an answer, that—

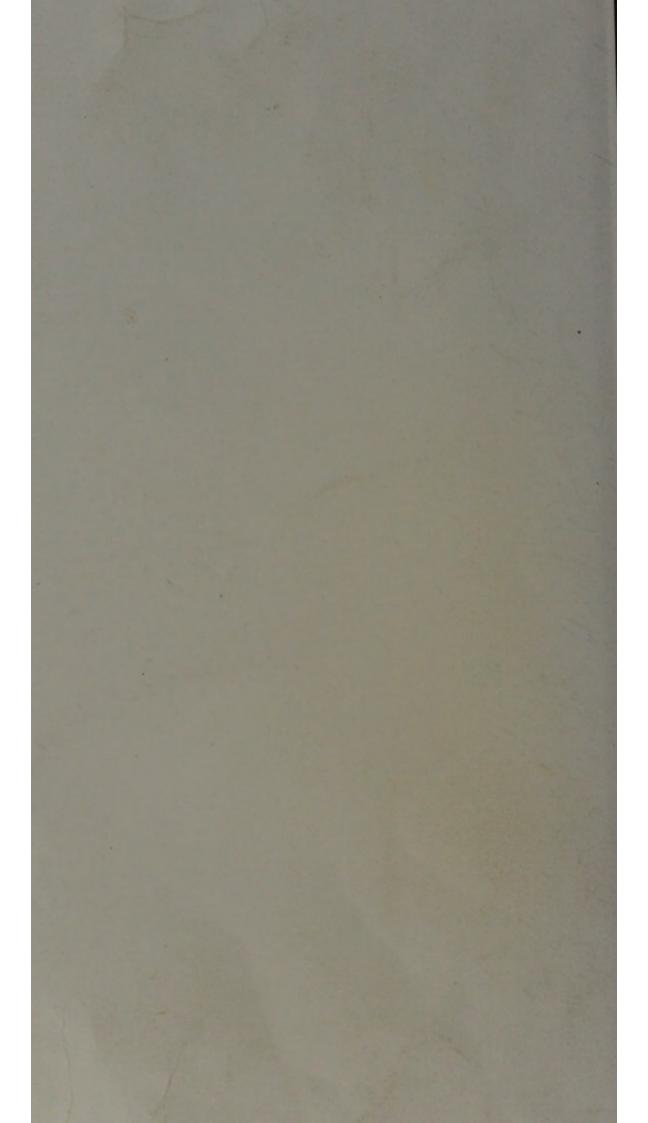

The Jury was not likely foon to agree."—In a few minutes after, Lord Kenyon adjourned the Court; and gave trections that the Verdict should be brought to the Lord hancellor's house in Great Ormond Street.

After an Interval of four hours and twenty minutes, the ury were agreed in their verdict, and delivered it at ten clock at night, to the Chief Justice, at the Lord Chandllor's in Great Ormond Street, for the Plaintiff.

FINIS.

1 00 3 Latite e Constant Jakisse intronsers faired. would get gallers and being great here have a rail thin thick year she levent at al Alighett of a sell Blin amiet fait become the Jane Balle of the Color Steel waste are water all state long that he was pobligion agreed, revised from the Court, se seeds see and had voir tor A 1.5 like the with at the shoot hard the Balt more to be trong or world life on the topics of the the red of 1999 April 2 along the I good to see - Dalle broken on 1214 Louis May 2 9 in the Man with a offer the state of the state of tions has given you business many of the intal off at to heard of throst fictor V and and set establish treet bearing and there the the total representation of the property that he leaders annual to the annual to the state of the state of the state of

24ColorCard Cam