MINUTES

OF

THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE GENERAL MEETING

OF THE

MEMBERS AND FRIENDS OF THE JUVENILE ASSOCIATION,

Held in the New School-Room of the Fisherwick-Place Church, on Thursday, 29th November, 1838.

PREVIOUS to the Meeting, about 120 collectors assembled at tea, at six o'clock, after which the collections were paid in to the Treasurer.

At 8 o'clock, the Chair was taken by Rev. JAMES MORGAN, who opened the meeting with prayer.

The Report was read by Mr. DICKEY, unanimously adopted, and ordered to be printed, with such appendix as might be deemed necessary.

It having appeared, by the Report, that the amount of contributions received would warrant the admission of two additional pupils, the election for them was then proceeded with, when Mary Douglas and Jane Mellon were declared duly elected; the following being the state of the Poll, viz:—

	Votes.		Votes.
Mary Douglas,	210	John M'Namara,	6
Jane Mellon,	142	James M'Cleery,	5
Margaret Jane Moore,	66	Robert Knowles,	4
Elizabeth M'Creery,	51	John Divine,	2
Elizabeth Ingram,	18

The Chairman was then requested to draw the attention of the meeting to the statement made opposite to Jane Mellon's name, in the printed list of candidates, by which it appeared that two Ladies had proposed to pay £10 per annum towards her support, in the event of her being elected; he then suggested that, as the sum (viz: £7,) thus remaining requisite for the admission of another applicant, was so small, the members might venture to proceed to the election of a third pupil; which, after some discussion, was unanimously agreed to, and Margaret Jane Moore, the third on the list, was duly proposed and seconded for admission, and her peculiar claims urged.

Mr. DICKEY then proposed Elizabeth M'Cleery for admission, and noticed the promise made by the Ballymena Auxiliary, that, if she were elected, they would engage to pay for her brother, James M'Cleery.

An interesting and animated discussion ensued, upon the merits of these propositions, when an amendment was moved by the Rev. WILLIAM HAMILTON, that the three children proposed should all be admitted.

Mr. H. stated, that, for his own part, he would engage that his pupils (by whom he was surrounded,) would much increase their exertions during the next year, and he had no doubt, that many persons present were so interested by the proceedings which had taken place, as to secure a similar result from them.

Enquiry was then made from the meeting, and it was ascertained that a few Ladies and Gentlemen present would engage to supply the sum requisite, when Rev. WM. HAMILTON's amendment was carried by acclamation; consequently Margaret Jane Moore, Elizabeth M'Cleery, and James M'Cleery, were added to the number of successful candidates.

Whilst the election was being held, an examination of the Pupils, supported by the Association, was conducted by their teacher, Rev. JOHN MARTIN, and their answering appeared to give general satisfaction.

A Doxology was sung, and benediction pronounced, by Rev. W. M'ILWAINE, when the meeting separated at half-past 10 o'clock.

REPORT.

IN rendering an account of their proceedings during the past year, the Committee of the Juvenile Association find that they have a brief and simple task to perform. The sphere of their operations has not been very wide, neither has the machinery employed been very complex; yet, limited as has been the apparent field for their exertions, and easy of control the means at their disposal, your Committee feel that the one has not been cultivated as it ought to have been, nor has the other been made available to the best advantage;—if, therefore, any measure of success rests upon you, as an Association, let the praise be given to Him, who may (and, they trust, will,) look beyond and pardon the feebleness and inefficiency of their instrumentality, and suffer His blessing in mercy to light upon the hearts of zeal and love which are to be found among you, so that, out of all the “weakness” of this infant body, strength “may be perfected,” to the honour and glory of God’s holy name.

Whilst, however, your Committee thus feel that there is great cause for humble thought, when they proceed to render an account of their stewardship, they are sensible that there is much in your past history to awaken emotions of lively gratitude. Your Association commenced its existence in Belfast, at a period when the claims of this most excellent Institution, whose cause you advocate, were not at all so fully acknowledged or understood as they are now; and when it was thought, by many, that the public were not prepared to listen to such lowly appeals as might be urged by your youthful band. But, the experiment has been made; the result is rapidly fulfilling the sanguine anticipations of your founders, and it is not for your Committee to say, how much of the largely swelled income of your respected Parent, as announced on the platform of yesterday, may not be owing to the new interest awakened by the all-present and persevering zeal of the Juvenile Association. And they rejoice in believing this is no vain allusion; for the fact furnishes the most complete refutation to the objection, which has more than once been made to your plans, that, by the gathering in of the mites to your treasury, many would be found to make a plea of their shilling to you to refuse a pound to your Parent; it is pleasing to find that this is not so,—for experience proves that your getting the shilling, only helps to secure the pound for your worthy and respected Parent. But we are happy in having not merely such negative proofs of the benefits of your Association ; in the five interesting children who now claim your notice, much positive good stands confessed ; and, in the contemplations of the blessings which you have already been the honoured instruments of conferring upon them, must be found the highest and purest stimulus to future and increased exertion.

Of these children your Committee would now give some account. Before your last General Meeting there were two pupils in the Institution, namely, Robert Gilliland and Louisa M'Connel. Robert is rather of a delicate constitution, but has not suffered from any illness since his admission, except measles. Louisa has always enjoyed good health. They are both children of remarkably amiable disposition, and have made good progress in their education. One of the four admitted after your last election, named Hugh Simpson, was soon after removed by his parents, as their residence was near the Institution ; and he was thus enabled to come as a day scholar ; his attendance, however, has been very irregular. The names of the other three are Sarah Armstrong, Isabella Moore, and Samuel Carrigan. Sarah was admitted in last November, and the other two in the month following ;--they have all since been in excellent health, and their dispositions appear to have improved considerably. Neither Samuel nor Isabella, when admitted, could form any letters, either with pen or pencil, or read the writing of others. They can now read, and one of them with ease, and understand the names of common objects, and the meaning of easy sentences. They know, at least by name, their Creator, Preserver, and Redeemer, that they shall live after death, and that then those, that have died holy, shall be happy ; and those, that have died wicked, must remain miserable.

Sarah knew a number of words and signs before her admission as a Boarder, and has more knowledge of language than Samuel or Isabella. All the three are sufficiently acquainted with numbers to communicate freely with their Teacher, and with each other, about simple sums ; while the earlier pupils, Robert and Louisa, can perform more advanced exercises. A new system of Dactylogy has been lately introduced into the School, by which any given number can be expressed by one hand ; this, with the single-handed Alphabet, the advantage of which one of the Parent Committee observed when visiting the American Institutions, will, it is expected, much facilitate the progress of the Pupils during the next year, as it is intended that both shall be brought into regular use. The greater rapidity of expression, and the freedom of the right hand for writing, notation, holding a book, or any other object, afforded by the one-handed Alphabet, are important practical improvements.

On the whole, your Committee desire to express their entire satisfaction with the treatment which your pupils continue to receive, both as scholars and boarders, with the Rev. Mr. Martin; and trust it may be your pleasing privilege to watch them, year by year, as they increase in stature, increasing in favour both with God and man.

It now only remains to notice the state of your Funds.

Your Committee have pleasure in stating, that the collections paid in, this evening, amount to the sum of £114 4s. 9d. Still with this sum you shall be able, after the present pupils are paid for, to elect only two out of the eleven candidates, and are thus forced to reject nine out of these interesting applicants.

Is it too much to say, that if every one had done his duty this would not have been the case? Your Committee are sure that it would not. Let them, then, in conclusion, before surrendering up their trust, remind every collector of the responsibility which they impose upon themselves by becoming members of this Association; that you are pledged not merely for the support of those children already under your care, but pledged to do your utmost for all the Deaf Mutes and Blind in Ulster;—let them remind you, that this evening you have been obliged to reject many a deserving object for want of funds, and that, at an election in Dublin, only a few weeks ago, seventy, out of seventy-two, Mute applicants were rejected, from the same sad necessity.

Oh! picture to yourselves the bitter disappointment of the many watching, anxious mothers, the peril of these poor helpless children, the wants of hundreds like them at your doors, of whom you have never heard; and, while you have ears to hear, and tongues to tell this piteous tale, go, Oh! go forth again,—for Belfast has not yet done its duty, is not yet clear of their blood;—“Open your mouths for the Dumb, in the cause of all the sons of destruction;” and implore your friends to arise to the help of these helpless ones.

THE MUTE ONE.

JANE WOODS, the subject of the following lines, was admitted as a pupil into the Belfast Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, in the month of September, 1835. Her little brother, who is also a deaf mute, was admitted at the same time. The devoted attachment of Jane to her brother first attracted the attention of the writer, and induced him to bestow particular attention on her education in the Sabbath School of the Institution. During the short period she was under instruction, her progress was far beyond any pupil of her standing. She appeared anxious to learn for the sake of her brother, and loved to communicate to him any new word or idea she acquired. He was seized with fever, and when it was suggested to the teacher to remove him to the hospital, for the safety of himself and family, he earnestly entreated to be permitted to keep the child under his own care, observing that he could best administer to his wants, as his signs would be unintelligible to the hospital attendants. During his illness, it was found difficult to keep Jane from his bed-side. Her's was a sister's love indeed! When he shewed symptoms of recovery, her joy knew no bounds. Every little toy in her possession she brought to him, and her dark and intelligent eyes beamed happiness; but, alas! it was short lived. Soon afterwards she was attacked with the disease. Her medical attendants were unwearied in their attentions, and tenderly alive to the peculiarity of her situation. Her extreme patience in suffering, and gentleness in manner, interested them much. Before her death, she parted with her little brother in the most affectionate manner, and signed that sickness was very bad, and hurt the head, and would not let her pray, like William Strong,—alluding to one of the senior pupils, who read his Bible, and took great delight in prayer, and who was accustomed to teach Jane a short prayer he had written for her. This circumstance is alluded to in the concluding stanzas of the poem. Jane is buried under a shady tree in the strangers' ground at the back of the Poor-house. Her remains were followed to the grave by several of the Committee, with whom she was a great favourite. Her death has been a subject of deep sorrow to the pupils of the Institution. One of them wished to write a letter to her in heaven, and another, a very young scholar, asked how many miles it was to heaven, that he might go and see Jane Woods.

How deplorable is the situation of the poor deaf mutes, shut out from knowledge, compared with the present inmates of the Institution in College-Street! There they become the subject of religious instruction and means of grace, of which they would otherwise be deprived. Is anything beyond that necessary to melt the heart of every Christian, and call forth benevolence from its supineness into activity, and to collect the contributions of Christian liberality into one fund, for the attainment of an object so important? What a pleasing reflection it would afford to every one who has forwarded such a work, to know that those whom nature has cast as orphans on society, have been trained by them to seek a goodly heritage above, where the ear of the deaf will hear the praises of eternity, and the tongue of the dumb will sing aloud for joy:—

THERE is a language uncontrolled by any rule of art,
Its eloquence is in the eye,—its music in the heart,—
It breathes from every bud of Spring,—from every leaf and tree,
Sings in the murmur of the rill,—sighs in the troubled sea.

When first she came all silently from her paternal bower,
She looked like Nature's orphan child,—a sweet and pensive flower;
Her little brother by her stood, and gazed up in her face,
As if from its soft pencillings her meaning he could trace.

And, oh! what looks of tenderness beamed from her speaking eye,
When first she saw the mute one pale upon a sick-bed lie!
Their sympathies were like their wants, so kin to one another,
That all the joys and pains were one,—of sister and of brother.

She watched him with an anxious heart, and tended him with care,
And when he all enfeebled lay, she combed his raven hair;
She brought him every little toy her little store supplied,
And when he gazed unconsciously, she sat her down and cried.

She touched his fingers one by one, as she was wont to do,
When in their noiseless syllables she told him all she knew;
But when his hand fell motionless she pressed it to her heart,
As if the inward throbbings there new language would impart.

But now the fever seized her frame, and from her cheek were gone
The lovely tints of rosy health, that once so brightly shone;
And as she turned her dark, dark eye, all lustreless and dim,
Upon her little brother dear, she looked her love to him.

O ye who can express your wants, when feeble is the frame,
Can hear the breathing of a sigh,—the magic of a name,
O never can you tell the pang that rends the mute one's breast,
Whose ear is shut to tenderness,—whose wants are unexpressed!

She never heard the song of birds,—the humming of the bee,—
The music of the mountain wind,—the murmur of the sea;
All nature unharmonious lay, all silent and all still,
As if Creation tuneless slept on valley, stream, and hill!

Love reigned within her gentle breast,—affection in her heart,
But still their joys the captive tongue strove vainly to impart;
She never heard her father speak when twining round his knee,—
A sister's sweet approving word,—a mother's lullaby!

She never heard the voice of prayer,—the melody of praise,
Yet night and morn she bent the knee, and loved to upward raise
Her thoughtful and expressive eyes to some Almighty One,
Who hears the breathing of a sigh, and looks in pity down.

And when disease pressed heavily upon her lovely frame,
She signed that sickness was not good, but very much to blame;
For now she could not lift her hands, like him who loved to trace,
The symbol forms of silent prayer before a throne of grace.

She died far from her father's home,—far from her mother's knee;
We laid her in "the strangers' ground" beneath a shady tree;
A rose-bud is her monument,—her epitaph the song
Of little birds who plaintive sing the summer leaves among!—WM. M'COMB.
