

Louis Crane : was born in Hayneville, in Normandy, in the year 1762; and was only two feet four inches high ...

Publication/Creation

[between 1850 and 1899?]

Persistent URL

<https://wellcomecollection.org/works/sqxhhqqc>

License and attribution

This work has been identified as being free of known restrictions under copyright law, including all related and neighbouring rights and is being made available under the Creative Commons, Public Domain Mark.

You can copy, modify, distribute and perform the work, even for commercial purposes, without asking permission.

Wellcome Collection
183 Euston Road
London NW1 2BE UK
T +44 (0)20 7611 8722
E library@wellcomecollection.org
<https://wellcomecollection.org>

LOUIS CRANE,

Was born at Hayneville, in Normandy, in the year 1762; and was only two feet four inches high: his voice was a little more masculine than a child of the same size, but he scarcely spoke more than single words, and those chiefly such as—yes or no—good bye—I will—I wont. He imitated the voice of cats, dogs and sheep; pointed with his hand to what he knew, and would laugh and cry; though he was commonly very melancholy. He seemed to be occupied with nothing, and had every appearance of a child of three years old: his health was bad, he drew his breath hard, and had no perceptible pulse. His mother said he was extremely weak when he came into the world, and seemed to have no bones, but was not crooked. He was extremely deformed however all his life. He died March 31, 1783. On being measured, when dead, he was an inch and two lines longer than when alive.