AIDS EDUCATION &
RESEARCH TRUST

AVERT*ing* AIDS and HIV

Registered Charity No. 296357

AVERTing AIDS and HIV

AVERT, the AIDS Education and Research Trust, is a national AIDS charity that aims to prevent people from becoming infected with HIV, to improve the quality of life for those already infected and to work with others to develop a cure.

Through education and the funding of medical research, AVERT has for ten years been actively "AVERTing AIDS".

Medical Research

AVERT is one of the main UK AIDS charities funding medical research to understand more about the disease with the long term goal of finding a cure.

Our current projects include a study based at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London into how the virus attacks and destroys the immune system. Understanding these mechanisms is vital if improved drugs and medicines are to be developed which will slow down and ideally reverse the process.

Another AVERT funded project is The National Study of HIV in Pregnancy and Childhood based at the Institute of Child Health in London.

“We estimate that by the year 2000, 30–40 million men, women and children will be infected with HIV.”

World Health Organisation

“The threat of AIDS is still very real and we must continue to fight this terrible disease.”

Annabel Kanabus, Founder of AVERT

Progress Depends on Your Support

AVERT relies entirely on voluntary donations to fund vital research and education and to continue AVERTing AIDS. If now and in the future we are going to make a crucial difference in the fight against AIDS, we need more people to become involved and show their support.

Young People

"Is HIV infection something I need to worry about?
Surely it won't happen to me"

All young people, whoever they are and wherever they live, need to take the threat of HIV seriously. AVERT helps to prevent thousands of young people from becoming infected with HIV by providing booklets to help them to have a better understanding of AIDS and other related subject areas.

Education

AVERT has been extremely successful in helping people to have a better knowledge of HIV infection and AIDS through the production of information booklets. Over three million have been distributed worldwide.

AVERT also provides a free national HIV and AIDS information service. As part of this service, AVERT has developed an innovative and already highly successful approach to health education via the Internet.
