ACCOUNT

OF THE

EDINBURGH LUNATIC ASYLUM.

OF all the calamities to which human nature is subjected, Insanity may justly be considered as the most deplorable. It not only deprives the unhappy individual who is affected with it of all the superiority derived from his rational faculties, but reduces him to a state endangering both his own life and that of others, particularly of his best friends. The removal of insanity, therefore, should certainly call forth the united exertions of all who are not deprived of understanding, and not void of humanity. It has accordingly been a common observation, that among the different enlightened States of Europe, in proportion to the degree of civilization at which they have arrived, means have been furnished for the accommodation and cure of those subjected to mental derangement.

When the Royal Infirmary at Edinburgh was founded about a century ago by that truly patriotic tic citizen Provost George Drummond, the cure of insanity was not overlooked. From the original plan of the Hospital, it appears that a large portion of the under floor was intended to be appropriated to patients who might have the misfortune to be subjected to that calamity. Accordingly, in the cells, which were there provided, patients labouring under mental derangement for a considerable number of years were accommodated, both with a view of recovery and for proper restraint. It was, however, soon found, that the cells in the Infirmary afforded neither proper convenience for the cure nor comfort of the unhappy maniac. The plan, therefore, of uniting a Lunatic Asylum with the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh was gradually deserted ; and it may be considered as having been finally terminated several years ago. At the time when that termination took place, it may be confidently asserted, that no large town in Britain had worse accommodation for the cure or comfort of the insane than the city of Edinburgh, notwithstanding its numerous excellent charitable establishments for other purposes.

The want of a proper building for the cure of insanity has now for several years been particularly felt by almost all the medical practitioners of Edinburgh ; and they may reasonably be supposed to be the best judges of the accommodation necessary for giving a chance of recovery. To remedy this defect, and to remove from Edinburgh an opprobrium to which it was justly subjected, in the year 1792, Dr Duncan senior, then President of the Royal College of Physicians, laid before that respectable Society, a plan for establishing a Lunatic Asylum in the neighbourhood of the metropolis of Scotland. That plan, after due consideration, met with unanimous approbation from the Royal Colleges both of Physicians and Surgeons in Edinburgh. A subscription was set on foot to carry it into execution, and sanguine hopes were entertained, that, from the necessity and importance of the undertaking, the object in view might speedily be accomplished, and a convenient building erected at Edinburgh, for the cure of the most calamitous of all diseases. But this subscription made at that time very little progress. Although almost every member of the College of Physicians, and a great majority of the College of Surgeons, contributed something, yet from different circumstances, the subscription was almost entirely confined to them, in so much, that at the beginning of the year 1806, fourteen years after the subscription had been begun, the sum paid into the hands of the Treasurer, as will be seen from the annexed list of subscriptions, little exceeded L. 100. This want of success, however, did not lead those who were most impressed with the importance of such an institution, to relinquish the undertaking. They still held the object steadily in view, trusting that more favourable circumstances

cumstances might occur. And in the year 1806, when the Government came to the resolution of employing the money obtained from the debts of the forfeited estates in Scotland to useful purposes in that part of the united kingdom, they used their endeavours to obtain some aid from that fund. By the exertions of the Honourable Henry Erskine, who was at that time Lord Advocate of Scotland, aided by the liberal and cordial support of Sir John Sinclair, the Chairman and other Members of a Committee of the House of Commons, who, though deeply interested for different public works, harbours, light-houses, &c. readily agreed to give the first place to the cure of Insanity, L. 2000 of the money from the forfeited estates was voted by Parliament for the erection of a Lunatic Asylum at Edinburgh.

This gave in some respects a new beginning to the undertaking; and to remove some objections which had formerly been started to the intended government of this institution, application was made for a Royal Charter, subjecting it to the controul of a respectable set of official trustees, who, there was good reason to believe. would act as faithful guardians both of the public money, and of the money subscribed by individuals.

This charter, erecting the whole Contributors into a corporate body, and subjecting the Managers to the superintendence of official guardians, holding the most important offices of state about Edinburgh, burgh, was accordingly granted in the year 1807. A new address was presented to the public, pointing out the very great inconvenience daily resulting from the want of a proper place in the neighbourhood of Edinburgh for the cure of insanity, and stating the numerous advantages which would result from building near that city, an Asylum, in which the means of recovery, both physical and moral, for the various species of mental derangement, might be put in practice with every advantage. This address was accompanied with plans of the projected building, which, when finished, was intended to afford an opportunity for a division of patients, not only according to the accommodation for which they could pay, and according to their sex, as being rich or poor, male or female, but also according to the conditions of their disease, as being furious, melancholic, curable or incurable. By direction of the Managers, this address, accompanied with five engravings, was extensively circulated both at home and abroad.

The plans were gratuitously furnished by an ingenious architect, Mr Robert Reid of Edinburgh, who, before he committed them to paper, had an opportunity of visiting the most celebrated Lunatic Asylums in England, and, with assiduous attention, has endeavoured both to avoid imperfections, and to introduce important improvements into plans for the Edinburgh Asylum. Mr Reid's plans were subjected to the examination of some of the first judges of this species of architecture in Britain; and while upon the whole they met with great approbation, they also received some useful corrections, particularly from the remarks of Sir George Paul, a man whose extraordinary and unwearied exertions for the establishment of proper Lunatic Asylums in England, do the highest honour both to his head and to his heart.

Mr Reid's plans, it was imagined, might not only be useful to the Edinburgh Lunatic Asylum, but to similar establishments which may be afterwards built. It was therefore resolved, that engraved copies of them should be annexed to the address. And for these engravings, the Edinburgh Asylum is indebted to two ingenious artists and benevolent citizens of Edinburgh, Mr Kirkwood and his Son, who have demanded no compensation for their own labour as engravers.

An account of the intended establishment, accompanied with five engravings, was not only extensively circulated both at home and abroad, but was put into the shops of the booksellers, annexed to a work, intituled, Observations on the Structure of Hospitals for the Treatment of Lunatics, and on the General Principles on which the Cure of Insanity may be most successfully conducted. In consequence of this publication, it was concluded, that all who could be benefited by the plans might have a ready opportunity of being possessed of them; and that before the Edinburgh Asylum was built, built, still farther improvements of the plan might be received from intelligent judges. The engravings have, at least in some degree, produced this effect. For several useful hints have been communicated to the Building Committee, tending both to increase the convenience, and to diminish the expence of the building from Architects and Physicians residing at a great distance from Edinburgh, who have carefully examined the engraved plans.

It was confidently hoped, that the extensive circulation of this work, would fully awaken the attention of the Public, particularly in the City and neighbourhood of Edinburgh, to this highly important Institution. It is, however, a melancholy truth, that the sanguine expectations of those who have interested themselves most in behalf of this Charity, have been by no means answered. And, in place of several thousand subscribers, who, it was expected, would have contributed at least One Guinea or upwards, to an undertaking so highly necessary, and promising such important advantages to the Public, the whole number of Contributors in the City and County of Edinburgh, at the beginning of the year 1812, as appears from the annexed List, very little exceeded Two hundred. This undertaking may indeed be said to have met with greater encouragement abroad than at home. In the East Indies, by the exertions of a deserving and benevolent man, the late Dr James Anderson, long at the head of the Medical Board on the Madras Establishment, upwards of a Thousand pounds collected from different subscribers, was remitted from that settlement. By the exertions also of Dr Adam Burt, on the Bengal Establishment, of Dr Thomas Christie, on the Island of Ceylon, and of the late Honourable Jonathan Duncan, formerly Governor of Bombay *, a considerable number of subscriptions were remitted from each of these settlements, and some few subscriptions have been received from British Colonies both in the West Indies and in America.

on

In Scotland, the City of Perth has set a meritorious example to other towns, who must necessarily be benefited by this Institution : And besides a subscription from their Public Funds, the names of many respectable inhabitants of Perth, appear among the list of Contributors.

The Clergy of Edinburgh, also, both of the Established Church and of other religious persuasions, have not only strongly recommended this Charity from their Pulpits, but made collections for it at their church doors ; and several Presbyteries in the eastern district of Scotland have recommended collections at all the church doors within their bounds. Thus, from various sources, the money paid into the hands of Mr Alexander Bonar, banker, Royal Exchange,

* The subscription at Bombay was chiefly promoted by Messrs Forbes and Company, Bankers there, in consequence of a letter from Governor Duncan, earnestly requesting them to interest themselves in behalf of the Edinburgh Lunatic Asylum.

Exchange, who has gratuitously acted as Treasurer to the Edinburgh Asylum, ever since the commencement of the plan, amounted, at the 1st of November 1812, to L. 7446 : 8 : 1.

With this money, however, the Managers have not remained inactive. As the different parts of Mr Reid's plan readily admit of being built in succession, they have resolved to complete the building, and the furnishing, of at least some part of it, so that it may without delay be employed for the reception of Lunatics. They therefore purchased, some time ago, several acres of ground, in a commodious situation near Edinburgh. On this ground, which is vested, in perpetuity, in the Managers of the Edinburgh Lunatic Asylum as a Corporate Body, part of the building, according to the improved plan, is so far advanced, that there can be little doubt of its being fit for the reception of patients, by the beginning of June 1813. And there is good ground for hoping, that the advantages resulting from it, will give more convincing demonstration of its utility, and more effectually arouse the attention of the Public, than any address either from the Press or the Pulpit.

It must, however, be observed, that from the want of necessary funds, this commencement will take place under very disadvantageous circumstances.

That the cure of Insanity, with different classes of patients, may be conducted in the most advantageous manner, a much larger portion of the

the intended building should be finished than can be attempted with the sum collected. According to the plan which has been adopted, it is proposed, that patients shall be received at three different rates, the accommodation given them being proportioned to what their relations or parishes are able or willing to pay. It is proposed that pauper or criminal lunatics, supported by parishes, or from other charitable funds, shall be received at the rate of Seven Shillings per week ; that a second class, furnished with better accommodation, and a more expensive diet, tea, coffee, &c. shall pay One Guinea per week ; and that a third class, each having a servant to attend him, and provided with apartments much better suited to his condition, than can be had in almost any private house, shall pay at the rate of Three Guineas per week.

But the whole of the building which can be finished, and properly furnished, with the money already obtained, is intended for patients paying at the middle rate, viz. One Guinea per week. Although this, perhaps, is not so urgent a charity, as accommodation for the cure of real paupers, it will be productive of very great advantages to those in the middle ranks of life, and to some even of the most indigent Lunatics, whose connections would rather contribute a Guinea per week to give them a chance of recovery, than allow them to be supported on parochial charity, and there is good reason to hope, that it will afford demonstrative evidence of the singular benefit which may be derived from what

what may justly be called the moral part of the cure of Insanity; that is, the cure depending on regimen, in the most extensive sense of the term.

That the government of the insane requires a certain degree of restraint, both for the safety of the individual and of others, no one can doubt. But very different opinions have been entertained with regard to the utmost degree of coercion, which is necessary in any case. Now, however this point may be considered as in some degree settled by experience. The fraternity denominated Quakers have demonstrated, beyond contradiction, the very great advantage resulting from a mode of treatment in cases of Insanity, much more mild than was before introduced into almost any Lunatic Asylum, either at home or abroad. That fraternity, who have been long and justly celebrated for charity and humanity, have established in the neighbourhood of the city of York, The Retreat, as they term it, a building appropriated to deranged members of their own community. In the management of this institution, they have set an example which claims the imitation, and deserves the thanks, of every sect and every nation. For, without much hazard of contradiction from those acquainted with the subject, it may be asserted, that the Retreat at York is at this moment the best regulated establishment in Europe, either for the recovery of the insane, or for their comfort, where they are in an incurable state.

Some

Some of those who have bestowed most thought on the intended establishment at Edinburgh, are decidedly of opinion, that the plan of management followed in the Retreat at York should, as far as circumstances will permit, be adopted in the Asylum at Edinburgh, and particularly that chains, stripes, and every other rough mode of treatment should be completely banished. In that part of the building which will be ready for the reception of insane patients by the beginning of June, an opportunity will soon probably be afforded of giving a trial at Edinburgh, to mild treatment, conjoined with proper confinement; and there is every reason to hope, that it will be attended there with the same salutary and happy effects as at York.

It is therefore much to be regretted, that this mode of cure cannot be immediately extended to indigent maniacs, who must be supported by their parishes, as well as to those who are in easier circumstances, or whose relations are willing to provide for their support. But this evil, by the united efforts of the humane and benevolent, may soon be remedied. According to Mr Reid's calculations, one of the large divisions of his plan, intended for patients at the lowest board, might be completed for about Two Thousand Pounds. When it is considered how many persons living in ease and plenty in the city and neighbourhood of Edinburgh, have yet contributed nothing to this humane humane institution, it might be thought, that this sum would soon be obtained. If the subscription among respectable inhabitants were as general as it is necessary, there can be no doubt that a very few guineas from each would put it in the power of the Managers soon to finish at least some portion of the building intended for paupers. And when this circumstance is generally known, it is to be hoped, that many humane inhabitants of Edinburgh will require no farther inducement to add their names, to the list of those who have already contributed to this benevolent undertaking. If the attention of the Public could be properly roused, to the importance and necessity of a Lunatic Asylum at Edinburgh, in place of Two Hundred Contributors, Two Thousand might reasonably be expected from so extensive and opulent a city as the metropolis of Scotland,

But even although proper accommodation for paupers should not be immediately obtained, and although all the efforts of those who have interested themselves in this undertaking, should not at present be able to procure the aid necessary for continuing the building, yet they will by no means despair of the full accomplishment of the plan at a future period. There are different sources from which aid may hereafter be obtained. Many other institutions have derived not only support, but even opulence, from legacies bequeathed to them on the death of benevolent individuals. St Luke's Hospital in

London,

London, an establishment exclusively appropriated to the cure of Insanity, is a remarkable example of this; and the Lunatic Asylum of Edinburgh, as will be seen from the annexed account of money paid into the hands of the Treasurer, has already received, in this way, more than one legacy. It is not impossible, that even a single individual, who has the entire command of a large fortune, acquired perhaps by honest industry, may, imitating the example of a HERIOT, a WATSON, or a GILLESPIE, immortalize his name, by leaving to this charity a sum fully sufficient to complete the whole building; and there is not, perhaps, any charitable institution to which money at Edinburgh could at present be appropriated with more advantage to the Public.

Besides legacies, there is also another source from which it is not improbable that aid may be obtained, both for the Lunatic Asylum at Edinburgh, and also for similar asylums in other parts of Scotland. In the kingdom of Scotland, no proper provision is yet made for the confinement of criminal lunatics, who, had it not been for their insanity, would have been condemned to a capital punishment. It must, however, be in the recollection of every one, that from insanity several deplorable crimes, even shocking murders, have been committed in this country. These individuals, when brought to trial, have necessarily been found not to be proper objects for the ordinary punishment.

punishment. Some of them have, even during their insanity, been fully aware of this; and it can be well authenticated, that in more than one instance, persons in this unhappy situation have boasted that they were mad, and could therefore do what they pleased without being punished.

It is indeed, true, that the insane, who have committed capital crimes, when brought to trial in Scotland, are in general in some degree sentenced to confinement for life. For preventing future mischief, they are either thrown into a common jail, where some of them are kept in situations shocking to humanity, or they are delivered to their relations, upon security being found for their future restraint.

Both these plans are equally improper. The first has often led to a degree of cruelty, disgraceful to a civilized nation; while the last has sometimes placed the delinquent in such a situation, as to be even an encouragement to others labouring under insanity, to the commission of future crimes. Hence, in every well-regulated state, proper places should be provided, both for the reception of criminal Lunatics, and for regulating the restraint to which they should be subjected, with regard to diet, air, drink, exercise, and other circumstances: And there is good reason for believing, that, with some of these Lunatics, the dread of solitary confinement for life, would be no inconsiderable bar to the commission of crimes.

The proper restraint of criminal Lunatics, is a subject which has of late undergone serious discussion in the British Parliament. By the meritorious torious exertions of Sir George Paul, two acts have lately been passed, the one dated 23d June 1808, entitled, An act for the better care and maintenance of Lunatics, being paupers or criminals, in England. The other, dated 5th June 1811, entitled, An act, to amend an act of the Forty-eighth year of his present Majesty, for the better care and maintenance of Lunatics, being paupers or criminals, in England. These acts, from some radical differences in the two kingdoms with respect to poors-rates, could not, it seems, be extended to Scotland in their present state. But proper provision for criminal and pauper Lunatics, is certainly no less necessary in Scotland than in England; and there is reason to hope, that some patriot representative from this part of the united kingdoms, may bring this important subject before the British Senate. If that be done, Scotland may soon be provided with proper accommodation for criminal Lunatics in every quarter of the kingdom.

Apartments for criminal Lunatics, might, with many advantages, be easily conjoined with the Lunatic Asylums which have of late been set on foot at Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen, and Dumfries. According to the plan suggested by Sir George Paul, it was proposed, that in England, sixteen Asylums should be provided for the reception of criminal and pauper Lunatics. And with that view, the annexed division of England into sixteen districts, was subjoined to a Report from a Select Committee of the House of Commons, who were appointed to consider the subject.

N. B.—The population in the above Plan, is taken from the "Gazetteer of Scotland," published in 1803.

But whatever arrangement may be thought most advisable, there can be no doubt, that proper receptacles for criminal Lunatics in Scotland are very much wanted. These naturally fall to be provided by towns and counties, as much as town and county jails for other criminals. And by conjoining them with the four Lunatic Asylums, at Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen and Dumfries, in the establishment of which some progress has already been made, there would be a very considerable saving to the public. But besides this, from such a conjunction, many other important advantages, particularly the proper care of criminal Lunatics, when sick, would be obtained. If, therefore, some patriotic Representative from Scotland, were to bring this subject under the consideration of the British Senate, it is hardly possible to conceive any solid objection that could be urged against it; or at least, against the general plan of making proper provision for criminal Lunatics in Scotland as well as in England. Thus, it is not impossible, that by act of Parliament, money may not only be obtained for completing the Edinburgh Asylum, but also for completing and improving the Asylums already established at Glasgow, Aberdeen, and Dumfries.

But the expectation of obtaining funds for finishing the Edinburgh Lunatic Asylum, from money obtained either by Parliamentary assessment, or by legacies from the charitable and humane, mane, is both distant and uncertain: And it is the duty of every sincere Christian, to lend aid in relieving the calamities, not only of posterity, but of the age in which he lives. If subscriptions for the Edinburgh Lunatic Asylum were general, even in the City and neighbourhood of Edinburgh, the important object in view would soon be completely accomplished, and, if every respectable inhabitant of the metropolis of Scotland, and of the neighbouring counties, were to give a small sum, such as he could easily afford, without any inconvenience to himself, that city would soon be furnished with a building, in which the cure of pauper Lunatics might be conducted with every possible advantage.

Contributions for building the Edinburgh Lunatic Asylum, continue to be received, and receipts granted, by Alexander Bonar, Esq; treasurer to the Institution, at the banking-house of Messrs Ramsays, Bonars and Company, Royal Exchange, Edinburgh. A list is subjoined, of all the contributions which have hitherto been paid into his hands for this charitable institution. It is intended, that an additional list of subscribers shall be published about the end of the year 1813; and the Managers are not without hopes, that it will be both numerous and respectable.

Subscriptions are received, and receipts granted by ALEXANDER BONAR, Esq; Treasurer to the Asylum, at the Banking House of Messrs RAMSAYS, BONARS and Co. Royal Exchange, Edinburgh.

It is computed, that about Five Thousand Pounds will still be necessary for finishing, in a secure and substantial manner, and for supplying with proper furniture, those parts of the Asylum which are already begun. But after that is done, the Managers confidently hope, that the Edinburgh Asylum, like the excellent Institutions for the cure of Insanity, at York, Manchester, Liverpool, and other places in England, will be able to support itself.
