TURNER (1775-1851)
"The Parting of Hero and Leander."

After seeing this painting, Ruskin commented that any surveyor could have drawn the steps and balustrade, but only Turner could have thrown the accidental shadows on them. Turner worked on this history painting for several years. As long ago as 1816, the critic Hazlett wrote that the public had come to see through Turner's "quackeries" such as "painting trees blue and yellow to produce the effect of green." By 1837, the year he finished the painting, his interest in colour and light was all-absorbing, yet still remote from Impressionism.
