The practice of inoculation justified : a sermon preached at Ingatestone, Essex, October 12, 1766, in defence of inoculation. To which is added an appendix on the present state of inoculation; with observations, &c; / by Robert Houlton.

Contributors

Houlton, Robert, 1693 or 1694-

Publication/Creation

Essex : Printed and sold by Lionel Hassall, in Chelmsford ... : And sold also by R. Davis, J. Wilkie, and J. Kingman, London, [1767]

Persistent URL

https://wellcomecollection.org/works/sgh8bxzx

License and attribution

This work has been identified as being free of known restrictions under copyright law, including all related and neighbouring rights and is being made available under the Creative Commons, Public Domain Mark.

You can copy, modify, distribute and perform the work, even for commercial purposes, without asking permission.

Wellcome Collection 183 Euston Road London NW1 2BE UK T +44 (0)20 7611 8722 E library@wellcomecollection.org https://wellcomecollection.org

61619 A SERMON ON INOCULATION, &c. $ [Price TWO SHILLINGS]

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2018 with funding from Wellcome Library

https://archive.org/details/b30377766

The Practice of Inoculation justified.

S E R M O N

PREACHED AT INGATESTONE, ESSEX, OCTOBER 12, 1766,

IN

Defence of Inoculation,

TO WHICH IS ADDED,

An A P P E N D I X ON THE

PRESENT STATE of INOCULATION;

With Observations, &c.

BY

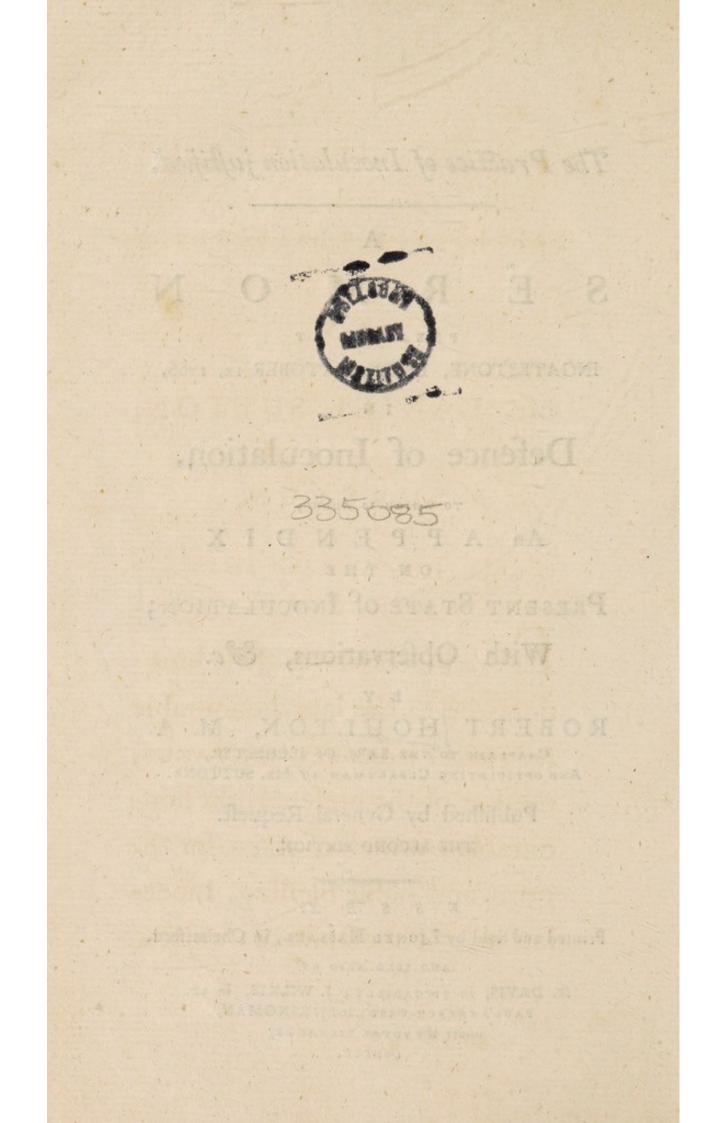

ROBERT HOULTON, M. A. CHAPLAIN TO THE EARL OF ILCHESTER, AND OFFICIATING CLERGYMAN AT MR. SUTTON'S,

> Published by General Request, THE SECOND EDITION,

E S S E X: Printed and Sold by LIONEL HASSALL, in Chelmsford, AND SOLD ALSO BY

R. DAVIS, in PICCADILLY; J. WILKIE, in st. PAUL'S CHURCH-YARD; and J. KINGMAN, under the ROYAL EXCHANGE, LONDON.

TO T

Mr. DANIEL SUTTON,

SURGEON.

SIR,

EVER indebted will these kingdoms be to the late honourable lady MARY WORTLEY MONTAGUE, mother of the present right honourable counters of BUTE, for the great and noble bleffing, Inoculation. Thousands of fubjects, DEDICATION.

vi

the tender hufband, the affectionate wife, fond parents and pious children engrave her name in deep characters on their hearts and will record it forever with gratitude and praise.

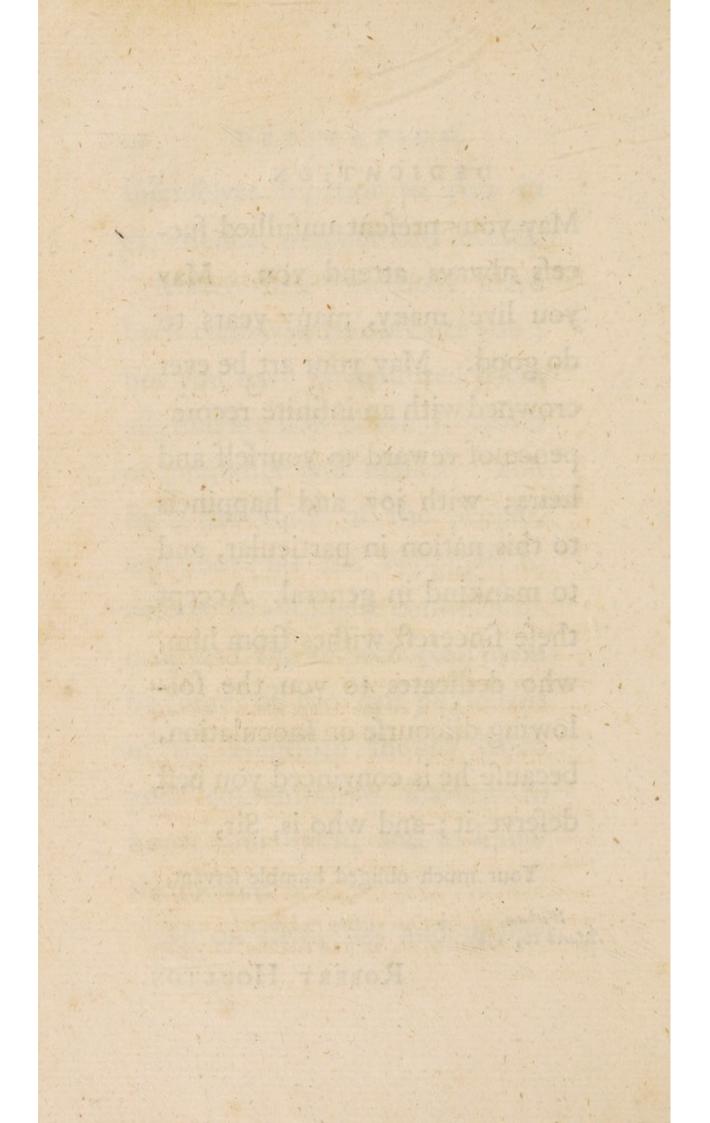

EQUALLY obliged, fir, is the nation to you. Your indefatigable attention to inveftigate the true, fubtle, and abftrufe nature of the Small-pox; the great, the furprifingly great improvements you have made on the practice of Inoculation, have rendered it a bleffing indeed; and merited you the diftinguished favour and applause of the public.

DEDICATION.

By these improvements the art justly becomes your own; an art that must and ought to transmit your name to posterity. And it is not to be doubted, but the time is hastily approaching, when the SUTTONIAN syftem or method of Inoculation will be universally adopted.

Here, fir, I feem to fee the odious, ghaftly fneers of the unfkilful, the envious and ill-affected. But let me tell the wretches, they have no right to queftion the above truths, or to fligmatife me with the name of flatterer, until they have proved

vii

LETTER to the CRITICAL REVIEWERS,

A

BY WAY OF

PREFACE.

May it pleafe your High Mightineffes ;

Beg the favour, if you deign to take notice of the following difcourfe, that you will permit my printer and publifher to be ftiled HASSALL; and not fubfitute another's name, much lefs that of any printer, who fleals into the profession. For in a Review of last year, you make one Tost the publisher of three of my pieces, viz. a Sermon on Detraction, and two Pamphlets figned OXONIENSIS; neither of which he printed or published. — Had his name difgraced one of my pieces only, I should have readily concluded it was done through mistake; but being tacked to all of them, it manifessly discovered your kind and partial defign; for which I cannot sufficiently admire your modessly.

AND I take the liberty to advife you to injoin your country puffers to be lefs communicative: for a certain peddling bookfeller, at the time I published the above-mentioned pieces, boafted much of having an intimacy with one of your affociates, named ROBINSON; and that be would do this and that; be should write to bim, and would take care that my pieces had their proper eharacter; because, I suppose, he (the booksfeller) was not my printer, &c. AND you too, Gentlemen, must refent my not employing him, at the expence of justice to my printer and publisher. — Surely this conduct will in time convince the public of your beasted impartiality. For if little country bookfellers have that influence with you, to get what remarks they please, made on publications, because, forfooth, they are not employed by the authors, who can longer effeem the Critical Review ? — For thus prefuming to attack your High Mightiness, I live in dreadful apprebension of your fovereign contempt, or of your tremendous fatire and invective. — If you condescend to criticife, what think you of the following manner ?

No. A Sermon on Inoculation, &c. Haffall. price 23. We think (viz. one of our band thinks) the author should be inoculated with Jo E's distemper for his pains, and the reader with his patience.

OR fuppole, you are witty on me thro' means of my text, as, This Sicknefs, indeed, is not unto death; but we prophefy the fermon won't live a week.

On-but I leave it to you-you have doubtless witticisms and characters of all kinds for pieces that are to be published in feventy-feven, as well as fixty-feven.

I am, Gentlemen, with all due respect,

Your moft fincere Admirer,

R. HOULTON.

Feb. 20. 1767.

P. S. ON recollection, it will certainly be thought, if you decry my fermon, that this letter ruffles your philosophy. The best way, therefore, is to take no notice of me, or to get the Monthly Reviewers (viz. yourfelves, as the faying is) to trim my jacket.

xii

SERMON

[1]

A

ON

INOCULATION.

THIS SICKNESS IS NOT UNTO DEATH. John XI, 4.

THESE words relate to LAZARUS that was raifed from the dead; for whom our bleffed SAVIOUR feemed to have had a peculiar regard, as appears from the following meffage fent to inform him of his illnefs: Lord, behold he whom thou loweft, is fick. This tender meffage had its full effect on him, who while on earth went about doing good; whofe heart was ever open to pity, and affected at human woe; whofe ear liftened to diffrefs, and who felt for mankind. It determined him to refcue LAZARUS from death, and to afford comfort to his mournful fifters. — But he proposing also, on this occasion, to manifest the glory of God, as well as his own dia vine power and mission, by a greater miracle than just a fimple cure of his fickness, delayed his going till LAZARUS was dead.

A

OUR SAVIOUR's stay for two days after the meffage and modeft address of the fifters, may not feem, perhaps, confistent with a zealous regard for LAZA-RUS, or a real friendship for his fisters; as it made the former fuffer even the pains of death, and kept the latter longer in fuspence and grief; - but it shewed his perfect wifdom and goodness, as it made the wonderful work more remarkable and conducive to the conviction of the spectators. For had he gone before LAZARUS was dead, they might have attributed his recovery rather to the ftrength of nature than to any miraculous power : or had he raifed him as foon as he was dead, they might have thought it rather fome trance or extafy than a death or diffolution. But now to raise a person, four days dead, offensive and reduced to corruption, was a furprize of unutterable joy to his relations; removed all poffible fufpicion of confederacy; filenced peevifh cavilling; and triumphed over the obflinacy of prejudice and infidelity .-- There is fomething fingularly great and pathetic in the whole account of this miracle, as recorded by the apofile. Joy, grief, and pity, are ftrongly painted : - the circumstances are tender, and the wailings of MARTHA and MARY affecting; — they must be fo, — for JESUS wept: — nay, his grief was fo great and apparent, that the JEWS (who came to fee the miracle) exclaimed, behold how he lowed him ! — In short, our SAVIOUR verified his words, This ficknefs is not unto death; — and as the verfe goes on, but for the glory of GOD, that the Son of GOD might be glorified thereby, — by a most awful and wonderful miracle. — Thus much for the words I have chosen, as to their immediate fense. I shall now take the liberty to apply them to Inoculation *, and, I hope, without incurring the censure of levity, or of wresting Scripture to defend an improper subject.

THIS SICKNESS IS NOT UNTO DEATH.

THE expression will bear a two-fold explanation. It may be used in a natural sense, to prove the Safety of Inoculation; that it endangers not life; and in a spiritual one, to justify the practice of it :- for deatb is threatened, in many places of Scripture, not as an immediate but as a future punishment for the transgression of God's commands; particularly in the second chapter of Genesis, In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt furely die.

* For fake of brevity, I fhall use the word Inoculation all along, to fignify Inoculation of the Small-pox, agreeable to its prefent general acceptation.

A 2

SERMON

Which implied not a natural but a fpiritual death; alluding to the forfeiture of eternal life : a punifhment threatened to deter ADAM from eating the forbidden fruit. So that my text, in regard to the prefent fubject, may be thus very fairly paraphrafed.

THIS ficknefs, as caufed by Inoculation, is not unto death; that is, is not worthy of divine vengeance or puniforment; becaufe it violates no command of GOD, and is not included under any fin that he has forbidden.

THIS, it fhall be my endeavour in the following difcourfe to evince; to remove the fcruples of the confcientious, and to prove that the Practice of Inoculation is juftifiable in the fight of God. — As for the natural or verbal fenfe of the text, the fuccefs of the practice, at leaft of the prefent, principal practice of Inoculation, fo fully demonftrates it, that it almost amounts to a felf-evident truth. Arguments, therefore, on this head, are ufelefs and unneceffary; experimental proof is the beft of arguments. All that is wanting is, to adapt fome plain reafoning to the capacity and conviction of the too-fcrupulous, and over-confcientious.

LET us first enquire, how far reason and experience enforce the Practice of Inoculation. But before this, let me make a remark on the term it/elf. Many, I am apt to think, owe their prejudice to the practice, from the very found of the word Inoculation; and make it convey fuch horrible ideas, as ought to exift only in a distempered brain. - I would ask, What does Inoculation mean more than Self-prefervation ? Or why may it not be defined fill more mildly, and called, an endeavour (as it certainly is) to preferve our lives? I could almost dare to rest this cause on the answer that the most confcientious cafuift would give to the following question: Whether, in cafes of danger, it is displeasing to the ALMIGHTY to fee his creatures endeavour to preferve their lives, if the means are inoffensive ? The sophist might, perhaps, dispute the latter part of my question, and affert that the means are very offenfive and injurious to fociety, as it fpreads the infection to the deftruction of mens lives; and in that light is difpleafing to God. But this is arguing from the abufe of the thing, and is confequently of not the least force, as it does not refute that the means are inoffenfive and justifiable, when kept within proper bounds. - But to proceed.

SELF-PRESERVATION has been long adjudged a ftanding maxim, an indifpenfable duty, the first and great law of nature. It is a principle ingrafted in our birth, and begins to act as foon as we begin to think, and to know danger. A principle that commands the will, and is actuated more by inftinct than reflection. - Agreeable to this principle, man naturally dreads every diforder or fickness that threatens his diffolution, and which he knows, is frequently unto death : and, as naturally firives to avoid it; or, if involved in it, to fubdue its malignant and dangerous effects. - The ravages of the fmallpox, in all ages, conditions, and conflictutions he daily hears of, accompanied with the most difmal and deplorable circumstances. Its fpreading infection and fatality firike him with terror, and put him on his guard to fecure his perfon from the contagion: but, alas! repeated accounts alarm him, that his friends and neighbours, who took the fame and greater precaution, are cut off by this deftructive and tremendous plague. No one, he finds, is fecure; for infection rides on the wings of the wind, and the air is incorporated with malignant vapour. - Such a one perceives himfelf in imminent danger. - The contagion approaches him with hafty ftrides, and levels numbers of his fellow-creatures. He beholds himfelf in as dreadful a condition as the man who fees a rock of an immenfe fize falling on him. If the latter has any reason left, in such circomftances; if it is not overpowered with fear, he naturally springs from the dangerous spot, left he fhould be crufhed to atoms. And if there is a way for the efcape of the former, who believes deftruction as near to him, reafon inftantly points it out, and hurries him on to preferve his life. — Will any, in their fenfes, affert, that it is folly and rafhnefs, that it is wicked, abfurd and unreafonable thus to accept in an imminent crifis, when death is impending, the proffered and certain means of fecurity?

THE confcientious perfon must be cautious here of allowing, that Inoculation may be justifiable in fome particular cases. For if the act is funful in the fight of GoD, no case can alter the nature of that fin, or affect the decrees of the ALMIGHTY, which are immutable. Either the act must be pleasing or displeasing to GoD; not in fome particular cases, but universally fo. — But to pursue the dictates of reason and experience.

DOUBTLESS, then, we are influenced, or rather hurried on by reafon to preferve our lives in all cafes of danger: — and not by reafon only, but by experience alfo; — for as reafon points out the means of fafety, fo experience teaches the most proper use of those means. — With respect to our present subject, experience clearly demonstrates the danger, the fatality of the Small-pox, when received by natural infection; and as clearly evinces the efficacy and fafety of inoculation; how much it tends to fubdue the malignancy of the diftemper, to fecure our lives; and that the ficknefs, fo contracted, is not unto death. — This is the means, this the way for our efcape; reafon directs us to it; experience proves the utility and fafety. Men, by the light of PROVIDENCE, I'll prefume to fay, have difcovered Inoculation, and brought it to the greates? Perfection; fo great indeed, as to repel and fubdue every dangerous fymptom, and to have gained, (if I may fo fpeak) the most complete victory over this dreadful enemy to life: fo that we may exult, and exclaim in the language of fcripture, we triumpb over deatb.

DEATH is thus banished, and life fecured: on one hand, the danger is great; on the other, the fear of death vanishes, and a joyful certainty of life prefents itself. Not to make a proper use of this bleffing, is to fin against knowledge, to rebel against light; to act against reason, and to difregard experience, the best of wisdom. — But the confcientious will fay, that notwithstanding reason might suggest the means to preferve life, reason should be guided by revelation, and should direct the choice of no means but what are agreeable to the laws of religion and confcience. That the AL-MIGHTY is LORD of life and death, and of all things to them pertaining; as bealth, strength, weakness and fickness : - that the government and disposal of these belong entirely to him. Therefore to take the reins out of his bands must be wicked : - and moreover, Inoculation is a fin, because it shews a mistrust of the AL-MIGHTY, as if he was unable to deliver us from death. ---- This, I think, is the grand moral objection to Inoculation, from which all others are derived, and which, I hope, the most fcrupulous and confcientious will allow I have flated in its full force. - I fhall, therefore, now examine into the truth and propriety of this objection, and fee if it has ftrength fufficient to oppose and invalidate the arguments that are brought in defence of one of the greatest discoveries that was ever made for the benefit of mankind : which will fhew, I hope, at the fame time, what I have undertaken to endeavour to prove, viz. that Inoculation is justifiable in the fight of GOD.

THE former part of the objection feems to imply that the act of Inoculation, or in other words, an attempt to preferve life, (by flightly indifpofing ourfelves, thereby to escape the dreadful effects of a very dangerous and fatal distemper) opposes the revealed will of GoD, and offends fome one part of the Holy Scriptures. I fay, it seems to imply this ; — for in fact the objection exists only in imagination. I would beg to be informed by these confcientious religionists, what part of Scripture intimates, that reason thus dictates a choice of means to preferve life that are contrary to the revealed word of GoD, or true religion. If this act of felf-prefervation was attended with fatal confequences, the fixth commandment, perhaps, may be wrefted to fupport their frivolous objections :- but as thefe feldom, or never happen, except through the ignorance of the Inoculator, or the imprudence of the Patient, the fin, if there is any, will arife not from the act itfelf, but from the prefumption of the ignorant operator, or carelefinefs of the Patient, in neglecting to conform (as 'tis every one's duty in all flates and circumflances to conform) to those rules and means, which tend to preferve life. - But as the fcrupulous cannot pretend that this act, under any kind of fimilitude, is forbidden either directly or indirectly in Holy Writ, let them confess that their objections are founded on reafons merely confcientious, and we will then confider how far this opinionative confcience obliges them to oppose the practice of Inoculation.

CONSCIENCE can be under no obligation but to the laws of GOD and man. And fince the law of GOD commanding or forbidding actions, is the only moral rule by which a man can judge what actions are duties, and what are fins; it plainly follows, that as a man cannot be bound in conficience to do any action, which it doth not appear that GoD has commanded and made a duty : fo neither can it go against a man's conficience, to do any action which he is not convinced that GoD's law hath fome way or other forbidden, and fo made a fin. And therefore, in our prefent cafe, that man only can justly plead conficience against Inoculation, that can truly fay, I am perfuaded that this act is forbidden by fome law of GOD.

Now as neither this act of felf-prefervation, nor any mode of it, is forbidden directly or indirectly by the law of GoD; nor (as we will allow for the prefent) fo commanded, the act becomes an indifferent thing. And all indifferent things may be done or omitted, according to the will of man : becaufe, as St. PAUL fays, where no law is there is no tranfgreffion; and again, fin is not imputed, where there is no law. The fame Apostle intimates, that where there is no law, the confcience becomes a law unto itfelf; the thoughts of men accusing, or elfe excusing them. - I would alk here, what is this, but the voice of reafon? Surely, the Apostle means, that where there is no law to direct us, reafon fhould be our guide. And, in fact, without a law, confcience and reafon must be the fame, and are of equal extent and fignification. Therefore as all duties derive their obligation either from reafon or revelation, and as I have fufficiently evinced, I flatter myfelf, that reafon points out felf-prefervation, and obliges us, as it were, to fludy a way for our efcape in all cafes of danger; it will neceffary follow, that confcience, in regard to Inoculation, fhould fubmit to reafon, which convinces us of the juftnefs and greatnefs of that bleffing, that faves thoufands of lives from an untimely grave, and gives ftrength and happinefs to fociety.

B 2

IE

12

IT may, however, be objected, that according to ST. PAUL'S doctrine of a thing being unclean to bim that believes it to be unclean; that Inoculation would be a fin in those who believe it to be a fin, and cannot be convinced to the contrary. But this affects not the argument in general: because the question is, whether Inoculation is absolutely, and in itself, a fin. And GoD forbid that the mere opinions, and obstinate prejudices of an ignorant few, should make that a fin, which is not itself fo. Such weak people are more to be pitied than their unreasonable foruples of conficience are to be regarded. For tho' ST. PAUL was willing to bear, as he expresses it, with the infirmities of the weak JEWS, and not to force them to retract their obstinate error in believing that feveral meats were unclean to them to eat, things of fo little importance in themfelves, yet fo far was he from giving them room to believe their fcruples of conficience were juftly founded, that he tells them his own opinion of the matter, in the following emphatical manner: -I know, and am perfuaded by the Lord JESUS that there is nothing unclean of itfelf.

Notwithstanding St. PAUL thus forbore to cenfure those JEWS who entertained opinions of things indifferent, contrary to his own; and forbad the firong in faith to judge feverely and uncharitably of them; unwilling, perhaps, to oppose and offend their obstinacy at a time when they were just converted to Christianity, he, doubtless concluded, in his private fentiments, they were endowed with a very poor share of understanding; and therefore bestowed pretty liberally on them, but in a mild and fensible manner, the term weak; that firong characteristic of ignorance.

Now, as the objections to that mode of felf-prefervation, expressed by Inoculation, are, alike, merely confcientious, (nay more fo than the scruples of the converted JEWS concerning the uncleanness of some particular meats; a misapprehension of the Mosaic institution favouring their opinions) founded on no one part of scripture, no ways repugnant to the revealed will of God, let me again exclaim, shall the weak-

13:

nefs, the infirmities of an ignorant few be regarded ? fhall their ridiculous, unreasonable, and groundlefs fcruples of conficience be judged sufficient to frustrate the most happy discovery, the most noble endeavour; or stop the progress of one of the greatest blessings ever wouch fasted to man ?

IT is fcarce worth while to take notice here of an objection that was once made to the practice of Inoculation, founded, as afferted, on Scripture : but as fome of my hearers may have heard the fame, without prejudice, I dare fay, in favour of it, I shall give the argument and answer. A confcientious perfon, or at least an affected one, observed, that Inoculation was condemned under the following piece of advice of ST. PAUL to the PHILLIPPIANS; be careful for nothing, but in every thing, by prayer and Supplication, let your requests be made known unto GoD. It was anfwered, That if ST. PAUL had even faid ; be not careful of your life; use no means to keep and preserve it, no argument could be drawn from hence against Inoculation : that fuch expressions must be underflood in the fame fenfe with those of our SAVIOUR, take no thought for the morrow, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, or wherewithal ye shall be cloathed: which commands, none, in their fenses, could fuppose our bleffed SAVIOUR enjoined men literally to obey; but were meant to advife them to withdraw their affections from the world; that is, not to be fo folicitous about the things of this life, as to make them forget the one thing needful, the falvation of their fouls: — that in this fenfe ST. PAUL was to be underftood; and therefore Inoculation, fo far from indicating too great an affection or over-folicitoufnefs for the things of this world, or even life itfelf, may always be embraced, for what the forupulous prove to the contrary, and what is reafonable and charitable to fuppofe, in order to preferve life to the glory of GoD, and good of mankind.

EQUALLY weak and ridiculous are those arguments against Inoculation, which are built on the following passage of ST. PAUL: — let him that flandeth take beed least he fall. This advice was given by the Apostle to persuade the Co-RINTHIANS to adhere fledfastly to the christian religion; and to take especial care they were not tempted to idolatry. But allowing it can be wrested to fignify an obligation to avoid fickness, or in other words not to expose or lessen our health, when we enjoy the greatest share of it; yet this passage may be brought as much, if not more, in defence of Inoculation, than against it. For, if the words must, I fay, be wrested to allude to this subject, why may not the favourers of Inoculation thus paraphrafe them? We enjoy, at prefent, the moft perfect health, but as the Small-pox, when received by natural infection, is generally attended with dreadful circumftances, and great danger to life, nay frequently, with the lofs of ; let us though we think we fland, take beed left we fall by this fatal ficknefs: the fad effects of which, we cannot more prudently and fecurely guard againft, than by embracing Inoculation ; which, experience has demonstrated by numberlefs inflances, fubdues the power of the diforder, and banishes every fymptom of danger.

HAVING thus advanced, and, I flatter myfelf, in fome meafure proved, that the mode of SELF-PRE-SERVATION, implied by Inoculation, is neither directly nor indirectly forbidden by Revelation, I fhall endeavour further to fhew the abfurdity of the above general objection, and to evince that this action is commanded by the law of GOD. — For this purpofe we are to obferve, that by the law of Scripture, as it is the rule of confeience, we are not only to underftand the express commands and prohibitions we meet with in the letter of the text, but all that by unavoidable confequence follow from those commands or prohibitions. In a word, when we are deliberating concerning the goodness or badness, the lawfulnefs or unlawfulnefs of this or that action ; we are not only to look upon the letter of the law, but to attend farther to what that law may be supposed by a rational man to contain. And if we be convinced that the action about which we deliberate is commanded or forbidden by direct inference, or by parity of reafon, we ought to look upon it as a duty or a fin, though it be not expresly commanded nor forbidden by the law, in the letter of it. And if neither by the letter of the law, nor by confequence from it, nor by parity of reason, the action appears to be commanded or forbidden, in that cafe we are to look on it as an indifferent action; which we may do or omit as before observed with a safe conscience : or to exprefs the thing properly; we may look upon it as an action in which our conscience is not fo much concerned as our prudence .- Whatever, then, is commanded by Gon, the opposite fin is ever understood in that command to be forbidden; and, under what is forbidden, the contrary duty is commanded and implied .- For example ; thou shalt not steal; the contrary duty implied is, thou shalt live honest ; - keep the fabbath day holy; the contrary forbidden is, thou fhalt not forget or prophane the fabbath :--- thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour; the contrary command is, thou shalt speak the truth of thy neighbour. To come to the point; thou shalt do no murder: no murder means, no kind of murder, either on thyself or fellow-creature: what I insist upon, therefore, is, that according to the foregoing observations, by parity of reason, and by direct inference, the following duty is absolutely implied under the fixth commandment; --- thou shalt use thy utmost endeavours to preserve thy life, and that of thy fellowcreatures.

TTO.

To this method of reafoning it might, perhaps, be objected; or agreeable to it, it may be faid, that if a perfon dies under Inoculation, the party, and all who advifed the action, are involved in the guilt of murder. But nothing would be more weak and abfurd than fuch an objection; becaufe the guilt of an action arifes from the intention: or, in other words, the intention, with which an action is done, conflitutes the degree of guilt or innocence; and by which it appears criminal or otherwife in the fight of the ALL WISE SEARCHER OF HEARTS. If the cafe was not fo, a man who killed another by mere accident, would be equally guilty with him that murders from malice of heart: but this is too evident to dwell on.

IT should be asked then, with what intent do we embrace Inoculation ; - to fave life or to destroy it ?

-most affuredly to lengthen and preferve life. The intention is good therefore, and confequently as the action is neither forbidden directly nor indirectly, it may with confidence be afferted that the practice of Inoculation can be juffified in the fight of God and confcience. Nay, it may be infifted that this act is not only justifiable but pleasing to the ALMIGHTY : for if felf-murder be forbidden, and a crime heinous in the eyes of our CREATOR, we may certainly be allowed, on the contrary, to conclude it is agreeable to him to fee his creatures firive to preferve their lives, and those of their families. In a word, to those, whofe objections are built on obffinate and unreafonable prejudices, and groundless fcruples of conscience, should the fame question be put, which our bleffed SAVIOUR proposed to the JEWS who condemned him for healing on the Sabbath-day ; is it lawful to do good, to fave life or to destroy it?

IT may not only be advanced, that the act of Inoculation is tacitly commanded by the law of GoD, but that it is in itfelf an indifpenfable moral duty. — That every man is under an obligation to preferve and employ the life given him by his CRE-ATOR, to the best of purposes, cannot be denied. Neither is any man to live to himfelf: all are bound to the LORD of the universe faithfully to discharge their duties in their feveral stations, to the honour and glory of their CREATOR, and the good of their fellowcreatures. We are all inftruments in God's hands. made to answer the particular ends of his Providence ; -the parts allotted us at our birth, we are to perform with the utmost care through life ; and, whatever the race be, to run it with patience, and refignation to the divine will. - On these confiderations we are indispensably obliged fludiously to maintain and preferve the effential means that are to effect the above purpofes, in order to fulfil the decrees of our AL-MIGHTY CREATOR : and that means is LIFE. As no one, 1 think, can deny their obligation to be careful of life, for the above ends; and as all are early convinced of the fatality of the Small-pox, when received by natural infection, how dangerous, how deftructive a contagion it is; the following queries may not, perhaps, be uninterefting, and unworthy attention.

C 2

SERMON

AND first, Do we act prudently and wifely by living in continual danger of being cut off by a most horrible distemper, when there are safe and certain means to avoid it ?

Do we, by this groß obflinacy and neglect, fet a proper value on the life that God has given us ?

Do we, by thus defpifing the means of fafety, endeavour to preferve life, agreeable to our duty, to answer the ends of the creation ?

IF parents, do we act with tendernefs, or justice to our children, by this conduct? or with affection towards them, if we neglect to fecure their lives?

IF patriots, ministers, or any other useful members of the community, do we approve ourselves good subjects and discharge our duties to the nation and to fociety, if we risk the loss of our lives, and confequently the loss of our services to our fellow-creatures, by neglecting to embrace Inoculation?

So far from pleading conscience against Inoculation, can we fay we are strictly satisfied in our consciences that we act well-pleasing unto GoD, by neglecting to use those falutary means for the prefervation of life, which have been long practiced with bis blessing?

OR can we peremptorily fay, we are convinced in our conficiences we fhould not be at all acceffary to our death, (knowing the extreme fafety of Inoculation) if we were cut off by the natural Small-pox ?

MAY it not with the utmost reason, be prefumed, as the ALMIGHTY has for many years given so extraordinary a bleffing to Inoculation, that the act is pleafing in his fight? and does not his approbation of the act imply an obligation on us to perform and embrace it?

SERMON

. 22

In fine, can our prefent antagonists, who pretend to be fo extremely tender and scrupulous in regard to conficience, answer the above questions, without entertaining the least doubt that the practice of Inoculation is just and lawful?

SURELY the act is not fo manifest a fin, as to difpel every doubt to the contrary. If it was, there would be no difpute; all would be fatisfied concerning it. Let then the enemies to Inoculation acknowledge, as we will charitably fuppofe is the cafe, that their fcruples of confcience are no more than doubts concerning the lawfulness of the action; arising from a view of it in a wrong light, or owing to their not having fludioufly and firicity examined the fubject, and propricty of their objections. The question then is, how , are they best to act in their doubtful situation? the answer is obvious, viz. in every doubtful case a man is to all as reafonably as he can. It was observed in a former part of this difcourfe, that what was neither commanded or forbidden by the law of Gob, became an indifferent thing, and left to the option of man to do or omit; no fin being incurred in either respect. Allowing therefore Inoculation to be ranked under things indifferent, the propriety or impropriety of the action (fin being out of the cafe) arifes from the fitness, expediency, or reasonableness of it. If so, Inoculation is quickly reftored (if I may use the expression) from a matter of doubt; the fitness, expediency, and reasonableness of it all confpiring to persuade, to enforce, to justify the practice. In short, the act of Inoculation cannot be opposed from any scruples of conscience, because all such scruples must be founded on the law of GOD; but as this cannot be pretended to in the present case, the act becomes a mere matter of doubt; to incline which, not religion, but reason is concerned: and if any can yet be in fuspence which way reason will incline them to refolve their doubts, let them frequent the dwellings of the inoculated, and of those under natural infection, and they will have proofs fraught with conviction.

MANY are the variations of the duty or obligation we are all under to preferve life ; and the modes in which it may be reprefented ; but I flatter myfelf, the preceding questions are fufficient to shew that the practice of Inoculation can be defended and justified by other arguments than those of scripture.

ONE of the above queries intimates that the AL-MIGHTY vouchfafes a bleffing on the practice of Inoculation; from which may be drawn a firong, and I think, a conclusive argument in defence of it. 'Tis true, indeed, we read in fcripture that wicked people and their practices were crowned with fuccefs; a bleffing given to a fin, to bring about a wife and good end. But this affects not in the leaft our prefent fubject. For in the firft place we deny the action to be finful, becaufe it is not forbidden; and becaufe our motive or intention is certainly laudable and good; being an endeavour to preferve life, (as ought to be fuppofed) to the glory of GOD and for the benefit of ourfelves, families, and fellow-creatures. But allowing the action to be finful, I demand an anfwer from the confcientious to the following queftion:

IF Inoculation be a fin, what good end can reafon prefume to fuppofe that God intends to bring about by giving a bleffing and fuccefs to it ?

It will be an unfair answer to fay that God's aways are in the deep, and bis paths past finding out : because in the particular cases mentioned in scripture, whose ends were accomplished by bad men and bad actions, it was reasonable to suppose, and easy to foresee that such would be the ends and consequences of the means so used. In short, they were very particular cases to answer temporary or immediate purposes. But Inoculation is a thing of general moment. The whole world is, or may be concerned in it. It is a practice now of some years standing. It is reasonable therefore to suppose, if the ALMIGHTY was difpleafed with the action, he would have long ago thewn marks of his displeasure. As the action is not forbidden, and cannot, confequently, be proved finful, will any be fo hardy as to affert it is a fin; and that God has given thus long a bleffing to it; fuch great and extensive fuccess to a wickedness ? ---Let us much rather believe that GoD, feeing the fatal distemper increasing, and spreading itself over the earth, fweeping away myriads of his creatures, inftilled light into man's mind for the difcovery of Inoculation, and will ever crown it with fuccefs. --- Another observation may be made to shew, that the prefent cafe is not fimilar to those in Scripture, and ought not to be judged parallel with them. It is this: --- the ends that were brought about by the above-mentioned means were local, confined to a particular people; but the bleffing that GoD gives to Inoculation is extended to every tribe, to every nation, where practifed.

I come now to take fome little notice of the latter part of the foregoing general objection; for I hope I have in fome measure proved that reason does not, in this particular, direct a choice of means contrary to the law of GoD; and that the act of Inoculation, fo far as revelation is concerned, cannot be difpleafing to the ALMIGHTY. The remaining reafons for retaining fcruples of confcience against Inoculation, are much easier answered, and are as follow:

A SERMON

THE ALMIGHTY is LORD of life and death, and of all things to them pertaining, as health, strength, weakness and sickness. That to take the reins of these out of his hands must be wicked; and that moreover Inoculation is a sin, because it shews a mistrust of the AL-MIGHTY, as if he was unable to deliver us from death.

THE arguments (if they deferve the name) that can be brought from hence, are of that kind which prove too much. --- As to the particular of taking the reins out of Gop's hands, I cannot better expose the abfurdity of it, than by the following comparison. ---Man for his disobedience, was driven out of Paradife. to till and cultivate the ground from whence he was taken. Many of the fons of ADAM have their habitations near those bounds, beyond which the LORD of the universe fays, the fea shall not pass. Man, by labour and experience finds, that the drops of the ocean, properly applied, enrich the land which he is commanded to cultivate; and accordingly unbars the bound of the fea that the waters may cover the face of the ground .--- Will any one fay, that man take the reins out of Goo's hand, because he makes the fea pafs those bounds which GOD fays it shall not pass? The absurdity is too manifest to dwell on; for the will of GOD is not to obstruct the good of mankind.

MORE ridiculous, if poffible, is the other obfervation, that Inoculation implies a mistrust of the AL-MIGHTY; as if he was unable to deliver us from death. --- If this was the cafe, it would be a fin to apply to a phyfician or furgeon, or to take medicine to relieve us from pain or fickness, be the remedy at hand, and neceffity ever fo great and urgent. The truth is, there is one regular and eftablished rule of government, or PROVIDENCE over us. We are fubject to manifold difeases, that threaten our diffolution ; but there are remedies to relieve us. 'Tis our duty to make use of them : without an endeayour on our part we cannot expect the grace or bleffing of God in any thing. --- The ALMIGHTY works no miracles to fave our lives. --- We may affure ourselves, therefore, it is our duty to partake of, and madnefs to refuse those bleffings which man, under PROVIDENCE, has obtained for us, by indefatigable labour and fludy. That it behoves us, by every honeft means to fecure our lives here, as well as our falvation hereafter. In a word, we may embrace Inoculation with a fafe confcience for the following indifputable reafons. The act is not forbidden by the law of God; the intention in us is good and laudable; and the means, if not abused, are inoffensive to our fellow-creatures.

D 2

SERMON

28

THERE remains a fcruple of confcience still to be answered, in regard to the extent of Inoculation. For many approve of and embrace the act themfelves, who cannot be perfuaded to extend it to their infants, thinking it finful to inoculate them without their confent, before they come to years of difcretion, to chuse for themselves. But this scruple of confcience is equally weak and abfurd with the foregoing : nay more fo; --- for if we have fatisfied ourfelves that the action is right and good in itself, it is inconfistent in the nature of things to fuppofe that any fin can arife from the difference of age or fubject on whom Inoculation is practifed. But in fact, it is no matter of religious confideration, but an affair in which our prudence is folely concerned, and of which reafon and experience fhew the fitnefs and expediency. --- But, fay the confcientious, if our children die from Inoculation, we fould never be eafy in mind, nor forgive ourfelves. In the first place we answer, there is fcarce a poffibility of death attending the action; fo fafe is the practice, and fo great is the perfection to which it is now brought. But allowing that fome infants may die, no fin is incurred, becaufe the act is not forbidden, and our intention, agreeable to our former argument and the language of Scripture, is to do good, to fave life, not to deftroy it. But the best reply to make to all forupulous parents is to ask them the following question:

ON INOCULATION.

IF you neglect to have your children inoculated, and they are infected, as they grow up, with the natural Small-pox and die, have you not real caufe to to be uneafy, and to accufe yourfelves of careleffnefs and want of natural affection, as the means to have faved their lives, at leaft from this kind of death, were fo manifeftly efficacious, and fo indifputably fafe? --- The chance that children are naturally infected with this diftemper, before they come to years of difcretion, amounts to a great probability; and that they may die under it, there is too much reafon to fear; --- but that Inoculation will fecure them from all danger, is not to be doubted, much lefs queftioned.

I now flatter myfelf that what has been advanced, is fufficient to remove the fcruples of the confcientious concerning the act of Inoculation. I shall therefore hasten to conclude, by shewing what great benefits result to ourselves and society from the practice of it.

THESE, indeed, are various and numerous, which must naturally occur to every one who confiders the fubject with attention .--- Whether we view Inoculation in a public or private light, great are its benefits. --- In families how is their happiness established by this fecurity of lives! To let this reflection have its due weight, we need only confider into what diftreffes many are plunged, by the fudden lofs of parents, relations or friends, cut off by the malignancy of the natural Small-pox! And what forrow, what grief of heart do parents frequently feel, by having their children, perhaps an only child, thus untimely caught away ! --- And moreover, what fhocking objects thousands are in appearance, to the great unhappiness of their friends, who might have preferved the fair image of Gop, and efcaped the feverity and ravages of the dreadful ill ! -- But how, I fay, is domeftic happinefs, peace, and joy fecured and continued by Inoculation ! With what ecftacy does the affectionate wife receive her hufband after he has thus furmounted a ficknefs, which fhe feared was unto death ! With what transports does the tender husband meet his endearing partner, when she has thus lightly, and with, perhaps, additional beauty, fecured her life ! --- And with what inexpressible joy and pleasure do parents behold their children, their anxious hopes and fears, thus preferved from a fatal distemper, and likely to call, for many years, their lands after their own name.

SERMON

ON INOCULATION.

If we confider this fubject minutely, what benefits do we find arife from Inoculation, in regard to the affairs of life ! --- Thoufands there are who neglect many weighty concerns, and let flip lucky opportunities, for fear of being infected while from home, or at those places where their business and interest call them. Not to mention their continual dreadful apprehensions, which alone are fufficient to render their lives miserable !

NEXT, what ineftimable advantages do the public reap from Inoculation ! 'Tis moft certainly a happy difcovery, a bleffing of the moft weighty concern to this kingdom; whofe ftrength, happinefs, and fecurity confift principally in the number of its inhabitants. --- The promoting the Practice of Inoculation is, therefore, confiftent with our beft policy, and fhould be encouraged, as much as poffible, by the government: and more efpecially at this time, when the nation is fo thin of men, that it is well known, and feverely felt, thoufands are wanted among the lower clafs, to perform the common works of hufbandry and labour. But how would this fcarcity of people be felt, if we were to be engaged foon again in another war ! In fhort, every kingdom is the more powerful the more it increases in population. If then every child's life is of great value to community, of how much more confquence are the lives of lufty youths and robuft men ! All, all are faved by Inoculation ; but thousands, thro' neglect of it, are every year cut off in the prime of youth and manhood. Let any man ferioufly reflect what an immenfe lofs, in many respects, this mult naturally be to the nation. To treat this subject politically is not the business of the pulpit, otherwife many are the reafons that occur to perfuade, to enforce the Practice of Inoculation, from the necessity of the times, the nature of the diforder, and conflitutions of the people. Many are the arguments and perfuafions to this end. All therefore, especially those in superior stations, should encourage and recommend fo beneficial, fo happy a means of felf-prefervation ; and endeavour by every argument to remove the fcruples of the weak, that the bleffing may extend to every part of the kingdom, and to every individual.

SERMON

To conclude. That there fhould be people who oppose the practice and progress of Inoculation, I mean from mere prejudice, for we have done with the fcrupulous and confcientious, is hard to reconcile. The danger on one hand is manifestly great, the extreme fastery on the other is experimentally proved, and univerfally known. Thoufands are cut off by the one, and tens of thousands faved by the other. There, death triumphantly walks the ftreets, feeking whom he may devour ; here, he is banished from our habitations, and deprived of all power to approach and hurt us. There, we continually hear the folemn knell; here, the loud peals of joy and health. ---Let us not then be fo mad as to oppofe REASON; fo foolifh as to difregard EXPERIENCE; and fo obflinate as to stand out against CONVICTION. In a word, let us not meanly and cowardly fubmit to death when we have difarmed him of his fling, and obtained this victory over the grave. --- But let us, while we admire the fuccefsful practice of man, ultimately attribute this great bleffing to the goodnefs of that Being, whole mercy is over all his works, and ever practice it in its utmost extent, to his glory and the good of mankind.

ON INOCULATION.

thomas what shale in this prove a some gation.

in his strange the same hot over a minute

d ben yn he saine ode berefine. Si aw an san sanstenen die e

Now to God, &c.

13

E

[34]

PRAYERS used at Mr. SUTTON's.

A PRAYER for the Recovery of Patients under Inoculation. [To be used after O God the Creator, &c.]

ALMIGHTY GOD, in whom we live, move, and have our being, and to whom alone belong the iffues of life and death, our only help in time of need, most humbly we befeech thee to grant, that all those of this present household, who now labour under an indisposition of body, may fastely and speedily recover from their infirmity. And most earnessly we implore thy greatest blessing on this and every endeavour of men, to preserve the lives of their fellow-creatures, that our days may be prolonged upon earth, to thy honour and glory, through JESUS CHRIST OUR LORD. Amen.

APRAYER for the Recovery of Patients from Inoculation. [To be used after the General Thanksgiving.]

ALMIGHTY and moft merciful Father, by whole gracious providence our lives are prolonged, and we are preferved from the manifold dangers that befet us, we return thee our unfeigned facrifice of praife and thank fgiving for bleffing thole means to us, which therefore we prefume to use, and in confidence of thy divine pleafure, continue to purfue, for fubduing the power of that fickness which hath been so often unto death. And vouch fafe, we befeech thee, particularly to accept the grateful thanks of all those in this prefent congregation, to whom thou haft lately reftored the voice of joy and health. For this thy prefervation and providence over us, we laud and magnify thy glorious name, and afcribe all honour and power to Thee, the Son, and Holy Ghoft, now and for ever. Amen. ************

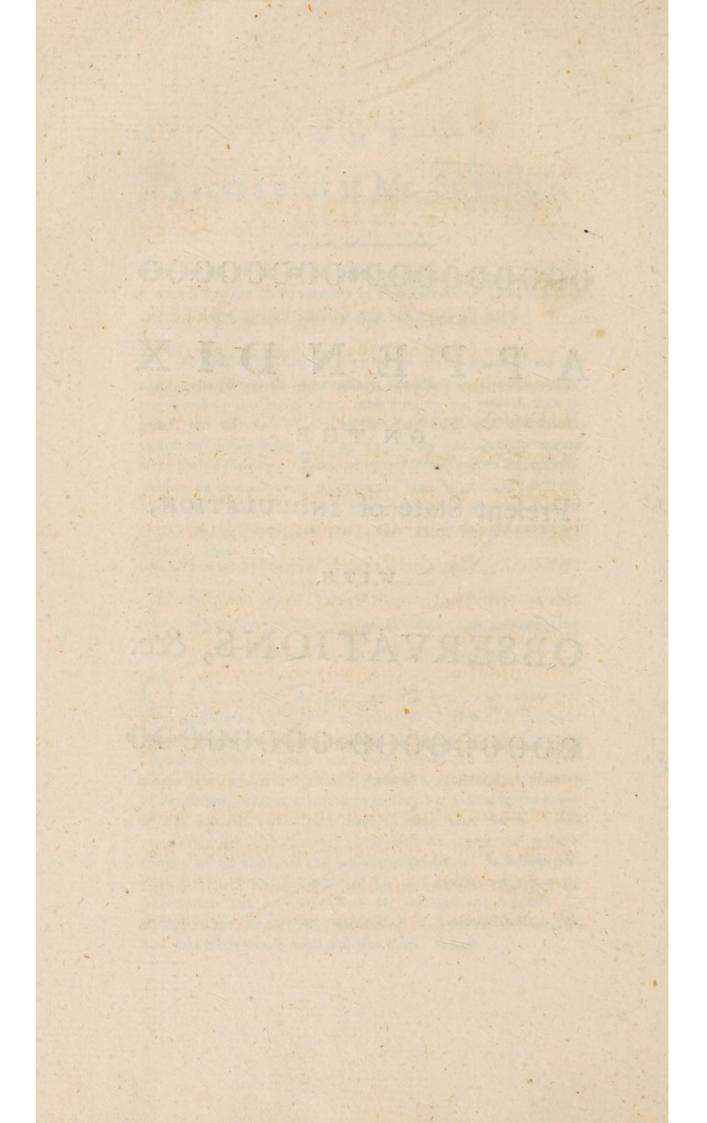

APPENDIX

ONTHE

Present State of INOCULATION,

WITH

OBSERVATIONS, &c.

[37]

APPENDIX, &c.

THE progress of Inoculation, like that of many other arts, has been in general extremely flow; owing to the ignorance and barbarism of the people by whom it was difcovered, and to the fluggish genius and prejudice of the countries, where it has been introduced and attempted to be cultivated. Nay the French, who efteem themfelves the most enlightened, and fensible nation under heaven, willing to give an evident proof of their fagacity and wisdom, have forbid, in general, by order of parliament, the Practice of Inoculation. But we poor ignorant John Trots, who must not pretend to difpute their fuperior fenfe, have given a kind reception to the banished art, are grateful for the bleffing, and shall bumbly endeavour, by means of it, to preferve 38 the lives of many English bearts of oak, who may, one time or other, drub the Monfieurs for their folly. But to be ferious.

NOTWITHSTANDING the art of Inoculation, fince it was first discovered, has been in general flow in its progrefs, and very gradually, and in many refpects very injudicioufly practifed, it has rapidly advanced, within these last ten years, towards the point and fummit of perfection; and, like MIL-TON's divine poem, has broke from the fhackels of ignorance and prejudice, and is efteemed by every rational man, an art, a bleffing of the most ineftimable value .---The merit of this perfection, I readily attribute, without the least apprehension of being contradicted, to the skill, the indefatigable labours and experiments of the Sutton family, who now practice Inoculation with unparalleled and aftonishing fuccefs, in different parts of the kingdom. Particularly is the public indebted to Mr. Daniel Sutton, the Gentleman to whom the foregoing Difcourfe is addreffed; — whofe fingular method of Inoculation, and the many great improvements, and lights he has made and thrown on the Practice, have excited the attention, furprize and admiration of the whole kingdom, efpecially of the faculty. — That the reader may form fome opinion of the fkill of this Gentleman, of the fafety of his practice, and power of his medicines, I prefent them with the following particulars; knowing them to be facts, as I have long been converfant with his method, frequented his houfes, and an eye-witnefs to all I affert.

AND first, the slightness of his operation in communicating the infection, may well demand our admiration. It is easier than we can possibly conceive. With respect to pain, it is not equal to the thousandth part which the prick of a pin gives. The operation is performed on most without their feeling or knowing it : and in a minute afterwards, the puncture is fcarce visible. I mention this, becaufe many are apt to dread the operation; being apprehensive that a large incifion is to be made.-The whole that follows, is perfectly in character with the operation. The patients in general have little or no fickness : their indisposition is fo trifling that they are ashamed to complain; and in a few days they are perfectly well. Here is no confinement, no keeping of bed. All is mirth, and all feem happy. In fact, this fortnight-vifit to Mr. Sutton's, abounds with real pleafure and fatisfaction. The pleafing conversation of the company, added to their various amufements, makes the time glide away imperceptibly. -----If Mr. Sutton perceives a fymptom in patients of a great fever, or a probability of their having more puftules than they would chufe, he quickly prevents both by virtue of his medicines. In fhort, if any patient in the houfe has twenty or thirty puftules, he is faid to have the Small-pox very heavy. — 'Tis impoffible to make the reader conceive, with what eafe, with what trifling ficknefs and extreme fafety this Gentleman, his family, and affiftants, conduct patients through Inoculation. If there were not thoufands that can atteft it, I fhould be backward to rifk being believed by the public, though I have the ftrongeft demonstration of it myfelf.

I HAVE heard it faid by feveral eminent phyficians, that if any medicine can be difcovered to prevent a too great burthen of puftules, that fuch medicine would be ineftimable. There is no doubt but this fecret lies in the breaft of the SUTTON family. 'Tis feldom they have occafion much to ufe it; but its efficacy and power have been often tried and proved; and that very lately on a lady's child who is almost my next door neighbour. The child was feized with the natural Small-pox unknown to the parent. As foon as it was difcovered by the puftules making a plentiful appearance, the child was conveyed to one of Mr. Sur-TON's houses. The next morning the face and body being extremely full, Mr. SUT-TON marked with a pen a great number of pustules, and administered the medicine I allude to : fome hours afterwards, hundreds of the puftules difappeared; and among them feveral of those marked, leaving the little dot on the plain furface of the fkin. The child did extremely well. For the fatisfaction of the curious, I take the liberty to mention that the child was fon to Mr. BARNARD, of WITHAM in Essex, who died of the natural confluent Small-pox, and from whom the child is supposed to have caught the infection. Mrs. BARNARD, the mother, attended her child all the time he was at Mr. Sutton's .- However furprizing this may feem, it is an experiment that has been often tried and proved. And any who appeal to Mr. Sutton may have many instances given where this medicine has been equally powerful and efficacious. It is alfo worthy of notice to obferve, that two days before Mr. BARNARD's death, Mr. SUTTON took fome matter from him to inoculate a gentleman's family near Ipfwich; the gentleman defiring that his children might be inoculated with natural matter. Notwithftanding it is reafonable to fuppofe that this matter was of the most virulent kind, Mr. SUTTON, by his medicine, prevented any ill effects arifing from it; and the children had but fix or eight puftules, and those of the fineft and most diffinct fort. --- What a happinefs, what a great fatisfaction must it be then, to a patient to reflect, that if he fhould be in any danger of having a burthen of puftules, there is a means to prevent it ! By his fingular method of Inoculation not one in a thoufand have more puftules than they wifh; but I must repeat that it is an unspeakable fatisfaction to confider he has a powerful medicine to dispel every fymptom of danger. —— There are many other furprising and fingular circumstances in Mr. Sutton's practice which I cannot mention confistently with friendship, and my promise of secrety. — I shall conclude therefore these observations, by giving the number of patients he has inoculated in these last three years; which account I have taken from his books, and is as follows;

42

44

> In the year 1764—1629 1765—4347 1766—7816

13792

IN the laft two years Mr. Sutton inoculated feveral large parties at a time; particularly, four hundred and feventeen people on one day at Maldon in Effex. Befides feveral hundreds in and near Maidstone in Kent; and many of the first families in the county. — To the above number should be added fix thousand that have been inoculated by Mr. Sutton's affistants, as he taught them his method, and as they use none but his medicines. So that he may be faid to have inoculated within these three years, twenty thousand performs. take no notice here of the numbers inoculated by him, during the several years he was in practice with his father, because he kept no regular account of them.

OF the above multitude he denies that a fingle patient has died fairly from INO-CULATION, (by him or his affiftants) or from its effects. The death of two or three reported to have died was owing, one to his own imprudence in being drunk feveral times during the eruption; the other two to complicated diforders, which would have killed them had they not been inoculated: for as to the Small-pox, they had but very few puftules, and had taken their leave of Mr. Sutton. ---- But here it ought to be remarked, that had he abfolutely loft fifty out of the above number, no argument could be drawn from thence to depreciate his method and medicines. Let any unprejudiced and reafonable man reflect what an immenfe number five thousand only is to inoculate; of what various conftitutions they must naturally be; and what latent weakneffes and infirmities many must have among them. Let us confider what great odds it is, fuppofing we chufe fome thoufands of the most healthy people we know, that feveral of them die within a fortnight; the time that patients in general are under Mr. Sutton's care. ---- But was it not a miracle almost, with respect to the town of Maldon in Effex, where Mr. Sutton inoculated above four hundred one morning, that not one patient fhould die, confidering they were of all ages and conflitutions; every perfon in the town being inoculated that had not had the Small-pox! Several other large parties in Kent, and in various parts of the kingdom have been inoculated in the fame manner, and with the fame fuccefs.

46

IN a word, any man that will undertake to enquire into Mr. SUTTON'S fuccefs, may have the most convincing proofs from many of the first families in the kingdom, as well as from thousand others, that his method of Inoculation is most easy and fafe, and that his medicines are most efficacious and powerful.—Many inftances could be mentioned of his skill in the natural Smallpox. That of a young lady at MAIDsTONE, whom he faved last autumn, after she was given over by her physician, is well known, and is alone fufficient to establish his character for ever.

SUCH a long unfullied fuccefs, has greatly excited the attention of the kingdom, particularly of the faculty; fome of whom have made diligent enquiries into the truth of it, and endeavoured by many artful, if not mean methods, to discover the SECRETS of the SUTTONIAN PRACTICE. Others have wrote pamphlets containing common and trifling informations that they have received from fome of Mr. SUTTON's patients; displaying his method of preparation, which they might have copied from any of his printed bills of directions .- These learned and fatisfactory pamphlets contain alfo fhrewd and probable conjectures of the ingredients that compose his medicines But I think it is probable that few readers will be weak enough to fwallow a conjecture that may turn out a difagreeable certainty; or at leaft make use of it, when they know where to apply for the real fecret.

48

Two pamphlets have lately appeared on this fubject, written by two en inent Phyficians; one by Dr. BAKER, F. R. S. and Phyfician to her Majefty's houfhold; the other, being a Letter in answer to Dr. BAKER, by Dr. GLASS of Exeter. The fubstance of these pieces relates to the practice of a certain person and bis sons, as these authors stile the Sutton family. But I am at a lofs to guels why they forbore to mention the name of Sutton. Surely, if their practice is worthy the notice of these eminent physicians, this little honour might have been paid. But perhaps Dr. BAKER and Dr. GLASS thought, that by mentioning the name of the operators, whole practice they deigned to write on, they might influence the public too much in their favour. - I wish I had as great an opinion of Dr. BAKER's ingenuoufnefs as I have of his ingenuity. But I hardly think it fair, that he should employ means to obtain informations from the patients of a gentleman, relative to his practice, which is his livelihood, and then difcover them to the world. But he has gone farther; for fince his late publication, he has applied to the worthy and fenfible clergyman, he fpeaks of in his pamphlet, and who favoured him with much of his information, to endeavour to get from Mr. Robert Sutton, (one of the fons, who like the reft of the family practices with the greateft fuccefs) anfwers to the following queries.

49

G

WHETHER the pill or powder after Inoculation be the fame with the preparatory powder?

Do you ever trust to fweating medicines in the eruptive fever?

DOES the pill or powder ever vomit?

Is the punch a fudorific or a cooler?

Do you inoculate with any moifture taken from the arm within four days after the operation?

THERE were more queries; but, my dear Dr. BAKER, how could you imagine that Mr. Sutton would anfwer fuch home queftions? Can you think that he would do juftice to himfelf and family by thus difcovering feveral effentials of his practice, efpecially too to a gentleman, who juft before publifhed to the world all the information he could get relative to his method? Indeed, my good doctor, the Sutton family have as much fenfibility in the touch of omnium gatherum as yourfelf. — In fhort, Dr. BAKER has difcovered to the public what was never made a fecret of, viz. that part of Mr. Sutton's practice confifts in adhering to a cool regimen.

A FEW weeks fince Dr. GLASS, an eminent phyfician at Exeter, publifhed a letter to Dr. BAKER, by way of anfwer to his pamphlet; queftioning the general propriety of the cool regimen, notwithftanding the Sutton family have practiced it with fuccefs, in above forty thoufand inftances. — The reader will pleafe to obferve, that Dr. GLASS tells us, " he has followed his own principles and notions, and that thefe have led him to conclusions, which, in fome inftances, oppose the opinion of Dr. BAKER." No doubt of it. I never knew a man that would tamely give up his notions and principles, if there was the least room for contradiction; and the faculty are the laft gentlemen in the world that regard each other's opinion or prescription. - Dr. GLASS therefore, who has certainly fome little veneration for old nurfes, has advanced in his letter, by way of contradiction, that there are fome cafes in which the cool regimen would be dangerous; and when nurfing and comfortable cordials are abfolutely neceffary. By the bye, Dr. BAKER had faid nothing to the contrary; but argued in general that experience enforced the use of the cool regimen. Dr. GLASS, however, had an itch for writing, and he knew a pamphlet must be about fomething; and therefore raifed an objection of his own, learnedly difputed the point, and anfwered it moft fully, viz. by bis own method of practice. Dr. GLASS has made, in his letter, a very clear, and a very abstrufe difcovery. The former is, "that acids flain pewter pots black." — the latter, or very abstrufe difcovery is, "It is a contradiction, that a determined effect flould exift in virtue of a caufe, which doth not contain the entire and complete reason of its existence."

51

52

BEFORE I take my leave of these Gentlemen, I must be so free as to inform them that their late publications contain little, very little indeed of the Suttenian Practice of Inoculation. — For their treatment of their patients, particularly in respect to giving the medicines, depends entirely on their constitutions, and the nature of the case. As these must be various, and in many respects extremely different, it certainly requires much science to know and manage them. Nothing, therefore, of great confequence, can be afcertained from the informations even of many patients, as they can give no reafon why they were treated in this or that manner. Befides it will be paying Mr. Sutton a very ill compliment to suppose, that he has but one general method; and that he administers his medicines indiferiminately to all. ---- The time will come, perhaps, when the Sutton family will generously difclose to the world their juftly fingular, noble, and ineftimable Practice of Inoculation. But before this, little is to be expected from any attempts that may be made to difcover it or their medicines, and lefs to be depended on from wild and fuperficial conjecture.

WHILE the candid and unprejudiced were ftruck with filent admiration at the uncommon and rapid fuccefs of this family, there have not been wanting men from time to time, who, being inftigated by envy, malice, and all the viler paffions, have racked their brains for means, however base and unjustifiable, to obstruct, to ridicule, to depreciate and villify the Suttonian Practice. As this opposition has been chiefly levelled at Mr. Daniel Sutton, the Gentleman who is the principal fubject of this publication, I shall confine the remainder of the Appendix to him. ---- At the latter end of the year 1763, Mr. Sutton came into Effex, and fettled in his prefent habitation, near the town of Ingatestone, under the great difadvantage of being unknown to any in the neighbourhood. Succefs and merit had fcarce owned him for their child, when the fluices of envy, calumny and unprovoked malice were opened against him. Notwithstanding he had long practifed Inoculation under his father, he was reprefented as the loweft of mankind; one that had just jumped into the profession, without fense, art, or a single degree of merit. How much he deferved this character, time has evinced; and I hope long fhewn his firft enemies the true complexion, the real blacknefs of their hearts.—The limits of this work will not admit of my mentioning a thoufandth part of the fcandalous means that have been ufed to obftruct him in the courfe of his practice. I fhall therefore only remark two oppofitions, they being the beft contrived and the moft likely to have hurt him; the jufinefs of which the reader muft determine.

56

ABOUT the beginning of last fummer the Small-pox broke out in a most violent manner at Chelmsford in Effex, fweeping off every week many of the inhabitants. This was a fine opportunity for Mr. Sutton's enemies (many of whom live in that quarter) to furmife, invent and propagate what calumnies they pleafed; especially as he fometimes came on market-days to treat with people, who were inclined to be inoculated. If any perfon chanced to accompany him in his carriage, it was always induffrioufly reported, that fuch perfon was a patient brought to inoculate from. Others could fee fmall pocks out in full bloom (as they expressed it) notwithstanding the companion was frequently an acquaintance; --and as it is diametrically contrary to Mr. Sutton's practice to inoculate from fuch kind of patients. But we shall prove prefently, by the greateft evidence, that fuch were no more nor lefs than gross lies. Mr. Sutton, however, was declared to be the man that infected Chelmsford with the Small-pox, notwithstanding every Apothecary in the town was an Inoculator, and had long practifed round the neighbourhood : nay fome of them had abfolutely inoculated perfons of the town at their own houfes, and this before the Small-pox raged with any violence*. Mr. Sutton too must be the man, notwithftanding Chelmsford lies in the great road from London to Colchefter, Ipfwich, Norwich, Harwich, &c. where many ftagecoaches ftop, and which it is reafonable to fuppose, frequently bring passengers just come from infected houfes, and many doubtlefs that are just recovered from the Smallpox, with their infectious bundles of linen, &c. -----Scandalous accufation ! bafe partiality! In fhort, the unjust infinuation was industrioully and artfully kept up, and influenced a general belief. On this, a fet of men, whose justice, bonour and integrity I want words to express, waited on a diffinguished perfonage to head their benevolent defign. This Gentleman who has, in fact, an heart ever ready to do good, a heart that is naturally an enemy to oppreffion, was borne down with repeated affeverations, and forced as it were by the cries of the people, to appear in a profecution, which, had not calumny and prejudice ftrongly barricaded the voice of truth from his ears, he would never have countenanced. - In confequence of these groundless infinuations and misreprefentations, an inditement was prefered laft fummer affize at Chelmsford, against Mr. Daniel Sutton, Surgeon, for a nuifance; when the Grand Jury not only not found the bill against him, but observed publickly in Court to Lord MANSFIELD, " that not one Single article alledged against him in the inditement was proved; and that moreover they thought it partial to profecute Mr. Sutton in particular, fince they did not find but that the Apothecaries of the town inoculated likewise." They observed however, that Mr. Sutton had been fomewhat indifcreet, and of which indifcretion they would admonish him. But I take the liberty to fay, that had the Grand Jury known the nature of Mr. Sutton's practice, they would not have cenfured him for indifcretion. For had the inditement been found, he would have affuredly nonfuited his enemies, and have proved beyond a poffibility of doubt, that he never brought into

^{*} The author does not mean to infinuate, that the Gentlemen Apothecaries of Chelmsford acted wrong. 'Tis madnefs that the whole town is not inoculated; as from its fituation, it will be always fubject to the Small-pox.

60

Chelmsford a patient, who was capable of infecting a bye-ftander, notwithstanding fuch perfon would convey infection by inoculation. However paradoxical this may feem, it is truth, and would have been proved to a demonstration. But the Grand Jury justly faved Mr. Sutton from being obliged in his defence to difcover one of the most effential parts and fecrets of his profession .---Such was the caufe and iffue of the Chelmfford inditement. A profecution founded on finister and malicious prejudice, supported by lying clamour, carried on with vindictive rage, but opposed by TRUTH, and fruftrated by JUSTICE. ---- Such, O Sutton, will certainly be the fate of all the envious and malicious projects of thy oppofers :---fuch the fhame of all thy enemies. I shall now conclude with the following letter to Mr. ROBERT PINE, Surgeon, at Maidstone in Kent, who has opposed Mr. Sutton, by a method that exceeds the justice of the Chelmsford Inditement.

To Mr. PINE.

SIR,

HERE is not a wretch on earth whom I more heartily pity than yourfelf. For a man who is preyed on by those vultures envy, malice and revenge, muft be a wretch indeed : and though he juftly deferves the greateft infamy and contempt for yielding to the inftigations of thefe viler paffions, he is ftill a real object of diffres, and truly worthy to be commiferated. That you, Sir, are this poor miferable wretch, the offspring of Envy, the child of Malice and flave to Revenge, you have given the public too much reason to believe. - 'Tis doubtless most mortifying to reflect, that a young proficient, a ftranger to your county, should invade your field of practice, should rob you of your birth-right, as you vainly imagine ; and in a fhort time eclipfe your fame and glory. But reafon, nay, common fense should have taught you to be fo wife and prudent as to have endeavoured to cultivate an acquaintance, not to have waged war with merit and fuccefs. - But I muft drop, Sir, all formal harangue with you. Your illiberal attack of me fome time ago, in the St. James's Chronicle, and your unprecedented treatment of my friend Mr. SUTTON, demand that I lafk your conduct with that freedom and feverity it deferves.

You have no right to an apology for my thus exposing you, nor reason to expect the least favour, because you first infulted me without cause, and endeavoured to wound my character from a bare suspicion or villainous information that I was your enemy. For I deny to have had any concern in the affair of Mr. FORSTER's letter; and am defired to open your eyes and to acquaint you, that the advertisement which contained his letter, was published to weaken the Chelmsford Inditement then depending; and the infertion of seven thousand was used as an innocent means to influence an unjust profecution. It had its effect; and I envy the person that thought of it. This was the end it was intended to answer; but you, stung with sufficient, and alarmed for your practice, concluded it muft be levelled against you, and that I, from my connection with Mr. SUTTON, must certainly be the man; and therefore you had the effrontery to mean me (for I have repeatedly traced it to you) in your observation, that " there is one perfon, go where he will," &c .- In fhort, if Mr. FORSTER did not infert the number feven thousand, time has almost evinced that he ought to have done it; and as to the epithet great before majority, I think Mr. FORSTER cannot fo firictly charge his memory as to be certain that he did not infert it. Be this as it may, as I have heard it declared for fact, that there was a great majority in favour of Mr. SUTTON, your afferting to the contrary in the St. James's Chronicle, will have very little weight with me. But why do I wafte time to juftify the infertion of a word, when the whole county of Kent rings with the name of SUTTON, and contains not only a great but an infinite majority for him. ---- But to the purpofe.

You had no fooner the extreme mortification to hear that a majority of your own town had invited Mr. SUTTON, (known only in Kent by fame) to come and inoculate, but you haftened to the temple of Calumny, to impløy means to depreciate his character, and villify his fuccefs. The hagged fiend heard your prayer, and difpatched not a lying dream, but a real imp of Falfehood, (from Maldon in Effex) whom you received with a ghaftly fmile, liftened with malicious pleafure to his infernal tale and propagated it with revengeful and remorfelefs hafte .--I proved to you, by letter, that you had imposed on the public a bafe infinuation, and was in hopes, that from that time you would have forbore to oppofe merit, knowing that I was mafter of a fecret, the difcovery of which would be of material confegence to your Character. But as I have fince found that your inveterate envy has banished all sense of shame, and that you endeavour more and more to aggravate your offence, I fhall difclofe what, I doubt not, will ftartle many of your friends .--You, fir, to fully Mr. SUTTON's fuccefs, had the affurance to destribute thousands of hand-bills over the county of Kent, figned with your name, of which I faw numbers posted up at Rochefter, Maidftone, &c. to infinuate that two children, in or near Maldon, viz. Carter and Poole, died under Mr. SUTTON's

6z

Inoculation.—But to your infamy and difgrace, an eminent furgeon at Maldon afferts, "That he attended both thefe children; that neither of them died from Inoculation, or from the effects of it, but from quite different caufes."—This gentleman's name I mentioned to you in my letter; to give you an opportunity of difcovering your fhame, by your own enquiry. But you, fir, if the world fays true, fhould be the laft man, from your own ill-fuccefs, to mention that of any other, however unfortunate he has been in his practice.

I Now take my leave of you, by remarking a glaring inftance of Ingratitude. Before Mr. SUTTON came into Kent, you ufed to prepare your patients a much longer time than you do at prefent, or at leaft than you did when he was at Maidftone. And that the Public might know this alteration in your method, you furprized them with the following very fingular and mafterly ftroke; "Mr. Pine finds by experience, that a fortnight's preparation is fufficient. I am not certain, as I have not your advertifement, whether the time was not lefs. But pray, fir, uncover you breaft, and anfwer me, honeftly, this queftion; did you not acquire this experimental knowledge from Mr. SUTTON's practice? If fo, have you not acted towards him with the blackeft ingratitude?

I am, Sir,

With a proper Refpect, Your's, ROBERT HOULTON.

N. B. From the nature of this publication I expect much abufe; but I shall take no notice of any Impertinence, unless figned with the writer's real name.

FINIS,

In a few Months will be published,

Dedicated to Sir WILLIAM MILDMAY, Bart. A VOLUME OF

MISCELLANEOUS POETRY;

CONSISTING OF

Poems, Paftorals, Odes, Epigrams, &c.

With a Version of the Rev. Mr. COTTON's three elegant Latin Elegies, entitled,

LACHRYMÆ ELEGIACÆ,

S I V E QUERELÆ EPISTOLARES.

By ROBERT HOULTON, M.A.

Late of MAGDALEN-COLLEGE, OXFORD.

These Pieces will be comprised in a large Octavo Volume, printed in the most elegant Manner on Royal Paper; and as the Publication will be by Subscription, the Names of Subscribers will be printed; to whom the Price is Five Shillings, to be paid on the Delivery of the Book.

The Author is already honoured with many Names of the Nobility and principal Gentry; therefore he fhall be greatly obliged to those who are inclined to favour this Publication, if they would subscribe as soon as convenient, as almost all the Pieces are ready for the Prefs.

SUBSCRIPTIONS are taken in by

R. DAVIS, Bookfeller, in Piccadilly; J. WILKIE, in St. Paul's Church-yard; S. PARKER, at Oxford; Meffrs. FLETCHER and Hodson, at Cambridge; B. COLLINS, at Salifbury; L. HASSALL, at Chelmsford; J. KEYMER, at Colchefter; W. TAYLOR, at Bath, and W. CRUTTWELL, at Sherborne.