The first Letter.

THe curiosity which Dr. Burnets Letters had excited of knowing more concerning the Quietists, was the motives to this Author's further Enquiry about them, p. 1, 2. with what difficulty things before the Inquifition come to be known, and with how much fear and reserve the Italians talk of them, especially to Hereticks.p. 2, 3. The amasing Wealth of the Churches, Palaces, and Convents in Rome and thro all Italy; and yet the astonishing Poverty of the Inhabitants, p. 4. A comparison between the Italians upon the one hand, and the English and Dutch on the other hand, p. 4, 5. That the poverty of the people in Italy, ariseth from the Government's being in the hands of Priests, and from the ascendancy which the principles of their Religion give them over mens consciences. p. 6, 7. How little many of the Italians believe the chief Doctrines of their Church; and what temptation their Religion lay's them under to Atheism. ibid. That the Mysteries of the Conclave; the qualifications of the Cardinal's; the characters of the late Popes, particularly of the prefent; and the manner how the Purple, and the Triple

Triple Crown are obtained, are evidences that the Romish Church is not what she pretends to be, p. 8,9. That tho they who are under the yoak, may be willing to continue in Slavery; yet tis matter of amasement; that such who are delivered from Papal Bondage, should submit again unto it. p. 9. 10. Whence it was, that so many of all ranks came to be so favourable to Molinos; and upon what grounds, his opinions came to be so universally received. p. 11, 12. A Character of Molinos himself; with an account of the chief Authors of the Mystical Divinity; together with a representation of it, and why the followers of Molinos are stiled Quietists; and what different Ends men might have, infalling in with this new Method. p. 12, to 19. When Molinos's Book called il Guida Spirituale was first published; and with whose approbations; and how much it was esteemed. p. 19, 20. The great reputation he grew into, especially with which of the Cardinals. p. 20, 21. The friendship betwixt Card. d'Estrée and him; and the value that the present Pope had for him, and the encouragement he gaveto his design. p. 21,22. Of a French Book written on the Subject of Mystical Divinity, and by whose means, and of its being Translated into Italian. p. 22, 23. Of the several Writings of Petrucci in relation to a contemplative State, with their character. ibid. The Jetuites and Dominicans allarmed at the progress of Quietism, and why. ibid. Books writ by the Society against Moli 10s and his Method; and the way that the Jeluite Segueri took to decry it. p. 24. That the matter being the Pope and Cardinal Cibo are much troubled to see this matter gone so far; and that Cardinal Petrucci is still in the Popes favour. ibid. The great number of the Regulars in Rome and in Naples, who being generally against the Quietists, they are made a Sacrifice to their resentment, p.49. Nineteen Propositions pretended to be extracted out of the Writings and Doctrines of the Quietists, with a Censure of them published by Order of the Inquisition. p. 50. The Circular Letter, both in Italian and in English, p. 51, 52, 53, 54. The Censure of the Opinions of the Quietists in Italian and in English, with some Remarks upon it, shewing that many things charged upon them are misrepresented; that other things are weakly and ridiculously resuted; that several absurdities are therein obtruded upon the world for Truths; and that the Adoration of Images, which the Papists in England and France do disclaim, is in the Censure justified and recommended. p. 55. to p. 88. Of the Condemnation of Molinos; of the rage expressed by many of the People against him; and of the hatred declared upon this occasion against the present Pontificate, with a character of it, and an account of the Gentlness of the Inquisition to many of Molinos's followers, and what Reflections wife men make thereupon, p. 89, 90, 91. The whole Ceremony at the Minerva, the day that Molinos was brought forth to abjure, with a Relation of some things he said, and of his deportment, p.92,93,94. The mildness of the Punishment inflicted upon him, ibid. Of the boldness of one of his followers before the Inquisitions tion, and how slightly he came off, p. 94. Of the vast correspondence which Molinos had in all places; and that most of the condemned Articles, are but an invidious Aggravating of the Doctrine of Predestination, and of Efficacious Grace, ibid. Esp. 95.

The Second LETTER.

THE Author's Capacity for giving the following Relation, thro having resided so long in Rome and in Italy, p. 96. Some Reflections upon the study of Manuscripts, Medals, Inscriptions, and of Religion and Politicks, p. 97, 98. A commendation of Dr. Burnets Letters, and that most which the Author had observed, is already related there; and that what is here published, referreth either to places which the Dr. did not see, or comatters which his short stay in Italy, did not allow him to enquire after, ibid. Of a Crucifix shut up in the Inquisition, the occasion of it, with several Reflections on the Bigotry, Superstition, and Idolatry of the Papilts, especially of the Italians, -P. 99, 100, 101. Of the Plague in S. Gregory the Great's time, ibid. Of a Stone in the Chappelof Ara Cœli, pretended to have the impresfion of an Angel's Foot upon it, and therefore worshipped by the people; but is now made Prifoner in the Inquisition, to keep the Crucifix company, p. 102, 103. Of the scandalous and lascivous Pi-Etures, that are in many Churches of Italy, and that their most celebrated Madonna's have been the Mistresses of the great Painters; with a Relation of an Intrigue between a Frier and a Nun, p. 106, 107. Of their sottish and Idolatrous Representations of the Trinity, ibid. Of the Picture of the B. Virgin, with the Order of the Capuchins under her Petticoat, ibid. How Learning came to flourish so much in the last Age, and to decay so greatly in this; and of the great Masters of painting that Italy produced in the former Century, p. 108, 109, 110. Of the Picture of the Virgin in the Annunciata in Florence, which they pretend to have been finished by an Angel, p. 110. The Fable of Loretto, and what exceptions the Author made toit in a Conversation; and how the Italians justify the Devotion of the people, upon a supposition that the whole story is a Fistion, p. 111; 112. Of a Conference between an Abbot and an English Clergy-man, of the difference between the two Churches, p. 112, 113. That the Conversion of Nations, is no further accounted of at Rome, than as it brings profit to the Datary; and the reason why so little respect was had to the English Ambassador, and to every thing be proposed, p. 113. What retarded the Promotion of the Card.

Card. d'Esté so long; with a Relation how the late Card. d'Esté, Protestor of the French Nation at Rome, hestor'd Pope Alexander VII. p. 114. Of the scandalous imposture of the Blood of St. January at Naples, p. 115. To what exceffive height the Priests carry the Ecclesiastical Immunities, and in what danger the General of the Horse at Naples was of being Excommunicated, p. 116, 117. A remarkable story how far the Immunities of the Clergy have been pusht in the Dukedom of Florence, for the saving of a Priest; with a character of the present Duke, p. 117, 118. The present Vice-Roy of Naples commended, for supporting the Secular Tribunal against the Invasions of the Ecclesiastical Court; with a Relation of the ingenuous and publick Affront he put upon an Auditor of the Nuncio's, and how illit was resented at Rome, p. 118, 119, 120. Of the difference betwixt the Pope and the French King about the Regale; with a further character of the Pope, p. 120, 121. What improvement the Jansenists made of the difference, p. 121, 122. Concerning the business of the Franchifes, and that the Pope seems resolved to maintain his late Bull, and how it may prove fatal to himself, and the Papal Sea, to contend that matter with the French King, p. 123. Of the way that this Pope treats Ambassadors; and of an Answer be gave to the English Ambassador upon his threatning to leave Rome, that shew'd the little Respect he had either for him or his Master, p. 124. How the present Pope conducts conducts his Revenue; that being the only thing he understands. Of his Retrenching both all Expences and the publick Charities; and that be must have a vast Treasure, p. 124. The inducement to the making fo many Cardinals in the last Promotion. And the Aversion which Card. Taia, and Card. Ricci expressed to the Purple in the Promotion that was made five year ago, p. 125. How Cardinal Farnese, that was afterwards Paul III. and who raised the Family of Parma, came to be created Cardinal by Alexander VI. with an account in what manner the Promotion of Cardinals is carried; and how the Wench wastoo crafty both for that tewd Pope, and for his Son Cæsar Borgia, p. 126, 127, 128. Of the Aversion which this Pope has to the Jesuites; and that the English Ambassador's Resigning himself to their conduct, was thereason of the coldusage he met with at Rome, p. 129. What character all wise and indifferent Italians fasten upon those of that Society; and their concluding from the credit which they have in England, that the Roman Catholick Religion must needs miscarry there, . ibid. & p. 130. The Romantick Letters which the Jesuites write to Rome out of England, and what just discredit this puts upon all that they write out of the Indies and other remote Countreys, ibid. Of the Letter lately printed that was wrote by a Jesuite of Liege to those at Friburg, concerning the present state of Popery in England; that it is a true and Authentick Letter,

Letter, p. 130, 131. Of two things peculiar to this Order which render it formidable; how independent the General of the Jesuites is above the Generals of other Orders, and how absolute his Government, p. 132, 133. By what means the Mission comes to be generally in their bands, and of their getting thereby into Families, p. 133, 134. The different humour and conduct of the Secular Priests, from those of the Regulars : and what prejudice 'tis the suffering Regulars to live in Protestant States; how'tis matter of wonder at Rome, that Protestans should permit Regulars to be in their Countreys; and what a wife Roman said to the Author about it, p. 134, 135. How the people of Lombardy are possessed with a Superstition of mixing Water with their Wine, and how the Priests who nourish the Vulgar in that conceit, excuse their own Wine from being mix'd, p. 136, 137. That the Tax which is laid upon Wine in Florence, makes the people therepreserve it pure, ibid. Of an Abbey of Benedictines at Etal in Bavaria, where the Monks live in as great abundance as the Duke himself, p. 138. Abeautiful prospect the Author had at Burgo in the Hills of Trent, p. 138. The way of Celebrating St. Anthony's day at Rome, and how the people bring all their Horses, Mulets, and Asses to be sprinkled with Holy Water by the Monks of that Order. How profitable this piece of Superstitious, Folly is to the Priests, p. 139, 140. That Molinos's abjuring was only a pretended thing; that his party continues still to be very numerous; and that all the Reports about the lewdness of his Life, are esteemed to be no other than Fables, p. 141, 142.

The Third LETTER.

Of alit tle Town in the Appenins, called Norcia, which the in the Popes Territories, may be accounted a Common-wealth, and which is fo jealous of all Priests obtaining any share in their Government, that they will admit none into Magistracy, who can either read or write p. 189,190. Of the Mortification which one of the Magistrates, put upon an Auditor who was a Church-man, by gelding bim, for attempting to debauch his wife; with a pleasant account, how one that bath been so treated, may continue capable to fay Mals, ibid. & p. 191.

The Stationer to the Reader.

I can give no other account of these Letters, but that they were communicated to me, by a person of known Integrity; who assured me, that he who made these Observations, is a man of great vertue; and considerably learned: who has been long and much in Italy: who is both capable of looking narrowly into matters, and is of such severe morals, that one may safely depend on all he says. This was enough for me; so without making any surther enquiry, or knowing any thing of the Author, I have set about the printing of them.

Our desire of being informed particularly by me, of the state of Religion and Learning in Italy, and chiefly here at Rome, has quickned my curiosity, and has fet an edge upon a humour that is of it self Inquisitive enough: and tho I am not so much in love with writing, as to delight in transmitting you long Letters, yet I find I have matter at present for a very long one; chiefly in that which relates to the Quietists: for you observe right, that the short hints that Dr. Burnet gave of their matters in his Letters, did rather increase the curiosity of the English, than satisfy it. He told as much as was generally known in Rome at that time, concerning them; but as a longer stay might have discovered more particulars to him, fo there have fallen out fince that time fuch new and furprising accidents, that there is not more hearkning after new Evidence in England, upon the breaking out of Plots, than there was at Rome upon the Imprifonment of fo great a number of persons in February and Marchlast; the number alone of 200 persons, was enough to raise a great curiofity; but this was much encreased by the quality of the persons that were clapt up, who were both for Rank, for Learning, and for Piety, the most esteemed of any in Rome. So I was pusht on by my own Inclinations, as well as by your Entreaties, to take all the pains that was possible for me, to be well Informed of this matter. The particular Application with which I had read fome of the Books of Devotion writ in this method, and the pleasure, and, I hope, profit, that I had found in it, made me still the more earnest to know this matter to the bottom. It is true, it was hard to find it out: for those who have been in Rome, know with how much caution all people there talk of matters that are before the Inquisition: those are like the Secrets of state elsewhere : of which a man cannot talk much without incurring some Inconvenience; and there is no Inconvenience that is more terrible at Rome, than the falling into the hands of the Inquisitors: for besides the Danger that a man runs, if the fuspitions are well founded, the least ill effect that this must have, is the cutting offalla mans hopes of Preferment; for what a Suspition of High Treason is elsewhere, the Suspition of Heresy is at Rome; and where there are many Pretenders, and there is so much to be expected, you may imagine that Hope and Fear working at the fame time so powerfully, it must be very hard to ingage fuch persons as probably know the fecret of things, to trust themselves upon so tender a point, to strangers. The truth is, Learning is so low in Italy, and the Opinion that they have of the Learning of Strangers, chiefly of Hereticks, is fo high, that they do not willingly enter either on Subjects of Learning or of Religion with them; and on the other hand a Stranger and a Heretick, who is confidered as a Spye, or a fair Enemy at best, will not find it convenient to thrust on fuch subjects of conversation, as are tender and fuspitious. All this is to prepare you for a relation which you will perhaps think defective, yet is as full a I could possibly gather, out of all the Hints and Informations that some moneths stay at Rome procured mc.

The

The first thing that surprises a stranger in Rome, is the very unequal mixture of Wealth and Poverty, that he fees here, as well as in all the parts of Italy; yet it is more conspicuous here, than eliewhere: for as the Wealth of the Churches, Palaces and Convents is aftonishing, fo the Poverty of the Inhabitants, and the meanness of the ordinary Buildings, is extremely unfuteable to the magnificence of the other. When a man fees what Italy was an Age or two ago, not to go back fo far as to remember what Rome was once; he can hardly imagin how fuch a fall, fuch a dispeopling, and such a poverty could befall a Nation and Climate, that Nature has made to be one of the richest of the world, or of Europe at least; if the PRIESTS had not at the same time a secret to make the Natives miserable, in spite of all that Abundance with which Nature has furnished them. It were notable to withfland even an ordinary Enemy, and it can scarce support it self. Those Italians that have feen the Wealth and Abundance that is in England and Holland, tho their Sun is less favorable, and their Chmate is more unhappy, and that come home fo fee their Towns deferted; and their Inhabitants in Raggs, speak of this sometimes with an Indignation that is too sensible to be at all times kept within bounds. They speak of the difference between Holland and Italy

Italy, likemen affected when they compared the two foils and Climates together. The one is a foil divided between fand and turff, preferved from the Innudations of Landfloods, and the overflowing of the fea, at a vast Charge, suffering often such losses as would ruin other states, and paying great and constant Impositions: and yet with all thele Inconveniences, and all the disadvantages of a feeble fun, a stagnating and phlegmatick Air, violent Colds, and moderate, or at least very shorts Heats, this Countrey is full of Wealth and People; and there is in it fuch an abundance of great Towns and considerable villages, and in all these there appear fo many marks of plenty, and none at all of Want: and the other has a kind fun, long and happy Summers, and mild Winters: a fruitful and rich foil, and every thing that the Inhabitants can wish for on Natures part, torender them the Envy of the World: whereas they are become the Scorn and contempt of all that fee them. And as much as the Dutch seem to have acted in spite of Nature on the one hand, in rendring themselves much more confiderable than the has Intended they should be; so the Government of Haly feems to have reverfed the defign of Nature as much on the other hand, by reducing the Inhabitants to such a degree of Misery, in spite of all her Bounty: upon this subject the the Italians will talk more freely than upon matters of Religion: and do not stick to fay, that it flows from the share that PRIESTS have in the Government, and that not only in the Popes Territory, but in all the other Courts of Italy, where they have the main stroke. They will tell you, that Priests have not Souls big enough, nor tender enough, for Government: they have both a narrowness of spirit, and a sourness of mind, that does not agree with the Principles of human Society: Their having fo short and fo uncertain a time of governing, makes them think only on the prefent, fo that they do not carry their prospect to the Happinels of, or misery that must be the consequences of what they do, at any confiderable distance of time: nor have they those Compassions for the Miserable with which wife Governours ought to temper all their Counfells; for a stern sourness of temper, and an unrelenting hardness of heart, seems to belong to all that fort of men in Italy. Whatfoever advances their present Interests, and inriches their families, is preferred to all wife, great or generous councells. Now tho the Natives dare not carry this matter further, yet a franger, that thinks more freely, and that has examined matters of Religion, in a more Inquisitive manner, sees plainly that all these errors in Government, are the effects effects of their Religion, and of that authority which they believe is lodged in the Pope, chiefly and of which every Prieft has fo considerable a share, that he is easily able to make himself master of every mans Conscience that lets him into it, and that believes those three great branches of their power: that they can pardon their sins, make their God, and secure them both from Hell and Purgatory. These are things of such a mighty operation, that if it is not easy to imagine how they should be so easily believed, yet suppofing once the belief of them, all other things flow very naturally from thence: men are not convinced of these errors till it is too late to come and undeceive others. It is true, many of the Italians believe these things as little as we do; yet this is in them rather an effect of a loofe and libertine temper, than of study and enquiry, in a Countrey where not only Heretical books would endanger a man, but the bare reading even of a Latin New Testament would give some suspition. But the thinking men among them are led to doubt of all things, rather from a principle of Atheism, than of searching into matters of Controversy: the one is much less dangerous there, than the other would be. And indeed as soon as a man becomes a little familiar with any of the men of freer thoughts here, he will foon fee that the belief of their Religion has very little power over many of those who are the most zealous to support it, only because their Interest determins them. When a man has lived some time at Rome, and has known alittle of the Mysteries of the Conclave, with the Character both of the present and the late Popes, particularly the weakness and Ignorance of him that now reigns, who does not so much as understand Latin; when a man sees how matters are carried in that Court, what are the Maximes they goby, and the Methods that they take; when he fees what a fort of men the Cardinals are, men indeed of great Civility, and of much Craft; but as to the matters of Religion, men of an equal fife both of Ignorance and Indifference: when a man fees, how all preferments are obtained, but chiefly how the purple is given, and how men rife up to the Triple Crown: when, I say, a man has seen and observed all this a little, he cannot wonder enough at the Character that fo great a part of the World lets on that Court. The plain and fimple Arguments of Common sense work so ftrong, that Transubstantiation it self is not harder to be believed, than that this man is Christs Vicar, a man of Infallibility, and the fource or channel at least of divine truth. So that a man that has given himself the opportunities of observing these matters Critically, will feel a persuasion of the falsehood of those pretensions formed so deep in him, that all the SophiII-

ftry of Argument will never be able to overthrow it: for the plain sense of what he has feen will apparently discover the delusion of those Reasons, which perhaps he is not learned enough to answer: for let men say what they will, it is no easy matter to believe in a Contradiction to the clear Evidence of sence: and I cannot make my felf to much as doubt, but that as Cato was wont to wonder how it came that every one of the Heathen Priests did not laugh when he faw another of the Trade, fo the Cardinals when they look on one another, and a Pope even as Ignorant a one as the present Pope is, when he receives the submillions that are offered him by all who are of that Communion, must laugh within himself when he fees how lucky that Imposture is, which has fubdued the World into to much respect for him, and to so great a dependance on him. A man who lees all these things upon the place, and is of an Age capable of making folid Reflections, and has a due portion of Learning, must return amased, not so much at those who being already under the Toke, have neither knowledge nor courage enough to shake it off, nor at those who go into it because they find their account in it, and so hope to have a good share of the spoil, as at those who have Thaken off the Yoke, and have got into more Liberty and more Knowledg, and feel the happy Influence of their deliverance even in their Civil Civil Liberties and other Temporal Concerns, if they should ever come so much as to deliberate whether they ought to return and serve their old and severe Masters, or not. For my part, I speak freely to you, that I could sooner bring my mind to believe that there is no such thing as Instituted Religion; and that it is enough for men to be just and honest, civiland obliging, and to have a general reverence for the Deity, than ever to think that such Stuff as the men of the Mission would impose on the World can be true. Chiefly in that part of it which relates to the Popes Authority, after all that I have seen and known.

You will perhaps think, that this is a long digression, or at least a very improper introduction to that which I told you I would offer to you, fince the relation that all this has with the matter of the Quietists, does not appear to be so very proper. Yet you will perhaps change your mind, when I tell you, that the Miseries of Italy, that the Aversion that all men of fense there have to the Artifices of their Religion, and chiefly to the conduct of the Regulars, and above all, of the fesuites, is believed the true reason that led such numbers of men of all forts to be fo favourable to Molinos: to which this was rather to be ascribed, than to any Extraordinary Elevation of Piety or Devotion, of which fo little appears in that Country, that nothing which touches only upon that Principle can have great effects among them. Men that are fick, turn to all forts of remedies: and those who are discontented, do naturally go into every new thing that either promifes relief, or that wounds those that displease them. The present state of things in Italy being such as I have described it, you need not wonder to find fo many ready to hearken after any thing that feemed both new and safe. For as the Novelty gave that curiofity which might draw in many, fo the fafety that feemed to be in a Method of Devotion in which so many of the Canonised Saints had gone before them, and which appeared at first authorised by the Approbation of so many Inquisitours, made them apprehend that there could be no danger in it. In the recital that I am to give you, Idonot pretend to tell you all the whole affair: nor will I affure you of the truth of all that you will find here. For in matters of this nature, in which Interest and Passion are apt to work fo ftrongly, there are alwayes fo many false Reports spread, and matters are so often aggravated on the one hand, and diminifhed or denied on the other, that I will not fay but there may be some things here that upon astricter inquiry will perhaps appear not to be well founded; yet of this I will affure

you very positively, that I have Invented and added nothing my felf. I leave those arts to the Italians, and the Court of Rome: therefore I will tell you things nakedly and fimply, as I found them, without adding so much as one Circumstance out of my own Invention. I also made as much use of my Judgment as was possible for me to do, both in confidering the Circumstances of those with whom I talked on those heads, and the things themselves that they said to me; so I let pais all that feemed to be the effect of Paifion or Prejudice, and only marked down that which seemed to be true, as well as that which I had from men whom I had reason to believe. My Informers were men of Probity and of Sense; they were not indeed eafily brought totalk of this Subjett, and they spoke of it with great Reserves: so that there may be many defects, and possibly some mistakes in the account that I am to offer you; yet you must be contented with it; for it is all that I could gather; and it is not corrupted with any mixture of my own.

Michael de Molinos is a Spaniard, of a good and Opulent Family. He entred into Priests Orders, but had never any Ecclesiastical Benefice: so that he seemed to have dedicated himself to the service of the Church, without designing any Advantage by it to him-himself. He passes in Italy for a man both of Learning and of good Sense. His course of life has been exact, but he has never practifed those Austerities that are so much magnified in the Church of Rome, and among the Religious Orders: and as he did not affect to practise them, so he did not recommend them to others; nor was he fond of those poor Superstitions that are so much magnified by the trafficking men of that Church But he gave in to the Method of the Mystical. Divines, of which, since your studies have not perhaps lien much that way, Ishall give you this short account.

That sublime, but mysterious way of Devotion, was not fet out by any of the first Writers of the Church; which is indeed a great Prejudice against it: for how many foever they may be, who have followed it in the latter Ages, yet Cassians Collations, which is a work of the midle of the fifth Century, is the antientest Book that is writ in that strain: for the pretended Denis the Areopagite is now by the confent of all learned men thought no Elder than the end of the fifth or the beginning of the fixth Century. Yet after these Books appeared, very few followed the elevated strains that were in them: the latter was indeed too dark to be either well understood or much followed. So that this way of Devotion, if it was practifed in Religious Houses, yet was not much set out to the World before S. Bernards time, whose melting strains, thoalittle too much laboured and affected, yet have fomething in them that both touches and pleases: after him many began to write in that fublime strain; such as Thauler, Rusbrachius, Harphius, Suso, but above all Thomas a Kempis. And when for some considerable time that way of writing was discontinued, it was again raised up in the last Age, with much luster by S. Terefa; and after her by Baltasar Alvares a fesuit: and as England produced a Carthusian in King Henry the fixths time, one Walter Hilton, who writ the Scale of Perfe-Etion, a Book Inferior to none of theie I have cited, and more simple and natural than most of them; so of late F. Cressy has published out of F. Bakers Papers, who was a Benedi-Hine, a whole body of that method of Divinity and Devotion. The right notion of this way of Devotion is somewhat hard to be well understood, by those who have not studied their Metaphificks, and is entangled with too many of the terms of the School; yet I shall give it to you as free of these as is possible.

With relation to Devotion they consider a man in three different degrees of Progress and Improvement: the first is the Animal, or the Imaginative state: in which the Impressions of Religion work strongly upon a mans Fancy, and his sensitive Powers: this state is but low and mean, and sureable to the Age of a Child; and all the Devotion that works this way, that raifes a heat in the Brain, tenderness in the Thoughts, that draws Sighs and Tears, and that awakens many melting Imaginations, is of a low form, variable, and of no great force. The second flate is the Rational, in which those Refle-Etions that are made on Truths, which convince ones reason, carry one to all suteable Acts: this they say is dry, and without motion: it is a Force which the Reason puts upon the Will, and tho upon a great Variety of Motives, and many Meditations upon them, the mind goes thro a great many Performances of Devotion, yet this is still a Force put upon the will. So they reckon that the third and highest state is the Contemplative, in which the Will is so united to God, and overcome by that Union, that in one fingle Act of Contemplation, it adores God, it loves him, and refigns it felf up to him: and without wearying it felf with a dry multiplicity of Acts, it feels in one Act of Faith more force than a whole day of Meditation can produce. In this they fay that a true Contemplative Man, feels a fecret Ioy in God, and an acquiefcing in his Will; in which the true elevation of Devotion lies; and which is far far above either the heats of Fancy, which accompany the first state, or the Subtilty of Meditation, that belongs to the second state: and they fay, that the perfection of a Contemplative state above the others, appears in this, that wheras all men are not capable of forming lively Imaginations, or of a fruitful Invention, yet every man is capable of the simplicity of contemplation: which is nothing but the filent and humble adoration of God, that arises out of apure and quiet mind. But because all this may appear a little Intricate, I shall illustratte it by a similitude, which will make the difference of those three states more sensible;1. Aman that fees the exteriour of another, with whom he has no acquaintance, and is much taken with his face, shape, quality, and meen, and this has a blind prevention in his favour, and a fort of a feeble kindness for him, may be compared to him whose Devotion consists in lively Imaginations, and tender Impressions on his lower and fensible Powers: 2. A man that upon an acquaintance with another, fees a great many reasons to value and esteem, both his parts and his Vertues, yet in all this he feels no inward Charm that overcomes him, and knits his foul to the other; fo that how high soever the esteem may be, yet it is cold and dry, and does not affect his heart much, may be compared to one whose Devotion consists in many Acts, and much Mes

Meditation. But 3 dly, when a man enters into an entire friendship with another, then one fingle Thought of his Friend, affects him more tenderly, than all that variety of reflections, which may arise in his mind, where this Union is not felt. And thus they explain the sublime state of Contemplation. And they reckon that all the common methods of Devotion, ought to be considered, only as steps toraise men up to this state: when men rest and continue in them, they are but dead and lifeless Forms: and if they rise above them, they become Cloggs and Hindrances, which amuse them with many dry Performances, in which those who are of a higher Dispenfation will feel no pleasure nor advantage. Therefore the use of the Rosary, the daily repeating the Breviary, together with the common Devotions to the Saints, are generally laid aside by those who rise up to the Contemplative State; and the chief buliness to which they apply themselves, is to keep their Minds in an inward Calm and Quiet, that so they may in silence form simple Alts of Faith, and feel those inward Motions and Directions which they believe follow all those who rife up to this Elevation. But because aman may be much deceived in those Inspirations, therefore they recommend to all who enter into thismethod, above allother things, the choice of a Spiritual Guide; who

owho has a right sense and a true tast of those matters, and is by Consequence a Competent

Judge in them.

This is all that I will lay before you in general, for giving you some tast of Molinos's Methods; and by this you will both fee why his Followers are called Q U I E-TISTS and why his Book is Entitled il Gui. da Spirituale. But if you Intend to Inform your felf more particularly of this matter, you must seek for it, either in the Authors that I have already mentioned, or in those of which I am to give you some account in the sequel of this Letter. Molinos having it feems drunk in the principles of the Contemplative Devotion in Spain, where the great Veneration that is payed to S. Terefa gives it much reputation, he brought over with him to Italy a great Zeal for propagatingit. He came and fetled at Rome, where he writ his Book, and entredinto a great commerce with the men of the best Apprehensions, and the most Elevated thoughts that he found there. All that seemed to concur with him in his design for setting on foot this sublimer way, were not perhaps animated with the fame principles. Some defigned fincerly to elevate the World above those poor and trifling Superstitions, that are so much in vogue, among all the Bigots of the Church of Rome, but more particularly in Spain and Italy, and which lo-

which are fo much fet on by almost all the Regulars, who feem to place Religion chiefly in the exact performing of them. It was thought that others entred into the delign upon more Indirect motives. Some perhaps from the aversion that they bore the Regulars, were disposed to entertain every thing that might lead mens Devotions into other Channells, and to a conduct different from that prescribed by Friers and fessites. Some perhaps had understandings good enough to see the necessity of correcting many things in their Worthip, which yet they durft not attack as fimply unlawful: fo that it might appear more fafe to expose these things to the Contempt of the World, by pretending to raise men far above them: and thus they might have hoped to have Introduced a Reformation of many Abuses without seeming to do it. In fine, some who seemed to enter into this matter, were men that aspired to fame, and hoped by this means to raise a Name to themfelves; and to have a Party that should depend upon them: for in fuch great numbers as feemed to imbark in this delign, it is not to be imagined that all were acted by the same motives, and that every man had as good Intentions as it is probable Molinos himfelf had.

In the year 1675. his Book was first published with sive Approbations before it. One of these was by the Archbishop of Rheggio; another was by the General of the Franciscans, who was likewise one of the Qualificators of the Inquisition: another was by Fa. Martin de Esparsa Jesuit, that had been Divinity Professor both at Salamanca and at Rome; and was at that time a Qualificator of the Inquisition. Asforthe rest, I refer you to the Book it self. The Book was no sooner printed, than it was much read and highly esteemed both in Italy and Spain. It was confidered as a Book writ with much Clearness and great simplicity; and this foraised the Reputation of the Author, that his Acquaintance came to be generally much defired: those who were in the greatest credit in Rome, seemed to value themselves upon his friendship. Letters were writ to him from all places: fo that a correspondence was fetled between him and those who approved of his method in many different places of Europe. Some secular Priests both at Rome and Naples declared themselves openly for it: and consulted him as a sort of an Oracle upon many occasions. But those who joyned themselves to him with the greatest Heartiness and Sincerity, were some of the Fathers of the Oratory, in particular three of the most Eminent of then, who were all advanced at the last promotion of Cardinals, Coloredi, Ciceri, but above all Petrucci, who was accounted his Timothy. observed to court his Acquaintance: and they thought it no small Honour to be reckoned in the number of Molinos's Friends. Such were Cassanata Azolini and Carpegna; but above all Card. d'Estrees. The last you must needs know, is a man of great Learning:he was Ambitious to be thought a Reformer of some of those Abuses, which are among them, that are too gross to pass upon a man of his freedom of spirit; who had been bred up in the Sorbon, and had converfed much with Mr. de Launay. He therefore feemed the most zealous of all others to advance Molinos's Defign: so that he entered into a very close commerce with him. They were oft and long together: and notwithstanding all the distrust that a Spaniard has naturally of a Frenchman, and that all men have of one another, who have lived long at Rome, yet Molinos, who was fincere and plain-hearted, opened himfelf without referve to the Cardinal: and by his means a Correspondence was setled between Molinos and fome in France: for tho the spirits of those of that Nation go generally too quick for a way of Devotion, that was fetled and filent, ver fome were strongly Inclined to favour it even there. Perhaps it might be confidered as a method more like to gain upon Protestants, and to facilitate the Defign of the Re-union, that was so long talked of there. All these things concurred to raise Molinos's Charactera racter, and to render his person so considerable. When the Pope that now reigns, was advanced to the Throne, which was, you know, in the year 1676, that he took most particular notice of him: and made it Visibly apparent, that even in all that Exaltation, he thought it might contribute to raise his Character, if he were considered as a friend of Molinos's and an Encourager of his Defign: For he lodged him in an Appartment of the Palace; and put many fingular Marks of his Efteem on him. This made him become still the more Conspicuous, when he had the advantage of Favour joyned to his other Qualities: tho he neither seemed to be fond of it, nor lifted up with it. His Conversation was much defired; and many Priests came not only to form themselves according to his Method, but to dispose all their Penetents to follow it: and it grew to be so much in vogue in Rome, that all the Nuns, except those who had fesuites to their Confessors, began to lay aside their Rosaries, and other Devotions, and to give themselves much to the practice of Mental prayer. This way had more Credit given to it by the translation of a French Book, that was writ upon the same subject, which Cardinal d'Estrees ordered to be made. It was writ in the form of a Dialogue, and was printed in France in the year 1669. by the Approbation of some of the Doctors of the Sorbon. I am able to give you no other acthe if and ged count of the Author, but that in the Italian Translation he is called Francis Mallevalla, a blind Clergy-man. The Book being chiefly formed upon the model of S. Terese, the Translation of it was dedicated to the Discalciate Carmelites of her Order. This did not contribute a little for raifing the credit of Molinos's Method, fince it appeared to be approved both in Italy, France and Spain. At the same time Fa. Petrucci writ agreat many Letters and Treatifes relating to a Contemplative State: yet he mixed in many of them, fo many Rules relating to the Devotions of the Quire, that there was less occasion given for centure in his Writings: They are a little too tedious; but they were writ chiefly for Nuns and others, that perhaps could not have apprehended his meaning aright, if he had expressed himself in a closer stile, and in sewer words. Both the Jesuites and the Dominicans began to be alarmed at the progress of Quietism: they faw clearly, that their trade was in a decay, and must decay still more and more, if some stop was not put to the progress of this new Method: in order to this, is was necessary to decry the Authors of it: and because of all the Imputations in the world Herefy is that, which makes the greatest Impression at Rome, Molinos and his Followers were given out to be Hereticks. It being also necessary to fasten a particular Name

mi the but the best the Name to every new Herely, they branded this with the Name of Quietism. Books were also writ by some fesures against Molinos and his Method; in which there appeared much of that Sourness and Malignity that is thought to be peculiar to the Society; they were also writ with their usual candor and fincerity. One of the Fathers Segueri took a more dectrous Method to decry it. He began his Book magnifying the Contemplative State highly, as Superiour to all others; and blaming those who had faid any thing that seemed to detract from it: yet he corrected all this, by faying, that very few were capable of it; and that none ought to pretend to st, but those who were called by God to so sublime a State: and by this he seemed only to censure the Indiscretion of those Spiritual Guides, who proposed this way of Devotion to all persons, without distinction. He also believed, that such as were at some times called to it, could not remain long in fo high a state, to which God called men rather for some happy Minutes, than for a longer continuance: therefore he thought that such perfons as were raised to it, ought not to fancy that they were now got fo far above all their former helps, as never to need them any more: fo he proposed to them the accustoming themselves still to Meditation, and to support themselves by that when they could not conded contemplate. He censured severely some of Molinos's expressions, such as that, He who bad God, bad Christ; as if this were an abandoning of Christs Humanity: he also insisted much on that of a fixed looking on God, and the sulpending of all the Powers of the Soul: but that on which he infifted most, was that Molinos (whom he never named, tho he cited his Words, and described him very plainly) made the Quiet of Contemplation to be a State to which a man could raise himfelf; whereas he maintains, that in this Quiet the Soul is paffive, and as it were in a rapture; and that she could not raise her self to it, but that it was an Immediat and Extraordinary Favour, which was only to be expected from God, and which an humble mind could not so much as ask of him.

These Disputes raised so much noise in Rome, that the Inquisition took Notice of the whole matter: Molinos and his Book, and F. Petrucci's Treatises and Letters, were brought under a second and severer Examination; and here the session were considered as the Accusers. It is true, one of the Society, as was formerly told, had approved Molinos's Book; but they took care that he should be no more seen at Rome: for he was sent away, and it is not known whether, it is generally believed that he is shut up within Four Walls; but what truth soever may be in that, he is no more visible, so careful are they to have all their Order speak the same Language; and if any speak in a different stile from the rest, they at least take care that he shall speak no more; yet in this Examen that was made, both Molinos and Petrucci justified themselves so well, that their Books were again approved, and the Answers which the Iesuites had writ, were censured as scandalous: and in this matter Petrucci behaved himself so signally well, that it raised not only the Credit of the Cause, but his own Reputation fo much, that foon after he was made Bishop of Iest, which was a new Declaration that the Pope made in their Favours: their Books were now more esteemed than ever, their Method was more followed, and the Novelty of it, the opposition made to it, by a Society that has rendred it felf odious to all the World, and the new Approbation that was given to it after so vigorous an Accufation, did all contribute to raise the Credit and to encrease the Numbers of the Party. F. Petrucci's behaviour in his Bishoprick, contributed to raise his Reputation still higher, fo that his Enemy's were willing to give him no more Difturbance; and indeed there was less occasion given for Censure by his Writings, than by Molino's little Book; whose succinctness made that some Passages were not so fully nor so cautiously expressed, but that there was room for making Exceptions to them: on the other hand, Petrucci was rather excessively tedious, so that he had fo fully explained himself, that he very eafily cleared some small difficulties that were made upon some of his Letters: In short, every body was that thought either fincerely devout, or that at least affected the Reputation of it, came to be reckoned among the Quietifts: and if these persons were observed to become more strict in their Lives, more retired and ferious in their mental Devotions, yet there appeared less Zeal in their whole deportment as to the exteriour parts of the Religion of that Church. They were not so affiduous at Mass, nor so earnest to procure Masses to be faid for their Friends: nor were they fo frequently either at Confession or in Processions: fo that the Trade of those that live by these things was fenfibly funk: and tho the new Approbation that was given to Molinos's Book by the Inquisition stopt the Mouths of his Enemies, so that they could no more complain of it, yet they did not cease to scatter about Surmises of all that fort of men, as of a Cabale, that would have dangerous confequences; they remembred the story of the Illuminated Men of Spain, and said, here was a Spawn of the same Sect: they infinuated. that they had ill Designs, and profound Secrets among them; that thefe were in their Hearts

Hearts Enemies to the Christian Religion; and that under a pretence of railing men to a most sublime strain of Devotion, they intended to wear out of their minds the fense of the Death and Sacrifice of Christ, and of the other Mysteries of Christianity: and because Molinos was by his birth a Spaniard, it has been given out of late, that perhaps he was descended of a fewish or Mahometan Race, and that he might carry in his Blood, or in his first Education, some Seeds of those Religions, which he has fince cultivated, with no less Art than Zeal: yet this last Calumny has gained but little Credit at Rome; tho it is faid, that an Order has been fent to examine the Registers of the Baptism, in the place of his Birth, to see if his Name is to be found in it or not.

Thus he saw himself attacked with great vigour, and with an unrelenting Malice. He took as much care as was possible to prevent, or to shake off these Imputations; for he writ a Treatise, of frequent and dayly Communion, which was likewise approved by some of the most learned of the Regulars at Rome, among whom one is Martinez a fessive, the Senior Divinity Reader in their Colledge at Rome. This was printed with his Spiritual Guide, in the year 1675, and in the Preface he protests, that he had not writ it with any design to engage himself into matters of Controversy, but that it was drawn from him, by the most earnest Solicitations of some Zealous Persons. In it he pressed a daily Communion, by a vast number of Pasfages that he cited both out of the Ancient Fathers, and the Schoolmen; yet he qualified this and all his other directions in the matters of Devotion by that which he constantly repeats, which is the necessity of being conducted in all things by a Spiritual Guide: whether he intended to foften the aversion that the fesuites had to him, by refuting some parts of Mr. Arnaud's famous Book of Frequent Communion or not, I cannot tell, but in this Discourse he answers some of the Objections that Mr. Arnaud had made to Frequent Communion, and in particular, to that which he makes one main ground of restraining men from it, which was the obliging them to go thro with their Penitence and Mortifications, before they were admitted to the Sacrament; whereas Molinos makes the being free of Mortal Sin, the only necessary qualification. In this Discourse one sees more of a heated Eloquence, than of severe or solid Reasoning: yet it presses the point of daily Communion, and of an inward application of Soul to Iesus Christ, and to his Death, fo vehemently, that it might have been hoped that this should have put an end to those Surmifes, that had been thrown out to defame fame him; as if he had deligned to lay alide the Humanity of our Saviour, by his way of Devotion: but there is no cure for Jealouly; especially when Malice and Interest are at bottom: fo new matter was found for censure in this Discourse. He had afferted, that there was no other Preparation necessary, but to be free of Mortal Sin: so it was given out, that he intended to lay aside Confession: and tho he had advised the use of a Spiritual Guide, in this, as well as in all other things; yet the necessity of Confession before Communion, was not expressed: so that by this people seemed to be set at Liberty from that Obligation: and it was faid, that what he advised with relation to a Spiritual Guide, lookt rather like the taking some general Directions and Council from ones Priest, than the coming alwayes to him as the Minister of the Sacrament of Pennance before every Communion; and to support this Imputation, it was said, that all of that Cabale had set down this for a Rule, by which they conducted their Penitents, that they might come to the Sacrament, when they found themselves out of the state of Mortal sin, without going at every time to Confession; but I will not inlarge further upon the matters of Doctrine or Devotion, in which you may think that I have dwelt too long, for a man of my Breeding and Profession: and I should think so my my felf, if I were not confining my felf exaftly to the Memorials and Informations that I received at Rome. You will fee by the Articles objected to the Quietifts, and cenfured by one of the Inquisition, which I fend you with this Letter, what are all the other points that are laid to their charge. Only I must advertise you of one thing, that their Friends at Rome fay, that a great many of these Articles are only the Calumnies of their Enemies, and that they are disowned by them: but that they have fastned these things on them, to render them odious, and to make them fuffer with the less Pitty: which is the putting in practice the same Maximes which we object to their Predecessors, who condemned the Waldenses and Albigenses of a great many Errors of which they alwayes protested themselves Innocent: yet the Accufing them of those horrid Opinions and Practices, prevailed upon the Simplicity and Credulity of the Age, to animate them with all the Degrees of Rage against a Sect of men, that were set forth as Monsters: the same Maximes and Politicks are still imputed, and perhaps not without reason to that severe Court, which if you believe many has as little regard to Justice as it has to Mercy. Some have carried their Jealousies so far against the Quietists, as to compare their Maxims to those of Socrates his School, and his his Followers after his death, when they faw what his Freedom in speaking openly against the establish t Religion had cost him: they refolved to comply with the received Customs in their exteriour, and not to communicate their Philosophy to the Vulgar; nor even to their Disciples, till they had prepared them well to it, by training them long in the precepts of Vertue, which they called the Purgative State: and when men were well tried and exercised in this, then they communicated to them their sublimer Secrets: the meaning of all which was, in thort, that they would not discover their Opinions in those points that were contrary to the received Religion, and to the publick Rites to any, but to those of whom they were well affured, that they would not betray them: and therefore they fatisfied themselves with having true and just notions of things; but they practifed outwardly as the Rabble did. They thought it was no great matter what Opinions were enterrained by them, and that none but men of Noble and elevated Tempers deferved that fuch sublime Truths should be communicated to them, and that the herd of the Vulgar neither were worthy nor capable of Truth, which is too pure and too high a thing for fuch mean and base minds. The Affinity of the matter makes me remember a convertation that I once had with one of the wittieft ClergyTQ:

Clergy-men of France, who is likewise esteemed one of the Learnedst Men in it; He said, The World could not bear a Religion calculated only for Philosophers: The people did not know what it was to think and to govern them selves by the Impressions that abstracted thoughts made on their minds: they must have outward things to strike upon their senses and Imaginations, to amuse, to terrify and to excite them: so legends; dreadful stories and a pompous Worship were necessary to make the Impressions of Religion go deep into such course souls: for a Lancet, said he, can open a vein, but an Axe must fell down a Tree; so he concluded, that the Reformation had reduced the Christian Religion to such severe terms, that among usit was only a Religion for Philosophers: and since few were capable of that strength of thought: he concluded, that if the Church of Rome had perhaps too much of this exteriour pomp, those of the Reformation had stript it too much, and had not left enough of garnishing, and of the bells and feathers for amusing the rable. The speculation feems pretty enough, if Religion were to be considered only as a contrivance of ours, to be fitted by us to the tempers and humours of People; and not as a Body of Divine Truths, that are conveyed to us from heaven.

Thus was Molinos's method censured or approved in Rome, according to the different Apprehensions and Interests of those than made Reflections upon it. But the festites finding they were not fo omnipotent in this Pontificate, as they have been formerly, resolved to carry their point another way. I need not tell you how great an Ascendant F. la Chaise has gained over that Monarch, that has been folong the terrour of Europe: and how much all the Order is now in the Interests of France. The Zeal with which that King has been extirpating Heresy, Furnishes them with abundance of matter for high Panegyricks; since that which in the opinion of many will pass down to posterity, for the lasting reproach of a Reign, which inits former parts has feemed to approach even to Augustus's Glory, but has received in this a stain, which with Indifferent men passes for a blind, poor-spirited and furious Bigottry, and is represented by Protestants as a complication of as much Treachery and Cruelty as the World ever faw; among the bigots it is fet forth as the brightest side of that Glorious Reign: and therefore it has been often cited by them with relation to the cold correspondence that is observed to be between the Courts of Rome, and that at Versailles, that nothing was more Incongruous, than to feethe Head of the Church dispute so obstinatly with its Eldest fon fuch a trifle, as the matter of the Regale, and that with fo much eagernels; and that he shew'd so little regard to fo great a Monarch, that seemed to facrifice all all his own Interests to thote of his Religion : It is believed, that the fesuits at Rome, propoted the matter of Molinos to F. la Chaife, as a fit reproach to be made to the Pope, in that Kings name, that while he himself was Imploying all possible means to extirpate Heresyout of his Dominions. The Pope was cherithing it in his own Palace: and that while the Pope pretended to fuch an unvielding Zeal for the Rights of the (burch, he was entertaining a person who was corrupting the doctrine, or at least the devotion, of that Body, of which he had the honour to be the Head. But here I must add a thing which comes very uneafily from me, and yet I cannot keep my word to you, of giving you a faithful account of all that I could learn of this matter at Rome, without mentioning it. I do not pretend to affirm it is true, for I only tell you what is believed at Rome, and not what I believe my felt, nor what I would have you to believe; for I know you have so high an esteem of Cardinal d'Efrees, that you will not eafily believe any thing that is to his Disadvantage. It is then said, that he being commanded by the Orders that were sent him from the Court of France, to protecute Molinos with all possible vigour, refolved to facrifice his old Friend, and all that is facred in Friendship, to the Passion he has for His Mafters Glory; finding then that there was not matter enough for an Accusation against against Molinos, he resolved to supply that defect himself; so that he, who was once as deep as any manalive in the whole Secret of this Affair, went and Informed the Inquisition of many particulars, for which tho there was no other evidence but his Testimony, yet that was sufficient to raise a great Storm against Molinos; and upon this delation, he and a few others of his friends were put in the Inquifition; but this was managed fo fecretly, that allthat is pretended to be known concerning it, is, that upon a new Prosecution both Molines and Petrucci were brought before the Inquisition in 1684. Petrucci was soon absolved; for there was folittle objected to him, and he answered that with so much Judgement and Temper, that he was quickly dismissed; and tho Molinos's matter was longer in agitation, yet is was generally expected that he should have been acquitted. In conclusion, a Correspondence held by him all Europe over, was objected to him: but that could be no Crime; unless the matter of that Correspondence was Criminal: some suspitions papers were found in his Chamber, but as he himself explained them, nothing could be made out of them, till Cardinal d'Estrees delivered a Lester and a Message from the King of France to the Pope, as was formerly mentioned: and that the Cardinal added, that he himself could prove against Molinos, more than was neceffary cessary to shew that he was guilty of Herefy. The Pope said not a word to this, but left the matter to the Inquisitors; and the Cardinal went to them, and gave other senses of those doubtful Passages, that were in Molinos's Books and Papers, and pretended that he knew from himself, what his true Meaning in them was. The Cardinal owned, that he had lived with him in the Appearances of Friendship: but he said, he had early smelled out an ill dedelign in all that matter; that he law of what dangerous consequence it was like to be; but yet, that he might fully discover what was at the bottom of it, he confessed, he seemed to affent to several things, which he detested: and that by this means he faw into their fecret, and knew all the steps they made, he still cautiously observing all that past among them till it should be necessary for him to discover and crush this Cabal. I need not tell you how severely this is censured, by those who belive it. I would rather hope, that it is not true, how positively soever it may be affirmedat Rome; but tho it is hard to reconcile fuch a way of proceeding with the common rules of human Society and of Vertue, yet at Rome a Zeal for the Faith, and against Herefie, supersedesall the Bonds of Morality or Humainty, which are only the common Vertues of Heathens.

In short, what truth soever may be in this particular, relating to the Cardinal, it is certain that Molinos was clapt up by the Inquisition in May 1685, and so an end was put to all Discourses relating to him: and in this filence the business of the Quietists was laid to sleep, till the ninth of February 1687. that of a fudden it broke out again in a much more furprising

The Count Vespiniani and his Lady, Don Paulo Rocchi, Confessor to the Prince Borg hele, and some of his family, with several others, in all 70 perfons, were clapt up. Among whom many were highly esteemed both for their Learning & Piety. The things laid to the charge of the Churchmen were their neglecting to fay their Breviary; and for the reit, they were accused for their going to Communion without a going at every time first to Confesfion: and in a word, it was faid, that they neglected all the exterior parts of their Religion, and gave themselves up wholly to Solitude and inward Prayer. The Countesse Vespiniani made agreat noise of this matter; for the faid, the had never revealed her Method of Devotion to any Mortal, but to her Confessor, and so it was not possible that it could come to their knowledge any other way, but by his betraying that Secret: and the faid, it was time for people to give over going to Confession, if Priests made this use of it, to discover those who trusted their secretest Thoughts to them; and

and therefore she said, that in all time coming, the would make her Confessions only to God. This had got vent, and I heard it generally talked up and down Rome: so the Inquisitors thought it more fitting to dismiss Her and her Husband, than to give any occasion to lessen the credit of Confession; they were therefore let out of prison, but they were bound to appear whenfoever they should be called upon. I cannot express to you, the Consternation that appeared both in Rome and in many other parts of Italy, when in a months time about 200 persons were put in the Inquisition: and that all of the fudden, a Method of Devotion, that had passed up and down Italy for the highest Elevation to which mortals could aspire, was found to be Heretical, and that the chief promoters of it were that up in prison.

But the most surprising part of the whole story, was, that the Pope himself came to be suspected as a favourer of this new Heresy: so that on the 12th. of February some were deputed by the Court of the Inquisition to examinhim, not in the quality of Christs Vicar, or St. Peters successor, but in the single quality of Benedict Odescalchi: what passed in that Audience, was too great a Secret for me to be able to penetrate into it: but upon this there were many and strange Discourses up and down Rome: & while we Hereticks were upon that asking, where was the Popes Infallibility?

I remember a very pretty Answer that was made me. They faid, the Popes Infallibility did not flow from any thing that was Personal in him, but from the care that Christ had of his Church: for a Pope, faid one, may be a Heretick ashe is a private man: but Christ, who faid to St. Peter, feed my sheep, will certainly so order matters that the Pope shall never decree Herefy, and by confequence shall never give the flock Poylon instead of the Bread of Life; while the Popes Heresy was only a personal thing, it could have no other effect but to damn himself: but if he decreed Heresy, this corrupted the whole Church : and fince Christ had committed all the flock to the Popes care, it ought to be believed, that he would never fuffer them to pronounce Herefy ex Cathedra, as they call it. This had fome colour in it, that was plaufible: but the shift of which another served himself, seemed Intolerable. He faid, the Pope could never decree Herely: for which he argued thus: he must be a Heretick before he can decree it; and upon that he gave me many Authorities to prove, that in the minute that the Pope became a Heretick, he fell ipfo facto from his Dignity; and therefore he faid, the Pope could not decree Herefy; for he must have fallen from his Chair, and have forfeited his Authority, before he could possibly do it: to that he was no more Pope. This lookt fo like a Juggle of the Schools, that I confess it 128 made no great Impression on me. Imagine what a thing it would be, to fee a King accused of Treason by one of his own Courts; and then you have fancied fomewhat that comes near this attempt of the Inquisition's: which being a Court authorised by the Pope, yet had the Boldness to examin himself: and it had certainly been an odd piece of News, if upon the Popes Answers, the Inquisition had stained him with the Imputation of Herefy, and had lodged him in the Minerva. Upon the discourse to which this gave occasion, I have heard the Authority of the Court of Inquisition magnified to so Extravagant a degree, that some have afferted, it was in some respects superiour even to the Pope himself. Two days after that, the Inquisition sent a Circular Letter to Card. Cibo, as the chief Minister, to be sent by him all about Italy, of which I fend you a Copy in Italian: for tho it ought to have been writ in Latin, yet I do not know how it came to be writ in Italian: for the writing it in the Vulgar language, was censured not only as an Indecent thing, but as that which made the matter more publick; it was addressed to all Prelats; and it warns them, that wheras many Schools and Fraternities were formed in several parts of Italy, in which fome persons, under a pretence of leading people into the Wayes of the Spirit, and to the prayer of quietness, they instilled in them many abo-abominable Herefies; therefore a stricte charge was given to dissolve all these Societies: and to oblige all the Spiritual Guides to tread in the known Paths: and in particular, to take care, that none of that fort should be suffered to have the Direction of the Nunneries, Order was likewise given to proceed in the way of Justice against those who should be found guilty of these abominable Errors. After this a strict enquiry was made into all the Nunneries of Rome; for most of their Directors and Confessiours were found to be engaged into this new Method. It was found that the Carmelites, the Nuns of the Conception, of the Palestrina, and Albano, were wholly given up to Prayer and Contemplation, and that instead of their Beads, and their Hours, and theother Devotions to Saints, or Images, they were much alone, and oft in the Exercise of Mental Prayer: and when they were asked, why they had laid aside the use of their Beads, and their antient Forms; their Antwer was, that their Directors had advised them, to wean themselves from these things, as being but Rude Beginnings, and Hindrances to their further progress: they justified also their Practice from those Books that had been lately publithed by the approbation of the Inquisitors themselves, such as Molines and Petrucci's Books. When report was made of this matter to the Inquisition, they sent Orders to take out out of the Nuns hands all those Boaks, and luch Forms of Devotion as were written in that strain; and they required them to return again to the use of their Beads, and their other abandoned Forms, which was no small mortification to them. The Circular Letter produced no great effects; for most of the Italian Bishops were either extream unconcerned in all those matters, or were Inclined to Molinos's Method: and whereas it was Intended, that this as well as all the other Orders that come from the Inquisition, should he kept secret, yet it got abroad, and Copies of it were in all peoples hands, fo that this gave the Romans the more occasion to discourse of these matters, which troubled the Inquisitors extreamly, who love not to have the World look into their Proceedings, nor to descant upon them: they blamed Card. Cibo, as if this matter was grown fo publick by his means: but he on the other hand blamed the Inquistors for it, and his Secretary blamed both. It was also said, that the Pope was not pleafed with Card. Cibo's conduct, and that he thought he had fuffered this matter to go too far, without giving a check to the Inquisitors, when it might have been more eafily done; wheras now matters are gone to that height, that many think they cannot end without some very great Scandal. fome of Cardinal Petrucci's Domesticks, and both his Secretary and his Nephew were of the Number; and tho the Cardinal himself came to Rome foon after, yet he was there for some time Incognito. It is generally believed, that both he and the Cardinal Caraffa, and Cardinal Ciceri, who is Bishop of Como, are in great apprehensions of a storm from the Inquisition: and the Ceremony of giving them their Hats being so long delayed, was generally ascribed to some complaints that it feems the Inquisitors made; yet in Conclufion they appeared in Publick, and had there Hats given them. The Duke of Ceri, Don Livio, that is the Popes Nephew, is believed to be deeply engaged in the matter: for the Count Vespiniani, who was first seised on, is his particular Friend and Favorite: and is a fort of a Domestick of his. Don Livio himfelf is likewise a person of a Melancholy Temper, that is much retired; and this at present is enough to make a man pass there for a Quietist. He went from Rome to a House he has not far from Civitavecchia, to avoid, as was thought, the falling into the hands of the Inquisitors. The Pope writ oft for him, before he could prevail with him to return; and it was faid, that he did not think himself secure even after all the Assurances that the Pope gave him, that no harm should come to him; for it might be justly enough ad of enough apprehended, that the Inquisitors, who had been so hardy as to examin the Pope, would make no Ceremony with his Nephew, if they found matter against him.

But among all that were clapt up, Father Appiani was the man that surprised the Romans the most: he was seifed on the first Sunday of April; he was esteemed the learnedest and Eminentest Jesuite that was in the whole Roman Colledge. This did not a little mortifie the Society; one of their Fathers had approved of Molines's Book, and now another was found to be engaged in this matter: upon which a Prieft, that was indeed no Friend to their Order, faid tome, that this was their true Genius, to have men among them of all sides; that so which fide soever prevailed, they might have some among them, that should have a considerable share in the Honour of the Victorious. And thus it Molinos's Method had been established, then they would have gloried as much in Esparza and Appiani, as they are now ashamed of them. It is likely that they had not discovered Appiani's favouring the party, otherwise no doubt they had been before-hand with the Inquifition, and had shut him up as they did Esparza; and so have covered themselves from the reproach of having a man that favoured Heresy among them. But the Confidence of that Society is an Original; and fince I have

I have this occasion to mention them, I will here digress a little from the business of Quietism, to give you account of some of their Practices at Rome, with relation to English Affairs, with which I was made acquainted during my stay there.

There is a fesuit belonging to the English House, F. Cann, well known in England, by fome of his Writings, and in particular by one against the Oath of Allegeance, in which he pleads for the Popes Power of depoling Princes; it seems he was forry to see that the Discourse which he had writ against the taking that Oath, had no better effect, and that the Papists generally took it: so he resolved to carry this matter further, therefore tho he had no other Character but that of a Father of the Society; he proposed at Rome, that a formal Oath, abjuring the Oath of Allegeance, should be taken by all who had taken the other; and that for all that should be received to be Students in that House, in all time coming, they should be bound by an Oath never to swear the Oath of Allegeance: fince he faid, a time might come, in which it should be necessary for their Interests, that they should be under no such tie to a Heretical Prince: But because it was not safe for them to enjoin any new Oath, without an order from the Court of the Rota, according to the Forms there, it was necessary to prefent fent a Memorial for this: and that ought to come from the Protector of the Nation concerned: So he ought to have addressed himfelf to Cardinal Howard; but the Cardinal's temper, and his principles, with relation to Civil Obedience, were fo well known, that F. Cann thought to carry the business without his having any share in it. Yethe found himfelf mistaken; for the Indges of the Rosa were furprised at the Proposition, and gave notice of it to the Pope, who lookt upon it as a thing of very bad consequence: and askt Cardinal Howard, if it had been fet on by any direction from him; for it feems his Name was made use of, tho without his knowledg. The Cardinal was furprifed at it, and highly resented the Impudence of F. Cann: He fent a Complaint of it to the General of the Society, who, to give the Cardinal some content, gave Cann a Reprimand, and fent him out of Rome: But the lesuites carry a Grudge in their Hearts to the Cardinal for this, and other things: and this appeared very visibly during the Earl of Castlemain's Embassay: for tho he lodged for some time in the Cardinal's Palace, yet he gave himselfup fo intirely to the Conduct of the Jesuites, that the Cardinal was quite shut out of the Councils: and while Fa. Morgan came at all hours to the Ambassadour, even in his night Gown and Shippers, which was thought an unufual thing at Rome, where publick persons live in an exactness of Ceremony: once the Cardinal was made to wait in the Antichamber, while the Father was within entertaining the Ambassadour in this lasy dress, who coming out in it, the Cardinal was fo provoked at this Indignity; that was done him, and at the Iesuites Insolence, that he threatned to fling him down stairs, if he ever presumed to come within his House again in that Habit : and indeed, a Cardinal makes fo great a figure in Rome, that fuch an usage of him was thought a little Extraordinary, but the Cardinal is of fo mild a temper, and the lesuites are so violent, as to be reckoned the Horns of the Beast, that no wonder if a Sympathy of temper made the Ambassador fall in more naturally with them.

But I will now return to the Quietists, from whom, the particular regard that I hear to the Order of the Iesuites, has diverted me so long. The Prisons of the Holy Office were full, and the Terrour of this matter had struck so many, that no body could guess when or where it should stop. It is said, that the Inquisitours have found in some of their Examinations, that they have to do with men that are learneder than themselves: and that their Prisoners are steady and resolute. It is also said, that their Friends abroad have expressed a great concern for them, and for the

the cause of their Sufferings, and that many Letters have been writ to the Inquisitors, wishing them to consider well what they do to their Prisoners; and affuring them, that they will maintain their Interests: and that they are ready to feal them with their Blood. It is certain, the Pope and Cardinal Cibo are much troubled, to fee that this matter is gone fo far, and is now fo much talked of. Cardinal Petrucci is still much in the Popes favour, and was suffered not long ago to go visit Molinos, with whom he had a long conversation all alone, but the subject and the effects of it are not known: yet alevere Sentence is expected against Molinos. Those that speak the mildest, think he will be a Prisoner for lite: but a little time will shew more than I can presume to tell you. It is a terrible thing to have the whole body of the Regulars against one, who according to the estimate that is made at Rome, are about 500000. Persons, and of that number it is faid the Iesuites make 40000. In the City of Naples alone it is believed the Regulars and other Ecclesiasticks amount to 25000. so it is very likely, that when fuch Bodies, and Mo. linos are in the ballance, Cajaphas's Resolution may once more take place: It is expedient that one man should die rather than that those Nations of Regulars Should perish, or their Trade and Profits be lessned. But to come to an end, the Inquisitors have prepared the worldfor any Judgments that they may pass in this matter, by ordering one of their number, to draw up a Censure of 19. Articles, which he pretends to have collected out of the Writings and Doctrines of the Quietists, and thus by representing them so odiously, they have as much as in them lies, prevented those Compassions which may perhaps be kindled by the fufferings of those whom they may condemn as guilty of those censured Opinions. now given you all the Informations that I could pick up of this matter, with all possible fincerity; for I have represented this bufiness to you, just as it was set before my self, without making any Additions to it, or interposing my poor judgment in such a matter, which I leave to you, and to fuch as you are. I conclude, referring you for a further light into this Affair to the Censure of the Inquisitors, which I procured in Italian, for tho probably it is written Originally in Latin, yet I could not get a Copy of the Latin Censure, and so was forced to content my felf with this that follows. It appears by it, how low the study both of Divinity and of the Scriptures is funk at Rome: some few strictures will be found on the Margin of the English Translation of this Censur, which I have added, because some perhaps may desire to see this, who do not understand Italian. T Ssendo venuto à notitia di questa Sacra Congregatione, che in diverfi luoghi d'Italia fi vadino poco à poco erigendo, e forse anche si siano erette certe Scuole à Compagnie, Fratellanze, à Radunanze, o con altro nomi, ò nelle Chiefe, ò nelli Oratorii, ò in Case private à titolo di Conferenze Spirituali, o siano di sole Donne, o di soli Huomini, o misti, nelle quali alcuni direttori Spirituali inesperti della vera via dello Spirito calcata da Santi, e forse anche malitiosi sotto titolo d'instradare l'anime per l'Oratione, che chiamano la la Quiete, ò di pura Fede interna, o con altri nome, benche dal principio apparisca, che persuadino massime d'isquisita perfettione, ad ogni modo da certi principii mal'intesi, e peggio pratticati vanno insensibilmente instillando nella mente de semplici diversi gravissimi errori, che poi abortiscono anco in aperte Erefie, & abominevoli laidezze con difcapito irreparabile di quelle anime, che per folo zelo di ben servire à Dio si mettono in mano di simplice Direttori, come pur troppo è noto esser sequito in qualche luogho. opportuno di fignificare à V. E. con la presente che si sa circolare à jtutti gli Ordinarii d'Italia; acció si compiaccia d'invigilare fopra qualfivoglia nuove adunanze simili diverse dalle già pratticate & approvate ne luoghi Cattolici, e trovandone de tali onninamente, le abolisca; ne permetta in avenire che in modo alcuno ne vengano instituite, & insista, che i Direttori Spirituali caminino la strada battuta della pertettione Christiana, senza affettare singolarità di vie di Spirito, con avvertire sopra tutto, che nessuna persona sospetta di novità simili s'ingerisca à diriggere ne in voce, ne inscritto le monache, acciò che non entri ne' Monasterii quella peste, che pur troppo potrebbe contaminare la spiritual intentione di queste Spose del Signore. Il che tutto si rimette alla prudenza dell' E. V. con che però non s'intenda con quelle provisionali, che ella sarà per fare preclusa la via di procedere, anche per via di giustitia: quando si scoprissero in qualche persona tali errori non escusabili. In tanto si và qui digerendo la materia, per poter à suo tempo auvertire il Christianesimo degli errori da evitarsi. E le Bacio, 15. Febrari, 1687.

in divers places of Italy, that by little and little are erecting, or perhaps that have already erected, some Schools, Companies, Fraternities, or Assemblies, under some other Denomination, either in Churches, Chappels, or in private Houses, under the pretence of Spiritual Conferences; and these confisting either only of Women, or only of Men, or of both Sexes together, in which some Spiritual Guides, that are unacquainted with the true way of the Spirit, in which the Saints have trod, and that are perhaps men of ill defigns, do under the pretence of leading Souls by the Prayer of Quietness, as they call it, or of Pure Inward Faith, or under any other name, in which tho in the beginning that they carry men, by Maxims that are of the highest perfection, yet at last they by certain principles, that are ill understood, and worse practised, do infenfibly infule into the minds of the fimple, divers grievous Errors, that do break out into open Heresy, and to abominable Practices, to the irreparable prejudice of those Souls, who out of their fingle Zeal to ferve God well, put themselves in the hands of such fimple Directors, which is too notoriously known to have fallen out in some places. In confideration of all this, my most Eminent Lords and Colleagues, the Inquisitors General, have thought fit to fignify this to you, by this Circular Letter, which is fent to all the Or54 dinaries of Italy, that so you may be pleased, to watch over all fuch new Assemblies, that are different from those that are practifed and approved in other Catholick places: and that where you find any fuch, you abolish them entirely, and fuffer them not to be any further advanced; and that you take care that Spiritual Directors shall tread in the beaten Paths of Christian Perfection, without affecting any Singularity in the Wayes of the Spirit: and that above all other things, you take care, that no person suspected of these Novelties, be suffered to thrust himself into the direction of Nunneries, either by Word or Writing: that fo this Pest may not enter within those Houses; which may too much corrupt the Spiritual Intention of those Spouses of Christ. All this is referred to your prudence: but with all this provisional care, it is not to be understood as if hereby the proceedings in the way of Justice, were to be hindred, in case any persons are found to hold inexcusable Errors. In the mean while, care is taken so to digest this matter, that Christendom may be in due time advertised of those Errors that are to be avoided.

OF THE

Opinions of the Quietists,

Prepared for the Inquisition.

Errori principali di quelli, che esercitano l'Oratione di Quiete, co' le Risposte.

Le consiste in constituirsi alla presenza di Dio; con un atto di Fede oscura, pura, & amorosa, e dipoi senza passar più avanti, e senza ammettere discorso, specie, o pensiero alcuno, starsene cosi otioso; par esser contrario alla riverenza dovuta à Dio il replicare quel purissimo atto, il quale però è di tanto merito, e vigore, che contiene in se, anzi supera con gran vantaggio tutti insieme li meriti delle altre virtu, e persevera tutt' il tempo della vita, mentre non si ritratti con un atto contrario: Onde non è necessario reiterarlo, e replicarlo.

CENSURA e RIS POSTA

Niun' atto di Fede ci constituisse presenti à Dio, il quale è dentro à noi per indispensabile necessità della sua Immensità, e però spesso dicevano Elia, Michea, & altri Profeti; Vivis Deus in cujus conspessita D. 4

San

Ro. E con Agostino dicono i Teologi: In Deo vivimus, movemur, & sumus. Dunque l'atto di Fede, perche suppone l'estere della Creatura, suppone questa già prima nella presenza di Dio, e solamente sarà rassegnatione di Spirito nelle braccie della Divinità. Intorno à questa all'hora sará contemplatione, quando l'Anima contemplarà, e non farà otiosa, doppo il primo atto di Fede oscura, pura, & amorola. poifalfità evidente il dire, che non sono necessarii altri buoni atti. L'Atto buono, per esser finito, e migliorabile, per mezzo della continuatione di fimili atti. Ne'la moltiplicatione di atti virtuofi e' contrario alla riverenza dovuta à Dio, perche Iddio non si tedia, ò impedisce, essendo libero da' ogni passione, & in tanto non conviene replicare atti riverentiali a' Maggiori del Mondo, in quanto, che questi, secondo che porta l'esperienza, sono alterabili, impedibili, ó tediabili della vista di simili atti frequentati. L'atto dunque in se stesso buono, moltiplicato farà un buono maggiore, e però da' Dio approvato, a più rimunerabile, che un' atto folo. Nella Contemplatione poi si stà in atto di operare, e non ostinatamente sopra l'attopassato, essendo il Contemplare l'operare mentalmente, ancorche altro anco vi fi richieda.

11. Senza la Contemplatione, per mezzo della meditatione non può darfi un passo nella Perfet-

Passione di Christo, si ristette, che per amor dell' Huomo tanto pati un Dio, unde può risolvarsi à riamarlo, e volerlo obedire in che commanda, e mettere in prattica (con la gratia di Dio, che sempre è in Noi) tal santa deliberatione. Dunque permezzo della Meditatione può bene incaminarsi l'Anima alla perfettione. Anni senza contemplare, e senza meditare, purche purche s'opri secondo li Leggi, con l'ajuto di Dio si puo ogn' uno salvare; non si salva poi chi non è persetto, & Amico di Dio. Dunque è salsissima l'opinione contenuta nel secondo Capo.

III. La Scienza, e Dottrina anche Teologica, e Sacra, è d'impedimento, e repugnanza alla Contemplatione, della quale non possono dar giuditio gli Huomini Dotti, mà solo li Meditativi, e Contemplativi.

R. La Dottrina Teologica notifica stabili in noi l'Oggetto della Contemplatione, che dicono i Quietisti esser la Divina Essenza. Dunque in noi è compinibile con la Contemplatione, alla quale se la Teologia repugnasse l'istesso sarebbe esser Contemplativo, e nulla saper d'Iddio Teologalmente, e cosi Agostino, e gli altri Santi Dottori, e Luminari della Chiefa, perche erano scientifici, fi doverebbero incapaci effer stati della Contemplatione. Il che è falso, imperoche Dio, che institui il Sacerdotio, come Ministero il più degno, non v'è ragione, che habbia voluto i Sacerdoti, ma' che non fossero Contemplativi, già che volse col Sacerdotio unita la Scienza, mentre nella Sacra Scrittura minaccio per Ofea Profetta à chi disprezzatore della Scienza esercitava il Sacerdotio. Tu repulisti scientiam, & ego repellamte, ne Sacerdotio fungaris mibi. E tralascio altre Scritture, e raggioni, perche mi viene incaricata la breuità. In quanto poi al che si dice in questo 3. cap. che della Contemplatione non possono dar giuditio li Dotti, si vede apertamente, che l'ignoranza di questi spiritelli senza intelligenza ha una temerità di non volar foggiacere all' emenda, per mezzo dell' Infallibile sentimento de' Scientifici.

IV. Non può darsi persetta Contemplatione, se non circa la sola Divinità. I Misteri dell'Incarna-

natione, Vita, e Passione del nostro Salvatore non sono oggetto di Contemplatione, anzi l'impediscono, onde devono dà Contemplativi tenersi lon-

tani; ò solo considerarsi spregiatamente.

R. Se la Contemplatione è un affettione dell' Intelletto, e della Volontà con l'Ogetto, mediante la gratia di Dio, in un raccoglimento di Spirito, potrà la vita di Christo contemplarsi, perche à quella il Christiano può farsi presente in Spirito, & affettive con atto di Fede, & Amore. Aggiongo che se Christo venne à piantar Paradisi in terra per commissione dell' Eterno Padre, come disse il Profeta Isaia, Posui verbum meum in ore tuo, ut plantos Calos, & fundes terram. Dove la Parafrase Caldea cosi legge: Ut plantes Calos in terra: Come dire (fi come l'intese Girolamo) che piantasse le contentezze negli Huomini disgratiati per il peccato originale: E se i Contemplationi si portano fopra se stessi alla Consolationi Divine nella loro Contemplativi, perche si deve disprezzare, e tener lontano Christo, che è l'immediato Datore? Christo non impedisce l'atto del Contemplatione se venne à compartirci persettioni, e contenti spirituali, che sono il fine de' Contemplativi.

V. Le Penitenze corporali, l'austerità della vita non convengono alli Contemplativi, anzi meglio si comincia la conversione dalla vita contemplativa, che dalla Purgativa, e dalle Penitenze. Ancora gli effetti della Divotione sensibile, la tenerezza del Cuore, le Lagrime, e Consolationi spirituali si devono suggire, anzi dispreggiare da' Contemplativi, come cose repugnanti alla Contempla-

tione.

R. Le Mortificationi dispongono lo Spirito, acciò viva sopra le motioni del senso, e perciò tutti i santi cominciarono à viaggiare verso la Persettione con con discipline, Digiuni, &c. Dunque se i Contemplativi hanno per fine anco la persettione, ben li convengono le Penitenze, perche più spedito si renda alla Contemplatione, chi più tiene domate le alterationi del senso. E se Dio promette nelle Scritture pardonar al Peccatore piante, che saranno dà lui le colpe, mà in nessun luogo del vecchio, ò nuovo Testamento, per essersi posto nella Contemplatione. Dunque meglio si comincia la conversione dalla vita purgativa, e dalle Penitenze, che dalla contemplatione.

VI. La vera Contemplatione deve fermarsi nella pura Essenza d'Iddio, spogliata delle Persone, e degli Attributi, e l'Atto di Fede di Dio così concepito, è più persetto, e meritorio di quello, che ri-guarda Dio con le Persone, & Attributi.

R. Le Persone Divine, egli adorabili Attributi di Dio hanno la raggione formale d'effer Oggetti di Fede, ed'Amore nel racoglimento delle nostre potenze, e nella raffegnatione dello Spirito, perche sono verità rivelate, e come Predicati Divini suoni buoni in se stessi, & alle Creature. Donde può darsene vera contemplatione. Che poi l'atto di Fede di Dio senzale Persone, & Attributi concepito sia più perfetto, e meritorio di quello, che riguarda Dio con le Persone, & attributi è falsità. Perche se già il credere che Dio sia Trino, e sia giusto è atto di fede perfetto, e meritorio, e credere Dio vero nell' Essenza anco è atto meritorio e perfetto, sarà l'atto con cui si crede Dio vero erino, e giusto, più perfetto, e meritorio d'un altro atto, con cui folamente fi crede uno nell' Essenza, perche si merita più per due atti dell' istessa virtù, che per un solo di questi. (Havendoci Dio communicate le virtù supranaturali non per far un atto solo virtuoso, mà per avanzarsi col' eser-Citio citio di tali doni) Un' atto di fede, che equivale à due è più meritorio, e perfetto di un solo atto delli due: onde ben si conclude contra la prima propositione di questo 6. Cap. che la vera, e perfetta contemplatione per essere megliore deve fermarsi nella pura Essenza di Dio, mà questa nella Persone, e negli Attributi.

VII. Nella Contemplatione s'unisce l'Anima immediatamente con Dio, onde non vi si richiede Fantasmi, ò Imagini, ò specie di sorte alcuna.

R. Nella Contemplatione ancorche in un certo modo s'unifca l'Anima immediatamente con Dio, cio è effettive, perche vi concorre l'intelletto a mirar Dio semplicemente, però si richiede qualche specie per sollicitare l'intellettuale habilità naturale à portarsi nella consideratione di Dio, servendo la specie per oggetto mottivo all'Intelletto.

VIII. Tutti i Contemplativi nell' atto della Contemplatione patiscono pene, & angoscie si gravi, che pareggiano, anzi superano, li tormenti dell' istessi Martiri.

R. Se (come dicono i Quietisti nel primo capo) la Contemplatione confilte nel farfi presente à Dio con un atto di Fede amorofa, e poi starsene in otio, non è formalmente effere tormentato, e patire pene più delli Martiri. E quantunque ad alcuno spesso succeda nella Contemplatione angoscie, e dolori, ciò proviene da' altra causa ò dal Demonio, permettendolo Dio, ò da' fiachezza dinatura, che confuma il Corpo, ò da' motivi di Malenconia, o da foverchio fangue, che formontato alla testa caggiona dolore. Mà moltiffimi altri fi fono vifti nell' atto della Contemplatione, circondati di luce con fronte ferena, e bocca ridente, come Francesco di Paola su offervato dà Luiggi XI. tione restartutti inondati di allegrezza, perche in quella vennero à vista (semplicemente ben si) li sposi, per restar concertato il Matrimonio frà Dio e l'Anima.

IX. Nel Sagrificio della Messa, e nelle Feste de Santi, è meglio applicarsi all'atto di pura se-de, e Contemplatione, che alli Misteri di esso Sacrificio, ò à considerare le attioni, e le cose aptenenti alli medefimi Santi.

R. Vive ingannato chi giudica entrare nella Contemplatione senza buona dispositione dell' Anima; e perche la consideratione delli Misteri della Messa, e dell'esempio de' Santi è preparamento spirituale, ancorche remoto, perciò stimarsi deve meglio, prima applicarsi il Christiano alla consideratione de i Misteri della Messa, e delle attioni de' Santi, e poscia darsi alla Contemplatione con più Adobbo nell' Anima.

X. La Lettione spirituale de' sibri, le Prediche, l'Orationi vocali, l'Invocationi de' Santi, e cose simili, sono d'impedimento alla Contemplatione, overo Oratione di Quiete, alla quale non si deve premettere preparatione alcuna.

R. Se in ogni professione, e' maggiormente in quella della vera, e non fintionata spiritualità? Nemo repente sit summus, come l'esperienza dimostra, perche è ordine della nostra siacca natura, co' cui si và accommodando la gratia per il nostro camino all' ultimo termine dell' Eternità, che à sacilioribus sit incipiendum; che perciò è grand' ignoranza, e presontione entrare nell' Oratione di Quiete, prima d'altri esercitii, e senza preparatione. Chi così entra, uscirà ancora senz' alcun profitto.

XI. Il Sacramento della Penitenza, avanti la Communione non è per l'Anime interiori, e contemplative, mà per l'esteriori, e meditative.

R. 1

R. I contemplativi hanno solamente un' Anima che è può meditare, e può contemplare, & anco può star in peccato. Dunque il Sacramento della Penitenza prima della S. Communione, è necessario all' Anime contemplative.

XII. La Meditatione non riguarda Dio col lume della Fede, mà con il lume naturale in Spirito

R. Se la meditatione non fosse meritoria appresso Dio, (saltem aliqualiter de congruo) no' sarebbe cosi famigliare alle Religioni, dove surono, e sono grand' Huomini fanali della S.C.R. ne sarebbe incaricata da' SS. plativo, quale se in ogni caso la perde, proviene dalla sua troppa imbecillità, e per altro poi e più ampia l'Anima raggionevole; e maggine la gratia, che l'assiste di quello che suppone queste 13. Cap. Anzi la moderata consideratione di dette Imagini serve à sormar nell' Anima l'interno racoglimento, perche il contemplativo si faccia regolare dalla Gratia.

XIV. Chi una volta si è applicato alla Contemplatione non deve piu ritornare alla Meditatione, perche sarebbe un passare dal meglio al peg-

R. E vero che è cosa mala passare dal meglio al peggio, mà spesso conviene non possedendo attualmente it meglio incaminarsi à posseder il buono. E vero ancora, che essendo pontualmente nella Contemplatione, non si deve lacciar questa à fine di mettarsi nella Meditatione. Ancorche la Contemplatione sia migliore, non ritrovandosi il Christiano attualmente nella Contemplatione, non opera inconvenientemente applicandosi à meditare, perche conviene, che per ognivia, che Dio si può mirare dall' Anima, sia da questa riverentemente essenuiata.

XV. Se nel tempo della Contemplatione vengono pensieri brutti, & osceni, non si deve usar diligenza alcuna in scacicarli, no' riccorrer ad alcu uno buon pensiero, mà compiacersi di essere da' quelli molestato.

R. Per non perdersi l'unione effettiva con Dio, che nella formale contemplatione si trova, è atto di prudenza toglier via l'occasione, come è atto di scioperaggine il trattenersi con compiacenza, perche come dice S. Tomaso d'Aquino, qui vult causam, ex qua necessariò, vel regulariter sequitur assellus, vult virtualiter effectum, E lo Spirito Santo. Qui amat periculum culum peribit in illo. Dunque sentendo in noi la rebellione del senso nella Contemplatione, ancorche sidati in noi stessi, dobbiamo usar ogni diligenza per superarla. Dovemo però raccommandarci alla Divinità, e chieder la sua gratia, per tranquillare i mali pensieri, dissondere le sue gioie nell' Anima, incalmare i sensi alterati, o ut sint aspera in vias planas.

XVI. Niun' atto o affetto nostro interno, benche formato per mezzo della fede, e puro, ne piace a' Dio, perche nasce dall' Amor proprio, mentre non vi sia infuso dallo Spirito Santo, sensa nostra industria, e diligenza alcuna, onde quelli, che stanno nella Contemplatione ò in Oratione d'affetti, devono stare otiosi, ò aspettando l'influsso dello

Spirito Santo.

R. A Dio solamente piacciono i suoi Doni, mà tutte quelle nostre Operationi, che da' Noi si fanno con la sua Santa Gratia. Quindi tanto pier, profetta sara' la Contemplatione, quanto meno sarà otiosa, purche il Contemplatore non si lasci da' qualche sensibile trasportare, preche perderia la Contemplatione; egli fuccederabbe come alla Moglie di Loth, che per mirar indietro perse il Camino. E poi temerità aspettare in otiosità l'influsso miracosa' dallo Spirito Santo, perche a' quei, che sono nell'Oratione di Quiete non fi deve il camino paffivo, mentre non hanno condegnità sopra i doni della Spirito Santo. Benfi fuccede alle volte che lo Spirito penetri l'Anima di chi stà nell' Oratione d'affetti, mà per gratia particolare. Aggiongo contro la prima propositione di questo 16.capo. Li Quietisti dicono nel 12. capo che la Meditatione non hà merito appresso Dio, perche non lo riguarda col lume della fede, dunque l'atto formato per mezzo della fede ha merito appresso Dio, dunque è puro, e gli piace.

XVII. Quelli che stanno nell'atto della Contemplatione, ò dell'Oratione di Quiete, ò siano Persone Religiose, ò sigli di famiglia, ò altri, che vivono sotto l'altrui commando, non devono in quel tempo obedire & eseguire gli ordini della Regola, ò de' superiori, per non interrompere la Contemplatione.

R. La contemplatione ancorche sia in noi di gran persettione, perche non ci viene commandata da? Dio, interrompendosi non si pecca, mà essendoci commandata da' Dio l'Obedienza a' Genitori, & à superiori, si deve obedire a' questi, anco con lasciare l'attual Contemplatione, perche in riguardo dell' ordine divino l'obedienza è preseribile nella prattica, ancorche la Contemplatione sia molto più considerabile nella sua persettione objettiva.

XVIII. Devono i Contemplativi esser totalmente spogliati dell'assetto di tutte le Cose, che rigettino a' se, e dispreggino li Doni, e savori di Dio, e si disastettionino dell' istessa virtù, o per maggiormente spogliarsi d'ogni cosa, e viver meglio a' se medisimi, sare ancora quello, che ripugno alla modestia, & all' Honestà, purche non sia espressamente contro liprecetti del Decalogo.

R. Iddio favorisce i Contemplativi con la Communicatione de' suoi boni, non per essere questi disprezzati, mà per abbellirgli l'Anima, e sortisicargli l'habilità naturale all' esercitio della virtu. Dynque ancorche i Contemplativi non se ne debbano insuperbire, devono sopramodo stimarli, o servirsene con humiltà di spirito: E se Dio vuole l'honestà come buona, sono in obligo anche i Contemplativi esser honesti, perche Iddio non hà fatto decreto, che privilegiasse i Contemplativi à non esser sogetti alla raggione, su là quale si sonde la Modestia, e l'honestà della Vita.

XIX.

XIX. Li Contemplativi sono sogetti alle Violenze, per le quali restano privi dell' uso del libero arbitrio, si che se anco bene gravissimamente peccano esteriormente, nondimeno interiormente non fanno peccato alcuno; onde ne anco devono Confessarsi di ció, che hanno fatto. Ciò si prova con l'essempio di Giob, il quale con tutto che non solo ingiuriasse il Prossimo, mà anco bestemmiasse empiamente Dio, in ogni modo non peccava, perche tutto questo saceva per violenza del Demonio. E per dar giuditio di queste violenze, non serve la Teologia Scolastica, e morale, mà è necessario Spirito sopranaturale, il quale in pocchissimi si trova, & in questi s'hà dà giudicare non l'interno dall' esterno, mà l'esterno dall' interno.

R. Che in questo Cap. 19. non solamente lates Anguis sub berba, mà apertamente si vede, che sotto nome di Contemplativi spirituali, vogliono i Quietisti essere debacanti sensuali. L'esempio, che adducono di Giobben dimostra che no' hanno intelligenza della Scrittura. Mai Giob peccò esteriormente nè contro il Proffimo, ne contro Dio, quando parlò nel cap. 19. nel 6. verso, come ben dimonstra, ancoper mezzo del senso litterale Pineda tom. 11. sopra Giob c. 35. nè peccò contro il Proffimo, come nell' ifteflo può vederfi, sempre fondata fu la Dottrina de' SS. Padri, che delle Scritture, e insegnano il vero senso. E per dirla in poche parole con altre raggioni, la gratia con la quale Iddio sempre ci assiste, unita con la nostra cooperatione può superate ogni affalto nemico. E Christo lo disse à tatti in persona di S. Paolo: Sufficit tibi gratia mea. Dunque il Contemplativo non e violentabile de venghi necessitato al peccato este-TIOII, &CC.

THE ### PRINCIPAL ERRORS.

Of those who Practise,

The Prayer of Quietness,

Censured and Resuted.

I. ERROR.

Contemplation, or the prayer of Inward quietness, consists in this, that a man puts himself in the presence of God, by forming an obscure Act of Faith, sull of Love, tho simple, and stops there, without going surther: and without suffering any Reasoning, the Images of any things, or any Object whatsoever to enter into his mind: and so remains fixed and unmoveable, in his Act of Faith: it being a want in that Reverence that is due to God, to redouble this simple act of his: which is a thing of so much Merit, and of so great force, that it comprehends within it self, and far exceeds the merit of all other vertues, josned together: and it lasts the whole course of a mans life:

life, if it is not discontinued by some other Att, that is contrary to it; therefore it is not necessary to repeat or redouble it.

The CENSURE and REFUTATION.

It is not an Act of Faith that puts us in the Presence of God: for he is within us by a necessary effect of the Immensity of his nature: therefore Elias, Micaiah, and the other Prophets said, Vivit Deus in cujus conspecto sto. The Lord lives in whose presence I stand: and it is upon the same reason that the Divines have said after S. Austin, In Deo vivi-

Another would have thought that S. Paul should have been cited for this, rather than S. Ault., fince he had said this first, Acts. 17. v. 28. but Rome is not the place of the Worldwhere the N. REFUTATION.

If Contemplation is an affection that is raised in the understanding or the Willby its proper object by the help of the Grace of God, and that confifts in an Inward Recollection of the mind, then the Life of Christ is a proper Object for it, fince a Christian can present this to his thoughts, and raise upon it an Act of Faith and love. #### V. ERROR.

Corporal Penitences and Austerities do not belong to Contemplative Persons: on the Contrary, it is better to begin ones Conversion by a state of Contemplation, than by a State of Purgation or of Pennance; and Contemplative Persons ought to avoid and despise all the effects of sensible Devotion, such as Tenderness of Heart, Tears, and Spiritual Consolations, all which are contrary to Contemplation.

REFUTATION.

Mortifications dispose the Spirit to rise above the motions of sense; and therefore it is that all the Saints have begun their course towards Perfection with Faiting and Discipline. And therefore if these Contemplatives design Perfection, they must practice Pennance: since nothing renders a man so sit for Contemplation, as to rise above all the Disorders of Sense. Nature is also a perfect and meritorious Act; then the Act by which God is believed to be true, just and Three in One, is a more perfect and a more meritorious Act, than that in which he was confidered only as one in Essence. Because a man merits more by two Acts of the same vertue than by a single one only: for God has communicated supernatural helps to us, not only for doing one Act of vertue, but that we may make an advance in fuch Acts. Therefore one Act of Faith, that is equivalent to two others, is more meritorious and perfect than any one of these two. Therefore we may justly conclude against the first branch of this Article, that true and perfect Contemplation raised to its highest pitch, must not only regard God in his Essence, but likewise in his Persons and Attributes.

Therefore if the Church appoints the Adoration of Images, none of the Faithful ought to avoid them, orremove them as hurtful to Contemplation, and some secret looks towards these Images, is no way likely to make a man fall from the heighth of Contemplation; or the Prayer of Quietness; from which if he falls at any time, it flows from his own great Instability, since the reasonable Soul is a Nobler being, and the Grace that it receives, is of a higher na-

Therefore I will give you an account of this business, on which you may depend, in the words of a Letter writ me from Rome.

Now this great Affair, upon which men have so long lookt with so much expectation, is at an end: and a party that was believed to be a Million strong, is now either quite extinguisht, or at least oppressed with a great deal of Infamy: and Mr. Molinos, who has lived above twenty years in this City, in the highest Reputation possible, is now as much hated as ever he was admired: he is not only confidered as a Condemned, and an Abjured Heretick, but he is faid to have been convicted of much Hypocrify, and of a very lewd course of life; which is so firmly believed by the Romans, that he was treated by them on the day of his Abjuration, with all possible Indignities; but the people as they shewed their affections to him, by their cries of Fire, Fire, fo were ready to have facrificed him to their rage, if he had not been well defended by the Sbiri and Guards that were about him. And it would be a crime enough at present, torecommend a man to the care of the Inquisitors, if he should seem to doubt either of his Here-Sy, or of the Scandals of his life. All the party is extreamly funk : Cardinal Petrucci himself himself lives in Rome as if he were in a defert; for no Body goes to visit him, and he stirs as little abroad: nor is it thought that he will escape: there are four sent by the Inquisition to his Diocess of fessi to examin his behaviour there: there is also a discourse, that has lately appeared at Rome, that was fecretly printed, of which he is suspected to be the Author, which is an Apology for Quietism, that gives great offence. It is faid, that the Inquisitors had full proofs against Molinos, by fourteen Witnesses; of whom eight indeed came and offered their Depositions of their own accord, and the other fix were forced to declare the truth, which raises the Credit of their Testimony: since his Abjuration, it is said that many of his Followers have abjured in private, and that besides the Prisoners that are in their hands, great numbers come in every day to accuse themselves, and to offer themselves to pennance, these are all very gently dismissed by the Inquisitors, who are now as much cenfured by the Romanstor their excessive mildness, as ever they have been blamed by others for their rigour: and those secret Abjurations are believed to be all the Severity that they will practife on this Occasion; for it is said that even F. Appiani the Jesuite will be abjured in fecret; tho some say, he is madd, others that he is become deaf and dumb, and not a few believe that he is dead: so uncertain are all Reports delett;

Reports at present. In a word, the hatred of the present Pontificate appears very visibly upon this Occasion: the People affecting to shew a very extraordinary rage against a person, and a party, that has been fo muth favoured and fupported by the Pope: so that this matter comes clearly home to him, and wounds his Reputation extreamly; all this raises the credit of the Festites, who value themselves upon the zeal and the conduct of their Society upon this Occasion. All the Popes Enemies, the fesuites, the French Party, and the body of the People, that are Malecontented and weary of him, and his long and dull Reign, shew the Pleafure they have in aggravating this matter against him: they say, this is the first time that ever any Heresy made Rome its Seat, where it choosed to nostle it self; but it is yet more strange, that it should have continued there above twenty years, notwithstanding all that multitude of Spyes that the Inquisition has every where; that the Pope should have thut his Ears against all Complaints, fo that this Doctrine had gained fogreat Authority, that those who attackt it, passed for Hereticks, or Calumniators at least, and that evenafter all the Discoveries that have been made, that the Pope was known to favour Molinos fecretly, and was so hardly brought at last to confent to the Condemnation, in which it is faid, that nothing prevailed on him till the Cardinal's informed him of the Scandals of Molinos's Life, that were proved: this was indeed a matter that could fall within the Popes understanding; for the points of Doctrine are believed to be above it. All these things concur to increase the Contempt under which the present Pontificate lies; yet as for those Scandals of Molinos's life, I do not know what to believe: many will not believe. them, and think they are only Impostures given out to render him odious; for if they had been true, and well proved, it is faid, that the Censure would have been severer; for a perpetual Imprisonment, and the faying his Credo, and the fourth part of the Rosary every day, are mild Punishments, if he is found to have been so flagitious a man, and so vile a Hypocrite, as is given out. His own Behaviour at the Minerva did not look, either like a Man, that was much confounded with the Discoveries that had been made, or that was very Penitent for them, or for his Herefy; to that the Mildness of the Censure, to a Man that shewed so little humility or repentance, feems to flow rather from the Defectiveness of the Proofs, than from the gentleness of the Tribunal. I confess, I was not a Witness to what passed in the Minerva; for as I would not venture in the Crowd, fo both Money and Favour was necessary to accommodate a man well on that occasion, where not only a general Curiofity brought a vast confluence of People together, to see the issue of a Business that has been so long in suspence, but a particular Devotion: for the Pope had granted a General Indulgence to all that should affist in that Solemnity: but I will give you the account as I had it from Eye-witnesses. Molinos was well dreffed, new trimm'd, in his Priestly Habit, with a cheerful Countenance, that as was faid by his Enemies, had all the Charmes on it, that were necessary to recommend him to the fair Sex. He was brought from Prison in an open Coach, one Dominican being with him in it. He was at first placed for some time in one of the Corridori of the Minerva: he looked about him very freely, and returned all the Salutes that were made him: and all that he was heard fay, was, That they saw a man that was defamed, but that was Penitent (Infamato ma Pentito.) After that he was carried to dinner, where he was well treated, that being to be his last good Dinner. After Dinner, he was brought into the Church, as in a Triumph, carried on the shoulders of the Sbiri in an open Chair : when he was brought to his place, as he made his Reverence very devoutly to the Cardinals, fo there was no shew of Fear or of Shame, in his whole Deportment. He was chained, and a Wax Light was put in his hand, while two strong-lung'd Fryers read his Process aloud, and

and care had been taken to lay matters fo, that as some of the Articles were read, all should cry Fire, Fire. When he came back to Prifon; he entred into his little Cell, with great Tranquillity, calling it his Cabinet, and took leave of his Priest in these words, Adieu Father, we shall meet again at the Day of Judgment, and then it will appear on which side the Truth is, whether on my side, or on yours. So he was shut up for Life. Yet after all I find none of the wife men here think that the thing is at an end; but that the Fire which feems to be now extinguished, will break out with more violence; for one of his Followers had the boldness to tell the Inquisitors to theirface, that they were a Company of Unjust, Cruel, and Heretical men; and compared their Treatment with that which Christ had met with, and yet even he has escaped upon an Abjuration, as is pretended. The Reasons that are given for this extraordinary Gentleness of the Inquisitors, who are seldom accused for erring on this side, are both the Numbers of the Party, who might be much irritated by publick Examples, and also the great Credit that their Doctrine has from the Mystical Divinity, that is authorised by so many Canonisations: for it is said, that from feveral parts the Inquisitors have brought together above twenty thousand of Molino's Letters: whose Correspondence was

was fo vast, that some give out, that the Post of the Letters, that were brought him the day in which he was feifed on, rife to twenty Crowns. And I heard a Divine of Rome confess, that they have such Authorities for most of their Tenets, that they will never be beat out of them, by the force of their School Divinity, therefore he thought it was necessary to condemn them by a formal Sentence, in which the Authority of the Church was to be interposed. Most of the condemned Articles are nothing but an Invidious Aggravating of the Doctrine of Predestination and Grace Efficacious of it felf, and of Immediat Inspiration: for all the hard Consequences that are pretended to be drawn, either from the one or the other of these Opinions, are all turned into fo many Articles, and condemned as fo many Impious Doctrines; but you will be better able to judge of this matter when you fee all that the Inquisitors will think fit to print concerning it.

I am, asyouknow, no Searcherinto Manuscripts, or the Curiofities of Libraries, nor can I bring my felf to fodry a study as is that of Medals, or Inscriptions. I had rather be beholding to the Labours of others, for the Discoveries they have made in those matters, than wear out my Eyes and spend my Time in the reading and Deciphering those Remains of Antiquity. I love all that knowledg, which, with how much difficulty foever it may be acquired, feeds the mind with fome useful Ideas: but as for that knowledg which carrys one no further, then that fuch a Word, or such a Hierogliphick fignified such a thing, and that gives the mind no matter to work on, and raites no game at which it may fly, it has not charm enough to work on fo lafy a man as I am. I confeis, my studies, and my way of Life would have carried me more naturally into matters of Religion, or into the Politicks: but as to the former, Italy is not a Country, where a man either can or dare reason upon these Subjects: for their Ignorance is such, that no man can profit much by their conversation on those heads: besides that, it is not safe to doit. The Italians are too wellbred, to attack a man on that Argument; and they know their own Ignorance so well, and have so high an Opi-MOIM

I will begin with some relating to the Inquisition. I told you in my former Letter, of a great many Prisoners in the Inquisition, but among all the Prisoners that are there, none will surprise you so much as when at they

when I tell you that there is a Cruxifix kept there, which is called, our Saviour in the Inquisition: when this was first told me, I durst not fpeak out that which naturally occurred to my thoughts, which was, that our Saviour and the Truth of his Gospel, was indeed shut up with fo much severity by the Inquisitors, that it was no wonder if he were reckoned among the Prisoners of that levere Court. But this story is less serious, and more Comical.

You know that in all the bigotted Towns, the people are forted in feveral Fraternities, and every one of these; has their peculiar Churches, Altars, Images and Relicks, to which they pay a more extraordinary devotion: fo there was one in Florence, among whose favourite Images a Crucifix hapned to be one: a Woman (that had a fair Daughter) fell fick: and as the had payed many Devotions to that Image, fo she came to fancy, that in her fickness she had the Returns of very extraordinary Favours from it. The truth of the matter was, that one who had a mind to have frequent access to her Daughter, made a shift to deceive the poor fick Woman: for he appeared in such a disguise to her, that she believed it was the Image that came to comfort her. And that which was the most acceptable part of the Impoflure was, that the Impostor knew by her Daughters means, every thing that she wanted .

In short, this came to be generally believed: for when the least story of this kind gets vent, and is well received by the Priests, the People run in so headlong to it, that it would pass for a Crime capable enough of ruining one in the Spirit of the Inquisitors, to seem to doubt of it; but much more it one studied to undeceive others: therefore things of this nature kindle the minds of a superstitious multitude foquick, that in a few days a whole Town will feem as it was out of its Wits: which appeared fignally on this occasion at Florence: for now the whole Town entred into this Fraternity. The Great Duke himself came into the number, and all were studying what new Honours should be done to an Image that had been so kind to one of its Worshippers. But some that were wifer than the rest, saw thro the Cheat, and Informed P. Innocent the 10th. of it, who was resolved to put a stop to the current of this Superstition: yet he faw it wasneceffary cessary to do it with some address: It fell out to be the year of Iubily 1650. fo the Pope writ to Florence, that he had heard of the Miracles of that Image, to which he defired earnestly to do his own Devotions, therfore he intreated them to bring it to Rome; that so the Image might have the addresses of all the Pilgrims, as well as his own made to it. Upon this the more bigotted of the Fraternity, would needs accompany the Charitable Image: so they carried it in Procession to Rome : and did not doubt but that the Pope and Cardinalls with the Clergy of Rome would have come out in Procession to meet them and their Image: The furprife was no doubt very great, when instead of all this, they found a Company of Sbirri staying for them at the Porta dell Populo; who took their Image from them, and carried it away to the Inquisition; and sent them away nor a little mortified at the Difgrace, that had befallen their Crucifix, who has been ever since a Prisoner in the Inquisition.

I was told of another Prisoner there of a later date, but not much unlike this. You know the legend of the Plague that was in Rome, as I remember in S. Gregory the great's time, that was stopt by an Angel, that as was pretended came down, and stood over that Castle, which was formerly called Moles Hadriani, but has carried the name of Castro S: Angeloever fince. got a Stone, upon which there was an Impression like the print of a Foot: so they had put this in some part of their Church, and gave it out that this print was made by the Foot of that Angel; the one can hardly Imagine how they fancied that an Angel treads fo hard. This Stone had many Devotions payed it. The learned Sigr. Pietro Bellori, who is without dispute the best Antiquary in Rome, being once in that Chappel at his Devotions; observed a great many praying about this Stone, and kiffing it with great Respect and Affection; so he came to look upon it, and having examined it carefully, he faw clearly it was a fragment of a Statue of the Goddess Isis; the Greek Characters were legible, and many things concurred to make a man of his Learning and Exactness conclude, that the Devotions were mis-applied that were payed it; so he went to one of the Fathers of the House, and acquainted him with his Observation: and wished that they would remove that mistaken Object of Worship, lest some of the learned Hereticks that passed thro Rome, might discover and reproach the Church with it. But the Fathers of the House found their account in this matter, so they were so far from following his good Advice, that they aspersed him that had given it, so as to accuse him of Impiety for diverting the Devotions of the people: the Imputation was carried fo far

But by these two Storys, you will perhaps imagin that I design to beget in you a good Opinion of that Court; but I will now tell you another, that will foon bring you back to your old thoughts of that Tribunal Burrhi is a man fo famous in the World, that one that has looked into Natural Philosophy and Chimistry, could not be long in Rome without making an acquaintance with him: but to tell you truth, I neither found him to be fo great a Chimist as he fancies himself to be, nor so great a Heretick as the Inquisitors have made him. I tell you this the more particularly, that you may upon it judge how far you are to believe the account that the Inquisitors may give of their proceedings against Molinos: fince you may conclude from what was done to the one, what may be expected in all cases that are brought before them. Burrbi's Story is in short this; He is a Gentleman of the Millanese, who was born to an Estate of 8000. Crowns a year: In his youth he had travelled, and had get into his head the Notions of the New Philosophy and of Chimistry: so at his return to Milan, he began to propogate the new Philosophy, and to form a Conference upon those matters: the Priests it seems suspected, that there might be somewhat under this, so he was put in the Inquisition, but nothing could be made out against him, he was let out: after that he went and stayd for some years in Germany and Holland; and it is very probable that he might have expressed himself concerning the Courts of Inquisition, as a man that had no great opinion either of their Justice, or of their Mercy. And as he has gone into all the high pretentions of the Chimists, so it is probable enough that he has talked of matters of Religion in that Mysterious unintelligible Fargon, that is used almost by all the men that are of the highest Elevation of Chimistry, but chiefly by Paracelsus and Van Helmont. In short, some Accusations were given in to the Inquisitors against him, who complained of him to the Emperour, and had so much credit in his Court that he strained his power to the utmost, and seised on him, and sent him to Italy, where those good Fathers were refolved not to give him a fecond occasion of boasting, that he had got safe out of their hands: strange things were objected to him; and as is pretended, they were proved against him; as that the B. Virgin was God equal with the Son; and that the H. Chost was incarnate in

Concerning the INQUISITION. 105 her, as well as the Eternal Word was in her Son: that the three Persons in the Trinity were the first, the second, and the third Heavens: that the Son was from all Eternity discontented with the Father, for not making him equal to him: that the Consecrated Hosty had in it the Body of the Mother as well as that of the Son: and that the putting the pieces of it together in the Chalice, demonstrated the Union between the Mother and the Son. These Opinions were all proved against him: tho he protests that he never thought of them, yet he was forced to abjure them in the year 1668. and was upon that condemned to perpetual Imprison. ment; he continued in the Prison of the Inquisition, till within these five or fix years, that the Duke d'Estrees being fick, procured an Order for having Burrhi to come and treat him; and in gratitude to Burrhi, who cured him, he got his Prison changed to the Castle St. Angelo: where he now entertains himfelf with Chimical Processes. It is indeed very probable, that he had provoked the Inquisition, by speaking severely and reproachfully of them, and this was all his Crime, unless another Article against him might be his Estate; for of his 8000. Crowns a year, there is but 3000. left him; for the good Fathers have had the Charity to take 5000. to themselves: and his 3000. is so eat up by them, thro whose hands it comes to him, that he has not 1500. Crowns a year payed him: and from this you may see what credit you ought to give to the Processes, the Articles, and the Abjurations that are made before that Court.

If instead of that Zeal which animates them against Heresy, they would purge their own Church of those Disorders, which they themselves acknowledg to be corruptions, they would fooner bring themselves again into credit. The scandalous Pictures that are in many Churches of Italy, are things that might deserve their care, if they would turn it to that hand. Is it not a shameful thing, that there has not been a great Master in Painting who has not put that Complement on his Mistress, as to paint her for the Virgin? so that the most celebrated Madonna's of Italy are known to have been the Mistresses of the Great Painters. The Postures, the Looks, and the Nakedness of many of the Church-pieces, are Monstrous Indecent things. The great defign of the Cupulo at Florence, is such a Reprefentation of Vice, that all that can be prefented by a defiled Imagination, comes short of what is to be feen there: and tho the Scripture speaks but of one Apparition of the Holy Ghoff in the shape of a Dove; one shall find this Dove on the Head, at the Ear, and the Mouth of I know not how many of their Saints; and as one finds in many Pieces, that their Masters have resolved to perpetuate their

their own Amours in them, so Amours are every day managed by the same methods: for while I was at Rome, I discovered an Intrigue between a Fryer and a Nun, by two Pictures, that were drawn for them: the Fryer was drawn as a S. But to return to Indecent Pictures, there is nothing more scandalous, than the many various Representations of the Trinity, which must needs give to all fews and Mahometans as well as to us, that pass for Hereticks, a strange horror to a Religion that suffers those odious Refemblances, that give fuch gross Ideas of the Deity, and of the Trinity: and that which is yet the most scandalous part of those Pictures, is that the Representation of God the Father is often divertified according to the caprice of the Painter; and he is to be feen in the Habits of the feveral Orders of that Church, and indeed both Features, Hair, Habit, and Postures, have all the diversity in them that is necessary to feed an Idolatry, that is as Extravagant as it is gross.

The Picture of the B. Virgin, with the Order of the Capuchins under her Petticoat, is not very apt to raise Chast Idea's in those who look upon it. In short, whereas the Rule of the Antient Architecture of Churches, was to below and dark, which was thought the most proper, for the Recollection of a man's Faculties, and by consequence for Devotion, is now quite altered: and great Cupulos with a vast Illumination, are necessary to shew the Beauty of those rich Pieces, which would be lost in Churches built as dark as the Antient Ones were.

I confess, those Pictures are charming things, if they were any where else than in Churches: but the pleasure they give, does so possessa man that begins to understand them, that it will kindle any thoughts in him, fooner than devout ones. I will not here let my Pen carry me into a Subject that must needs fet all my thoughts on fire; and speak of the great Pieces of Painting that are in Italy, and of the many Masters that it produced in the last Age: who as they were such Extraordinary men, fo they lived within the Compass of one Age; as if the Perfection in that amaling Art had been to dye with them, as well as it was born with them; this, I say, would make one think, that there are Revolutions and Aspects in the Heavens that are favorable or cross to Arts or Sciences: and that then, the most favourable Aspect for Painting that ever was, produced those astonishing performances. For tho the great decay of Learning that is every where, may be reasonably enough resolved in this, that whereas in the last Age many great Princes were either Learned themselves, or at least they made it a Maxim to protect and encourage Learning; but this having at last grown to an excess of Rudeness and Pedantry, and Princes becoming generally extream Ignorant, it came to passionapiece of breeding, to say nothing that was beyond their pitch, or that feemed to reproach their Ignorance: and those who could not hide their Learning, were called Pedants: and pedantry was represented fo odious, that Ignorance being the lafieft as well as the furest way to avoid this, all men took that very naturally; and when other methods are as effectual to raisemen to the highest preferments either of the Barr or of the Pulpit as true Learning or reall Merits few will choose the long and tedious, and often the most uncertain way, when the End that they propose to themselves, may be certainly compassed by a more effectual andeafier one. Flattery and Submissions are sooner Learned and easier practised by men of low and mean fouls, than much hard and dry study: thus, I say, the decay of Learning is very eafily accounted for, in the Agein which we live : but as for the Art of Painting, it is still in such esteem, and great pieces go still at such vast rates, that if the Genius and capacity for it were not loft, there is encouragment enough still to fet it a going :

but I leave this fubject not without putting some constraint on my self; for who can think offuch Wonderful men as Correge, Michael Angelo, Raphael, Paulo Veronese, Iulio Romano, Carrache, Palma, Titian and Tintoret, without feeling a concern at every time that he reflects on the Wonders of their pencils: St. Lukes pretended work, and even the supposed performances of Angels, are sad things fet near their pieces. One, whose thoughts are full of the Wonders of that Art, that are to be seen in Florence, goes into the Annunciata, and fees not without Indignation, that adored picture of the Virgin, which, as the fond people there believe, was finished by an Angel, while the Painter that was working at it, and that could not animate it as he defired, fellasleep; who as soon as he awaked, saw his piece finished. This fiction of the painters, toraise the credit of hispicture, is so well believed at Florence, that the presents made to enrich the Altar and Chappel, where it stands, areInvaluable: & yet after all, the Angel's work is still no better than the common painting of that time: and that Angel-painter, was but a bungler if compared, to the great Masters. In a word, what can be thought of humane nature, when in forefined a place as Florence, to course an Imposture has been able to draw to it, such an Inestimable stock of Wealth. All

All these things are so many digressions from my main subject, which was, to shew you how much matter the Inquisitors might find, if they would use any exactness in redressing those Abuses which they themselves will not defend in common conversation: and yet tho the smallest thing, that seems even at the greatest distance to go against their Interest, is lookt after with a very watchful care; yet the grossest of all Impostures, that proves profitable to them, is much encouraged by them.

The fable of Loretto, is so black and soridiculous a piece of Imposture, that I never faw a man of sense, that cared to enter upon that subject. I was once in Company where I took the liberty to propose two modest Exceptions to it: the one was, that about 200 years after the rest of the Angelical Labour in carying about that Cottage is pretended to have fallen out, Vincent Ferrier, whom they believe a great Saint, not only fayes nothing of its being then in Italy, but fayes expresly, that it was then in Nazareth, & that many Miracles were wrought about it. Antonin of Florence; who is also the most Impudent Writer of Legends that ever was, fay's not a word of it some Agesafter they say that it was at Loretto. All the answer that I had to this was, that it was no Article of Faith, but whether it was true or false, the Devotion

tion of the People was still entertained by it: and this, they faid, was as much meritorious, tho founded on a Fable, as the giving of Charity to one who is believed a fit object, but yet is indeed a Cheat, is acceptable to God: and thus he who gives upon a good inward motive, will be rewarded according to the Dispofition of his Mind, and not according to the Truth or Falsehood of the Story, that wrought upon him. I durst not press this matter too far: otherwise I would have replied, that how excuseable soever the Superstition of Ignorant People may be, yet this does not at all justify the Cheatthat the Church puts upon her so easily deluded children. The truth is; the Romans themselves have not such stiff notions of all the points of Controversy as we are apt to Imagine: this makes me remember a conversation that past some years ago, between an Abbot & one of our Clergymen, that was then a Governour to a Person of Quality, that in his Travels stayed for some time at Rome. The Abbot feeing the Governour was confidered as a man of Learning, defired to be Informed of him, what were the Points in differencebetween the two Churches: fo the Governour told him, that we had our worship in a known tongue; that we gave the Cup in the Sacrament; that we had no Images, and did not pray to Saints: all this did not disturb the Abbot, who faid, that these were only diffe

Peter's Successor: and it is very plain at Rome at this day, that they consider the Conversion of Nations, only as it may bring in more profit into the Datary Court, and raise the value of the Officesthere; for when I seemed amased in conversation with some of them, to see so little regard had to the Ambassadour of England, and to every thing that he proposed; they told me plainly, that perhaps the Angels in Heaven rejoiced at the conversion of a sinner upon the pure motives of perfect Charity, but they at Rome looked at other things. They faw no profit like to come from England; no Bulls were called for, and no Compositions like to be made; if those things should once appear, then an Ambaßadour from thence would be treated like the penitent Prodigal, especially if he were a little less governed by the fesuites, who were believed to have managed our Ambaffadour a little too absolutely ; and here it will be no unpleasant digression if I tell you the Cardinal d'Esté so long.

The Pope himself saw what the Uncle of this Cardinal did at Rome, in P. Alexander the 7thstime, upon the business of the Corsis, and the affront that was put on the Duke of Crequy, which made so much noise. That Cardinal being then the Protector of the French Nation, offered first to the D. of Crequy, to go with him, accompanied with 500 Men, that he knew he could raite in Rome, to the Palace of Dom Mario Chigi, and to fling him out at window: but the D. of Crequy thinking that fuch a revenge went too far, the Cardinal himself went accompanied with his 500 Men to the Palace, and expostulated the matter with the Pope, and demanded Reparation; and when the Pope put it by in some general anfwers, he preit him to hard, till the Pope threatned to pull his Cap from him, but he answered, that he would clap a Head-piece on it, to defend it, and that he would never part with that, till he had pulled the Tripple Crown from his head; This was vigorous, and the Cardinal had a mind to perpetuate the memory of it, for he made himself be drawn with a Headpiece by him, his hand pointing towardsit, which I faw at Modena; and it is plain by their way of speaking of this matter, that they were proud of it. The present Pope being at that time a Cardinal, faw this disorder, and so he was resolved never to

But now again I return to that from which I have digressed so often, which is the work that the Inquisition might find in Italy, even without departing from any of their received Principles. That scandalous Imposture of the blood of S. January at Naples, that seems to be firm & dry in the Vial, and that dissolves and moves as it is brought near his Head, which is fo firmly believed by all the bigots there, must needs give an Indignation to all that love Truth, when they tee fuch gross Deceptions put upon the World. I will not take upon me to fay how it is managed; but nothing is more easy than the ordering of this matter may be. For if that Vial be filled with tinctured liquor, the Vial being put in Ice and Salt, will freese in an Infant; and it being again in the air, may return very quickly to its former ftate, so that there is no need of any great skill for the conducting this matter: and it is fo much their Interest, who have the keeping of this pretended Blood, to keep the fecret very religiously, that it is no wonder if it is not discovered. He indeed who either doubts of it, or would adventure to discoverit, must resolve to go and live some were else than in Naples, where this passes for the chief Glory, as well as the greatest bletfing of their City; and the people there are fo H 2

Infolent, that this has appeared of late in such Instances, that if the Viceroy of Naples, were not both a very extraordinary man, and most excessively esteemed and beloved there, he could not have stood his ground in the Dispute which is now on foot, and of which tho all the Gazettes make mention, yet I may perhaps tell you some particulars, that may be new to you, for I was in Naples while this matter was in its greatest heat.

The business of the Ecclesiastical Immunities, is carried so high here, that the General of the Horse, who is by birth a Flemming, had almost felt it to his cost; there were two under him, that had quarrelled, but were made Friends; and one of these meeting the other some days after that, he embraced him with all the shewes of Friendship, but having a stiletto in his hand, he managed it so fatally, that under all the appearences oftender Embraces, he killed him out-right, and presently he took Sanctuary in a Church, that was hard by ; the General hearing of this, refolved he would make an Example of the Murderer: but not daring to drag him out of the Church, he set a Sentinel to the Doors, reckoning that hunger would foon force him to come out: and the Priests that belonged to the Church, carried him in lome Provisions, yet that could not serve him long. But the General was forced to discharge het

Another fell out about the same time near Leghorn, in which the facredness of exemptedpersons was afferted in a manner that was no leis scandalous; a Priest was seised on, for a most horrid Crime, either a Rape or a Murder, I do not remember which: but he who had no mind to be taken, defended himfelf; and thot one of the Sbiri, upon which the rest run away. So he apprehending that a stronger party would be sent, that would be too hard for him, went and retired into a Wood, with his Fusee; and some being sent to find him out, he had shot fix or feven of them; yet after all the facred Character was like to fave this execrable man; for while I was at Leghorn I was told that an Excommunication was coming out, against all that should violate the Ecclesiastical Immunities in his Person: and no doubt the Great Duke will give way to this: for he is fo entirely delivered up to his Priests, and is become fo H 3 exexcessively scrupulous, that to deliver himself from those Troubles of Conscience, which many things, in the Administration of the Government are apt to give him, he has found out an easy receipt, which if all other Princes can be brought to follow, it will be very happy for their Ministers. He then considers, that the only sure way to be Innocent in the Conduct of Affairs, is not to know them at all: but to devolve them entirely on his Ministers, who do all, without so much as communicating matters to him.

But the Viceroy of Naples is not so very trachable in those matters, as appears by the vigour with which he has supported the secular Tribunal against the Invasions of the Ecclesiastical Court. That which gave the rife to the dispute, was, a sute that was between a Lay man and a Church-man, before one of the Judges of Naples, who decided in favour of the Layman; upon which it was pretended, that this was a Violation of the Immunities of the Church: so the Judge was Excommunicated; And upon it no body would willingly appear before him, or fo much as speak to him, so terrible a thing is that Thunder there: but the Viceroy has shewed on this occasion, that firmness that has appeared in all his other Actions: and has also received Orders from Spain authorifing him to keep his ground. The Judge is not only maintained in what he hasdone, but continues still to fit on the bench, all people are forced forced to bring their causes before him; & his Sentences are executed with resolution. This Contempt put on the Ecclesiastical Censures by a Minister of Spain, and at a time in which the Pope is so much in their Interests, is a little Extraordinary. But the affront that the Viceroy put on an Auditor of the Nuntio's, was yet much more provoking, for it was managed with a particular care to make the Scorn very wounding as well as it was publick. The Nuntio is believed to do ill Offices in this matter; and his Auditor was known to be a man of Liberties; it was found out that he went often to a Bordello; the Viceroy therefore gave order to watch him fo carefully; that the Sbiri should be fure to find him in fuch circumstances, as should make his shame very Conspicuous: fo he was taken, and carried before the next Judge: the thing was laid before hand, and the Judgerefuling to medle init, the Sbiri (a fort of men like our Bailiffs ) carried him to another, and so made the round of all the Judges in Naples; and every one of them refuling to medle with the Anditor, the Shiri let him go, when the matter was made fufficiently publick, by their carrying him about to so manny places. The Nuntio complained of the Violation of the Rights of a Publick Minister, especially of so facred a one. But the Reparation that the Viceroy made, was a redoubling of the Affront: for he ordered the Shiri that had taken H 4

Naples with an Infoription writ in Capital Letters, both on their Breasts and on their Backs, mentioning the Crime for which they were thus led about, which was their having disturbed the Nuntio's Auditor in his

You will easily imagin that this was considered at Rome as a most outrageous Affront; and indeed the Pope has carried the matter of the Regale in France so very far, that it is hard to tell to what a degree this breach in Naples may be also carried: for tho the Pope is most excessively ignorant in all those Matters, yet he has another Quality, that is the only thing that is great in him, and that would indeed become him very well, if he had a little more Knowledg to govern it: and that is, that he is the wilfullest man alive; and his temper is fearless enough to make him shut his Eyes upon all Danger.

It cannot be denied, but it is the Interest of the Pope, as he is a Temporal Prince, to be of the side that is now the weakest; and that needs his support the most: and therefore it is no wonder if he is so favourable to the Crown of Spain, and the House of Austria: but after all, his carrying the business of the Regale so far, against so great a King, and a King that has merited so much from that Church, by his zeal against Hereticks, is

Concerning the INQUISITION. fomewhat unaccountable: After all the Havock, that has been made both by Princes and Popes of the true Liberties of the Church. and particularly after that shameful Bargain that was made between them in the Concordate, ithas a very ill grace to fee a Pope make this the subject of so great and so long a Difpute; and that the factious Clamours of a few ill-natured and angry Priests, should have been so much considered, as to interrupt the good understanding of the Courts of the Vatican and Versailles. All this flowed from the ill opinion that the Pope had of the fesuites, which being known in France, the Fansenists thought it was high time for them to recommend themselves to the Court of Rome, in hope of mortifying the Jesuites: yet they could not with any decency carry the Papal Authority high, after they had with fo much force both of reason and learning, depressed it as they had done: so they betook themselves to the first thing that offered it felf, that they knew would be very acceptable in Rome, which was the afferting the Liberties of the Church, and the disputing the Kings Imposing the Rights of the Regale (that is, the mean profits of Bishopricks, and the Collating to Benefices without Cure, during the Vacancy) on the four fouthern Provinces of France. I will not fay more of a matter that is so well known, only I will tell H 5 you, you, what a Doctor of the Sorbon faid to me upon this subject; I found he did not believe the Pope's Authority more than I did my felf; and yet he was one of those that indirectly opposed the Articles of the Clergy, and the condemnation that was past on the Bishop of Strigonium's Censure of those Articles; for his Authority and Learning gave a great turn to that matter: fo when I feemed amaled at this, that a man of his Principles, had acted as he had done upon that occasion, he told me, he had no other Confideration before him in that matter, but to mortify the Clergy of France, and to maintain the Dignity of the Sorbon. It was not long fince that in the Dispute about fansenius's matter, they had made the Pope not only Infallible in matters of Right, but of Fact: and now because the Pope was not in the Interests of France, the dispute of Infallibility, and of the Councils of Constance and Basil, were again set on foot; all which would be given up, and the Pope would be considered Infallible to morrow, if he were once more in the Interests of France; & the Clergy, who had neither learning norvertue, but made up all Defects, by a flavish Obsequioufness, would be then as forward to magnify the Infallibility, as they are now to depreis it.

How far the Pope will embroil himself in this new business of the Franchises, I do not know: he has expressed a great steadiness in it; and the truth is, Rome is now fo funk from what it was, and the Franchises are so confiderable a part of the City, that their being covered from the Execution, both of Civiland Criminal Justice, is a most horrible Diforder: and it feems reasonable enough, that as in all other Courts, there is nothing now under the Ambassadours Protection, but that which is within his Gates, so the same Regulation should be made in Rome; where the extent of those priviledged Places is very great: yet afterall, if the French Ambassadour, that is now on his way thither, has positive Orders to maintain them, and has mony enough to lift men, if the matter goeson to a more obstinate Dispute; It will be no hard matter for him to raise such a Revolt in Rome, that neither the Popes Guards, nor those in the Castle of St. Angelo, will be able to subdue it: and if this matter goes on so far, the French will very probably cut off all Annates, and find a shorter way of granting of Bull's within the Kingdom. It is faid, that while some have represented the apparent Inconveniences of a Rupture with France to the Pope, and that he was in no condition to relift that mighty Power: He answered, that he would suffer Martyrdom in maintaining the Rights of St. Peter. It must be confessed, that there was fomething in this faying that was more Magnanimous, than prudent. And indeed : FINDUS deed the Popes way of treating with Ambaffadours, has somewhat in it that comes neerer the simplicity of the Fishermen, the more modern Politicks. His dry Answer to our Ambassadour, when he threatned him that he would leave Rome, and go back to England, if he were not better used; Lei e Padrone; Tou are Master of that as you please; had an air in it that I should have been much pleased with, if it had fallen on any other than then

His Conduct of the Revenue is an unaccountable thing; for if there is not a vast Treasure laid up, or a most prodigious deal of Wealth secretly conveyed to his Family, it is not to be imagined what has become of all that Revenue that he has raised, in which the Income is so vastly disproportioned to the expence, that the most prying men do not know what is become of it. The War with the Turks has not cost him so much as is believed; on the contrary, many think that he has got by it; and that the Taxes which he has laid on the Clergy of Italy amount to more than he has laid out upon it: It is certain, it has not cost him very much. He retrenched all Expences to fo great a degree, that even the publick Charities were lessened: for in Lent, there is a weekly Charity of a fulio, or a fix pence, to all the poor that come and ask it: and the poor commonly brought their Children with them, them, so that they got as many fulio's as they brought Children; but the Pope limited this, that no Charity should be given to any under fuch an Age, as I remember it was below ten year old. The Administration of the Revenue is indeed the only thing that he understands, and in which he imploys all his thoughts: and it was believed, that the true Secret of the greatest number of the Cardimals in the last Promotion, was the Advantages that he made by the fale of the Offices which they held, and that fell to the Pope upon their Advancement; out of which it was thought that he gained above a Million: and upon this I will tell you, what I have learned concerning the aversion that two of the Cardinals, Taia and Ricci, expressed to the Purple in the Promotion that was made five year ago; this was magnified in feveral Books, that were printed out of Italy, as somewhat that seemed to approach to the best Ages of the Primitive Times, when men refused to accept of so great a Dignity, that brought them within a ttep of the Supream Elevation: but the truth of this matter was, they were both men of Fourfcore, and not like to live long; as they both died within a year of their Preferment: they had very good Imployments; which they had bought, and which by their accepting the Purple were to fall into the Popes hands: besides that, the new Dignity was not to be entred upon without a great Expense? foall this being confidered, the vertue of refuling so chargeable a Dignity, in men that were more concerned for their Families, than for that small remnant of life that was before ting of Cardinals, I will tell you a remarkable Instance of a Promotion, that I do not remember to have met with in any Book; and the Dignity of the Person and of the Family descended from him makes me think it worth the relating; and the rather because I had it from no ordinary person, but from one of the exactest men in Kome, and who has taken the greatest pains to be well Informed in the Modern Hifory. I had seen several pictures of Clara Farnese, for there are more than one of them in the Palestrina: fo I knowing nothing concerning her, asked her story, which in short was this: that the was P. Paul the 3d's Sifter, and the person to whom he owed his Cardinals Cap, and by Consequence all that followed upon it, tho he rewarded her ill for it; for he poyfoned both her and his Mother, that he might have alltheir Wealth; their Father was a poor man, that went about felling Saucidges and fuch fort of stuff. Clara was married young, and was foon a Widdow; the was a lovely woman, but no Extraordinary beauty: her Brother was bred to Letters, and was one of those poor Churchmen, that was looking about on all hands where he might find a Patron; when of a fudden his Sifters charms and her artifices together raised him to a height, to which he was far enough from pretending at that time. On a great occasion Clara Farnese was so near P. Alexander the 6th, and was so much in his Eye & in his thoughts, that he ordered one that was about him, to enquire who she was, and where the lived: Instruments upon such occasions are never wanting to great Perfons: and notwithstanding the Popes great Age, yet his Vices hung still so close to him, that he could have no quiet till Clara Farnese was brought him. 1 She resolved to manage her self on this occafion, and to raise her price all that was possible, so a Cardinals (ap to her Brother was both asked and granted: a promise of it was made at least, upon which she came and attended on the old leud Pope: yet when the next Promotion came to be in agitation, the Proposition for Abbot Farnese was rejected by Cesar Borgia with scorn; he had never been a flave to his word, and he had no mind that his Father should observe it on this occasion.

The way of a Promotion is this, the Pope setles the List of the Cardinals, and writes down all their names in a paper with his own hand; and in a Confistory, when all other business is ended, he throws down the Paper on the Table, and fay's to the Cardinals, habetis Fratres;

gouhave now some Brethren. One of the Secretaries upon that takes up the Paper, and reads the Names aloud; and the Shiri are at the door, and as soon as one is named, they run for it, to see who shall be able to carry the first tion newes of it to the party concerned.

Upon this occasion, the Pope after he had concerted the Promotion with his Son, writ down all the names. Clara Farnese was in great apprehensions for her Brother, so she being to pass that night with the Pope, rife when the old man wastaft afleep, & learched his Pocket, & found the Paper, but her Brothers name was not in it: then she let her self with great care to counterfeit the Popes hand; and writ her Brothers name the first in the Lift: next morning the kept the Pope as long in bed as was possible; till word was brought him, that the Confiftery was let, and that the Cardinals were all come: for the reckoned that the less time that the Pope had for being drest, there was the less Danger of his looking into his Paper: So without ever opening it, he went into the Confistory, and according to Custom, he threw down the lift on the Table: but to the great furprise of him, and of all that were upon his Secrets, the first name that was read, was that of Abbot Farnese; and it seems the Pope thought it better to let the matter pass, than to fuffer the true fecret of the business to break out. It is well that the Doctrine of the Intention,

Paul the thirds greatness, who lived above to years after this, and laid the Foundation of the Family of Parma, which he saw quite overthrown, his Son being assassinated in his own time; and both his Grand-children having revolted against him, which, as was believed, precipitated his death, tho he was then Four-

But now I return to the present Pope; for I have writ you a very loofe fort of a Letter, all made up of digressions. His aversion to the Order of the fesuites is very visible; for he takes all occasions to mortify them; and every thing that is proposed to him, thrives the worse for their fakes, if he believes they are concerned in it; which was given by all at Rome, as the true reason of the cold usage that the English Ambassadour found there. Indeed the Pope is not fingular in the hard thoughts that he has of that Order: I never faw an Indifferent man in all Italy, that was of another mind: they do generally look upon them as a Covetous, Fraudulent, Intriguing, and turbulent fort of people; who cannever be at quiet, unless they reign: who are men of no Morals, that will stick at nothing that may raise the Wealth and Power of their Order: and at Rome they do not flick to fay, that all the concerns

The Letter that was writ in February last from Liege to the lesuites at Friburg, of which fo many Copies were given, that it got to the Press at last, was a good Instance of their Vanity, and of the small regard that they have to a Prince, that has as they give out, fo much forthem. In a word, all the Romans have fo very ill an Opinion of the Iefuits, that as foon as any piece of Newes comes from England, that is not favourable to their Affairs, one finds all. from the highest to the lowest, agree in the fame short reflection; Thus it must ever be, where the Iesuites have such a share in the Councils. A man long practifed in the Court of Rome, told me, it was impossible it could be otherwise, for all the chief men of that Order are kept teaching in their Schools, till they are almost forty years of age; and by that means Pedantry, a disputatious and Imperious humour, and a peevish littleness of foul, becomes natural to them, to that an Emie

But besides all these General Considerations, there are some things in the Constitution of the Order of the Iesuites that give those at Rome reason enough to be on their Guard against them. There are two things peculiar to this Order that make it very formidable; the one is, that those who have made the fourth vow are capable of no Preferment, unless it be to be Cardinals, and then they are indeed capable of Bishopricks. Inmost of the other Orders, every man has his own private Interest, and his particular views; so that they are not always looking after the concerns of their Order. But a Iesuite can receive no Honour but from his Order, therefore he Consecrates himself to it, and advances the Interests of the Society with all possible zeal, knowing that there is no other way left him to advance his own Interests, but this. So that Hope being one of the great Springs of humane Nature, a Iesuite, who hopes for nothing but from his Order, must be extreamly devoted to it. Besides this, a Jesuite fears nothing but from his Order: They have not a Cardinal Protector, an Appeal lies from the sentence of the General of the Order: but the Iesuites are abody more shut up within themselves; for the sentence of the General is definitive, and can never be reviewed, no Appeal lying from it: whensoever a Pope comes that dares mortify them, he will open a way for Appeals, for till that is done, the General of the Iesuites is the most Absolute and the most Arbitrary

All these things concur to Unite almost all the several Interests in Rome against this Society, which yet is strong enough to support it telf against them all: they have the Mission generally in their hands; for the Congregation de Propaganda, payes a small pension of 20 Crowns to all the Secular Priests that are on the Mission, whereas the Iesuites bear the expences of their own Miffionaries, to whom they allow an 100 Crowns a year: & to those of the Propaganda being willing to be eased of a charge, accept of the Missionaries that the lesuites offer them: and they find their account in this. Their Missionaries are powerfully recommended, fo they are quickly received into Families, especially where there are yong children to be bred up, or Estates to be managed: for in these two lies their strength: but they never forget their Order, for which they are as so many Factors every where:

where: and they draw vast Presents from all places to the House that returns them their Appointments; wheras the poor Secular Priest must make a shift to live out of the small allowance that he has from the Congregation de Propaganda fide, and out of what he can raise by his Masses. Therefore there is nothing that they defire fo much, as to fee Protestant States that give a Tolerance to Popery, grow once so wise as to shut out all the Regulars, and above all the fesuites; and to admit none but Secular Priests: for the former, as they are 10 many Agents, to returnall the wealth that they can possibly draw together, to the house to which they belong, so they are united together in one Body, under a most strict Obedience to their General, which may be as great a prejudice to the Peace and Security of a Countrey, as the other is to its Wealth and Abundance: on the other hand, the Secular Priests are generally good-natured men, who are only subject to their Bishop, and that have no defigns upon the Government, nor the Concerns of any House that is in Forreign Parts lying upon them: so that since those of that Communion have the full exercise and all the Confolation of their Religion from Secular Priests, even those in Rome it self wonder at the Error of Protestant States, who have not Learned long ago to make this difference in the Toleration that they allow: And one that has

And now I am fure, I have rambled over a great Variety of matter, and have made a shift to bring in to one place or other of this Letter, a great many particulars, that I could have hardly brought out in an exactness of Method, without a much greater compais of words, and a greater stifness of form: but I thought it was more natural, and by consequence, that it would be more acceptable to you, to make them follow one another, in an easy and unforced contexture. I have discoursed all these matters often over and over again fince I came into Italy: but I have read very little concerning them; therefore there may be many things here, that I mention because they were new to me, that perhaps are no newes to those that are much more Learned than my felf. I have told you all that I could gather upon these subjects from the wifest and worthiest men that I have yet matter for another long letter, in which the matters of Religion will have no share; for I will end all these in this: and therfore there is one piece of the Super-Stition of Lombardy, that affected me too fenfibly, not to lead me to bestow a severe cenfure upon it. I went through that Country in October, and November, and was often in great diffress, because it was not possible to find a Glass of Wine, that could be drunk, all being either dead or four. At Parma I waited on an Eminent Person, and lamented to him the misery of Travallers, since no Wine was to be found that could be drunk: he told me, the Natives felt this much more fenfibly than Strangers did, with whom it was foon over, but they were condemned to fuffer that every year; and tho he himself had Vineyards, that produced much more Wine than he could confume, yet he could not be Master of a good Glass of Wine, for a great many Months of the year; fince all the people were possessed with this Superstition, that it was Indispensably necessary to mix it with Water in the Cask, that by this means it drunk dead or four for so great a part of the year: and all that could be faid could not beat this out of the heads of those that dressed their Wine: but he added, that the Priests, who confirmed the vulgar in this Conceit, had found a Device to excuse their own Wine from this hard fate: for they faid, it must needs be kept unmixed fince in the Sacrament the Wine must be pure, and is then only to be mixed with Water; and thus in all their Cellars good Wine is to be found, where there is not a drop any where elfe that can be drunk: one would think that this is to abuse the Weakness and Credulity of the People, a little too grofly, when they condemn all the laity to drink ill Wine, whereas they themselves drink it pure, which is felt more fenfibly by the Laity, than the depriving them of the Chalice, and the engroffing it to the Priest in the Sacrament. Yet the Excise that is laid on the Wine in Florence, has taught the Inhabitants a point of Wisdom, that those on the other side of the Appenins are not capable of; for the Excise being raised upon all their Wine, the People who have no mind to pay Excise for Water, keep their Wine pure, fo perhaps fome fuch feverity in the Government in Lombardy, may likewise reform them in this piece of absurd Superstition, which Ifelt too fensibly with all the effects that naturally follow the drinking of four Liquor, not to Infift upon it with fome more than ordinary con-But H 5 cern.

But since I am upon the point, of the Arts that the Convents have to live easy, I will end this Letter with an account of a House that was very Extraordinary, which I faw in my way to Italy thro Bavaria; Etal, an Abbey of Benedictines, that by its foundation is bound only to maintain an Abbot and 25 Monks. It was founded by Lewis Duke of Bavaria, that was Emperour: the building is not answerable to the Endowment, which is so vast, that they keep a stable of 150 horses, which is indeed one of the best in Germany, the horses are of great value, and wellkept: they hunt perpetually, and live in as great an abundance of all things as the Duke of Bavaria himself can do; and yet these are Religious men, that are dead to the World.

I cannot forget to tell you a very beautifully diversified prospect that we had at Burgo, a little Town in the hills of Trent, as we lookt out at window, We saw before us a lovely Meadow in all the Beauty and that was a rising Bank all covered over with Trees in their full verdure: beyond that the dead and dry, as after Harvest: and beyond that there was a huge hill, all covered on the top

POSTSCRIPT.

I find I have forgot to mention one very extravagant piece of Devotion, to which I was a Witnessat Rome, on the 17 of January, which is St. Anthonys day, that was the great Father of the Monastick Orders, whose Life is pretended to be writ by S. Athanase; all Horfer and other Beafts of Burden are believed to bein an especial manner under his Protection: and the Monks of his Order, have a House near St. Maria Maggiore; thither all the Horses, Mulets and Asses of Rome, and all round the City, are brought that day to the door of the Church, where some Monks fland with a Broom in holy water, and sprinkle it upon them all: many Doggs and Lambs, and other tavo.

favorite Animals, are also brought to share in this Aspersion: which is believed to have a most special vertue: the force of this hallowing is believed to be such, that if any should fail to bring his Horses thither, all the Neighbourhood would look on those that have no portion in it, as accurfed Animals, upon whom fome unlucky Accident were hanging; which is so firmly believed, that none would hire a Horse or a Mulet, that had not been so sprinkled. So that from the Popes Horses down to the poorest man in Rome, all are brought thither; but this is not all, the profitable part of this piece of Folly is, that every one brings a Present; the richer fort send Purfes of Money; some give great Wax-Lights, all stuck full of Testons (a piece of 20 pence) the poorer bring either smaller pieces of Money, or Presents of Wine, Oyl, Bread, or fuch things as they can afford: but in a Word, no man comes empty; fo that this is the Market-day of those Monks, in which for some Gallons of Water and Sale, they get more Presents, than would serve to maintain them for feven years: they quickly convert all that is not necessary for them into Money: and by this means they are vastly rich. When I saw all this, I could not but think that men must become first Beast's themselves, before things of this kind could pass upon them: but since I have added added this in a Postscript, rather than give my felf the trouble to make it come in pertinently into my Letter I will add another particular that is writ me from Rome the fixth of

I am told, that men are now more puzled in their thoughts with Relation to the business of Molinos than ever. It was Visible that his Abjuration was only a pretended thing; for in effect he has abjured nothing: his party believe, that they are very numerous, not only in Rome, Italy, Spain, and France, and in all these parts of the world, but that they have many followers even in America it felf: one fees now in almost all the Churches in Rome some ofthem praying in corners, with their Hands and Eyes lifted up to Heaven, and all in Tears, and Sighs; which is no small trouble to those who thought they had quite routed them: but find they are not fo much quasht as it was thought they would have been by the mock Triumph that was made upon Molinos. Nor do they believe a word of those Reports that are spread of his Leudness: they say, there was no Proof ever brought of it; and that there are many thousands in Rome, of both sexes, that conversed much with him, who have all possible reason to conclude, that all these stories that were given out concerning him, are Impudent Calumnies, set about only to blast Him and his Do-

It belongs to Mr. Malapert, and has been wrought above 60 years; but the present Master of it, as he is a man of great worth, fo he is very Ingenious, and has much perfected that, which was managed at a much greater Expence before he undertook it. There rifes at the foot of some little Hills, which produce a very good Wine, a Spring of Water, that is so very little brackish to the taft, that one will hardly think it possible to fetch much Salt out of it; yet it has such a tast of Salt, that there was room for Industry to prepare this Water, fo that without fuch an expence in Fire as should eat out the profit, it might turn to a good account; which Mr. Malapert seems to have carried as far as is possible. The Meadow that lies in the levil with this Spring, is Impregnate with Salt, Iron, Nitre, and Sulphur: but Salt is that which prevails: first then, a Pump is put upon this Spring, which is managed by a Watermil, and throws up the Water about fifteen Foot high; and then it goes by a Pipe into vast Machines, that are made to receive it.

There is a great piece of ground Inclosed, in which there are 24 vait Chefts or Cifterns for the Water, in two stories, 12 in a story, the one just over the other; they are about seventy footlong, twelve broad, and two deep; over every one of these, there is a roof of boards, supported by wooden Pillars, of 12 foothigh; which covers them from Rain-water, but yet the water within them is in a full exposition to the Sun; those roofs are hung with straw, upon which some that manage the work, are often throwing up the Water, fo that a great deal of the phlegme is Imbibed by the Straw, and the more fixed parts fall down: according to the heat of the Season, this Evaporation of the watry parts, goes quicker or flower; there isa Gage, by which they Weigh the Water, and fo they know how the Evaporation advances; it is of Silver, and is so made, that according to the weight of the Water, it finks in it to fuch a depth; & fo by the degrees markt upon it, they know how heavy the Water is: according then to the heat of the feafon, and the progress of the Evaporation, they let the Water out of one Ciftern into another, by a Pipe, and when it has past thro the 12 that are in the upper story, then it is conveyed down by Pipes into the 12 that are below, and in them all they continue still to throw up the water upon the Withs of Straw, that are over head. In a word, this Evaporation discharges the

.Water of so much of its Phlegm, that the same quantity of water, that weighed one ounce when it was drawn from the Spring, weighs fix ounces in this last Chest: and all this rolling about of the Water from Cheft to Cheft lasts sometimes not above twenty day's; but if the season is only moderately hot, it will be longeradoing; fometimes it will not be done in a month's time: after that the Water is brought to a very considerable degree of Saltness, it is conveyed into two great Cauldrons, that are 13 footlong, ten broad, & 21 deep; under which there are vast Furnaces, where in a most violent Fire of 1 10r1 2 hours continuance, the Water receives its last Evaporation; & when that is done, the Salt which is become thick, but is still moist, is taken up in Baskets of Willows, and placed about the wall of the Furnace: and so the humidity that remains in it drops out, and it is brought to its last degree ofperfection: out of it, a Tyth is payed; of which the Elector of Ments has one half, and the City of Francfort the other. This Salt is exceeding good and pleafant to the taft. It is much solider and more like the Portugal Salt, than like our Newcastle salt. It ierveth very well all the uses of the Kitchin, and Table : but it has not strength enough to preserve things long. There are vast quantities made of it in hot and dry Summers: for the Chests are always kept full: and thus all FranPranconia is furnished with Salt of its own production at very moderate rates; for there is so great a lessening of the Expence of the fire by this conveyance of the water thro so many Chests, that it is afforded very cheap. This I thought deserved well that I should Interrupt the earnestness in which you be, to hear what I have to tell you concerning Italy, so that I hope you will not be ill pleased with it, especially if your curiosity after the History of nature is as great as it was.

I now go over in one step all the fourney that I made from hence to Italy, which is certainly the bigbest scituated Country in Europe: for as the Rhine and Danube, that rife in the Alpes, and run down to the Ocean and the Euxine, shewes you that all that tract of ground to those Seas is a constant descent; 10 when one comes to the Alpes, either on the French or on the German fide, he is a great many days in climbing up thole vast mountains, but the descent on the Italian side is very Inconsiderable, This appears yet more fentible when one comes from Turin, where the ascent up Mount Senice is but a work of a few hours: and yet from the height of that bill, one is in a constant descent till he comes to Lions. I will not carry you about Italy, to tell you the remarkable things that are there; but will only tell you some particulars that made the greatest Impression on my self, and K 2 which which were not feen by Dr. Burnet. In my way from Parma to Mantua, I past at Guaftale, which is half way between them, 18 miles distant from both; where I saw a scene that surprised me. This Town is situated on the fouthfide of the Po, at halfamiles distance from it: It was a confiderable branch of the Territory of Mantua, that was given off to one of the Cadets of that Family, and was fetled in an intail to the Heir male. The best part of the Revenue of this small Principality, was a Duty that was payed for all merchandises that went or came upon the Po, which when the Trade of Italy was in a more flourishing condition than it is at present, was farmed for above Threescore thousand Crowns. The situation of this place makes it yet much more confiderable than it is in it felf; for as it lies in the neighbourhood of the Principalities of Parma and Modena, and is not far from the Popes Territory, so it this place is Master of the Po, by croffing it, the detachments that may be fent outfrom it are not only in the Territory of Mantua, but they may be also in a very few hours both in the Milanese and in the Venetian Dominion; so that Guastale in some respect may be esteemed the Center of all the States of Lombardy. The Duke of Mantua married the Daughter of the last Duke of Guastale, who died in the year 1680. and his Nephew Don Velpasiane Gonzaga, who was then in the the Spanish service, wasacknowledged to be his undoubted Heir: fo he came & took peaceable possession of his Dutchy: He was extreamly much beloved by his Subjects, and thought himself at quiet in the enjoyment of his new Dignity: but all this was foon overturned; for one came to him from the Court of France, to let him know, that that Great King could not be wanting to his Ally the Duke of Mantua, to whom Guastale belonged of right, his Dutches being the Daughter and Heir of the late Duke, and that therefore fince he had usurped the just right of another, the French King warned him, that if he did not withdraw of his own accord, he would give order to put the D. of Mantua in possession. It was to no purpose to argue against all this, and to shew the Messenger that Guastale was a Fee intailed on the Heir male, of which there had never been the least dispute: But reasons taken from the equity of the thing, are feldom thought strong enough to hold the ballance against reasons of State: so the poor Prince being in no condition to relift so powerful an Enemy, was forced to abandon his Right, and to withdraw, and he was again entertained by the Spaniards. For the there was a fort of a fortification cast about Guastale 50 or 60 year ago, yet as that was at best an Inconsiderable defence, so even that was now quite ruis K 3

But in the beginning of the year 1686. the mystery of this matter begun to appear: for Mr. du Plessis, a French Engineer, came thither, under the pretence of repairing the old Fortisications, and designed a Noble and a Regular Fortisication: It is to be a Hexagone, with all necessary Out-works; and there is a great Splanade that is to be made round the place, and all the houses or trees that are within a considerable distance are to be beat down. In a word, the design is great, and will be executed in all the exactness of the modern Fortisication; so that the advantage of the structure, will make it the most Important place of Italy, and that which will bridle al Lombardy, and be able to put it all under Contribution upon every occasion. The Works were begun in A pril 1686. and everfince they havekept 400 men constantly at work, upon the pay of a Julio a day: another year will go near to finish it. And yet the here the justest ground possible, is given to alarm all Italy, none feems to be fo much as concerned at it. The Venetians, that have at all other times, valued themselves upon their prospect of Danger, even at the greatest distance, either do not see this, or dare not own their fear. It is true, all this is carried on in the name of the D. of Mantua: but it is as certain, that tho it lies so near him, he has never been at the pains to go and fee it: It has never been fo much as once considered by his Council; nor ishis Revenue in such a condition as to bear fuch an encrease of Expence: and yet it passes among the people there, that this is a great strength, that is to be made to keep the French out of Italy; and some Priests that are corrupted to serve the French Interests promote this Fiction. If the Venerians look on till this is finished, they will do very well to affure themfelves of their new Conquetts in the Morea, for their Antient ones in the Terra firma of Italy will probably fail them very quickly.

All those of the Territory, who know well that their Princes name is only made use of,

I faw, during my stay in Mantua, how much all the sensible people there, are concerned to fee their Prince deliver himself up so blindly to the French Interests: they told me, that since his childhood he has been so beset with the Instruments and Agents of that Court, that his Inclinations for them are become as another nature inhim: he was not out of Childhood, when almost all his Domesticks, and his masters, both for Languages and Armes, were furnished him from thence. His putting Cassale in the hands of that Monarch, was one good Evidence, and now the business of Guastale is another, to thew that they have gained fuch an Afcendant over his Spirit, and have Infinuated themfelves so much into him, in all those fatal hours of Liberty which he allows himfelf, that it is not thought he will stick at any thing that they demand of him, unless it be at his own going into France; to which he has been much solicited: but it is not so much as doubted, that if he goes once into that Countrey, he will never come out of it again. Of this a very Extraordinary Instance appeared not long ago, in the Difgrace of the Marquisses of Cannosse and Palliotti: the first of these is his Kinsman, and has served him now for many years, with as much Fidelity as Affection; the second was Captain of his Guards, and Governour of the Castle of Mantua which commands the Town. These then had the Courage as well as the Fidelity, to lay before him the Ruin that he was like to bring upon himself as well as upon all Italy, by delivering himself up so intirely to the French Councils, and by putting them first in possession of Guastale, and now suffering then to Fortify it, which was in effect the delivering up of his Principality, and of all KS his his People to them; who looked upon themfelves as brought already under a Forreign Yoke: they also represented to him the danger of having almost no other Domesticks but Frenchmen about him, who were all as fo many Spies upon him, and upon all that were near him, and that were very exact in giving the French Envoy Mr. Baumbeau an account of everything that he either faid or did. Thefe Demonstrances made some Impressions on the Duke, and he promised to them to find out an effectuall Remedy to all those Evils: But this was not a secret very long; Money and Spies find out every thing; and it is possible that they who gave the Duke these faithfull Advices might have been engaged to it, either by some Instruments of the Court of Spain, or of the Republick of Venice: yet the truth of this is not known, but the French Envoy made a shift to charge them so heavily, that he got them both to be made close Prisoners; in this condition they were when I was at

take a fure measure of the weakness of Italy. Subjects that retain still all the due liberties of humane nature, and that are not under an Arbitrary but a Legall Government; fight for themselves, as well as for their Prince; but if they are already as miserable as they can be, fo that a change may perhaps put them in a better condition, but can hardly put them in aworse, they will not much concern themfelves in their Princes Quarrel, fince they only fight for the continuance, if not for the en-crease of their Slavery. But now to return to the Duke of Mantua; the French Envoy has fince that time stuck closer to him than ever; he indeed waits always on him, sometimes acting like an Officer of his Houshold, and at other times like the Governour of his Person: he made the tour of Italy with him this year, and waited on him to Millan, Genoa, Florence, Rome, Naples and Venice, wherethey passed the Carnavall together: and he took a most particular care that the Duke should meet with none in all those places, that might open his eyes, to let him see the Ruin that he is bringing upon himself; yet after all, one of his Secretaries, had still the Integrity and Courage to give him such faithful Councels, as had been fatal to others: yet the Duke used him better than he had done the two Marquisses: for tho the French Spies discovered him likewise, yet, nothing nothing could be done to hurt him in the Dukes good opinion, therefore it was resolved to take another method to tear fo dangerous a man from him; so he being sent to negotiate some business at the Court of Turin, was often invited to goa Hunting, which he relifted for a great while, tho the French Ambassadour pressed him much to it; at last he was overcome, but his sport was fatal to him; for he was feifed on, and carried by a small Party fent from Pignarol as is believed. In short, he is in the hands of the French, and it is faid in Italy, that he is clapt up in St. Margarite one of the little Mands in the Mediterranean sea. This matter was at first highly resented by the Duke, but a little time will shew whether the careffes of the Court of France can foften. him in this matter or not; for if they can lay him afleep after fuch an Attempt, then all persons will conclude that he is so much in their power, that none will dare to run. the hazard of undeceiving him any more.

Those in the Mount ferrat feel what a Neighbour Cassal is to them; that Imperious way of proceeding, without having any great regard to Justice, or to Contracts and Aggreements, that is practised in France, begins to be felt here likewise: of which many smaller Instances were given me, but I will tell you two that were more remarkable; when the Garrison was first settled in Cassal, those of the Mount ferrat held the price of their Corn fo high, that it was hard to furnish the Garrison with Bread: fo some of Piedmont undertook to supply them for two years at 21 Livers the Ration, and the bargain being made , they bought in great stores, and so they quickly filled their Granaries: upon this some in the Mountferrat came and offered to serve the Garrison at 14 Liversthe Ration, upon which the other bargain tho made as fure as any fuch contract can possibly be made, was broke, and the undertakers were ruined by it. otherstory was, that in order to the building the Fortifications, some Masons made a bargain at 32 Livers such a measure, to they brought togethera great number of Workmen, and were at work; when others came and offer'd to perform the work at 28 Livers, for which the others had 32 Livers, only they demanded a confiderable advance; fo the first Bargain was presently broken, to the great loss of the Undertakers: but the 2d Undertakers, that had Money advanced them, found they had made a Bargain that was too hard for them to execute, fo they ran away with the Money, to the great joy of the Countrey. He that told me this, faid, that perhaps it surprised the Italians, who were not yet acquainted with fuch things; but nothing of that kind would feem extraordinary in France, which was fo much accustomed to such a way of proceeding that he gave me a particular account of fo many, that he had reason to know well, as would fill a Book : but that which touched him most sensibly, was the Fonds that was made for an East-India Company, to which the King gave in three Millions, with this politive Assurance, that all the Losses and Dammage of the Company should fall on that Stock. This was a great encouragment to draw in men, to put Money into the stock, and the Court fet on the Project with so much Zeal, that Letters were writ to all the great Bodies and Towns of France, that were confidered rather as Commands than Defires: yet after all were engaged, upon the first occasion the Kings . three Millions were taken out of the flock, and the rest were left to shift for themselves.

But I must here give you an account of a very Extraordinary Transaction in the Course of Turin, which is likewise thought an effect of the Authority that the Councils of France have likewise there. The Marquis de Pianesse the son of him that set on the Massacre of the Protestants in the Valleys of Piedmont 34 years ago, was in great savour with the late Duke of Savoy, but the war of Genea miscarried so in his hands in the year 1672 that the Duke could never forgive him that matter; of which the Resentments were so quick when he died, that he left a charge on Madame Royale, never to forgive him, nor to Imploy him Policy & Interests of ITALY. 159 him: he upon his Dilgrace retired into France and was fo well entertained there, that he had Interest enough to procure a Recommendation from the King to the Dutchels of Savoy in his favour; but her Excuse was so reafonable, being founded on the Orders she had received from the Duke on his Death bed, that there was no reply to be made to it : yet afterwards a Nephew of his, the Count Maffin, was so happy in the Dutchesses favour, that he found he only wanted a Head as able as his Uncles was to support him in that credit, which her favour gave him: and he was so much in the good graces of Mad. Royale, that he at last prevailed with her to bring his Uncle into the chief Ministry; he being certainly one of the ablest men that belongs to that Court; and the pretence found to bring this about decently, was, that the Dutchesse did tecretly Intimate to the Court of France, that she found it necessary to Imploy the Marq. de Pianesse, and therfore she desired that the King would renew his recommendation of him, which being done, he was received into the Ministry, and had the chief stroke in all Affairs: he placed another of his Nepherus about the Duke, and supported him so that he got very far into his favour, so Mr. de Pianesse observing great Disorders in the Government, and a great and useless Consumption of the Revenue, heln-Aructed his Nephew that was about the Duke fo well, that he entertained the young Duke often upon thefe heads, who was not then 15 year old: he shewed him how his Countrey was ruined by his Mothers ill conduct, and was always suggesting to him the Necessity of his assuming the Government, and putting an end to his Mothers Regency, which is a discourse to which all Persons of that Age have fuch a natural Inclination, that it was no wonder if both Uncle and Nephew came to believe that the Duke hearkned to the Proposition: but the Duke thought it too hardy a thing to venture on it, without confulting it with some wiser heads; upon which Mr. de Pianesses Nephew told him, that he would bring his Uncle to him, who would conduct the matter for him; for tho he had great obligations to Madam Royale, yet his Fidelity to his Prince, and his Affection to his Countrey overcame them all. This was a great furprise to the Duke, who looked on Mr. de Pianesse as the person in the World, that was the most obliged to his Mother, and that was the most in her Interests: and it was believed that the prejudice which this gave him, blafted this whole defign: yet he gave him feveral Audiences in fecret, and had concerted with him the whole method, both of assuming and managing the Government: which was carried on fo fecretly, that there was no suspition of the matter, till the day be14/5 before it was to break out, and that the Duke wasto withdraw himself from his Mother: but then it was discovered, and the Duke to reconcile himself to his Mother, sacrificed the Marq. de Pianesse to her resentments: he was not only Difgraced, and put in Prifon, but his processe was made before the Court of Parliament of Chambery, for having endeavoured to throw the Government into a Confusion, by sowing of Division between the Duke and his Mother : yet he defended himself fo well that he was acquitted, but he continues still a Prisoner: upon his Disgrace; there was none that durft oppose him felf to Mad. Royale, or offer any advices to the Duke, fo that the Court of Turin was as absolutely governed by the Directions that were fent from the Court of France, as if the one had been the Vassal, if not the Subject to the other.

I will not prosecute this discourse to tell you that which all Europe knows, of the designed Match with the Infanta of Portugal, by which Savoy and Piedmont would have undoubtely fallen into the hands of the French. The breaking of this, and the Dukes being Porsoned, as well as his Father had been, tho his youth carried him thro it, are things too well known, for you to be Ignorant of them. It is true, those who Porsoned the present Duke, have not been yet Discovered and punished.

nished, as those were who poyloned his Father. While I was at Turin, there was a discourse, that the Duke was reflecting on the Wise Advices that Mr. de Pianesse had given him, and that he Intended not only to bring him out of prison, but to receive him again into the Ministry, which is confirmed to me fince I left those parts. There is nothing more Visible, than that the Dukes of Savoy have funk extreamly in this Age, from the figure which they made in the laft; and how much soever they may have raised their Titular Dignity, in having the Title of Royal Highness given them, they have lost as much in the Figure, that they made in the affairs of Europe: and it is now almost too late to think of a Remedy: for Pignerol and Cassal are two very Inconvenient neighbours. The truth is, the Vanity of this Title, and the expenceful humour that their late Marriages with France has spread among them, have undone them, for instead of keeping good Troops and strong places, all the Revenue goes to the keeping up of the Magnificence of the Court; which is indeed very fplendid.

I will not ingage in a Relation of this last Affair of the Valleys of Piedmont; for I could not find particulars enough, to give you that so distinctly as you may perhaps desire it. It was all over, long before I came to Turin?

but this I found, that all the Court there, were ashamed of the matter: and they took pains upon Strangers, not without some affectation, to convince them that the Duke was very hardly drawn to it: that he was long pressed to it, by the repeated Instances from the Court of France; that he excused it, representing to the Court of France the constant Fidelity of those people ever fince the last Edist of Pacification, and their great Industry, fo that they were the profitablest Subjects that the Duke had, and that the body of men which they had given his Father in the last War with Genea, had done great Service; for it saved the whole Army: but all these Excuses were without effect; for the Court of France having broken its own Faith, that had been given to Hereticks, and in that shewed, how true a respect it pays to the Council of Constance, had a mind to engage other Princes to follow this new Pattern of Fidelity that it set the world: so the Duke was not only pressed to extirpate the Hereticks of those Valeys; but this Threatning was added, that if he would not do it, the King would fend his own Troops to extirpate Herefy; for he would not only not fuffer it in his own Kingdom, but would even drive it out of his Neighbourhood. He who told me all this, knowing of what Countrey I was, added, that perhaps he would within a little while fend the like Messages to some others of his Neighbours. But

But to return to the expence that is made in the Court of Turin, I cannot forget a difcourse that I had on this subject with a German, that was a man of very good fense: he told me, that nothing ruined the Empire so much, as the great Magnificence which all the Princes affected to keep up in their Courts; and the Luxury in which they begun to live, which had much corrupted the Antient Simplicity and Gallantry of that great and Warlike Nation. Not only the Nobility, but their very Princes travel into France; and are so much taken with the Splendor & Luxury that they fee there, that they return home quite spoiled with the ill Impressions that this makes on them. They carry home with them French-Cooks, and all the contrivances of Pleasure that are so much studied there, for the vitiating the minds of their Countreymen: and by a vaff Expence, they not only exhauft their Revenue, and ruin their Subjects, but they become fo liable to corruption, that if their Income at home cannot support their charge, both their Princes and their Ministers are reduced, as it were to the necessity of taking Pensions, from those whose Instruments have fet on this Luxury, and whose Pensions will still support it, till the Germans are sufficiently enervated by the Feebleness into which all that Luxury must needs throw them, and then they will despise and trample

I need not inlarge to you on the Poverty & Misery that appears in Pisa, where there remains yet enough to shew what they once were, and how much they are now funk from what they were while they were a Free State: but all this is much more sensible, when one goes from hence to Lucca, which tho it has not the advantage of fituation that Pifa has, yet is quite another fort of a place. The Town, is well built, full of People, and as full of Wealth: the whole foil of this small State is well Cultivated and is full of Villages, all the marks and effects of Liberty appear, in an Universal Civility, & agenerous and frank way of living: This is also the place of all Italy that is freeit of all Crimes and Publick Vices; they value themselves upon nothing but their Liberty, of which the State is so Jealous, that the frequent change of their Magistrates; from two Moneths to two Moneths, & the Restraint in which they are kept while they bear Office, they being indeed honorable Prisoners all the while, have preserved that here, which so many of their Neighbouring States have lolt: and as Liberty is engraven in Capital Letters, upon the Publick Buildings of this State, to it appears to be much deeper in all their Hearts.

Hearts. One sees the Effects of their Wealth, in all their Publick works, as well as in the Fortifications of this place, which are much better, and better kept than in any place I saw in Italy, except Genoa. There is on the inward side of the Ramparts, a noble Plantation, which is one of the beautifullest Decorations that belongs to this place; for as there is a considerable space lest void between the Ramparts and the Buildings, so this is planted all about the whole Town, with several rows of Trees, which afford pleasant Walks, and a lovely Shade, which is no small matter, where they are exposed to so hot a Sun.

I come in the last place to give you an account of Genoa, which tho it is notable now to Compete as it did some Ages ago with the Republick of Venice, yet is still a great Body and full of Wealth; one that comes out of the Popes Pairimony and Tuscany, into this narrow horder that lies between the Hills and the Sea, should expect to find as great a difference between their abounding in People and Wealth, as there is between the soil of these two Countries: but he finds the change just contrary to what in reason he ought to expect: for all this edge of soil, is so full of Villages and Towns, and there is so great a plenty of Maney and of every thing else here, that it Amales a Traveller no less, than the abandoned state of those other places.

The numbers of the subjects of this Republick, are estimated to 320000 Persons; which are thus reckoned up; In the Town of Genoa it felf there are about 80000. Persons: in the Villages and Towns that lie Westward there are 120000. and 20000. in those that lie to the East: and the Inhabitants of the Island of Corfica are reckoned to be 100000. They keep two small Forts in Corfica, one at Calvi on that end that looks to Genoa, and another at Boniface on the other end that looks to Sardinia; for they have let S. Fiorenza and some other small places go to ruin. These two are confiderable in themselves, and command two very good Harbours; yet as the building in Calvi are too much exposed and too high, so Boniface is under a high Ground, that is within musket shut of it, and that commands it: these places are now in a sad condition, ill kept, and ill furnished both with Men and Animunition, so that they could not make a great Resistance, there being but 150 men in Calvi, and 200 in Boniface; and it is believed, that the reason of their letting S. Fiorenza go to ruin, is, the Greatness of the Place, and the Expence of keeping it. The Corfes are extreamly brave, and have a Rage in their courage, that would be much more valueable and usefull than it is if they were more governable, and could be brought under an exact Discipline: but they are unruly, and

and as apt to Mutiny, when they fee no Enel my, as to fight well when it comes to that. The compals of the Fortification of Genoa is an amasing thing; for it runs all along the hills in a compass of many miles, I was told it was above 15 mile, & in the Expence that has been laid out on this and on the two Moles, chiefly the new one, one sees that this State spares nothing which Publick fafety or the Convenience of Trade do require : these Publick Works has run the Republick into a vast debt; for they owe above Nine Millions of Crowns that are upon the Bank, besides several other debts, in particular their great Debt to St. Georges House; the greatest part of the Revenue of this State stands engaged for the Interest that they pay, so that the whole Revenue amounts to 1200000 Crowns, they reckon that 900000 Crowns of this is engaged, fo that they have only three hundred thoufand Crowns clear for their whole Expence, which is so small a matter, that it is no wonder if they are in a low condition, and can do little upon so narrow a fond: their Revenue rises chiefly out of an Excise that falls so equally upon all the Subjects of this State, that they reckon that every man in Genoa, payes fix Growns a year to the State. The whole Land Forces of this State were but 3500 men, yet of late they have raised them up to 4000 men; of which 2500 are the Garrison of the City, and there are 600 in Savona, which after the City it felf is the most Important place that belongs to this State: the extent of the whole Countrey, that goes by the name of the River of Genoa, is 180 miles, of which 120 lie Westward, and 60 lie Eastward; the Mountains that are almost Impassible are thought a sufficient Defence to cover them from their Neighbours in Lombardy, and from the Duke of Savoy, and the State of Millan. It is true, they have one Fort called Gavi, that is 25 miles diftant from the Town, which has all the advantages of fitution that are possible for keeping the Passes thro the Mountains: but as they keep only a Garrison of 120 men in it, fo all things in it are fo neglected, that it could make no confiderable Refistance to an Enemy that could attack in vigoroufly. In short, the strength of this State is very Inconsiderable, their Souldiers are ill Disciplined, their Officers want Experience, and they have no good Engineers; the New Mole is indeed a vast work, built out into the Sea feven fathom deep, and there are an hundred pieces of Cannon onit to defend the Old Mole; their Naval forces confift in fix Galleys, and and two Men of War; but these are not kept as Ships of War, but are Imployed rather as Merchant-men, fo that they not only bear their own Expence, but bring in an Overplus to the State. Finale, which is the only Seaport that belongs to the State of Millan, is a poor abandoned Village without either Fortification or Garrison, nor do the Spanish Galleys come there any more; but make Genoa it self their Step, and Passage between Spain and Millan: so that an attempt upon Genoa was indeed the taking of all the Milanese, since the communication between Spain and it, being now thro Genoa, when soever this Republick salls into the hands of the French, all the Millanese must fall of it self, or rather indeed all Italy, must needs fall with it.

This is as far as I could understand it the outward force of Genoa: for it can expect little from its Allies, it having none at all befide Spain: and the Slowness and Feebleness of that Court, are too visible to give any State great Courage that has no other support belides this to depend on: As for their Neighbours in Italy, they have no fort of Commerce with them; for they pretend to a degree of Precedence, equal to the Venetians: and to have the respect of a Crowned Head pay'd to them, and this cuts off all Communication with the other Courts of Italy, who consider Venice in another manner than they do Genoa. As for Spain, they have all possible Engagements with it: many of the richest Families of Genoa have great Estates in the Mila. nese, and the other Dominions of the King of Spain 3

Spain; so that they must upon their own account be true to the Interests of that Crown, and Spain is as much concerned in their preservation as in any of its own Provinces, since it defends their Empire in Italy; so that Genoa and Spain are now inseparably united to one another, by their mutual Interests.

But I come next to give you some account of the Inward state of Genoa. It is known, that the Liberty was restored to them, by the most earnest Intercession of that great Captain, and gallant Countrey-man, Andreas Doria, whose Statue, in remembrance of this, is fet up in an open place in their Town: this was in the year 1528, yet tho from that time they had their Government in their own hands, they were still obliged to let a Squadron of the Spanish Gallys, Itand in their Arsenal, who kept then a Fleet of about 80. Gallys, so that till Spain was so much sunk from its former Greatness, that it was no more a Terrour to any of its Neighbours, Genoa was still in great dread of having their Liberty swallowed up by them, and therefore they do not reckon their entire Liberty but from the year 1624. or 1625, that they faw themselves out of all Danger from any of their Neighbours: France was not then begun to grow strong at Sea, and Spain was strong no where; so that since that time, till France that they had such a dreadful Neighbour of Touloun, they were safe and at quiet: but they fell under the common Disease of all Commonwealths, when they are long in Peace, and while their Commerce flourishes; a Spirit of Insolence and of Faction began to spread it self over the whole Town, which was grown to such a height, that in the Project that was offered to the Court of France, shewing the easiness of this Conquest (of which I have seen the Copy) the Divisions and Factions amongst them are proposed, as the chief ground upon which they sounded the Probability of the ruin of that Common-wealth.

There are three forts of Persons in Genoa. the Nobility, the Citizens, and the Inferior People. There are two Ranks of Wobility, the one is of the more Antient Families, the other is of those who have been chosen and raised up to that Dignity of late. It is true, the Aggreement that was made in the year 1576. between them, is exactly observed, by which the Government and the Publick Imployments are to be equally divided between them: but yet there is fo great a height of Pride kept up among the Ancient Families, that they will not Inter-marry with the other, and think it a diminution to them, to enter into any Familiarity with them, and even to keep them Company: this on the other hand kindles kindles an Indignation in those latter Families, when they see themselves so much despised by the other. The Ancient Families have a necessary Dependence upon the Crown of Spain, by the great Estates that they have in their Dominions; but the others, whole Estates lie rather in Money, which either is in the Bank, or that runs out in Exchange or Trade, they are concerned in nothing but in the preservation of their Bank, and by consequence in their Liberty; for none can doubt but that if they fell in the power of another Prince, the Debts on the Bank would be but ill payd. Thus the Nobility stand divided into two Factions, which discover their Animolities to one another upon very many occasions: for Publick Imployments are fought after here, with as much Intrigue as elsewhere. I will give you only one Instance of this, because it is both very refined, and it related to that Doge, whose Government was fo unhappy both by the Bombarding of Genoa, and by his own going to Verfailles to ask Pardon. He himself was a Man of a quiet temper, that did not aspire; but his Wife could not be satisfied till he was Doge, and she Dogeffe: so she set so many Machines at work, that after the feveral tours, that the matter made in the many Ballottings, it came to the fixing of the last three out of whom the Doge was to be chosen: and her Husband W23 was one of them; but there being one of the three, of whom the was very apprehenfive, the engaged one of her Friends, to feem fo affured of his Election, as to lay confiderable wagers with feveral of the Electors, who were likeliest to favour him, that he should be chosen: now they having a greater mind to win their Betts, than to promote their Friend, gave their Votes in favour of him, that was upon that made Doge.

The 2d body in Genoa is that of the Citizens, who feem to be extreamly weary of the Infolence of the Nobility; and there are many among them, that think themselves no way Inferiour to them, neither in the Antiquity, nor in the Dignity of their Families. do also complain of a great Injustice done them by the Nobility; for in the agreement made between the Nobility and the Citizens, in the year 1528. one Article was, that every year ten Citizens should be according to their merit received into their body. It is certain, that if this had been observed, the Wobility of Genoa had become by this time so common, that this would have funk its dignity extreamly: but instead of doing this yearly, it is now done but once in 30 years: so the Citizens complane much, that this Encouragment and Recompence of Merit is now withdrawn. The Nobility pretend on the other hand, that by that Agreement, they are only

Only enabled to make an Annuall promotion, but that they are not obliged to it: and I was told, that the Originall Record of that Agreement, could not be found now; and no doubt it has been destroyed by the Order of the Senate. In short, the Citizens have so great an aversion to the Government, that it was generally thought that they would eafily be prevailed on to shake it off, and to throw themselves rather into the Armes of another Prince, who would certainly have very foon trampled upon them all equally; for it is too commona thing, to see in all those Intestine Factions, that angry and ill-natured men, consider the last Injury, more than all other things: and are ready to facrifice all to their Refentments: and are so intent upon their Revenges, that often they will not look into the Consequences of what they do, but go on, which way foever the Anger of the Faction drives them: and those who are wife enough, to make their own Advantage of those Quarrels, and that are dextrous enough to manage them artificially, make commonly those parties take their turns in using one another ill, in which they know how to find their account: and as this observation holds often in Colder Climates, fo ina Countrey where revenges are very much ftudied and gratified, no wonder if this was much relied on. The third rank is of the Trades men and Rabble, who have their chief, depen-dependance upon the great Nobility: but they are a Vicious and dissolute fort of People, as any are in the world. And indeed all Genoa is so extreamly corrupt, so Ignorant, and so brutal, and solittle acquainted with the true Notions of Government, that here is a Common-wealth degenerated to such a degree, that it cannot resist a considerable shock. The Subjects are excessively Rich, tho the State is Poor: and this appears both in the Magnisticence of their Buildings, which is beyond Imagination, and in the great Wealth that is in their Churches and Convents, which seemed to me to be beyond what is in Venice it self.

A fenfible man that I knew there told me, that as there was among them a fort of Impunity to all Kind of Vice, fo their gross Ignorance made them Incapable to conduct their State; for while their Wealth blew them up, with that Pride that it commonly produces in mean Souls, and when their Intrigues brought them into a confiderable share of the Government, they satisfied themselves with carrying on the Interests of their own Cabal, and depressing those that opposed them, without opening their minds to fo great a thought, as that of correcting or fecuring their Common wealth. They neither had Heads nor Hearts capable of a vigorous Defence: and they knew nothing of what was doing abroad; but contented themselves with

Policy & Interests of ITALY. 179 with minding the Interest of their City Fa-Etions. He added, that when a Commonwealth fell once into this Disease, it was in a much worse state, than any to which the Rigour even of an unhappy War, could reduce it; as a man whose Vitals are Inwardly corrupted, is in a much worse condition, than he that has received many Wounds; Nature may bring him thro the one, tho he had loft ever fo much blood; whereas it must fink under the other: foall the mitchiet that could befall a Common-wealth could hardly destroy it, if it retain'd the Inward vigour of its first Maximes and Constitution: and he did not flick to fay, that as high as the States of Holland were now in holding the ballance of Europe, if their Towns fell once into established factions, if Learning funk among them, fo that their Magistrates grew Ignorant, chiefly of the Affairs of Europe, if they came to have a Magistracy, that had not the right understanding of War, and the Courage with which some practice in Military matters Inspiremen, and if their Wealth swelled them up to an Unreasonable Pride, and that men rife more upon the little Intrigues of City Factions, than upon true merit; whenfoever, he faid, the States fell into this. difease, then the strength of that Republick was gone; and tho they might fublift after that longer or shorter, according to the Conjuncture of Affairs, yet one might reckon doors, or from abroad.

I have now told you enough to let you see how reasonable a Project it was to send a fleet against so feeble a body; which without most prodigious Errors in the management, could not have miscarried: and this is so clear, and so confessed by every man in Genoa, that one rather Wondershow they found a way to conduct it soill. The man that formed the whole project was Stiven Valdyron of Nismes, and a Protestant, who is a person of a very good Understanding, and having lived above 12 years in Genoa, had time enough not only to raise a very good Estate out of his Trade, but to see into the whole Feebleness of that Government. I converfed long and much with him: and having fince that time been in Genon it felf, I have feen fo clearly the truth of all that he told me, that I may now affure you of all that I learnt from him. He had a strange affection to his Great Monarch, and fancied that the obligations of raifing his Glory, was superiour to all other: and no doubt he reckoned to find his own account in it, if he could have been the occasion of making the King of France Mafter of Genoa: therefore he drew up the whole Project, and shewed both of what Importance the thing was, and how eafily it might be executed: for I have a Copy of the whole Scheme, which Policy & Interests of ITALY. 181

Mr. St. Olon sent to the Court of France, of which Mr. Valdyron was indeed the Author; the design being entertained, St. Olon had an Intimation given him, to withdraw some day's before the French fleet came before the Town. But Valdyron was left to try his hard sate; for as soon as the Fleet began to do Acts of Hostility, Valdyron, who had been known to be much with St. Olon, was clapt in Prison, and while he was in it, a Bomb broke thro his Prison, but did him no hurt, only the violent noise it made weakned the Tympan of his Ear so much, that he lost.

Mr.

But he, as well as all Genoa, fancied they were loft, and that the French must be certainly Masters of the Place in a few hours. The Consternation and Confusion was so great, that if at first a great shower of Bombs had been thrown into the Town, and a defcent had been made, they had certainly fucceeded; for the people were in fuch a disorder, that the Magistrates were not regarded; and indeed many of them shewed as much fear as the rabble did. But the French, instead of beginning vigorously at first, threw in one Bomb, and after some hours another; and fo went on flowly for a day or two; in which time, the People began to get into order, and to take heart: and now their first fear, turned to a Rage against the French; so that when they made a descent, they found iuch fuch a Resistance, that they were forced to go back to their Ships, having lest behind them 500 of their best Men: and the Fleet continued Bombarding the Town, till they had shot all their Bombs; and when their store was spent, they sail'daway, having laid a great many noble buildings in ruines.

The morality of this way of proceeding, was somewhat hard to be found out: the Italians do not stick to say, it was an Assassinat, when without Warning or proceeding in the way of a fair War, a fleet came and surprised and burnt a Town: but the Conduct was as extraordinary, as the Action it self was honorable and worthy of a MOST

CHRISTIAN KING.

It was pleasant to hear a Spaniard, that belonged to the Count of Melgar talk of this matter : he faid, that in this, France had acted as it had done on many other occasions, in which tho it had the favourablest conjuncture possible, it had done nothing suteable to what might have been expected; for tho they had here a calm Sea, for four dayes, which is a very Extraordinary thing in the Bay of Genoa, that is almost alwayes in a Storm, and tho they had furprised the Town, that had not the least apprehension of such a Design, and found them in a condition not likely to have relifted a much smaller Force; yet he said, that Feebleness which had appeared upon many other occasions, shewed it self likewise here, since of to this great Expedition failed, and the Reproach of first attempting it, and then Miscarrying in it, was studied to be carried off by this, that the design was only to Chastise Genoa, at which there is not a man in the Town that does not laugh. He upon this took a great compass for these last twenty years backwards, to shew that there was nothing extraordinary in all this Reign, that had been the Subject of so many Panegyricks, unless this may be reckoned extraordinary, that there has been so little progress made, when they had the fairest opportunities possible: an Infant King of Spain, and a feeble Council, and a Distraction in the States of Holland; fo that the first Successes that were the Effects of the weakness and furprise of those that were attackt, are rather a Reproach than a Glory to a Reign, that has understood so ill how to ferve it felf of those advantages, that had nothing of the Greatness of a Conquering Genius in it; and where the Ministry thewed rather an exactness in executing little Projects, than a largeness of Soul in laying vast ones. I could not but be pleased to see a Spaniard, find somewhat that entertained his Pride in the Contempt of the French, at the same time that the low estate of their Affairs, made him feel the depression of their own Empire as much as the progress of the Great Monarch of France.

But now I cannot but tell you the rest of M 4 Valdy-

Valdyron's Story: as foon as the French were gone, the Government of Genoa began to examin him, but he stood to his denial, and faid, he knew nothing: all his Effects were feised on and diffipated, and he himself was four or five times put to the strapado, which was done by tying his hands behind his back, and fetching them over his Head, which disjoynted his Armes and Shoulder-blades, in a most terrible manner, yet he had the firmness to stand it out: and so they could draw nothing from him: but as foon as the Court of France understood, that both he, and several other Frenchmen, that lived in Genoa, were put in Prison, the Resident of Genea was clapt up at Paris: and when the Overtures were made to accommodate this matter, Valdyron was no more ill used, and after fome Months he was fet at Liberty : but his Estate was quite lost: yet he came to France, not doubting but that so great a Service, and fuch fevere Suffering, would have procured him some considerable Reward: but after he had languished there above a year, he got a Pension, that was just enough to keep him alive, of two hundred Crowns: and even that was stopt, as soon it was known that he was of the Religion, till he changed. This piece of Gratitude for such a Service, that had cost him so dear, was no extraordinary Encouragement for others to venture as he had done. Yet I who knew him well, for Policy & Interests of ITALY! 185 almost two years, could not but admire the wonderful Zeal he had for the Glory of his King; for in the midst of all his Misery, and of all the Neglect he met with, having fallen from fo flourishing a condition, he could neverbe brought to think that he had done foolishly: but was rather proud of it, that he had formed so sure a Scheme, for putting Genoa into his Masters hands: & this he said often to me, when he was so poor, that he did not know where to dine. The affinity of the matter, makes me call to mind a conversation that I had at Rome, with two of the Old Magistrates of Messina; who had been menthat bore a great stroak in that Town, during the Revolt : and were then reduced to the mifery of accepting a Charity. They told us, that all the Oaths, that Mr. de Vivonne, and Mr. la Fueillade, swore to them in the Kings name, as well as in their own, never to abandon them, which were made upon the Sacrament, besides whole Valleys of Oaths, that Mr. la Fueillade made them from morning to night, while he was among them, it feems went for nothing, but matters of form: yet they faid, they thought the French Ministry would have considered the Kings Interests, if they had no regard to his Honour. They added, that if the King of France, when he found the War of Messina lay heavy upon him, had sent to Spain, and offered to that Court, as a pledge of the Peace that he was offering them at Nimmegen, so put Messina again in to their hands, provided they would grant an Indemnity for what was past, and a Confirmation of their Antient Priviledges, of which he himself would be the Garand, this they said the Spaniards would have without doubt, accepted as fomething come to them from Heaven: and it the matter had ended thus, as it would have been highly honourable for the King, fo it would have given him the dependance both of Sicily and Naples, and have kept them still in a disposition to throw themselves into his hands: whereas in the way that their bufiness ended, if there should be in any time hereafter. a provocation given in those parts to revolt, they would fooner throw themselves into the Armes of the Turk, if he should be again in a condition to protect them, than of those who had abandoned them in fo strange a manner, taking no care neither of the Priviledges of the Town in general, nor of those particular Persons, who had rendred themselves unpardonable to the Spaniards. It is true, some were brought away to France, the two that I have mentioned were of that number, and had small Pensions assigned them, which were but ill payed: and because some of them had not patience enough to bear fuch an unlooked for Ulage, but complained freely of it, a pretence was taken from thence, to banish them all out of France; fo that ever fince they have fuffered a great deal of Misery. ot ess digrefs fo far as to give you an account of that whole Revolt, which they justified to us, from the great Priviledges of their Town, which were indeed fuch as made it a fort of a Common-wealth: that had a right to defend it telf against those manifest Infractions with which they charged the Spaniards. They told us, that the Confiscations of Messina had amounted to twenty Millions: and yet for all that the King of Spain was not much the richer by their Ruin; for the Vice-Roy and Government of Sicily, pretended to exhaust all by a Citadel that they are building: and by some other publick Works. In Conclusion, the two poor Messinesses, seeing a Dutchman in our Company, turned the Discourse to him, and wished him to warn his Countreymen, by their Fate, how much some Courts ought to be relied on.

And now I have done with all the Political Observations, that I could make in Italy. But as I begun this Letter with one piece of Na. tural History, I will end it with another. The first was a way of preparing of Salt, and the second is a new way of preparing of Vitriol, which was lately fet up in the Sulfatara, near Puzzolo. It has not been long enough a going, to enable one to judge how it will fucceed; but yet all things are very promifing; and that which gives a good Prospect of it, is, that all is done without the expence of any fire. The Method of it is this. There are are feveral Cifterns made in that great Bottom of the Sulfatara, of great stones Cemented very close: into these all the Rain both of that Bottom, and of the little Hills that are round it does fall, which is impregnated with Vitriol: they do also lay a great many Tiles and Bricks before all those Vents, that the Fire which is in this Soil makes: and where the Smoke comes out, with fo rapid a violence; so that this Smoke passing thro these Bricks, leaves a great deal of Sulphur and Vitriol upon them: and thefe Bricks are washed in those Cifterns, and by this means the Water becomes impregnated with Vitriol: then they put the Water into Coppers, which they fet over those violent hot Eruptions; so that this serves as a Fire, to evaporate the Phlegm, and fo they find quantities of Vitriol. The revenue of this goes to the Annunciata of Naples: and they begin to promise themselves great advantages from it: but a little time will shew this, as well as greater matters. I will add no new trouble, to that which the length of this Letter must needs have given you: fo I will conclude, without any other Formality, but that of affuring you that I 2m .

POSTSCRIPT.

Ince I added a Postfcript to my two former Letters, I intend to make this fo far of a piece with them, as to conclude this likewife with one; for I find, looking over the little Notes that I took, a Particular that hadescaped me, and yet it feems to deferve to be mentioned: and fince I have not brought it into my Letters, I have resolved to make a Postscript express for it.

There is a little Town in the Appennins, about 25 miles from Rome, called Norcia, near which there is a considerable Abbey, which belongs now to a Cardinal. This Town, thoit lies within the Popes Territory, yet has fuch great Priviledges still referved to it, that it my pass in some fort for a free Common-wealth. They make their Lawer. and choose their own Magistrates; but that which is the most extraordinary part of their Constitution, and that is the most exactly observed, is, that they are so jealous of all Priests, and of their having any tharein their Government, that no man that can either ! read or write is capable of bearing a share in their Government: so that their Magistracy, which consists of 4 Persons, is alway's in the hands of Unlettered Men, who are called there Li quatri Illiterati: for they think the least tendency to Letters, would bring them under the ordinary Miseries that they see all their Neighbours are brought under by the credit in which both the Robes are among them. And they are so shy of all Churchmen, and so jealous of their Liberty, that when the Cardinal comes during the Heats of the Summer sometimes, to his Abbey, they take no notice of him, nor do they make any fort of Court to him. One that has been oft there, told me, that by divers of their Customes they seem to be of the race of the old Latines; and that their Situation and their Poverty had at all times preserved them : yet they are not fuch Strangers to the manners of the rest of the Italians as not to take pleafure in severe revenges, of which this Instance was given me. The Abbot that was the Cardinals Predecessor, had an Auditor who was much in his favour, that made love to the Wife of one of the Magistrates of Norcia, which shediscovered to her Husband; he ordered her to give the Auditor an Appointment; but provided a good Surgeon and all other things that were necessary to put the Anditor out of all danger of breaking his Vow of Chaftity: for he was a Churchman; and the Auditor not failing to observe his rendezvous, was caught, and the operation was performed with all poffible care: and he was treated very well till he was quite cured, and then he was fent back to his Patron. The Abbot was highly offended with

with this affront that was done him : and it may be easily believed that the Auditor was not well pleased with this forced Chastity that was now Imposed on him: forhey fent an Information of the matter to the Rota; and asked their opinion: but the Court of the Rota was wifer than to suffer a matter of this nature to become publick. To this I shalladd a pleasant thing that was told me concerning Priests that fell under the misfortune of this Auditor. It is known, that according to the Canon Law, the one Indelible Character defaces the other: and that a Priest so treated can no more say Maß: yet I was told that this distinction was used, that if the Priest had all that was taken from him restored to him, so that he could carry it in his Pocket, he was still esteemed entire, and might fay Mass; but unless he could have the consolation of carrying those things dead about him, that had been perhaps too quick before, the Character was lott, or was at least under a totall suspension: It all this is a little too pleasant and too natural, a little good humour must beforgiven to a Traveller, whose Spirits are too much in motion, to be so settled and so grave as they ought to be.
