SELECTED BIRDS OF BRITAIN

MERLIN

Falco Columbarius

Normally resides in the northern moorlands of England, Scotland and Wales; but sometimes found in neighbouring coastal areas, especially during winter when visitors on migration follow more southerly sea coasts. Swift in flight; hunting over the moors it will follow every manoeuvre of the small birds, rabbits and insects on which it preys. Calls with a quick, sharp "Ki-ki" note. The female's call is more low-pitched. Normally nests on the ground in a scrape or a sand dune, where it builds a fair-sized nest of grass. In forests, it may take over nests of other birds, such as crows. Lays five to six eggs, whitish-cream stippled with purple, chocolate and rust. The print illustrates the male. The female is brown with pale streaks underneath, and black bars in the tail and is larger than the male—12 in (31 cm) in length.
