THE COMPLIMENTS, AND DUTIES, OF THE SEASON. At the risk of being classed with those who, with "a twice-told tale vex the dull ear of a drowsy man," we conform to universal practice, and wish our readers "all the compliments of the season." Indeed, it is not merely a "twice-told tale" of the season." in our case ; for this is the tenth occasion of the kind on which we have been privileged to offer our congratulations to the public through these columns. We trust, however, that it is neither to dull ears nor drowsy men that we now address ourselves once again at Christmas-tide, we now address ourserves once again at christmas-tide, but to lively spirits and to ears open alike to the accents of pleasure and the calls of duty. Wishing, then, "a merry Christmas" to all our readers, we would respectfully remind them that while this is poculiarly the season of festivity and enjoyment, it is also the time when season of festivity and enjoyment, it is also the time when we should give a backward glance at the past and a forward one to the future, and ascertain whether we have neglected any duty since the 25th of December last, and take care that, if so, we amend ere another celebration of the great Christian anniversary comes round. This is particularly the time when we should have "a tear for pity,
