Love yourself respect your trade

1998

One of the best things about being gay is being able to have one night stands, shag around and really enjoy sex without feeling bad about it. So why do we so often spoil it?

You know what we mean. Taking his phone number, realising it was a mistake and throwing it in the bin; treating him like a cunt without thinking that he might actually like you.

Then there's the "I'm only as good as the people I shag" routine - but it isn't about boosting your ego by scoring points for shagging someone you think is better than you. A lot of us take pains to make ourselves physically attractive - whether it's clothes, gym or a haircut. But what's more attractive than a confident guy who knows what he wants and can get it without putting others down?

Love yourself.

And what about sex? If you're having unsafe sex with pickups, how much respect are you showing each other?

Isn't it worth sitting down and thinking about how you can respect your trade?
