ADDRESS.

IN laying before the Governors of the ST. GEORGE'S AND ST. JAMES'S DISPENSARY, the following code of Rules and Orders for its management and good government, the Committee, to whom the charge of framing it was confided, have considered that they would render their labours more complete, by previously submitting to the notice of the Governors and of the Public a few general facts and considerations, tending to point out the circumstances which have led to its establishment, to illustrate the peculiar advantages which an Institution of this nature possesses, and to suggest the means which may render it extensively and permanently useful.

1. The accumulation of distress among the labouring classes, which has for some time past been so generally felt and acknowledged, and to which the charity of this country has been extended with so liberal a hand, if it has not occasioned any real increase of sickness in the lower orders, is at least the cause why the number of applications for admission into the hospitals at this end of the Town has of late increased so considerably. A large proportion of those thus applying are every week, owing to want of accommodation, unavoidably rejected or postponed, to the great detriment of the patients themselves, and to the aggravation of that distress which originally compelled them to have recourse to the assistance of a Public Charity. But independently of this consideration, which being in its nature temporary, may not be thought a sufficient ground for the establishment of another means of Relief to the Sick Poor in this District, a question arises, whether the provision made for it is at any time adequate to the demand?

In the western parts of this town there are but three general hospitals for the reception of in-patients, viz. St. George's, the Middlesex, and the Westminster, which altogether do not accommodate more than 420 patients, whilst those of St. Bartholomew's, St. Thomas's, and Guy's, are calculated to receive at least five times that number. The Committee is indeed well aware of the beneficial influence of the Parochial Infirmaries, and of the provision made, and within these few weeks considerably extended, by which out-patients are enabled to participate in the benefits of such Charities; but this latter circumstance, while it reflects the highest credit on the benevolence of those whose exertions have thus been directed to provide the best assistance for the Sick and Necessitous Poor, is a proof at the same time, that in their opinion something further was required, nor will it be the least praise of an institution of this nature, that it co-operates in giving effect to their humane intentions.

In the two extensive parishes of St. George, Hanover-square, and St. James, Westminster, containing between them a population little short of 80,000 persons, it has, under these circumstances, been thought expedient to establish a DISPENSARY upon a liberal scale, the visiting limits of which should be confined to the above Parishes, it appearing, from their extent and population, that the attentions of the Medical Gentlemen could not efficaciously be extended further.

While such are the views which have led to the formation of the ST. GEORGE'S AND ST. JAMES'S DISPENSARY, the Committee at the same time wish to press the consideration, that the benevolent designs of the Institution will be more fully met, and that the interests of the Public will be better consulted, if the Inhabitants of the surrounding Parishes, following the example of many respectable individuals among them, will come forward in its support, and send to the Dispensary patients requiring Medical or Surgical Relief. They may be assured that they will there receive all the attention which their cases require, and to which the Poor of the parishes of St. George and St. James are from its constitution more particularly entitled.

2. The utility of Dispensaries being now so generally acknowledged, and no where more than in this City, where there are several, which by their character and the distinguished support they enjoy, bear ample testimony to the policy and the usefulness of the design, it will be unnecessary to enter at any length into the peculiar advantages of such a species of Medical Charity, but a slight illustration of the subject may not be without its use. Giving to public hospitals all the praise and credit which they so justly deserve, we may yet fairly assert, that setting aside the consideration of the small proportion which their number and accommodations bear to the population for which they are intended, there are a variety of cases requiring medical and surgical aid which are unfit for a public hospital, and to which such relief can in no way be so well afforded as through the medium of a Dispensary. We allude to persons with complaints, slight indeed at first, and which treated in their early and manageable stages are attended with little or no risk, but which by neglect or delay become obstinate and dangerous:—to persons in the labouring classes, who still enjoy such a portion of health as permits them to follow their usual occupations:—to persons whose circumstances may enable them to provide many things necessary for their proper management, but whose little savings might be exhausted by the charges for medicine and medical attendance:—to persons afflicted with tedious complaints, or with complaints liable to continual recurrence, whose sufferings may be alleviated at least under proper medical care:—to persons, lastly, whom it would be impossible, or difficult, or highly distressing to separate from their homes, more particularly servants, the mothers of families of young children, and the infant children of the poor themselves, the treatment of whose complaints will form a prominent feature in the views of this Charity, the urgent demand for it in this district being, as we find, very universally acknowledged. The importance of cherishing in every possible way the strong feeling of attachment among the lower orders towards their children, is not to be overlooked, when considering the benefits to be derived from the attendance upon sick mothers and their families, without the necessity of their separation. To the lying-in woman this Institution is calculated to afford equal advantages, and to all who apply, the gratifying assurance is held out, that if unable through the pressure of disease to attend personally at the Dispensary, they will receive the necessary advice at their own bedsides.

In pointing out the advantages of Institutions of this nature, the comparatively small expense at which they are conducted deserves also to be noticed. The subscriptions by which they are supported are proportionably low, while the quantity of human suffering which they mitigate or remove is great; the relief they afford being in some cases more immediate than could be obtained in any other way, and the manner of it less grating to the commendable delicacy of many, who from accidental disease are compelled to have recourse to charitable assistance. The money contributed for the purposes of a Charity like this, economically and effectually applied to their relief, will save many individuals and families from the necessity of applying to other sources of aid more burdensome to the rich, and not more serviceable to themselves, and above all from a dependence on the parish.

3. The objects in view in the present undertaking are—the gratuitous distribution of Medicines, and of Medical and Surgical Advice—the Encouragement of Vaccination—the Prevention and Cure of Infantile Diseases—and the Delivery of Poor Married Women at their own Habitations. The means by which it is to be supported are the Voluntary Subscriptions, Donations, and Legacies of the charitable and humane in this part of the Metropolis; and the Committee hope that the facts and considerations now submitted to the Public will excite their attention and call forth their support. The Rules and Orders which follow will sufficiently point out the principles upon which the Institution will be governed, and the details under the respective Divisions will serve to shew, that in framing them the Committee have profited by the experience of those who have preceded them in this description of charity, offering thereby an earnest of their anxiety to give to this Institution all the extent and permanency of benefit of which its design is susceptible.

To that part of the Subscribers, whose sex best qualifies them to sympathize with the sufferings of one portion of those for whose relief this Dispensary has been established, it is respectfully suggested that contributions of Child-bed Linen and Baby Clothes, in addition to their Subscriptions, would be of the most essential benefit.

The Committee, in conclusion, beg to state, that though it would have been easy for them in this Address to have interested the feelings of the Public in behalf of an Institution of this nature, they have thought it better to address themselves to its unprejudiced judgment, well persuaded that when its establishment shall have been generally known, the necessity of it will be as generally acknowledged. Under this impression they solicit the support of the Inhabitants of this part of the Town to an Institution, calculated to afford early and effectual assistance to the Sick Poor—to relieve the Public Hospitals, Charities, and Parochial Workhouses, from the heavy pressure now made on them—and to lessen the demands on the Poor Rates, which have already reached to so serious an extent.
