THE H I S T O R Y
OF
L O N D O N
FROM ITS

Foundation to the Present Time:

CONTAINING,

I. The original Constitution of London: The ancient and present State of its several Wards, Churches, Parishes, Liberties, and Districts: Accounts of all the Religious Foundations in London and its Suburbs, before the Reformation: The Names of all the Streets, Squares, Courts, Lanes, &c. within the City and Suburbs: With curious Calculations touching the Number of its Inhabitants; and Parallels between London and many of the most celebrated ancient and modern Cities; whereby it will appear that the Inhabitants of London, at present, are almost equal in Number to those of the Cities of Paris, Amsterdam, and Rome together, and superior in Number to any one City in the World.

II. Historical and particular Accounts of the City Governments, Ecclesiastical, Civil, and Military, in all their Branches: With the several Charters, rendered into English; wherein are set forth their many great and valuable Privileges, Immunities, and numerous Benefactions.

III. History of the several Incorporations of Merchants and Traders; shewing the Institutions of their respective Companies; with their ancient Rights, Privileges, and Coats of Arms.

IV. Description of the present State of Learning, and of the Colleges, Schools, Inns of Court, Common-Pleas, King's-Bench, Chancery, Exchequer, High Court of Parliament, &c.

V. Full and particular Accounts of all the Hospitals, Alms-houses, and other Charitable Foundations, within the City and the Parts adjacent.

VI. The ancient and present State of the Tower, and of the Curiosities therein contained; with a Description of the British Museum.

INCLUDING

The several PARISHES in WESTMINSTER, MIDDLESEX, SOUTHWARK, &c.
within the BILLS of MORTALITY.

By WILLIAM MAITLAND, F.R.S.

A NEW EDITION.

Continued to the Year 1772, by the Rev. JOHN ENTICK, M.A.

ILLUSTRATED

With a Complete Set of the Churches, Palaces, Publick Buildings, Hospitals, Bridges, &c. within and adjacent to this great Metropolis: The Plans of LONDON, exhibiting its Appearance before the Fire; in its Ruins after that Conflagration in 1666; and as it is now rebuilt and extended: With a large Map of all the Villages and Country within ten Miles Circumference: Exactly drawn and curiously engraved on One Hundred and Thirty Copper-Plates, by the best Hands, and on so large a Scale, that each Plate could not be fold separate for less than One Shilling.

AND IMPROVED

With a great Variety of Authentick Pieces, relating to the Progressive Alterations it has undergone from its first Foundation; and describing those Charitable and other Additional Buildings with which it has been lately adorned, and increased to its present prodigious Extent: Wherein all the Defects in the former Edition of this Work, and in other Authors on this Subject, are supplied, their Errors corrected, and the History brought down, with great Care and Impartiality, to the present Time.

In TWO VOLUMES.

My LORD and GENTLEMEN,

THE Proprietors of this voluminous and useful Work, undertaken with a pure Intention to preserve those Monuments of Antiquity, which convey a just Idea of the Wisdom, good Government, Loyalty, Religion, Industry, Hospitality and Charity of your Predecessors in the Magistracy of this City, and to perpetuate down to the latest Posterity the present flourishing and prosperous State of this Metropolis, to which it is arrived by your Zeal for the Public Good, steady Attachment to the true Interest of your Fellow-Citizens, and unwearied Application in the Support of Trade, National Credit, and Works of Charity; are by Duty and Gratitude, as well as Affection, induced to make this public Acknowledgment of the many Obligations they owe for your kind Assistance, which has enabled them to finish so extensive and chargeable a Plan, and to seek for your Patronage and future Recommendation.

It would be a Volume of itself to attempt a circumstantial Description of the Records, Rights, Liberties, Customs and Usages, or of the ancient and modern State of London: Yet it is proper to observe, observe, that there is no Act of Parliament, no Charter, nor Municipal Claim granted and enjoyed by the Citizens, but may be found in this History; nor any Monument of public Utility, that is not described in this Survey.

The DEDICATION.

---

A Work thus calculated for the Honour of the City, and for the Information of the Citizens in their Duty, Rights and Privileges, illuminated with Plans and Views of all its public Edifices, &c. will establish a real Idea of the Wisdom of its Magistrates, the Magnificence of its Buildings, its Superiority to all other Cities both in Riches, Trade, Number of Inhabitants, Plenty, and Salubrity of its Situation, as well as of its Influence in the Preservation of National Liberty: And therefore, in the Name and in Behalf of the Proprietors, I present this HISTORY and SURVEY of LONDON for your Patronage, and with the greatest Respect beg Leave to subscribe myself,

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

RIGHT WORSHIPFUL,

And WORSHIPFUL,

Your most devoted,

Obedient Servant,

The EDITOR.

THE
LONDON
FROM ITS Foundation to the Present Time.

BOOK I.

CHAP. I.

Of the Foundation of the City of London. The Account thereof by Geoffrey of Monmouth. Julius Cæsar's Account of Britain and the Britons, and of his Exploits, Difficulties, and Success in his Expeditions into this Island. And of the Cities and Buildings of the Britons, and their Manner of Life.

TO deduce the Origin of London from any certain Period of Time, is seemingly impossible: For, if its Foundation be owing to the Britons, as Stow and his Continuators tacitly affirm, by calling it the Seat of the British Empire, we have not the least Prospect of discovering the Time thereof: Because, in that Case, it must have been founded in the Times of gross Ignorance, when its Builders had no other Records, but those committed to the narrow Memories of their Bards; an Order of Priests inferior to the Druids; whose principal Business, as Historians, was in Recitative Verse (at their publick Conventions, and in the Day of Battle) to sing the Praises of their deceased Heroes, in order to inspire their young Princes and Nobility with a generous Emulation, to equal, if not excel, their Predecessors, in Defence of their Country; and who, as they advanced to Battle, sang Songs, full of bitter Invectives and terrible Threatnings, in order to intimidate their Enemies, and encourage their Friends. Had there been any of these venerable Sonnetto's remaining, they would undoubtedly have as greatly illustrated the Affairs of the ancient Britons, as the Runick or Islandick Rhimes have done the Transactions of the ancient Danes and Norwegians; who, without such, would have been as ignorant of the Exploits of their Ancestors, as the modern Britons are of those done by their Founders. But an illustrious and celebrated Historian acquaints us, that this was not to be expected from the Britons, seeing their Bards never committed any of their Songs to Writing.

However, as the Roman Writers, to glorify the City of Rome, drew their Origin from Gods and Demi-gods: So Geffrey of Monmouth, a Welsh Historian, deduceth the Foundation of this famous Metropolis, London, for its greater Glory, and to emulate Rome, or any other City of Antiquity, from the very same fabulous Beginning in his pretended History of Britain, in these Words:

Gal.Mon.
Hist.Reg.
Brit.

"Brutus, considering the State of the Kingdom, form'd a Design of building a City, and in order thereunto carefully survey'd the Country, to discover a Place proper for its Situation. At last pitching upon a Spot of Ground on the Bank of the River Thames, very fit for his Purpose, he erected a City thereon, and dignified the same with the Appellation of New Troy, by which Name 'twas known for many Ages: But, the same being at length corrupted, it was called Trinovant; and in Process of Time, when Lud, the brother of Cassibelan, obtain'd the Government, he incircled the same with a strong and stately Wall, adorn'd with an infinite Number of Towers of curious Workmanship, and chang'd the Name thereof to Caer-Lud, or Lud's-Town; and commanding the Citizens to build Houses, and publick Structures of all Sorts, it soon equall'd, if not excell'd, all Cities, at Home and Abroad, to a very great Degree. But some time after, the new Appellation being corrupted, 'twas chang'd into Caer-London; and when the Kingdom was afterwards conquer'd and brought into Subjection by Foreigners, they chang'd the Name thereof to Londres." A Fable stuffed with monstrous Absurdities and Impossibilities, and which has therefore been justly exploded and rejected by the most celebrated Historians and Antiquaries. But herein, as Livy, the most famous of the Roman Historians, writeth, Antiquity is pardonable, and hath a special Privilege, by interlacing divine Matters with human, to make the first Foundation of Cities more honourable, more sacred, and, as it were, of greater Majesty. However, this Monkish Invention concerning the Foundation of London by Brute, a Descendant of Æneas, the Son of Venus, the Daughter of Jupiter, gain'd so much Credit in former Times, that we find it preserved in an ancient Tract amongst the City Records; and pleaded by the Mayor and Aldermen before K. Hen. VI. Reg. 7<sup>mo</sup> to prove the great Antiquity, Precedence and Dignity of their City and Corporation before Rome, &c. which is still to be seen amongst the Records in the Tower in this Form: — Inter nobiles Urbes Orbis, &c. or in English, "Among the noble Cities of the Universe extolled by Fame, none can be compared to the City of London, the Metropolis of your Realm, which is esteemed the Wonder of the World; both for the Wholesomeness of its Air, the true Faith and Practice of the Christian Religion amongst its Inhabitants, its most worthy Liberty, and most ancient Foundation. For, according to the Credit of Chronicles, it is considerably older than Rome; having been founded by Brute, after the Form of great Troy, before Rome was built by Romulus and Remus: Whence to this Day it enjoys the Liberties, Rights and Customs of that ancient City of Troy. For it retains the Senatorial Dignity, and lesser Magistrates [i. e. Mayor and Aldermen]; and its annual Sheriff's supply the Place of Consuls. And whoever repair thither, of whatsoever Condition they be, Free or Servants, they are protected, and obtain their Freedom. And almost all the Bishops, Abbots and Nobles of England have their noble Palaces here, and are, as it were, Citizens and Freemen of this City." These, and many more Particulars worth our Notice, are preserved in a very old Book, called Reccrdatorium Civitatis, and the Book Speculum and Liber Albus.

As 'tis impossible to come at the Origin of London, but at the Expence of that Romance, 'twill therefore be necessary on this Occasion to enlarge, in order to remove the Rubbish of Fable, and pave the Way to Truth; which I shall endeavour to do, by shewing the Opinions and Characters given that pretended History, by divers of the most celebrated Historians and Antiquaries of this and other Nations. To which I shall subjoin an Observation of my own, which will effectually destroy its Authority, and evidently shew it to be a spurious Romance, written about the Time of its pretended Translation.

But, before I proceed, I think it will be necessary first to insert some Accounts of Britain and the Britons, written by divers learned and illustrious Foreigners; the first and chief of whom, the most celebrated Roman Emperor and Historian Julius Caesar, has written as follows:

"Caesar met with many Difficulties at his Landing, occasion'd partly by the great Depth of Water drawn by his Ships, which prevented their Access to the Shore, and partly by the heavy Armour wherewith his Soldiers were loaded, which render'd them incapable of engaging the Waves and the Enemy at the same Time, especially in a Place to which they were entire Strangers: Whereas the Britons, either by remaining on the Land, or advancing a short Way into the Water, stood on firm Ground, where they could commodiously throw their Darts, and boldly advance with their Cavalry to prevent the Enemy's Landing.

"The Romans, unacquainted with this Way of fighting, were greatly discourag'd; which Caesar observing, he commanded the Vessels that drew the least Water to advance before the rest of the Navy, that by their Engines, Slings and Arrows, they might compel the Britons to retreat. This Stratagem in some measure answer'd, by obliging the Enemy to retire a little: But the Standard-Bearer of the Tenth Legion, perceiving an Aversion in the Romans to enter into the Sea, cried with an audible Voice, Fellow-Soldiers, unless you'll forsake your Eagle, and suffer it to fall into the Hands of the Enemy, advance; for I am resolv'd to perform my Duty to my Country and General: And then leaping over-board, he advanc'd toward the Enemy; whereupon many of the Soldiers, encouraging one another, follow'd his Example, to prevent so great a Disgrace as the Loss of their Standard would be. Upon this a very sharp Dispute ensu'd; for the Britons, observing

and his Difficulties and Success.

"observing the Enemy descending from their "Ships in small Numbers, rode into the "Sea, and violently attacked and surrounded the "unprepared Romans, before they were capable
"of forming, or putting themselves into a Posture
"of Defence to receive them.

"Cæsar, observing the Danger his Troops
"were in, immediately ordered all the Boats in
"the Fleet to be manned, and sent to their As"sistance, by whose Help the most advanced
"having gained the Shore, they were soon fol"lowed by the rest of the Army, who briskly
"charging, put the Britons to Flight; but "having no Cavalry to pursue, happily pre"vented a very great Slaughter, which must
"otherwise have happened among the Enemy:
"By which Piece of good Fortune they escaped
"beyond the immediate Reach of Danger; and
"having seriously reflected on their unhappy
"Circumstances, sent Ambassadors to Cæsar to "supplicate a Peace, with a Promise to give
"Hostages for their entire Submission; Part of "whom they delivered immediately, and the rest
"were to be sent in a few Days. In the Interim
"the Britons disbanded their Army, and the "Princes from all Parts came in and surrendered
"themselves and their Dominions to Cæsar.

"A Peace being concluded the fourth Day after
"Cæsar's Landing, the Fleet of Transports, with "his Cavalry on board, advanced within View of "his Camp; when, by a violent Storm, they were "suddenly dispersed, and, divers Ships being
"lost, the rest were obliged to return to Gaul:
"To add to this Misfortune, the greatest Part
"of the Fleet, which brought Cæsar and his In"fantry into Britain, likewise perished by the "same Storm, which occasioned a very great "Consternation in the whole Army, seeing they "had no Shipping to transport themselves to Gaul,
"in which Country they knew they must take
"their Winter Quarters, because in Britain there "was neither Corn, nor a sufficient Quantity of "Provisions for their Support.

"The British Princes, who had surrendered
"themselves to Cæsar, perceiving by these Mis"fortunes the great Necessities the Romans were "reduced to, by having neither Cavalry, Ships,
"nor Provisions left, withdrew themselves pri"vately from the Camp; and having raised a "considerable Army, judged it a proper Time
"to revenge themselves upon the Romans, and
"entirely to destroy Cæsar and his distressed "Troops; and in order thereunto, with their uni"ted Forces, they vigorously attacked the seventh "Legion, which was sent out to forage: Which "Cæsar receiving Intelligence of, he marched to "their Assistance, and having repulsed the En"emy, returned to his Camp.

"Some Time after, the Britons, having strongly "reinforced their Army by a great Addition of "Horse and Foot, advanced to attack the Roman
"Camp, which Cæsar receiving Advice of, he drew "up his Army in Order of Battle before the same,
"when being attacked by the Britons he quickly
"routed them; and having destroyed the neigh"bouring Parts with Fire, re-entered his Camp;
"where he was no sooner arrived, than Ambas"sadors came from the Britons to sue for Peace.
"Cæsar, instead of punishing them for their late

"Perfidy, only commanded them to send double
"the Number of Hostages he formerly required;
"and the Autumnal Equinox approaching, he "returned to Gaul with the utmost Expedition,
"not thinking it safe to defer it till Winter, be"cause of the crazy Condition of his Fleet.

"Cæsar, in his second Expedition to Britain, Ibid.
"disembarked his Army in the same Place as in "the preceding Year, without the least Oppo"sition; for the Britons were so greatly intimi"dated at the Approach of so formidable a
"Navy, that they deserted the Coast, and re"tired into their Recesses within the Country;
"which Cæsar receiving Intelligence of, (after "fortifying his Camp) he marched in Pursuit of "them; and, after a March of twelve Miles, he "found them encamped in a very advantageous
"Post on the opposite Bank of a River, strongly "fortified both by Art and Nature, and all the "Avenues leading thereto blocked up with Trees
"cut down for that Purpose;" (which Place is "supposed to have been where Canterbury now
"is situate): But Cæsar, by a furious Assault,
"soon possessed himself of this Fortrefs, and
"obliged the distressed Britons to seek for Safety
"in the neighbouring Woods.

"Upon this Success, Cæsar divided his Army
"into three Bodies, and sent them in Quest of the "Enemy; but, upon Advice of the Destruction
"of his Fleet by a violent Storm, he left the Pur"suit, and returned to his Navy; and having "given Directions for refitting as many of his
"Ships as could be repaired, sent Orders to Gaul
"for building others; and for the more effectually
"preventing the like Disaster for the future,
"caused all his Vessels to be hauled on Shore, and
"inclosed within the Fortifications of his Camp:
"And determining to prosecute his late Victory,
"he found the British Army greatly increased, by
"a general Confederacy of the respective Princes
"and States, who chose for their General Cassivellaun,
"who, boldly attacking Cæsar on his March,
"was repulsed with great Loss: But, not dis"couraged with this Misfortune, he soon returned
"and attacked the Romans, as they were fortifying
"their Camp; but a Detachment being sent to "reinforce the Troops employed in the Work,
"the Britons were repulsed a second Time.

"Soon after Cæsar, having sent out his Ca"valry to forage, with three Legions to cover
"them, they were suddenly and furiously attacked
"on all Sides by the Britons; but briskly return"ing the Charge, they with a very great Slaugh"ter intirely routed the Enemy; which occa"sioned such a Defection from the Confederacy,
"that the Britons were never after able to make
"any considerable Effort against Cæsar.

"The Romans having advanced to the Frontier
"of Cassivellaun's Dominions, which on the South
"was defended by the River Thames, as a mighty
"Barrier; and the same being only fordable at
"one Place, the Britons, to prevent Cæsar's pass"ing there, had not only fortified the opposite
"Bank, but likewise the Bottom of the River,
"with sharp Stakes, with an Intent to dispute
"the Passage: Yet notwithstanding all the Pre"cautions taken, and Opposition made, Cæsar
"passed, and drove Cassivellaun from his Works;
"who, despairing of Success by Battle, disbanded
"most of his Troops, and reserved only about

"four thousand Chariots, with which he frequently harassed the Roman Foragers.

"During these Transactions, the Trinobantes, one of the most considerable States of the Britons, submitted to Cæsar, and desired his Protection for Mandubratius, whom they requested to have for their King: Cæsar, pursuant to the Desire of this People, having taken them and their King into his Protection, 'twas observed by the neighbouring States, that the Trinobantes were thereby not only secured from the Insults of Cassivellaun but likewise from becoming a Prey to the Roman Army; which Considerations induced the States of Cenimagni, Segontiaci, Aulacites, Bibroci, and Cassi, by their Ambassadors, to submit to Cæsar, and to acquaint him that Cassivellaun's Town, or Fortrefs, was but a small Distance from his Camp, but strongly fortified with Woods and Marshes, and well garrisoned, and stored with Cattle.

"The Britons call a thick Wood, inclosed with a Ditch and Rampart, a Town, which they retire to for a Security of themselves and Cattle against an invading Enemy; thither Cæsar marched with his Army, and found the Place very formidable both by Art and Nature, yet nevertheless he stormed the same at two Places: The Britons, perceiving they were no longer able to withstand those violent and desperate Assaults, fled out at a remote Part of the Town.

"The Reduction of this Place occasioned Cassivellaun, by an Express, to order Cingetrix, Carnilius, Taximagulus and Segonax, petty Kings, of Kent, to attack Cæsar's naval Camp; which Command being put into Execution, they had the Misfortune of being defeated, and Lugotrix, one of their Generals, was taken. Their, with other Losses, occasioned such a general Defection among the Allies of Cassivellaun, that he found himself necessitated to submit to Cæsar; who, after having received the required Number of Hostages, and appointed the annual Tribute the Britons were to pay the Romans, strictly enjoined Cassivellaun not to molest Mandubratius, nor the Trinobantes; and then set out for Gaul."

Cæf. Description. Brit.

Cæsar, in his Character of the Britons, further says, That they seldom troubled themselves with Agriculture; for, having great Plenty of Cattle, they fed on Milk and Flesh, and were clothed with the Skins of Beasts. The Country being well peopled, it abounded with Houses of the same Fashion with those of the Germans and Gauls; which, according to Cassaubon, were only mean despicable Hovels, covered with Straw, and dispersed all over the Country for the Convenience of Pasturage.

Cassaub. Comm. Strab. Geog.

This is the Substance of the Accounts given by Cæsar, concerning his two Expeditions into Britain, pursuant to his Declaration when he arrived, importing, that he intended to inform himself after the best Manner of the Country and its Inhabitants: Which that he effectual did, is manifest, by his having carefully transmitted to Posterity a Detail of all the memorable Occurrences that happened to him during his Stay in this Island: Together with an Account of the Religion, Polity, Customs, Manners, and Way of Living of the Britons; with a Description of their Fortifications, Buildings, and Towns; the latter of which were such as Cassivellaun's, and that above-mentioned at Canterbury. Now, considering how particular Cæsar is in giving an Account of the most considerable Places in Gaul, viz. Camps, Fortifications, Buildings, and such Towns and Cities as were in that Country; 'tis hardly possible he would have omitted mentioning so celebrated a City as Giffrey's Trinovantum, or London, especially seeing it lay upon the River Thames, and in the Country where the principal Scenes of Action happened; and in particular that the most considerable and dangerous Enterprizes of any were executed in its Neighbourhood, when Cæsar forced the River Thames and Lines of Cassivellaun. Surely, after so great a Defeat as that, Cassivellaun would have retreated to the impregnable City of Trinovantum, if there had been any such Place; and not have trusted himself and Army in so despicable a Fence, as his Capital appears to have been; which, as already mentioned, was only a large Spot of Ground fortified with Woods and Marshes. But perhaps it may be alledged, that Cæsar, after his passing the River Thames, cut off Cassivellaun's Retreat to London. Admit he did, that would not have prevented Cæsar (considering that no Man ever affected Glory more than he) from visiting it on his Return from St. Albans, (in the neighbouring Marshes of which, according to our great Antiquary, was situate the aforesaid Town of Cassivellaun;) nor from acquainting the Senate and People of Rome, that he had brought under their Dominion so many great Cities, but especially that of Trinovantum, one of the most splendid and magnificent upon Earth; which for Glory might justly vie with Rome itself; and which, just before his Arrival, had been fortified with a mighty Stone Wall, embellished with an infinite Number of stately and magnificent Towers, and by all was deemed impregnable. Such an Account as this would have greatly redounded to his Honour, and endeared him to his Country. But by Cæsar's not mentioning this Place, if no other Argument could be brought to prove that it was not then in Being) his Silence would be sufficient for us to believe, that there was no such City then in Britain.

Camb. Brit. in Com. Mid.

Since the first Edition of this Work, the World has been favoured with the Remarks made by Sir Christopher Wren on the same Subject; who, abstract from his great Knowledge in all Parts of Literature, had the greatest Opportunities, in the Rebuilding of the City, to discover its ancient State and Origin from the hidden Remains of its former Inhabitants, buried in the Bowels of the Earth; and from thence, applying his Discoveries to the Histories of old Times, he reasons in behalf of London's Foundation by the Britons, in the following Manner:

"To have a right Idea of London of old, says he, it will be necessary to consider the State of the Britons, at the Time the Romans made their first Descent on the Island: And surely we cannot reasonably think them so barbarous, at least in that Age, (and the Accounts before that are too fabulous) as is commonly believed. Their Manner of fighting was in Chariots, like the ancient Heroes of Greece, in the Trojan War, and occasionally on Foot, with such good Order and Discipline, as much embarrassed the Roman Legions, Parentalia P. 264.

"Legions, and put a Stop to the Progress of the invincible Cæsar; who could do nothing great, nor conquer any Part; but, says Tacitus, only shewed the Country to the Romans; and, according to Lucan, was obliged shamefully to retreat.

"Territa quæsis ostendit terga Britannis.

"the Britons went to Sea in Vessels covered with Hides, for they wanted Pitch: They traded chiefly with the Gauls; and certainly the principal Emporium, or Town of Trade, to which the Gaulic Ships resorted, must be London, tho' situated far up the Country; yet most commodiously accessible by a noble River, among the thickest Inhabitants; taking its Name (according to some Derivations) from the old British Term of Ship-Hill, or otherwise a Harbour of Ships."

Here the Romans fixed a civil or trading Colony in the Reign of Claudius; which greatly increased under Nero, by the Concourse of Merchants, and Convenience of Commerce: Agreeable to what is related hereafter in Chap. III.

That which has led some (who otherwise despise the History of Geffrey) into an Opinion that there was such a City in Britain as Trinovantum in Cæsar's Time, according to a very learned Prelate and judicious Antiquary, "arises from want of considering the Propriety of Cæsar's Expressions; for he doth not take a City for a Place, but for a People united under one Government, having Laws and Privileges peculiar to themselves. And I do not remember one Passage in Cæsar, where he uses Civitas in any other Sense. But, if a People so united had other lesser Divisions, those were called Pagi, that is, so many Cantons; and so the Pagus Tigurinus is by him said to be a Part of the City of the Helvetians."

This Account of the Roman Conqueror, as it is always preferred by the Learned to the Fictions of Geffrey the Monk of Monmouth; so it is corroborated by the most illustrious and celebrated Authors of Antiquity; who all agree, That the Cities of the Britons were, in those Days, neither artificially built with Houses, nor strongly walled with Stone, but were only thick and cumbersome Woods, plashed within, and trenched about in the same Manner as those Places which the Irish at this Time call Fishings. In particular Strabo writes, That they inclosed a large Spot of Ground with the Bodies of Trees, wherein they set up their Cottages and Stalls for their Cattle, which were intended for no long Continuance.

But another Author is still more particular, who says, That the Habitations of the Britons consisted of Reeds and Sticks, interwoven after the Manner of Hurdles. Such Buildings are still in Use in the desert Parts of the Counties of Northumberland and Cumberland, called the Wastes, which the People in that Neighbourhood, Nomadic-like, repair to in the Summer, for Convenience of Pasturage.

Dion Cassius, speaking of the Mætes, or Northern Provincial Britons, asserts, That they had neither Walls, nor Towns; and that some of the Britons made Use of Trees instead of Houses And, as Herodian says of the Germans, their Habitations were mean; because they understood not how to build, either with Stone or Brick. Their Temples were of a Piece with the rest, being no other than Groves and Woods: Tho' some, upon the Authority of Geffrey of Monmouth, have vainly imagined them to have been stately Structures erected by the Druids; whereas in Truth, when the Romans arrived in Britain, they found no other Buildings than the sorry Hovels above-mentioned, representing those of the Gauls. For the Britons, who, according to an illustrious Author, (who knew both the People and their Country well) lived rude and dispersed, were first instructed by Agricola, (about Anno 85) in building of Temples, Houses, and all Sorts of publick Structures.

From this Epoch, therefore, we may justly date the Time of the Britons first learning the Art of Building, which is in some Measure confirmed by their barbarous and uncivilized Manner of Life: For, except a few of the better Sort who were covered with the Hides and Skins of Beasts, they generally went naked, and painted their Bodies with the Representations of divers Animals, after the Custom of other savage Nations; and having few or no Arts amongst them, it would have been inconsistent with their Interest and mean Way of Living to have formed themselves into Societies, and dwelt together in Towns, seeing it was much more to their Advantage to live dispersed as they did, for the better Subsistence of themselves and Cattle, as already hinted.

CHAP. II.

The Expedition of the Emperor CLAUDIUS into Britain. A Confutation of Geffrey of Monmouth's History of London. Remarks on the Situation of the City of London, at its first Foundation.

THE Britons, after the Departure of Julius Cæsar, lived quietly under the Roman Yoke about the Space of ninety-three Years: But, in the Reign of Claudius, one Vericus, being forced to fly the Kingdom for Sedition, repaired to Rome for Safety, where, by frequent Insinuations, he prevailed upon the Emperor to undertake the Conquest of Britain; to which he was the more easily persuaded, by the imperious Depoartment of the Britons, who, instead of paying the annual Tribute imposed upon them by Julius Cæsar, forbade all Manner of Intercourse with the Romans, for not delivering up their fugitive Countryman to the Ambassadors whom they sent to demand him.

Claudius, glad of this Occasion, thought it a Reason sufficient for the Reduction of Britain; therefore, in the second Year of his Reign, he sent over Aulus Plautius, the Prætor, with a potent Army for that Purpose, who, soon after his Arrival, defeated the Britons in several Engagements: But the greatest Blow they received, was from Sidius Geta, which obliged them to seek Refuge in Bogs and Marshes; whither being pursued, they were attacked and routed with a very great Slaughter, and the Loss of their Prince Togodumnus. After these Defeats the Britons retired towards the Mouth of the River Thames, which they forded without any Difficulty; whilst the Romans in Pursuit of them were entangled amongst Morasses, whence they they could not extricate themselves without considerable Loss.

Tind.
Annot.
Rap. Hist.

This Relation has occasioned a modern Translator to declare his Opinion of the Improbability of a Ford being so nigh the Thames Mouth. This Censure seems a little too hasty; for that Gentleman ought to have considered, that he has rendered the Words of Dion, thus, That the Britons retired towards (and not to) the Mouth of the River Thames; which might justly be said, if the Battle had been fought near Epsom in Surrey; whence they might retreat towards the North-east, and pass the River in the Neighbourhood of this City.

Where the Thames
might be forded by the Romans.

This Consideration occasioned my attempting to find out the largest Marshes on the South Side the River Thames, where there was any Probability of a Ford. And I discovered, that the greatest Marshes on that Side, before the Imbanking of the said River, reached from Wandsworth in the West, to Woolwich in the East: Then sounding the said River (at several Neap-Tides) from the first of these Places, to London Bridge, I discovered a Ford, (on the 18th of September, Anno 1732) about Ninety Feet West of the South-west Angle of Chelsey College Garden; whose Channel, in a Right Line from North-east to South-west, was no more than Four Feet and Seven Inches deep; where the Day before, it blowing hard from the West, my Waterman assured me, that the Water, then, was above a Foot lower; and it is probable, that at such Tides, before the Course of the River was obstructed either by Banks, or Bridge, it must have been considerably shallower.

Therefore, considering that this is the lowermost Ford in the River Thames, I not only take it to be the Place where the Britons passed, but likewise that which Julius Caesar forced when he routed the Britons; notwithstanding what has been alledged by Camden and others in Favour of Cowey-Stakes, where the Water is not only deeper than near Chelsey College, but likewise because there are many other Places in the said River, between the Ford above-mentioned and Cowey-Stakes, which are much shallower.

Ant. Iter.
Brit.

In Antoninus's Second Journey, London appears to have been Seventy-seven Roman Miles from the Port Ritupis in Kent, where Caesar landed; to which being added about Three of the same Miles, from the Milliarium (London Stone) in Canon-Street, to the aforesaid Ford at Chelsey, they will exactly answer to the Account (of about Eighty Miles) given by Caesar of the Distance of Cassivellaunus's Confines from the Sea, where he passed the River Thames; Whereas, Seventeen Roman Miles, the Distance from London to Cowey-Stakes, being added to the Account in the Itinerary, the same will be thereby increased to Ninety-four Miles, which can by no Means agree with the Account given by Caesar.

Dion. Call.
Rom. Hist.
lib. 60.

Plautius, after his many and great Successes, judged it proper to invite over the Emperor, that he might have the Honour of finishing the War. And Claudius, ambitious to triumph for the Conquest of Britain, ordered all Things immediately to be got ready, and setting out from Rome, soon after landed in Britain: Where putting himself at the Head of his Army, which waited his coming on the South Side the River Thames, he forded the same in the Sight of the Britons; whom he engaged and routed; and soon after reduced Camalodunum, the Royal Seat of Cynobelin.

It is very probable, that Claudius, with his Army, passed the River Thames, at the Ford aforesaid; and as he gained a complete Victory in this Neighbourhood, if there had been any such Place then in Being as Geffrey's magnificent and impregnable City of Trinovantum, or London, it is not to be doubted, but he would have reduced the same, before he advanced farther into the Enemy's Country. But Claudius's Silence in this Respect, together with that of all the Historians of that and the preceding Ages, makes it to me appear beyond Contradiction, that there was no such Place of Strength, as London, then in Britain. But this Matter is so well set forth by a late learned and judicious Antiquary, that I cannot do better than insert his Opinion thereof, in the following Words:

"But that which I observe is, that all this while, when the Seat of War was about the Thames, there is not the least Intimation given of such a City as London; which could not have been avoided, if it had been then built. For why should not the Britons have retreated thither, and the Romans have laid Siege to it? Why after the Battle should not that much rather have been mentioned than Camalodunum, as the Royal Seat of Cynobelin? And since Vanity and Ostentation led Claudius hither, why should we imagine the Name of the greatest City in Britain should be concealed? What an Addition had this been to the Pomp of his Triumph, to have had the Representation of so famous a City as London is said to have been at that Time? For so Strabo saith, the Custom was in triumphal Poms, to set forth in glorious Scenes the Places they had subdued. And besides, there is not the least Mention of it in the following Prosecution of this War under the Roman Lieutenants, although Vespasian fought, as Suetonius confesseth, Thirty Battles with the Britons, took Twenty of their Towns, (or fortified Places) and subdued two whole Nations, and the Isle of Wight.

Still. Dif.
Ant. Lon.

"The only considerable Objection against the former Discourse, is from a certain Coin mentioned by Camden, among those of Claudius, relating to Britain; wherein on one Side, is nothing legible but Britannicus, in great Letters; and on the other, Metropolis Etyminij Regis, as he reads it; and then there are Two Syllables on the Reverse, BA. AO. in that of Octavius Strado, which some have ingeniously conjectured to stand in the Greek for ΒΑΥΙΑ. ΑΟΝΑ. and so to be a plain Evidence that London was then a Metropolis, and this Etyminius King of it. But there are several Things that keep me from being so transported with this Conjecture, as the Authors I mention are. For (1) the Reading of the Reverse is very uncertain. Camden's Coin had not so much as that of Octavius Strado; and those Readings produced by Ortelius, Trifan and Spanhemius, are very different. Trifan refers it to ΕΤΙΜΙΟΝ ΒΑΑΟΙΩΝ, Epineium being a maritime City of Macedonia: But, saith Spanhemius, he hath joined Two mean Cities of Macedonia, to make one Metropolis. But that learned and judicious Antiquary, ob“serving other Letters in Strada's Coin, which “are not in Camden, KO being put before “MHΠOΠIOAEΩΣ, and the following Words

 “being EΠI MINAIOT BAΔO, he conceives it
 “to relate to the Metropolis of Corinth, and to one “Mindius, than Proconsul of Acbaia, under Claudius.
 “But, because Oeca's Coin hath N, before “KO, he therefore thinks it may as well relate to “the Metropolis of Nicomedia, this Mindius being “likewise Proconsul of Bythinia. But, however,
 “this may be, we see what a very uncertain “Foundation this Coin affords to build the Me“tropolis of London upon: Especially (2) when “the whole Series of the Roman History at that “Time, with respect to the Affairs of Britain, “have no Ground for such a Conjecture. For “why should not Dio have mentioned this Etymi-“nius being placed by Claudius in the Metropolis
 “of London, as well as his taking of Camalodunum
 “for the Royal Seat of Cynobelin? If this Etymi-“nius were the same with Adiminus, (as Camden “conjectures) who fled over to Caligula, no doubt
 “he would have been placed in the Royal Seat of “his Father at Camalodunum: But there was the “first Roman Colony settled, without any Regard “to the Son of Cynobelin, all the Britons Estates “being taken from them: And this Colony “was deduced in Claudius's Time, as appears by “one of Claudius's Coins in Camden; where on one “Side is the Effigies of Claudius, with all his “Titles; and on the other, a Plowman driving “a Bull and a Cow, according to the Roman “Custom, in setting out Ground for a Colony;
 “and over it, COL. CAMALODON.
 “AUG.”

By what has been said, the Reader will be enabled to judge which Side deserves the most Credit; whether those celebrated, learned, and judicious Historians, (some of whom were Eyewitnesses of all the Transactions of the Romans on both Sides the River Thames, and consequently where London now is situate) who are so justly famed for their Impartiality, Perspicuity, and Veracity; or a Monk, who appears to have delighted in nothing so much, as in spurious and fictitious Inventions, as is evidently shewn in his pretended British History, stuffed with Absurdities and Fables; and which probably has done the Island of Great-Britain more Mischief than all the Books that ever were, or, I hope, ever will be written in it; for on this wicked Legend Edward I. founded his pretended Right of Sovereignty over the Kingdom of Scotland, (as appears by his Answer to the Bull of Pope Boniface VIII. in the 28th Year of his Reign, Anno 1301.) which occasioned those long and bloody Wars, which had almost ended in the Destruction of both Nations. It will therefore be necessary, according to my Promise, to detect the Imposture, and expose the Fraud,
 by giving the Character of that pretended History and its Author, by the Authorities already hinted.
 And, to corroborate what the said Historians have said concerning that detestable Romance, I shall add the Opinions of divers British or Welsh Historians, both antient and modern, relating thereto.

Gildas, the most antient British Historian, seems to have been an entire Stranger to the Story of Brutus, tho' he lived about eleven hundred Years ago; and, without mentioning any thing relating to that pretended Prince, or his Descendants, he declares himself doubtful, whether his Countrymen, the antient Britons, ever had any Records, whereby they could transmit to Posterity an Account of their Original, and the Transactions of their Predecessors; and ingeniously owns, that what he wrote, he had from foreign Authorities, and not from any Records belonging to his own Nation:

 Adding, that, if ever there had been any such,
 they were in his Time intirely lost or were, perhaps intirely destroyed by Enemies at Home, or carried away by Exiles into foreign Parts.

Another antient British Historian, who, it is said, wrote about nine hundred Years ago, complains, that the greatest Scholars amongst the Brit-tons had but little Learning, and no Memoirs; and acknowledges, that what he wrote was collected by the Roman Annals, Works of the Primitive Fathers, and other foreign Historians. And by the Silence of Bede, William of Malmesbury, and others, who wrote before the Publication of Geffrey's pretended History, it is manifest, that they never had heard of Brutus, or of his Trojans.

The first English Historian, who took Notice of Geffrey's Book after its Publication, was William of Newburgh, a Yorkshire Monk; who says, “That “a certain Writer, started up in our Days, has “devised strange and ridiculous Stories concern“ing the Britons; and, with an unparalleled Im-“prudence, has extolled them far above the brave “Greeks and Romans: His Name is Geffrey, to “which he has added that of Arthur, because he “has published, under the honourable Name of “an History, the Fables of King Arthur, collected “from the antient Fictions of the Britons, with “some Additions of his own, which he has co“loured over with a little Latin.”

And the same Person, still with a greater Affance, has published, as authentick Prophecies, “(and pretends to ground them upon Facts) the “fallacious Predictions of one Merlin; in render“ing which into Latin, he has added a good deal “of his own: And in that Book of his, which “he falsely calls The History of Britain, his Affu-“rance and Forgeries are so very obvious to every “Reader, in the least acquainted with antient “History, that there is no Occasion to descend
 “to Particulars. But such Persons as are unac“quainted with the Truth, greedily swallow Fa“bles by the Lump; not to mention the great “Exploits done by the Britons before the Arrival “of Cesar, which he either devised himself, or “handed down the fabulous Inventions of others,
 “as authentick”

And Giraldus Cambrensis, who wrote about the same Time, though an antient Briton himself, calls it the fabulous History of Geffrey.

Another Historian says, “That, according to “other Histories, the whole Relation of Brutus, “is rather poetical than historical,” (for which he assigns his Reasons, which are too prolix to be inserted) “and that many look upon the Whole
 “to be no other than a ridiculous Piece of Fop“pery and Vanity.”

John Twiss concurs with the best of our Historians in condemning this fabulous Story of Gef-frey, and stigmatizes the Author with the satani-cal Character of Mendaciorum Pater, i. e. The Father of Lies.

But a certain Foreigner out-strips all the rest in cautioning the Publick, "To beware of a fraudulent Label, falsely intitled, The Commentary of Gildas, composed by one of the vilest Deceivers, to corroborate the Lyes of an upstart Fellow," (Geffrey of Monmouth) "than whom, surely, a greater Piece of unparalleled Impudence and Roguery never appeared, having embellished the Imposture with Decorations proper for such a Design, often mentioning Brutus, of whom Gildas never dreamt."

Bach Hist Scot.

Another eminent Historian says, "That the Monk, who was the Forger of the Fable of Brutus, seems to have been apprehensive of the Absurdity of the Invention, by his endeavouring to stop the Mouths of all Men, with a religious Pretence of the Britens having only obeyed the Command of the Goddess Diana, delivered to them by her Oracle." And again; "But why do I insist upon these Things any longer, seeing by many other Arguments it appears, that the Story of Brutus is not only a fictitious Invention of his own, but likewise that of the Oracle of Diana also?"

Cam. Brit.

And Camden's learned Men say, "That, about four hundred Years ago, Geffrey of Monmouth first gratified the Britens with Brutus, as the Founder of the British Nation, and feigned him not only of Trojan, but also of Divine Extraction. Before which Time they urge, that there never was the least Mention made of any such Man as Brutus; and that the Criticks of our Age imagine, that this Romance had not been all of a Piece, unless he had made Brute have three Sons, Locrinus, Camber, and Albanactus, to answer the three Nations that in his Time were here, in the same Manner as before he made his Brute, because the Island was called Britain. And they no way doubt, that, if there had been any more distinct Nations at that Time in Britain, he would have easily found more of Brute's Children to have reigned over them."

Ibid.

And Camden, in his Description of Monmouthshire, says, "Monmouth also glories in the Birth of Gallfridus Arthurius, Bishop of St. Asaph, who compiled the British History; an Author well experienced in Antiquities; but, as it seems, not of antique Credit: So many ridiculous Fables of his own Invention hath he inserted in that Work, inasmuch that he is now amongst those Writers that are censured by the Church of Rome."

The great Camden, for this his Opinion, is very severely censured by the Right Reverend Dr. Edward Gibson, late Bishop of London, Translator of his Britannia; who, to screen (as it seems) the romantick Monk, and to convict his learned, ingenious, and worthy Author of a Falshood, brought a British MS. from Jesus College Library in Oxford: But, unlucky for himself; for, instead of proving what was intended, it proves the direct contrary; which neither appears to be that, nor a Copy of the same, from whence Geffrey of Monmouth is said to have translated his History, (as is asserted by his said Translator; for it contains in some Places much more, and in others less, than the pretended Translation of Geffrey; as may be exemplified by the following Sentence, which is in Geffrey's pretended History, and not in the MS. viz. "Suc-

And notwithstanding all the Pains taken by the Right Reverend Translator to vindicate Geffrey, at no less an Expence than the Reputation of his celebrated Author; yet, thro' an unlucky Inadvertence, he seems to allow what Camden has said to be just, by saying, viz. "Since we find most or all of them (Fables) in that British History he translated." By which I imagine is meant, that there are some Fables in Geffrey which are not to be found in the MS. which effectually acquits Camden, who only accuses Geffrey of adding some ridiculous Fables of his own Invention, without charging him with being the Author of the Whole.

Gib. add.
Mon. Sh.

And as the Right Reverend Translator has accused his worthy Author of scarce doing Justice to Geffrey, the Reader, by what has been said, will be enabled to judge, to whose Account Injustice ought to be placed.

And the said Right Reverend Translator, to shew his good Opinion of the British MS. aforesaid, (which probably he takes to be that which Geffrey of Monmouth says he received from Walter Archdeacon of Oxford, to render into Latin) has given us a Translation of the Conclusion thereof, (but somewhat mistaken) in these Words:

Galf. Mon.
Hist. Reg.

"Walter, Archdeacon of Oxford, composed this Book in Latin, out of British Records; which he afterwards thus rendered into modern British."

Gib. add.

I shall soon have Occasion to make some further Observations upon this British MS. therefore it shall at present suffice, to insert the above-mentioned Conclusion, or Remark, at the End of the same, with its genuine Meaning in English; which are as follow:

"Myf Gwallter, Archdiogen Ryhyben, a droes y Llyfr brwn O Gymraec yn Lladin. Ac yn ry benaint y troes i of yr Ailwaith O Ladin yn Ghyrmaec;" that is,

Ex Brit.

Col. Jeta.

I Walter, Archdeacon of Oxford, turned this Book out of British into Latin; and, in my old Age, I rendered the same out of Latin into British. But to return to our Historians:

A learned and judicious British or Welsh Antiquary says, "Treynocant changed to Dinas Bell and Catr-Lud, which romantick Names I shall pass over without having any further REGARD to them;" and from Tacitus, says, that London was a Roman Colony, and well-garrisoned, which prevented Boadicea's falling upon it, 'till deserted by Suetonius.

And another Author of the same Nation, in his Introduction to the History of Britain, says, "To avoid Tedioufness, I will here end my Defence of Geffrey's Translation, with this Protestation, That I intend not in any wise to allow of the Fables therein mentioned."

A celebrated Statesman and Historian calls it a Fable, forged at Pleasure, by the Wit and Folly of its first Author, and therefore not to be regarded.

And another of our Authors says, "That Geffrey was the first Man after the Conquest that attempted to write the British History, which he did to some Purpose. He had a peculiar Fancy for Stories, surmounting all ordinary Faith, which inclined him to pitch upon King Arthur's Feats of Chivalry, and Merlin's Prophecies, as proper Subjects for his Pen. But his Master-piece is his Cronicon, sive Historia Britenium; wherein we have an exact Register of above seventy glorious Monarchs that ruled this Land, before Julius Caesar became acquainted with it. The first Stone of this fair Fabrick was laid by Nennius; but the Superstructure is all Fire new, and purely his own."

The Sense of many other celebrated Historians and Antiquaries might be brought against Geffrey and his pretended History; but one more shall suffice, viz. that of a learned Foreigner and judicious Antiquary, who calls it, "A great-coarse, thick, heavy, long, and most impudent Lye." To what has been said by the above-mentioned Authors, I shall add an Observation of my own upon the said History, which will effectually destroy its pretended Antiquity, and expose the Romance; by shewing that the Author thereof must either have been Geffrey of Monmouth, or one of his Contemporaries.

Gal. Mon.
Hist. Reg.

The Author of this Legend acquaints us, that by Lud's rebuilding the Walls of Trinovantum, and making the same his Residence, it received the Appellation of Caer-Lud; which by Corruption was soon after changed to Caer-London; and afterwards by an Abreviation to London; and at last, the Kingdom being reduced by Foreigners they changed the Name to Londres.

Gal. Pic.

That the Foreigners here spoken of were Normans, I think, is beyond Contradiction; and that they, of all the Nations that subdued England, only called this City by the Name of Londres, I am of Opinion will not be controverted; and that the said Normans, under their Duke William, only possessed themselves of London about Christmas, An. 1066 is very manifest: Therefore, as the pretended very ancient British History acquaints us, that the Name of Londres was given to this City by conquering Foreigners, 'tis thereby evident, that it must have been wrote since the Norman Conquest, which happened in the said Year 1066: And as 'tis generally agreed, that Geffrey of Monmouth published the said pretended very ancient History, in Latin, about the Year 1125, which is only fifty-nine Years from the Entrance of the Normans; I think 'tis not to be doubted, that Geffrey, instead of being the Translator (according to his own Declaration) must have been the Author of that infamous Legend.

For, according to the Remark at the End of the MS. British History in Jesús College above named, said to be written by Walter Archdeacon of Oxford, 'twould not only have been very inconsistent with the Character of Walter, but likewise very absurd in him, after he had rendered the said British History into Latin, to have desired

Geffrey to translate it a second Time into the same Language.

And the Wonder expressed by Geffrey himself in his Dedication, that neither Gildas nor Bede had taken any Notice of the Kings (nor of their glorious Actions) who had reigned in Britain before the Incarnation, convinced me that he supplied the Defect by the said Romance: Wherefore I conclude, that not only the Oxford British MS. but likewise all others of the same Kind, are the Offspring of Geffrey; which have been added to and taken from it, as the several Translators and Transcribers judged for the Honour of their Country. But what I have said on this Head arising from the great Regard I have for Truth; which, beyond all other Considerations, has prevailed upon me to detect the Imposture, and expose the Fraud, in order to come, as near as possible, to the true Origin of this great and incomparable City; and as I have not only given the Sentiments of divers great and learned Men of sundry Nations, but also the Opinions of several of the most eminent British or Welsh Historians, and judicious Antiquaries, in respect to the History in Dispute; I therefore flatter myself, that no Gentleman of the ancient British Nation will be piqued at what I have said to invalidate the Authority of the same; especially considering, that it does not at least detract from the Honour of his Country; for which no Person has a greater Regard, nor a higher Veneration, than myself, for the Memory of their brave Predecessors, who so long and laudably struggled against the mighty Romans, in the just Defence of their Country and Liberties.

Gal. Mon.
Ded. Hist.

I now proceed to treat of the Origin of London: But 'twill not be amiss to clear up some Doubts which have lately arisen in the Reverend and Learned, Dr. Gale, Dean of York, and Mr. Salmon, concerning the ancient Situation of this City, viz. Whether it was at first erected on the North or South Side of the River Thames; they having both declared in Favour of the latter. The first for the Support of his Hypothesis, has brought the following Arguments.

The Situation of London.

1. "It is highly probable that a Roman Station denominated London, was erected in St. George's Fields, to secure their Conquests on that Side the River, before they reduced the Trinovants."

Gal. Com.
Ant. iter.

To which I answer: It is very improbable that ever there was any such Station in those Fields; because it can hardly be supposed that the sagacious Romans would have made Choice of so noisome a Place for a Station, as St. George's Fields must have been at that Time overflowed by every Spring-Tide. For, notwithstanding the Stream of the River at present is confined by artificial Banks; and considering that above a Twelfth Part of its Water is denied a Passage by the Piers and Sterlings of London Bridge (it flowing, at an ordinary Spring-Tide, upwards of Nineteen Inches higher on the East than on the West Side of the said Bridge) I have frequently, at Spring-Tides, seen the small Current of Water, which issues from the River Thames, through a Common-Sewer at the Falcon, not only fill all the neighbouring Ditches; but also, at the upper

upper End of Gravel-Lane, overflow its Banks into St. George's Fields. And it being certain, that Part of the said Fields, called Lambeth Marsh, was under Water not an Age ago; it is highly probable, that, before the Water was thus confined and obstructed in its Channel, it must have been overflowed by most Neap-Tides. Wherefore those Fields, instead of being a proper Situation for a Station, or Post of Security, would have greatly endangered the Health of the Troops in Garrison, by the unwholesome Vapours incessantly arising from the Waters stagnated therein.

Should it be alledged that the River Thames was imbanked by the Britons before this Time; such a Salvo as this, I presume, could have but little Weight; seeing the Britons had but few or no Artists among them at the Arrival of Cæsar; and therefore were incapable of accomplishing so stupendous a Work, which was an Undertaking only fit for the mighty Romans. Besides, if the Britons had been capable of executing so great an Enterprize, it would have been the Height of Imprudence in them to have attempted such a Work, which would have been attended with such an immense Labour and Charge, especially considering they had Land enough fit to be cultivated at a very small Expence.

Gal.Com.
Ant. Iter.

II. "That great Quantities of Roman Antiquities have been found in St. George's Fields, such as Coins, Bricks, and Tesselated Pavements; and not long since an Urn full of Bones."

Ans. If the Antiquities found in St. George's Fields are produced by the Dean to support his Hypothesis; I shall in a proper Place make it appear, that above Twenty times the Quantity have been found on the Middlesex Side of the River; so that, if Quantity will decide the Controversy, the learned Commentator will have but an indifferent Basis to build his Kentish London upon. And, as ill Luck would have it, he has inadvertently told us, that amongst his Antiquities was an Urn full of Bones; which, instead of being an Evidence for him, serves to shew, that the Place was a Cemetery, and therefore not a Station. For, by the First, in the Tenth Table of the Roman Laws, 'tis expressly forbidden to bury in Cities in these Words; "Let no Person be interred, nor Body burnt, within the City." Which Law the devout Romans ever religiously observed; for their Burial-Grounds were by the Sides of the Highways, such as the Watling-street was in that Neighbourhood. And if, from there being a Cemetery in those Fields, it should be urged, that there must have been a Station hard by: If there's any Foundation for such an Allegation, I presume that Depford may with more Reason put in for a Station; because some time ago near that Place were discovered Two Urns; whereas in this only One was found.

De Jure Sacro.

And if the Tesselated Pavement found there be brought in Evidence to shew that there must have been a Roman Station in that Place; then, by the same Reason, we may as well conclude, that all Places, where such Pavements have been found, were the Sites of Roman Cities; which I imagine will not easily be admitted, seeing the Roman Generals used to carry along with them a sufficient Quantity of small square Marbles, Bricks, or Tiles, called Lapilli, or Tesselle, about the Bigness of Dice, of various Colours, viz. blue, yellow, white, red, purple and black, with which they paved the Place where the Prætorium or General's Tent was erected. And as we have numerous Instances in History, that the Romans, upon many Occasions, incamped, and set up the Prætorium, without the least View of erecting a Station or Town, or continuing longer than the Necessity of their Affairs obliged them; it might happen that such a transitory Station might be made in St. George's Fields, on that Part least liable to be overflowed; especially as there was neither the Appearance of Wall nor Foss about it. Besides, we have Instances of such Pavements being found in Cemeteries; as appears by that discovered near Bishopsgate in the Year 1711, under which were not only found divers Urns of various Sizes, containing Ashes and Cinders of burnt Bones, but also a variety of other Earthen Vessels, Coins, Beads, Rings, &c. and contiguous to which, but without the Verge of the Pavement, a human Skull, with several Bones that had not passed the Fire: Which I shall give a particular Account of in their proper Places.

III. "Near to which Place on one Side is Cyningston, (or Kennington) an ancient Town and Castle belonging to the Kings of England; and therefore probably a Roman Station, because the Saxons generally used to settle in such Places; and that, on the other Side of those Fields, is Southwark, which has been always deemed a Borough, or Place of Strength."

Gal.Com.
Ant. Iter.

Ans. That Kennington has been an antient Royal Seat, and Place of Retirement for the Kings of England, is acknowledged by a very great Antiquary; who, in respect to its Antiquity, says, that there appears neither Name nor Rubbish to direct us in the Discovery.

Camd.
Brit. in
Com. Sur.

Another learned and judicious Antiquary says, "The Argument (brought by the Dean) That the Fields between Lambeth and Southwark were a Royal Demeane, proves, quite contrary to what it is brought for, rather that those Fields were gained from the Thames, than that London ever stood there. The Kings of England were, from our oldest Notices of Things, intitled by the Laws to all such Lands as lay betwixt high and low-water Mark; and were gained from either the Sea, or such Rivers as ebbed and flowed: But none of our Kings ever pretended any Right or Title to this, more than to every other City of the Kingdom."

Woodw.
Let. to Sir Christ.
Wren.

The Dean would have highly obliged the Curious, if he had acquainted us from whom he received his Information, that Southwark was antiently a Place of Strength. I confess that Burg, or Borough, in the Saxon, implies so much; but Sudwerche, its first Name, denotes no more than the South Work, or Building, so denominated from its Situation on the South Side of the City of London.

IV. The chief Reasons that induced the Dean to place London on the Surrey Side of the River Thames, are the Authorities of Ptolemy and Ravennas: The first, he says, "Has not delivered

" his

Gal.Com. "his Opinion carelessly; but, having carefully ex-Ant. iter. amined other Authorities, he must be right."

Ans. That Ptolemy has misplaced several Places in Britain, we have the concurring Testimonies of two very learned and judicious Antiquaries: The first of whom says, "There are several Things in Ptolemy misplaced in relation to Britain, either by the Fault of Transcribers, or Want of good Information, so early, and at such a Distance." And the latter, "That Ptolemy lived at a great Distance, and in a Country that had no Intercourse with Britain; so that 'tis the less strange that he should not have right Information of Things here. He has committed no small Errors in his placing of Towns in Countries that were much nearer to him; of which I shall give some Instances on another Occasion, when I come to consider an Opinion started not long ago about a Change in the Latitude of Places." I am of Opinion with these great Antiquaries, that 'tis not to be wondered at that Ptolemy, in so early a Time, and at so great a Distance, has committed so many Mistakes in this and other Countries, considering the infinite Blunders of our modern Chorographers, many of whom I could mention, that have not only placed Towns on the wrong Sides of Rivers, but also in Kingdoms and Provinces to which they do not belong.

V. "Ravennat, in his Catalogue of Towns, on the North and South of the River Thames, has placed London on both Sides the said River; and has no where mentioned any one Town twice."

Ans. This generous Foreigner, in opposition to Ptolemy, the Itinerary, and every one else, has given us two Londons, which were never before dreamt of. But let us hear this Person's Character inadvertently given by the Dean himself.

"This Monk of Ravenna, called Anonymous, may be sometimes of Use, where he is not brought to contradict more established Authorities. His Method of naming Places is so imperfect, his skipping from the Inland Country to the Sea-Coast, and from the Sea-Coast to the Midland again, makes it very uncertain whereabouts he is. If he mentions one, two, or three Towns, by the same Names, as other Authors, his Reader is again presently lost, not knowing whether to look for the next in the Neighbourhood, or forty Miles off."

By this Character, the Reader will be enabled to judge, whether the Dean, or Mr. Salmon, had any Reason to build upon the Authority of such a Man. However, Mr. Salmon declares in Favour of a London in St. George's Fields.

And, to prove that London was originally erected on the South Side of the River Thames, he says, "One Argument I take Leave to urge, that the old Londinium was on the Kentish Side, and that it was esteemed such, as low as the Time of settling the Itinerary of Antoninus;" wherein 'tis said to be "Twenty-one Miles from Verulam, which it will not make, according to the ancient Computation, unless we pass the Thames."

To which I answer, that Mr. Salmon, foreseeing that the Londinium of Tacitus could not be fixed on the South Side of the River Thames, without making the Distance betwixt it and Verulam. II.

Verulam answer to the Number of twenty-one Miles, according to the Itinerary of Antoninus, has therefore unwarrantably converted the Roman Mile into an English computed one, which is much longer than a measured one of 5283 Feet; whereas the Roman only consisted of 4855 English Feet. Therefore, by placing the Londinium where London is at present situate, the Distance to Verulam, instead of being less, will appear considerably more than twenty-one Miles, as mentioned in the said Itinerary; but, by placing the ancient London in St. George's Fields, the Distance is thereby much increased: By which it appears, that his Argument, instead of proving what it was brought for, rather embarrasses and renders the Point in Controversy more perplexed than before.

Mr. Salmon having thought proper to bring only one Argument (as he is pleased to call it) for the Support of his Hypothesis; the following I shall call his Suppositions.

I. He supposes, upon the Authority of Ptolemy, and an Evidence (as he calls it) mentioned in his Account of Kent, that Londinium stood on the South Side of the River Thames; and the more effectually to fix it there, has luckily (as he imagines) found out a proper Boundary on the West for Ptolemy's Kent, viz. That Part of Surrey, West of Lambeth, being then very woody, 'tis therefore by him deemed a proper Frontier.

Ans. According to Mr. Salmon's Phrase, Ptolemy must have acted arbitrarily, in not fixing the Boundary of Kent Westward; and also himself, for fixing his on the West of Lambeth, for no other Reason, than its being woody: But, by the Woods still remaining in that Neighbourhood, it may be presumed that there was no intermediate Space proper for such a Boundary: And as the present Remains of that ancient great Wood run Eastward to Ravensthorpe, or Lea-island River, the spacious Vale wherein it glides would have been a much better Western Boundary for Ptolemy's Kent, than that pitched upon by Mr. Salmon.

II. "It does not appear to me, that Tacitus will have it where it now stands, because Verulam was also ruined: That might happen, tho' Boadicea crossed the Water at London: It is not said to be at the same Time, or on the same Side the River."

Ans. As Dr. Woodward is for giving up Ptolemy in this Dispute, so Mr. Salmon is against allowing Tacitus any Share in the Controversy. However, I shall endeavour to shew, that Tacitus has almost to a Demonstration proved his Londinium to be on the North Side of the River Thames, which the Dean and Mr. Salmon, tho' in a very awkward Manner, seem to acknowledge, by their Londinium Augusta; and also by their earnest pleading to be allowed a Station or Fortress on the South Side of the River; which if granted, will plainly shew the same to have been a Place of Strength: But that the Londinium of Tacitus was no such Place, is evident, by his saying, that the Britons stooped not to take either Forts or Castles, wherein were Garrisons; but all Places void of Defence they ran to, which they pillaged and destroyed at Pleasure, sparing neither Age nor Sex: And as Caualodunum, a veteran Colony, was not fortified, much less can it be expected that London, an Emporium, was.

lib. 14.

And by what the same Author says, the antient Londinium must have stood where London at present does, seeing it was celebrated for its great Number of Merchants, and plenty of Merchandize; which Character was not only incompatible with the Kentish London, but likewise with the Sagacity of the Romans, its Founders, to have built an Emporium, or trading City, in a stinking Marsh, and at so great a Distance from the River, to and from which they must have carried their Goods at a very considerable Expence: But, by London's being built where it is at present situate, the Citizens were free from that Trouble and Charge, as they were also from the noisome Vapours incessantly emitted from that and the neighbouring Marshes, which there abounded, when St. George's Fields (before the Imbanking of the River Thames) were subject to the Course of the Tide, as I have already made appear: But, on the City's being erected on its present happy Situation, it yielded a delightful Variety of pleasant Objects, which justly intitled it to the Appellation of Sweet, given it by Tacitus.

Salm. Sur.
Eng. vol. 1.

III. "But the City of London, at least the Ground it may be supposed to stand upon between Lambeth and Southwark, or perhaps including them both, can't be thought able to defend itself against the Power of Kent, having no Chance for Succours but from across the Thames; and therefore, if it will not be admitted that London was in the antient Kent, of which there is Probability enough, Southwark and Lambeth must have been as not defensible by any neighbouring People."

Ans. I own myself at a Loss how to understand this Paragraph, without 'tis meant, that the Kentish London was in Danger of being destroyed by the Roman Power in Kent, against which it could not defend itself, except it were succoured from beyond the River Thames by its Enemies the Britens, whose Interest it was, as a Roman City, to destroy it: And by denying London a Place in St. George's Fields, we must thereby expose its two famous Citadels, Southwark and Lambeth, as not defensible by the neighbouring People. These are Places which neither his Patron Ptolemy nor the Itinerary ever dreamt of; nor in Truth (as far as I can find) were they in Being before the Times of the Saxons; to whom they owe their Names, and their Foundations also. Then, before those places were built, What was there to be defended, but noisome Bogs and dirty Marshes? For 'tis evident, by the very Name of the first, that it is taken from its Situation, South of London, being denominated by the Saxons, at the Time of its Erection, Sudwerche, or the Work or Building to the South; and, according to Camden, the Name of the latter, Lambeth, or Lombithie, signifies a dirty Place. Which, together with the Account I have already given of St. George's Fields, before they were gained from the River Thames, I presume, are sufficient to shew, that in the Days of Boadicea they would not have admitted of Mr. Salmon's Query, viz. "What is there in the Air of the City better than of St. George's Fields, if Sweetness belongs to Air only?" Whereby 'tis manifest, that Mr. Salmon, instead of the an-tient, means the modern State of those Fields; the Air of which, since the Exclusion of the River Thames, and the many great Improvements on that Side the Water, is very good.

Farther, to shew that London never stood in St. George's Fields, the Course of the Roman Military Way, called Watling-street, will demonstrate; which Street, according to the Itinerary, led from Port Ritupis (now ingulphed by the Sea) near Sandwich in Kent, thro' Durovernum, Durolevum, Durobrovis, Vagniacis, and Niviomagus, to Londinium, or London, which, according to Ptolemy and Ravennas, (as already mentioned) was situate on the South Side the River Thames; which occasioned a certain Monk to make it cross that River, and pass on the West of Westminster, to Sallomiacis, without assigning a Reason, or the least Vestigia, for this its pretended Course. However, he has been followed in this Notion by most of our Antiquaries; and especially by the Dean of York, who notwithstanding his being satisfied that the Watling-street led thro' the City of London, yet, out of an unaccountable Respect to the Authority of that Monk, has caused the said Military Way, in the Neighbourhood of Gray's Inn, to divide into two Branches; one whereof he has sent by Portpool, to London-stone in Cannon-street, and the other (in a very surprizing and unjustifiable Manner) round Westminster to Kent: By which unheard-of Course of the Watling-street, to oblige the Monk and his Followers, he has impeached the Sagacity of the Romans, for making their Military Road run so far out of its Way, and, as it were, back again, without answering any End or Purpose. We allow that there is a raised Way, and a Work at the Ducking-Pond in St. George's Fields, pointing to the Horse-Ferry: But certainly it is a great Mistake in those modern Writers, who from thence become Advocates for the Trajellus of the Watling-street at Westminster: For this is no Relick of a Roman Work or Way, as they vainly imagine, but the Remains of a Bulwark and Rampier, raised by Order of Parliament in the late Civil War, Anno 1543, for the Security of Southwark, and Parts contiguous, on that Side the River. Therefore, as there has not been the least Reason brought, nor Vestigia shewn, to support the Assertions of Ptolemy, Ravennas, and their Followers, that London antiently stood in Kent, nor that the Watling-street intersected the River Thames at the Horse-Ferry; but, on the contrary, as divers Parts of the Watling-street were discovered at digging the Foundations of the present St. Mary-le-Bow Steeple in Cheapside, at Holborn Bridge, and at the End of Bread-street in Cheapside, there are certain Proofs that the Roman Trajellus was at London, and not according to Higden, at Westminster. Which is corroborated by Stan, or Stoney-street, opposite Deogate in Southwark, which Appellation it undoubtedly received from the Saxons, as being Part of the said Military Way: Which effectually destroys the wild Notion of a Kentish London, as well as that of a Roman Trajellus at Lambeth.

The Extent of the Roman Colony, or Præfectura, particularly Northward, Sir Christopher Wren had occasion to discover by this Accident: The Parochial Church of St. Mary-le-Bow in Cheapside side required to be rebuilt after the great Fire: The Building had been mean and low, with one Corner taken out for a Tower; but, upon restoring that, the Church could be rendered square. Upon opening the Ground, a Foundation was discerned, firm enough for the new-intended Fabrick, which (on further Inspection, after digging down sufficiently, and removing what Earth and Rubbish lay in the Way) appeared to be the Walls, with the Windows also, and the Pavement, of a Temple or Church of Roman Workmanship, entirely buried under the Level of the present Street. Hereupon, he determined to erect his new Church over the old; and, in order to the necessary Regularity and Square of the new Design, restored the Corner. But then another Place was to be found for the Steeple. The Church stood about forty Feet backward from the high Street; and by purchasing the Ground of one private House, not yet rebuilt, he was enabled to bring the Steeple forwards, so as to range with the Street-Houses in Cheapside. Here, to his Surprise, he sunk about eighteen Feet deep through made Ground, and then imagined that he was come to the natural Soil and hard Gravel; but, upon full Examination, it appeared to be a Roman Causeway of rough Stone, close and well rammed with Roman Brick and Rubbish at the Bottom, for a Foundation, and all firmly cemented. This Causeway was four Feet thick, [The Thickness of the Via Appia, according as Mons. Montfaucon measured it, was about three Parisian Feet, or three Feet two Inches and an half English.] Underneath this Causeway lay the natural Clay, over which that Part of the City stands, and which descends at least forty Feet lower. He concluded then to lay the Foundation of the Tower upon the very Roman Causeway, as most proper to bear, what he had designed, a weighty and lofty Structure. He was of Opinion, for divers Reasons, that this Highway ran along the North Boundary of the Colony. The Breadth then, North and South, was from the Causeway, now Cheapside, to the River Thames; the Extent, East and West, from Tower-Hill to Ludgate; and the principal Middle-Street, Prætorian Way, was Watling-Street.

The Emperor improved the Victory, by penetrating with his Army into Essex, as far as Camalodunum, the Royal Seat of Cynobelin, which he reduced; and, having finished this Expedition in fifteen Days, he left Plautius to complete his Conquests, and returned to Rome in Triumph.

Plautius, after the Departure of Claudius, having made very considerable Advances in the Reduction of Britain, was recalled, and had the Honour of an Ovation decreed him by the Senate, for his great Services. Tacit. An.
lib. 13.

Ostorius Scapula, being sent to succeed Plautius in the Quality of Proprætor, found, at his Arrival in Britain, that the Enemy had invaded the Territories of the Roman Allies in a very impetuous Manner; for the securing of which, and the Conquests made by his Predecessor, he is said to have settled divers Colonies, (about A. D. 49.) among which was that of Camalodunum: And tho' London and Verulam are not said to be of the Number, yet I think 'tis not to be doubted, but they were founded by him about the same Time, the one as an Emporium, and the other as a Municipium. The first Mention we find of the City of London in History, (by the Appellation of Londinium) is by the illustrious and celebrated Roman Historian Tacitus; when he acquaints us, That Suetonius Paulinus, the Roman General, being employed in the Conquest of the Isle of Mona, or Anglesey, in North Wales, he received Advice of the Revolt of the Britons; wherefore, with the utmost Expedition, he began his March to the Assistance of the Veterans and Colonies; and marching thro' the midst of the Enemy, (I suppose here is meant the Enemy's Country; for 'tis probable that the Part he marched thro' was left naked, the Men from all Parts being gone to join Boadicea, Queen of the Iceui, at the general Rendezvous in her Kingdom, which consisted of the Counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridge, and Huntingdon) arrived at London, which was then (in the sixty-fourth Year after Christ) celebrated for its great Number of Merchants and Plenty of Merchandize. Here 'tis supposed that Suetonius first received Advice of the Destruction of the Colony of Camalodunum, and of the Approach of the Enemy with a prodigious Army to attack him. Tacit. An.
lib. 14.

Suetonius finding that London was not tenable, took into his Army all such as were willing to leave it; and preferring the Loss of the City to the Destruction of his little Army, and that of the whole Province, without regarding the piteous Supplications and Tears of the Inhabitants, abandoned it to the Rage of a cruel and merciless Enemy; who, having taken and pillaged it, put all to the Sword, without Distinction of Age or Sex, and then burnt it; in which, together with the Colony of Camalodunum, and Municipium of Verulam, were destroyed near seventy thousand Persons; one half whereof we may suppose to have been Inhabitants of this City, considering its great Commerce at that Time. Ibid.

But, lest it should to some appear improbable, that this City could in so short a Time, as fourteen or fifteen Years from her Foundation, so abound with People, it will be necessary to acquaint the Reader, that the mighty Romans, its Founders, upon their settling a Colony, Municipium, or Emporium, brought together great Numbers of their own Citizens, for whom they erected Houses, and by endowing the Place with ample Privileges and Immunities, encouraged the Natives, as well as confederate Foreigners, to settle therein; so that 'tis not in the least to be admired at, especially cially with such an advantageous Situation, that London should in so short a Space of Time become so very populous. And have we not in our Time seen St. Petersburg, from a sorry Fishers-Village of a few Houses, raised by the late Czar of Muscovy to one of the most populous and magnificent Cities of Europe? Which in a much less Number of Years, than the above-mentioned, contained more Inhabitants than the above-named Roman Cities put together.

And this may serve for an Answer to the Improbability, that, in so short a Time, as from Claudius to Nero, in whose Reign Tacitus wrote his account, London could become so famous for her Merchants and Provisions: Tho' Ammianus Marcellinus, who flourished A. D. 380, makes it a City of the Trinobantes, and calls it Lundinium, and Vetulum Oppidum, i. e. an ancient Town. It had all the Encouragement that the Residence of the Roman Governor could give it: And that was sufficient to make the City so great in a small Time, that, altho' it was first built in the Reign of Claudius, yet in Nero's it might be too large for Suetonius Paulinus to hazard his Army in defending it. For, wheresoever there was a new Province established, there was great Occasion for such an Emporium, or Place of Trading, to be set up; the Citizens of Rome making mighty Improvements of their Estates by lending their Money into new Provinces.

That London originally was a Roman City, I think I have almost demonstrated; for, had it belonged to the Britons, the Citizens would undoubtedly have joined their oppressed and enraged Countrymen in the general Insurrection under Boadicea, for recovering their lost Liberty; especially considering they might have done it with the greatest Safety, in the Absence of the Roman Army, then in North-Wales: But the Londoners, instead of engaging in the Common Cause of Britain, continued firmly attached to the Roman Interest in the worst of Times; for which they, together with their City, were entirely destroyed by the cruel Britons, to whom all the Sufferings of this City were owing; for, being a Child and Darling of the Romans, it had nothing to fear from such indulgent Parents.

However, in the great Uncertainty, in which the Variety of Conjectures concerning the Foundation of this Metropolis, which is so frequently stiled the Royal Chamber of our Kings, the Heart of the Commonwealth, and a short Draught of the whole Kingdom, and is at present the Admiration of the whole Earth for its Extent, beautiful Buildings, Number of Inhabitants, Riches and Commerce, has left many Readers, we must not omit any Author of good Authority, who has endeavoured to clear up this intricate History. Therefore, Mr. Owen, a learned Welshman, deserves our particular Attention; who, in his Vindiciæ Britannicæ, against Bishop Stillingfleet, attempts to prove, that London was a great City before the Romans came hither, and vindicates therein our British History, which speaks of Cassivellaune's besieging London, when the Trinobantes invited Cesar over; and that his Landing had obliged him to raise the Siege. He quotes that Passage in Tacitus, who writes, Cognomento quidem Colonia non insignit; or, It was not dignified indeed with the Name of a Colony, but that it was most renowned for an Abundance of Merchants and of Provisions. Then he observes, (1.) That London was at this Time (about the fifth of Nero) renowned for all manner of Provisions and Necessaries for the supplying of an Army; and that it may be fairly supposed, from the Description given of it by Tacitus, to have been then the great Treasury of the Riches of the Kingdom, as it is now. (2.) That, considering it abounded with Merchants, it seems to have been then, what it is also now, the chief trading City of the Island. He endeavours to support this Opinion, by observing, that Cesar speaks of British Merchants, whom he met with in Gaul; and that, before his Descent into Britain, the Natives of this Island had carried on an advantageous Trade for Tin and Lead with the Phœnicians and Greeks, who refined and transported it by the Way of the Isle of Wight into Gaul, and thence by Horses, in thirty Days, to Marseilles: And thence he infers, if Cities have risen by Merchandize, London must be much more ancient than Cesar's Time: For, as its Situation is most advantageous for Trade, being the Center of the British Merchandize, we may conclude that it was the ancient Emporium or Mart of the British Trade with the Gauls, Phœnicians, and Greeks, without having recourse to the fabulous History of Geoffrey of Monmouth.

And that London was a Place of Strength before the Days of Nero, is no less certain: For, otherwise why should Tacitus relate, that the Roman General Paulinus Suetonius, in his Return from Mona, i. e. Anglesey, marched thro' the Enemy's Country to secure this Station, with an Intention to make it the Seat of War? And why did he abandon it to the Fury of the Enemies; but because it was too large to be defended by his little Army of ten thousand Men?

Having to the utmost of my Power endeavoured to discover the Origin of London, I shall next attempt to shew where the first Buildings therein were erected.

The Roman Trajectus, or Ferry, as already hinted, intersected the River Thames at Dowgate, in the Neighbourhood whereof was erected the Milliarium of the Romans, which is London-Stone in Canon-Street; whence, it is supposed, they measured the Distances to their several Stations throughout Britain; at which Place centered the Roman Military Ways, the Watling-Street from the South-east and North-west, the Ermine-Street from the South-west and North, and the Vicinal Way from Old Ford to Bethnal-Green: The first of which entered the City at Dowgate, and passed thro' Newgate: The second, accompanied by the Watling from Southwark, likewise entered at Dowgate, and, according to a late learned Antiquary, passed at Moorgate: Which to me seems very improbable; for, till the Year 1415, (when all that Fenny Ground, called Moorfilds, which lay on the North Side of the Causeway, above-mentioned by Sir Christopher, was drained by the Industry and at the Expence of the Lord Mayor Franciscus) all that Space between Bishopsgate and Cripplegate was a deep Morass, wherein wherein there appeared not the least Vestigia of a Way, nor Aperture in the City Wall for a Gate; for in that Year Moorgate was first erected, and a Causeway raised in the said Morafs, to accommodate the Citizens in their going to and from their respective Fields and Gardens: Therefore it would have answered much better, if the Dean had carried it a little westward to Cripplegate; which, I shall in another Place endeavour to shew, was one of the four original Gates of this City: Wherefore I am persuaded that the Ermine-street passed thro' the said Gate, and took its Way by Highbury-barn to Stroud-green, where there is a much greater Appearance of a Military Way, than in any other Place in the Neighbourhood of London, and much more than the reputed Roman Way, called the Devil's-lane, both by its Breadth and Height, it being still in many Places higher than the Fields on either Side, and continues in equal Breadth to Hornsey, except where it is encroached upon at Mount-pleasant. And the fifth, or Vicinal Way, led thro' Aldgate by Bethnal-green, to the Trajectus at Old Ford.

Gal Com

After the dreadful Conflagration, Anno 1666, certain Labourers in digging the Foundations of Houses in Scots-yard in Bush-lane, Canon-street, about the Depth of twenty Feet, discovered a Tessellated Pavement, with the Remains of a large Building or Hall; the former supposed to have belonged to the Roman Governor's Palace, and the latter to have been the Basilica, or Court of Justice. This Structure, by its Circumstances, was undoubtedly of very great Antiquity, for it seemed to have been built close to the River Thames; for, without the South Wall thereof, were four Holes in the Ground full of Wood-coals, which are supposed originally to have had Piles in them, for the Defence of the Wall: Besides, the Ground whereon this Edifice was erected was very low, and the Earth whereon the Pavement lay, artificial, and considerably raised with Rubbish, composed of Chalk, Lime, Bricks, Coals, broken Glasses, &c. wherefore 'tis highly probable that this Fabrick was destroyed in the great Conflagration by Boadicea; and as it was situate near the Trajectus, or Ferry, I am of Opinion that this, together with those in that Neighbourhood, were the first Buildings erected in this City.

Names of this City.Tacit. An
lib. 14.Am. Mar.
cel. lib. 20Hist. de Const.
lib. 5.

Various are the Names, which have been conferred upon this City: The first whereof mentioned by an illustrious Historian, is that of Londinium; wherein he is followed by Ptolemy, Antoninus, and the Author of the Councils: But an eminent Roman Historian, by varying a Letter, has changed the Appellation to Luandinium. But Londinium, the original Name of this ancient City, having given way to the more honourable Denomination of Augusta, the Transition has occasioned various Conjectures among our Historians, concerning the Etymology thereof: Some derive it from Helena Augusta, Mother to Constantine the Great; which Conjecture seems but ill grounded, seeing that Princefs is thought to have died about thirty Years before the Name was conferred upon this City. Others imagine, that it was so denominated from the Legio secunda, which some Time had its Station here. This is warmly opposed by divers Authors, who are positive that this Legion was never resident in London; but without the least Colour for such an Assertion: For, that the said Legion was stationed in this City, is demonstrable from the following monumental Inscription, upon a small sepulchral Stone dug up where Ludgate Church is situate, after the great Conflagration Anno 1666; which I have subjoined, in Consideration of its great Antiquity; which Stone is still preserved at the Theatre in Oxford.

Still Disc
Ant. Lon.

Of which Sir Christopher has left the following Account. On the West Side of the Causeway was situated the Praetorian Camp, which was also walled in to Ludgate, in the Vallum of which was dug up near the Gate, after the Fire, a Stone, with an Inscription, and Figure of a Roman Soldier:—A sepulchral Monument, dedicated to the Memory of Vivius Marcianus, a Soldier of the second Legion, stiled Augusta, by his Wife Januaria Matrina. Parentalia p. 265.

The Soldiers used to be buried in Vallo, as the Citizens extra Portas in Pomario; therefore it is most probable the Extent of the Camp reached to Ludgate, to the Declining of the Hill, that Way.

But others, with more Reason, are of Opinion, that the honourable Appellation of Augusta was conferred upon this City by the Romans, (as it was likewise upon many of the principal Cities of their Empire) on Account of its being the Capital of their British Dominions.

Whether this City enjoyed the Name of Augusta, during the whole Time of the Roman Stay in Britain, I cannot ascertain; however, it is probable, it did not, seeing that the Saxons, soon after their Arrival in this Kingdom, mention it by the Name of London-Byrig; which they soon after changed into Lunden-Ceaster, Lunden-Wye, Lundenne, Lunden-Berb, or Lunden-Burg; and since the Conquest it appears, by divers Records, to have been denominated Londonia, Lundonia, Chro. Sax A.D. 457

Lundonia, Londine, and Londres; but for divers Ages past, only London.

Its Etymology.

Twinus de Rebus Albioniciis, &c.

Seeing then the Difficulty to arrive at the Reasons for the Variety of Names, and their Changes, there need be no Wonder at the Disagreement among Authors about the Etymology of its present Name; each, according to his own Caprice, endeavouring to find out some new Derivation thereof. The celebrated Twin, in his Rebus Albioniciis, derives it from Caer-Lud, i. e. Lud's Town. I am sensible that this is also the Etymology given of it by the exploded Historian Geffrey of Monmouth: But I can't apprehend it should be rejected on that Account, when an Author of so much Credit as our John Twin, not only adopts it, but supports his Opinion by nervous Arguments. This Author very justly observes, "That such Things, as have been tranſacted many Ages ago, seem very often either to be false, or sometimes uncertain, or at least obscure. And this is the very Case in regard to the little Word Caer, prefixed to the Names of many Cities in Britain. And therefore I will endeavour to clear up this Affair from the most early Times.

"First, it must be remembered that the Phœnicians traded into Britain: After whose Arrival, almost all the Cities, Towns, and Villages of Britain were called Caer, or Cayer; a general Name prefixed to it, either from the Founder thereof, or from a River near which it was built, or from the Nature of the Soil or Climate, or from the Commodiousness and Condition of the Place. Thus Caer-Lud was given to the Londinium Trinovantum, from the Name of its Founder; Caer-Iske, to Exeter, from its Situation on the River Ex or Iske, &c. A Word not of a Latin Original; but a pure Oriental Word, introduced by the Phœnicians amongst the ancient Britons, and signifying the same as the Saxon Word Cester, or Chester, and the Latin Cæsaria, added to many proper Names of Places at this Time, as Winchester, Rockester, Worcester. Some also end in burie, as Newberie; in burie, as Canterburie; and in borow, or brough, as Peterborow: All which Words denote a City, Seat, Station, or Place of Burial; according to the Custom of the Grecians, who added -polis, i. e. City, to the Names of their Emperors, or other Men of Renown, when a City was dedicated to their Memory; as Adrianopolis, and Constantinopolis: Which additional Word signifies the same Thing, as was originally intended by our Ancestors by the Phœnician or Chaldaic Word Caer, or Cayer, or Cabyra; which as Jacobus Zieglerus writes, imports, a Place of Strength; and if rightly considered, proves those Places to be of very antient Foundation, to which it is prefixed; and confutes the Invention of Geffrey of Monmouth, who ignorantly derives Caer from a Latin Original."

But why did this City receive the Name of Lud? "Because," says Mr. Owen in his Answer to Bishop Stillingfleet, "Lud, Brother to Cafwallawn, renewed the Walls of it, and called it Lud-din, i. e. The City of Lud; tho', in Process of Time, it was corruptly called Lundin, and now London."

Erasmus thought he had found out its Etymology in the Name of Lindus, a City in the Isle of Rhodes, and quotes Martianus to support his Conjecture. And he adds, That there was such an Affinity between the Islanders of Rhodes and Britain, as plainly indicated that the Tongue spoken by the Welsh was either brought from Greece, or, at least, was mixed with the Greek Tongue: Nor do they differ much from the Greeks in their Manners. See Erasmi Adagium, intitled Rhodii Sacrificium. Vitus derives it from Lugdus, a Celtic Prince, Lugdon: Selden, from Llan-Dyn, the Temple of Diana; which Conjecture is founded upon the great Number of Boars Tusks, (found in the Neighbourhood of St. Paul's Cathedral) Horns of Oxen and Stags, whose Bodies were proper Sacrifices to that Deity. This Supposition seems no better grounded than the rest, says Mr. Maitland; in which he is supported by the unquestionable Authority of Sir Christophers Wren, who assures us, that he met with no Indications in all his Searches in the Foundation of St. Paul, to confirm the common Story of a Temple dedicated to Diana, to have antiently stood on that Site. But it deserves our most serious Attention when he adds, That the North Side of this Ground had been very antiently a great Burying-Place, was manifest; for upon digging the Foundation of the present Fabrick of St. Paul's, he found under the Graves of the latter Ages, in a Row below them, the Burial-Places of the Saxon Times: The Saxons, as it appeared, were accustomed to line their Graves with Chalk-Stones; tho' some more eminent, were entombed in Coffins of whole Stones. Below these were British Graves, where were found Ivory and Wooden Pins, of a hard Wood seemingly Box, in Abundance, of about six Inches long: It seems the Bodies were only wrapped up, and pinned in woollen Shrouds, which being consumed, the Pins remained entire. In the same Row, and deeper, were Roman Urns intermixed: This was eighteen Feet deep, or more, and belonged to the Colony, when Romans and Britons lived and died together.

The most remarkable Roman Urns, Lamps, Lacrymatories, and Fragments of sacrificing Vessels, &c. were found deep in the Ground towards the North-east Corner of St. Paul's Church, near Cheapside. See more hereafter, in the Description of St. Paul's Cathedral.

These Graves of several Ages and Fashions, in the Strata or Layers of Earth, one above another, particularly at the North Side of St. Paul's, manifestly shewed a great Antiquity from the British and Roman Times, by the Means whereof the Ground had been raised: But, upon searching for the natural Ground below these Graves, the Surveyor observed that the Foundation of the old Church stood upon a Layer of very close and hard Pot-Earth; and concluded that the same Ground, which had borne so weighty a Building, might reasonably be trusted again. However, he had the Curiosity to search further, and accordingly dug Wells in different Places, and discerned this hard Pot-Earth to be, on the North Side of the Church-yard, about six Feet thick, and more, but thinner and thinner towards the South, till it was upon the Declining of the Hill scarce four Feet. Still he searched lower, and found nothing but dry Sand, mixed sometimes unequally, but loose, so that it would run through the Fingers. He went on till he came to Water and Sand, mixed with Periwinkles and other Sea-Shells; these were about the Level of low-water Mark. He continued boring till he came to hard Beach; and still under that, till he came to the natural hard Clay, which lies under the City and Country, and Thames also, far and wide. By these Shells it was evident, that the Sea, or Current of the River, had been where now the Hill is, on which the Cathedral of St. Paul stands: And the Surveyor was of Opinion, that the whole Country between Camberswell-Hill and the Hills of Effex might have been a great Fritb, or Sinus of the Sea, and much wider near the Mouth of the Thames, which made a large Plain of Sand at low Water, thro' which the River found its Way; but at low Water, as often as it happened in the Summer Season, when the Sun dried the Surface of the Sand, and a strong Wind happened at the same Time, before the Flood came on, the Sands would drive with the Wind, and raise Heaps, which in Time increased to large and lofty Sand-Hills; as might be exemplified by the Sand-Hills raised in the same Manner on the Coasts of Flanders and Holland. The Sands are known, upon such a Conjunction of Sunshine and Wind, to drive in visible Clouds; and this might be the Effect many Ages before History, without having Recourse to the Flood.

This mighty broad Sand, now good Meadows, was restrained by large Banks still remaining, and reducing the River into its Channel: A great Work, of which no History gives Account: The Britons were too rude to attempt it; the Saxons were too busy with continual Wars; and therefore it must be ascribed to the Romans: One Breach of which, in his Time, cost 17000*l.* to restore.

The Sand-Hill at St. Paul's, in the Time of the Roman Colony, was about twelve Feet lower than the present Surface thereof; and the finer Sand, easily driven with the Wind, lay uppermost; and the hard Coat of Pot-Earth might be thus made: For Pot-Earth dissolved in Water, and viewed by a Microscope, is but impalpable fine Sand, which with the Fire will vitrify.

Glof. Dec. Script. Sommer derives it from Llawn, Plenus, and Dyn, Hemo, a populous Place, which he imagines London always to have been; which I take to be an Appellation very unsuitable with the low Condition this City has been many Times reduced to; especially when the whole of its Inhabitants were destroyed by Boadicea.

Cam. Brit. in Com. Mid. Camden derives it from Lbong and Dinas; Lbong signifying a Ship, and Dinas a Town, that is, Ship-Town, or a City of Ships: But how it came to deserve that Name at the Time of its Foundation, I can no more account for, than how it should at all Times have been deemed a populous City.

Lew. Hist. Brit. Lewis tells us, that about An. 130, the Britons called this City Lundain, or Llandain, that is, the Thames Bank-Town. This Derivation has likewise its Difficulties: For how could Lewis come by an Account of the Year 130, when his Countryman Gildas, who wrote near a thousand Years before him, declares, that the Britons had no Records in his Time, and was in doubt whether they ever had? For he acknowledges to have taken the Materials for his History from foreign Authors, as already observed.

And another Antiquary contends mightily for its Derivation from Lunden in Sebonen, but without the least Probability or Foundation.

I have endeavoured to shew, that this City owes its Original to the Romans, and that the Appellation of London is a Corruption of Londinium; and indeed I am of Opinion, that the same is intirely Roman.

In the great Uncertainty of the Origin of London, in the first Edition of this Work, I deduced it from the Romans; but not finding, after a strict Search since, the least Analogy betwixt the Appellation London and the Latin Tongue, I had Recourse to the antient Gaelic Language, spoken by our Higblanders and the Irish; when, to my great Satisfaction, I discovered it to be a Gaelic Compound; Lon, the first Syllable thereof, denoting a Plain; and Dun or Don, the second Syllable, an Eminence or Hill: Than which, no Denomination can better suit London; for the Lon, or Plain, antiently lay along the Northern Side of the River Thames; and the Dun, or Hill, adjoining to it on the North, was by the Anglo-Saxons called Cornbill, from its being the Place whereon the Corn-Market was held; which is still preserved in one of the principal Streets of the City, denominated Cornbill.

To illustrate this, a celebrated Roman Writer, in giving us an Interpretation of divers Parts of the Gaelic Language, tells us, That the Southern and Eastern Parts of Britain were inhabited by the Belgic Gauls; but whether they came hither for Conquest or Commerce, he could not learn. Be that as it will, a learned and judicious British or Welsh Antiquarian, observing in Cesar's Account that those Countries were fully inhabited by the said Belgic Gauls, imagines they came here for Conquest, and not for Commerce. And, by the vast Number of Names of Towns, Rivers, Mountains, Fortresses, Camps, &c. in England and Wales, not to be found either in the English or Welsh Language, he concludes, that the Gael, the Predecessors of our Higblanders, were the first Inhabitants of Britain, and were here before the Arrival of his Countrymen, the Britons; who, coming some Time after, with a Power superior to that of the Gael, possessed themselves of their Country, and drove them Southwards, as may be presumed, to the Northern Side of the Æstuary, denominated Solway-Fritb; which by some is thought to be a Corruption of Galloway-Fritb, and might probably be so called from its being the Southern Boundary of the Province of Galloway, inhabited by the said Gael; as it likewise was the Northern Boundary of the Cumbrian Britons, or Welsh, is evident, by the Appellation of Cumberland, the Land or Country of the Cumbrians on the South: Whereby seems to be shewn, that Solway or Galloway-Fritb was antiently the Boundary both of the Gaelic and Cumbrian Nations, and was the most Northern Part the Gael seems to have been driven to: Which in some Measure appears by Ireland's being peopled by the Gael; which it may be presumed, could not be from any other Parts of Britain, seeing all the other Parts of the Island, both Verleg.

Rehit.
Dec. Intol

both Southwards and Eastwards, were inhabited by the Britons or Belic Gauls, whose Language is that we at present call Welsh; whereas the Gael, now spoken by the Irish, is a different Dialect from the British; inasmuch that the two Nations can only understand one another in a few Words in common Discourse. Besides, as the Province of Galloway lies next to Ireland, and the County of Galloway therein, I think it is more than probable, that Ireland was peopled from Galloway, and the Gael in their Migration thither carried the Names of the above Places with them.

MamPan. Orat. In the Reign of Diocletian and Maximian, London providentially escaped being sacked by a Party of rebellious Franks, who (after the Defeat of the Usurper Alektus's Army, by Asclepiodotus, Prefect of the Prætorian Guard) having saved themselves by Flight, determined to pillage London, and to escape with their Booty by Sea: But, by a propitious Turn of Fortune, a Roman Squadron, which had been separated from the Fleet by a great Fog, arrived in the River Thames, with a considerable Force on board, in the nick of Time: The Commander of which was no sooner advised of their villainous Proceedings, than he landed his Men, and attacked and cut in Pieces most of those detestable Rovers, before they left the City, to the great Satisfaction of the Citizens, who were overjoyed to find themselves not only so happily and unexpectedly delivered, but at the same Time effectually revenged upon their cruel and merciless Enemies.

Gal.Mon. Hist.Reg. From the Destruction of the Franks, Geffrey of Monmouth invented his Fable of Levinus Gallus being killed near a Rivulet in this City, which, as he says, from him was denominated Nant-Gall, or Gallus's Brook, in English, Wallbrook; whereas it received this Appellation from its Course through the City Wall. But what is more extraordinary than the Fable itself, is, that so many of our Historians should copy implicitly after him: For, had they duly considered the Matter, they might have concluded, that the very Silence of the Roman History, in Respect to this pretended Transaction, is of itself sufficient to quash the romantick Relation of the fabulous Geffrey. But the most surprising of all is, that the learned and judicious Camden, through great Inadvertence, seems to be of the same Opinion, notwithstanding the Pains he has taken to condemn Geffrey, and his Writings, in other Particulars.

This Fiction of the Monk, in substituting the Britons instead of the Romans, and the Romans for the Franks, appears to be wrote with a View to aggrandize his own Nation, and to depress the Bravery of the Romans, by ascribing Destruction to them, and Victory to the Britons.

Wien London was fortified. But to return to the Subject: It is probable, that by the Franks entering London without Opposition, and the Romans at their Landing falling immediately upon them in the City, it was not then fortified; and, if so, the Wall of London must have been erected between An. 298, and the Reign of Honorius, when the Romans left Britain, about the Year 402, on their being recalled to defend the City of Rome against Alaric the Goth, who had determined to invade Italy.

By whom the Wall of London was at first erected, is very uncertain; some Authors ascribing the Building thereof to Constantine the Great, and others to his Mother Helena: But I think it may with more Reason be referred to the Reign of Valentinian the First; in whose Time Britain was reduced to a very great Degree of Misery, by the joint Attacks of the Scots, Picts, Attacots, Franks, and Saxons; and the Romans were defeated in divers Engagements, until the Arrival of Theodosius the Elder; who, landing in Britain, divided his Army into several Divisions, and, marching towards London, attacked and routed several Parties of the Enemy, and entered the City in Triumph, tho' then in the utmost Misery and Affliction, occasioned by the great Ravages committed by those insatiable Free-booters. This great Success of the Romans recovered the drooping Spirits of the Citizens, in Hopes of Protection against the Depredations of their cruel Enemies for the future.

London never was at any Time so great a Sufferer as at this Juncture, unless in the War with Boadicea, therefore never had more Occasion for a Wall than at this Time: But that it had no Wall then to me is evident; because, if it had been walled in by Constantine the Great, or his Mother Helena, the Wall would then have been not above fifty Years old, and consequently in such a State of Defence, as to have baffled all the Attempts that could have been made against it, by such Bands of transitory Enemies, 'till relieved by the Romans: So that, by its becoming so easy a Prey to the Enemy, I am of Opinion that it was not then fortified. And as we are told by the same Author, that Theodosius, by repairing some Cities and Castles, and fortifying others, left every Thing upon so good a Foot, that Peace was preserved in Britain 'till the Departure of the Romans in the Reign of Honorius; therefore I conclude, that London was at first inwalled by Theodosius, about Anno 368.

A modern Author will not allow this Wall to have encompassed the City on all Sides, and for this his Opinion assigns the following Reasons:

I. "What Fitz-Stephens, and later Writers say "of the Walls of London, next the Thames, that "they have been demolished by the Tides, seems "to be a Mistake. So great, or so continual an "Inundation, as would have carried them away, "must have been recorded in History, and the "Ruins of its bulky Materials been found in the "Thames."

To which I answer, That there was a Wall along the Side of the River Thames, and that the said Wall was destroyed by the Tide and Weather, appears to me evident, without requiring any great or extraordinary Inundation for that Purpose: For, by the Observations I have made on our modern Wharfs, notwithstanding their being built as strong as Art and the Materials of our Country can make them, yet I have known some, in less than the Space of forty Years, become a Prey to the Tide, Weather, and concomitant Incidents; and am not only persuaded by the Authority of Fitz-Stephens, but likewise by the Experience I have had of other fortified Cities, situate upon great navigable Rivers, that the Wall of London did run along the Side of the River Thames, as well as on that of the Land; and that the Tide and Weather in the Space of seven hundred and seventy-seven Years, from the Time of its Erection, to that of Fitz-Stephens, would undoubtedly have destroyed several such Walls: And at this Time it is not to be expected that we can discover any of its remains, seeing our modern Wharfs extend considerably farther into the River, than London Wall can be supposed to have done; which I shall presently endeavour to make appear.

II. "I do not see to what Purpose any Wall should have been built on that Side; it would have hindered the landing Goods and Merchandizes at the Owners' Yards; they must have been, with great Labour and Expence, and Confusion, carried through the Gates backward and forward, and brought round to the Places where they are now unloaded, or put on Board. The Remains that have been observed of this Wall, may have been no more than some decayed Wharfing."

Ans. A Wall on that Side, with a Gate or Gates, at proper Distances, would not have occasioned greater Obstructions, Charge, Trouble or Confusion in Shipping, Landing and Carriage of Goods, than the present Row of Buildings on the South of Thames-street do, (and from which run down to the several Wharfs long and narrow Passages, only wide enough for one Cart;) especially considering that the Commerce of London must then have been far short of what it is now; and probably not more extensive than the neighbouring Countries of France and the Netherlands: However, instead of such imaginary Obstructions, the prodigious Business in those Parts is daily carried on with the greatest Regularity and Dispatch.

III. "The River itself was a better Fortification than any of the Walls to the Land Side. What could an Enemy do from that Quarter? Would not a Force, drawn up upon the Wharf, have a greater Advantage of the Assailants, than from a Wall? Whence should the Enemy come to attack it? They could not at low Water march from Southwark, nor sail or row thro' the Bridge, without danger of being sunk by Opposition from thence. And, supposing them on the Shore at low Water, they must have a hard Task to gain the Wharf, if vigorously opposed; and, if they failed, they had the Tide for an Enemy at their Back."

Ans. That a River, which an Enemy is Master of by his Fleet, (which has been many Times the Case of the Thames) cannot be called a good Fortification, must be granted; nor is it the Interest of the Besieged to engage the Besiegers, where there is a visible Disadvantage on their Side: Such a Place would our Querist's Wharf have been, without a Wall, to which an Enemy might commodiously have laid his Ships, and with a superior Force attacked and carried his Wharf and the City in a very short Time, maugre all Opposition: Besides in the Time of Peace as well as War, (before Forts were erected to prevent an armed Force from sailing up the River) this Wharf must have been well supplied with an armed Power, ever ready to oppose all Descents on that weak Side, which was no otherwise to be defended, than by a Power equal to that of the Assailants; as is well known to every Person the least skilled in military Affairs.

Our Querist might have saved himself the Trouble of the Bridge Query, had he but considered that the Wall of London was not only built many Ages before its Bridge, but likewise that the said Wall extended a great Way on the East as well as on the West Side of the same: Therefore, if it had been only a Wharf, as he seems to imagine, it would have become an easy Prey to every Invader; but, by resisting the numerous, desperate and furious Attacks of the Danes, it is evident that the Wall on that Side was then in Being: And, by our Querist's Manner of Reasoning, it is manifest that he never saw any trading City of antient Fortification with a Wall along the River. For my Part I never saw any without; and those I have seen, are Newcastle upon Tyne, Roan in Normandy, Lubeck and Bremen in Lower Saxony, and Dantzick in Polesia Prussia.

That the City Wall did not extend so far South as the present Wharfs do, I imagine will appear by the following Observations: We are told by an ancient Author, that there was a Tower Palatine on the East of the City, and Two Castles on the West; the First whereof was the square White Tower of London, built at the South east Angle of the City Wall; and the Castles on the West were those of Baynard and Mountfitchet.

*Fitzsteph.
Disc. Lon.*

And considering that the modern Wharfs on the West Side of London Bridge run into the River, as far as the Fourth Pier of the said Bridge; which Piers being all erected in the Thames, I think they are sufficient to shew, that the City Wall could not extend so far South as the said Wharfs do at present, nor nearer the River than the North End of the Bridge adjoining to Thames-street: Wherefore these Wharfs must be so many Incroachments made on the River, since the Erection of London Bridge.

And the City Wall along the Thames being destroyed before the Building of the said Tower and Castles; we may, by the Situation of those Fortresses, suppose, that they were erected at the Extremities of the Wall at the River Side, as Places the most exposed to sudden Attacks from the Land at low Water: Which Supposition is very much corroborated by the Tower of London's being erected within the antient Course of the Tide, as was lately discovered in digging Foundations for some Houses in the Mint, contiguous to the North Side of the interior circumferal Wall, where they dug a considerable Depth into the antient Bed of the River; and is fully confirmed by Fitz-Stephen's Authority, who writes, in the Reign of Henry II. "That the Wall is high and great, well-towered on the North Side, with due Distances between the Towers: On the South Side also the City was walled and towered; but the Fish-abounding River Thames, with his Ebbing and Flowing, hath long since subverted them." Wherefore I think it is not to be doubted, that the Wall on the River Side ran along from the Tower of London, in the East, where Thames-street now is situate, to the Castle of Mountfitchet, in the West, where the King's Printing-House, and those contiguous are erected.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Erection of the City Gates, viz. The Postern, on Tower-Hill, Aldgate, Bishopsgate, Moorgate, Cripplegate, Aldersgate, Newgate, Ludgate, Dowgate, and Bridgegate. A Description of the Prisons in Newgate and Ludgate, and of the Construction and Remains of the City Walls, and Towers thereon.

CITY GATES I HAVE already mentioned, that divers Roman Military Ways antiently led to, and centered in, this City; the First whereof was denominated the Watling-street, which intersected the Thames from Southwark, and, entering London at Dourogate or Dowgate, hastened to the Milliarium (London Stone) in Canon-street. After the Conflagration Anno 1666, in digging the Foundation for the present Holbourn Bridge, the Vestigia of the said Watling-street were discovered pointing to Newgate: And as it is the general Opinion that the Ermine-street, from Hornsey and Stroud-green, pointed to Cripplegate; and the Vicinal Way, from Old-Ford, passed thro' Aldgate; I therefore conclude, that the Romans, at the Erection of London Wall, with their usual Sagacity, built the Gates therein, over the several Ways that led to the City: Wherefore Newgate, Cripplegate, and Aldgate, Three of them, must at first have been erected where they are at present situate; and the Fourth being at Dowgate, as aforesaid, I imagine they were the Four original and only Gates at first built for the Use of the City, notwithstanding what has been said by some in Favour of Ludgate and Aldersgate.

The City Gates being more numerous at present than formerly, is owing to the additional Roads, that have from Time to Time been made for the Convenience of Carriage, and the Accommodation of the Citizens, in repairing to their Gardens and the Fields; as shall be shewn more particularly hereafter, when I come to treat of the Gates respectively.

In the Reign of Henry II. the Gates of London were Seven in Number; which I imagine to have been Aldgate, Bishopsgate, Cripplegate, Aldersgate, Newgate, Ludgate, and the Postern near the Tower of London: For my Author says, That "the Wall of the City is great and high, continued with seven Gates:" Whereby it is manifest, that the wooden Gate of London Bridge could not be one, seeing there was then no Wall on that Side; therefore I take Cripplegate to have been one of the Seven as above-mentioned, notwithstanding its being precluded by Stow, in Favour of the Bridgegate; which shews that, through great Inadvertence, he has acted directly contrary to the true Meaning of our Author.

In describing the City Gates, I shall begin at the South-east Angle of the Wall, where the antient Tower of London, commonly called the White Tower, is situate.

The POSTERN-GATE.

POSTERN-GATE. THIS Gate, which stood where the Turnstile is now situate, at the East End of the Postern

row, on Tower-Hill, was erected soon after the Conquest (in a beautiful Manner, with Stones brought from Kent and Normandy) for the Convenience of the neighbouring Inhabitants, both within and without the Wall: But in the Second of Richard I. William Longchamp, Bishop of Ely, and Chancellor of England, having resolved to enlarge and strengthen the Tower of London with an additional Fortification, he caused that Part of the City Wall from the said Tower to this Gate, in Length about Three Hundred Feet, to be pulled down, to make Way for a strong Wall and a spacious Ditch; by which the Postern, being deprived of its Support or Buttreffs on that Side, fell down in the Year 1440. It was replaced by a mean Building of Timber, Lath and Loam, with a narrow Passage; which also decayed, and has been removed quite away many Years ago; there remaining nothing at present on that Spot of Ground to preserve the Name, but a few Posts to guard a narrow Foot-way against the Encroachments of Horses and Carriages. Here, just South, you descend by several Stone Steps to an excellent Spring, called the Postern-Spring, much admired by the Citizens, and well preserved.

ALD GATE.

THIS Gate, which is situate Northwards from the Postern, at the Distance of Fourteen Hundred and Sixty-two Feet, is one of the Four original Gates of the City, through which the Roman Vicinal Way led to the Trajeanus or Ferry at Old-Ford: But when, or on what Occasion, it received its Name, is unknown. A certain Antiquary says, it received its present Appellation from its Antiquity: This seems very improbable, seeing we have not the least Authority for such an Assertion; therefore we may as justly conclude it to have been the last, as well as the first, erected. It may with more Probability be conjectured, that, when the Saxons first possessed themselves of this City, they found this Gate sorely decayed, and more ruinous than any of the rest; therefore they might impose the Epithet of Eald, or Ald, upon it. Be that as it will, the first Mention we find of this Gate, is in King Edgar's Charter to the Knights of the Knighthood-Guild, about Anno 967; wherein it appears, that the Lands by him to them granted were bounded on the West by it. It was afterwards a Demesne of the Queen Confort: For Matilda, Wife to HENRY I. Reg. 8<sup>o</sup>. having founded the Priory of the Holy Trinity without Aldgate, endowed this same Foundation with the Port of Aldgate, and the Soke or Franchise thereunto belonging, with all Customs. This antient Gateway had two Pair of Gates tho' now there is but one Pair, and two Portcloses.

This Gate being very ruinous, was pulled down Anno 1606; when, in digging for a new Foundation, divers Roman Coins were discovered; Two of which Mr. Bond, the Surveyor, caused to be cut in Stone, and placed in the East Front on each Side the Passage. The first Stone of this Edifice was laid Anno 1607, at the Depth of Sixteen Feet, and finished Anno 1609.

On the Top of this Gate Eastward stood a Vane, supported by a golden Sphere. On the Top of the upper Battlements stood two Soldiers facing facing the East, each holding a Bullet in his Hand: Beneath, in a large Square, stood the Statue of King James I. in gilt Armour, with a golden Lion and a chained Unicorn, both couchant at his Feet. On the West Side was placed uppermost a gilt Figure of Fortune on a Globe, with a prosperous Sail spreading over her Head: And below, in a large Square, were placed the King's Arms richly carved, and with this Motto, DIEU ET MON DROIT.

VIVAT REX.

Somewhat lower stood the Emblem of Peace, with a Dove upon one of her Hands, and a gilded Wreath in the other, on the South Side; and the Emblem of Charity on the North Side. Over the Arch of the Gate was engraven,

HUMFREY WELD, Maior.

Here was only one Postern, and that on the North Side, for Foot-Passengers; and a Water-Conduit at the South-east Angle thereof; but the last being disused for many Years, Two Houses were erected in lieu of it, in the Year 1734, and a Postern made on the South Side of the Gate. The Apartments over this Gate are appropriated to the Use of one of the Lord-Mayor's Carvers, and at present are lett to the Charity-School founded by Sir John Cogh.

BISHOPSGATE.

NORTH-WEST from Aldgate, at the Distance of Fourteen Hundred and Forty Feet is situate Bishopsgate; but of what Antiquity, or by whom, or on what Occasion so denominated, is unknown. A modern Author conjectures it to have been at first erected by Erkenwald, Bishop of London, about Ann. 675, grounding this Conjecture on the Representation or Images of two Bishops, with which this Gate was formerly adorned; and from which Decoration, it is probable, the Citizens gave it the Name it still retains. Mr. Styrr imagines, that one of the Images might represent the good Bishop already mentioned, who spent much in charitable Foundations, and ingratiated himself so much with the Londoners, by his Munificence and Favours to the City, that they had him canonized, and paid their Devotions before his Shrine in St. Paul's: And he gives the Honour of the other Image to the Memory of William the Norman, his Successor in the same See, and in doing much Good to the City; to whom he ascribes the Rebuilding, and not the Foundation thereof. However, as this can be supported only by Conjecture, it may be queried, whether London, in Bishop Erkenwald's Time, was of such Consequence, either in its Commerce, or Number of its Inhabitants, as to require an additional Gate to be built for it. And the translating the Relicks of King Edmund the Martyr, by Alwin, Bishop of Helmekam, from St. Edmund's Bury, through Cripplegate, into London, in the Reign of King Ethelred, about sixty Years before the Conquest, to preserve them from the Violence and Rapine of the Danes, who then were destroying the Kingdom of the East-Angles with Fire and Sword, make it very doubtful, whether at that Time there was any such Gate existing on this Spot of Ground: For this would have been the most ready Entrance from St. Edmund's Bury. But, be this as it will, the Observation made in the Year 1707, by a curious Antiquary, (who upon pulling down Part of the City Wall contiguous to the South-east Side of this Gate, discovered that the Foundation of this Wall laid above Four Feet deeper than the Foundation of the Gate) is next to a Demonstration, that Bishopsgate is not to be numbered among the original Gates of this City: And perhaps they may come nearer to the Truth, who ascribe this Work to Bishop William, the Norman, in the Reign of William the Conqueror, when the City not only greatly increased in the Number of Houses and Inhabitants, but likewise in its Trade: Therefore this seems a very proper Time to erect an additional Gate, for the Convenience of Commerce; more especially as the City had then such an excellent Bishop, who seems to have delighted in nothing more than in doing Good to the Citizens.

The first Mention I find of this Gate is in the Year 1210; when William Bland, one of the Sheriffs of this City, is said to have sold his Land and Garden without the same to the Masters or Wardens of London-Bridge.

In the Reign of King Henry III. in Consideration of divers Privileges granted to the Merchants of the Anseatic Company residing in this City, by the Crown and Citizens of London, the said Company not only obliged themselves and their Successors to keep this Gate at all Times in Repair, but likewise to defend the same as often as it should happen to be attacked by an Enemy. But, the said Company not fulfilling their Contract, they were by the Citizens presented to the Itinerant Judges at the Tower of London (about the 10th of Edw. I.) for their Neglect in not keeping the said Gate in repair, as they ought, in Return for the many Privileges granted them. Whereupon Gerard Marbod, the Alderman, and the Directors of the said Company, not only agreed to pay to the Mayor and Citizens the Sum of Two Hundred and Ten Marks for its immediate Repair, but likewise covenanted anew to maintain and defend the same. And it was rebuilt in a beautiful Manner in 1479 by the said Merchants: On which were placed, on the South Side, over the Gateway, a Stone Image of a Bishop with a Mitre on his Head, long Beard, Eyes sunk, and an old mortified Face, supposed to represent St. Erkenwald: Another Figure of a Bishop, somewhat lower than the other, and of a larger Size, mitred, and clothed like a Bishop, a smooth Face, with a Crosier in his left Hand, and his right Hand stretched out to bless, supposed to be the courtly Bishop William, the Norman, stood on the North Front, accompanied by two other Stone Images: That on his right Hand representing a Saxon King, it may be King Alfred, who, after the Destruction of the City by Fire and other Calamities, brought upon it by the Danes, restored and honourably repaired it: And that on his left Hand might be his Son-in-law: Aldred, Earl of Mercia, to whom the King committed the Custody of the City.

In the Year 1551, this Gate being very ruinous, the Company of Haunse Merchants aforelaid prepared Materials for rebuilding it; but, that Corporation being soon after dissolved, the Repairs were stopped, and the Care thereof reverted to the City, who permitted it to continue in a bad Condition till the Year 1731; when it was taken down, and rebuilt at their Expence; tho', through various Accidents, it was not finished till the Year 1735, and then in a Taste much inferior to the antient Fabrick: Yet in one Respect it exceeds the former: for that had but one Postern for the Conveniency of Foot-Passengers, whereas this has Two.

MOORGATE.

Moorgate.
Stow, Sur.

MOORGATE, situate near to the North End of Coleman-Street, was at first erected in the Year 1415, for the easier Access of the Citizens to their Gardens, and the adjacent Fields; at which Time, from its Vicinity to the Moor, it received its Name.

Stryp, Ed.
Stow, Sur.

The present stately Edifice, which is situate Sixteen Hundred and Sixty-four Feet to the Westward of Bishopsgate, was erected in the Year 1674, with two Posterns for the Accommodation of Passengers: And the Apartments over the same are appropriated to the Use of one of the Lord-Mayor's Carvers.

This Gateway is built higher than the common Rules of Proportion, for the Sake of the City Trained Bands marching thro' it with their Pikes erected; a Weapon now laid aside. But others are of Opinion, that this Height was intended for the better Convenience of bringing loaded Carts or Waggons of Hay into the City through this Gate, it having been intended to make the Haymarket in Little Moorfields; tho' this Design did not take Effect.

In the Year 1636, the Moorgate Postern was erected between this Gate and that of Bishopsgate. The Posterns of Basinghall and Aldermanbury were also built An. Dom. 1655, between this and that of Cripplegate, for the Convenience of the Citizens in those Parts. But, since the Printing of the first Edition of this History, all these Posterns have been pulled down, and the Ways laid open, by Order of the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen and Common-Council; these narrow Passages having been found inconvenient, and often dangerous, to Passengers.

CRIPPLEGATE.

Cripplegate.
Stryp, Ed.
Stow, Sur.

WESTWARD from Moorgate, at the Distance of One Thousand and Thirty-two Feet, is situate Cripplegate, so denominated from Cripples, who antiently begged there. This I take to be one of the four original Gates of the City, tho' in the Charter of William the Conqueror, confirming the Foundation of the College of St. Martin-le-Grand, it is named only the Postern of Cripplegate. However, the great Antiquity thereof is easily deduced from the Account of the Translation of the Remains of St. Edmund the King, as mentioned before in Bishopsgate; notwithstanding what has been said to the contrary by an eminent Antiquary, who has declared in Favour of Aldersgate, without considering that he has shewn the great Antiquity of this Gate, by acquainting us, that in the Reign of Ethelred the Second, the Danes committed the most cruel and unheard-of Depredations in the Kingdom of East Anglia: Wherefore Alwin, Bishop of Helmeham, to prevent their offering any Indignity to the sacred (rather gainful) Remains of King Edmund the Martyr, removed his Corpse from Bedrifworth, or St. Edmund's Bury, to London, where it entered at this Gate, Anno Dom. 1010; as I have already observed. And this confirms me in the Opinion, that Cripplegate was then the only Gate in the North Wall of the City, as it stands more convenient in all Respects for one of the original Gates, than Aldersgate: And besides, I have already endeavoured to shew, that this Gate was originally erected over the Roman Military Way, denominated the Ermine-street, which led from London, by Hornsey, Northwards: And in this I have the concurring Testimonies of many of our chief Antiquaries; and also that of the Dean of York, with this small Variation, of its having passed at Moorgate Three Hundred and Forty-four Yards on the Eastward; which I presume is not so proper a Passage for it, seeing there was a very large and deep Morass, which continued so bad until the Mayoralty of Roger Atbelcy, Esq. 3 Hen. VIII. that it cost the City large Sums to heighten it: Yet, tho' the Ground was raised so as to cover the Bridges and Dikes, such was its moorish Nature, says Stow, that in his Time it was not much drier. However, Means were found at last in the Mayoralty of Sir Leonard Halliday, by proper Drains or Sewers, and other Methods, to draw off the Water; so that these Fields, before an unwholesome Place, and of no Use, were improved into pleasant Walks, set with Trees for Shade and Ornament, and compassed with Brick Walls, at the Expence of Five Thousand Pounds, or thereabouts. Neither was there a Gate where Moorgate is situate, before Anno Dom. 1415; nor the least Vestigia to shew that there was a Roman Way in that Place: If ever there had, 'tis not to be doubted, it would have been of that Permanence (especially considering that the sagacious Romans took more than ordinary Pains to strengthen their Ways in such marshy Places, to prevent the sudden Decay of such expensive Works) as to have continued probably till this Time: And, if the Ermine-street had led this Way, I think 'tis not to be doubted, but the Romans would have erected one of the City Gates over it; and not where Cripplegate is situate; which, according to the above-mentioned Relation, cannot owe its Origin either to the Britons or Saxons; for, the former being continually harrassed by the reiterated Invasions and Depredations of the Scots and Picts, it would have been better Policy in them to have reduced, rather than increased the Number of Gates: For, considering they were then in the utmost Misery and Distress, their Thoughts and Actions must have been chiefly employed for their own Defence: Nor could its Origin be owing to the Saxons, seeing that London, during the Heptarchy, was a Place of no such Note, as to merit a new Gate, it being then only the Capital of the petty Kingdom, or rather Viceroyalty of East-Saxony, under the Dominion of the King of Kent, who appointed his Lieutenant or Viceroy over it at Pleasure; Canterbury then being the Mistress of London.

Upon the Reduction of the Heptarchy by Egbert, King of the West-Saxons, London must still have been in a worse Condition than before, being deprived of the Presence of her King and his Court; for the Conqueror continued to reside at Winchester. From this Epocha therefore to that of the Conquest, the Citizens had but few Inducements to put themselves to the Expence of erecting an additional Gate; for 'tis certain they must have been reduced to very mean Circumstances, as well by the Danish Depredations, as by their own intestine Broils. For all which Reasons I think I may safely conclude, that this Gate was built long before the Norman Invasion, and that it must be one of the original Gates of the City.

This Gate was a Prison for Debtors, &c. in the Reign of Edward, and it has been several times rebuilt; once by the Brewers Company in 1244; again in 1491, by a Legacy left for that Purpose by Edmund Shaw, Goldsmith, and Mayor in 1483; and last, it was repaired in 1663, as appears by the following Inscription thereon: "This Gate was repaired and beautified, and the new Postern made, at the Charge of the City of London, in the fifteenth Year of our Sovereign Lord King Charles, in the Mayoralty of Sir John Robinson, Knight and Baronet, Lieutenant of the Tower of London, and Alderman of this Ward, An. Dom. 1663."

The Apartments over this Gate are for the Accommodation of the Water-Bailiff. It has but one Postern for the Convenience of Foot-Passengers, on the East Side.

THIS Gate, which is situate South-west of Cripplegate, at the Distance of twelve hundred and sixty-five Feet, is deemed by Stow to be one of the four original Gates of London, for no other Reason, than that Alder, the first Syllable thereof, implies Antiquity. But, as the Epithets of Alder and Ald, i. e. the elder and the eldest, are brought to prove the Antiquity of this and Aldgate; I think it ought first to have been shewn, that those Appellations were actually imposed to distinguish them from the modern Gates.

The Name of this Gate is by some derived from Aldrich, a Saxon; by others from Seniors, or Old-men, the Builders thereof; and by certain Authors from the great Number of Elder-Trees which grew in that Neighbourhood. Be these Etymologies as they will, I cannot help being of Opinion, that any one of them is more probable, than that pretended to be conferred on Account of its Age: And, as well from what has been said upon the two preceding Gates, as because I have no where found it mentioned before the Conquest, which makes me conclude it was not erected before that Period; I can't assent to the Opinion of Stow, who affirms this to be one of the original Gates of the City.

NUMB. III.

This Gate was enlarged at several times in its Apartments, or Lodging-Rooms; and was considerably improved by the famous Printer John Day, in Queen Elizabeth's Reign: But, becoming old and ruinous, so as to be in danger of falling, it was ordered to be rebuilt at the City Expence in 1616, which was performed in a very elegant Manner; Mr. William Parker, Merchant-Taylor, bequeathing a thousand Pounds towards the same. The Ornaments of this new Gate were King James I. on Horseback, in a large Square over the Arch, and in the Posture as he made his Entrance into London through this Gate at his first coming to take Possession of the English Crown; the Arms of England, Scotland, and Ireland, quartered, above his Head: On the East Side of his Majesty the Prophet Jeremiah, with the Words of the 25th Verse of the 17th Chap. by that Prophet; and on the West Side the Prophet Samuel, with the 1st Verse of the 12th Chap. of 1 Samuel. On the South Side King James I. in his Royal Robes, sitting in a Chair of State. This Gate being much defaced by the Fire of London, Anno 1666, it was repaired at the Expence of the City, as it now is, in the Year 1670.

The Apartments over this Gate are appointed for the Reception of the Common-Crier of the City; for whose Accommodation the Eastern Postern was formerly shut up: But, this being found very inconvenient to the Citizens, who on that Account were obliged frequently to go through the Gateway, to the endangering their Persons by Horses and Carriages, the same has been opened, since the first Edition of this Work.

NEW GATE.

THIS Gate is situate South-west of Aldersgate, at the Distance of one thousand and thirty-seven Feet. According to Stow, it was so denominated from its modern Building, being at first erected about the Reign of Henry V. To support this Assertion, Stow alledges, that the Cathedral of St. Paul being burnt about the Year 1086, in the Reign of William the Conqueror, Mauritius, then Bishop of London, began the Foundation of a new Work, such as Men then judged would never have been performed, it was to them so wonderful for Height, Length, and Breadth; as also in respect it was raised upon Arches, or Vaults, &c. a Kind of Workmanship brought in by the Normans, and never known to the Artificers of this Land before that Time; and that after Mauritius, Richard Beaumore did wonderfully advance the Work of the said Church, purchasing the large Streets and Lanes round about, and began to compass the Ground thus purchased with a strong Wall of Stone, and Gates, for a Church-yard; by which means, the high and large Street, stretching from Aldgate in the East to Ludgate in the West, was in this Place so crossed and stopped up, that the Carriage through the City Westward was forced to pass without the said Church-yard Wall on the North Side, through Pater-noster-row, and then South down Ace-Mary-lane, and again West through Bowyer-row, now, to Ludgate; or else out of Cheap, or Watling-street, to turn South through the Old Change, then West through Carter-lane, again North up Creed-lane, and then West to Ludgate; which made it very dangerous and troublesome both to Man and Horſe. For Remedy whereof a new Gate was made, and ſo called; by which Men and Cattle, with all manner of Carriages, might paſs more directly (as before) from Aldgate thro' Weſt Cheap, by St. Paul's on the North Side, through St. Nicholas's Shambles and Newgate-market to Newgate; and thence to any Part Weſtward over Holborn-bridge; or turning with-out the Gate into Smithfield, and through Iſledon or Iſlington, to any Part of the Kingdom that lies North and by Weſt. But a late Author rejects this Account of its Foundation, and ſays, that it was only then repaired, and that it was antiently denominated Chamberlain-gate: And, if it be true, that after the Fire of London, An. 1666, in digging a Foundation for the preſent Holborn-bridge, the Veſtigia of the Roman Military Way called Watling-street were diſcovered, pointing directly to this Gate; this muſt be allowed to have been one of the four original Gates built over the ſaid Roman Highway in this Place; tho' it is very extraordinary that it is not once mentioned before the Conqueſt. But, be this as it will, we can affirm, upon the Faith of undoubted Records, that this Gate was appropriated to its preſent Uſe, to be a common Gaol for Felons taken in the City of London, or County of Middleſex, ſo long ago as the Year 1218; upon which Account it was kept continually in ſo good Order, that we don't find any conſiderable Repairs thereof 'till the Year 1420, nor afterwards 'till the Year 1630. This Structure was deſtroyed entirely by the general Conflagration in 1666; in whoſe Place the preſent Gate was built in a more convenient and ſubſtantial Manner than the former, with a Poſtern on the North Side for Foot-Paſſengers.
G

" You Priſoners that are within,
" Who for Wickedneſs and Sin,

" After many Mercies ſhewn you, are now appointed to die To-morrow in the Forenoon, give Ear, and underſtand, that To-morrow Morning the greateſt Bell of St. Sepulchre's ſhall toll for you in Form and Manner of a paſſing Bell, as uſed to be tolled for thoſe that are at the Point of Death: To the end that all godly People, hearing that Bell, and knowing it is for your going to your Deaths, may be ſtirred up heartily to pray to God to beſtow his Grace and Mercy upon you, whiſt you live. I beſeech you, for Jeſus Chriſt's ſake, to keep this Night in Watching and Prayer, to the Salvation of your own Souls, while there is yet Time and Place for Mercy; as knowing To-morrow you muſt appear before the Judgment-Seat of your Creator, there to give an Account of all Things done in this Life, and to ſuffer eternal Torments for your Sins committed againſt him, unleſs, upon your hearty and unfeigned Repentance, you find Mercy, thro' the Merits, Death, and Paſſion of your only Mediator and Advocate Jeſus Chriſt, who now ſits at the right Hand of God to make Interceſſion for as many of you as penitently return to him."

And on the Day of Execution, as the Condemned Criminals paſs by St. Sepulchre's Church-wall to Execution, he adds: " All good People, pray heartily unto God for theſe poor Sinners, who are now going to their Death, for whom this great Bell doth toll.

" You that are condemned to die, Repent with lamentable Tears: Aſk Mercy of the Lord, for the Salvation of your own Souls, through the Merits, Death, and Paſſion of Jeſus Chriſt, who now ſits at the right Hand of God to make Interceſſion for as many of you as penitently return unto him.

" Lord have Mercy upon you,

" Chriſt have Mercy upon you,

" Lord have Mercy upon you,

L U D G A T E.

THIS Gate is ſituate ſeven hundred and ninety-ſeven Feet South of Newgate. According to Geffrey of Monmouth, it took its Denomination from King Lud, who, according to that Author, built it about the Year 66 before Chriſt. But, as that Hiſtorian has forfeited all Credit amongſt the Learned, this Particular is alſo very much doubted; doubted; and it is thought to be much better derived from its Situation near the Rivulet Flood, Flood, Fleet, Fleete or Fleet, now Fleet-ditch, and to be corruptly called Ludgate, instead of its original Name Fludgate; for the Saxon Flood, Fleet, Fleete or Fleet, implies a small navigable Watercourse, such as the Fleet Rivulet, has probably been in former Ages: And as this small River or Fleet has given Denomination to Fleet-street, Fleet-lane, the Fleet-prison, Fleet-bridge, and the Fleet-market, I am induced to believe, it also communicated its Name to this Gate, even as Cripplegate and Moorgate received their Appellations, the one from the Cripples sitting near to it, and the other from its Vicinity to the Moor.

Stow. Sur.
London.

The first Mention I find of this Watercourse by the Name of Fleet, is in a Complaint made to a Parliament held at Carlisle, by Henry Earl of Lincoln, Anno 1307, setting forth, "That the Watercourse under FLEET-BRIDGE, formerly frequented by many Ships, was then by Encroachments and other Obstructions rendered unnavigable." This Complaint, through great Inattention, is brought by Stow to prove that this Rivulet was then denominated The River of Wells. But, in his Description of that River, in a Quotation from a Charter granted by William the Conqueror to the Collegiate Church of St. Martin-le-Grand, he has shewn the direct contrary, in these Words: "I do give and grant to the same Church all the Land, and the Moor, without the Postern, which is called Cripplegate, on either Part of the Postern; that is to say, from the North Corner of the Wall, as the River of Wells there near running departeth the same Moor from the Wall, unto the running Water which entereth the Cittie." By which 'tis evident, that the River of Wells had its Course near Cripplegate; and thence to the running Water, as the Charter expresses it, which entereth the City; which running Water, instead of being the Rivulet Fleet, was Wallbrook, that entered the City thro' the Wall near Moorgate; for no other Brook, or running Water whatsoever, ever entered this City, that I can learn.

Stow. An.
Eng.

But, to put this Matter out of Dispute, let us hear what Stow himself, in his Annals, says on this Head, viz. "He (William the Conqueror) gave Privileges to St. Martin's-le-Grand in London; he also gave to that College all the Land, and the Moore, without the Posterne, called Cripplegate of London, on either Part of the Posterne; that is to say, from the North Corner of the Wall, as the River of the Wells there remaining departeth the same Moore from the Wall, to the running Water which entereth the Cittie, to wit, thro' the Wall, and so thro' the Cittie, though under Ground, to the River of Thames, and is called Wallbrook, of coming thro' and from the Wall."

This Gate, which in the Year 1373 was constituted a Free Prison (tho' at present otherwise) for poor Debtors, Freemen of the City, was greatly enlarged by Sir Stephen Forster, some time Mayor of London; who having himself been a Prisoner in this Place, and as a poor Man at this Day, when begging at the Grate, was by a certain rich Widow interrogated, what Sum would discharge him? He reply'd, Twenty Pounds, which she generously disbursed; and taking him into her Service, he, by an indefatigable Application to Business, gained the Affections of his Mistress to such a Degree, that she made him her Husband; and, having greatly enrich'd himself by Commerce, amidst his Affluence, bethought himself of the Place of his Confinement; and having acquainted his Lady with his Design, she readily concurred therein: Whereupon they heartily set about putting the same in Execution, which was to enlarge the Prison; and, in order thereunto, caused divers of their Houses contiguous to the Gate to be pulled down, and on the Sites thereof erected a strong square Stone Building, containing the following Rooms, viz. The Porch, the Paper-house, Watch-hall, Upper and Lower Lumberies, Cellar, Long Ward, and the Chapel; in the last of which, on the Wall, in a Copper Plate, was the following Inscription, viz.

Ludgate
Prison.

Devout Soules, that passe this Way,
For Stephen Forster, late Maior, heartily pray,
And Dame Agnes, his Spouse, to God consecrate, That of Pitie this House made for Londoners in Ludgate.
So that for Lodging and Water Prisoners here
nought pay,
As their Keepers shall all answer at dreadful

Stow. Sur.

There is in the Chapel the following Inscription: "This Chapel was erected and ordained for the Divine Worship and Service of God, by the Right Honourable Sir Stephen Forster, Knight, some time Lord-Mayor of this Honourable City, and by Dame Agnes his Wife, for the Use and godly Exercise of the Prisoners in this Prison of Ludgate, Anno 1454."

Johnf.
Descrip.
Ludg.

The worthy Founder not only settled a Salary upon the Chaplain, or preaching Minister of this Prison, (which, I suppose, says our Author, is in the Hands of our Lord-Mayor and Court of Aldermen, or some by their Appointment) but likewise appointed, that the Use of all the Rooms in his additional Building should be for ever free to all unfortunate Citizens, and that they, providing their own Bedding, should pay nothing at their Release for Lodging or Chamber-Rent, which to many poor Men becomes oftentimes as burthensome as their Debts, and are by the Keeper detained in Prison, as for Debt, only for their Fees, tho' discharged and acquitted of what they were committed for. This worthy Gentleman, certainly, had some prophetic Inspection into the Times that should follow him, and we now (Anno 1659) see come to pass: And therefore it seemed needful to his judicious Eye, to lay a Charm or strong Obligation, and an absolute Forewarning of the Master-keepers that should succeed in that Office, not to take or receive any such Money for Lodging, as is now daily exacted and extorted from poor Men. According to the Constitution of the Prison by the said Sir Stephen Forster, it continued many Years, and is still, tho' falsely, accounted the best and freest Prison in England; and it was certainly so at that Time; for, as Charity built the House, so Charity maintained the Prisoners

Prisoners of this House. But, since Men of corrupt and seared Consciences have got the Dominion, who neither fear God, nor will serve Men in their Generations; what is there to be expected from such Men, who make Gain both their God and Godliness, but the Banishment of Charity and Piety, the Rasing of Records, the defacing, obliterating, and pulling down the poor Man's Pillar of Truth, and the horrid and inhuman Spoiling and Impoverishing of the Miserable and Oppressed? For some of the late Master-keepers (the Introducers of the Oppression of paying for their Lodging) most basely and injuriously caused to be taken down the aforesaid Inscription of Free Water and Lodging, and set up another over the outward Street-Door with only these Words engraven: This is the PRISON of LUDGATE.

The Water, I find, was not altogether Sir Stephen's Gift: For I have seen an Account that Sir Robert Knowles gave Maintenance for the Supply of the Prisons of Ludgate and Newgate with Water for ever, leaving it to the Care of the Grocers Company.

The present Gate was erected An. Dom. 1586. with the Statue of Queen Elizabeth on the West Front, and those of King Lud, and his two Sons Androgeus and Theomantius or Temantius, on the East.

The domestick Government of this Prison having something very singular and remarkable in it, I presume an Account thereof will not be unacceptable to the Reader. I shall therefore insert a compendious Abstract thereof from an Account published some time ago by one who had been a long time Prisoner therein.

For the quiet and good Government of this Prison, and the Punishment of Crimes and Misdemeanors therein committed, the Master-keeper and Prisoners from among themselves chuse the following Officers, viz. A Reader of Divine Service; an Upper Steward, called the Master of the Box; an Under Steward; seven Assistants, who by Turns officiate daily; a Running Assistant; two Church-wardens; a Scavenger; a Chamberlain; a Running Post; and the Criers or Beggars at the Grates, who are generally six in Number.

The Reader is chosen by the Master-keeper, Stewards, and Assistants, and not at a General Election, as the other Officers are. The Reader, besides reading Prayers, was originally obliged to ring the Bell twice a Day for Prayers, and also for the Space of a Quarter of an Hour before Nine at Night, as a Warning for all Strangers to depart the Prison; but, for the Dignity of his Office, he is now exempt from those Services, and others in his stead are appointed to perform them. This Officer's Salary is two Shillings and eight Pence per Month, and a Penny of every Prisoner at his Entrance, if his Garnish amount to sixteen Pence; and a Dish of Meat out of the Lord-Mayor's Basket.

The Upper Steward, or Master of the Box, is by all the Prisoners held in equal Esteem with the Keeper of the Prison; and to his Charge is committed the Keeping of all the several Orders of the House, with the Accounts of Cash received upon Legacies; the Distribution of all the Provisions sent in by the Lord-Mayor, and others; the Cash received by Garnish and begging at the Grates, which he weekly lays out in Bread, Candles, and other Necessaries. He likewise keeps a List of all the Prisoners, as well those that are upon the Charity, as those that are not; to each of whom, by the Aid of the Assistant for the Day, he distributes their several Proportions of Bread and other Provisions. He receives the Gifts of the Butchers, Fishmongers, Poulterers, and other Market People, sent in by the Clerk of the Market by the Running Post, for which he gives a Receipt, and afterwards, in the Presence of the Assistant for the Day, exposes all to Sale to the Charity Men, by way of Market; and the Money arising thereby is deposited in the Common Stock, or Bank.

This Officer, with the Under Steward, Assistant, and Church-wardens, are elected monthly by the Suffrages of the Prisoners; but all the other Officers, except the Chamberlain, are appointed by the Master-keeper, Stewards, and Assistants. The Design of these frequent Elections, is, to prevent Frauds and Abuses in the respective Officers; but, when they are known to be Men of Probity, they are generally re-elected, and often continue in such Posts many Months. The Monday after every Election, the Accounts are audited and passed, and the Balance divided; and, if it amount to three Shillings and four Pence per Man, the Keeper of the Prison arbitrarily extorts from each Prisoner two Shillings and four Pence, without the least Colour of Right: But, if the Dividend rises not so high, then he only takes one Shilling and two Pence; the other Moiety being charged to the Prisoner's Account, to be paid at the Time of his Discharge; which new and detestable Impositions are apparently contrary to the Intention of the Founder.

Another great Grievance the distressed and miserable Prisoners are subject to, is, their being obliged to pay the Turnkey twelve Shillings per Month, for no other Service than that of opening the Door to let in Gifts and Charities sent to the Prison, which often amount to little more than what he receives.

The Under Steward is an Assistant, or Deputy, to the Upper Steward, in whose Absence or Indisposition he performs the several Functions of his Office.

The Assistants, being seven in Number, are chosen monthly with the Stewards; one whereof officiating daily, his Business is to attend in the Hall, to enter all Charities, and keep an Account of the Money taken out of the Boxes, which are opened at Five o'Clock in the Afternoon, and at Nine at Night; which Money he pays to the Upper Steward, at the passing of whose Accounts the Assistants are Auditors.

Every Person put in Nomination for the Office of an Assistant, refusing to serve, forfeits one Shilling to the Use of the Publick, or, in lieu thereof, to be put in Fetters for three Days. The officiating Assistant is invested with a magisterial Power, whereby he can commit a Prisoner to the Stocks or Shackles, for the Abuse of any Person. This Officer is to see the Cellar cleared every Night, by Ten o'Clock, of all the Prisoners; for which he receives six Pence out of the Charity Money;

Money; two Pence whereof to his own Use, two Pence to the Upper Steward, and two Pence to the Running Assistant. This Office was anciently in such Esteem, that the Assistant, at his entering upon it, used nightly at Eight o'Clock to be ushered into the Hall, by an Illumination of forty or fifty great Candles, carried by so many Prisoners.

Johns.
Descrip.
Ludg.

The Running Assistant's Business is, to attend upon the Criers at the Gates, to change Money; and open the Boxes; to put up Candles in their respective Places, attend upon the Stewards and Assistants, look after the Clock, ring the Bell for Prayers; and to be Crier at the Sale of Provisions. His Salary is four Shillings and eight Pence per Month, and an eighth Part of the Garnish-Money.

Ibid.

The Church-wardens are chosen from among the youngest Prisoners. The Upper Warden's Office is, to call to Prayers on Sundays, after the Bell has done ringing; and the Under Warden's is, to call the Prisoners to Prayers all other Days. They are likewise to take Cognizance of all Persons who are upon the Charity Foundation; who in default of Attendance are fined one Penny each. The Under Warden's Salary for this Service is four Pence per Month; and the Penalty for not serving, when duly elected, is four Pence.

Ibid.

The Scavenger's Office is, to keep clean the Prison, and to fetter and put in the Stocks all Offenders; for which he is intitled to receive from each Criminal one Penny, together with a Salary of five Shillings and eight Pence per Month, and two Pence out of every sixteen Pence of the Garnish-Money.

Ibid.

The Chamberlain is chosen by the Keeper of the Prison, whose Office it is to take Care of all the Bedding and Linen belonging to the Keeper; to place Men at their coming in, and to furnish them with Sheets, and to give Notice to Strangers to depart the Prison by Ten o'Clock at Night. This Officer formerly was obliged to make the Charity-Men's Beds, for which he received two Pence per Month.

Ibid.

The Running Post's Business is, to fetch in a Basket the broken Meat from the Lord-Mayor, Clerk of the Market, private Families, and Charities given in the Streets, which are often so inconsiderable as not to admit of a Dividend; wherefore it is disposed of by Sale or publick Market, as aforesaid. The Salary annexed to this office, is four Shillings per Month; one Penny per Month out of each Man's Dividend, and one Penny out of every sixteen Pence of Garnish-Money.

Ibid.

The Criers are six in Number; two whereof daily beg at the Grates; he at the Grate within is allowed one Fourth of what is given, and he at that on Black-Friars Side one Moiety of what is given there.

DOWGATE.

FROM Ludgate to Fleet-ditch on the West, is four hundred and fifty-four Feet, and thence to the River Thames seven hundred and eighty Feet; and from Fleet-ditch in the West, along the River Side, to the White Tower (within the Tower of London) on the East, five thousand nine hundred and fifty Feet; so that the whole Circumference of the City within the Wall is three Miles, one hundred and sixty-five Feet.

This was not only a Port, or Harbour, or principal Key for Ships and Vessels of all Sorts, for the Loading and Landing of Goods and Provisions, as appears by an Inquisition made in the 28 Hen. III. wherein was found, That as well Corn as Fish, and all other Things coming from the Port of Downgate, were to be ordered after the Customs of the QUEENHITH; for the King's Use: And also, That the Corn arriving between the Gate of the Guild-hall of the Merchants of Cullen, (i. e. now the Steel-yard) which is East from Downgate, and the House then pertaining to the Archbishop of Canterbury, West from Baynard's Castle, was to be measured by the Measure, and Measurer of the Queen's Soke or Queenhith; and by the following Record: That, in the 19 Edw. III. Customs were then to be paid for Ships and other Vessels resting at Downgate, as if they rode at Queenhith; and as they do now at Billingsgate: But Mr. Maitland thinks it is very clear to have been originally one of the four Gates, or the South Gate of this City, where anciently was the Trajettus, or Ferry of the Watling-street, one

H

Downgate.
Stryp. Ed.
Stow. Sur.

of the four great Roman Military Ways; and that Stow, by naming it Dowgate, from the great Descent from St. John Baptist's Church on Dowgate-bill, to the River Thames, is mistaken: Because, says he, considering what I have said upon the Discovery of a Tessellated Roman Pavement in this Neighbourhood (in the 3d Chapter) I presume it will appear that there was little or no Descent at that Place, when this Gate was at first erected; therefore it could not receive its Name from that: Wherefore I join in Opinion with a very judicious Antiquary, that it was anciently by the Britons, under the Roman Government, called Dour-gate, that is, the Water-gate: Which, according to the Reasons there assigned, answers exactly to this Place: And, if so, this was the only original Water-gate.

Lel. Col.

See before
Chap. III.

But, lest it should be objected, that one Gate on this Side was not sufficient to give Passage to the several Sorts of Merchandize exported and imported at that Time, I shall only observe, that, before the Destruction of the Wall on that Side, one Gate was sufficient for that Purpose, had the Commerce of London been double to what it was, seeing much more Merchandize is carried thro' the Western Gate-way of the Custom-house in one Year at present, than I imagine all the Trade of London in those Days could amount to in twenty.

And for carrying on the prodigious Commerce of this City at present (which is at least treble to what any other City upon Earth ever justly could pretend to, and infinitely beyond the Trade at that Time) there are only six and twenty Lanes and Passages to and from the Thames, on both Sides the River, for the carrying of Merchandize to and from all Ships, Barges, &c. exclusive of Colliers; and those Cart-ways are still capable of giving Passage to double the Quantity of Goods the City trades in, to and from all Parts: Therefore I conclude, that one Gate on this Side was originally sufficient to have answered all the Ends of the Citizens, not only in respect to Trade (which probably was not more extensive than that of France and the Low Countries) but also Security against an Enemy; all Engineers having ever had a strict Regard, at the Fortifying of any Place, not to make more Gates than were immediately necessary.

The other Gates on this Side, mentioned by Stow, denominated Wolf-gate, Eb-gate, Puddle-dock-gate, Oyster-gate, Butolphi-gate, Billings-gate, and the Water-gates by the Tower and Custom-house, instead of having ever been real Gates in the City Wall, were only so many Wharfs, or Places for the Landing of Merchandize, and were so denominated from their Owners, from vicinal Places, and from Goods usually landed there, and which, by their Number and Names, I imagine, were erected long after the Dissolution of the Wall, and since the Conquest. And, as the great Wharf, or original Landing-Place, retained the Appellation of Dour or Dow-gate (from the Gate which anciently stood there) I think it probable that the Erectors of these Wharfs, or Quays, in Emulation of that, dignified theirs with the Epithet of Gates; as we at present find all Houses of Correction denominated Bridewell, from the Situation of the Original in this City, near St. Bridget's or St. Bride's Well, in Fleet-street.

BRIDGE GATE.

THIS Gate, which is denominated from its Situation on London Bridge, Stow, without the least Probability, says, is the seventh and last principal Gate mentioned by Fitz-Stephens; whereas in Fact that Author has not mentioned any one of the City Gates; having only said, "The City Wall is great and high, continued with seven double Gates, with Towers on the North at proper Distances; and that on the South was inclosed with a Wall and Towers, which were then intirely destroyed, by becoming a Prey to Time and Tide." By which it is evident that Fitz-Stephens could have no Regard to a Gate on that Side, seeing there was no Wall remaining; whereas, on the contrary, it is manifest, that his seven Gates were in the continued Wall on the Land-Side. This Gate was very much damaged by Fire, in the Year 1726; soon after which it was repaired, and finished Anno 1728, as it now appears.

The Reason for erecting London Bridge where it is at present situate, might proceed from the River's being shallower there than at any other Place in the Neighbourhood, and not from the Gate's being originally built in that Place.

Henry the Third, on the Third of April, Anno 1266, granted to the Keepers of the above-mentioned Gates three Pence per Day each; for, having the Toll thereof (as I suppose) in his own Hands, they were his Collectors.

Having gone through the Account of the Wall and Gates of this great and ancient City, I think it will not be improper to subjoin a curious Account of the Construction thereof, as published some Years ago by a learned and judicious Antiquary, Dr. Woodward, Professor of Physic in Gresham College, occasioned by digging near the Wall at Bishopsgate, for Foundations of certain new Houses to be erected there in the Year 1707, upon which Occasion the Wall at that Place was broke up, and Part of the Materials applied to the Building of the said Houses; and then to add some Observations thereon.

"The City Wall (says the Doctor) being upon this Occasion, to make Way for these new Buildings, broke up and beat to Pieces from Bishopsgate onwards South-east, as far as they extend, an Opportunity was given of observing the Fabrick and Composition of it. From the Foundation, which lay eight Feet below the present Surface, quite up to the Top, which was in all near ten Feet, it was compiled alternately of Layers of broad flat Bricks and of Rag-stone. The Bricks lay in double Ranges; and each Brick being but one Inch and three Tenths in Thickness, the whole Layer, with the Mortar interposed, exceeded not three Inches. The Layers of Stone were not quite two Feet thick, of our Measure. It is probable they were intended for two of the Roman, their Rule being somewhat shorter than ours. To this Height the Workmanship was after the Roman Manner; and these were the Remains of the ancient Wall, supposed to be built by Constantine the Great. In this it was very observable, that the Mortar was (as usually in "the Roman Work) so very firm and hard, that

"the Stone itself as easily broke, and gave way,
"as that. It was thus far, from the Foundation
"upwards, nine Feet in Thickness." And a little lower he adds, "The broad thin Bricks
"above-mentioned were all of Roman Make; and "of the very Sort, we learn from Pliny, that were "in common Use among the Romans, being in "Length a Foot and a half of their Standard,
"and in Breadth a Foot. Measuring some of "these very carefully, I found them seventeen
"Inches and four Tenths in Length, eleven "Inches and six Tenths in Breadth, and one "Inch and three Tenths in Thickness, of our "Measure.

Repaired and raised higher.

"The old Wall having been demolished, as "hath been intimated above, was afterwards re"paired again, and carried up of the same Thick"ness, to eight or nine Feet in Height; or, if "higher, there was no more of that Work now
"standing. All this was apparently additional,
"and of a Make later than the other Part un"derneath it. That was levelled at Top, and "brought to a Plane, in order to the raising this "new Work upon it. The Outside, or that to"wards the Suburbs, was faced with a coarse
"Sort of Stone, not compiled with any great "Care or Skill, nor disposed into a regular Me"thod; but on the Inside there appeared more "Marks of Workmanship and Art. At the "Bottom were five Layers, composed of Squares
"of Flint and of Free-stone; tho' they were not "so in all Parts, yet in some the Squares were "near equal, about five Inches Diameter, and "ranged in a Quincunx Order. Over these were
"a Layer of Brick, then of hewn Free-stone, and
"so alternately, Brick and Stone, to the Top.
"There were of the Bricks in all six Layers,
"each consisting only of a double Course, except "that which lay above all, in which there were "four Courses of Bricks, where the Layer was "intire. These Bricks were of the Shape of those
"now in Use, but much larger, being near eleven "Inches in Length, five in Breadth, and some"what above two and a half in Thickness. Of "the Stone there were five Layers, and each of "equal Thickness in all Parts for its whole "Length. The highest and lowest of these "were somewhat above a Foot in Thickness; the "three middle Layers each five Inches; so "that the whole Height of this additional Work
"was near nine Feet. As to the interior Parts,
"or the main Bulk of the Wall, it was made up
"of Pieces of Rubble-stone, with a few Bricks of "the same Sort of those used in the inner Facing
"of the Wall, laid uncertainly, as they happened
"to come to hand, and not in any stated Me"thod. There was not one of the broad thin
"Roman Bricks, mentioned above, in all this "Part, nor was the Mortar here near so hard as
"in that below; but from the Description may "be easily collected, that this Part, when first "made and intire, with so various and orderly
"a Disposition of the Materials, Flint, Stone
"and Bricks, could not but carry a very elegant
"and handsome Aspect. Whether this was done
"at the Expence of the Barons, in the Reign of "King John; or of the Citizens, in the Reign
"of King Henry the Third; or of King Richard

"the Second; or at what other Time, I cannot "take upon me to ascertain from Accounts so "defective and obscure, as are those which at this
"Day remain of this Affair.

"Upon the additional Work, now described,
"was raised a Wall wholly of Brick; only that,
"it terminating in Battlements, these are topped "with Copings of Stone. It was two Feet four "Inches in Thickness, and somewhat above eight "Feet in Height. The Bricks of this are of the "same Module and Size with those of the Part "underneath. How long they had been in Use,
"is uncertain."

This Wall for Strength and Beauty was embellished with stately Towers, which on the South, together with the Wall, are long since become a Prey to the Tide and Weather; but the Remains of those on the Land Side, being fifteen in Number, are still to be seen; one whereof, about the Middle of Houndsditch, discovered by the above-named Antiquary, is of Roman Construction, composed of Stone, with Layers of Bricks, interlaid after the Roman Manner, and, for ought appears, is the most considerable Piece of Roman Architecture remaining in Great Britain.

This Tower, which is still six-and-twenty Feet in Height, is situate almost opposite the End of Gravel-lane, on the West of Houndsditch, and is still three Stories high, but sorely decayed, and rent from Top to Bottom in divers Parts. It is at present inhabited by a Baker, and the Door thereof within the Wall is in Schoemaker-row, fronting the Passage into Duke's Place. In searching for this Tower, about eighty Paces South-east towards Aldgate, I discovered another of the same Manner of Construction, of the Height of one-and-twenty Feet, perfectly sound, and much more beautiful than the former; the Bricks being as sound as if but newly laid, while the Stones in most Parts are become a Sacrifice to devouring Time. These Towers, as already observed, were built, together with the City Wall, by Theodosius
the Elder, in the Reign of Valentinian; wherefore they must in the present Year 1753, have stood about thirteen hundred and eighty-five Years.

On the South of Aldgate, at the lower End of a Street denominated the Vineyard, is the Basis of another Roman Tower, about eight Feet high, which supports a new Building of three Stories in Height, in the Wall whereof is fixed a large Stone, with the following Inscription:

"Glory be to God on high, who was graciously
"pleased in a wonderful Manner to preserve
"the Lives of all the People in this House,
"twelve in Number, when the ould Wall
"of this Bulwork fell down three Stories
"high, and so broad, as two Cartes might
"enter a-breast, and yet without any Harm
"to their Persones. The Lord sanctify this "his great Providence unto them. Amen
"and Amen.

"It was Tuesday, the 23th Septem"ber, 1651."

By the Remains of Roman Work in the City Wall, I conjecture the same at its Erection to have been about twenty-two Feet in Height, and that of the Towers about forty Feet: And the Ancients held it so necessary to preserve them from London burnt by the Britons. Erected into a Bishop's See. Burnt thrice by Accident, between the Years 764 and 801. A Parliament held here. Plundered by the Danes. Taken and repaired by King Alfred: And given by him to the Earl of Mercia, his Son-in-law. Bravery of the London Militia against the Danes and the Scots. Allowed a Mint. Surrenders to Swegen, King of Denmark. Edmund Ironside crowned. A Canal for Ships round the West End of the Bridge cut by King Canute. Canute or Chut proclaimed sole Monarch, and resides at London. The Opulency of London. Sends Members to Parliament. Takes part with Earl Godwin.

London
burnt by the Britons.

THE first Mention I find of London in History (as already observed) is upon a very melancholy Occasion; for the enraged Britons, having vented their utmost Fury and Barbarity, in the Destruction of Camalodonum and its Roman Inhabitants with Fire and Sword, hastened hither to perpetrate the like Cruelties upon this City: For, though it was then in the Possession of Suetonius Paulinus, the Roman General, he no sooner received Advice of the March of the Enemy with a prodigious Army to attack him, than he resolved to desert it, as not tenable by his little Army, which did not exceed 10000 regular Troops, in so critical and dangerous a Juncture; and having moreover considered that Petilius Cerialis through his Indiscretion had lost the ninth Legion, he augmented his Army with all the Citizens that were fit for Service; and marched out of the City, without regarding the pitiful Cries and Tears of the rest of the helpless Citizens, who soon became a Prey to the merciless Britons, were put all to the Sword, without Distinction of Age or Sex, and their City burnt.

This barbarous and unparalleled Cruelty went not long unpunished; for Suetonius, with his gallant little Army, engaged that of the Britons, consisting of two hundred and thirty thousand, whom he intirely routed, killing eighty thousand on the Spot. Here the brave Londoners had the first Opportunity of shewing their Valour, by signalizing themselves in revenging the detestable Cruelties committed upon their unfortunate Fellow-Citizens; some of whom, according to Tacitus, were tempted by the Sweetness of the Place to stay behind.

At the Arrival of Theodosius the Elder in Britain, this City, according to a celebrated Roman Historian, was denominated Lundinium, and at that Time said to be an ancient Town, which by Posterity was called Augusta; and a little after he says, it was called Augusta, but formerly Lundinium: Whence I infer, that the Epithet of Augusta was conferred upon this City, during the Government of Theodosius in these Parts. However, it seems that this Name proved of no long Continuance; for, at the Arrival of the Saxons in Britain, they found it under the Appellation of Caer Llundain, which they soon after changed; for in the eighth Year after their landing, Hengist having defeated the Britons at Creceanford (Crayford in Kent) they fled in great Precipitation to this City, then denominated Lunden-Byrig.

Nor indeed did it arrive at the Grandeur of either Canterbury or York till upwards of three hundred Years after, as I shall in their proper Places endeavour to make appear.

And though the Conversion of Eadbald, King of Kent, their Sovereign, obtained that good Bishop's Recall to his See, the Londoners, who chose rather to live under their Pagan Superstition, would not admit him.

The Civil History of the Heptarchy is so very defective, that the City of London is not mentioned from Anno 616, to that of 764, in which Year it became a great Sufferer by Fire; and some Time after, according to the same Author, it was destroyed by a dreadful Conflagration, in which many of its Inhabitants perished: Nor was it well recovered of this, before it was again visited with another terrible Fire, which consumed a great Number of its Buildings.

However, it was not long before London began to feel the direful Effects of Danish Cruelty; for the Danes, being arrived with a great Number of Ships, landed in the County of Kent, where they destroyed both Canterbury and Recheber; and thence hastening to London, they not only sacked it,

Army in a mighty Fleet of three hundred and fifty Ships up the River Thames, and landing near London, they soon reduced and plundered it; and looking upon it to be a convenient Fortrefs, whence they could at Pleasure invade the Kingdom of West-Saxony, they made it a Place of Arms, and left a considerable Garrison therein: By which means they were able to give great Uneasiness to the neighbouring States, whom they continually harassed and robbed, notwithstanding their most solemn Oaths and Treaties with King Alfred. Wherefore that Monarch, being fully resolved to restrain such perfidious Neighbours, who never ceased raising Commotions in divers Parts, repaired his old Fortresses, and likewise erected new ones in Places convenient, to prevent sudden Incurfions; and with a Resolution worthy of so magnanimous a Prince, to compleat his Design, he suddenly laid Siege to London, and carried on the Attack with such Bravery, that he presently obliged the Danes to capitulate.

Alfred no sooner became Master of London, than he immediately set about repairing its Wall and Towers; and having embellished the City with additional Buildings, committed the Government thereof to Ethelred, (who had married his Daughter Ethelfleda) with the Title of Earl of Mercia. This Prince seems to have been more than an ordinary Governor, having had some particular Power delegated to him, the Nature whereof is not clearly explained by the Historians, who mention it. However, he seems to have held this City in Fee; since, after his Death, Ethelfleda, his Relict, delivered it up, with the City of Oxford, to her Brother. For, if Ethelred had been only an ordinary Governor, Ethelfleda would have had no Occasion to have made a Resignation of these Cities, seeing they would have reverted to her Brother Edward, as rightful Successor to his Father Alfred.

Chron.

The Danes, not yet giving up their lucrative Hopes of subduing England, landed in a considerable Body, under their General Hæsten, on Essex-Shoar, below Tilbury, within the Mouth of the Thames; and erected a strong Castle at Beamsfleet (now Southbeamsfleet, near the Isle of Canvey); from which they made frequent Excursions, committing great Ravages in the neighbouring Country. This roused the vigilant Alfred, who dispatched against them his Son-in-law Ethelred, Governor of London, with such Expedition, and an Army joined by a select Body of Citizens, that they came up with the Enemy before they had been able to make any considerable Advance; engaged and routed them; and, laying Siege to their Castle, took it, and a very rich Booty therein, together with the Wife and Sons of Hæsten; who were brought Prisoners to London. In this Battle the Citizens signalized themselves with the greatest Intrepidity.

The Bravery of the Londoners.

Chron.
Sax.
A.D. 895,
896.

The Winter approaching, another Body of Danes, who for some Time had lain at the Isle of Merisige, (now Mearfy, a small Island at the Mouth of the River Coln, or Colebeffer River) to wait the Issue of their Comrades Expedition, were obliged to retire with their Fleet to a Place of more Safety; and therefore resolved to sail up the River Thames: And having penetrated as high up as the River Ligan, they, for better Security, towed their Ships up to the Town of Ware. This River in the Saxon Annals goes by divers Appellations, viz. Ligan, Lygan, Luyt, Ley, Lays and Lewis; at present the Lea, or Hackney River.

Near this River, at the Distance of twenty Miles from London, (supposed to have been at Hertford) the Danes erected a strong Fortification or Camp, which gave the Londoners great Uneasiness, being justly apprehensive of the Danger to which they were exposed, by having such a numerous Band of Robbers in their Neighbourhood. The Citizens (in order to dislodge those strolling Thieves from their new Quarters) in Conjunction with the neighbouring Auxiliaries, marched out against them early in the Spring, with the brave King Alfred at their Head; but, in attacking their Works, they were repulsed with considerable Loss, leaving four of their chief Officers dead on the Spot. Wherefore Alfred, apprehending that he should run too great a Risque by renewing the Attack, disposed of his Army in the most convenient Posts in that Neighbourhood, to cut off all Supplies of Provisions from the Enemy by Land; and at the same Time diverted the Current of the River Lea into three Channels, to reduce the Depth of the Water, and so to prevent the Return of the Enemy's Fleet to the River Thames.

Chron.
Sax.

The Danes finding themselves thus cooped up, and their Ships rendered useless, broke up their Camp, and marched off without their Ships. Whereupon the Citizens demolished their Works, and having restored the Navigation of the River Lea, brought divers of the best of the Enemy's Ships to London, and destroyed the rest. Nails, Craers, and Pieces of Planks, &c. Part of the Remains of these Vessels, were a few Years ago discovered at the erecting of the present Stanslead Bridge.

In the Year 938, King Atbelstan with a potent Army marched against Constantine, King of Scotland, who had invaded Northumberland; the Armies met at Brunanburgh, where a terrible Battle was fought, which lasted from Morning 'till Night, and ended in the Defeat of the Scots, with the Loss of their King. This great Victory was chiefly obtained by the Bravery of the Londoners, who were the best Troops in the Army, and behaved in a most surprizing and undaunted Manner, under the Command of their brave General Turketul.

The City, about this Time, being recovered from its late Sufferings by the Danes, seems to have been in as flourishing a Condition as any other Place in the Kingdom; for, by a Law of Atbelstan's, which appointed a certain Number of Coiners to each of the principal Cities of England, no less than eight were allowed to London, which was considerably more than was allotted to any other Town, Canterbury excepted; for which the same Number was appointed.

In the Year 945, King Edmund held a Witena-gemote, or Parliament, in this City; wherein divers Laws were passed, chiefly relating to ecclesiastical Affairs.

Chron. Sax. In 961 a very malignant Fever raged in London, which carried off a great Number of People. And in the same Year St. Paul's Cathedral was consumed by Fire. Land then sold at one Shilling per Acre.

Burnt by Accident. In the fourth Year of King Ethelred, this City was almost wholly destroyed by Fire.

Sim. Dun. At this Time there were but few Houses within the City Walls, and those irregularly dispersed. In the Heart thereof were next to none, (as appeared by the City Repertory of that Time, called Doomsday Book) the chief and greatest Part of the Buildings being then without Ludgate: So that Canterbury, York, and other Cities of the Kingdom, in respect to Houses, excelled London, as is attested by my Author. However, by what has been said above, relating to the Number of Coiners, this City appears to have been then as populous, if not more so, than any other in England.

Chron. Sax. A.D. 992. The Danes returning again in 992, King Ethelred fitted out a numerous Fleet at London, to prevent their Landing, and gave the Command thereof to the Ealdermen Ealfrick and Thorod, and the Bishops Elstane and Escewig; who being almost come up with the Enemy's Fleet, the treacherous Ealfrick, by a private Signal, cautioned them to provide for their Security, and, in the Night preceding the intended Engagement, deserted with his Ship, and perfidiously joined the Enemy, whereby they had an Opportunity of escaping. The Desertion of Ealfrick was no sooner known, than a Signal was given to pursue; and coming up with the Rear of the Danes, one of their Ships was taken: And after the Return of the Fleet, a Squadron of Londoners fell in with the Enemy's East-Anglian Squadron, which they bravely attacked; and after a desperate Engagement, wherein some thousands were killed, took the Ship of the infamous Traitor Ealfrick, himself narrowly escaping.

Ibid. A.D. 994. Two Years after, Anlaf and Swegen, Kings of Norway and Denmark, arrived before the City with a Fleet of ninety-four Ships, and attacked the same, with an Intent to sack and burn it. But the Citizens in its Defence behaving with the greatest Intrepidity, the Enemy, after many sharp and desperate Assaults, meeting with no Success, raised the Siege: But, to revenge themselves for the great Loss they had sustained, they ravaged the Counties of Middlesex, Essex, Kent, Suffex, and Hampshire, committing the most unheard-of Cruelties, and destroying all with Fire and Sword, without Distinction of Age or Sex.

Chron. Preci. A.D. 1000. In the Year 1000 an Ox was sold at two Shillings and six Pence; a Cow at two Shillings; a Sheep at one Shilling; a Swine at eight Pence.

Chron. Sax. A.D. 1009. In the Year 1009, the Danes having made an Excursion through the Clitern or Chiltern (the woody Parts of Buckingham and Oxford-shires) to Oxford, they sacked and burnt that City, and on their Return committed the most horrid Outrages on both Sides the River Thames: But, hearing that an Army from London was upon their March against them, those on the North Side the River crossed over at Stanes; where joining their Friends, they took their Rout together through Surrey, to their Ships in Kent; and, having repaired them, they wintered in the Thames, and frequently assaulted London; but were as often bravely repulsed by the Citizens, with considerable Loss.

Two Years after, this noble Kingdom sunk into the greatest Abyss of Misery; for, the Danes having reduced all the Countries round London, King Ethelred had no Place of Consequence left him, but this City and that of Canterbury; in the first of which he kept himself close shut up, as in a Prison. Under these deplorable Circumstances he had Recourse to an Expedient of calling a national Council to assemble in London, to deliberate upon the Exigency of his Affairs; wherein, according to the Saxon Annals, it was resolved to purchase the Departure of the Danes, with the Sum of eight thousand Pounds; but, according to other Historians, forty-eight thousand; which is much more probable, seeing that the Danes, when less successful, had thirty-six thousand Pounds paid them at one Time.

Though this Purchase cost the Nation dear (as Money went at that Time) yet the People imagined themselves really happy, in having got rid of their cruel and merciless Enemies; as they expected and hoped soon to repair by Peace the Damage sustained by War. But this dear-bought Peace proved of no long Duration; for Ethelred by a perfidious Act of Cruelty brought upon himself and the Nation the Resentment of Swegen, King of Denmark; a Resentment, that was but too well justified: For that barbarous Prince caused all the Danes in England to be massacred, without Distinction of Age or Sex; among whom was the Princess Guthild, Swegen's Sister, with her Husband Paligus, who, soon after their Arrival in this Kingdom, had embraced the Christian Faith, and became Guarantees or Hostages for the Observation of the Peace lately concluded with their Nation.

So that next Year Swegen entered the River Humber with a mighty Fleet; and breathing Revenge and Destruction to all, in Revenge of this most unparalleled Piece of Barbarity, the People, in order to appease his Wrath, judged it the safest Way to submit to his Mercy. Accordingly, as he advanced, the Countries adjacent to the Place of his Landing surrendered to him without Opposition; and, bending his March Southwards, Oxford and Winchester followed their Example. He then marched directly to London; but attempting to pass the River Thames too precipitately, without enquiring either for a Ford or Bridge, he lost a great Number of Men: However, this not discouraging him, he continued his March Eastward, and arriving before London, summoned it to surrender. But the Presence of their King so animated the Citizens, that, resolving to defend him and their City, they sallied boldly out upon their Enemy, and obliged Swegen to raise the Siege; who hereupon marched Westwards, and all Places submitted, as he advanced: So that, having reduced the whole Kingdom, except London, he was determined once more to attempt the Conquest of that City. Whilst he was preparing for that Undertaking, he received Advice of Ethelred's withdrawing himself from thence:

And the Citizens, thus deserted by their King, judged it the safest Way to submit to the Danes; which they accordingly did, and Sweget was thereupon proclaimed King of England in this City.

Sweget's Reign over England was not long; for he died in the very Spring after his Proclamation, Upon whose Demise the English recalled Ethelred from Normandy, whither he had retired: And he arriving, reassumed the Government; and died in this City soon after his Restoration, and was buried in St. Paul's Cathedral. The Londoners immediately proclaimed Edmund Ironside, his eldest Son; and, by the unanimous Consent of the Nobility and Citizens, he was crowned King by the Archbishop of York, with the greatest Demonstrations of Joy. This was the first Coronation that I can find performed in this City. Yet, notwithstanding this brave Prince was every way deserving of the Crown, and the Love of his People, he was deserted by the Clergy, and divers of the Nobility; who not only declared in Favour of Cnut, or Canute, as we commonly read it, (the Son of Sweget, the late Danish King) and proclaimed him King at Southampton, but likewise abjured the whole Race of Ethelred; whose chief Support was the truly loyal and brave Citizens of London.

Cnut, encouraged by this Defection, fitted out a potent Fleet to reduce London, the chief Support of his Competitor; but, upon his Arrival before that City, found, to his no small Disappointment, that he could not pass the Bridge with his Ships; which the Citizens had strongly fortified, to prevent such an Attempt: Wherefore Cnut, in order more effectually to carry on a vigorous Siege by Water, as well as Land, caused a Cut or Canal to be made through the Marshes, on the South Side the River Thames, deep and broad enough for conveying his Ships to the West of the Bridge, that he might invest the City on all Sides, and, by preventing Supplies from entering, to facilitate its Reduction.

By a diligent Search of several Days, says our Author, I discovered the Vestigia and Length of this artificial Water-course: Its Outflux from the River Thames was where the great Wet Dock below Rotherhithe is situate; whence running due West by the seven Houses in Rotherhithe Fields, it continues its Course by a gentle Winding to the Drain Windmill; and with a West-north-west Course passing St. Thomas of Watering's, by an easy Turning it crosses the Deptford Road a little to the South-east of the Lock Hospital, at the lower End of Kent-street; and proceeding to Newington Butts, intersects the Road a little South of the Turnpike; whence continuing its Course by the Black Prince in Lambeth Road, on the North of Kennington, it runs West-and-by-south through the Spring-garden at Vauxhall, to its Influx into the Thames, at the lower End of Chelsea Reach.

By raising the Ground on the West of St. Thomas of Watering's, the Course of this Canal is lost in the Gardens, as it is also at its crossing Deptford Road, and in the Gardens South of Kent-street; but in the Marsh on the East of Newington Turnpike 'tis very visible. And in the Year 1729, some Ditches being made to drain the low Grounds, which are Part thereof, there were dug up a considerable Number of large oaken Planks, and divers Piles, which from their Position evidently appeared to have been Part of the Northern Fence of this Canal.

Having discovered the Outflux of this Water-course to have been where now the great Wet Dock is situate, I enquired in the Neighbourhood for a Person that remembered the making the said Dock; when I was directed to Mr. John Webster, who acquainted me, That the said Dock was made Anno 1694, and that he was a Carpenter employed therein. Whereupon I asked him, if any thing extraordinary was discovered at digging the same? He replied, That there was dug up in the Bank of the River a great Quantity of Hazel, Willows, and other small Wood, of a considerable Height, laid close together endways, pointing Northward, with Rows of Stakes drove in to fasten them: By which Account I conclude this to have been the South Bank of the Mouth of the Canal, and of Danish Erection; for, to my Knowledge, such Water-fences are still in Use in the Dominions of Denmark, and Lower Saxony; especially where Currents are most rapid; that Manner of Fortification being much more effectual for the Preservation of Banks than Fences of Planks, which are only used in Places where Streams are less violent. That there might have been such a Water-course, as Mr. Maitland terms it, from the Wet Dock at Deptford, round by St. Thomas of Watering's, and Newington Butts, quite up to Vauxhall, and into the Thames at the lower End of Chelsea Reach, is allowed: But the Time, and Expence, and needless Labour, such a Canal must have required to make it navigable for Vessels, that had been able to transport an Army from the Northern Seas, and the little Time the Danes had to execute such a Design in the Enemy's Country, are great Obstacles against the Opinion, that this Water-course, above described, was the Canal by which the Danish Fleet sailed, or were towed to the West Side of the Bridge: And therefore a very ingenious Correspondent has rather supposed, as a Work more practicable, That the Cut made by Canute began at the Dock, near to the Place at this Time called Dockhead, in Rotherhithe; and from thence, in a small Semi-circle, by Margaret's Hill in Southwark, into the Thames again at St. Saviour's Dock, above Bridge.

But, be this as it will, Canute had no sooner finished his new Canal, and brought his Ships on the West Side of London-bridge, than he violently assaulted the City on all Sides. However, he was by the Bravery of the Citizens as often repulsed with great Loss, which obliged him to desist for some Time; and at last, having received Advice of Edmund's March to its Relief, he raised the Siege, and retired to his Ships. But, Edmund returning to West Saxony to reinforce his Army, Cnut took the Advantage of his Absence, and renewed the Siege, with greater Vigour than before, but with no better Success; 'till a Peace being concluded between Edmund and Cnut, by which the Kingdom was divided between them; and Mercia, of which London was the Capital, falling to Cnut's Share, the City submitted to him, and Cnut brought his Fleet thither, and took up his Winter Quarters in it.

Edmund

*Chron.
Sax.*

Chro. Sax. Edmund dying after a short Reign of a few Months, Cnut summoned a Parliament to meet at London; in which the States of the Kingdom, both Civil and Ecclesiastical, assembled, and, with a Spirit answerable to their former Proceedings, chose Cnut sole Monarch of England; to whom they swore Allegiance, and at the same Time renounced and abjured the Sons of Edmund, their late brave and worthy Sovereign.

Ibid. Cnut, now sole Monarch of England, resolves by all political Means to maintain his Possession of the Throne; and in order to secure the Hearts of his new Subjects, and to convince them, that he had their Interest as much at Heart as any of the English Kings his Predecessors, disbanded his Army, and sent back his Fleet to Denmark, and threw himself intirely upon the Affections of his new People. This Confidence so highly pleased the Parliament then convened in London, that, to enable him to put his Design in Execution, they granted him eighty-three thousand Pounds: A prodigious Sum at that Time! seventy-two thousand Pounds, Part whereof, was raised in all the several Parts of England, exclusive of London; which alone raised eleven thousand Pounds of the whole Sum. Whereby is shewn the great Opulency of this City at that Time. For, if we may reckon the Riches thereof upon the Foot of this Subsidy, it must have been possessed of above one seventh Part of the Wealth of the whole Kingdom. And this vast Sum granted to Cnut, according to the Prices of Land and Provisions then, must have been equal to that of nine Millions at present.

Chro. Sax. A.D. 1036 Upon the Demise of Cnut, a Witena-gemote, or Convention of wise Men, was held at Oxford; where Earl Leofric, and most of the Thanes on the North Side the River Thames, with the Lords of London, chose Harold their King. Lords of London, is by the Translator of the Saxon Annals rendered Nauta, i. e. Mariners. This Translation seems very inconsistent with the Honour of the City, to chuse only one of its Fraternities to represent it on so solemn an Occasion: But, taking Lords to mean Pilots, (which the Directors or Governors of Cities may not improperly be called) I am of Opinion, that the City Representatives at Oxford were the Magistrates, and not the Mariners, of London. Be that as it will, it suffices to shew, that this City then was of such Distinction, Grandeur, and Power, that no national Affair of Consequence was transacted without its Assent: For in this Case the Saxon Annals are very plain, that none else were admitted into this Electoral Convention, but the Nobility, and the Lords of London.

Flor. Wig. Chron. lib. 2. Sim. Dun. Hist. A.D. 1039 After the Death of Harold, the Nobility, assisted by the Citizens of London, sent Messengers to Hardacnut, (Son of Cnut, by Emma, Relict of Ethelred) then with his Mother at Bruges in Flanders, intreating him to come over, and receive the Crown.

Chro. Sax. A.D. 1041 Upon the Demise of Hardacnut, Edward called the Confessor (but for what reason it does not appear) was chosen King in this City, by the general Voice of the People.

Ibid. A.D. 1043 Some Time after, a grievous Famine happened; whereby Corn became so excessive dear, that Wheat was sold at five Shillings the Quarter.

In the sixth Year of Edward, a great Council was held in this City; wherein 'twas resolved to send out nine Ships of War, well manned and stored, to protect the Coasts against the Ravages of Danish Pirates, and five others to remain in Port as Guard-ships, ready upon all Emergencies to put to Sea.

Godwin, Earl of Kent, having greatly incurred the King's Displeasure, by the malicious Artifices and false Insinuations of his Enemies the Normans, then at Court; he was summoned to appear before a great Council assembled in London, to answer to the Charge brought against him: But, well knowing, by the restless Malice and sinister Intrigues of his Enemies, that they were resolved upon his Destruction, he refused to appear without Pledges given for his safe Conduct; which being denied, he, satisfied of his own Innocence, determined to provide for his own Security; which not being otherwise to be effected but by his having Recourse to Arms, he engaged divers of the principal Citizens in his Interest, soon raised a considerable Army, and fitted out a potent Fleet; with which he sailed directly to London; and, being arrived at Southwark, he anchored there 'till the Return of the Tide; when, meeting with no Opposition at the Bridge from the Londoners, he passed through the Arches at the South End of the same, with a Design to attack the royal Navy, then lying before Westminster, to the Number of fifty Sail. At the same Time, his Army being arrived in Southwark, made a formidable Appearance along the South Bank of the River Thames. However, by the Interposition of many of the prime Nobility, Matters were happily accommodated (without the Effusion of Blood) between the King and the Earl, by restoring him and his Sons to their Honours and Estates, and banishing those vile and dangerous Sycophants the Normans, who had introduced unjust Laws, given false Judgments, and committed grievous Outrages against the English. Upon this happy Reconciliation, both the Fleets and Armies were discharged.

'Tis observable from what has been said, that the Ships of War at that Time must have been very small, seeing they passed and repassed London-bridge.

tion: For now the English Army, under King Harold, was intirely routed, and cut to Pieces, with the Loss of Harold, in the bloody Battle at Hastings in Suffex. On which Occasion Edwin and Morcar, Earls of Northumberland and Mercia, being arrived at London from the fatal Field, proposed to the Citizens the setting up of Edgar Atheling for King, as the most effectual Way to extricate themselves and Nation from their present State of Confusion, and to save the Kingdom from becoming a Prey to the victorious Norman.

Gal. Pict.
Ord. Vit.

Under this dreadful Misfortune, the Citizens, being in a very great Consternation, were divided in Opinion; some thinking it more for their Interest to deliver up the City to the Conqueror, lest they should by Resistance exasperate him to their Destruction; whilst others supporting the more powerful Arguments urged by the said Earls, the Majority declared for Edgar, and for defending the City against the Normans.

Gal. Pict.

The Conqueror, receiving Advice of these Transactions and Resolutions, hastened his March to London, to prevent their Execution. The Citizens sallied out upon him, already advanced as far as Southwark; which Detachment, tho' they were soon repulsed by five hundred Norman Horse with considerable Loss, convinced the Conqueror, that the Citizens were not to be frightened into a Submission; and he, judging it very improper to undertake the Siege of so formidable a Place in Winter, laid Southwark in Ashes, and marched to reduce the Western Counties. In the mean Time, says Rapin, the Clergy in London, who sought all Opportunities to break the Measures entered into between the Londoners and the said Earls, at last prevailed upon the Citizens to break their Contract, and tamely submit to the Conqueror's Yoke; tho' contrary to the sacred Ties of Justice and Honour, and to the Interest of their Country; and this only after the Loss of one Battle: Whereas, if they had kept firm to the Measures agreed upon, they, in Conjunction with the other Powers of the Kingdom, might probably have driven out the Enemy in a short Time.

Upon this Defection of the Citizens, the two brave and worthy Brothers, Edwin and Morcar, retired into the North of England for their Security.

The Clergy, before they attempted to bring the Citizens to such a servile Submission, ought first to have called to Mind the noble and laudable Struggles this Nation formerly made in Defence of its just Rights and Liberties; and the numerous Battles bravely fought by the Britons, even when there was hardly a Possibility of preventing their being subjugated by the mighty Romans; and likewise the laudable and gallant Resistance made by their Predecessors against the piratical Danes. It seems to me a Matter out of all Doubt, that, if the Christian Clergy, at that Time, had acted upon the same Principles of Honour and Virtue, as the Pagan Priests, the Druids and Bards, formerly did, this Kingdom never would have become a Prey to either of those petty Enemies, the Danes or Normans.

Flor. Wig.
Chron.

The Clergy aforesaid had no sooner prevailed upon the Citizens to desert their Friends, and abandon the Interest of their Country in this Distress, than divers of the Bishops repaired to Beecham, or Berkhamstead, where they submitted, and swore Fealty to the Conqueror; and, as if that were not sufficient to ingratiate themselves, with the Norman, they not only prevailed upon divers of the Nobility, but likewise upon Edgar Atheling himself, to submit.

William no sooner received the agreeable News of the City of London's Submission, than he began his March thither; where he was received by the Magistrates, and principal Citizens; who not only presented him with the Keys of their City, but likewise acknowledged him for their Sovereign; and, in Conjunction with the Nobility and Prelates then present, desired him to accept the Crown. The capital City having thus declared for the Conqueror, its Example was soon followed by all the rest of the Kingdom.

Gal. Pict.

The Duke of Normandy, having thus gained Possession of London, caused a Fortress forthwith to be erected, which he strongly garrisoned with the best of his Troops, in order to secure the same; and awe the Citizens; notwithstanding, when he made his publick Entry into the City soon after, he was received with the greatest Acclamations, and external Signs of Joy.

Gal. Pict.

The Conqueror soon after set out to visit his Norman Dominions; and at his Return from thence, in the second of his Reign, was received into London with a solemn Procession. In return for which, and at the Intercession of William the Norman Bishop of London, he granted a Charter to the Citizens in their own Language; a mighty Favour at that Time, when the French Tongue began to prevail over all. This Charter consists of four Lines and a Quarter, beautifully written in the Saxon Character, on a Slip of Parchment of the Length of six Inches, and Breadth of one, which is preserved in the City Archives as a very great Jewel.

of London very much; but the most surprizing Event was, its breaking down Part of the Church-Wall of St. Mary-le-Bow in Cheapside, (whereby two Men were killed) and, raising the Roof thereof, carried it a considerable Way; when it fell with such Violence, that six of its Rafter, of six-and-twenty Feet in Length each, were forced into the Ground above twenty Feet deep, and in the same Position as they stood on the Church. This Relation would seem very incredible, were it not for the concomitant Circumstances: For, 1. the Ground whereon the Roof pitched was of a moorish Nature. 2. The Streets were then unpaved. And, 3. In the twenty-sixth Year of Henry the First, there happened the greatest Famine that had been known in England in the Memory of Man; in-much that a Horse-load of Wheat was sold for six Shillings: And some Time in the said Reign the King, being more in Want of Money for the Payment of his Army and Domesticks, than Provisions for their Subsistence, ordered, that his Tenants for the future, instead of finding Bread for a Meal for a hundred Men, should pay one Shilling; for a stalled or fat Ox, one Shilling; for a Night's Oats for twenty Horses, four Pence; and for a Ram or other Sheep, four Pence.

Flor. Wig.

In the Year 1132, this City was almost wholly consumed again by a dreadful Fire.

The two Charters granted by the Conqueror being equally brief and curious, I thought it not amiss to insert them in the Original, as well as to give their Import in English, which I have therefore done as above: But the subsequent Charters being much longer, to avoid taking up too much Room, I judged it was sufficient to give only the Translations of them in their proper Places, according to the Periods, in which they were respectively granted by the several Kings. These I find ready translated to my hand, by a Gentleman who belonged to the Town-Clerk's Office, and writes himself S. G. Gent. As he calls his Piece, The Royal Charter of London, &c. and dedicates it to the then chief Magistrate of the City, Sir Robert Glanville, Kt. Lord-Mayor, Anno 1680, there is the less Reason to doubt of its being faithfully performed.

The third Charter to this City was granted by Henry the First, third Son of the Conqueror; who, having usurped the Crown, in Prejudice to Robert, his eldest Brother, well knew how difficult it would be to secure himself upon the Throne, without the Assistance of the Londoners; and therefore, to oblige them to enter into his Measures, and support his Interest, he granted them a very advantageous Charter. The Contents whereof, as translated by the above-mentioned S. G. are as follows:

Henry, by the Grace of God, King of England, to the Bishop of Canterbury, and to the Bishops and Abbots, Earls and Barons, Justices and Sheriffs, and to all his faithful Subjects of England, French and English, Greeting. Know ye, that I have granted to my Citizens of London,
to hold Middlesex, to farm for three hundred Pounds, upon Account to them and their Heirs, so that the said Citizens shall place as Sheriff whom they will of themselves; and shall place whomsoever, or such a one as they will of themselves, for keeping of the Pleas of the Crown, and of the Pleadings of the same,
and none other shall be Justice over the same Men of London, and the Citizens of London, shall not plead without the Walls of London for any Plea. And be they free from Scot and Lot and Dane-guilt, and of all Murder, and none of them shall wage Battle: And if any of the Citizens shall be impleaded concerning the Plea of the Crown, the Man of London shall discharge himself by his Oath, which shall be adjudged within the City; and none shall lodge within the Walls, neither of my Household, nor any other, nor Lodging delivered by Force.
And all the Men of London shall be quit and free, and all their Goods, throughout England, and the Ports of the Sea, of and from all Toll and Passage and Lestage, and all other Customs; and the Churches and Barons and Citizens shall and may peaceably and quietly have and hold their Sokes with all their Customs; so that the Strangers that shall be lodged in the Sokes, shall give Custom to none but to him to whom the Soke appertains, or to his Officer, whom he shall there put: And a Man of London shall not be adjudged in Amerciements of Money, but of one hundred Shillings (I speak of the Pleas which appertain to Money); and further, there shall be no more Miskinning in the Hurlings, nor in the Folkemore, nor in any other Pleas within the City; and the Hurlings may sit once in a Week, that is to say, on Monday: And I will cause my Citizens to have their Lands, Promises, Bonds and Debts within the City and without; and I will do them Right by the Law of the City, of the Lands of which they shall complain to me: And if any shall take Toll or Custom of any Citizen of London, the Citizens of London in the City shall take of

was so taken, so much as the Man of London

"gave for Toll, and as he received Damage thereby: And all Debtors, which do owe Debts to the Citizens of London, shall pay them in London, or else discharge themselves in London, that they owe none; but, if they will not pay the same, neither come to clear themselves that they owe none, the Citizens of London, to whom the Debts shall be due, may take their Goods in the City of London, of the Borough or Town, or of the County, wherein he remains, who shall owe the Debt: And the Citizens of London may have their Chaces to hunt, as well and fully as their Ancestors have had, that is to say, in the Chilter, and in Middlesex and Surrey.

"Witness the Bishop of Winchester, and Robert Son of Richard, and Hugh Piggot, and Almer of Totness, and William of Abbs-prima, and Hubert Roger, Chamberlaine, and William de Mount-sitchett, and Hangul Taney, and John Ballet, and Robert Son of Steward of West."

By this valuable Charter, the Citizens had not only, 1. Their ancient Customs and Immunities confirmed to them, but likewise the County of Middlesex added to their Jurisdiction in Fee-farm, without Homage, Fealty, Service, or other Consideration, than a Quit-rent of three hundred Pounds per Annum; with a Power of not only appointing a Sheriff, but also a Justiciary from among themselves, for holding the Pleas of the Crown: Besides whom, in the Reign of the said Henry, there appears to have been two other Officers, under the Appellation of Sheriffs, who, together with the former, accounted at the Exchequer for the Farm of the City: The Number of which Officers were in a fluctuating Condition, till fixed in the Time of Richard the First.

2. The Concession of Middlesex to the City was to prevent that County's being any longer an Asylum for Bankrupts, Cheats, and other fraudulent Persons; who, having deserted London with the Goods and Effects of their Creditors, lived there securely in Impunity, and open Deliance of the Injured.

3. The Citizens valuable Privilege, that they should not be compelled to plead without the Walls of the City, was granted them, that, if any Citizen should be impleaded or prosecuted concerning Pleas of the Crown, he might purge himself by an Oath upon Trial in the City.

4. The Citizens by the said Charter were also exempt from Scot, Lot, and Danegild; which were certain Duties payable to the King by all his Subjects.

5. And to be free from all Murder; that is, when any Murder shall happen in London, and the Murderer or Murderers make his or her Escape; then, and in such Case, the City shall not be amerced for not producing the Malefactor.

6. And none of them shall wage Battle: In the Saxon Times, a Person accused of a Crime, whereof he could not acquit himself by Evidence, was obliged to challenge the Accuser, and decide the same by a Duel: This the Citizens justly regarding as an intolerable Grievance, were exempt therefrom by this Charter.

7. That none of the King's Household, or other Person, shall take Lodging in the City by Force: By this gracious Concession, the Citizens got rid of a very great Slavery; for, before this Grant, the King's Domesticks, and whom else he pleased, were, by his arbitrary Officer the Portreve, quartered upon them at Discretion.

8. That the Citizens, with their Goods and Merchandizes, shall in all Parts and Sea-Ports of the Kingdom be exempt from Toll, Passage and Lestage; that is, they shall not as formerly be liable to pay Toll, at either Fair or Market, Passage or Ferriage for crossing of Rivers; nor Lestage, a certain Duty paid in Fairs and Markets for each Last of mercantile Commodities.

9. That the Churches, Barons and Citizens should peaceably enjoy their several Sokes; that is, that the Incumbent of no Parish shall be molested on account of the Glebe, or other Lands belonging to the Cure; nor the Aldermen in respect of their Wards, which then, being alienable, were sold, assigned and conveyed like other Possessions, whereby the Purchaser or Purchasers became an Alderman or Aldermen of his or their respective Purchases; as is evident by an eminent Historian: By whom it likewise appears, that Part of the Aldermen's Office at that Time was, to assign proper Lodgings for Strangers in their respective Wards, for which they or their Deputies received a certain pecuniary Reward.

10. That no Citizen shall be amerced beyond his Ware; that is, the Price of his Head of Life, which was valued at one hundred Shillings.

11. There shall be no Miskenning in the Hustings, Folkemore, or other Pleas within the City: That is, no Man shall unjustly prosecute another in any of the City Courts, by deserting his first Plea, and assuming another; and, for the more regular and better Distribution of Justice, the Court of Hustings is weekly to sit on Monday.

12. That the Citizens shall enjoy their Properties, both real and personal, according to the Constitutions of the City; and whatsoever City, Town or Place shall extort Toll or Custom from any of them, they are by the said Charter empowered to make Repulsals in London, upon the Inhabitants of such City, Town or Place, where the same was exacted.

13. Upon the Remissness of Country Debtors, in making proper Payments, or in Default of adjusting Accounts with the Lenders, they are empowered to attach the Effects of all such Defaulters in London, for the Discharge of their respective Debts.

14. And the City Privileges of Hunting are confirmed in as ample a Manner as their Predecessors ever enjoyed the same in the Counties of Middlesex and Surrey, and the Chiltern.

Before the Grant of this Charter, London seems to have been intirely subject to the arbitrary Will of the King. But, their Liberties being now guarded by so strong a Fence, the Citizens endeavoured to secure their Customs, by converting them into written Laws; and their Arts and Mysteries, which had hitherto been kept up by Prescription only, were now strengthened by established Fraternities and Companies. However, the King reserved to himself the Power of appointing the Portreve, or chief Officer of this City.

Upon the Demise of Henry the First in Normandy, Stephen, Earl of Bologn and Mortaign, Nephew to the late King, and, by the Female Line, Grandson

W. Malmf.
Hist. Nov.

Grandson to William the Conqueror, came privately into England; and, notwithstanding his having solemnly sworn to the Succession of Matilda or Maud, the Empress, Daughter to the late King, he perfidiously attempted to procure the Sceptre for himself, by the Assistance of three perjured Prelates, viz. William, Archbishop of Canterbury; Henry, Bishop of Winchester (Brother to Stephen); and Roger, Bishop of Salisbury; who, with the rest of the Bishops and Nobility, had sworn to support Matilda's Claim; however, setting aside that sacred Tie, they easily prevailed upon their Brethren to join them in Behalf of the Usurper: Whereby their Faction became so potent, that the Nobility seem not to have been in a Condition to stem the Torrent.

If the Practice of these Prelates had been answerable to their Profession of Religion, the very Consideration of their having so often sworn to support Matilda's Succession, would have restrained them from assisting an usurping Foreigner to the Prejudice of their lawful and natural Princess, descended from the ancient Race of Saxon Kings, and who never had given them the least Cause of Offence. But, unwilling to be outdone in Iniquity by their Predecessors, they betrayed their Country into the Hands of Stephen, whose Ingratitude and Perjury ought rather to have made him odious to them; and whose Advancement to the Throne occasioned a long and bloody War, whereby this City greatly suffered; for the Citizens were artfully cajoled by those wicked Prelates to side with them, and receive Stephen into their City.

Just after this a very great Fire happened in the City, which began at London-Bridge, and destroyed all the Way Westward to St. Clement's Dunes: But Stow says, that this dreadful Conflagration began in the House of one Ailward, near London-Stone, and consumed all the Way East to Aldgate, and West to St. Erkenwald's Shrine in St. Paul's Cathedral; both which it destroyed, together with London-Bridge, which was then of Wood. By which Accounts, this appears to have been the greatest casual Fire that ever happened in this City before that Time.

The many great and terrible Fires which happened in London in those Times, are not to be wondered at, considering the Houses were then all of Wood; but since the Rebuilding of the City, after the dreadful Conflagration Anno 1666, we happily experience the good Effects of our present Brick Buildings, whose solid Party-walls are capable of resisting the most devouring Flames, 'till proper Assistance can be procured for extinguishing them; and it is now rare to hear of one Fire that consumes above twenty Houses, (excepting that ravaging Fire, that destroyed and damaged upwards of one hundred in Cornhill, on the 25th of March, 1748) and very seldom more than one or two.

In the Year 1139, the Citizens were obliged to pay to King Stephen one hundred Marks of Silver, for a Right to chuse their own Sheriffs.

On the 20th of March, in 1140, about Noon, there happened a total Eclipse of the Sun at London; which occasioned such a terrible Consternation among the People, that they dreaded the Return of the ancient Chaos.

The Success of Matilda, in routing the Army of King Stephen, and taking him Prisoner, gave such a happy Turn to her Affairs, that she resolved to revenge herself upon her Enemies; and, as the Citizens of London were the principal, she began with them, by making a Convention with Geoffrey Earl of Essex, wherein she granted to him all the Possessions which his Grandfather, Father or himself had held of the Crown, in Lands, Tenements, Castles and Bailiwicks; among which were the Tower of London, and the Sheriffficks of London and Middlesex, at a Fee-farm Rent of 300 l. per Ann. as held by his Grandfather.

And, as a greater Mortification to the Citizens of London, Matilda granted to the said Geoffrey the Office of Justiciary of their City, and of the County of Middlesex; so that no Person whatsoever could hold Pleas either in the City or County without his special Permission. This Convention was ratified by the Empress upon Oath, and attested by divers of the prime Nobility: For the Performance of which, several of the English and Norman Nobility were given as Hostages; and, as a farther Corroboration of the same, it was to be confirmed by all the English Clergy under her Dominion.

This Compact, next to that of Magna Charta, appears to have been the most solemnly executed of any that ever was entered into betwixt an English Sovereign and a Subject. The woeful Effects of which the Londoners soon after felt by sad Experience; for by this Agreement they were divested of some of their most valuable Privileges.

After the Defeat of King Stephen, and his being taken Prisoner at the Battle of Lincoln, he was deserted by many of his Friends, but especially by the Prelates above-mentioned, and others of the Clergy, who had advanced him to the Throne: By which and their former Deportment, they seem to have been intirely destitute both of Honour and Conscience: For Henry, Bishop of Winchester, (King Stephen's own Brother, and the chief Instrument in procuring him the Kingdom) then also the Pope's Legate, and Head of the Clergy in England, in Consideration of an Offer made and confirmed to him by Matilda upon Oath, that he should not only have the sole Direction of all great Affairs both in Church and State, but likewise the Disposal of all vacant Bishopricks and Abbies, provided he would influence the Clergy to side with her, thinking these Advantages sufficient to counterpoise the Oath he had taken to Stephen, solemnly engaged to accomplish the Empress's Desires; and to this End, the Day after, in a solemn Procession of the Nobility and Clergy, he received her into the City of Winchester, and handed her to the Cathedral, where he excommunicated all Stephen's Friends, and absolved all such as would abandon his Party, and join that of Matilda. And, for the more effectual Execution of the Treaty agreed upon, he summoned a general Convention of the Clergy to meet at Winchester, wherein he presided as Legate. But, before the Meeting of the Assembly, he had a private Conference with the Bishops, Abbots, and Archdeacons, separately; whom the Day after, in full Convocation, he acquainted, That they were called together to deliberate about the Peace of the Kingdom; at the same time reminding them of the Oath they had taken to the late King Henry, to secure the Succession to his Daughter Matilda; but she being abroad at the Demise of her Father, it was therefore judged convenient, for securing the publick Peace, to elect Stephen, his Brother, King; who not answering the End of his Election, God had suffered him to fall into the Hands of his Enemies; therefore, that the Nation might not be without a Governor, they now elected Matilda, to whom they promised Fidelity and Defence. To which all the Members then present either actually consented, or tacitly submitted.

The Magistrates of London, as the chief City of the Kingdom, were summoned to this Convention; who arriving the second Day of their Session, were introduced with the usual Ceremonies; but, their Consciences happening to be more tender than those of the Clergy, instead of agreeing to the Resolution of the preceding Day, declared they were not sent to enter into needless Controversies, but to endeavour the Release of the King, which was not only the earnest Desire of the Citizens, but likewise of all the Nobility residing in the City. To this the Legate with some Warmth replied, That it ill became the Londoners, who were esteemed like the Nobility of the Kingdom, to side with the cowardly Barons, who had deserted their King in Battle.

Ibid.

This Answer not being satisfactory, the City Representatives pressed for one more to the Purpose; but, though the Legate judged it improper to re-propose a Thing already agreed to, yet the Citizens could not be prevailed upon to abandon Stephen, to whom they had sworn Fealty; wherefore Matilda, considering that it would be very difficult to establish herself in the Throne without their Consent, entered into a Negotiation with them; but, the Treaty taking up more Time than was at first expected, she resided at St. Albans, waiting the Event.

During this Transaction, the City was violently agitated by different Factions; one whereof was for giving way to the Times; but the other strenuously insisted upon their adhering to their unfortunate King. The former prevailing, Commissioners were sent to St. Albans to treat with the Empress about the Surrender of the City; to which she was accompanied by David, King of Scotland, her Uncle, attended by a great Number of the Nobility, Bishops, and others of the Clergy, and was received into London by the Citizens, in a very pompous and solemn Manner.

Matilda, having got what she wanted, began to act very imprudently, and to carry herself with the most insupportable Haughtiness and Arrogance, by regarding her Subjects only as so many Slaves; which occasioned her Interest to decline in all Parts of the Kingdom; and rejecting the Overtures and Submissions made on the Part of King Stephen by his Consort Matilda for his Enlargement, and the Request of the Legate to have the Counties of Mortaigne and Bologne confirmed on Eustace his Nephew, Son to the unfortunate King; the imperious Prelate was so highly incensed against her, that he had Recourse to his old Game, abandoned her Interest, and rejoined that of his Brother. Whereby it is evident, that no Oath, though ever so sacred and strict, was able to bind this perfidious Bishop, who shewed so little Regard to his most solemn Engagements.

Soon after, the Citizens of London humbly intreated the Empress to restore to them the Laws of King Edward, (which were confirmed to them by the Conqueror's Charter) as being more gentle, and much better calculated for the Good of the People, than those of Normandy; and, in Consideration of the great Damage they had sustained during the War, that she would be graciously pleased to remit Part of their grievous and insupportable Taxes: But, instead of granting either of these Requests, she, with a supercilious and disdainful Countenance, told them, they were to expect no Favour from her, seeing they had assisted her Enemy to the utmost of their Power.

Gerv. Dor.

This severe and haughty Answer made the Citizens conclude they were to expect no other Treatment from this imperious and inexorable Princess than that of Slaves. To prevent this, they resolved upon taking other Measures, which by the Legate's Intrigues were carried on so far, as to form a Conspiracy to seize her Person: But she, receiving Intelligence thereof, privately withdrew herself and Friends from the City; which was no sooner known, than the Populace got together, and plundered her Palace.

To this impolitick Behaviour of Matilda to the Londoners were owing all her future Misfortunes; for, by their powerful Assistance, she was compelled at last to fly the Kingdom; and King Stephen, to whom they had shewn so strong an Attachment, was again restored.

Matilda, soon after her withdrawing from London, laid Siege to the Castle of Winchester; whereupon the Legate dispatched a Messenger to the Magistrates of London for Assistance; to which the Citizens readily agreeing, a considerable Body of Troops marched thither, and blocked up that City, whereby the Empress and her Forces were reduced to a very great Extremity for Want of Provisions. This put her upon an Attempt to escape; which succeeded according to her Desire; but Robert Earl of Gloucester, her natural Brother and General, being taken Prisoner, he was soon after exchanged for King Stephen.

Some Time after, King Stephen marched with a considerable Army (consisting chiefly of Londoners) against the Castle of Farrindon in Berkshire, which, by the Bravery of the Citizens, was soon taken by Storm. Our Historians observe, that about this Time an Ox was sold for three Shillings.

In the Year following, the Citizens of London, with Gervase de Cornhill, (I suppose one of the Sheriffs at that Time) paid the King the Sum of one thousand Marks, being the Donum of the City: And, in the sixteenth of the same Reign, the Citizens paid the King a Donum of six hundred and sixty-six Pounds, thirteen Shillings and four Pence, towards his Expedition to Ireland: And, in the eighteenth and nineteenth Years of the said Prince, the Citizens paid a Donum of six hundred and sixty-six Pounds, thirteen Shillings and four Pence, for each of the said Years.

These Donums seem to corroborate the Opinion above delivered, that they were so many free Gifts of the Citizens, in lieu of Tallages.

Some Time after, by the male Administration of the Magistrates of the City, Villainy was got to such an amazing Height, (though the present Time is generally deemed the worst) that the like perhaps never appeared in any other Age or Nation. For at that Time it was common for the Sons of the most eminent and wealthy Citizens, as well as others, to confederate together in committing Burglaries, Robbery and Murder; and whoever had the Misfortune to fall in their Way, were assuredly murdered and robbed. One Night this horrid and abandoned Gang of profligate Thieves and Murderers attempted to rob the House of a rich Citizen; who, being alarmed at their breaking in, cut off the right Hand of the first that entered; and, calling aloud for Assistance, the rest made off. The disabled Villain being taken and secured, the next Day, upon the Assurance of a Pardon, he made an ample Discovery of his Accomplices; among whom was one John Senex, a very rich and reputable Citizen; who, when tried and cast by Water-Ordeal, offered for his Pardon five hundred Pounds of Silver; a prodigious Sum at that Time! which being justly rejected, he was hanged, according to his Deserts.

Stow. Ann. Eng.
About the same Time, a young Nobleman, Brother to Earl Ferrers, was murdered in his Brother's House, (afterwards converted into an Inn, but now a well-built Place in Lombard-street, called George-yard) which so highly enraged the King, that he swore he would revenge it upon the Citizens.

BEING come to a Period of Time, when the present Bridge of London was founded, it may be convenient to premise a few Things concerning the Origin of the ancient Wooden Bridge, as well as to describe the present Stone one.

In respect to the Antiquity of the first, we are told by Stow, That Sweyn, King of Denmark, besieged the City of London both by Water and Land, in the Year 994; when, by the Bravery of the Citizens, he was not only gallantly repulsed with great Loss by Land, but likewise by Water, wherein many of his Men were drowned, because they took no heed of, or had no Regard to, the Bridge.

This is a very great Mistake; for neither Malmesbury (whom he cites) nor any other Historian, mention a Bridge at London, when Anlaf and Sweyn, or Sweyn, Kings of Norway and Denmark, attacked this City. But in the thirty-fifth of King Ethelred, Anno 1013, the Saxon Annals, and all subsequent Historians, acquaint us, That Sweyn, King of Denmark, arrived with his Fleet at Sandwich, whence he sailed to the River Humber. On his Arrival there, all Northumberland submitted to him; and, taking Hostages for their Fidelity, he marched Southward with great Expedition, and committed very great Depredations. After which, the Cities of Oxford and Winchester having submitted to him, on his March from thence to London, he lost Part of his Army in the River Thames, (supposed at, or near Stanes) by his attempting to pass the said River, without enquiring after either Ford or Bridge: And that after a fruitless Attack or Siege, being discouraged by a brave Defence of the Citizens, (see above P. 34.) and deprived of all Hopes of Success, he marched off with his whole Army. So that this Mistake of Stow, I imagine, is owing to the confused Account Malmesbury gives of that Expedition, by telling us, That, through the precipitate Fury of the Danes, many of them were drowned in the Thames for not having had a due Regard to the Bridge: Whereas the Author, from whom he takes that Account, only tells us, That their Loss was occasioned by not enquiring after either Ford or Bridge.

That there was no Bridge at London in the Year 993, I think, appears by the Saxon Annals, which inform us, That Anlaf, the Dane, in that Year arrived in the River Thames, and sailed up the said River as far as Stanes, with a Fleet of ninety-three Ships, and ravaged the Countries on both Sides. Now, if there had been a Bridge at London, at the Time of this Invasion, it is not to be questioned but the Citizens would have fortified it in such a Manner, as to have obstructed the Passage of Anlaf, as they did frequently after that of several of the most potent Danish Fleets. From which I conjecture, that the first Wooden Bridge at London was erected in the Reign of Ethelred, between the said Year 993, (when Anlaf went up the Thames as far as Stanes) and Anno 1016, when Cnut, King of Denmark, caused a great Canal to be made on the South Side of the said River Thames, for carrying his Ships through to the West Side of the Bridge, as the Reader may see more at large on Page 35. And I apprehend, that the bold Action of Anlaf might put the Citizens and Government upon the building of London-Bridge, from a political View, (as well as the Convenience of Passage) to prevent for the future the Danish Fleets from coming up the River; where quitting their Ships, they had ravaged the Countries on both Sides the Thames at Pleasure, and retreated with Safety on Board their respective Vessels. But, if we could credit the traditionary Account of the Origin of the ancient Wooden Bridge of London, as delivered by Bartholomew Linsted, alias Fowle, the last Prior of St. Mary Overy's Convent in Southwark, we are indebted to the publick Spirit of a Convent of Religious for the changing of the Ferry, formerly at this Place, into a Wooden Bridge. For that Author writes after this Manner:

Stow. Sur.
Lond.

"A Ferrie being kept in a Place where now the Bridge is builded; at length the Ferriman and his Wife deceasing, left the same Ferrie to their only Daughter, a Maiden, named Marie, which, with the Goods left by her Parents, as also with the Profits arising of the said Ferrie, builded a House of Sisters, in a Place where now standeth the East Part of St. Marie Overy's Church, above the Queene's, where she was buried; unto the which House she gave the Oversight and Profits of the Ferrie: But afterwards the said House of Sisters being converted into a Colledge of Priests, the Priests builded the Bridge of Timber, as all other the great Bridges of this Land were; and from Time to Time kept the same in good Reparations; till at length, considering the great Charges of repairing the same, there was by Ayd of the Citizens of London, and others, a Bridge builded with Arches of Stone." However, to convince Posterity of the Truth of this Relation, the Prior ought by some Authority first to have shewn, that there antiently was a Nunnery in that Neighbourhood, and when and by whom the same was turned into a Colledge of Priests. But that there ever was any Religious House in Southwark before the Conquest, I much doubt; seeing that after the strictest Search, faith Maitland, I cannot discover, either by Record or Tradition, (other than that of Linsted above-specified) that ever there was any such Place in those Parts before that Time. For the first Religious House we read of, on that Side the River, within the Bill of Mortality, was the Convent of Bermondsey, founded by Alwin Child, a Citizen of London, in the sixteenth Year of the Conqueror, Anno 1082; and the second in that Neighbourhood was the Priory of St. Mary Overy's, founded by William Giffard, Bishop of Winchester, in the Reign of Henry the First. Our Author in this Place relies on the Authority of Dugdale: But Bishop Tanner, in his Notitia Ecclesiastica, p. 536, Note b, is clear, that this Antiquarian was mistaken; and is of Opinion, that Stow's Account, making Bishop Giffard no more than a good Benefactor, and ascribing the Building of the Body of the Church to him, is right. And, tho' Bishop Tanner leans to the Opinion of Maitland, and confesses that nothing had occurred to him in any Book, printed or MS. to support the contrary, except that of Stow, he gives us an Extract from Doomsday Book, which seems to imply the Truth of a Monastic Foundation on this Situation. It runs thus: "Sudrie. Terra Episc. Baiocensis. Ipse Episcopus habet in Sudwiche unum Monasterium, et unum Aquæ Fluctum, Rex E. tenebat Die qua mortuus fuit; qui Ecclesiam habebat, de Rege tenebat. Episc. dedit Ecclesiam primum Adeloldo, deinde Radulpho, pro Excambio unius Domus." And then adds, if Monasterium here denotes any thing more than an ordinary Church, it may be thought to mean this Religious House. Ib. Note a. Nevertheless, in this great Uncertainty, Mr. Maitland greatly suspects the Veracity of Linsted's Assertion, not only on Account of the Silence of Antiquity, but from the very Unreasonableness of the Supposition. For, says he, as the Ferry is said to have been the chief Support of the Priory, 'twould have been ridiculous in the Prior and Canons, to have sacrificed their principal Dependence, to enrich themselves by a wild Chimera of increasing their Revenues, in the Execution of a Project, which probably would have cost six Times the Sum of the intrinsic Value of their whole Estate; and, when effected, would in all Likelihood not have brought in so great an annual Sum as the Profits arising by the Ferry; seeing it may be presumed that Foot-Passengers would have been exempt from Pontage. And farther, for the better Refutation of the said traditionary Account, I shall endeavour to shew, that, as the latter Part thereof is a manifest Falseness, the former is very likely to be of the same Stamp.

The aforesaid Prior acquaints us, That the Wooden Bridge of London was not only, at first, erected by a Colledge of Priests, but likewise kept in Repair by them. Whereas 'tis evident, that the said Bridge was supported at a publick Charge, as appears by a Charter of Henry the First, granted to Ralph, Bishop of Chichester, &c. for exempting the Manor of Alecstone, and other Lands, (given by the Conqueror to the Abbot and Canons of Battle, in Suffex) from being charged to the Work of London-Bridge; which Charter runs in these Terms:

"Henry, King of England, to Ralph, Bishop of Chichester, and all the Ministers of Suffex, sendeth greeting: Know ye, &c. I command by my Kingly Authority, that the Manor called Alecstone, which my Father gave with other Lands to the Abbey of Battle, be free and quiet from Shires and Hundreds, and all other Customs of earthly Servitude, as my Father held the same most freely and quietly, and namely, from the Work of London-Bridge, and the Work of the Castle of Pecarssey: And this I command upon my Forfeiture. Witnes William de Pontleure at Berry." Therefore, as it appears, that some Religious Foundations only were exempt from the Work of this Bridge, and they too by Charter, I think 'tis not to be doubted but all Civil Bodies and Incorporations were Stow. Sur.

Lond.

Ibid.

were

were liable to contribute towards the Repairs thereof: And consequently, that Linfed and his Followers exceed the Truth by ascribing all the Praise of so publick a Benefaction to a small House of Religious; who, with greater Probability, only consented to the Building of this Bridge, upon sufficient Considerations and Allowances to be made to them for the Loss of that Ferry, by which they had been always supported.

Besides, it is evident beyond all Dispute, that so early as the 22 Hen. I. there were certain Lands appropriated for the Repairs of this Bridge, as appears by a Gift of five Skillings, per Ann. out of the same, to the Monks of Bermondsey, by Thomas Arden: Nor could any such Society, or petty Monastery or College, ever be supposed capable of supporting such a Bridge, which, besides other Accidents, was burnt down A. D. 1136, and was again so ruinous in 1163, that it was obliged to be new built under the Inspection of Peter, a Clergyman in those Days in great Reputation for his Skill in Architecture, and Chaplain or Curate of St. Mary Colechurch in London.

These continual and large Expences in maintaining and repairing a Wooden Bridge becoming burthensome to the People, who, upon extraordinary Occasions, when the Lands appropriated for that Use fell short in their Produce, were taxed to make up the Deficiencies, as appears from what has been related; it was resolved to build a Stone Bridge, a little to the West of that Wooden Fabrick, whose Head, in the Days of William I. pointed ashore at Botolph's Wharf; and the Management thereof was given to the said Peter, Curate of Colechurch aforesaid, as all our Historians agree. But this Architect did not live to finish this tedious and great Undertaking, which, with great Encouragement from the King, and Archbishop of Canterbury, who gave 1000 Marks towards it, began to be erected in the 22 Hen. I. for he either died, or was so worn out with Age and Fatigue, in the third Year of King John's Reign, that we find among the Tower Records a Letter from the said King to the Mayor and Citizens of London, recommending to them one Isenbert to finish this Bridge: Which Letter of Recommendation is thus rendered into English:

Xaintes and Rocelle, by the great Care and Pains of our faithful, learned and worthy Clerk,
Isenbert, Master of the Schools of Xaintes:
"We therefore, by the Advice of our Reverend Father in Christ, Hubert, Archbishop of Can- terbury, and that of others, have desired, directed and enjoined him to use his best Endeavour in building your Bridge, for your Benefit, and that of the Publick: For we trust in the Lord, that this Bridge, so necessary for you, and all who shall pass the same, will, thro'
his Industry, and the Divine Blessing, soon be finished: Wherefore, without Prejudice to our Right, or that of the City of London, We will

"and grant, that the Rents and Profits of the several Houses that the said Master of the Schools shall cause to be erected upon the Bridge aforesaid, be for ever appropriated to repair, maintain and uphold the same.

"And seeing that the necessary Work of the said Bridge cannot be accomplished without your Aid, and that of others; We charge and exhort you kindly to receive and honour the above-named Isenbert, and those employed by him, who will perform every thing to your Advantage and Credit, according to his Directions, you affording him your joint Advice and Assistance in the Premises: For whatever good Office or Honour you shall do to him,
you ought to esteem the same as done to Us.
But, should any Injury be offered to the said
Isenbert, or the Persons employed by him, (which we do not believe there will) see that the same be redressed, as soon as it comes to your Knowledge.

"Witness Myself at Molinel, the eighteenth Day of April."

By this Royal Letter of Recommendation of Isenbert to be Architect or Surveyor of the Work of London-Bridge, it appears that Peter of Colechurch must either have died in the Year 1202, or by Age or Incapacity was rendered unfit to superintend the said Work. For I think, (says Maitland)
'tis not to be questioned but the Mayor and Citizens dutifully complied, and chose the said Isenbert
Surveyor of their Bridge, pursuant to the said Royal Recommendation. Tho' I am apt to suspect, that the Citizens were not altogether so complaisant;
because we find the same King, in the seventh Year of his Reign, and three Years before the Finishing of the Stone Bridge, taking the Custody of London-Bridge from the Lord Mayor, and granting it to one Friar West; and obliging the City to apply certain void Places within its Walls to be built on, and applied to the Support thereof. Besides, there is not the least Mention of any such Surveyor in all our Historians; who unanimously declare, that the Completing of the Work was at Peter's Death committed to the Care of Serle Mercer, William Almaine and Bene- dikt Botewrite, Merchants of London, who finished the first Stone Bridge at London in the Year 1209.
We are told by the same Authors, That the Master Mason of this great Work not only erected the Chapel here, but likewise endowed the same for two Priests, four Clerks, &c. This was the first Building on the Arches of London- Bridge. This Chapel was afterwards augmented with so many Chantries, that there were four Chaplains belonging to it in the 23 Hen. VI.
maintained by charitable Legacies.

This Chapel, which was dedicated to St. Tho- mas, is a beautiful arched Gothick Structure, built on the East Side of the Bridge, in the ninth Pier from the North End, and is of the Dimensions of sixty-five Feet in Length, (three whereof being under the Street, was occasioned by the Inlarge-ment of the Way after the Fire of London in the Year 1666) twenty Feet and a half in Breadth, and fourteen in Height: But, Part of the handsome Arch being obliged to make Way for the present Shop Floor, the Area of the Chapel, by an additional Floor, is divided into an upper and a lower Story, for the Convenience of Warehouse-room.

A.D. 1737 This very handsome Chapel, which had an Entrance from the River, as well as from the Street, was beautifully paved with black and white Marble; and in the Middle of it was situate a sepulchral Monument, of the Length of seven Feet and a half, and the Breadth of four: The Remains whereof were lately discovered by Mr. Kaldwyn, the present Inhabitant, when he repaired the Stair-case, which is built over it. This undoubtedly is the Place of Interment, where, according to Stow, Peter of Colechurch was buried; but the Brass Plate, with the Inscription thereon, being gone, I cannot ascertain whether the Mason above-mentioned, or the Corps of any other Person, be there inhumed.

Rec. Tur. Pat. 5. Hen. III. m. 43. This Chapel, with its Appurtenances, was in the Year 1266 given by Henry the Third to the Master, Brethren and Sisters of St. Katharine near the Tower of London, for the Term of five Years.

Not built on Woolpacks.

The Foundation of this Bridge is by the Vulgar generally believed to be laid upon Woolpacks; which Mistake probably arose from a Tax upon Wool towards its Construction. Be that as it will, 'twas certainly built at the Charge of the Publick, by whom, and the Profits arising from the Houses erected thereon, 'twas antiently kept in Repair: But the Benefactions thereto have been so very considerable, that by the Profits arising from thence, together with those of the Houses and Toll thereof, it has for many Years supported itself, without the least Charge to the Publick.

Stow. Sur. Lond.

Stow is of Opinion, that, when this Bridge was erected, the River Thames was turned into a large Trench or Canal made for that Purpose; which he imagines had its Outflux near Rotherhithe, and its Influx near Battersey. But this Conjecture has not the least Foundation for its Support; for that which led the Author into this Notion, I conceive, are the Vestigia of the Canal supposed to have been made by Cnut, King of Denmark, which I have above described (Page 35.)

No Canal or Trench.

I am of Opinion, that Stow, before he advanced this Assertion, ought first to have considered the immense Charge that necessarily would have attended such an Undertaking: As, 1. The Purchase of the Ground where this spacious Water-course was to run. 2. The Expence of raising the strong and lofty Banks which were to confine it. And, 3. The prodigious Charge of damming off the River above and below the intended Bridge. These Things rightly considered, I am persuaded, that all Persons, but tolerably versed in such Affairs, will readily acknowledge, that the Works preparatory would have cost treble the Sum which the Bridge otherwise cost in building, especially considering the many thousands of Pounds the petty Breach at Dagenham lately cost in stopping. Besides, if such a stupendous Work, as that of diverting the Course of the River Thames, had been effected, surely our Historians, who mention the Construction of this Bridge, must have taken Notice of it. Moreover, could nothing else be brought to invalidate the Relation of the River's being turned at that Time, I think the Space of three-and-thirty Years, which the Bridge took up in building, would be sufficient to destroy so wild a Notion. For, had the People concerned in erecting it, had dry Ground to have built upon; it might have been finished in a tenth Part of the Time, and in a much more durable Manner.

Further, That the River was not turned at the erecting of the present Bridge, I think is demonstrable; for, having carefully surveyed the same in the Year 1730, in Company with the ingenious Mr. Bartholomew Sparruck, the Water-Carpenter thereof, I observed in many Places (where the Stones were washed from among the Sterlings) the mighty Frames of Piles, whereon the Stone Piers or Pillars are founded: The exterior Parts of which consist of huge Piles, which are drove as close as Art can effect; on the Tops whereof are laid long Planks or Beams of Timber, of the Thickness of ten Inches, strongly bolted; whereon is placed the Base of the Stone Pier, nine Feet above the Bed of the River, and three below the Sterlings; and on the Outside of this Wooden Foundation, (and for its Preservation) are drove the Piles, called the Sterlings.

Mr. Sparruck informed me, that he and the Bridge-Mason had frequently taken out of the lowermost Layers of Stones in the Piers, several of the original Stones, which were laid in Pitch, instead of Mortar. This occasioned their being of Opinion, that all the outside Stones of the said Piers, as high as the Sterlings, were originally laid in the same Matter; which was undoubtedly used to prevent the Water's damaging the Work (which, I presume, they went upon at every Tide of Ebb, 'till it was raised above the high-water Mark): But, had the Course of the River been turned, there would not have been the least Occasion for such Mortar. Hence we may observe, that Plaster of Paris was not then in use in this Kingdom.

By what has been said, I presume, it sufficiently appears, that the Building of London-Bridge was not so difficult a Work as to require the turning off the River by an artificial Canal; for, by the above Manner of Construction, the Erecting of this Edifice seems to have been as easy as that of a common Wharf or Quay below the Bridge. Besides, I know that, if a new Bridge was to be erected where the present is situate, by damming off a certain Portion of the River at a Time, sufficient to erect a Pier on, the Builders might conveniently lay a Stone Foundation within the Bed of the River, as I have seen performed at Neuenburg, in the Circle of Lower Saxony; where a stately Stone Bridge was erected over the Wefer, which is one of the greatest and most rapid Rivers in the German Empire; and wherein, during the Erection of the said Bridge, there was, by a Land Flood, upwards of three-and-twenty Feet Water. And our Author has lived to see the Method of laying a Foundation of one of the finest Stone Bridges in the Universe, in this very River Thames, at Wolminster, at about two Miles West of London-Bridge, by digging a Cavity with an Engine, of the Depth of five or six Feet, in the Bed or Bottom of the River, which received a Wooden Case or Frame, Water-proof, and high enough to top the highest Tide, and capacious enough for the Work to be carried on within it. The Water, which filled the Case in its Sinking, was pumped pumped out; and the Cafe remained fixed to each Pier, 'till the Stone Work was raised above high-water Mark. See hereafter the Account of Westminster-Bridge at the Conclusion of Book VII.

Yet, after all this Art and Charges used and expended in the Building of the Stone Bridge, the Citizens did not find themselves so much eased, as might have been expected: For in 1280, about seventy Years after its Finishing, it was become so ruinous, that they were obliged to apply for Relief and Assistance to Kind Edward I. for its Repairs; who in the ninth Year of his Reign granted to the Bridge-Keeper a Brief or Licence to ask and receive the Charity of his well-disposed Subjects throughout the Kingdom towards repairing the same, in this Form:

Pat. 9.
Edw. I.
m. 27.

"Rex omnibus Ballivis & Fidelibus suis, ad quos, &c. Salutem. Dolentibus nobis, &c." Which is translated as follows:

Brief for repairing
the Bridge.

"The King, to all his Bailiffs, and Liege Subjects, to whom these Presents shall come, greeting. It hath been lately represented unto us, and it grieves us to see, that London-Bridge is in so ruinous a Condition, that, unless it be speedily repaired, it must inevitably fall down; and the great Number of Inhabitants dwelling thereon are in great Danger of being destroyed: And that the Work, which, taken in Time, may now be prevented from falling, shall for Want of sufficient Help be reduced to so wretched a Condition, as not to be recovered out of its Ruins. Wherefore We, who are bound to take Care of, and by all gentle Means to provide for, both the publick and private Good, and affectionately to embrace those, whom we perceive to be in need of our Assistance, and to receive them under our Royal Protection: We command and require you, that, when the Keepers of the said costly Bridge aforesaid, or their Messenger, or Agent, shall come to you, authorized by our special Licence and Protection, to collect every where throughout our Realm the Assistance of our pious and well-disposed Subjects, you do admit them friendly at the Contemplation of God, and in Regard of Charity, and for Shew of Devotion, on this Behalf; not bringing on them, or permitting to be brought, Wrongs, Molestations, Loss, Hindrance, or Grievance: And, if any Damage be done them, that ye make them amends without Delay: And that, when the said Keepers, or their Messengers, shall apply for your Assistance in the Repairs of the said Bridge, ye shall cheerfully contribute thereto, according to your respective Abilities. And let each of you strive to out-run the other in such great Works of Charity; for which ye must needs merit of God, and have our Thanks. In Witness whereof, &c. Witness the King at Walsingham, the eighth Day of January."

Besides these general Letters Patents, we find others recorded in particular to the Clergy of all Degrees, earnestly pressing their Contribution to so laudable and necessary a Work, and to exhort the People thereto. But, not finding this Method effectual to raise a sufficient Fund for so expensive a Work, there was Need to consider of other Ways and Means. And accordingly his Majesty, the next Year, issued out other Letters Patent for taking Customs or Toll of all Commodities in London, to be applied to the Repairs of the Bridge, in this Form:

"Rex Majori suo London. Cum nuper propter subitum, &c." In English thus:

"Whereas lately, by Reason of the sudden Ruin of London-Bridge, we commanded, that, associating to you two or three of the most discreet and loyal Men of the City aforesaid, ye should take, until our Parliament after Easter next past, for the Supply of the Reparation of the aforesaid Bridge, a certain Custom, as in these Letters Patents, which we have caused to be made from that Time to you, more fully is contained: We, being willing that the taking of the said Customs be continued longer, command you, that from the Feast of Margaret the Virgin next coming, unto the End of three Years next following, to be completed, ye take the under-written Custom of the aforesaid Bridge: To wit, of every Man on Foot bringing Merchandize, or other Things saleable, and passing over the said Bridge, and he taking himself to other Parts, one Farthing: Of every Horseman passing that Bridge, and he taking himself to other Parts, as aforesaid, with Merchandize, or other saleable Things, one Penny: Of every saleable Pack, carried and passing over the Bridge, one Half-penny. Nor will We, in the mean Time, that any thing be taken there on this Occasion, but in the Subsidy of the Reparation of the Bridge: And our Will is, that the aforesaid Custom shall cease, and become void, at the full End and Term of three Years. Witness the King at Chesler, the sixth Day of July."

Toll to be taken for three Years.

And, to prevent any Evasion to this Royal Grant and Command, his Majesty issued a further Order to the Mayor, and two or three of the most discreet and loyal Citizens associated with him, to take the same Custom of a Penny for every Horseman, and a Half-penny for every Pack, as above, which should pass between London and Southwark, on either Side of the said Bridge, towards the Expence of its Reparation.

We read of the same Toll or Customs continued for the Repairs of the said Bridge in the 27th and 30th Years of Edw. I. And the Briefs or Letters Patents for gathering Contributions for the same Purpose were again issued, both to the People of this Realm in general, and to the Clergy in particular, in the 14th of Edw. II. as you have read to have been done in the 9th Year of his Predecessor.

The Cause of all this Desolation and Ruin to the new Stone Bridge was owing to many Distasters, one of which happened about four Years after the Finishing thereof; when, on the 10th of July, in the Night, a great Fire broke out in Southwark; which taking hold of the Church of our Lady of the Canons, (St. Mary Overy's) the Flames were spread and communicated to the North Side of the Bridge by a strong South Wind, which interrupted the Passage, and stoped the Return of the Multitude of People, who had run from London to help to extinguish the Fire in

Howell's
Londonop.
p. 22.

South-

Southwark: And while the dismayed Crowd were in vain striving to force a Passage to the City through those Flames on the North End of the Bridge, the Fire broke out at the South End also: So that, being inclosed between two great Fires, above three thousand People perished in the Flames, or were drowned by over-loading the Vessels, which ventured to their Assistance. And, to complete its Ruin, five Arches were borne down and destroyed, says my Author, by the Ice and Floods, after the great Frost and deep Snow in the Year 1282.

The Custody of London-Bridge in the Crown.

And the Reason why the Crown interested itself so much in the Repairs and Support of the said Bridge, may be guessed from that Property claimed by King John, who, it appears, wrested it out of the Hands of the Mayor, and gave the Custody thereof to Friar Wyl: From which Time we find it for several Successions at the Disposal of his Royal Successors. Thus King Henry III. in his 54th Year, A. D. 1269, granted the Custody of this Bridge, with its Liberties, and all other Things pertaining thereto, unto his Queen Consort; who, neglecting the necessary Repairs of this Fabrick, and receiving its Rents, Revenues, Duties and Customs to her own Use, obliged the City to complain thereof to the Judges Itinerant at the Tower, in the Reign of King Edward I. and to assert their own Right to the Custody thereof. Nor did the Citizens discontinue their Suit by Quo Warranto, till they regained their ancient Rights and Privileges. In the 10th of this very King there passed a Grant to Henry de Walleis, Mayor, and the Citizens, of a waste Piece of Ground on the North Side of the Church-yard of St. Mary Woolchurch; as also another Piece, on which now stand those Buildings, called the Old-Change, near the East End of St. Paul's Church-Yard: And that Piece of Ground, near the Convent of the Friars Minors, in Grey-Friars, was granted to the same Mayor and Citizens by Edw. III. for the Repairs of this Bridge: Which several Grants confirm the Opinion, that the City had then recovered and maintained its ancient Right to the Custody of the Bridge, and Management of its Revenues and Repairs.

Tower of the Bridge built.

The Tower at the North Side of the Draw-bridge, contrived to give Passage for Ships with Provisions to Queenhithe, and to resist the Attempts of an Enemy, was begun to be built in the Year 1426, and Mayoralty of John Reinwell, Esq; But the other Buildings on the Bridge increased very slowly; for in 1471, when Thomas Fauconbridge, the Bastard, besieged this Bridge, the Gate and the Buildings thereon, there were no more than thirteen Houses in all. However, in Stow's Days, both Sides were built up; so that the whole Length, as it does at present, had the Appearance of a large well-built Street; there being left on purpose only three Openings, with Stone Walls, and Iron Gates over them, for a Prospect, East and West, on the Thames, over three of the Arches, which are wider than the rest, and usually called the navigable Locks, because Vessels of considerable Burthen have used to pass through them. One of these, next the Gate, is called the Rock Lock: That under the Opening, where once was the Draw-bridge, is called the Draw-bridge Lock: And the third, near the Chapel, is called St. Mary's Lock. There is a fourth between St. Magnus's Church and the first Vacancy Northward, called the King's Lock; through which the King, in his Passage through Bridge, did wont to go.

In the Year 1725, when the Project was formed for erecting a Bridge cross the Thames at Westminster, Mr. Henry Garbrand, Deputy-Comptroller of London-Bridge, and Mr. Bartholomew Sparrack, the Water-Carpenter thereof, measured the River at this Place, where it appeared to be nine hundred and fifteen Feet and one Inch in Breadth, which is the Length of the said Bridge; the Height whereof being forty-three Feet and seven Inches; the Width of the Street thereon, twenty; and the Depth of the Houses on both Sides, three-and-fifty Feet; together, seventy-three Feet. It consists of twenty unequilateral Arches, which are capacious enough to permit Vessels of considerable Burthen with Goods to pass under them: But they are too many; for by the great Number of Piers, and Extension of the Sterlings, the Course of the Water is greatly obstructed, the Rapidity of the Stream increased, and the Charge of Repairs much enhanced; as will best appear from the following Accounts, compared: By the vast Disparity of which, the great Rise of Labour, and Price of Materials, will easily be computed.

In the fifth Year of Edward the Fourth, Anno 1465, Peter Aldford and Peter Caldecote, Wardens of London-Bridge, paid, on Account of the same, the Sum of seven hundred and thirty-one Pounds, ten Shillings and three Half-pence.

Stow's Sar. Lond.

Arnold, in his Chronicle, an Author of great Credit, and older than Stow, gives us the following Account of the Rents, and their Application for the Support of this Bridge in the Year 1482, &c.

Stryp.
Stow. Sur.

The Continuator of Mr. Stow, who signs himself R. B. assures us, That the Bridge continued in this State 'till the Year 1632; when, on the 13th of Feb. the Buildings from the North End of the Bridge to the Vacancy on both Sides, containing forty-two Houses, were burnt down in less than eight Hours; the Thames being frozen almost over, which occasioned a Scarcity of Water. This Fire was owing to a Maid-Servant's Carelessness, who set a Tub of hot Sea-coal Ashes under a Pair of Stairs, at a Needle-Maker's, near St. Magnus Church.

Buildings on London Bridge,
how rebuilt
after the Fire in 1666.

In this Condition the Bridge remained for several Years; the Confusions in the State interrupting the Government of the City, and putting a full Stop to all public Improvements, in order to supply the military Demands for Money. Some Part, indeed, of these Ruins, next the City, were rebuilt of Timber, in the Years 1645 and 1646, in a very substantial and beautiful Manner, with Houses three Stories high, besides Cellars, contrived within and between the Piers; and stately Platforms, leaded, and railed with Ballasters, over the Houses. But Mr. Howel, in 1657, bewails that the whole Ruins were not then rebuilt, there being no Object, as he writes, (after the Church of St. Paul, then in a ruinous Condition) that could conduce more to the Glory and Ornament of this renowned City: Forasmuch as this Bridge may be called The Bridge of the World, taken together in all its Parts and Appendages.

Nor had this Ornament and Glory of the City recovered from its ruinous Condition in 1666, when again it suffered in the general Conflagration of this renowned City: Most of the Buildings thereon being totally consumed, except a few at the South End, as ancient as the Days of King Jehu, and the Chapel: And the very Stone-Work upon which they stood, was so battered and weakened thereby, that it cost the Bridge-house fifteen hundred Pounds to make good the Damage of the Piers and Arches, before the Leaseholders could attempt to rebuild the Premises destroyed by the Fire.

But the Stone-Work was no sooner secured, than a sufficient Number of Tenants offered; who conditioned with the Bridge-house for Building-Leases of sixty-one Years, at the Rate of ten Shillings per Foot running, yearly, and to build after such a Form and substantial Manner, as was prescribed: Which was carried into Execution so vigorously, that in five Years the North End was all completely finished, with Houses four Stories high, and a Street of twenty Feet broad between Side and Side. And then, in order to make the South End answerable thereto, the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, and Commoners, appointed for the letting of the City and Bridge-house Lands, measuring how many Feet every Proprietor had in the Front of his House, considering what annual Rent he paid to the Bridge-house, and what Number of Years his Lease had yet to run; then calling over those whose Leases were expired, and those whose Leases were near expiring; they treated with the Proprietors to engage them to rebuild in the same Form as the Houses were finished at the North End of the Bridge; purchasing at a valuable Consideration such of the Premises, as the Tenants were not able to build; and allowing to those who agreed to build, not only a longer Time to come of their Leases, but an Abatement of the Rent, answerable to the Cost of their Rebuilding; besides laying out a thousand Pounds on the Repairs of the Piers and Arches, on which the new Houses were to be erected. In which State, completed in about five Years more, this Bridge was the Admiration of all that beheld it; and, if considered in its Houses, Inhabitants, and the Trade carried on amongst them, we may pronounce it the most stately Bridge in the whole World, and justly deserving the following Encomium:

The same paraphrased by JAMES HOWELL, Esq;

When Neptune from his Billows London spy'd,
Brought proudly thither by a high Spring-Tide,
As thro' a floating Wood he steer'd along,
And dancing Castles cluster'd in a Throng;
When he beheld a mighty Bridge give Law
Unto his Surges, and their Fury awe;
When such a Shelf of Cataracts did roar,
As if the Thames with Nile had chang'd her Shore;

Howell's
Paraphrase.

When he such massy Walls, such Towers did eye,
Such Posts, such Irons, upon his Back to lye;
When such vast Arches he observ'd, that might Nineteen Rialtos make for Depth and Height:
When the Cerulean God these Things survey'd,
He shook his Trident, and astonish'd said,
Let the whole Earth now all the Wonders count,
This Bridge of Wonders is the Paramount.

This Bridge is not only serviceable to the Publick in the several Particulars above-mentioned; but it has been converted to other Uses, to supply the City with Meal and Water, by Mills and other Works erected under the Arches at the South End, in such a Manner, as not to interrupt or disturb the Navigation of the River. The Mills for grinding Corn were erected in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth: And, though they were so contrived and fixed by the City Magistrates, that no just Complaint could lie against them, and with the pure Intention to remedy the Price of grinding Corn in Time of Dearth, and the exorbitant Price of Meal, at such Times exacted by Badgers or Meal-Dealers; the City was presented to the Queen's-Bench for a Nuisance by the Engroffers, though without Effect: For the Commissioners appointed by her Majesty reported those Mills to be nothing hurtful to the Bridge nor River in any Respect. Afterwards, in the Year 1582, one Peter Morice, a Dutchman, contrived a Water-Engine, or Mill, to supply the Citizens with Thames Water; which, as it was improved by Mr. Sorocold, about fifty Years ago, and since by that great Master of Hydraulicks, Mr. Hadley, is allowed by all Judges of such Machines to be far superior to the Water-Engine so much famed at Marly in France; which is so ill-designed in its Cranks and some other Parts, that we are told it costs twenty-five thousand Pounds per Ann. to keep it in Repair.

Description
of the Water-Works.

This Machine at first was made to force the Water no higher than Gracechurch-street. This Engineer obtained from the City a Lease for five hundred Years, at the yearly Rent of ten Shillings, for the Use of the Thames Water, and one Arch and a Place for fixing his Mill upon. And the Citizens, soon experiencing the Benefit of this Invention, granted him a like Lease two Years after for another Arch: By which Means he grew very wealthy; and it continued in his Family, under various Improvements, 'till the Year 1701; when the Property was sold to one Richard Seams, Citizen and Goldsmith; Morice having first, at the Purchaser's Request, obtained another Lease of the fourth Arch, for the further Improvement of the said Works, after selling the whole Property thereof for thirty-six thousand Pounds. Mr. Seams, to prevent all Disputes with the Citizens, then applied to the City for a Confirmation of his Bargain with Morice, and obtained a fresh Lease from them for the Term unexpired of Morice's Lease, at the yearly Rent of twenty Shillings, and three hundred Pounds Fine. After which he divided the whole Property into three hundred Shares, at five hundred Pounds each Share, and made it a Company. The Wheels placed under the Arches are moved by the common Stream of the Tide-Water of the River Thames. The Axle-tree of the Water-Wheel is nineteen Feet long, three Feet Diameter; in which are four Sets of Arms, eight in each Place; on which are fixed four Rings, on Sets of Felloes, in Diameter twenty Feet, and twenty-six Floats, fourteen Feet long, and eighteen Inches deep.

The Wheel lies, with its two Gudgeons or Center-Pins, upon two Brasses, fixed on two great Levers, whose Fulcrum or Top is an arched Piece of Timber, the Levers being made circular on their lower Sides to an Arch, and kept in their Places by two arching Studs, fixed in a Stock through two Mortises in the Lever.

The Wheel is by these Levers made to rise and fall with the Tide, in this Manner: The Levers are sixteen Feet long, i. e. from the Fulcrum to the Gudgeon of the Water-Wheel six Feet, and thence to the Arch ten Feet. To the Bottom of this Arch is fixed a strong triple Chain, made like a Watch-Chain, but the Links are arched to a Circle of one Foot Diameter, having Notches or Teeth to take hold of the Leaves of a Pinion of cast Iron ten Inches Diameter, with eight Teeth in it, moving on an Axis. The other loose End of this Chain has a large Weight hanging at it, to help to counterpoise the Wheel, and to preserve the Chain from sliding on the Pinion. On the same Axis is fixed a Cog-Wheel six Feet Diameter, with forty-eight Cogs. To this is applied a Trundle or Pinion of six Rounds, or Teeth: And upon the same Axis is fixed another Cog-Wheel of fifty-one Cogs, into which a Trundle of six Rounds works; on whose Axis is a Winch or Windlass, by which one Man with the two Windlasses raises or lets down the Wheel, as there is Occasion.

By means of this Machine, the Strength of an ordinary Man will raise about fifty Tons Weight. But, besides these Levers and Wheels, there is a Cog-Wheel eight Feet Diameter, fixed near the End of the great Axis, and working into a Trundle of four Feet and a half Diameter, and twenty Rounds; whose Axis or Spindle is of cast Iron, four Inches Diameter, and lying in Brasses at each End: A quadruple Crank of cast Iron, six Inches square, each of the Necks being turned one Foot from the Center, which is fixed in Brasses at each End, in two Headstocks fastened down by Caps. The End of one of these Cranks is placed close abutting to the End of the Axle-tree last-mentioned, and fixed thereunto by an Iron Wedge drove through a Slit in them both for that Purpose. The four Necks of the Crank have each an Iron Spear or Rod fixed at their upper Ends to the respective Lever, within three Feet of the End; which Levers are twenty-four Feet long, moving on Centers in a Frame, at the End of which are jointed four Rods, with their Forcing-Plugs, working into four Iron Cylinders, cast four Feet three Quarters long, seven Inches Bore above, and nine below, where the Valves lie, fastened by screwed Flanches over the four Holes of a hollow Trunk of cast Iron, having four Valves in it just at the Joining-on at the Bottom of the Barrels or Cylinders, and at one End a Sucking-Pipe or Grate, going into the Water, which supplies all the four Cylinders alternately.

From the lower Part of these Cylinders come out Necks, turning upwards arch-wise, whose upper Parts are cast with Flanches to screw up to a Trunk; which Necks have Bores of seven Inches Diameter, and Holes in the Trunk above, communicating with each of them; at which Joining are placed four Valves. This Trunk is cast with four Bosses, or Protuberances, standing out against the Valves, to give room for their Opening and Shutting; and on the upper Side are four Holes stopped with Plugs, which take out, on Occasion, to cleanse the Valves. One End of this Trunk is stopped by a Plug; and Iron Pipes are joined by Flanches to the other End, through which the Water is forced up to any Height or Place required.

Besides these four Forcers, there are four more placed at the other Ends of the Levers, which work in the same Manner, with Rods and Cylinders, as above. And the same Works are repeated at the other End of the Water-Wheel, viz. a Cog-Wheel, a Trundle, a Spindle, a Crank, Sucking-Pipes, four Levers, eight Forcing-Rods, eight Cylinders, &c. four Trunks, and two Forcing-Pipes: So that one single Wheel works sixteen

Present State of the Buildings of the Bridge.

The Building-Leases being expired, the City, ever mindful of the Safety of their Fellow-Subjects, and prompted by the many Misfortunes occasioned by the numerous Carriages, which are continually passing and repassing this great Thoroughfare, where it had been forgot to make Provision for a Foot-Way, projected a Plan for rebuilding this Street over the Bridge with Colonades below, so that Foot-Passengers might be secured both from the Horses and Carriages, and sheltered from the Weather. Part of this Plan was a few Years ago carried into Execution, from the first Opening on the N. E. Side; and its Advantages are so obvious, that it is the Desire of every Well-wisher to the City to see it completed. The Gate at the South End being greatly damaged by a Fire, which began near the Corner of St. Olave's-street, at a Brush-maker's, and destroyed several adjacent Houses, on the 8th of Sept. in the Year 1725, is also rebuilt of Stone, with two Posterns for the Convenience of Foot-Passengers; and the Passage was widened from eleven to eighteen Feet for Carriages in the Year 1728, when this Gate was finished, at the Charge of the City.

In the Year 1722, in the Mayoralty of Sir Gerard Conyers, to preserve the Passage free on the Bridge, the Court of Lord-Mayor, Aldermen and Common-Council published the following Order:

Orders for Carriages passing over the Bridge.

"This Court being sensible of the great Inconveniences and Mischiefs which happen by
"the disorderly Leading and Driving of Cars,
"Carts, Coaches, and other Carriages, over
"London-Bridge, whereby the common Passage
"there is greatly obstructed, doth strictly order
"and injoin (pursuant to several former Orders
"made by this Court, for Prevention of those
"Mischiefs) That three sufficient and able Persons

"be appointed, and constantly maintained; one
"by the Governors of Christ's Hospital, one by
"the Inhabitants of the Ward of Bridge Within,
"and the other by the Bridge-Masters: Which "three Persons are to give their diligent and
"daily Attendance at each End of the Bridge,
"and by all good Means to hinder and to pre"vent the said Inconveniences; and for that "Purpose, to direct and take Care that all Carts,
"Coaches, and other Carriages, coming out of "Southwark into this City, do keep all along on "the West Side of the said Bridge; and all Carts
"and Coaches, and other Carriages, going out "of this City, do keep all along on the East "Side of the said Bridge; and that no Carman
"be suffered to stand a-cross the said Bridge, to "load or to unload; and that they shall appre"hend all such who shall be refractory, or offend
"herein, and carry them before some of his Ma"jesty's Justices of the Peace for this City and "Liberties, to be dealt with according to Law.
"And further, to prevent the aforesaid Obstruc"tions, it is ordered, That the Collector of the "Tolls upon the said Bridge shall take Care
"that the said Duties be collected without "making a Stay of the Carts, for which the "same is to be paid."

In the same Year, and on the same Day of the Month (May 12) on which the Draw-bridge, then decayed, had been laid just fifty Years before (viz. May 12, 1672) the said old Drawbridge was taken up, and a new one began to be laid, which was completed within the short Space of five Days.

King Henry the Second having concluded a Treaty with the King of France for an Expedition to the Holy Land, the Parliament, to enable him to put the same in Execution, granted him the Tenth of all Estates: And, for the greater Dispatch in raising the Money, Henry summoned a certain Number of the most substantial Men from the several Towns and Cities of the Kingdom, whom, upon Pain of Imprisonment without Bail or Mainprize, he compelled to pay the Sums assessed upon their respective Towns and Cities. On which Occasion two hundred of the most eminent and wealthy Citizens appeared for London, and readily advanced the Sum required.

The following Charter, granted to the Citizens of London by Henry the Second, being without Date, I cannot ascertain the Time when 'twas given.

Roy. Char.
Lond.

Charter of K. Henry
the Second.

"Henry, King of England; Duke of Normandy and Aquitain, and Earl of Anjou; To all Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, Justices, Sheriffs, Ministers, and all his faithful Subjects, French and English, of all England, greeting.

"Know ye, that I have granted to my Citizens of London, that none of them plead without the Walls of the City of London, upon any Pleas, except only Pleas of foreign Tenures (my Monies and Officers excepted). Also I grant to them Acquittal of Murder within the City and Portoken thereof: And that none of them shall wage Battle: And of the Pleas of the Crown they may discharge themselves, according to the old Usage of the City. No Man shall take Lodging by Force, or by Delivery of the Marshal.

"And also I have granted to them, that all the Citizens of London shall be quit from Toll and Lastage, throughout all England, and the Ports of the Sea; and that none shall be adjudged for Amerciements of Money, but according to the Law of the City, which they had in the Time of King Henry my Grandfather: And that there shall be no Miskening in any Plea within the City: And that the Hustings shall be kept once a Week; and they justly have their Lands and Tenures and Premises, and all their Debts, whosoever do owe them: And that Right be done to them, according "to the Custom of the City, of all their Lands and Tenures which be in the City; and of all their Debts, which were lent at London.

"Also I do grant to them, that they may have their Huntings wheresoever they had the same in the Time of King Henry my Grandfather. And if any in all England shall take any Custom or Toll of or from the Men of London, after he shall fail of Right, the Sheriff of London may take Goods thereof at London.

"Furthermore also, for the Advancement of the said City, I have granted to them, that they shall be free and quit of Bridtoll, Childwite, Jeregive and Scotall; so as the Sheriff of London, or any other Bailiff, may take no Scotall.

"These aforesaid Customs I do grant unto them, and all their Liberties and free Customs which they had in the Time of Henry my Grandfather, wheresoever they had them more better and free. Wherefore I will and steadfastly command, that they and their Heirs may have and hold all these Things aforesaid, by Inheritance, of me and my Heirs.

"Witneis the Archbishop of Canterbury, Robert Bishop of London, Philip Bishop of Bath, Edward Bishop of Exon, Thomas Chancellor, Ricb. of Newbery, R. of Warren, Ricb. of St. Wal. Mamot. Ricb. of Lucy, Conor, Son of Garold; Maudel Bisset, Loc. Bailiffs, at Westm."

This Charter is a Confirmation of the City Liberties and Immunities, with an Addition of, 1. An Acquittal of Murder for the Ward of Portoken, which seems as if that Ward had not been fully ascertained to the City till this Time, seeing it was precluded this Advantage in the Charter of Henry the First. 2. For the greater Ease and Benefit of the Citizens, it is granted, that they shall be free from Bridtoll, Childwite, Jeregive and Scotale. Bridtoll is a Toll paid for passing of Bridges: Childwite is a Fine taken of a Bondswoman, for suffering herself to be got with Child, without the Consent of her Lord or Master: Jeregive is a Bribe given to the King's or other Officers for Connivance, and being favourable in their several Offices: And Scotale or Scotales were Abuses put upon the King's Subjects by his Officers, who kept Alehouses, invited the People to drink, and fraudulently extorted Money from them, under Pretence of preventing their informing against them for some imaginary Crimes. Those Miscreants seem to have been countenanced in their villainous Practices by some great Men; seeing the City of London could not get rid of that Vermin, without a special Clause inserted in their Charter.

The Day (Sept. 2, 1189) preceeding the Coronation of Richard the First, surnamed Cœur de Lyon, Intimation was given to the Jews, not to appear at that Ceremony: However, many endeavouring to satisfy their Curiosity, by carrying Presents to the King, attempted to get into the Abbey Church of St. Peter's Westminster; and, being repulsed by the Royal Domesticks, a Rumour spread among the Populace, that the King had given Orders for the intire Destruction of that People. Upon which, the Mob, in a most cruel and barbarous Manner, fell upon the poor defenceless

The wicked Authors of those horrid and unparalleled Barbarities went not long unpunished; for the Day after the King caused the Ring-leaders thereof to be apprehended, and hanged immediately, in some measure to atone for their detestable Villainy: Notwithstanding, the false and furious Zeal of the ignorant, bigotted Monks applauded this hellish Action, and deemed it meritorious to destroy all those that were not of their Communion.

At this Coronation, the great Magistrate of London, who then went by the Name of Bailiff, is particularly mentioned to have officiated as Chief Butler of the Kingdom: An Office, no doubt, exercised heretofore by his Predecessors in the chief Magistracy of this City; since we shall find hereafter, that it was claimed by Prescription, and allowed to be their Right, in the succeeding Reigns of *Rich. Richard, soon after his Coronation, resolved to execute the Treaty his late Father had concluded with the King of France, in respect to an Expedition to Palestine, or the Holy Land. For which End he directed his Precepts to Henry de Cornhill, Sheriff of London, to provide a certain Number of Helmets, Steel Caps, Shields, Knives, Spears, Iron, Cordevan, Pavilions, and other military Accoutrements; together with silken Habits, Mitres, Caps, Dalmatiques, Coats, and Wine for the King's Use: And, towards defraying the vast Expence of this great Armament, Richard contrived all Ways and Means to raise Money, by alienating the Crown Lands, and selling additional Liberties to Cities and Towns; inasmuch that some of the Nobility took the Freedom to tell him, that he acted therein very much to his own Dishonour, and to the great Prejudice of his Successors. To which he replied, That, in a Time of Necessity, 'twas no bad Policy for a Man to make Use of his own: Adding, That if he could light on a proper Purchaser, he would even sell the City of London.

Order for preventing Fires.

The great and destructive Fires which frequently happened in this City, to the great Damage of the Citizens, being chiefly occasioned by the Houses built of Wood, and thatched with Straw or Reeds; 'twas by the Court of the Mayor and Aldermen ordained, that all Houses, thereafter to be erected in London and the Liberties thereof, should be built of Stone, with Party-Walls of the same, and covered with either Slates or Tiles, to prevent such dreadful Calamities for the future. For which Purpose was made the following Order:

Stryp. Ed.
Stow. Ser.
A.D. 1191

"Henry Fitz-Alwine being then Mayor" admitted to the chief Magistracy by the Name of Bailiff, Rich. I. according to Arnold "it was provided and ordained by the discreeter Men of the City, to appease Contentions that might arise among Neighbours in the City, upon Inclosure between Land and Land, That twelve Men, Aldermen of the City, should be chosen in full Hustings, and there sworn,

"that they would perform it, and come at the Mayor's Summons, unless hindered by some reasonable Cause; and to be present with the Mayor, for executing the aforesaid Business: And this was decided and confirmed in full Hustenge."

By these Jurats were regulated the Dimensions of Party-Walls, which were to be of Stone, and at least sixteen Feet in Height, and three in Thickness. Whence I imagine, that the Citizens Houses then were not above that Altitude. These Commissioners were also to give Directions about Girders, Windows, Gutters and Wells.

Just after, the Earl of Moreton (afterwards King John) attended by the Archbishop of Roan in Normandy, and most of the Nobility and Bishops, together with the Citizens of London, convened in St. Paul's Church-yard, to deliberate upon the male Administration of William Longchamp Bishop of Ely, Chancellor, and one of the Regents of the Kingdom; who, by an unanimous Resolution of the Convention, was degraded from all his Offices, for his tyrannical Government and contumacious Deportment.

An evil Minister of State deposed.

The Earl, Archbishop, and others of the King's Justices, or Commissioners of the Regency, were so highly pleased with the ready Concurrence of the Londoners to the late Resolution, that they not only confirmed to the Citizens their Community or ancient Privileges, but, in Conjunction with most of the Nobility, swore to uphold and maintain the same during the King's Pleasure. Whereupon the Citizens swore to be true and faithful to their Sovereign King Richard, and his Heirs; and that, he dying without Issue, they would receive his Brother John as King, swearing Fealty to him against all others, saving that due to their Sovereign Lord King Richard. Hence 'tis observable, that nothing of Consequence relating to the State, was undertaken without the Consent of the Londoners, as appears in this great Affair of deposing an iniquitous Prime Minister.

A certain Writer takes this Concession of the Regency to have been the first Grant of a Community to the Citizens; but without the least Countenance from our Author, for such an Opinion.

King Richard, after his Return from Palestine, and unjust Imprisonment by that avaricious Emperor Henry the Sixth, was received into London with the greatest Pomp and Magnificence, and the inexpressible Joy of the Citizens. The Richness of the Cavalcade was so excessive, that it occasioned a German Nobleman, who attended the King, inadvertently to say, that, had the Emperor known the immense Wealth of England, he would have insisted upon a much greater Ransom.

Richard, to wipe off the Stain of his Imprisonment, resolved to be crowned a second Time. At this Coronation the Citizens of Winchester disputed with those of London, the Right to the Office of Chief Butler; though the same had been executed by the Londoners at the late Coronation: But a free Gift of 200 Marks to the King obtained his Confirmation of this Privilege to the latter. Besides, King Richard, in Consideration of the good Deportment of his loyal and faithful Citizens of London during his long Absence,

King Richard I.
Charter of Confirmation.

"Richard, by the Grace of God, King of England, Duke of Normandy, and Earl of Anjou; To his Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, Justices, Sheriffs, Ministers, and all others his faithful (French and English) People, greeting.

"Know ye, that we have granted to our Citizens of London, that none of them may plead without the Walls of the City of London, for any Pleas, saving Pleas of foreign Tenures, (except our Monies and Ministers): Also we have granted to them Acquittal of Murder within the City, and in Portsoken; and that none of them may wage Battle; and that they may discharge themselves of Pleas belonging to the Crown, according to the antient Custom of the City; and that none may take any Lodgings within the Walls of the City by Force, or by Delivery of the Marshal.

"This also we have granted to them, that all the Citizens of London be free from Toll and Lestage, throughout all England, and the Sea-Ports; and that none be adjudged of Amerciaments of Money, but according to the Law of the City, which they had in the Time of King Henry, Grandfather to Henry our Father; and that there be no Miskinning in any Place within the City; and that the Hustings be kept only once a Week; and they justly have all their Lands and Tenures and Premises, and all other their Debts, whosoever do owe them to them; and that Right be done to them, according to the Custom of the City, of all their Lands and Tenures, which they have within the City; and of all their Debts which shall be lent at London, and of Promises there made: The Pleas shall be holden at London; and, if any in all England shall take Toll or Custom of the Men of London, after he shall fail of Right, the Sheriff of London may take Oods thereof at London.

"Also we have granted to them, that they may have their Huntings wheresoever they had the same in the Time of King Henry, Grandfather to Henry our Father. Furthermore also, for the Advancement of the City, we have granted to them, that they all be acquitted of all Bridtoll, Chilkwite, Jeregrive and Scotale; so that no Sheriff of London, or any other Bailiff, shall make any Scotale. The said Customs we do grant to them, and all other Liberties and free Customs which they had in the Time of King Henry, Grandfather unto Henry our Father, when as they more better and freely had the same. Wherefore we will and stedfastly command, that they and their Heirs have and hold all their Things aforesaid of Us and our Heirs.

"Witness Hubert, Archbishop of Canterbury, R. Bishop of Lincoln; Ralph, Earl of Chester; R. Earl of Clarence; Will. Marshall, Reg. Bigot, Jeopbery, Son of Peter; Hugh Bardolph, Will. Brewer, and Will. Warren. Given by the Hand of William, Bishop of Ely, our Chancellor, at Winchester, the

Soon after, the Citizens of London paid towards the King's Ransom the Sum of fifteen hundred Marks.

Next Year a great Sedition happened in London; the Consequence whereof, had it not been carefully and timely prevented, might have proved fatal to the City. For,

A certain Fellow, named William Fitz-Osbert, alias Long-beard, (which he not only wore in Affection of Gravity, but likewise in Disdain to the Norman mode of Shaving) tho', by the Deformity of his Person, he was rendered as mean in Aspect as he was in Quality; yet he was of so powerful an Elocution, that he set up as an Advocate for the meaner Sort of Citizens, in Opposition to the Oppressions of the Rich; and having frequently pleaded before the Magistrates in their Behalf, he became very popular; and obtained their Affections to such a Degree, that he imagined he could command and lead them when and wheresoever he pleased.

The Sedition of William Long-beard.

Fitz-Osbert's Project being ripe for Execution, he began to act in a more publick Manner, by incensing the Populace against a certain Aid or Tallage, that was to be raised for the Use of the Publick; alledging it was very unjustly proportioned, and that the Rich were in a manner excused, while the Poor were to be burdened with almost the whole. This false and wicked Insinuation had the desired Effect; for it soon occasioned a very great Commotion at St. Paul's Church, in which many Citizens lost their Lives.

Ibid.

Hubert, Archbishop of Canterbury, then the King's Justiciary, no sooner received Advice of this Sedition, than he summoned Long-beard, the Ringleader thereof, to appear before him; who accordingly did, at the Time and Place prefixed; but with such a numerous Attendance, that the Justiciary, instead of proceeding to Extremities, judged it more consistent with the Safety of his own Person, to dismiss him only with a gentle Admonition, not to appear in any unlawful Assembly for the future.

Ibid.

These dangerous Proceedings struck such a Terror into the better Sort of Citizens, that they were continually upon their Guard; for no Citizen of Distinction was safe, either in Person or Estate, by the wicked Artifices of this perfidious, turbulent and implacable Villain, who did not spare his own loving and generous Brother, (that had carefully brought up this Monster at his own Expence) who had by his false Accusations like to have fallen a Sacrifice to the Rabble.

Ibid.

However, though this was not deemed a proper Time to punish Fitz-Osbert, Care was taken to employ a certain Number of Men to seize his Person, when there were but few to defend him. An Opportunity soon offered; when they endeavouring to apprehend him, he with his small Company made a desperate Defence; and having gained the Church of St. Mary-le-Bow in Cheapside, they fortified the Steeple, and resolved to defend themselves till further Assistance came, Long-beard's Condition was no sooner known, than the Populace assembled from all Parts of London, to rescue their Captain and Counsellor. However, the Magistrates of the City, by dint of Reason, prevailed upon the Mob to desist, and to return to their respective Habitations.

Mat. Par.
Hist. Ang.
A.D. 1196

In this dangerous Posture of Affairs, no Time being to be lost, a Fire was made in the lower Part of the said Steeple, to smother or burn them out; which had so good an Effect, that the Rioters were soon compelled to abandon their Place of Retreat; and by a desperate Sally they endeavoured to fight their Way, and escape: But, meeting with a powerful Resistance, Long-beard was soon taken, and, for his better Security, imprisoned in the Tower of London; where, the Day after, he and eight of his Accomplices were tried and condemned, and the Day following drawn by the Feet through the City, to the Elms in Smithfield, where they were executed, and afterwards hung in Chains; which effectually put an End to his wicked Designs.

His Execution.

Ibid.

But, Fitz-Osbert's Body being soon after stolen away, it was artfully reported by a designing Priest, a Relation of his, that divers Miracles were wrought at the Place of his Execution. This brought great Numbers of People thither, some of whom carried away, as so many Relicks, all the Ground whereon his Blood was spilt; and others continued there during the Night in the most intense Devotion. This obliged the Government, to prevent any fatal Consequence that might attend those frantick Proceedings, to place a Guard at the Place; which quickly dispersed the deluded Enthusiasts, who returned to their respective Homes in great Confusion. And, for the more effectual undeceiving the People, Fitz-Osbert's Life was published, to expose his Villainies; which soon divested him of all Pretences to Sanctity, detected the Fraud and the villainous Imposture of the Priest, who was excommunicated; and, the deluded Citizens being fully convinced, Peace and Quiet were restored in the City.

King Richard, in the eighth Year of his Reign, granted to the Citizens of London the following Charter, for which they paid him the Sum of fifteen hundred Marks.

Roy. Char.
Lond.

"Richard, by the Grace of God, King of England, Duke of Normandy, and Earl of Anjou; To his Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, Justices, Sheriffs, Stewards, Castle-keepers, Justices, Constables, Bailiffs, Ministers, and all his faithful Subjects, greeting.
"Know ye all, that we for the Health of our Soul, and for the Soul's Health of King Henry our Father, and all our Ancestors Souls, and also for the Commonweal of our City of London, and of all our Realm, have granted and steadfastly commanded, that all Wares [Wears] that are in the Thames, be moved, wheresoever they shall be within the Thames; and that no Wares be put any where within the Thames; also we have clearly quit-claimed all that, which the Keeper of our Tower of London was wont yearly to receive of the said Wares. Wherefore we will and steadfastly command, that no Keeper of the said Tower, at any Time hereafter, shall exact any Thing of any one, neither molest or burthen, or any Demand make of any Person, by reason of the said Wares: For it is manifest to us, and by our Right Reverend Father

"Hubert, Archbishop of Canterbury, and other faithful Subjects, it is sufficiently given us to understand, that great Detriment and Discommodity hath grown to our said City of London, and also to the whole Realm, by occasion of the said Wares: Which Thing, to the Intent it may continue for ever firm and stable, we do fortify by the Inscription of this present Page, and the putting to our Seal:

"These being Witnesses, John of Worcester, Hugh of Coventry, Bishops; John Earl of Moreton, Ralph Earl of Chester, Robert Earl of Leicester, William Earl of Arundel, William of St. Mary's Church, Peter Son of Hereb, Matthew his Brother, Simon of Ryma, Scherio de Quincero. Given by the Hand of Eustace Dean of Salisbury, Vice-Chancellor, then Agent at the Isle of Audley, the fourteenth Day of July, in the eighth Year of our Reign."

In this Charter, 'tis observable, the Citizens of London are impowered to remove all Wears out of the River Thames, by which Nuisances the Navigation of this incomparable River was greatly obstructed: And, as a farther Encouragement to the Citizens, the King resigned all his Right and Pretensions to the annual Duties arising thereby, which were paid to the Officers of his Tower of London.

This is the first Charter by which the City claims its Jurisdiction and Conservancy of the River Thames: And therefore, I shall insert first a Description of this celebrated River; and, after a general Survey of it, as far as it lies within the Care and Inspection of the Lord-Mayor, I shall set forth his Right and Authority to the Conservancy of the said River.

Description
of the Thames.

The River of Thames, if considered in its Rise, Course, Extent, Navigation, Produce, and the incredible Number of People it wholly maintains, is not to be equalled by any other River in the whole World. It rises in a small Spring near the Village of Hemble, in the Parish of Cubbery or Coberley, a little South-west of Cirencester, in Gloucestershire; and, taking its Course directly Eastward, it becomes navigable at Lechlade, for Vessels of fifty Tons, and there also unites with the River Colne, about one hundred and thirty-eight Miles from London; to which it runs by the City of Oxford, the Towns of Abington and Dorchester, joining the Ouse by the Way: And at Thame in Oxfordshire it takes the Name of Thamesis, or Thames. After which it takes its Course through Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Surry, Middlesex, Essex and Kent, towards the Northern Ocean, and washes the Towns of Wallingford, Reading, Henley, Marlow, Maidenhead, Windsor, Eaton, Staines, Cobridge, Weybridge, Shepperton, Wotton, Sundbury, Hampton, Thames-Ditton, Kingston, Twickenham, Richmond, Shene, Uxworth, Kew, Brentford, Mortlake, Barnes, Chiswick, Hammersmith, Putney, Fulham, Wandsworth, Battersea, Chelsea, Lambeth, Westminster City, Southwark, and the City of London; and from hence both Shores thereof may be called a continued City, for the Number of Houses, Trade, and opulent inhabitants, that live in Horseferrydown, Wapping, Rotterhithe, Shadwell, Ratcliff, Limehouse, Deptford, and Greenwich: To these we may add the Hamlet of Poplar and Blackwall, or Cold or Coal-Harbour,

Its Course.

Harbour, Woolwich, Erith, Grays, Gravesend, and Milton: And in this Tract or Course this River swallows up the River Kennet, the Thetis or Tide, the Colne, Guildford River, the Brane or Brene, the Brome, the Lee or Lea, the Derwent, and Medway. In the whole, therefore, we compute this River to run one hundred and eighty Miles, at least, from its Source to its Fall.

In Navigation.

As to its Navigation and Produce; what Nation can boast of its Equal? The vast Number of Barges and Boats, as well of Pleasure as of Burthen, above Bridge, which continually pass up and down this River, for the Convenience and Supply of all the adjacent Countries, afford a most agreeable Sight. And it is impossible for Words to describe the Traffick carried on below Bridge: Where every Tide produceth a World of Wonders, and no sooner removeth one Fleet to the several Parts of the known World, but it bringeth in another Freight of Merchandize. I may also truly add, how strong is it, by its naval Force, in its own Defence, as well as thereby almost terrible Abroad? and how great an Influence does it there give us, exclusive of the Benefits and Security we also reap thereby at Home? Which brings to my View a pleasing Reflection, that every true Briton must have, when he considers what a trifling insignificant Tract of Land this Island is, compared to the rest of the Globe, or indeed to most, or all, of the other Kingdoms of the World; and yet how much stronger, more powerful in its Influence, abundantly better supplied with every Necessary within itself, as well as from Abroad, than almost any other Part of the known Globe? And all this, I may venture to affirm, is principally, if not solely, owing to its Navigation and naval Force: Nor can I forget what that worthy and good Citizen told one of our Kings, to whom, threatening to remove his Person and Courts of Justice from this City, he replied, That it was their Comfort that he could not also deprive them of the Thames; for, so long as they enjoyed that River, they could still retain the Commerce and Wealth of the Nation.

In Fishery.

I now come to treat of the Fishery of the River of Thames; which, if not altogether of such great Consequence as the Navigation is to the Publick in general; yet it is of no small Concern to this great Metropolis, its adjacent Inhabitants, and all others, residing either in Middlesex, Surry, Essex, or Kent; and which cries out for a more immediate Relief, as it is in the greatest Danger of being entirely ruined, as has been judiciously observed by a late Author of great Veracity and Skill in this Affair, unless timely prevented by proper Laws, to curb the insatiable Avarice of Fishermen; as Stow complains also of like male Practices in his Days, to destroy the young Fry and Spawn. But as there can need no Arguments to enforce the Necessity of preserving the Fishery, I shall only observe with what Kinds of Fish this River is capable of furnishing us.

*Griffith's Conveyance
of the Thames,
p. 19. 20.*

Though the infinite Variety of Fish, with which the Sea abounds for our Refreshment and Delight, seems a Prodigy; yet those which this River only nourishes and supports, are likewise almost as surprising, and certainly must be gratefully acknowledged; if we do but consider what a great Variety of different Kinds it produces for our

Use, either in its fresh or salt Waters: So good, so wholesome, nourishing, and (if there were once but proper Laws duly established for their better Preservation, I might then truly say) so numerous, that few Rivers, if any, in the World, can boast of.

How remarkably good is its Salmon! What fine large Flounders, Smelts, Shads, Trout, Graylin, Percb, Carp, Tench, Barbell, Cub, Roach, Dace, Gudgeon, Pike, and other Fish, as Eel, Lampreys, Bleak, Ruffe, &c. (too many to mention) are there caught above London-Bridge; nay, and oftentimes Sturgeon, and that of a considerable Size! And, withal, how many other Kinds of Salt-water Fish, as Bass, Mullet, Turbets, Soles, Mails, Plaice, Dabs, Skates, Thornbacks, Halybuts, Pearl, Whiting, Haddock, &c. with several Sorts of Shell-fish, as Oysters, Muscles, Cockles, Buntins, Crabs, Prawns, red and white Shrimps, Crawfish, &c. are there caught below Bridge, even within the Jurisdiction of the City of London!

And, indeed, how greatly would all these several Kinds of Fish abound! How plentifully, how well, and how cheap, would all our Markets, nay, all the adjoining Counties, be supplied therewith, were their Spaw, Brood, and Fry, but well preserved! For I may venture to affirm, that there is no River in all Europe; that is a better, or a more speedy Breeder and Nourisher of its Fish (particularly the Flounder) than is the Thames.

The Truth of the Premises may be further and more effectually enforced, by the several Endeavours of the supreme Magistrate of this City, as Conservator of the Thames, to preserve the Fishery from the iniquitous Practices of the Fishermen: Of which we have one Example, so early as the Year 1405; when Sir John Woodcock, Mayor, being informed that a great Number of Weirs had been erected in the said River, to the Destruction of the young Fry, and the Damage of Navigation, caused all the said Weirs, from Stains Bridge to the River Medway, to be destroyed, and the Nets burnt; which, by Virtue of the City Charter, was judged lawful, against the Opposition made thereto by the Archbishop of Canterbury, &c.

Again, Sir Thomas Pullington, in 1584, prescribed the proper Times for taking all Sorts of Fish; ascertained the Measure of Fishing-Nets; inhibited certain Places, called Water-Friths, from fishing in them; and prohibited the White Bait, or Bloodbag. In 1630, Sir Robert Ducie Lord-Mayor, these Orders were more strongly enforced: And Provision has been several Times made for putting these Orders into full Force since that Time, as appears by an Act of Common-Council on the 10th of July, 1673, &c. and of late in the Mayoralty of Sir Daniel Lambert, A. D. 1741.

Another Particular mentioned by Stow, in Commendation of this River, is, That the Tide ebbs and flows above seventy Miles up it within the main Land, which is done twice in every twenty-four Hours; by which Means, all her Channels are filled as often, to the great Advantage of Trade and Navigation. Concerning which, it is necessary to observe, that, as the Tide is influenced by the Increase and Decrease of the Moon, so the Tides differ in their Times, each one coming twenty-four Minutes later than the former, which wants but twelve Minutes of a whole Hour in twenty-four. And, therefore, they who have any Dependence on the Ebbing and Flowing of this Tide, would do well to observe the following Table :

The Tide-Table.

The Tide-Table at London-Bridge.

N. B. But after all, this Table only serves when the Tide is regular, and not interrupted by any Accidents ; for, if the Wind proves rough at West or South-West, it is known to stop the Flowing-in of the Tide to its usual Height ; and the boisterous North-East Wind has the contrary Effect. Another Accident is the Overflowing of the Banks of the Thames, occasioned by great Rains, which, being stoppt in their Course to the Sea by the flowing Tide, must consequently make some Alteration in the Height of the Water, of which there are several extraordinary Examples recorded, both in ancient and modern Histories. As to the Shifting, or preternatural Tides, as some call them, they have either been of that little Consequence, as to deserve no Remark, or may be properly accounted for by what has been already observed concerning the Influence of the North-West Wind encountering a slow Ebb at the Thames's Mouth ; which, at least, for a certain Space, must cause a Return of the Tide. But the most general Rule to know the Time of Tide at London-Bridge, is, that when the Moon is in the Full, or Changes, then it is High Water at or near three o'Clock following ; and it is likewise High Water there at eight o'Clock, or within a few Minutes after the Moon enters into its First or Last Quarters, and you are only to add — Minutes to each twenty-four Hours (or Days) if your Enquiry happens after each said Quarters of the Moon, to the Hour here given.

Extent of the Lord-Mayor's Jurisdiction.

Stow. Sur.

The Extent of the City's Jurisdiction on the River Thames is from Colnie-Ditch, a little Westward of Staines-Bridge, to Yendal, Yenland, or Yenleet, East of London-Bridge ; including Part of the Rivers Medway, and Lea : Which Jurisdiction, lodged in the Lord-Mayor, as has been already hinted, and will appear more fully hereafter, has at all Times been supported and maintained against all Opposition : And, in order to execute the proper Orders enacted by this Authority, his Lordship hath a Deputy or Substitute, by the Name of Water-Bailiff, whose Office is to search, oversee, and punish all Offenders, that dare infringe those Rights of Duty belonging to so famous a River, or make a Spoil of that, intended by Providence and the Laws for general Benefit.

At eight several Times yearly, within the four Counties of Middlesex, Surry, Kent and Essex, the Lord-Mayor of London, with his Brethren the Aldermen, for the better maintaining of the Rights and Privileges of the said River, do sit in Person judicially, and charge four Juries by Oath to make Inquisition after all Offences committed on the said River, in order to proceed to Judgment against those who shall be found guilty ; paying the greatest Regard to the River's Prosperity, Safety of Passengers, and the general Good of the Commonwealth.

And not only the Water of the Thames, with the Fish therein, belong to the City ; but the Soil and Ground under it belong to it also ; as appears from the following Transcript, found among the MSS. of Lord-Treasurer Burligh, in Queen Elizabeth's Reign : " Also, for Proof of the Prince's Interest in Rivers flowing from the Sea, the Thames, and Conservation thereof, was not only given to the City of London ; but, by their special Suit, the King gave therewithal the Ground and Soil under the same : Whereupon if any that hath a House or Land adjoining, do make a Strand, Stairs, or such like, they pay forthwith a Rent to the City of London, how high soever they be above the Low-water Mark."

But the Jurisdiction of the City of London in the River of Thames, as above described, will much better appear by the Charge delivered by the Common Serjeant, Thomas Jones, Esq; to the Court of Conservancy, held by the City of London in the Year 1616, Sir John Jelles, Kt. Lord-Mayor ; in which, as follows, that learned Counsellor proves the City's Jurisdiction, both in Point of Right, and in Point of Usage.

FIRST, in Point of RIGHT.

By Prescription, as appeareth by an ancient Book, called Dunborne. That, Civitatis Foundationis, Edificationis, et Confratationis, Causa erat Thamesis Fluvius, &c. i. e. The River Thames was the Cause of the first Founding, Erecting, and Building of the City : The Government of which, both City

City and River, as well the Chiefs, the Mayors, the Keepers, the Sheriffs, the Aldermen, and eminent Men of the said City, hitherto have obtained and hold. Whence he inferred, that the Government of the River hath belonged to the City, Time out of Mind.

21 Hen. III. City's Right beyond Yealand. A. D. 1347, Jorden Coventry, one of the Sheriffs of London, was, by the Mayor and Aldermen, sent to remove certain Kiddals, that annoyed the Rivers of Thames and Medway; who, ultra Yealand versus Mare, did take divers Persons that were Offenders, and did imprison them: Whereupon, Complaint being made to King Hen. III. upon hearing of the said Matter, before the said King Henry, the City's Jurisdiction was set forth and allowed, and the Complainants convicted, and every of them at 10*l.* and the Amercements adjudged to the City; and their Nets were afterwards burnt by Judgment given by the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen in the Hustings. In the 37 Hen. III. 1252, it is recorded, That eadem Anno ante Pentecosten, Vicecomites London. quia Aquæ Thameſiæ pertinent ad Lond. per Præceptum diſt. Dom. Regis derivarunt omnes alios Georgites à Lond. uſque ad Mare.

1 Rich. II. A. D. 1377, Writs were directed to the Sheriffs of Kent and Essex, reciting the City's Title, with Command not to suffer the Citizens of London to be molested, contrary to the Liberties formerly granted and allowed unto them.

41 Hen. III. By Allowance in Eyre. By Allowance in Eyre, A. D. 1367, before Hugh Bigot, being Justice Itinerant, the Sheriffs and Citizens of London were called in Question, for their Jurisdiction exercised on the River of Thames: Before whom it was found, by a Jury in Southwark, that none had any Right and Title in the Thames, as far as the new Whirl-Pool, but the Citizens of London only.

14 Edw. II. Lib. Antiq. Reg. P. 156. A. D. 1320, the Constable of the Tower was indicted by divers Wards of London, before the Justice in Eyre, at the Tower, concerning Kiddals set in the Thames, which, it seems, the said Constable had received Consideration for: The Constable answered, as to the Kiddals, that the Justices had not Jurisdiction out of London; and that the aforesaid Kiddals were in other Counties: But the Justices said, that the Water of the Thames, as far as the Sea, belonged to the City of London; and, if he pleased, he might bring in his Answer. Who then pleaded, Not guilty.

By antient Charters. By antient Charters, King Richard the First granted and firmly commanded, that all the Wears that are in the Thames be taken away, wheresoever they are in the Thames. See this Charter recited above.

A. D. 1192 K. John's Charter. King John granted, and firmly commanded, that all the Kiddals that are in the Thames, or the Medway, be taken away, and that no other Kiddals be placed in the Thames, or in the Medway, upon Pain of Forfeiture of 10*l.* Sterling.

Likewise (in this same Charter) he says, "We have clearly quit-claimed all that, which the Keepers of the Tower of London were wont yearly to receive of the said Wears: Wherefore we will, and stedfastly command, that no Keeper of the said Tower, at any Time hereafter, exact any Thing from any Body, nor trouble or molest any Person, by Reason of "the said Wears; for it is sufficiently manifested, "and by the Right Reverend Hubert, Archbishop of Canterbury, and by other of our faithful Subjects, it is sufficiently given us to understand, that very great Detriment and Discommodity hath grown to our said City of London, and also to our Realm, by Occasion of these Wears, &c. &c." He then urged the famous Charter of the 11th of King Henry the Third, A. D. 1226, where it is said, "We have graunted, and stedfastly commaunded, that al the Wears that ben in Thamys, or in Medwey, by Medwey, where that ever they be in Thamys, or in Medwey, be done away. And that from hens forwarde no Weris be sett in Thamys, nor in Medwey, upon Forfeiture of 10*l.*

"Also we clayme quyte to our Citizens of London, al that the Constables of our Towr of London was wont to take of the same Weris; wherefore we wyll, and stedfastly commaund, that no Constable of the Towr, any Tyme from hens forwarde, any Thing axe, or any Graunte do, to any of the same Cite, by Enchefon of the same Weris. It is knowne inowe to us, and (by) our trewe Men do us to understonde, that most Praying and laste Profyte might fall to the same Cite, and to al the Realme, by Enchefon of the same Weris. Which we make for ever firme and stable to the same Cite." We have also granted to the same, that they enjoy well, and in Peace, freely and quietly, all their Liberties, which hitherto they have used, as well in the City of London as without, as well in the Waters as Land, and in all other Places.

And in this same King's Reign, such a particular Regard is had to the City, that in the 15th Article of Magna Charta it is expressly stipulated, that the City of London shall have all its ancient Privileges, and free Customs, as well by Land as by Water.

And (says Mr. Styrye) there is a Record of 2 Edw. III. allowing the City Liberty to remove and take away the Kiddals in the Water of Thames and Medway: "Whereby also the Sheriffs of all the Counties, on which the Thames washed, were commanded not to hinder or interrupt the City of London, in removing and taking away the said Kiddals; and that they have and enjoy the Penalties, that thence belong to us."

In the 68th Article of a Charter, granted to the City of London by King Richard the Second, are these Words:

"And that the same Citizens remove, and do away all the Weris in Thamys and Medwey, and that they have the Punishments thereof belonging to us."

Likewise in the 73d Article, are these Words:

"And that the Constable of the Tower of London make no Prefes by Land nor by Water, of Vitayle, or any other Thyng, whatsoever they ben, of Men of the foresaid Cite, nor non other, coming to the Cite, or going out; nor he shall not arresten be ony Maner Way, Shipes, nor Botes brynging, or ledyng Vitayles, or other Merchandyces, to the Cite, or for (fro) the Cite foresaid."

K. James I.

And King James the First, in order to remove and take away all Doubts and Controversies of the City's not having a Right to the Jurisdiction and Conservancy of the Thames, both for the present as well as future Times, did, by his Letters Patents, grant, ratify, and confirm, to the City of London, the Conservancy of the said River of Thames, and Waters of Medway, in Manner following:

"Whereas our beloved Mayor, and Commonalty, and Citizens of our City of London, Time out of Mind, have had, exercised, and ought to have and exercise the Office of Bailiff and Conservator of the Waters of Thames, to be exercised and occupied by the Mayor of the said City, for the Time being, during the Time of his Mayoralty, or by his sufficient Deputies, in, upon and about, the Waters of Thames (that is to say) from the Bridge of the Town of Staines, in the County of Middlesex, and towards the East unto London-Bridge, and from thence unto a certain Place, called Kendall, otherwise Yenland, otherwise Yenlett, towards the Sea, and East, and in Medway, and in the Port of the City of London aforesaid; and upon whatsoever Bank, and upon every Shore, and upon every Wharf of the said Water of Thames, within the Limits and Bounds aforesaid, and in, and upon, and about all and every of them.

"And also, for all the Time aforesaid, have had and taken, and ought and have accustomed to have and take, to their own proper Use, by the Mayor of the same City for the Time being, during the Time of his Mayoralty, or by his sufficient Deputies, all Wages, Rewards, Fees, and Profits, belonging to the same Office of Bailiff.

"And further, of our special Grace, and certain Knowledge, and mere Motion, we have granted, and, by these Presents, for us, our Heirs and Successors, do grant, to the said Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens, and their Successors, that they may exercise and execute the said Office of Bailiff and Conservator of the Water of Thames, by the Mayor of the said City for the Time being, during the Time of his Mayoralty, or by his sufficient Deputies, from Time to Time, for ever, in, upon, or about the same Water of Thames (that is to say) from the Bridge of Staines to the Bridge of London, and from thence to a certain Place, called Yenland, otherwise Yenlett, towards the Sea, and towards the East, and Medway, and in the Port of the City of London aforesaid; and upon whatever Bank, Shore, and Wharf of the same Waters of Thames, within the Limits and Bounds aforesaid, in, upon, and about every one of the same; and to receive, collect, and enjoy all and singular Wages, Rewards, Fees, and Profits, to the same Office of Bailiff pertaining, to the proper Use of the said Mayor of the same City for the Time being, during the Time of his Mayoralty, or by his sufficient Deputies, &c. &c."

King Charles the First grants afterwards all Recognizances taken, or to be taken, for the Security of the Peace, or good Behaviour; with all Recognizances taken in the Court for the River of Thames, and all Things thereunto appertaining; as likewise all Fines, Amerciaments, and Penalties, adjudged by the Mayor, &c. relating, or any ways belonging to his said Courts, as Conservator of the River of Thames, without Account.

All which Grants, or Charters, were, after the Restoration of the Royal Family, repeated, and confirmed by King Charles the Second, in the 15th Year of his Reign, on the 24th of June, 1663.

Under this Argument of Right, let us now also consider how these Charters, or Royal Grants, are strengthened, explained, and enlarged by Acts of Parliament: Now, in general, it is provided, that the Waters of Humber, Ouse, Trent, Donner, &c. and all other Waters, wherein Salmons shall be taken, shall be in Defence for taking of Salmons from the Nativity of our Lady [8th Sept.] unto St. Martin's Day [11th Nov. O. S.]

And that likewise young Salmons shall not be taken, nor destroyed by Nets, or other Engines, at the Mill-Pools, from the Midst of April, until the Nativity of St. John the Baptist.

And in Places where such Waters be, there shall be assigned Overseers of this Statute, which, being sworn, shall often enquire of the Offenders; and for the first Trespas, they shall be punished by burning of their Nets and Engines; and for the second, they shall have Imprisonment for a Quarter of a Year; and for the third Trespas, they shall be imprisoned a Year; and as the Trespas encreaseth, so shall the Punishment.

All Fishers, Vintners, and Victuallers, coming to the City of London, shall be in the Rule of the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen. See 7 Ricb. II. Cap. 11.

Proclamation shall be made, as well in London as in other Cities and Towns, that none cast any Annoyance, Dung, Entrails, nor any other Ordure, into the Ditches, Rivers, Waters, and other Places; and, if any do, he shall be called by Writ before the Chancellor, at his Suit that will complain; and, if he be found guilty, he shall be punished after the Discretion of the Chancellor.

Young Salmon shall not be taken, from the Midst of April, till the 24th of June, upon the Pain in Stat. Westm.

And none shall put into Thames, Humber, Ouse, Trent, or other Waters, any Nets, called Stalkers, nor other Engines, by which the Fry, or the Breed of Salmons, Lampreys, or other Fish, may be taken, upon the Pain aforesaid. And where such Rivers be, there shall be assigned, and sworn, Conservators of this Statute, as in the Statute of Westminster.

And they shall punish the Offenders after the Pain contained in the said Statute.

The Justices of the Peace of all the Counties shall be Conservators of the Statutes of Westminster.

And they shall survey, at all Times, all the Weirs in such Rivers, that they be not too strait for the Destruction of the Fry, but of a reasonable Wideneß, after the old Assize used: And the the Justices, which shall find Default against the said Statutes, shall make true Punishment.

And shall put Under-Conservators under them, who shall be sworn to like Surveying, and Search, and Punishment, without any Favour thereof to be shewed.

And the same Justices, in their Sessions, shall enquire, as well by their Office, as at the Information of their Under-Conservators, of all Trespases and Defaults against any of the Points aforesaid, and shall cause them, which be thereof indicted, to come before them; and, if they be convicted, they shall have Imprisonment, and make Fine, after the Discretion of the Justices.

And, if the same be at the Information of any of the Under-Conservators, they shall have half the Fine.

17 Rich. II. c. 9. And the Mayor, or Warden of London, shall have the Conservation of the Statutes aforesaid in the Thames, from the Bridge of Stains to London, and from thence over the same Waters, and in the Medway, as far as is granted to the Citizens.

The Standing of Nets and Engines, called Trincks, and all other Nets, fastened Day and Night to Posts, Boats, and Anchors, over the Thames, and other Rivers, shall be wholly defended, and every Person that selleth them, shall forfeit to the King one hundred Shillings.

See 2 Hen. VI. c. 15. and Havens in Raft. 3. 12. co. 89. Provided that it shall be lawful to the Possessors of Trincks, if they be of Assize, to fish with them, in all reasonable Times, drawing them by Hand, as other Nets, saving to every of the King's People their Rights in Fishing.

4 Hen. VII. And, in the Year 1448, an Act of Parliament was made, whereby the Mayor of London was to have the Rule of the River of Thames, from Stains Bridge to the Waters of Yendal.

4 Hen. VII. c. 15. and 16. Again, in the Year 1448, the Mayor of London, and his Successors, having the Conservation of the River of Thames from the Bridge of Stains to the Water of Yendal and Medway, shall have the like Conservation and Authority in all the Issues, Breaches, Creeks, and Grounds overflowed, as far as the Water ebbeth and floweth (as touching the Punishment for using unlawful Nets and Engines in fishing) as he hath within the said River of Thames, provided the Mayor of London have not the Conservation in the said Breaches, &c. within the King's Ground, or within the Franchises of others.

1 Chart. Edw. IV. Havens in Raft. 6. Cable's Stat. Coke's Instit. 4. p. 250.

The like Power is granted (by 11 Hen. VII. c. 15.) to the Mayor of London, in Breaches and in Creeks, as in the River, so far as it ebbeth and floweth, except in the King's Grounds, or in the Liberties, and Franchises of others.

27 Hen. VIII. A.D. 1535. And it was also enacted, That whereas, before this Time, the River of Thames, among all other Rivers within this Realm, hath been accepted and taken; and as it is indeed most commodious and profitable unto all the King's liege People, and chiefly of all other frequented and used, and as well by the King's Highness, his Estates, and Nobles, Merchants, and others, repairing to the City of London, and other Places, Shires, and Countries adjoining to the same; which River of Thames is, and hath been, most meet

And it is further enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That, if Complaint shall happen to be made to the Lord Chancellor of England, Lord Treasurer, Lord President of the King's Council, Lord Privy-Seal, or to any of them, by any Person or Persons, or Body Politick, that Sir Thomas Spert, Knight, now having the Office and Ordering of, and for Ballasting of Ships, or any other that shall hereafter have the Office and Order of Ballasting of Ships, do take any Ballast for Ships near the said River of Thames, and do not take, for Parcel of the said Ballasting, the Gravel and Sand of the Shells between Greenbith and Richmond, within the said River of Thames, or in any other Place or Places, that is or shall be unto the

Damage

Damage or Annoyance of the said River of Thames, or in any Part thereof; that then, upon every such Complaint, the Lord Chancellor, Lord Treasurer, Lord President of the King's most Honourable Council, Lord Privy-Seal, and every of them, calling both the Justices of either Bench, or one of them, shall have Power and Authority, from Time to Time, to hear, and finally determine every such Complaint by their Discretion, and to put such Order therein, for the taking of Ballast for Ships upon every such Complaint, as by their Discretion shall seem most convenient for the Preservation of the said River of Thames; and the Parties offending such Order shall suffer Imprisonment, and make no less Fine than five Pounds to the King's Use, for every Time offending, or breaking the same.

Provided also, and be it enacted, That it shall be lawful to every Person or Persons, to dig, carry, and take away, Sand, Gravel, or Rubbish, Earth, or Thing, lying or being in or upon any Shelve or Shelves, within the said River of Thames, without Let or Interruption of any Person or Persons, or paying any Thing for the same; any Thing contained in this present Act to the contrary notwithstanding. See also c. 9. of the said Act.

Neither shall any Person kill any Spawn or Fry of Eels, Salmon, Pike, Pickerel, or other Fish, in any Floodgate, Pipe, Tail of Mill-weir, or in any Streams, Brooks, or Rivers, Salt or Fresh, or kill any Salmon, or Trout, not in Season, being Kipper or Shedder Salmon or Trout.

Neither shall any Person kill any Pike or Pickerel, not being in Length sixteen Inches, nor Trout, not being in Length eight Inches, nor any Barbel, not being in Length twelve Inches.

Neither shall any Person fish, or take Fish, with any Nets, Trammel, Keep, Wore, Creel, or other Device, but only with Net or Trammel, whereof every Mesh or Mesh shall be two Inches and a half broad; Angling excepted.

And in all Places where Smelts, Roaches, Minniets, Bullheads, Gudgeons, or Eels, have been used to have been taken, it shall be lawful only for the taking of the said Smelts, Roaches, &c. to use such Nets, Leaps, and other Devices, as have been used; so that such Persons, using such Nets, &c. do not take or destroy any other Fish with the said Nets, contrary to this Statute.

And, if any Person shall offend contrary to the Points aforesaid, such Person shall forfeit twenty Shillings, and the Fish so taken, and also the unlawful Nets and Instruments, wherewith such Offences shall be done.

The Lord Admiral, the Mayor of London, and all other Persons, which have Conservation of any Rivers, or Waters, shall have Power to enquire of all Offences committed contrary to this Act, by the Oaths, of twelve Men, or more, and to hear and determine the same Offences. — This confirms the Lord Mayor's holding his Courts of Conservancy, and to hear and determine Offences.

To which we may add the Statute of the ninth of Q. Anne, c. 26. where, amongst other Things, it is enacted, That no Person shall wilfully kill, or expose to Sale, any Spawn, Fry, or Brood of Fish, or Spatt of Oysters, or any unfizeable, small, or unwholsome Fish, or catch and destroy any Fish out of Season, or expose such Fish to Sale, or knowingly buy, receive, or use any such; and no Person shall fish for, or wilfully hurt or destroy any Salmon, or Salmon-kind of Fish, within the said Limits, between the twenty-fourth of August and the eleventh of November.

And it shall be lawful for the Lord-Mayor, upon Application of the Court of Assistants, to order Stakes to be driven in any Place within the said River between London Mark Stone, above Stains-Bridge, and London-Bridge, for the preserving the Fry, Spawn, and Brood of Fish, so as the same be no ways prejudicial to the Navigation; and no Person shall, without lawful Authority, remove the same.

That the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen of London, or any of them, for all Offences committed within the Jurisdiction of the Lord-Mayor, as Conservator of the River, shall have Power, upon View or Complaint, to examine, hear and determine, by the Oath of any Person, or by Confession of the Party, all Offences committed against this Act, and upon Conviction, to impose a Fine not exceeding ten Pounds, nor less than five Shillings, to be levied on such Offenders Goods, at the Discretion of the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, or Justices, unless such Offenders pay such Fine, or give Security to such Magistrate to abide such Order as shall be made by the Court of Conservancy, upon such Conviction made by the said Lord-Mayor and Aldermen: And, in case no Distress can be found, the Offender shall be sent to the House of Correction, to be kept to hard Labour for any Time not exceeding two Months; or shall be sent on board her Majesty's Navy, and be disabled from fishing two Years.

By two Inquisitions, the one taken at Raynham, the other at Gravesend, before Sir William Cambridge, Grocer, then Lord-Mayor of London, it was presented, "That whereas by the ancient Ordinances of London, the Meshes of Nets should be two Inches in the fore Part, and one Inch in the hinder Part; and it being found that the Offences, according to the said Inquisition, are contrary to Liberties & Customs of the City, i. e. the Liberties and Customs of the City; it was adjudged, that the Nets should be burnt, according to the ancient Custom in that Behalf provided."

By Decrees. A. D. 1406, the Mayor and Aldermen of London, exhibited their humble Petition to the King's Council, reciting, "Whereas they have had, Time out of Mind, the Conservation and Correction of the River of Thames, and of all Trincks, Nets, and other Engines whatsoever, in the River of Thames and Medway placed, and have used to make a Sub-Conservator under them; and complained, that Alexander Bonner, then Sub-Conservator, having done his Duty in removing Kiddals, he was evil intreated by the Owners; the same Owners dwelling in Eritb, Patriferry, Barkin, Woolwich, and other Places, in the Counties of Kent and Essex."

And, upon hearing of the Matter in the Star-Chamber, they were found guilty, and constrained to submit themselves to the Lord-Mayor, and ordered (always) to bring their Nets to the Lord-Mayor before they should use them: And that the Kiddals then taken should be at the Disposal of the Lord-Mayor. And the Offenders made their Submission accordingly.

By Letters Patents.

By Letters Patents. A Grant was made by King Edward IV. to the Earl of Pembroke, for building a Wear in the River of Thames; which Grant was cancelled at the Request of the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen, upon shewing their Right; for that it was contrary to their ancient Liberties.

Stryp. Ed. Stow. Sur. b. 1. p. 37.

At which Time, the City's Title to the Conservancy of the River of Thames and Medway was at large set forth, and is recited to have been shewn to the Lord Chancellor, and to the Earl, and his Council, and was afterwards allowed, and the Patent thereupon cancelled.

By Proclamation. 34 H. VIII.

By Proclamation: Whereof one was made by King Henry VIII. wherein it was affirmed, that the Lord-Mayor, and his Predecessors, have had, by divers Grants of the Kings of England, and by Acts of Parliament, and have also long enjoyed the Conservancy of Thames, without Interruption or Impediment.

And by the same Proclamation, it was commanded, that none should resist, deny, or impugn the Lord-Mayor, and his Deputy, in doing or executing any Thing for the Conservancy of the River, and the Fish and Fry within the same.

By Report of the King's Counsel.

By Report of the King's Counsel learned; for, a Controversy being between the Lord Admiral, and the Lord-Mayor, for the Measuring of Coals, and other Things, upon the Thames, it then fell into Debate, to whom the Conservancy of the Thames did belong.

40 Eliz.

Which Cause (Anno Dom. 1597.) was by the Lords of the Queen's (Elizabeth) most Honourable Privy Council, referred to the then Attorney and Solicitor General, who jointly certified, among other Things, That the Conservancy and Care of the River Thames did and ought to belong to the City of London.

By Quo Warranto.

By Quo Warranto: In the third of King James I. A. D. 1605, a Quo Warranto was brought against the City in the Exchequer, to know by what Title she claims the Conservancy of the River Thames, and Waters of Medway. Whereupon the City made her Title good thereunto, by antient Prescription, and otherways: So Judgment was given in her Favour.

And to end all further Disputes about this City's Prerogative, the King was pleased to grant that memorable Charter before recited.

Sir Robert Cotton's Abridgment, 2 v. p. 167.

By the twenty-fifth of Edward III. A. D. 1351, it is enacted, that the Statute of Westminster, made against the Destruction of Salmon, may be kept, and that all Mills set on Rivers may be thrown down.

In the thirty-seventh of Edward III. A. D. 1363, it was petitioned, that a Remedy might be found against Wears, and such other Engines on Rivers, to the Annoyance of Boats.

To which the City received this full Answer; That the Statute thereof made shall be kept.

In the fiftieth of Edward III. A. D. 1376, it was petitioned, for the saving of Salmon, and other Frys of Fish in the Thames, almost destroyed by certain Engines, as the King himself hath often found; That, therefore, all Trincks between London and the Sea may be overthrown, and that no Salmon shall be taken between Gravesend, and Henly upon Thames, in the Kipper Time, viz. between the Invention of the Crofs, and the Epiphany; and that no Nets be laid in the Thames, unless the same be of large Mesh of Assize.

To which it was answered, that the Statutes thereof made shall be kept, and Commissioners appointed for the Enquiry of the same.

It was also petitioned, that the Wears upon the River called Braint, in the County of Middlesex, Parcel of the River of Thames, may be taken away.

To which it was replied, that the Statutes thereof made shall be executed.

And in the ninth of Richard II. A. D. 1385, they require, that the Patent lately made to the Constable of the Tower of London, whereby the Collector of his Office taketh Customs of Wines, Oysters, Muscles, Rushes, and other Victuals, coming to London by Water, may be revoked.

And the Petition of the Lord-Mayor and Commonalty of London was endorsed.

By Petition from the City, the fourteenth of Richard II. A. D. 1390, it was prayed, that a Remedy may be had against Mills, Stanks, Kiddals, and such like Engines and Devices levied upon the Thames.

To which it was answered, that the Statutes thereof made shall be observed.

In the sixteenth of Richard II. A. D. 1390, it was enacted, that all Filth upon the Side of the Thames, next the House of Robert de Partis, shall be utterly removed; and that in some Place, before Easter then ensuing, the Butchers of London do build convenient and fit Houses, whereinto they may, from Time to Time, bring all their Ordure, Entrails, and other Filth, and the same in Boats carried into the Middle of the Thames, and there cast at a full Water, when it first beginneth to Ebb; and further, that no Person do throw, or cause to be thrown, or laid, any Filth or Ordure, Muck, Rubbish or Laystake, in the same Water of Thames, of the one Side, or the other, between the Palace of Westminster, and the Tower of London, on Loss of ten Pounds.

The first of Henry IV. it was prayed, that no Barge on the River of Thames be forfeited as a Doodand; and it was answered, to be as heretofore.

In the second of Henry IV. A. D. 1400, it was prayed, that all Estanks, Kiddals, Wears, and Mills, raised upon Rivers, to Annoyance, at what Time soever, may be removed.

And it was answered, that the Statutes thereof shall be observed.

In the second of Henry V. A. D. 1414, the Mayor and Commonalty of London prayed, that all Kiddals, Wears, Fishgarths, Stanks, Mills, and Stakes, and all other Engines, levied or made upon the Water of Thames, Medway, and Lea, should utterly be laid down.

It was answered, that the Statutes therefore provided shall be executed; and further, in all Commissions touching the Water-Bailiff, the Mayor, or Keeper of London, for the Time being, shall be one.

In the seventh of Henry V. A. D. 1419, there was a long Complaint and Prayer made of Reddres of Stanks, Stakes, Kiddals, Mills, &c. levied upon Rivers, to great Annoyances.

And it was answered, that the Statutes thereof made shall be observed.

In the fourth of Edw. IV. on the twenty-sixth of January, A. D. 1464, among fundry Acts and Ordinances, &c. there is one particular Provision, viz. That the Mayor of London, in Succession, shall have the Search, View, and Correction of the River of Thames.

SECONDLY, in Point of USAGE.

By ancient Ordinances. By ancient Ordinances. The Lord-Mayor and Aldermen have (Time out of Mind) made Ordinances concerning the good Government of the River of Thames, for the Times and Manners of Fishing beneath London-Bridge, Eastward, to be observed upon Pains; as likewise Westwards, as may appear from the several Orders already mentioned.

By Punishment of Offenders. For it appeareth that (from Time to Time) from the Time of King Henry III. and so downwards, the Lord-Mayor hath removed Kiddals, Wears, Trincks, and other unlawful Engines, and hath reformed the Disorders of such as have offended in the River of Thames, and punished the Offenders, sometimes by Imprisonment, sometimes by Fines, and by burning of unlawful Nets.

By Writs and Precepts. Writs were issued to the Sheriffs of Essex and Kent, reciting the City's Title, with Command not to suffer the Citizens of London to be molested, contrary to the Liberties formerly granted and allowed unto them.

Precepts, under the Seal of the Lord-Mayor, to the Sheriffs of Kent and Essex, for returning of Juries before the Lord-Mayor, to enquire of Offences done in the River of Thames.

N. B. The which is still annually continued for the four Counties adjoining to the Thames.

By Accounts. In the Office of the Chamberlain of London, from the seventeenth of Richard II. to the eleventh of Queen Elizabeth, it appeareth, that the Water-Bailiff of London hath made Search for unlawful Nets in the Waters of Thames and Medway.

By Commissions. In the ninth of Henry V. a Commission was made to the Lord-Mayor, to put in Execution the Acts of Parliament made for the Conservacy of the Thames and Medway, and to enquire of all Offences made or done in the said Waters, and to punish the Delinquents.

And all those, or the like Commissions in this Case, were and are directed to the Lord-Mayor for the Time being.

By continual Claim. In the thirty-seventh of Henry VIII. A. D. 1645, Letters came from the Lord Admiral for the Stay of such Matters as were then in Question between his Lordship and the City, concerning the Jurisdiction of this City upon the Thames.

In the third of Edward VI. A. D. 1549, it was ordered, that the Chamberlain should take Care for Stay of certain Inquests, charged, by Virtue of a Commission directed to the Lord Admiral, to enquire of Abuses used in Fishing beneath the Bridge.

In the fourth of Edward VI. A. D. 1550, the Master Common Serjeant was appointed to repair to the Duke of Somerset, and to inform his Lordship of the City's Authority in pulling down Wears within the River of Thames.

In the sixth of Edward VI. A. D. 1552, it was ordered, that Suit should be made to the King's Majesty, and his Council, for the Determination and Allowance of the City's Jurisdiction and Interest in the River of Thames.

In the first of Mary, A. D. 1553, a great Number of the Fishermen of the East Side of London, present in the Court of the Lord-Mayor of London, were commanded to obey the Water-Bailiff; and that one Hunter, of the Admiralty, should be warned to be before the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen, at the next Court to be holden for the same Matter.

In Queen Elizabeth's Reign, there were certain Committees appointed to confer with the Lord Admiral, touching the Controversy between his Honour and the City, concerning the Conservacy of the River of Thames.

In the twenty-third of Elizabeth, A. D. 1580, Mr. Norton, and others, were appointed to attend on the Lord Treasurer of England, and to inform his Lordship touching the City's Title to the Conservacy of the River of Thames below London-Bridge. And Sessions were appointed for the Conservacy of the River of Thames, the ninth of October, at Barking in Essex, and Wednesday following to be kept at Woolwich in Kent.

I shall here add an Act of Common-Council of the City of London, made in pursuance of the Statute 27 Henry VIII. A. D. 1538, for the Preservation of the River of Thames, as above recited.

"Whereas, by a Statute made in the 27th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King Henry the Eighth, (See Page 61.) among other, for Reformation of the River of Thames, "by casting in Dung and other Filth, many great Shelves, and other Risings, have of late grown and been made within the said River, "by reason whereof many great Breaches have ensued by Occasion thereof, which, if like shall be the Occasion of the utter Destruction of the said River, unless that the same Law be put in due Execution, according to the true Intent and Meaning thereof.

"Wherefore, for a future Reformation of the same, and to the Intent that the said good and wholesome Statute may be put in more Execution, and better Knowledge of the People,

"It is enacted by the Authority of this Common-Council, That Proclamation may be made within this City, and the same to be put in Writing, and Tables thereof made, and set up in divers Places of this City, That it shall be lawful

An Act of Common-Council for the Preservation
of the
Thames.

"lawful to every Person or Persons, to dig, carry away, and take away Sand, Gravel, or any Rubbish, Earth, or any Thing lying and being in any Shelf or Shelves, within the said River of Thames, without Lett or Interruption of any Person or Persons, and without any Thing paying for the same; and after that, to sell the same away, or otherwise occupy or dispose of the said Gravel, Land, or other Thing, at their free Liberty and Pleasure.

"And that all Paviours, Bricklayers, Tilers, Masons, and all others that occupy Sand or Gravel, shall endeavour themselves, with all Diligence, to occupy the said Sand or Gravel, and none other, paying for the same reasonably, as they should or ought to pay, for other Sand or Gravel digged out of other Men's Grounds about the said City, which after is filled again with much filthy Things, to the great Infection of the Inhabitants of the said City, and all others repairing unto the same: And that further humble Suit be made to the King's Highness, that all Persons, having Lands or Tenements along the said River-side, upon certain Pain, by his Highness, and the Lords of his honourable Council, to be limited, shall well and sufficiently repair and maintain all the Walls and Banks adjoining unto their said Lands, that so the Water may not, nor shall break in upon the same; and the same to be continued 'till the Time the said noble River be brought again to its old Course and former State.

"And that strong Grates of Iron, along the said Water-side, and also by the Street-side, where any Water-Course is had into the said Thames, be made by the Inhabitants of every Ward, so along the said Water, as of old Times has been accustomed; and that every Grate be in Height twenty-four Inches at the least, as the Place shall need; and, in Breadth, one from another one Inch; and the same to be done with all Expedition and Speed.

"And, if the Occupiers of the said Lands and Tenements make Default contrary to the Ordinance aforesaid, or else if any Person or Persons in great Rains, or other Times, sweep their Soilage or Filth off their Houses into the Channel, and the same afterwards is conveyed into the Thames, every Person so offending shall forfeit for every such Default one Shilling and eight Pence; and that, upon Complaint to be made to any Constable next adjoining to the said Place where any such Default shall be found, it shall be lawful for the said Constable, or his sufficient Deputy, for the Time being, from Time to Time, to distrain for the said Offence, and to retain the same irreplacable. And a like Law to be observed and kept, and like Penalty to be paid by every Person that burns Rushes and Straw in their Houses, or wash in the common Streets or Lanes, and to be recovered as aforesaid; and the one Moiety thereof to be to the Mayor and Commonalty, and the other Moiety to be divided betwixt the said Constable that taketh Pain, and the Party Finder of the said Default. And if the Constable, or his Deputy, refuse to do his Duty, according to the true Meaning of this Act, that then the Constable, or his Deputy, which "shall so refuse to do his Duty, as aforesaid, shall forfeit and pay for every Time so offending three Shillings and four Pence; and the same Penalty of the Constable, to be recovered and obtained by Distress irreplacable, to be taken by any of the Officers of the Chamber of London, to the Use of the Mayor and Commonalty of London. And further, that no Person or Persons, having any Wharf or House by the Water-side, make not their Lay-stalls where the common Rakers of this City use to repose and lay all their Soilage, to be carried away by them with their Dung-boats; and that the said Rakers shall lay their said Dung, carried in their said Dung-boats, to such convenient Place or Places, as shall be appointed by the Lord-Mayor of London, for the Time being, with the Advice of his Brethren, the Aldermen of the same, and to no other Place or Places, upon Pain to forfeit for every such Default five Pounds, to be recovered in any of the King's Courts within the City of London, by Bill, Plaint, Moiety of Debt, or Information, by any Person that will or shall sue for the same; the one Moiety thereof to be unto the Mayor and Commonalty of London, and the other Moiety to him or them that will or shall pursue for the same; in which Actions or Suits, no Wager of Law nor Assize shall be allowed." Which is still in Force.

Such was the Diligence and Care of our Forefathers to preserve this River clean and clear from all Sorts of Annoyances, and particularly such as threatened the Destruction of the Fish: As may further appear by the following Orders, set forth in the Year 1584, in the Mayoralty of Sir Thomas Pullington; and Sir Robert Ducie, A. D. 1630; which are here subjoined.

Stryp.
Ed. Stow.

First, That there should be no Perpetuities, Encroachments, Wharfs, Banks, Walls, or Buildings of Houses, in or upon the Thames, to the Stopping of the Passage.

Sir Thomas
Pullington's Orders.

Item, That no Dung, Rubbish, or other Filth, be cast into the Thames.

Mund. Ed.
Stow. Sup.

Item, That no Posts or Stakes be fixed in the Thames.

Item, That the Fair-way be kept as deep and large as heretofore it hath been.

No Person shall sell, utter, or take any Fish, contrary to the ancient Assize set down by Decree; viz.

Pyke, fourteen Inches; Barbel, twelve Inches; Salmon, sixteen Inches; Trout, eight Inches; Tench, eight Inches; Roach, six Inches; Dace, six Inches; Flounders, six Inches; but Carp, Alper, Cbevin, Pearcb, Eels, Gudgeons, Smelts, Bleaks, Sbad, Mackerel, Lampris, Lamprons, are not yet assized.

Fence Month and Times, in which these Fishes are not to be taken; viz. for

Times of Fishing.

Salmons; between the Nativity of our Lord, and St. Martin's.

*Kipper Salmon*s; not to be taken at any Time of the Year.

Trout; between Michaelmas and Christmas.

Roaches; between fifteen Days before St. Martin's, and fifteen Days after.

Lampris and Lamprons, between the fifteenth of April and the fifteenth of August.

No Fishermen, Garthmen, Petermen, Draymen, or Tricker-men, shall advance or set up any Wears, Engines, Rowte-Wears, Pight-Wears, Foot-Wears, nor make any Stalker-Nets, Trinck-Nets, Purfe-Nets, Casting-Nets, Berd-Nets, Pot-Nets, Barrock-Nets at Crooks, Heaving-Nets, except they be two Inches in the Mesh.

Nets forbidden.

Nets forbidden; also the Measure of certain Nets.

Bley-Nets, must be two Inches and a half.

Dray-Nets and Kiddals, forbidden.

Cod-Nets, to be used between Candlemas and our Lady-Day.

Treat-Nets, Peter-Nets, must be two Inches large in the Mesh, except between Candlemas and our Lady-Day in Lent.

A Pride-Net, not to be occupied but by special Licence of the Water-Bailiff, and not above a Yard in Length.

Where it is unlawful to fish.

Places inhibited to fish in, called Water-Friths; viz.

Mill-Dams, Locks, and such like.

Goose-Fleet, at Bulberd.

Well-Fleet, at the Mase.

St. Saviour's Milne by Woff.

Baits prohibited.

Baits prohibited.

White Bait at Gowleby, or Bloodbag.

But these Orders were more strongly enforced by those which Sir Robert Dacie afterwards set forth by this Title:

Orders heretofore devised and agreed upon by the Right Honourable the Lord-Mayer of the City of London, and Conservator of the River of Thames, and Waters of Medway, and River Lea, for Conservation and Preservation of the River of Thames, and of the Brood and Fry of Fish therein, as followeth:

Sir Robert Dacie's Orders.

First, That no Man, upon Penalty and Forfeiture of his Net and ten Pounds, with Imprisonment at the Discretion of the Lord-Mayer, shall presume to shute any Draw-Net or Coulter-Net, at any Time of the Year before Sun-rising, nor after Sun-setting: For that in the Night-time unlawful Nets may be used, and great Abuses offered, to the great Hurt and Annoyance of the said River of Thames: And to shute in their several Rooms well known.

Griffith's Conservancy of the Thames, p. 64.

2. Item, That no Fisherman or other shall still, lye, or bend-over any Net during the Time of the Flood, whereby both Salmon, and other Kinds of Fish, may be hindered and kept back from swimming upwards, to the Benefit and Profit of such Fishermen as dwell in the West Part of the said River; upon the like Pain and Penalty.

No Fisherman, or other, shall shute any Net after the 14th of September.

3. Item, That no Fisherman, or other, shall shute any Draw-Net, Cord-Net, or any other Net or Engine, whereby any Salmon-Fish shall be taken, after Holyrood-Day is past, being the 14th Day of September, because at that Time they are out of Season, and remain here upon the River only to spawn and breed; upon the like Payment.

No Fisherman, or other, shall fish from Sun-setting on Saturday Night, until Sun-rising upon Monday Morning, no, nor during all the Time of Lent, as

4. Item, That no Fisherman, or other, shall fish with any Net, or lay or hale any Weel, or use any other Net or Engine whatsoever, from Sun-setting on Saturday Night, until Sun-rising upon Monday Morning, no, nor during all the Time of Lent, as being a Thing not only very hurtful to the said River, but also a great Abuse and Profaning of the Lord's Sabbath; upon the like Penalty.

5. Item, That no Fisherman, or other, shall at any Time hereafter ship their Draw-Nets (called Shipping a-stern) into their Boats, before such Time as they have laid forth all their whole Net, as they do when they land towards a low Water; nor that they ship some Part of their said Net, and land the rest; but that from henceforth they shall fulfil and observe that ancient Order of landing their Nets (as they have heretofore usually done) at low Water; upon the like Payment.

until Sun-rising on Monday.

No Fisherman, or other, shall ship their Draw-Nets, before they have laid forth their whole Net.

6. Item, That no Fisherman, or other Person whatsoever, shall use any Spear, called an Eel-Spear, at any Time of the Year, for that they are likewise very great Destroyers of Barbels, and other Kind of Fish; nor shall work with any Bley-Net, Rug-Net, or Smelt-Net, upon the said Water Westward, farther than Isleworth Church, from the 10th Day of March yearly, until Holyrood-Day be past, being the 14th Day of September; upon the like Payment.

No Fisherman, or other, to use any Spear; nor work with any Bley-Net, Rug-Net, or Smelt-Net, Westward, farther than Isleworth Church, &c.

7. Item, That no Fisherman, or other, shall at any Time of the Year use or exercise any Flue, Trammel, double-walled Net, or hooped Net whatsoever, for that they are not only the utter Destruction of all breeding Barbels, and also a great Spoil and Hurt to other Sorts of the young Brood and Fry of Fish, being with those Kinds of Nets infinitely destroyed, to the general Ruin of the River aforesaid; upon the like Payment.

No Fisherman, or other, shall use any Flue, Trammel, double-walled Net, or hooped Net.

8. Item, That no Fisherman, or other, shall lay any Weels, called Kills, in any Place of the River, from the 10th of March, till the 10th of May, yearly, for that all Roaches do then shed their Spawn; nor that no Man whatsoever cut any Bulrushes, or other Flags or Sedges growing upon the River, from Richmond unto the Markstone above Staines-Bridge, for that they are a great Succour and Safeguard unto the Fish; upon the like Payment.

No Fisherman, or other Person, shall lay any Weels in any Place of the River, from March 10, to May 10, yearly.

9. Item, No Fisherman, or other, shall use, within the said River of Thames, any Weel, called a Lomb, or a Mill-Pot, or any other Engine, with the Head thereof against the Stream, upon Pain or Forfeiture of ten Pounds, and Imprisonment at the Discretion of the Lord-Mayer; nor that no Man whatsoever shall occupy upon the said River of Thames any Nets, called Purse-Nets, otherwise Casting-Nets; upon the like Payment.

No Fisherman, or other, shall shute any Weel, called a Lomb, or a Mill-Pot, &c.

10. Item, That no Fisherman, or other, shall be suffered to rug for Flounders, either by Ebb or by Flood, at any Time of the Year, between London-Bridge and Stangate, on the South Side, and Westminster-Bridge on the North Side, but only two Casts at low Water, and two Casts at full Sea, or high Water, for the Safeguard of the Fry and Brood of Fish: And no Flounder shall be taken under the Assize of six Inches; nor that no Fishermen, or other, shall fleet with any Bley-Net upon the Benches from Whitehall to the Temple Stairs, upon high Waters, from Whitstide to Bartholomew-tide; upon the like Payment.

No Fisherman, or other, shall rug for Flounders, either by Ebb or Flood, between London-Bridge and Stangate; but only two Casts at low Water, and two Casts at full Sea, &c.

11. Item, That no Fisherman, or other Person whatsoever, shall cast, bring, or cause to be brought, any Carrion, Soil, Gravel, Rubbish, Soda of Earth, or any other Filth, or Annoyance, whereby Banks and Shelves are raised, and the common Passage hindered, to the great Danger of Fares, Boats, and Barges, passing to and fro upon the said River: Nor that no Fisherman, or other, shall drive, or cause to be driven, any Piles, Stumps or Stalks, within the said River of Thames, upon which the like Mischief and Dangers may arise; upon the like Pain and Penalty as afore-said.

No Person to cast any Carrion, &c. into the River.

No Fisherman, or other, to take up any Drift or Wreck, without giving Notice to the Water-Bailiff, or his Substitute.

12. Item, That no Fisherman, or other, shall presume to take up any Wreck or Drift upon the Water of Thames, without Notice given to the Water-Bailiff, or his Substitute, within convenient Time, he satisfying him for his Pains, as shall be reasonable and thought fitting; nor shall conceal and keep secret the said Wreck or Drift from the said Water-Bailiff; to the End that such Order and Care may be taken therein, as hath been accustomed, according to the Laws and Ordinances ordained for the Preservation of the said River; upon the like Pain and Penalty, from the 10th of March to the 1st of May, or at any other Time.

No Fisherman, or other, shall fish with any Net, or use any angled Rod, with more than one Hook upon a Line; nor search for Barbel, &c.

13. Item, That no Fisherman, or other, shall fish with any Kind of Net, or use any Angle-Rod with more than one Hook upon a Line, or saw or search for Barbel within the Limits of London-Bridge, or shall use any other Engine nearer unto the Bridge than St. Botolph's Wharf and the Bridge-house Wharf on the East Side, nor nearer on the West Side than St. Mary Overy's Stairs and the Old Swan; upon the Pain of Imprisonment, at the Discretion of the Lord-Mayor, and six Shillings and eight Pence to the Chamber of London.

No Peterman shall fish upon the Water Westward, farther than Richmond-Causeway.

14. That no Peterman shall at any Time hereafter fish or work with any Manner of Net upon the said Water Westward, farther than Richmond-Causeway, unto which Place, or thereabouts, the Water ebbeth and floweth, for that the Fishing beyond that Place hath caused a great Destruction of Fish; upon Pain of Forfeiture of twenty Shillings for every Time they shall so offend, and farther Punishment, according to the Quality of his Offence.

That no Peterman take the Tides above Richmond; nor above five go together in one Company, &c.

15. Item, It is ordered, that no Petermen shall hereafter, at any Time of the Year, take the Tides above Richmond, nor go in Company together, it being found very prejudicial and hurtful both to the River and Fishermen, and nothing available for the furnishing of any Markets; nor shall go to fish more than five together in one Company between Richmond and London-Bridge; upon Pain of forfeiting for every Crime ten Shillings, and Imprisonment during Pleasure.

That no Peterman, or any other, take any Flounders, &c.

16. Item, That no Peterman, or any other, take any Flounders, or any other Sort of Fish, which they have usually called Kettle-Fish, not being six Inches of Assize, being found to be the great Destruction of the Fish; upon the like Penalty and Pain.

Fishermen not to trust to Boys, and to be entered in the Register-Book of the Water-Bailiff before he is bound, and when his Time

17. Item, That whereas many Inconveniences have heretofore risen to the River of Thames, by divers Fishermens keeping of Boys, who had neither the Sufficiency to take the Charge of Fishing, nor bound Apprentice to the same: Therefore from henceforth it shall not be lawful for any Fisherman to keep two Boys in one Boat, unless the one of them be at Man's Estate, or thought sufficient by the Water-Bailiff to take the Charge, or else that one of them be an Owner: Nor that no Fisherman from henceforth do take any Apprentice to the said Trade of Fishing, unless he first enters his Name in the Register-Book of the Water-Bailiff of this City, kept for that Purpose, nor under the Term of seven Years; and that, after the Expiration of the said Term, he likewise come again before the said Water-Bailiff, to be by him admitted a lawful Fisherman, (as of ancient Time hath been accustomed); upon like Payment.

is expired, to appear again before the Water-Bailiff.

18. Item, That no Person whatsoever, from Staines-Bridge in the West, to Tendal, alias Tendel, in the East, do fasten, lay, or cause to be laid, in any Part of the River of Thames, any more or greater Number than two Vessels, or two Barges, or two Lighters, a-breast, at any Yard, Wharf, Dock, Road, or Chain, or in any other Place whatsoever, in or upon the River of Thames; nor pretend to fasten or stop a Tide, to make any more or greater Number in any Place whatsoever.

That no Person, from Staines-Bridge to Tendel, do fasten any more than two Vessels a-breast.

19. Item, Nor that no Person lay, or cause to be laid, or continue any Timber at any Road, Wharf, or Yard, within the River of Thames; by reason whereof it is, and has often been very prejudicial and dangerous, by Night and Day, to the Passage of the King's Subjects, and to the great Hindrance of Boats and Barges passing and re-passing upon the said River of Thames.

That no Person shall lay any Timber at any Road, Wharf, or Yard.

20. Item, That no Person do make or continue any Wharf, Building, Potgallery, or other Prepture, or Incroachment into, upon, or over any Part of the Soil of the said River, whereby the said River may be in the least diminished; nor any Way annoy or prejudice the said River, or the common Passage therein, or hurt the Banks thereof.

That no Person shall make or continue any Wharf, Building, Potgallery, &c.

21. Lastly, That every Fisherman upon the River of Thames, from London-Bridge unto Staines-Bridge, shall once every Year, (viz. upon St. Paul's Day, being the 25th Day of January) appear before the Water-Bailiff of this City, at the Chapel of the Guildhall, by Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon of the same Day, there to enter their several Names into his Register-Book, kept for that Purpose; and farther, to hear the Orders and Institutions ordained for the Preservation of the said River, to be openly and publicly read, to the Intent that they, and every of them, may the better perform the same, upon Pain of six Shillings and eight Pence for every Default so made. And if any Man whatsoever, Fisherman, or other, shall contemptuously or stubbornly resist the Water-Bailiff, being Sub-Conservator under the Lord-Mayor, in the due Performance and Execution of his said Office, he shall make such Fine, or be imprisoned at the Discretion of the Lord-Mayor for the Time being, as unto his Lordship shall seem most fitting.

Fishermen to appear at the Chapel of Guildhall, on every St. Paul's Day.

By the same Lord-Mayor, the following Articles were ordained to be enquired upon by the Jury for the River of Thames Eastward, for the Conservation and Preservation of the River of Thames, and of the Brood and Fry of Fish within the same, as followeth:

Imprimis, You shall faithfully and truly present (without any Respect) all such Persons, Fishermen, and others, as do profane the Lord's Sabbath in their unlawful Fishing, and going forth that

At Purfleet five, and no more.

At Gray's Thoreck six, and no more.

At the Two Thoroughs three, and no more.

And every Trinck to keep his true Cooplement, and to stand no more in a Birth.

Times and Orders to fish for Whittings.

5. Item, That no Trinck shall stand to fish for Whittings 'till the Ember Week before Michaelmas yearly, and to come no higher than Purfleet, and to have the Hove or Cod of his Net full Inch and half. And upon Saturday, Sun set, to wash off his Net, hale up and go home, and not to return to his Labour again till Monday Morning Day-light: And so likewise shall every Fisherman do from London-Bridge, Westward, to Gravesend-Bridge in the East, and not otherwise.

6. Item, That no Trinckerman, or other Fisherman, shall buy any Trinck, or take or receive any Copy, under the Seal of the Office of Mayoralty, until he be allowed and thought fit by the Lord-Mayor of London, or by his Substitute, the Water-Bailiff for the Time being, with the general Liking and Consent of the said Company of Trinckermen, and seventeen Trincks allowed, and no more.

Orders how Trinckermen are to be admitted.

7. Item, That no Trinck shall stand to fish before any Breach-Mouth at the rising or sinking of any Mother-Fishes, or in the Time of Spawn or Brood of Fish; and that every Trinck shall, at all Times and Seasons, take up and carry away his Anchor at his Time of his leaving off from Fishing, and not to leave his said Anchor behind him to keep his Birth, contrary to antient Order and Custom.

No Trinck to keep his Birth, contrary to antient Order and Custom.

8. Item, That each Trinck shall every dark and foggy Night hang forth out of his said Trinck-Boat one Lanthorn, with sufficient Candle-light, for the better and safer Passage of Ships, Boats, and Vessels passing to and fro upon the said River: And that every Trinck-Cable be no more than twenty Fathom long at the most; or any Henbilt above twenty-two Fathom long. And likewise to have a Ward of forty Fathom to sheer off and give way, if any Ship, Crayer, or other Vessel, shall chance to drive upon them.

To put out a Light every dark and foggy Night, &c.

9. Item, That every Trinckerman shall, one Week before his going to fish, come up to the Chapel of Guildhall, London, and there appear before the Water-Bailiff, as well to receive Leave and Licence for their going forth, as also to hear the Orders and Institutions ordained for the Preservation of the said River, to be there openly and publicly read, to the End they may the better observe and keep the said Orders, and every Thing therein contained.

Trinckerman to appear at Guildhall Chapel before the Water-Bailiff.

10. Item, That no Hebbberman shall fish for Smelts before the twenty-fourth Day of August, yearly, and so to continue till Good-Friday; and that no Hebbberman shall fish in Haven, Creek, Breach or Issue, with any Net of less Affize than three Inches for Flounders, from the Feast of Easter, until the twenty-fourth Day of August yearly. And shall likewise appear before the Water-Bailiff of London, at the Chapel of Guildhall, there to receive Leave or Licence for their said going forth. And that the Mesh of their said Smelt-Nets be full Inch, wet and dry, and not otherwise.

Directions for Smelt-Fishing, and that every Hebbberman appear at Guildhall Chapel before the Water-Bailiff.

11. Item, That every Hebbberman shall fish by the Shore, and pitch their Pole at half Ebb, and shall have but forty Fathom Rope allowed from the Pitch of their Pole into the River, and not to lie a Floating or Flatting for Smelts between two Anchors in the midst of the Stream; nor shall have any Kind of Weight of Lead, Iron, Stone, Barrel, Firkin, Kilderkin, Cask, or with any Wherry or other Device: Nor shall fish from Good-Friday to Bartholomew-tide yearly, between London-Bridge and Gravesend, with any Net under two Inches, except with a Wade-Net for Bait only.

No Hebbberman to lie Floating or Flatting for Smelts, &c.

12. Item, That no Hebbberman shall work any higher for Whittings than Dartford Creek, and to work with no Manner of Net for Whittings of

Not to work higher than

Dartford Creek for Whittings, &c.

less Affize than full Inch and half, wet and dry: Nor shall go forth to take any of the said Whittings yearly, until they be lawfully licensed by the Water-Bailiff of London, before whom they are severally to appear at the said Chapel of Guildhall, London, one Week before Gang-tide yearly.

All Trawlers Names to be given to the Lord-Mayor or Water-Bailiff, &c.

13. Item, You shall present the Names and Surnames of every Trawler, unto the Lord-Mayor of London, or his Substitute the Water-Bailiff, for the Time being. And that no Trawler shall fish above Hole-Haven on the North Side, and Porring on the South Side, till a Fortnight after Michaelmas yearly; and all the Summer to use no Net for Soals under two Inches and a half in the Cod, being two Yards long, and the rest of the Net to be three Inches. And no Trawler to work in Tilbury-Hope after Michaelmas, with any manner of Net under four Inches for Plaice all the Net over. And no Trawler to come upon any Trawl with any other Net at any Time of the Year.

To prevent all Offenders.

14. Item, To prevent all such as have pitched, set or erected any Riff-Hedge, or Half-Nets, upon Stakes or otherwise, within the full Sea, and low Water, being an Engine utterly to kill small Fish; and what Landmen they be upon Kentish Shore, or in any other Place within the Waters of Thames and Medway, that do or have used the same.

The Times for Fishing.

15. Item, That no Trawler do stay Abroad to fish after Whitsun-tide against Wednesday Market till Bartholomew-tide yearly; nor that no Trawler do fish in Tilbury-Hope upon the Saturday after Sun-rising, but to wash off, hale up, and go home, as all other Fishermen ought to do, according to the old and ancient Customs of the River of Thames and Waters of Medway.

Time for every Trawler's Appearance before the Water-Bailiff.

16. Item, That every Trawler upon the River Eastwards do yearly appear before the Water-Bailiff of London, at the Chapel of Guildhall, one Week before the true Times and Seasons of going forth to fish, then and there to receive Leave and Licence for their said Goings-forth, and to hear the Orders and Institutions ordained for the Preservation and Government of the River of Thames, to be there openly and publicly read, to the End that they may the better observe and perform the same.

Affize of Fish to take and bring to Market.

17. Item, That no Trawler, that hath or doth use to trawl to take Soal, Chates, Plaice or Thorn-back, shall take or bring any such Fish to any Market, or to any Country-Town, to sell, except they contain the Affize as followeth, that is to say, every such Soal, Chate, Plaice, and Thorn-back, to contain in length seven Inches with the Head and Tail, and not under.

Directions to be observed by Draggermen.

18. Item, That no Draggerman, that hath or doth use to drag for Shrimps, shall go forth to fish till the first Day of November yearly, and to continue till Good-Friday: Nor shall use any such Drag at any Time of the Year above Maggot-Nasse on the South Side and Stakey-Brake Creek on the North Side, and not otherwise. And that every Draggerman shall, upon the first Day of November yearly, appear before the Water-Bailiff of London, to receive Leave and Licence for going forth.

19. Item, That all Manner of Fishermen whatsoever, that use to take Shads in Shadding-Time, shall observe and keep their true Order of shooting a Drove's Length off from one another, and to prevent what Disorders are kept among them, both in going forth upon Sundays, or otherwise. And that none of the said Shadders shall go forth to fish, until they have received Leave and Licence of the Lord-Mayor of London, or his Substitute, the Water-Bailiff, for the Time being; their true Time of going forth to be the Week before Easter yearly, and not before.

All Fishermen to keep true Order of Shooting.

20. Item, That no Peterman whatsoever, from London-Bridge in the West, as far as the River Medway in the East, shall fleet for Flounders with any Rug-Net in the Night-time, from Sun going down until Day-light the next Morning, betwixt Michaelmas and Christmas, because in the Night-time they make great Destruction of small Flounders, and carry them away both unseen and unknown. Nor that no Peterman do fish with any Hagan or Smelt-Net below London-Bridge, at any Time of the Year.

No Peterman to fleet for Flounders with any Rug-Net in the Night-time.

21. Item, That no Peterman, or other Person whatsoever, shall fish betwixt London-Bridge and Limehouse-Nasse, with any Manner of Net to fleet, beat or rug at any Time of the Year, except for Shads only: Nor that no Peterman do rug from London-Bridge to Blackwall, and so Eastward, from Michaelmas yearly, until Whitsun-tide, but only three Casts at high Water, and three Casts at low Water in and out; and every Rug-Net is to contain two Inches and three Quarters in the Mesh, wet and dry, and every Bley-Net two Inches and a half throughout, wet and dry.

No Peterman shall fish betwixt London-Bridge and Limehouse-Nasse, but for Shads; and Rules to be observed in Rugging.

22. Item, That no Fisherman, or other Person whatsoever, shall lay down in the River of Thames Eastwards, any Smelt-Leaps before St. Paul's Day yearly, and so to continue till Good-Friday next following, and no longer. Nor that no Fisherman, or other Person, shall lay in the said River any more than only one Wand of eighteen and no more; and not to lay them down until they be lawfully licensed thereunto by the Lord-Mayor or Water-Bailiff, and none to use them but Fishermen and Householders.

Smelt-Leaps.

23. Item, That no Fisherman, or other Person, shall lay in the said River of Thames any Eel-Leaps till fourteen Days after Easter yearly, and so to continue until Michaelmas next following: Nor shall lay any more, or greater Quantity, than only two Dozen, and no more: Nor shall lay of the said Eel-Leaps until they be lawfully licensed thereunto, as aforesaid, and not otherwise.

Eel-Leaps

24. Item, That no Fisherman, or other Person whatsoever, shall use upon the River of Thames, at any Time of the Year, any Spear, called an Eel-Spear, or any other Kind of Spear whatsoever, for that they are great Destroyers of young Brood, and other Kind of Fish, in great Abundance, and therefore altogether unlawful; no Man to use them upon Pain of Imprisonment, and further Fine, at the Discretion of the Lord-Mayor.

Eel-Spear.

25. Item, You shall further enquire, and true Presentment make, of all such Persons as do use to go down the River to buy up either Forefalling.

Fish, Victuals, or other Commodities, before the same cometh to Billinggate, and other Keys, being known and appointed Places of Sale, Vent, and Discharge thereof: If you know any such, you shall present who they be, and how often they have so done.

Fishing
out of Season.

26. Item, That no Fisherman, or other Person whatsoever, shall work with any Manner of Net or Engine whatsoever, to take or kill any Dace or Roach from the tenth of March, till the tenth of May yearly, for that they do then shed their Spawn: Nor that they take or kill any of the said Dace, Roach, or other Kind of Fish, out of their due Kind or Season, except they contain in Length according to the true Scantling and Aflize, and not otherwise.

Soil and Rubbish.

27. Item, You shall further enquire, and true Presentment make, whether any Butcher, Brewer, Inn-keeper, or any other Person or Persons, as well within the City of London, as in any other Country-Town or Village (as far as the Liberty of the Lord-Mayor extendeth) have cast or put into the said River any Paunches, Grains, Horse-Dung, or other Rubbish, Soil or Filth whatsoever, to the very great Annoyance and Hurt of the said River, on Pain of Imprisonment, and further Fine, at the Discretion of the Lord-Mayor of London: If you know any such, you shall present them.

28. Item, You shall further enquire what Royal Fishes have been taken within the Jurisdiction and Royalty of the Lord-Mayor of London, as namely, Whales, Sturgeons, Porpoises, and such like; and to present the Name and Names of all such Persons as shall take them, to the Lord-Mayor of London for the Time being.

Lampern-Rods.

29. Item, That no Fisherman, or other Person whatsoever, shall lay in the said River of Thames any Lampern-Leaps to take Lamperns before Bartholomew-tide yearly, and so to continue till Good-Friday: Nor shall lay any more or greater Quantity than only one Rod of forty Fathom, containing seven Dozen of Leaps, and not above: Nor shall lay any of the said Rods until they shall be lawfully licensed by the Lord-Mayor of London, or by his Substitute the Water-Bailiff, for the Time being.

No Incroachments to be permitted.

30. Item, That no Person do make or continue any Wharf, Building, or Potgallery, or other Perprefture, or Incroachment into, upon, or over any other Part of the Soil of the said River, whereby the said River may be in the least diminished, nor any Way annoy or prejudice the said River, or the common Passage therein, or hurt the Banks thereof.

Rules to be observed by Fishermen and others.

31. Lastly, Because the Number of Fishermen do daily increase, and not only Fishermen, but also a great Number of Cable-Hangers and Tradesmen, such as were never bound Apprentices to the Craft and Science of Fishing, to the great Hurt of the River, and Hindrance of Fishermen, the said River being not able to relieve and succour, the Multiplicity of them being so great: It is now ordained, That every Fisherman, dwelling near unto the said River, that doth take and receive into his or their Custody any Apprentice to the said Trade of Fishing, shall, within one Month next after, repair unto the Water-Bailiff of London, to have his Indenture written and engrossed, to the End that he may present him to the Chamberlain of London to be enrolled, according to the antient Custom: And not to receive any Apprentice under the Term of seven Years: And that, at the End and Expiration of the said Term, the Master of the said Apprentice do again present him to the said Water-Bailiff, to be by him admitted and allowed a Fisherman. And finally, You shall enquire, and true Presentment make, by the Oaths that you and every of you have taken, whether any Fisherman, or other Person, whatsoever they be, have with any Manner of Net or Engine offended or misused himself in Fishing within the said River, or whether they have any Manner of Ways made Destruction of the Brood and Fry of any Kind of Fish therein contained, contrary to the good and antient Laws, Ordinances and Constitutions of the said River of Thames: And to make a true, perfect, and faithful Presentment of all other Kind of Enormities, Hurts, Offences, and Annoyances, touching as well Fishermen as any other Person or Persons within the said Jurisdiction, being any Manner of Ways hurtful or offensive to the same. Again,

At a Court of Aldermen, the Tenth of July, 1673, an Order was made as followeth, viz.

"This Court considering the great Decay
"of the Fishing-Trade in the River of "Thames, and conceiving the Drawing the Shores
"(of late so frequently practised) is the chief
"Ground thereof, as tending to the great Preju"dice and utter Destruction of the Brood and
"Fry of all Sorts of Fish, did thereupon this "Day strictly order and enjoin, That no Person

"the River of Thames, upon any Pretence what"soever, at any Time or Season of the Year,
"either with lawful or unlawful Nets, save only
"for Salmons, in Rooms appointed and set out
"for that Purpose by this Court: And that
"none do fish for Salmons in such Rooms,
"but only such as shall be impowered there-
"unto under the Seal of the Mayoralty of this "City: And also that none fish with a Net
"under six Inches in the Mesh, upon Pain
"that every Offender shall forfeit for every
"such Offence his Nets, and pay as a Fine
"the Sum of twenty Pounds, and suffer Im"prisonment, during the Pleasure of the Court.
"And to the End more diligent and strict "Search may for the future be made upon the "said River than heretofore hath been, or possibly "can be, by one single Person, for such as
"fish with unlawful Nets, at unlawful Times,
"and in unlawful Manner; the Water-Bailiff
"for the Time being is by this Court ordered

From hence it is easy to collect the Reason why, upon Revival of the Fishermen's Company, the Parliament restrained all the By-Laws to be made by them to the Approbation of, and submitted them to be altered or amended by, the Court of Lord-Mayor and Aldermen of the City of London, and withal reserving to their Officer, the Water-Bailiff, his ancient Fees, or thirty Pounds per Annum, in lieu thereof, over and above the Benefit of granting Licences for Fishing in the several Seasons, to be still continued to him, and a Right of being one of the Wardens of the Company.

12. Ed.

This Regulation produced a new Set of By-Laws, which by the Dissolution of the Company are now of no Force.

But this Act no where restrained the Conservator of the Thames from making such Orders, as should be thought necessary for the Preservation of the Fry, and the Navigation of the River of Thames: Wherefore in the Year 1741, Sir Daniel Lambert, Knt. being then Lord-Mayor, and Conservator of the River of Thames, and the Waters of Medway, at the Request of the Court of Aldermen, added several good and wholesome Orders to those of Sir Robert Ducie aforesaid, as follow, viz.

A.D. 1741

Griffith's Conferency
of the Thames,
p. 86.

How unlawful Nets, &c. may be discovered and the Offenders punished.

No Net
under two Inches and a half shall be worked above

ORDERS devised and agreed upon by the Right Honourable Daniel Lambert, Esq; Lord-Mayor of the City of London, Conservator of the River of Thames, Waters of Medway, and River Lea, for the Conservation and Preservation of the Spawn, Breed, and Fry of Fish therein, as followeth.

Imprimis, To the End all unlawful Nets, and Engines, and other Abuses offered to the Prejudice, and Destruction of the Fishery, within the Jurisdiction of the Lord-Mayor of London, may be discovered, and the Offenders punished,

It is ordained, That no Net under the Affize of two Inches and a half in the Meish, shall be worked, or wrought, by any Person using the Art, Mystery, or Craft of a Fisherman, at any Time of the Year, above Richmond Crane, upon the River of Thames, by reason it is very prejudicial and destructive to the Fry and Spawn of Fish, there being no Season of Smelts above that Place:

Richmond
Crane upon the River of
Thames.

Nor shall use any Net in that Work, called Beating of the Bush, Flag, or Reed, which shall be of less Affize than three Inches in the Meish:

Not to use
any Net,
&c. of less Affize than aforesaid.

Nor shall use any Weights or Stones to their Nets, upon Forfeiture of forty Shillings for each Offence.

Not to use Weights or Stones,
&c.

Item, That no Pike-Net, or other Net or Engine, shall be wrought or drawn over the Weeds, for catching of Pikes, by any Person using the Art, Mystery, or Craft of a Fisherman, within the Jurisdiction aforesaid, by reason it is destructive to, and occasioneth the driving off all other Fish out of the Western Rivers, which otherwise would lie, and breed, and spawn, in the said Weeds, upon the like Penalty and Forfeiture of forty Shillings for every such Offence.

No Pike-
Net, &c. shall be drawn over the Weeds, on Penalty of 40 s.

Item, That no Person using the Art, Mystery, or Craft of a Fisherman, shall at any Time, within the said Jurisdiction, bend any Net by Anchors or otherwise thwart the Channel, and so as to draw another Net into it, whereby the Spawn of Barbel and other Fish may be destroyed, upon the Forfeiture of forty Shillings for every such Offence.

No Person shall bend any Net by Anchors,
&c. upon the Forfeiture of 40 s.

Item, That no such Person shall draw, work, or land, any Net for Salmon, of a lesser Affize than three Inches in the Meish, from the tenth of March, until the fourteenth of September, in any Part of the River of Thames, from Keew-Pile Westward, to the City of London Mark-Stone above Staines-Bridge, upon Forfeiture of forty Shillings for every such Offence.

No Person
to draw any Net
for Salmon of less Affize than three Inches one half in the Meish, on
40 s.

Item, That no such Person shall band, or use the Trade of Banding, within the Jurisdiction aforesaid, at any Time of the Year, except between the first Day of November, and the first Day of March yearly: Nor shall use any more than twelve Bands at a Time, nor above one hundred Hooks upon each Band: Nor shall lay down, within the Jurisdiction aforesaid, any more or other Bands in the mean Time, whilst those twelve Bands are baited afresh, upon Forfeiture of forty Shillings for every such Offence.

No Person
to Band between November
1, and March 1: nor any more than 12 Bands, and 100
Hooks upon each Band, on Penalty of 40 s.

Item, For the more easy finding out of Offenders, their Names, and Places of Abode,

How to find out Offenders.

It is further ordered, That every Person who shall fish with a Boat, within the Jurisdiction aforesaid, after the twenty-fifth Day of December, 1741, shall have on his Boat both his Christian and Surname, and also the Name of the Parish in which he dwelleth, legibly painted in some convenient Place, where any one may see and read the same; on Forfeiture of twenty Shillings for every Time he shall act contrary hereunto.

Fishermen
to have their Names on their Boats and their Place of Abode.

Item, That no Person or Persons whatsoever shall, at any Time or Times hereafter, upon any Season or Seasons whatsoever, go out to fish for Smelts, Shads, or any other Fish whatsoever, or lay Leaps, or Rods for Eels, in any Place within the Jurisdiction aforesaid, without Leave, and a Licence first had and obtained, under the

No Person
to go out to fish without obtained

of the Water-Bailiff.

Hand

Water-Bailiff to appoint proper Seasons for Fishing.

To appear at Guildhall Chapel upon due Notice, on Penalty 5*l*.

To prevent fishing with unlawful Nets.

Person or Persons authorized by the Water-Bailiff, may search Fishing-Boats at any Time.

Not to resist the Water-Bailiff, or his Deputies, on Penalty of 20 Marks.

Locks, &c. on the Thames.

Hand and Seal of the Water-Bailiff for the Time being, who shall have and receive, for every such Licence, the same Fees and Duties, as have been immemorably paid and allowed to the Water-Bailiff for every Licence: And that the said Water-Bailiff for the Time being shall, from Time to Time, limit and appoint the proper and respective Times and Seasons for the said Fishermen going forth to fish: And that, upon every such Occasion, all, and every of the said Fishermen, shall, upon due Summons or Notice given, repair to the said Water-Bailiff, at the Chapel at the Guildhall, London, there to receive and take out their several and respective Licences for such their going forth to fish; and to hear the Ordinances, for the Preservation of the Fisheries, publickly and openly read, to the End that they may the better observe and keep the said Ordinances; and that none go out to fish, without such a Grant or Licence; and that every Fisherman offending herein, shall forfeit and pay five Pounds for every such Offence.

Item, For the better Prevention of using unlawful Craft, by fishing with unlawful Nets or Engines,

It is further ordained, that any Person or Persons, Fishermen, or others, who shall be authorized therunto by the Water-Bailiff for the Time being, shall, and may, from Time to Time, and at all Times, quietly and peaceably, enter into any Boat or Boats, Vessel or Vessels, belonging to any Person or Persons, using the Art or Craft of fishing in any Water or Waters within the Jurisdiction aforesaid, to view and search for all unsizeable and unlawful Nets and Engines, and for any Fish which they shall suspect to be taken, killed, or destroyed, contrary to the Laws and Statutes of this Kingdom; and the same unlawful Nets and Engines to seize and take away, and bring to the Water-Bailiff (with the Names of every such Offender, that they may be proceeded against according to Law); and to seize and take away the Fish, so taken and destroyed contrary to the said Laws, and to distribute the same among the Poor: And who-soever shall resist or disturb the said Water-Bailiff, and his Deputies, or any of them, in the Execution of their lawful Office or Employment of searching for and seizing unlawful Nets, Engines or Fish, as aforesaid, shall forfeit and pay twenty Marks of lawful Money of England for every such Offence.

After all these Laws, Orders and Precautions for the Preservation of the River Thames from Annoyances, it has been frequently objected, that they are deficient, or at least suspended, in regard to the many Stops, Dams, or Locks, which are very numerous above Bridge, as high as the Thames is navigable. But those Locks are really an Invention useful to the Publick; without which, Tradefmen, and Farmers, whose Markets depend on Water-Carriage to and from the West of London, could not carry on their Business. For, tho' the Thames is said to be navigable for one hundred thirty-eight Miles above Bridge; yet there are so many Flats in that Course, that in the Summer Season the Navigation Westward must be entirely obstructed for Want of Water, when the Springs are low: A Misfortune not to be remedied by any other Means than by Locks, or certain Machines made of Wood, placed quite cross the River, and so contrived as to confine the Current of Water, as long as found convenient; that is, till the Water rises to such a Height, as to allow Depth enough for the Barges to pass over the Shallows: Which being effected, the confined Water is set at Liberty, and the loaded Vessel proceeds on its Voyage, till another Shoal requires the same Contrivance to carry it forward. A great Convenience: But the Charge attending it is the Subject of Complaint amongst the Bargemen, being obliged to pay near fourteen Pounds in one Voyage, if the Barge passes through all the Locks to and from London.

That the Reader may have a clearer Notion of this Matter, I shall subjoin a List of all the Locks, &c. on the River Thames, with their Distance from each other, and the Price the Barges are obliged to pay at each: And herein it is to be noted, that though between Lechlade and Oxford there are few or no Locks, yet in Summer, when the Water is low, they pay what is here set down for Flashes only.

N. B. From this Table it plainly appears, First, That a Barge passing from Lechlade to London, pays thirteen Pounds, fifteen Shillings and six Pence; and from Oxford to London, twelve Pounds, eighteen Shillings.

But this is a Charge only in Summer, and paid for Flashes, when the Water is low. And there is no Lock on this River from London-Bridge 'till you come to Bolter's Lock, which is fifty-one Miles and an half.

CHAP. IX.

Standard of Weights and Measures ordered to be provided by the Sheriffs of London for the whole Kingdom. King John's Charters to the City. Weavers Company expelled the City. Various Occurrences from the Year 1202 to 1211. City Wall encompassed by a Ditch. Londoners join with the Barons, and oblige King John to grant Magna Charta and Charter of Forests. Obligated to invite the Aid of France. Fit out a powerful Fleet. Take the Part of Lewis. Deserted by the Barons. Have their Privileges confirmed by King Henry III. Oppressed by the Court. Charters granted by King Henry III. A great Fire. Disgrace of Hubert de Burg.

ROGER BLUNT and Nicholas Ducket, Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, were, by the King, commanded to provide Measures, Gallons, Iron Rods, and Weights, for Standards, to be sent to the several Counties of England. At the same Time so great a Famine happened, that Wheat was sold at eighteen Shillings and four Pence the Quarter.

A.D. 1199 King Richard was succeeded by his Brother John Earl of Moreton, who, immediately on his ascending the Throne, granted to the Citizens of London the three following Charters.

Roy. Char. Lond. "John, by the Grace of God, King of England, Lord of Ireland, Duke of Normandy, Aquitaine, Numb. VII.

"and Earl of Anjou; To all Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, Justices, Sheriffs, Ministers, and all his Majesty's faithful Subjects, French and English, Greeting:

"Know ye, that we have granted to our Citizens of London, that none of them shall plead without the Walls of the City of London, of no Pleas, saving the Pleas of foreign Tenures (our Monies and Ministers excepted): Also we have granted to them Acquittal of Murther, within the City and Portoken; and none of them shall wage Battle; and of the Pleas belonging to the Crown they may discharge themselves, according to the ancient Custom of the City; and that, within the Walls of the City or Portoken, no Man shall take Lodging by Force, or Delivery of the Marshal: And also we have granted to them, that all the Citizens of London shall be quit from Toll or Lastage, and every other Custom throughout all our Lands, on this Side and beyond the Seas: And that none shall be adjudged for Amerciaments of Money, but according to the Law of the City, which they had in the Time of King Henry, Grandfather to Henry our Father: And that there shall be no Miskenning in any Plea in the City: And that the Hustings shall be kept once every Week; and they justly have their Lands, and Tenures, and Premises, and all other Debts, whosoever owe them: And that Right be holden to them of their Lands and Tenures, which be within the City, according to the Custom of the said City; and of all their Debts which shall be lent at London; and that Pleas of all Promises there made, be holden at London; and if any in any of our Lands on this Side, or beyond the Seas, shall take any Toll or any other Custom from the Men of London, after that he shall fail of Right, may take Goods therefore at London.

"And we do grant unto them, that they may have their Huntings, wheresoever they had the same in the Time of King Henry, Grandfather to our Father. Furthermore, for the Advancement of the said City, we have granted unto them, that they shall be free and quit of all Bridtoll and Childwite, and of Jerefgive and Scotale, so as the Sheriff of London, nor any other Bailiff, may make any Scotale. These aforefaid Customs we do grant; and all other Liberties and free Customs, which they had in the Time of King Henry, Grandfather of Henry our Father, when as more freely and better they had the same. Wherefore we will and stedfastly command, that they and their Heirs may have and hold all these Things aforefaid, hereditarily and wholly, of Us and our Heirs.

"Witness Hubert Archbishop of Canterbury, our Chancellor; William of London, Earl of Ely, G. of Gloucester, Godfrey of Winchester, Bishops; Godfrey, Son of Peter, Earl of Essex; William Marshal, Earl of Pembroke; Homel Earl of Warren; R. Earl of Clarence; Earl Roger; Lord Bigot; William, Earl of Arundel; William de Braos; Roger, Son of Roger, Hugh Borg, William Bridge, Warren, William D. Warren, Stephen D. Truncham, Simon de Pattisfel: Given by the Hands of Hubert, Archbishop of Canterbury, our Chancellor, at Torham, the twentieth

"venteenth Day of June, in the first Year
"of our Reign."

By this Charter the Citizens, besides having all their ancient Rights and Privileges confirmed to them, are exempt from the Payment of all Toll in the King's foreign Dominions; for which the City paid the Sum of three thousand Marks.

A.D. 1199 At the same Time, John granted the Citizens the following Charter:

Roy. Char.
Lond.
K. John's
second Charter.

"John, by the Grace of God, King of Eng-
"land, Lord of Ireland, Duke of Normandy, Aqu-
"tane, and Earl of Anjou; To his Archbishops,
"Bishops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, Justices, Sher-
"iffs, Stewards, Castle-keepers, Constables, Bai-
"liffs, Ministers, and all his faithful Subjects,
"Greeting:

"Know ye all, that we for our Soul's Health,
"and for the Soul's Health of Henry our Father,
"and all our Predecessors; and also for the
"Commonweal of our City of London, and all our "Realm; have granted and steadfastly command"ed, that all the Wares, [or Wears] which are in "the Thames or in the Medway, be removed, where-
"soever they shall be within the Thames and the "Medway; and that no Wares from henceforth
"be put any where in the Thames or Medway,
"upon Forfeiture of ten Pounds Sterling; also
"we have clearly quit-claimed all that, which "the Keepers of the Tower of London were wont
"yearly to receive of the said Wares: Wherefore
"we will and steadfastly command, that no
"Keeper of the said Tower, at any Time here"after, exact any Thing from any Body, nor "trouble or molest any Person, by Reason of the "said Wares; for it is sufficiently manifest to us,
"by the Right Reverend Hubert, Archbishop of "Canterbury, and other our faithful Subjects,
"it is given us sufficiently to understand, that
"very great Detriment and Discommodity hath "grown to our said City of London, and also to "our Realm, by occasion of these Wares; which
"to the Intent it may continue both firm and "stable for ever, we do fortify the same by In"scription of this present Page, and putting to
"our Seal:

"These being Witnesses, William of London,
"Eustace of Ely, Godfrey of Winchester, Bi"shops; Jeffrey, Son of Peter, Earl of "Essex; William Marshal, Earl of Pembroke;
"H. Earl of Warren, Earl Roger Pigott; R.
"Earl of Clare; Earl de Braos; Robert, Son
"of Roger, Hugh Bord, William Brewer, Ste"phen Turnham, William Warren, Simon of "Pattishel: Given by the Hands of Hubert,
"Archbishop of Canterbury, our Chancellor,
"at Shoreham, the seventeenth Day of June,
"in the first Year of our Reign."

This Charter grants to the Citizens of London, a Right to move all the Wears in the Rivers of Thames and Medway, with a Power of inflicting a Penalty of ten Pounds, upon any Person that shall presume to erect any Wear or Wears, in either of the said Rivers.

A.D. 1199 A few Days after, the King granted the Citizens his third Charter, as follows:

Roy. Char.
Lond.
K. John's
third Charter.

"John, by the Grace of God, King of Eng-
"land, Lord of Ireland, Duke of Normandy, Aqu-
"tane, and Earl of Anjou; To his Archbishops,
"Bishops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, Justices, Sher-
"iffs, Rulers, and to all his Bailiffs and loving "Subjects:

"Know ye, that we have granted, and by this
"our present Writing confirmed, to our Citizens
"of London, the Sheriffwick of London and Mid"dlesex, with all the Customs and Things to the "Sheriffwick belonging, within the City and "without, by Land and by Water, to have and
"to hold to them and their Heirs, of Us and our "Heirs, paying therefore three hundred Pounds
"of Blank Sterling Money, at two Termes in "the Year; that is to say, at the Easter Exche"quer, one hundred and fifty Pounds; and at "Michaelmas Exchequer, one hundred and fifty "Pounds; saving to the Citizens of London all
"their Liberties and free Customs.

"And further, we have granted to the Citizens
"of London, that they amongst themselves make
"Sheriffs whom they will, and may remove them
"when they will; and those whom they make
"Sheriffs, they shall present to our Justices of "our Exchequer, of these Things, which to the "said Sheriffwick appertain, whereof they ought "to answer us; and unless they shall sufficiently
"answer and satisfy, the Citizens may answer
"and satisfy us the Amerciaments and Farm,
"saving to the said Citizens their Liberties, as
"is aforesaid; and saving to the said Sheriffs the "same Liberties, which other Citizens have: So
"that, if they which shall be appointed Sheriffs
"for the Time being, shall commit any Offence,
"whereby they ought to incur any Amerciament
"of Money, they shall not be condemned for "any more than to the Amerciament of twenty "Pounds, and that without the Damage of other "Citizens, if the Sheriffs be not sufficient for "the Payment of their Amerciaments: But, if "they do any Offence, whereby they ought to in"cur the Loss of their Lives or Members, they "shall be adjudged, as they ought to be, accord"ing to the Law of the City; and of these "Things, which to the said Sheriffs belong, the "Sheriffs shall answer before our Justices at our "Exchequer, saving to the said Sheriffs the Li"berties which other Citizens of London have.

"Also this Grant and Confirmation we have "made to the Citizens of London for the Amend"ment of the said City, and because it was in "ancient Times farmed for three hundred "Pounds: Wherefore we will and steadfastly
"command, that the Citizens of London and "their Heirs may have and hold the Sheriffwick
"of London and Middlesex, with all Things to the "said Sheriffwick belonging, of Us and our Heirs,
"to possess and enjoy hereditarily, freely and
"quietly, honourably and wholly, by Fee-farm
"of three hundred Pounds; and we forbid that "none presume to do any Damage, Impediment
"or Diminishment to the Citizens of London of "these Things, which to the said Sheriffwick do "or were accustomed to appertain: Also we will
"and command, that if we or our Heirs, or "any of our Justices, shall give or grant to any "Person any of those Things which to the "Farm of the Sheriffwick appertain, the same
"shall be accounted to the Citizens of London,
"in the Acquittal of the said Farm at our Ex"chequer.

"Witness Edward of Ely, Savarick of Bath,
"Bishops; William Marshal, Earl of Pen-
"breke;

"broke; Ralph, Earl of Chester; William, Earl of Arundel; Robert, Son of Walter; William, Son of Albin: Given by the Hands of Hubert, Archbishop of Canterbury, our Chancellor, at the good Town upon Foke, the fifth Day of July, in the first Year of our Reign."

By this Charter, the Citizens of London have the Fee-farm of the Sheriffwicks of London and Middlesex confirmed to them at the ancient Rent; with an additional Power of chusing their Sheriffs.

A.D. 1200
Arnold.
Chron.

In the second Year of this Reign, an ancient Author writes, were chosen thirty-five Men by the wise Men of the City, and sworn to maintain the Assizes in London.

A.D. 1201

King John, in the third Year of his Reign, granted the City a fourth Charter, as follows:

Roy. Char.
Lond.
K. John's fourth Charter.

"John, by the Grace of God, King of England, Lord of Ireland, Duke of Normandy and Aquitaine, and Earl of Anjou; To his Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, Justices, Sheriffs, and to all his Bailiffs and faithful Subjects, Greeting: Know ye, that We, at the Request of our Mayor and Citizens of London, have granted, and by this our present Writing confirmed, that the Guild of Weavers shall not from henceforth be in the City of London, neither shall be at all maintained: But, because we have been accustomed yearly to receive eighteen Marks in Money, every Year, of the said Guild; our said Citizens shall pay unto Us and our Heirs twenty Marks in Money, for a Gift, at the Feast of St. Michael, at our Exchequer."

Weavers expelled
the City.

"Witness Hubert, Archbishop of Canterbury; Earl of Ely; William of Albemarle; Bishop Hugh of Gornar; Robert of Harcourt; Thomas Basset; P. of Stoke; R. of Remars: Given by the Hands of Hubert, Archbishop of Canterbury, at the Gornar, the twentieth Day of March, in the third Year of our Reign."

By this Charter, the Guild or Fraternity of Weavers were expelled the City; but for what Offence, is not mentioned. However, the Crime must have been very considerable, to occasion the Expulsion of a whole Community, for so small an Addition to the Royal Revenue, as two Marks per Annum.

Mad. Hist.
Excheq.
A.D. 1202

In the fourth Year of King John, Guy de Von stood indebted to the Crown in no less a Sum than one thousand and sixty-six Pounds, eight Shillings, and four Pence, for the Farm of the Cambion or Exchange of London, which he had upon Lease for a certain Term of Years, as appears by the great Roll of the Exchequer in the first of the said King.

Ibid.
A.D. 1204

The Chamberlain's Office of this City remaining still in the Crown, William de St. Michael paid to the King a Fine of one hundred Pounds for the same, and a yearly Rent of one hundred Marks; which shews it at that Time to have been a Place of great Profit.

Matt. Par.
Hist. Angl.

On New-Year's Day this Year began an excessive Frost, which held 'till the nineteenth of March; Arnold says, 'till (the 25th) Lady-Day in Lent: By which the Seed in the Ground was so greatly damaged, that Wheat was sold this Year at twelve Shillings a Quarter,

A. D. 1205, Otto, the Emperor, and Nephew to the King, arriving at this City, was received by the Citizens with the greatest Magnificence and Pomp imaginable.

In 1207, the Londoners not only made the King a present of three hundred Pounds; but likewise paid him two hundred Marks, to be excused from the Quinzime, or Fifteenth, imposed upon Merchants. However, they were soon after charged with the Sum of one thousand Pounds, towards the King's Expedition against the Scots. In which Year it is said, that the chief Magistrate of this City, at that Time Henry Fitz-Alwyn, or, as Arnold in his Chronicle writes it, Henryson Alwyn, took the Title of Mayer or Moyor, instead of Custos and Bailiff, under which Names he had held that Dignity for twenty Years successively. In 1209, the King's Purveyor having bought a certain Quantity of Corn in London, Roger Winchelsey and Edmund Hardell, the Sheriffs, would not permit him to carry it off; which so highly incensed the King, that he sent a positive Command to the Council of the City (which consisted of five-and-thirty Members) to degrade and imprison the said Sheriffs; which being done, in Obedience to the Royal Precept, the said Council sent a Deputation to the King at Langley, to intercede for their unfortunate Sheriffs; and to assure his Majesty, that what they had done, was not out of any Disrespect to him, but purely to prevent an Insurrection, which was then threatened, and at that critical Juncture might have proved dangerous to the Royal Affairs; which Reason proved so satisfactory to the King, that he gave Order for their immediate Discharge.

Just after, the City of London, together with all other Parts of the Kingdom, were, by the Bishops of London, Ely and Worcester, interdicted by the Insolence and Order of Pope Innocent, for the King's not obeying his unjust and imperious Command: Whereupon all Churches and Churchyards were shut up; Divine Service ceased in all Places; there was no Administration of Sacraments, except to Infants, and dying Persons; and, all ecclesiastical Rites being omitted, the Bodies of the Dead were buried in the Highways and Ditches, without the Performance of Funeral Service.

Mad. Hist. In the sixteenth Year of King John, this City was tallaged at two thousand Marks, towards taking off the national Interdict. About which Time, the King granted the Citizens his fifth and last Charter, as followeth:

and that they may have all the aforesaid Liber-

as is aforesaid.

"Witness, the Lords, P. of Winton, William of Worcester, William of Coventry, Bishops;
William Brigeword; Peter, Son of Herbert;
Godfrey d' Lucy; and John, Son of Hugh.
Given by the Hands of Mr. Richard Har-rister, our Chancellor, at the New Temple,

"London, the nineteenth Day of May, in the sixteenth Year of our Reign."

By this Charter, the Citizens had not only all their ancient Rights and Immunities confirmed, but likewise an additional and valuable Privilege of chusing their chief Magistrate from among themselves, who, till this Time, had been appointed by the King, who now only reserved to himself the Nomination of a Chamberlain. This great Privilege obtained, divers Crafts or Trades began to form themselves into Fraternities, in Imitation of others of their Fellow-Citizens, and as such continued for many Years, before they were incorporated by Charter.

Most of the Barons and chief Men of the Kingdom being come to London, they repaired to the New Temple, (where now stand the Inns of Court of that Name) where the King resided, and peremptorily demanded of him the Re-establishment of King Edward's Laws, together with all the Rights and Privileges contained in the Charter of Henry the First; affirming, that they required nothing but what he had solemnly sworn to grant at the Time of his Absolution: (John having been excommunicated, his Subjects were absolved from their Allegiance, the Sentence of Deposition pronounced against him, and the Kingdom interdicted above six Years). The King, having desired Time to consider the Barons Demands, rejected their Petition with the utmost Indignation.

The Barons, having a potent Army on foot, resolved to obtain by Force what they could not in a pacifick Way; and for the more effectually attaining their Ends, and also to give a Sanction to their Enterprize, resolved, by all Ways and Means, to bring over to their Side the City of London. In order to which, a private Negotiation was set on foot with some of the principal Londoners, who found it no difficult Matter to prevail upon their Fellow-Citizens, to join with the Barons, in Opposition to an insatiable Prince, who had often racked them by illegal and intolerable Exactions. This Consideration quickly made them resolve to be aiding and assisting in the Recovery of their lost Privileges: Whereupon they immediately dispatched Messengers to Bedford, to acquaint the Barons with their Resolution; and, to prevent a Discovery, entreated them to make all possible Dispatch to come and possess themselves of the City.

The Barons, having got what they longed for, with a Joy inexpressible, instantly began their March for London; and, being arrived at Ware, marched from thence by Night, and on the four-and-twentieth of May, early in the Morning, during Mass-time, entered the City at Aldgate (before the King received Intelligence of their Approach, notwithstanding his being then in the Tower of London); and having secured the Gates with their own Troops, fell to plundering the Houses of the Royalists and Jews, the latter of which they demolished; and with the Stones thereof, with the utmost Diligence, repaired the Defects of the City Wall; and, having got ready their military Engines, laid Siege to the Tower.

This great Success of the Barons occasioned the King's being almost entirely deserted; who, finding himself thus unhappily circumstanced, had Recourse to Dissimulation, by proposing an Accommodation:

By this inestimable Charter, the People were eased from all those unjust Exactions and Extortions, which the Tyrant had made use of to fleece them, viz. Some being obliged to pay great Sums to obtain Justice; others to have their Proceedings in Law expedited; and others retarded; whilst some were frequently obliged to pay a Fourth, Third, and sometimes Half the Debt they sued for, to have Justice done them. Against these mischievous and villainous Practices, a Clause is provided in this Charter, viz. Nulli vendemus, nulli negabimus, aut differemus Rectum vel Justitiam: That is, We will not sell to any Man, we will not deny any Man, or delay, Right or Justice. By the first, were excluded the excessive Fines, by the stopping of Suits, or Proceedings at Law, and Refusal of Writs; and by the last, such Delays, as were heretofore occasioned by the Counterfeins of Defendants, or the Prince's Will.

Charter of Forests.

The Charter of Forests being at the same Time agreed upon, they were ratified at Runnemede, near Staines.

The Barons, having had frequent Experience of the King's great Insincerity, concluded he was not to be bound by a Roll of Parchment; therefore resolved upon taking all the necessary Precautions imaginable, to oblige him to keep the Treaty; wherefore, among other Things, they engaged him to leave them in Possession of the City and Tower of London, 'till the Treaty was executed. Yet, notwithstanding all the Care taken by the cautious Barons, they soon found, that neither Oaths nor Treaties were capable of binding John; who, soon repenting of what he had done, not only applied to the Pope for an Absolution from his Oath, but likewise to divers foreign Princes for Assistance, obliging himself, that, if by their Help he should reduce his rebellious Subjects, they should be put into immediate Possession of all their Lands. This Promise had so great an Effect upon Soldiers of Fortune, that in a short Time a vast Number of Men arrived from Normandy, Poitou, Gascony, Brabant and Flanders.

Matt. Par.
Hist. Angl.

The Barons, finding themselves not in a Condition to withstand so great a Power, retired to London, where they were soon overtaken by a thundering Bull of Excommunication from Rome, whereby all the confederate Barons were excommunicated, and their Lands interdicted, together with the City, that had joined them. But, whilst the Barons and Citizens seemed to despise the Pope's Thunderbolts, the King proceeded in ravaging and destroying all their Lands and Castles, by which they were reduced to a very deplorable Condition; therefore, to be revenged of the King, they, with the Londoners, had Recourse to a very desperate and dangerous Remedy, by inviting over Lewis, eldest Son to Philip King of France, to whom they offered the Crown. Philip, glad of the Opportunity he had long wished for, of becoming Master of England, forthwith fitted out a mighty Fleet, in which was embarked a numerous Army, under the Command of Lewis, his Son. In the Interim, the King had a strong Inclination to reduce London, and with that View bestowed large Donatives upon his mercenary Troops: The Citizens receiving Advice of his Approach, were so far from being intimidated, that they set their Gates wide open, with an Intent to fight him; which John perceiving, he thought it more for his Interest to march off, than to risque an Engagement with the brave and resolute Londoners. But Savarie de Malleon, one of his Generals, with the Body of Troops under his Command, advancing too near the City, was attacked, routed, and himself dangerously wounded, inasmuch that he escaped with great Difficulty.

About this Time the Citizens fitted out a powerful Fleet, to clear the Coast of numerous Pirates, who infested the Mouth of the River Thames, so that the Trade of the City was almost entirely lost; and, having engaged and defeated these combined Robbers, took and destroyed sixty-five of their Ships: Hence we may judge of the formidable State of the City at that Time, when it was not only capable of defending itself against the King, though then in Possession of all other Parts of the Kingdom; but likewise at the same Time to send out so potent a Navy, as was able to destroy such a mighty Band of confederated and desperate Pirates.

Lewis, the French Prince, having received Advice of the gallant Behaviour of the Barons and Citizens of London on his Account, sent them a Letter of Thanks, exhorting them to persevere therein, assuring them, that they might depend upon his coming over in a very short Time with a powerful Army to their Assistance: Pursuant to which, he soon after arrived at Sandwich with a numerous Fleet, consisting of six hundred Ships; where having disembarked his Troops, he marched, attacked and reduced the Castle of Rochester; whence marching to London, he was by the Citizens received in a very magnificent and pompous Manner; at which Time he received the Homage and Fealties of the Barons and Citizens, to whom he swore to restore good Laws, and their lost Estates.

Hist. Angl.

The City never departed from their Engagement: But upon the Death of John, and the Accession of Henry to the Throne, William Earl of Pembroke, the Regent, prevailed upon forty of the confederate Barons to make their Submission to the young King. This great Defection of the Nobility, and Decrease of the French Army, by the numerous Sieges and Skirmishes they had been employed in, occasioned Lewis to agree upon a Truce; that he might have an Opportunity of going to France, to solicit his Father for fresh Supplies; which he obtained, both of Men and Money. At his Return to London he was made acquainted with the Siege of the Castle of Mount Sorel in Leicestershire, by the King's Troops, on the Relief of which depended not only his Honour, but also his Interest: Wherefore he immediately dispatched from this City six hundred Knights, and upwards of twenty thousand regular Troops to its Assistance; on whose Approach the Earl of

Chester, not finding himself in a Condition to withstand so powerful an Army, raised the Siege. But the French were defeated at Lincoln; which, with the Destruction of his late intended Supply at Sea, by the Fleet fitted out by the Cinque Ports, obliged Lewis to keep himself close shut up in London; where finding himself reduced to very great Straits by the Royal Army, under the Command of the Regent, which blocked him up both by Land and Water, he proposed to treat of a Peace, that was consistent with his Honour, and the Safety of those who invited him over. In which Treaty he generously took Care, that the ancient Rights and Privileges of the City should be confirmed: A Generosity, which the Citizens gratefully acknowledged, by lending him the Sum of five thousand Marks to pay his Debts, just before his Departure to France.

I have dwelt the longer on this Part of the History of Lewis, because all our Authors, who have written Surveys and other Accounts of this City, have left their Readers in the dark in Respect to those Transactions, and without ever assigning any Reason why the Citizens joined the Barons in calling over Lewis to their Assistance.

Immediately after the Departure of Lewis, Henry, the young King, made his publick Entry into London in a pompous Manner, where, in all Appearance, he was received with the greatest Demonstrations of Joy. But this was not sufficient to wipe off the Dislike the Court had conceived against the City, as may be discovered in all the Proceedings of this Reign.

In the second Year of Henry the Third, the Citizens paid him the Sum of forty Marks, that they might not be questioned for selling a certain Sort of Cloth, that was not full two Yards within the Lits.

At the same Time the Forest of Middlesex being disforested, it gave the Citizens an Opportunity of purchasing Land, and Building thereon, whereby the Suburbs of the City were greatly increased; at which Time the King wrote to the Sheriffs of London to repair the Prison of Newgate; and the Money disbursed by them should be allowed in their Accounts. Which shews, that this Gaol was not then under the Direction of the City. And in the same Year the Citizens paid the King a Fifteenth of their personal Estates, for the Enjoyment of their ancient Rights and Immunities.

Proclamation was made in London, (A.D. 1220) strictly injoining all Foreigners whatsoever, Merchants excepted, to depart the Kingdom by Michaelmas following. At the same Time the Citizens of Cologne, who were Merchants and Members of the Anseatick Corporation in London, paid the King thirty Marks, to have Seisin or Possession of their Guildhall in the City, which stood where now the Still-yard is in Thames-street.

The Year 1222 furnished the Ministry with a plausible Pretence to carry their Resentment into Execution against the Londoners.

A great wrestling Match being held at Matilda's Hospital, now St. Giles's in the Fields (and not, as Matthew of Westminster, through Mistake, says, at St. James's) on St. James's Day, between the Citizens of London and the Inhabitants of the neighbouring Villages, the People of Westminster, notwithstanding they exerted themselves to the utmost to excel the Londoners, had the Mortification to see the Honour of the Victory carried off by the Citizens.

Though this Triumph in itself was scarcely worth minding; yet it was highly resented by the Steward of the Abbot of Westminster (who, it is to be presumed, vainly imagined, that his Master's or his own Honour was thereby affected) who, meditating Revenge against the Londoners, perfidiously appointed another wrestling Match to be held at Westminster, on the first of August following, and, as an Encouragement, gave a Ram for the Prize: Thither the Citizens, at the Time prefixed, resorted in great Numbers; when, to their great Surprise, instead of Diversion, which they went for, they found themselves betrayed in a most cowardly and villainous Manner, and set upon by a great Number of armed Men, appointed for that Purpose; who cruelly beat and wounded many of them, and put the rest to Flight.

This Treachery occasioned great Commotions in the City; where the Populace being assembled, they breathed nothing but Revenge; inasmuch that Seale Mercer, then Mayor, though a wise and prudent Magistrate, was not able to restrain their Fury: For one Constantine Fitz-Arnulph, an eminent Citizen, who had been a great Favourer of the French during the late Troubles, putting himself at the Head of the Mob, told them, that the best Way to revenge themselves upon the Abbot and his Steward, would be to pull down their Houses; whereby they would be made sensible, that the Citizens of London were not to be affronted with Impunity. This Advice being approved of, he led them to Westminster, crying with a loud Voice, Mount Joye, Mount Joye, God help us, and our Lord Lewis; and, having pulled down several Houses belonging to the Abbot and his Steward, returned to London in Triumph.

The Tumult being over, the Abbot of Westminster repaired to the City to complain to Philip Dawbney, one of the King's Council, of the great Damage he had sustained by the late Sedition. The Populace was no sooner apprised of this, than they beset the House, and, cruelly beating the Abbot's Servants, took away twelve of his Horses. And, whilst Dawbney endeavoured to appease the Mob, the Abbot slipped out at the Back-door, with an Intent to escape; but, being discovered by some of the Rabble, he was pelted all the Way to the River Side, and with great Difficulty got off by Water.

The Storm being over, Hubert de Burg, the Chief Justiciary, came to the Tower of London with an armed Power, and summoning the Mayor and many of the principal Citizens to attend him, he inquired who were the Authors of the late Riot: Constantine, the chief Ringleader, boldly answered, that he was one; that they had done no more than what they ought; and that they were resolved to stand by what they had done, let the Consequence be what it would. This insolent Speech so highly provoked the Justiciary, that he ordered all the Company to be immediately dismissed, except Constantine, his Nephew, and one Geoffrey, who had joined in Constantine's Declaration:

The Executions being over, the Justiciary repaired to the City, attended by a strong Guard, where he apprehended many of the principal Rioters, and, in a most inhuman and arbitrary Manner, caused the Hands or Feet of most of them to be cut off. These Citizens with the former suffered without any Manner of legal Proceedings, or Form of Trial. Hubert, thinking that he had not sufficiently punished the City by those dreadful Severities, (for which he was ever after rendered justly odious to the Citizens) degraded the Mayor and all the Magistrates, set a Custos over the City, and obliged thirty Persons of his own chusing to become Security for the Citizens good Behaviour; which the Community of the City not only confirmed by Charter under their Common Seal, but likewise promised to surrender either one or all of the Sureties, when demanded; and, in case of Mortality, to fill up the Vacancies with other Persons of Worth. This was the Beginning of the grievous Sufferings of this City, under the intolerable Government of King Henry III. And besides the Punishments above-mentioned, Henry, before he would be reconciled to the Citizens, obliged them to pay him many thousands of Marks.

King Henry had no sooner assumed the Reins of Government, than he began to shew himself in his proper Colours, and to act the Tyrant with a high Hand. The first Attempt he made this way, was upon the Citizens of London, by extorting from them five thousand Marks, declaring, as they had given (lent) Lewis, his Enemy, that Sum, they should likewise give him the same; which they were obliged to do. However, he granted the five following Charters (on Condition of paying him a Fifteenth of their Personal Estates.)

"Henry, by the Grace of God, King of England, Lord of Ireland, Duke of Normandy

The Editor of Stow's Survey calls this only a Part of King Henry III's second Charter to the City: But Arnold in his Chronicle affirms it to be the whole Charter of London of the first Grant, and of the Confirmation of divers Kings after.

"King John our Father, and for the Soul's
"Health of all our Ancestors, and also for the
"Commonweal of our City of London, and of all

This Charter manifestly refers to that antient Privilege granted to this City by Edward the Confessor, so far as it restores the Custom of keeping the Hustings only once a Week; which had been broke into by the Gentlemen of the Law, who had greatly increased in Number since the Conquest, and interrupted the quiet Commerce of the Citizens by litigious Suits, which took up several Days in the Week. It was to remove this growing Evil that the Citizens petitioned for this Confirmation of King
Edward's Charter; which Arnold has preserved, and from whose Chronicle I have transcribed it,
as follows:

" Day of August, in the eleventh Year of our " Reign."

To have Liberty in the Warren of Staines.

The four first of these Charters are Confirmations of former Grants; and by the fifth divers Privileges are conferred on the Citizens in the dis-forested Warren of Staines. At the same Time the King granted, that each of the Sheriffs should have two Clerks and two Serjeants.

These Exactions still continued, for the King, in the Year 1229, commanded a Tallage to be assessed upon the City, partly by a Poll-Tax, and partly upon the several Wards; which was collected by the respective Aldermen. The Assessment upon the Wards appears to have been discretionary; for some of the principal Citizens were rated at ten and twelve Marks, and others at forty; and one William Fitz-Adams at C. Skill. The Sum raised in London upon this Occasion is not mentioned by the Historians of that Time: However they all agree, that it was very great, and that the same was exacted from the Citizens by way of Ransom; perhaps for recovering the King's

Favour, for some pretended Crime committed by their Predecessors. Matthew Paris and Matthew of Westminster, by Mistake, place this Transaction in the following Year, and are therein followed by all subsequent Historians, except Rapin.

Mat. Par. Soon after, viz. on St. Paul's Day, as Roger Niger, Bishop of London, was celebrating Mass in St. Paul's Church, there happened a very terrible Storm of Thunder and Lightning, attended with a great Darkness, and a most obnoxious Smell; whereby both the Clergy and Laity, some thousands in Number, were so greatly terrified, that, in a tumbling Manner, they made the best of their Way over one another out of the Church, leaving their Bishop, with only one Deacon to attend him. About the same Time it was by the Magistrates of London ordained, That for the future the Sheriffs should continue no longer in Office than one Year, thereby to prevent their imposing upon their Fellow-Citizens, by extorting Money from them; as also their taking Bribes of Victuallers.

Some Time after, a great Fire happened, which destroyed a great Part of the City. And about the same Time, the Citizens were obliged to pay the King twenty thousand Pounds (an immense Sum at that Time) to obtain his Favour; perhaps not reconciled to them since the Tumult at Westminster.

Mat. Par. Hubert de Burg, the Justiciary, and great Favourite, being fallen into Disgrace, the King ordered him to give an Account of all his Receipts and Disbursements relating to the Publick, since he came to his Office. Hubert desiring Time to answer, his Request was granted; but whether he was incapable of vindicating his Innocence, or was conscious of his Guilt, is uncertain: However, instead of appearing at the Time prefixed, he fled to the Priory of Merton for Sanctuary; where, having refused to obey the Summons sent him to appear, and answer to the Articles exhibited against him, the King was thereby so highly incensed, that he commanded Proclamation to be made in London, that all Persons, who had any Complaint against the said Hubert, should immediately apply to him for Justice. The Citizens glad of this Opportunity to be revenged on their cruel and implacable Enemy, to whom all their Sufferings, during the first Part of this Reign, were chiefly owing, accused him with having acted arbitrarily and illegally, in putting to Death Constantine Fitz-Armulph, one of their Fellow-Citizens, without a legal Process: And by others he was accused of Injustice, Extortion and Rapine. Whereupon the King, in a violent Rage, sent a Precept to the Mayor of London, to repair to the Sanctuary, and take him thence by Force, and bring him to London, either dead or alive. The King's Command was no sooner intimated to the Citizens, than they quickly and joyfully assembled, to the Number of twenty thousand Men with a Resolution speedily and effectually to execute the Order without Mercy. But, some of the most judicious Citizens being apprehensive that so great a Body of Men in Arms might prove fatal to the publick Tranquillity, they applied to the Bishop of Winchester, for his Advice upon this Emergency; who plainly told them, That, whatever the Consequence might be, the King must be obeyed. But the Remonstrance made to the King by Ranulph Earl of Chester, had a better Effect; who thereupon, by Letter, immediately revoked his former Precept. The Citizens were hereupon greatly concerned at their being disappointed of Revenge upon their inveterate Enemy; yet, paying a dutiful Obedience to the Order, they returned to the City.

In the nineteenth Year of the said King, Walter le Bruin, a Farrier, had a Piece of Ground granted him in the Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement's Danes, whereon to erect a Forge, he rendering at the Exchequer annually for the same a Quit-Rent of six Horse-shoes, with the Nails thereunto belonging; which was twice paid there in the Reign of Edward I. and is still rendered annually at the Exchequer at this Time, by the Mayor and Citizens of London, for the said Piece of Ground; which was granted them some Ages ago; tho' at present lost to the said Citizens.

In the same Year, Simon Fitz-Mary, one of the Sheriffs of London, was fined in twenty Pounds, for not coming to the Exchequer with his Con-Sheriff, to render his Account.

KING Henry, having solemnized his Marriage with Eleanor, the second Daughter of Raymond Earl of Provence, with the utmost Magnificence, at Canterbury, they were, on their Way to London, met by the Mayor, Aldermen, and principal Citizens, to the Number of three hundred and sixty, most pompously apparelled in silken Robes, richly embroidered, riding upon stately Horses, sumptuously accoutered, and each Man carrying a Gold or Silver Cup in his Hand, in token of the Privilege, claimed claimed by the City, of being the Chief Butler of the Kingdom at the King's Coronation, and were preceded by the King's Trumpets. The Streets of the City, through which this Cavalcade passed, were adorned in the most elegant Manner, with rich Silks, Pageants, and a Variety of pompous Shews; and the Citizens in Cavalcade attending the King and Queen to Westminster, had the Honour (according to Custom) of officiating as Butlers [at the Queen's Coronation. At Night the City was beautifully illuminated with an infinite Number of Lamps, Cressets, &c. This is thought to have been the most pompous Shew that ever was seen in London till that Time: And the Concourse of People on this Occasion from all Parts was so exceeding great, that the City was scarce able to contain them.

Agreement with foreign Merchants.

The Merchants of Amiens, Nele, and Corby, being involved in the Prohibition of all Foreigners to land their Goods in London, and obliged to sell their Merchandise on board a Ship, purchased this Year from the Mayor and Citizens the Privilege of landing and housing their Wood, at the Expence of fifty Marks per Ann. and a Fine of one hundred Pounds, towards the bringing of Water to London from Tyburn, by Virtue of a Grant from Gilbert de Sandford pro. the Mayor and Commonality of the City, who at this Time were obliged, being deprived of their wonted Supplies of good and wholesome Water from the River of Wells, Wallbrooke, and several other Rivulets and Fresh-Water Canals about the City, by Encroachments from Buildings and other Ways, which Project was put in Execution, by bringing Water from six Fountains or Wells in the Town of Tyburn, by a Leaden Pipe of a Six-Inch Bore. To which chargeable Undertaking many of the principal Citizens contributed very largely.

First Water-Pipes serve the City.

Rym.Ford
Con. Lit.

These Pipes emptied themselves into Conduits or Cisterns of Lead, castellated with Stone. The first and greatest of these Conduits were erected in Westcheap, in the Year 1285; which afterwards, in Proportion to the Necessities of the Citizens, and the Increase of Water-Pipes from other Wells, and the Thames, increased to above nineteen; which have been rendered useless for almost a Century past, by the better invention of conveying the New-River and Thames Water by Forcers and small Leaden Pipes, laid from the Rivers to private Houses, in any Part of the City, at a small Expence; and have of late Years been entirely pulled down and removed by Order of Common-Council, to prevent Stoppages and other Inconveniencies to the Citizens and Passengers. But, during the Use of those Conduits, Stow informs us, that it was customary for the Lord-Mayor, accompanied by the Aldermen and other worthy Citizens on Horseback, on the eighteenth of September, to visit the Heads from whence the Conduits were supplied; hunting a Hare before Dinner, and the Fox after Dinner, in the Fields beyond St. Giles's, in the Neighbourhood of Tyburn.

Rivulets in London.

Before this Time, the City and Places adjacent were supplied with Water by the River of Wells, (so called from its having many Wells uniting to supply its Stream or Current) in the West Part; whose first Decay was owing to certain Mills erected thereon by the Knights of St. John, which obstructed its Navigation, and, by Degrees, gave it the Name of Turnmill-Brook, which is still preserved in a Street of that Name; called Turnmill-Street, through Part of which this Water took its Course, towards the Bottom of Holborn-Hill, and thence into the Thames, between the Fleet and St. Bride's, that now is: It being entirely choaked up above by various Encroachments, as low down as Holborn-Bridge; in Process of Time, Turnmill-Brook was lost in the Name of Fleet-Ditch, or Fleet-Dyke. The other Waters were Olborn, or Holbourn, a Rivulet; which, springing up near Middle-Row, made its Way in a clear Current, and fell into the River of Wells at Holborn-Bridge. This Rivulet underwent the same Fate; whose Remains are still to be seen in the Common-Sewer, under the Street that bears its Name. Wallbrook, which entered the City through the Wall, between Bishopsgate and Moorgate, near the East End of Bethlehem Hospital, and, after many Turnings and Windings, emptied itself into the Thames at Dowgate. The Loss of this River was owing to the many Bridges built over it; which at last increased to such a Number, covered with Houses; that whole Streets rose upon its Surface; and the Channel of the River was reduced to a Common-Sewer. Langborn, which took its Rise in or near the East End of Fenchurch-Street, and ran with a swift Current, due West, to Sherborne-Lane, at the West End of St. Mary Woolnorth; then dividing its Stream into several Rills; ran directly South, and was lost in the Wallbrook, on Dowgate-Hill. The Stoppage of this Bourne is owing to the like Circumstances as the former.

Besides these Running-Waters, we read of several Springs, which supplied the City and Suburbs with clear, sweet and wholesome Water, as Holywell, which was a fine Spring, and even famed for its miraculous Virtue in the Times of Pope; but now choaked up with Soil, and a Hill of Rubbish, commonly called Holywell-Mount, near Soreditch, and not behind St. Clement's, as Seymour has erroneously asserted; and, I apprehend, confounded with that Well, commonly called Clement's-Well, whose Remains are still preserved in Clement's-Inn. The other Wells were Clerks, or Clerkenwell, which sprung not far from the West-End of Clerkenwell Church: And near to it was Skinner's-Well, famous in History for the Plays and Interludes acted there at certain Seasons of the Year: And more Eastward, towards the Charter-House, were Fogg's-Well, Tod's-Well, Loder's-Well, and Rad-Well; which, and another in Smithfield, called the Horsepool, or Horsepond, all united by their Streams, and formed the River of Wells above-mentioned. Without Cripplegate there was a large Pool, supplied by a neighbouring Well, and was sometimes so deep, as to drown those that slipped into it: But that is diverted into the Common-Sewer; and the Well is still preserved, and in great Reputation, by the Name of Crowder's-Well, adjoining to St. Giles's Church-yard, on the North-West Side. At the South Entrance into the small Village of Hoxton was another celebrated Spring, called Dame-Annis-the-Clear: This is now inclosed, and made to supply a Cold Bath for private Property. And less than half a Mile more to the East, was a very free, sweet and clear Spring, (which was inclosed by a Conduit, at the North-East Corner of the present Improvement, as was discovered in digging up the same) and served to supply the Neighbourhood of Leadbury where its pipes terminated, close to the South-West Corner of the Church. This Spring overflowed, and formed a Piece of Water, named Perilous Pond, on Account of the many Youths who were lost there in attempting to swim. This was entirely filled up, and rendered useless, 'till the present Lessee of that Estate opened the Spring about twenty Years since, and has led it to form the completest Swimming Bath in the whole World.

Description
of Peerless Pool.

To which Improvement that worthy Gentleman (after ten Years Experience of the Temperature of this Water, and the happy Success of getting clear of a violent Pain of the Head by bathing in it, to which he had for many Years been subject) was generously led for publick Benefit; concluding from the Premises, and the frequent Accounts of the Loss of many Lives, by attempting to swim in dangerous Rivers, &c. that such a Place of Safety to learn to swim, would be of publick Utility, as not only conducive to Health, but a Means to prevent those fatal Accidents. With this laudable Intention, he, in the Year 1743, early in the Spring, projected the present Grand Bath, and proceeded with such Expedition, that it was made fit for Use by the first of May in the same Year; and has spared no Expence nor Contrivance to render it quite private, and retired from public Inspection, decent in its Regulation, and as genteel in its Furniture, as such a Place can be made. So great Care has been taken to preserve Decency and good Order within the Inclosure, that, notwithstanding the Variety of Tempers which must be found amongst the great Numbers of Subscribers to this Bath, who constantly meet in the Seasons for Bathing, Angling, and Seating; we are informed by those, who have frequented the same many Years, that they never have heard an indecent Word, or seen an unbecoming Action, within its Walls: A Truth, that might be confirmed by the common Voice of many Clergymen, great Numbers of Gentlemen, eminent Merchants, and substantial Traders, who have, from Time to Time, and continue to subscribe to this useful and entertaining Bath; into which you enter from a Bowling-Green on the South Side, through a neat Marble Pavilion or Saloon, thirty Feet long, furnished with a large gilt Sconce over a Marble Table, and with a small Collection of modern Books, for the Entertainment of those that delight in reading. Contiguous to this Saloon are many Dressing-Apartments; some of which are open; others are made quite private with Doors; and all are paved in the neatest Manner with Purbeck. Besides, there is a green Bower on each Side of the Bath, divided into other Apartments for Dressing. At the other End is placed a Circle Bench, capable of accommodating forty Gentlemen at a Sitting, under the Cover of a Wall twelve Feet high. One Side is inclosed by a lofty Mount, one hundred and fifty Feet long, stocked with a great Variety of Shrubs, and encircled with an agreeable Terras-Walk, planted with Limes at the Top. They descend into the Grand Temperate or Pleasure Bath, which is near five Feet deep in the Middle, and under four Feet at the Sides, by four Pair of Marble Stairs, to a fine Gravel Bottom, clearly seen through the transparent crystalline Springs. This Bath is one hundred and seventy Feet long, and above one hundred broad, and in the Center of a Grove. Here is also a Cold Bath; and generally allowed to be the largest in England, being forty Feet long, and twenty broad. This Bath is supplied by a remarkable cold Spring: Its Depth is kept under five Feet; and they that frequent it are accommodated with a convenient Room at each End for Dressing, and two Pair of Stairs. To these the ingenious Projector has added a Fish-Pond, three hundred and twenty Feet long, ninety-three Feet broad, and eleven Feet deep, stocked with very large Carp, Tench, and great Variety of other Fish, for the Diversion of the Subscribers, who delight in Angling; and adorned on each Side, North and South, with a Terras, the Slopes or Banks of which are planted with many thousand Shrubs; and the Walks, one of Gravel, the other Grass, with stately Limes. At the East End is a Garden, that extends to a very genteel Public House; and the West End terminates with another Garden, and a well-built private House, inhabited by the forefaid Projector and sole Proprietor, Mr. William Kemp, an eminent Jeweller and Citizen of London; who, with the greatest Propriety, in Reference to the Improvements he has made on the Ruins of that once Perilous Pond, and by a very natural Transition, has changed that disagreeable Appellation of PERILOUS, i. e. dangerous, or hazardous, which the Ancients had given it, on Account of the many Accidents that befel the Adventurers in swimming therein, in those Days, to the more agreeable Name of PEERLESS POOL, i. e. Matchless Bath, not to be equalled by any other in the known World: A Name, which carries its own Reason with it, and justifies the Right of the Proprietor who gave it, alluding to its present Beauty and Benefit: Of which the Public had the following poetical Description, by one of the Subscribers thereto, published in the Daily Advertiser of August 6, 1748:

While loftier Bards in tuneful Numbers sing
The blooming Beauties of the cheerful Spring,
The verdant Vale, the gently-whisp'ring Breeze,
The flow'ry Meadow, and the waving Trees;
I, uninform'd to strike the vocal String,
Or soar aloft on nimble Fancy's Wing,
Just late unfetter'd from a Country-School,
Attempt the Praises of the Peerless Pool.

Near where Augusta's lofty Temples rise,
Whose tow'ring Tops invade the threaten'd Skies,
With artful Rows of spreading Trees beset,
To veil its Beauty from the Solar Heat;
Where warbling Quires their choicest Notes essay,
To welcome in the blooming Dawn of Day;
Where calmly, distant from the noisy Strife
Of Tumults various, and a City Life,
The Men of Trade, from Chains of Bus'ness free,
May taste awhile the Sweets of Liberty;
A spacious Bath, for Use and Pleasure made,
Where thousand Beauties stand at once display'd,
Presents profuse each Day its liquid Store,
And more accepted, offers still the more.

Here, wide expos'd to Sol's Meridian Blaze,
And burnt beneath the Fury of his Rays,
His painful Heart the weary Swain may cool,
And feel the Virtues of the friendly Pool;

Or

Or else, oppress'd with Pain's afflictive Weight,
And bow'd beneath a weak and sickly State;
The sad Complainant may obtain Relief,
And sooth, at least, if not remove, his Grief:
His Nerves, relax'd by Toil or Sorrow's Course,
May here regain their long-expended Force:
His tortur'd Limbs may balmy Ease receive;
And longer he, or more contented, live:
Or else, instructed to contemn the Waves,
Where untaught Thousands make their wat'ry Graves,

The sprightly Youth their sinewy Limbs may ply,
And each with other for the Vict'ry vie;
From Danger free, from Side to Side may float, Regale their Senses, and their Health promote;
While Parents Tears no more aloud resound,
In useless Moans a darling Offspring drown'd:
Or else, if weary of the wat'ry Sport,
At Dawn or Close of Day they may resort
Where skillful Anglers undisturb'd recline,
To watch the Motion of the speaking Line;
Revive their Spirits, and their Cares allay,
And bear with Joy the finny Prize away.

Such is the Place my artless Lines proclaim,
And Peerless Pool, its Nature and its Name.
May loftier Songs in future Times confess
Its rising Charms, and various Virtues blest;
My best Applause their just Desert shall crown,
Well pleas'd to see my mean Attempts outdone.

By the Information of which Paper also we are told, That any Gentleman, who subscribes only one Guinea per Annum, is intitled to the Pleasure and Cold Bath, and to the Diversion of Angling and Scating at proper Seasons: And that, if any occasional Visitor, who must pay two Shillings each Time he bathes, thinks proper to become a Subscriber within fourteen Days from his first Visit, he shall be allowed the Money he has paid, in Part of his Subscription.

But to proceed in the History of this famous City. In the two-and-twentieth of this Reign, Henry de Cobham and Jordan de Coventria, Sheriffs of London, remained indebted to the King the Sum of seventy-one Pounds, two Shillings, and five Pence, the Balance of the City-Farm: For the Payment of which, Time was given them, at the Intercession of Richard Reyner, Mayor of the City, who became Security for the Payment of the said Sum.

This same Year, Baldwin, the Greek Emperor, arrived at London, where he was received in a very pompous Manner by the Mayor and Citizens. But their Mirth was much abated by the following Accident: Otto, the Pope's Legate, being at Oxford, a poor Irish Student went into his Kitchen to ask some Relief for God's Sake; but, instead of administering to his Wants, the barbarous Cook (the Legate's Kinsman) threw a Ladle full of hot Broth into his Face, in the Presence of a Welsh Student; who was so highly irritated at this cruel and barbarous Action, that having a Bow in his Hand, he let fly at the Cook, and killed him on the Spot. This, with other outrageous Treatment the Scholars had received from the Legate's Domesticks, occasioned a great Tumult among the Students; and the Legate, apprehensive of his own Danger, fled to a Church Steeple, 'till he found Means to escape under the Cover of the following Night: But, being recovered from his Fright, he interdicted the University, and excommunicated all that were concerned in the Riot. So that the Heads of several Colleges, with their Scholars, were obliged to repair to St. Paul's Church, London, and thence to walk to Durham-House (the Legate's Palace) in the Strand, undressed, bare-headed, and bare-footed; where, but not without the Intercession of many Persons of the greatest Distinction, they obtained Absolution.

In the Year 1239, the King's first Son was born at Westminster; on which Occasion great Rejoicings were made in all Parts of the Kingdom; but more especially by the Londoners, who expressed their Joy, by playing upon sundry Sorts of musical Instruments, and Dancings in every Street; and at Night all the Streets were illuminated in a very extraordinary Manner. But nothing could engage the King's Affections: For, upon Complaint of Symond-Fitz-Mary, who had, previous to the Election of Sheriffs, purchased of the King a Mandamus, directed to the Mayor and Aldermen, for causing him to be chosen Sheriff for the Year ensuing, the Magistrates, who wisely considered that this Injunction was derogatory to the Rights and Immunities of the Citizens, and chose a Person of much greater Merit to that Office, were not only severely reprimanded for their not obeying the Precept, but Henry, as a Test of his Resentment, degraded William Joyner, the new Mayor, and commanded them to proceed to a new Election. The Citizens, in Obedience to this Command, chose Gerard Batt; by whose good Deportment, the City regained the King's Favours; or at least, Henry pretended to be reconciled to the City, to bring the Citizens into a Humour to swear Fealty to his Son Edward. At which Time, Thomas Earl of Flanders, the Queen's Uncle, arrived at London, where he was received by the Citizens in a very magnificent Manner.

This Year the Jews of Norwich were severely punished for circumcising a Christian Child; and those in London, though innocent, were for the same Crime obliged to pay the King twenty thousand Marks, or be condemned to perpetual Imprisonment.

Gerard Batt was rechosen Mayor of the City in 1241, and presented to the King at Woodstock for his Acceptance; but rejected, on an Information brought against him for extorting Money from the Bakers, Brewers, and other Victuallers, 'till better informed: And, when presented to him a second Time for Acceptance, at Westminster, and found guilty of extorting forty Pounds from the Victuallers, in his former Mayoralty, and unwilling to make Restitution, the King was so highly enraged, that he swore that Batt should not then, nor at any Time thereafter, be Mayor of the City, and commanded the Citizens to proceed to a new Election; who elected Reynor de Burgay, or Reynold Bongay, who was presented, accepted, and sworn in accordingly.

About this Time, certain Fortifications, which were added to the Tower of London in the Year 1239, and had cost the King above twelve thousand Marks, and the Citizens of London much Uneasiness, fell down, and were entirely destroyed,

And, in the following Year, the Citizens were compelled to pay a most grievous Ransom, called a Tallage, great Part whereof seems to have been raised by Way of Loan to the King, extorting from the helpless Londoners such Sums as his Officers thought proper to rate them at. Nevertheless, the King, arriving some Time after from Gascony, was received in a very stately and pompous Manner, and presented by the Citizens with sundry Gifts of great Value.

In the Year 1244, Griffith, the eldest Son of Leoline Prince of Wales, attempting his Escape from the Top of the Tower of London, by trusting his very corpulent Body to a Rope made of Hangings, Sheets, and Table-Cloths, fell and broke his Neck in such a Manner, that his Head and Neck were driven between his Shoulders into his Breast.

Mat. Par.

And in the same Year, King, Henry, according to the Words of my Author, did violently and impudently extort from the Citizens of London, fifteen hundred Marks, on Pretence of their having admitted into their City Walter Bukerel, who had been banished for twenty Years: Though the Londoners offered to prove, that the King, by his Letters patent, had pardoned Bukerel long before. But the King alledged, that Bukerel had been pardoned during the Minority, and therefore that 'twas not obligatory. By this proceeding 'tis apparent, that neither Innocence, nor Justice were sufficient to protect the injured Citizens from this rapacious Tyrant. Yet we read that Henry, as if it were to make the Londoners in some Sort an Amends, for the great Injustice he had done them, repaired next Year to St. Paul's Cathedral, (before he set out on his Expedition to Wales) and, in a familiar and affectionate Manner, bade the Citizens adieu; which they seemed highly pleased at: But with little Reason, for another Year produced a fresh Demand of one thousand Marks; and soon after they had their Liberties seized for a false Judgment given by the Magistrates against Magaret Vell, a poor Widow. The said Magistrates were degraded; and William Haverell and Edward of Westminster, were appointed Custodes of the City; who continued in that Office 'till Lady-day following.

The ancient Ordinance made for preventing Fires, by regulating the building of Houses, being little regarded, 'twas now ordained, That for the future all Houses should be covered either with Slates or Tiles, instead of Straw, more especially those that stood close together; and in the principal Streets, which were then but very few in Number: For the Heart of the City, where Cheapside now is situate, was a void Space, called Crownfield, so denominated from the Crown Inn, at the East End thereof.

About the same Time the King commanded the Mayor and Sheriffs, upon the Oaths of twelve worthy Citizens, to chuse one of the best Artists in the City for the King's Custos Camci, or Keeper of the Mint, in the Room of Walter le Fleming, deceased. Whereupon they chose John Haslell; who, being presented by the Sheriffs at the Exchequer, was there sworn and admitted.

This same Year, as appears by the following Charter, the Mayor and Commonalty of London purchased of Richard Earl of Cornwall, the King's Brother, his Fee-Farm of Queenhithe in Thames-street, with all the Rights, Customs, and Appurtenances thereunto belonging. For which they were to pay to the said Earl, his Heirs and Successors for ever, a Quit-Rent of fifty Pounds per Annum. The Articles of which Agreement were confirmed by the King in this Form:

Mat. Par. Hist. Angl. A.D. 1247. Petitions against the Pope's Exactions. In a Parliament held at Westminster, it was resolved to send Letters (in the Name of all the States of the Kingdom) to the Pope and Cardinals, humbly to intreat, that for the future Regard might be had to the miserable State of the Nation, and not entirely to ruin the People by their intolerable Exactions. To the Honour of London, those Letters, by Order of Parliament, were sealed with the Common Seal of this City.

Ibid. An Earthquake. On Valentine's Eve a terrible Earthquake happened in London, which occasioned abundance of Damage by the Destruction of many Houses.

Ibid. A.D. 1248. The Parliament being met at Westminster, the King, according to Custom, required a pecuniary Aid; but the Nobility not thinking it proper to supply his Extravagancies any longer, to the impoverishing themselves, and enriching of Foreigners, (who lived on the Spoils of the Nation) they resolutely told him, they wondered how he could renew his Demands without blushing, seeing he had so often forfeited his Word to them. By this Deportment of the Nobility, Henry plainly saw there was no Probability of their agreeing to his Request; therefore dissolved the Parliament: And, by the Obstinacy of the Barons, being reduced to very great Straits, even to dispose of his Jewels, Plate, and other valuable Furniture; and inquiring where he could find a Purchaser, being answered, in London, he replied, That, if the Treasure of Octavian (Augustus Caesar) were to be sold, the City of London could purchase it; adding, That those clownish Londoners, who call themselves Barons, and abound in all Things, are an immense Treasure of themselves: And to oblige the Citizens to supply him therewith, he granted a Fair to Richard de Crokefley, Abbot of Westminster, to be annually held at Tutbill, or Totbill, for the Space of fifteen Days, strictly commanding the Londoners during that Time, not to carry on any Commerce in the City, either within or without Doors. Which tyrannical Injunction highly irritated the Citizens, but produced the desired Effect; for they bought off the same with a large Sum of Money.

Ibid. A.D. 1249. In the Year 1249, the King kept his Christmas at London, with a Meanness of Spirit worthy of himself; for he begged, as it were, large New-Year's Gifts of the Citizens: And, not content with the Money given on this Occasion, Henry soon after sent, and imperiously demanded much greater Sums, and compelled them to pay the Sum of two thousand Pounds; a very great Sum at that Time. Nor did those wicked Proceedings stop here; for many Shop-keepers in the City were spoiled of their Goods (especially those for the Use of the Kitchen) by the Order of that iniquitous Prince. Such Oppressions caused many of the most eminent Citizens to retire into the Country, chusing rather to cohabit with Brutes, than to dwell in the Capital of so wicked a Tyrant, who had neither Honour, Justice, Conscience, nor Religion; and whose Liberties so often dearly bought, and had been confirmed and sworn to, were not able to protect them from being treated as the worst of Slaves.

The Clamours of the People were so just and universal on this Occasion, and fearing that a Repetition of his heavy and intolerable Exactions would at length depopulate the City, the Hopes of all his Aid in the Time of Distress, Henry resolved to reconcile himself to them; and, in order thereunto, commanded the Magistrates to attend him at Westminster; where, being assembled in the great Hall, he, in the Presence of his Nobility, solemnly promised, that for the future the Citizens should live happily under his Government, and not be liable to such grievous Taxations as formerly. But all this was mere Farce; and seems rather a Snare to lull the Citizens into a State of Security, till a more proper Opportunity offered to spoil them; which he presently found.

About the same Time Simon Fitz-Mary, who had disgusted the City in the Year 1239, by purchasing the Office of Sheriff from the King, as above, and now one of the Aldermen, was degraded from the Office of Alderman, for being principally concerned in the unjust Verdict given against Margaret Veil in the Year 1246, and for his other Mal-practices, to the great Dishonour of the City.

Henry began first with the Italian Usurers in London, who, to their great Advantage, (for a long Time) carried on an illicit Trade of Usury, with Impunity; for, calling themselves the Pope's Merchants, the Clergy durst not interfere, and, as they were protected by many of the Nobility, the Citizens were afraid to call them to an Account. But at last the King, determining not to allow any Person to prey upon his Subjects (beside himself) without paying for it, commanded the said Usurers to be prosecuted for their illegal and intolerable Extortions. Several of whom being apprehended and committed to Prison, the rest took Sanctuary, till they could accommodate Matters with the King; who, upon giving him a considerable Sum, were allowed to carry on their clandestine and destructive Commerce in the City as formerly. Hence 'tis observable, that at that time 'twas all one, whether innocent or guilty, provided the Person accused had but Money to purchase his Peace of the King. Then causing the Citizens of London, by Proclamation, to be summoned to attend him at Westminster, he proposed to them the undertaking the Crusade, or the Holy-War: To which they shewed no great Inclination; for only three of the whole Number undertook the same, viz. Richard de Gray, John de Gray, and J. Pleseto: These the King lovingly embraced and kissed, calling them his Brethren; but he opprobriously upbraided the rest of the Citizens for a Parcel of base, ignoble Mercenaries and Scoundrels, for rejecting the same. And, as a farther Evidence of his Repentment, in an arbitrary and tyrannical Manner, he compelled them to give him twenty Marks in Gold, which was then two hundred in Silver; and obliged them to keep all the Shops in the City shut shut, and to go to the above-mentioned Fair at Westminster, there to expose their Persons and Goods to the Inclemency of the Weather in the Dead of Winter; and to pay four Pence per Day for the Maintenance of his White Bear and its Keeper in the Tower of London. This, with other Mal-treatment, occasioned such Heart-burnings and Discontents in the City, as produced such an Aversion to the King, of which he and his Friends, to their Cost, soon after experienced the woful effects. But the King sought further Occasion to oppress them; and having commanded certain of his Domesticks to interrupt the young Citizens in their Diversions at the Quintin, where a Peacock was appointed for the Prize, and to provoke them to Blows by scurrilous and opprobrious Language, his Majesty, having got what he wanted, viz. a Pretence to extort Money from the Citizens, compelled them to make Satisfaction by the Payment of one thousand Marks. And soon after the Sheriffs were, by a Writ of Exchequer, commanded to distrain the Citizens for the Queen's Gold.

About the same Time, the Sheriffs received a Precept from the Court, to provide a Muzzle, an iron Chain and a Cord for the King's White Bear, and to build a Stall and provide Necessaries for the Elephant and his Keeper, in the Tower of London.

A Difference happening between Earl Richard, the King's Brother, and the Citizens, concerning the Exchange of certain Lands, another Opportunity offered to extort more Money: For Richard resented it to such a Degree, that he accused the Mayor of Remissness in not punishing the Bakers for their villainous Practices in making defective Bread; for which Neglect the City Liberties were seized, and a Custos set over it, who continued in that Office till the Citizens had compromised Matters with the Earl, by paying him the Sum of six hundred Marks; and five hundred Marks more to the King, on Colour of granting the following Charter:

"Henry, by the Grace of God, King of England, Lord of Ireland, Duke of Normandy and Aquitain, and Earl of Anjou; To his Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons, Justices, Sheriffs, Rulers, Ministers, and all his Bailiffs and faithful People, Greeting.

"Know ye, that we have granted, for us and our Heirs, and confirmed it by this our present Charter, That our Mayor and Citizens of London may have and hold all their Liberties and free Customs, which they had in the Time of King Henry our Grandfather, and which they had by Charters of our Ancestors, Kings of England, as they more freely and better had the same, and they most freely and fully have and use the same for ever.

"Also we have granted to the said Citizens, That every Mayor, whom they shall chuse in our City of London, (we being not at Westminster) they may yearly present to the Barons of our Exchequer, that he may be admitted by them as Mayor; so notwithstanding, at the next coming of us or our Heirs to Westminster or London, he be presented to us or our Heirs, and so admitted Mayor. And we will and command, for us and our Heirs, That, out of "the Farm of our City of London, there be allowed to our Sheriff of the said City yearly, in his said Account, seven Pounds, at our Exchequer, for the Liberty of St. Paul's, London: And that our said Citizens throughout all our Dominions, as well on this Side the Sea as beyond, be quit of all Toll and Custom for ever, as in the Charters of the aforesaid Kings is granted. By this Charter, the ancient Rights and Immunities of the Citizens are not only confirmed, but likewise an additional Privilege granted them, whereby they, in Absence of the King, may present their new Mayor to the Barons of the Exchequer yearly; whereas formerly they were obliged to repair to the King's Residence, in any Part of England, to present their chief Magistrate; and besides, the King allowed the Sheriffs of London seven Pounds per Annum, to be annually paid at passing their Accounts at the Exchequer, for a Piece of Ground formerly belonging to the City, but then annexed to St. Paul's Church.

Likewise, in the said Year, John de Tolefan the Mayor, and Richard Prickard and John Northampton the Sheriffs, were committed to the Custody of the Marshal, for the Arrears of an Aid towards the King's Voyage into Gascony: which shews, that both Fabian and Stow are mistaken in this Mayor's Name.

and Sheriffs to the Tower of London, to examine them about the same. The Mayor quickly cleared himself, as not being concerned in the keeping of that Prison; but the Sheriffs he confined there about a Month, notwithstanding their having proved their Innocence in that Respect. For the Bishop of London, upon the apprehending of the said Criminal, applied to the Sheriffs for Leave to have him secured in the said Prison; whereunto they agreed, provided the Bishop would appoint a proper Guard to take Charge of him; which being complied with, and accordingly provided, he was, by those very Persons who had the Care of him, suffered to escape. However, innocent or guilty, 'twas all one; for the Spoiler, according to his usual Justice, demanded of the City, as an Atonement for the pretended Crime, no less than the Sum of three thousand Marks; and, to give Sanction to his Demand, degraded both the Sheriffs: But, what is more surprizing, he was so highly incensed, that the Citizens did not pay that enormous Sum immediately down, that he caused many of the chief of them to be seized, and clapped up in Prison. Yet, when Eleanor, Daughter to the King of Castile, and Consort to Prince Edward, arrived at London the next Year, she was received by the Citizens with the greatest Demonstrations of Joy, Pomp and Magnificence; as was likewise the Prince her Husband soon after.

The City tallaged.

About the same Time, the Citizens were summoned before the King, to have their City tallaged; on which Occasion, Henry demanded of them the Sum of three thousand Marks: When, after some Deliberation, Ralph Hardell, the Mayor, offered in the Name of the City, two thousand Marks, boldly saying, they neither could nor would give any more. But upon the King's ordering Search to be made, whether there were any Precedent for the City's being tallaged (several of which being found) the Citizens agreed to pay the Sum demanded.

Order to distrain the Citizens for Queen's Gold.

The Sheriffs also by a Writ of Exchequer were commanded to distrain the Citizens for the Queen's Gold: At the Return of the Writ, the Barons asked, Whether they had brought the Money? They replied, No; but that they had seized certain Vadia (I suppose is meant Goods) of the Citizens, but could find no Purchasers for them, Whereupon they were ordered to bring the said Vadia before the Barons of the Exchequer, on a Day prefixed. The Sheriffs, returning at the Time appointed, acquainted the said Barons, that the Drapers, Spicers and other Tradesmen, about a thousand in Number, had resisted, and would not suffer them to carry off the said Vadia. Whereupon the Sheriffs were committed to the Marshalsea Prison; but Michael Tony, Robert Hardell, Thomas Adrian, and Simon de Cobham, went on Behalf of the whole Community of London, and bailed them. However, this gave the King a Handle to seize the Liberties of the City, to degrade the Mayor, and to appoint his Under-Treasurer Custos of the same: The dismissing of whom, and the Restoration of their Liberties, cost the City four hundred Marks. Besides, the King commanded the Barons of the Exchequer not to admit either the new Sheriffs or Mayor of London to their Offices, 'till the City had discharged a Debt of five hundred Pounds, due to Luke de Luca and Company: And the Citizens, according to annual Custom, having presented Affrey and Richard de Ewell as their Sheriffs, before they were admitted, they, with the Mayor, were obliged to bind themselves in the Sum of twenty Marks of Gold, (which, according to the original Mark of eight Ounces, must have been ten Pounds in Weight) to satisfy the aforesaid Merchants, before the Feast of All Saints then ensuing.

The Officers of the Abbot of Waltham having frequently distrained the Merchandizes of the Londoners, who kept the Waltham Fair, for Non-payment of Toll; this Affair, which had been controverted for many Years, was now amicably accommodated to the Satisfaction of the Citizens; who, according to their great and extensive Privileges, are exempt from paying Toll in all Parts of the Kingdom.

Toll at Waltham agreed

In the same Year, the Londoners were again compelled to pay another Tallage of five hundred Marks: Which Tallages were exacted under divers Pretences; sometimes for the Use of the King, at other times for the Queen, and sometimes for the Prince: So that this distressed City had nothing to expect in this rapacious Reign, but continual Exactions; and to be incessantly preyed upon with a more than brutal Inclemency, and so frequently treated as the worst of Slaves, without the least Regard to their often and dear-bought Liberties. Another Instance of which happened in the very next Year; when Henry had recourse to the following unjustifiable Artifice: He pretended to find at Windsor a Roll of fictitious Crimes laid to the Charge of the City Magistrates, with which he commanded his Chief Justice, John Mansell, to repair to London, and to summon a Folk-mote at Paul's Cross; to read the Accusations, and to order the Aldermen to chuse out of their respective Wards thirty-six Inquisitors. They obeyed, and appeared the next Day according to Summons: But, peremptorily refusing to act contrary to the known Laws and Customs of the City, being sworn to maintain their just Rights and Privileges, Mansell withdrew in a great Rage; and next Day the Mayor and Aldermen were summoned to attend the King at Westminster: But his Majesty sent them back without seeing them. And Mansell returning to the City, attended by the King's Council, came to Guildhall; where the Populace being assembled, he in a plausible Speech acquainted them, that the King intended in an exemplary Way to punish all those who had in the least been concerned in oppressing the Commonalty of his dearest City of London; therefore asked them, Whether such a Proceeding would be acceptable to them? The unthinking Multitude, neither discovering the Fraud, nor considering the Consequence of such an Approbation, cried out, Yea, Yea. Whereupon Mansell appointed the Constable of the Tower Custos of the City, and Michael Tony and John Adrian for Sheriffs: By which the Commonalty becoming sensible of their Error, returned to their several Habitations with sorrowful Hearts and dejected Countenances.

fix, as Inquisitors: But these, like the former, not acting, they, together, with the late Mayor, Sheriffs, and four Men from each Ward, were commanded to attend the King in his Court of Exchequer at Westminster, where Ralph Hardell the late Mayor, Nicholas Batt, Nicholas Fitzjohne, Matthew Bukerell, John Telegham and John le Myneurie were called upon; whom Mansell falsely told, that by the Inquisition of their Fellow-Citizens they were found guilty; and the pretended Charge being read, they all denied that ever they had been guilty of any one Article therein contained; offering to put themselves upon Trial by the Laws and Customs of the City. But Mansell, not agreeing to that, ordered them to attend the King and Council at Westminster the Day following; where Henry affecting to speak with some Emotion upon the Affair, Ralph Hardell and Nicholas Batt were thereby so greatly intimidated, that they immediately threw themselves upon the King's Mercy, whilst their more resolute Brethren begged they might be tried by the Laws of the City; which not being granted, the Charge was read anew against them; to every Article of which they gave full and reasonable Answers.

However, the King commanded a Folkmoete to be held at St. Paul's Cross the Day after; where the Assembly being very numerous, the accused Aldermen were apprehensive, that, by the artful Speaking of Mansell, the Populace might be deluded to approve of the Proceedings against them; therefore, rather than run the Risk of that, they threw themselves upon the King's Mercy; saving to themselves and Fellow Citizens the Liberties and Immunities of the City. This great Point gained, Mansell ordered them to attend the King the next Day at Westminster; where being come, they were acquainted, that for their Crimes the Court had awarded, that they should be fined at the Discretion of the said Court: But, by their having thrown themselves upon the King's Mercy, he had ordered their Fines to be respited; whereupon the late Mayor, kneeling down, returned hearty Thanks for that gracious Favour: However, Henry no sooner departed, than they were all arrested, 'till they gave Security; but, upon their paying large Sums, were restored to the King's Favour, and reinstated in their former Offices.

41 H. III.

So far is recorded by Fabian: But this Case is otherwise related by Manwood, &c. who write, That all the Folk and People of the City did complain of the Mayor and Aldermen for Misgovernment within the said City: And it appears, that A.D. 1257, and 41 Hen. III. there was found a certain Roll, in the Wardrobe of the King at Windsor, sealed with green Wax, but none knew how it came thither; which contained many Articles against the Mayor and his Counsellors, who had oppressed their Fellow-Citizens with Tallages, and other Ways. Whereupon the King, desiring to know the Truth of the Premises, commanded John Mansell, one of his Chief-Justices, to repair to London, on St. Paul's Day (January 25) and to summon a Folkmoete at Paul's Cross, in the said City, for the Day following: Which being met, the Chief-Justice ordered the said Roll to be read publicly, in the Hearing of all the People, and in the Presence of the Earl of Gloucester, Henry de Batbon, and others of his Majesty's Council. Mansell then added, That his Majesty would not suffer his City to be aggrieved; but that he desired to be informed, who those rich Men were, that had been favoured in collecting the Tallage; and who, amongst the Poor, had been oppressed; and whether the Mayor and his Counsellors had applied any Part of the Tallages to their own Use. He further commanded the Aldermen, in the King's Name, to call their Wardmotes, and that there the Men of every Ward, in the Absence of the Aldermen, should elect of themselves thirty-six Men before that Time talliated; and that all these should, on such a Day, appear about One of the Clock at St. Paul's, before him and others of the King's Council. They obeyed; and these chosen Men from every Ward appeared before the said Justices, Mansell and de Batbon, and Henry de Wengham, the Chancellor, and Philip Lover, the Treasurer, and others of the King's Council: When Mansell, on the Part of the King, spake and commanded them to swear that they would make Inquiry, and certify upon Oath, concerning the said Articles of Complaint. But they replied, That, according to the Laws of the City, they ought not to be compelled to inquire any Thing upon Oath, except in Cases where Life and Member and Title of Land were concerned. To which Refusal of the Citizens Mansell replied, and put them in Mind of their Oath, which they had made to the King, and that they were bound, both in Conscience and Duty to God and their King, to comply with his Majesty's Commands: And, after having conjured them to Obedience with many other Arguments, they adjourned to meet at Guildhall on the next Day. But the Justices and King's Council had no better Success then, though they pressed the Citizens very earnestly to consent to the Oath proposed, in making the afore said Inquisition.

However, his Majesty sent Michael Tony and Adam de Pasfenger, to summon the Citizens on the Vigil of the Purification (Feb. 1.) at Guildhall aforesaid, where they assured the Mayor and a very great Assembly of the People, That the King promised to preserve all their Liberties entire; but for the Amendment of the City, it was his Will, that an Inquiry should be made upon Oath concerning the Complaints aforesaid, so that none might fall under his Royal Displeasure, and the Punishment of the Laws, but the Guilty only; and that they might suffer without any Damage to the Public or Commonalty. Mansell and others, who also attended the said Messengers, affirmed the Truth of their Declaration, and with such Speeches and fair Promises engaged their Assent to the Oath proposed against their Liberties, by crying out, Yea, Yea, without considering the Consequences of such a Consent.

This Point being obtained by the Court, Mansell immediately seized the City into the King's Hands; removed the Mayor and Chamberlain from their Offices, before they were convicted of any Crime; delivered the Custody of the City to the Constable of the Tower; appointed new Sheriffs; and, having sealed up the Tallage-Rolls, left them in the Hands of the Chamberlain, to be forthcoming upon his Majesty's Command.

On the Morrow (Feb. 3.) of the Purification, the said Mansell returned to the Guildhall in the said City, and for several Days after successively; and there, assisted by the Constable of the Tower, and other Commissioners from the King, received, upon the Oaths of the thirty-six Inquisitors of each Ward, their Reports upon the Truth of the forefaid Complaints, with so much Secrecy, that, though this Session continued daily to the Feast of St. Sebasstian, nothing either of the Interrogatories, or of their Answers, perspired 'till that Time; on which Day, the King commanded to come before him, at Westminster, the Mayor, Sheriffs, and all the Aldermen, and the thirty-six Inquisitors of every of the twelve Wards, by whom the Inquisition had been made.

They attending to the King's Summons, all the Aldermen were called by Name, and four Men of every Ward appeared before the Barons of the Exchequer and other Commissioners; when Mansell informed Nicholas Batt, the Mayor, and several others, that the King had resolved to prosecute them for the Oppressions and Injuries done by them to the Men of his City: And having caused a Part of the said Inquisition to be read, he concluded, That the City was oppressed and destroyed by them and their Councils, especially in that Particular, viz. the changing the Manner of making the Tallage; because the last Roll thereof had not been read, as usual, before all the People, properly summoned; and that the Mayor and his Council had altered the Roll at their Pleasure, to screen some People, and to burthen others. To which the Accused replied, That the Custom of reading the Tallage-Roll in Guildhall had been discontinued for ten Years; and further denied the Possibility of their corrupting or falsifying the said Roll, which they alledged was made out by Men chosen by the whole Commonalty, and sworn to do Justice, and then sealed with the Common Seal of the City; and they all offered to put themselves upon Trial by the Laws and Customs of the City.

Henry de Batbon opposed their Offer; and, Mansell not satisfied with their Demand of being tried by a City Jury, the Court was adjourned to lay the Affair before the King next Morning. At which Court, the King himself and his Council being present, Ralph Hardell and Nicholas Batt, being greatly intimidated, threw themselves upon the King's Mercy, with a Salvo to the Liberties of themselves and their Fellow-Citizens. Then the King commanded the other six, who were accused of male Practices, to be prosecuted for giving bad Counsel to the Mayor, by which there had been unjust Tallages made, and the Weights and Measures had been altered, without Permission of the King. However, they persisted in their Innocency; alledged, that what Alterations had been made in the City in the Weights and Measures, were for the public Good; and that they were ready to be tried by the Laws and Customs of the City, which allowed them to be tried by twelve Men of their own City before the King.

This resolute Determination of the Citizens embarrassed the Court, and obliged the King to have Recourse to another Expedient, which was, to call a Folk-mote at St. Paul's Cross next Day, and so to manage the Populace, as to gain their Denial of any such Custom. This Folk-mote answered their Expectations: For the accused Aldermen, deterred from their former Resolution of abiding by their City Rights, (observing that the Commonalty would not stand by them in their Defence before the King) threw themselves also upon the King's Mercy, desiring that the King would inquire, by whom he would, of the City, if they were guilty of any Crime; saving to themselves and the other Citizens their Liberties, who would not acquiesce. However, Mansell proceeded to harangue the People, who were assembled in a mixt Multitude, Strangers, Non-freemen, and even Servants, without any Aldermen; and taking Advantage of their Approbation of the King's Proceedings, he commanded the Accused to appear before the King in Person on the next Day, in Westminster-Hall. On the Morrow, the Court being assembled, the King, who had taken Advice with his Council in the Chapel of St. Stephen, came and placed himself as Judge in this Cause on the Bench; when he commanded the Chief-Justice, Henry de Batbon, to pass Sentence of Degradation on the accused Aldermen, and to declare, that they were dismissed from their Bailiwicks, and lay at the King's Mercy, so as never to be restored to their Offices, without the Royal Permission; but that his Majesty gave them Leave to return Home.

After all these Transactions, the King granted, that, except the said six Men, the others might serve the Office of Bailiff, if they should be chosen thereto by the Commonalty of the City; who were accordingly restored to their Bailiwicks, except Richard de Hadstock; and Thomas Fitz-Thomas was restored to the Sherifdom, with whom was joined William Grapstede, in the Place of Matthew Bokerell; and William Fitz-Richard was chosen Mayor of London. But the City Chamberlains were obliged to appear daily before Mansell and his Fellow-Commissioners, to render an Account of the Tallages, in the Presence of many Citizens; who, after a long Scrutiny, found nothing of the Complaint, that might justly be laid to the Charge of the Parties accused. Wherefore the King, to put an End to all these Troubles, having commanded a Folk-mote to assemble at St. Paul's Cross, on the Day before the Feast of St. Leonard, in the forty-third Year of his Reign, did there, in the Presence of his Council, and of John Mansell, restore the disgraced Arnold Thedman to his Favour, and to his Bailiwick of an Alderman, being certified of his Innocence in regard to the Accusation laid against him; and at the same Time acquainting the Citizens with his Intention to cross the Seas to his foreign Dominions, he promised to preserve all their Liberties entire, and farther granted them certain Privileges, namely, "That for the future every Citizen should have Liberty to plead his own Cause, without being obliged to employ a Lawyer, except in Pleas that might concern the Crown; that, the Wisdom of the Court being certified of the Truth of the Affair, without any Colouring, they might decree equal and just Judgment to the Parties concerned."

This Passage was thought of such Consequence in the Annals of London, in order to clear up some some future Proceedings in its History, as obliged the Editor to search into all its Circumstances; and not entirely to rest upon the Authority of Fabian, who seems to ascribe the whole Prosecution to a wicked Intention in the King to oppress the City upon the sole Evidence of a Paper forged at Court: Whereas, by the Relation thereof from other Authors, as above, it should rather be ascribed to the discontented Part of the Commonalty, who thought themselves aggrieved in the Tallage, &c.

It is possible that the Court, who, on the other Occasions in this Reign, shewed much Dislike to the City of London, might prosecute this dark Complaint with more Acrimony than becomes the Father of the People, when Justice calls him to protect the Innocent, and to punish the Guilty: But it does not appear that the King, after a strict Inquiry, perverted Justice to gratify a Desire of Revenge upon those he found innocent of the Charge laid against them: And it ought to be a Memorial to the Citizens at all Times not to oppress one another, nor, by civil Dissentions and intestine Broils, to expose their Liberties and Privileges to the Power of the best of Kings.

It also requires a further Remark concerning the Folkmoete, to which Chief Justice Mansell applied in this Case, to know the Truth of the Complaint against the Magistrates of this City; and for their Opinion, in regard to the Customs of the City in Law Proceedings against Delinquents. For, by this Instance, the Folkmoete, or Assembly of the People, or Commonalty, appears to have been at that Time the supreme Assembly of the City, in which all the Citizens, that would come, were met together, near St. Paul's; in which the Mayor and Aldermen might be impeached for Misgovernment: A Mayor has been chosen: And in which the Liberties and Customs of the City were to be finally examined and determined by a Majority of Voices. This supreme Assembly was summoned by the Ringing of a certain great Bell in a Belfry erected near the East End of St. Paul's Church, as appears in the Pleadings on a Quo Warranto, 14 Edw. II. which Summons was generally by Order of the Mayor and Aldermen: And in this Court capital Criminals were declared outlawed: After which, according to the Law of those Times, any Person was empowered to kill the Offender. However, this Assembly, as the City increased by foreign Inhabitants, became in Time so tumultuous and dangerous, by the great Intermixture of Strangers and Non-freemen, contrary to the Liberties and Customs of the City, that by Degrees we find it laid aside; though its Authority was frequently pleaded by the Citizens, as in the Case above-mentioned. But of this more hereafter, when we shall treat of the City Government.

As to the particular Charge of over-rating some, and favouring others, in the Tallage; it may be satisfactory to our Readers to be informed, That Tallage, or Tailage, was a Term introduced by the French after the Conquest, and is derived from the French Verb Tailler, to share or cut out a Part: Which, applied metaphorically in our Laws, is taken, when the King or any other Lord hath a Share or Part of the Value of any Man's Goods or Chattels, or a Share or Part of the annual Revenue of his Lands; or puts any Charge or Burthen upon another. So that Tallage is a general Word, and includes all Subsidies, Taxes, Tenths, Fifteenths, Impositions, or other Burthens or Charges, put or set upon any Man. When a Tallage was granted by the City, certain Persons were chosen by the whole Commonalty at Guildhall, and sworn to make a just Roll: This Roll being made out, was then to be read in the said Hall before all the People, summoned for their Assent; which being given, the said Roll was to be sealed with the Common Seal of the City, and then became a Law to oblige and bind the Citizens, according to the Tenor thereof.

The City Walls and Bulwarks of London being also reported to be ruinous, Henry commanded the Citizens forthwith to repair the same, which they some Time after effected at a very great Expence.

In this same Year, a Gentleman belonging to William de Valence, Half-Brother to the King, having dangerously wounded several of the Citizens, without the least Provocation or Reason, other than their being Englishmen, (than which he imagined nothing would be more acceptable to his Master; therefore depended upon his Protection) was stoned to Death by the Populace. But this Affair was so highly resented by the King, that he ordered Richard Hardell, the Mayor, to attend and answer for the same: Hardell, in his Defence, alledged, That it was not in his Power to stop the furious Populace, as upon Inquiry would appear: And Henry appeared satisfied. But he only deferred the Punishment till another Opportunity, which some Time after offered.

Just after, Henry commanded Sir Hugh Bigot, one of the Itinerant Judges, to hold a Court of Itinerancy in London, though contrary to the ancient Rights and Liberties of the Citizens; by which Court, divers Bakers for male Practices were set upon the Tumbrel or Dung-Cart, wherein they were carried and exposed in the Streets, as Bawds usually were. Besides which, the said Judge did several other Things incompatible with the Privileges and Immunities of the City.

This Year the King caused to be coined in London a Penny of pure Gold, weighing two Sterlings, which is supposed to be the first Gold coined in England.

In the same Year, a dreadful Famine happened, chiefly occasioned by too much Wet, insomuch that Wheat was sold at the prodigious Rate of one Pound four Shillings the Quarter. The Author of Walter of Coventry's Julius, tells us, That at this dismal Time he saw several Persons fight for dead Dogs and other Carrion, and that People eat Wash given to Swine. And we are told by another Historian, That, according to Report, no less than twenty thousand Persons died in London. And what added to the Misery of this terrible Dearth was a Scarcity of Money also; for, by the grievous Exactions of the King on the one hand, and the Pope on the other, together with the prodigious Sums of Money carried into Germany by Richard, King of the Romans, (which, according to Report, amounted to no less than seven hundred

Citizens promise to maintain the Oxford Constitutions. Henry promises to maintain the City Rights. Obliged the Citizens to take an Oath to him and his Heirs. City of London's Power to distrain in Westminster. The Londoners take Part with the Barons against the King. A Watch appointed in every Ward. City's Liberties, Posts and Chains, taken away. The King resumes the Government of the City. The Terms of the City's Pardon. The Charter of Remission. Another Charter concerning Traffic and Toll. Permission to chuse two Bailiffs. — Surprized by the Earl of Gloucester. King Henry's eighth Charter. Prince Edward made Governor of London. Privilege of chusing their Magistrates restored.

THE King's Oppressions extending over all the Nation, the Parliament, which was assembled at Oxford, in the Year 1258, came to certain Resolutions for preventing the like for the future: And, having obliged the King and Prince to confirm the Constitutions or Provisions they had made for ascertaining the Rights of the People, they sent divers of their Members, viz. Simon de Mountfort, John Fitz-Goffrey, &c. as Commissioners to the City of London, to shew unto the Citizens the said Confirmation of the said Constitutions or Provisions made at Oxford; and to ask, whether they would adhere to, and faithfully observe the said Statutes, and act vigorously in Defence thereof, against all those who should attempt to violate the same, by giving their utmost Assistance to the Barons, when Occasion should offer? After some Deliberation, the Citizens unanimously assented; and, as an incontestable Proof of their Sincerity, not only obliged themselves by a Charter under their Common Seal, but likewise swore to maintain and defend the same against all Infringers whatsoever; well knowing, that those Provisions were calculated for the Benefit of the whole Kingdom, by restraining the King from imposing upon his People, as he had heretofore so often done, more especially upon themselves; therefore of all others they had the greatest Reason to approve of those additional Fences, by which they were to be protected from the detestable Avarice of an insatiable Prince: And as this was the Case, the ready Concurrence of the Citizens is not to be wondered at, nor their having acted so strenuously afterwards, in Defence of those Laws they had so solemnly sworn to maintain; for which they deserve immortal Praise, notwithstanding their having been unjustly stigmatized, by some Friends to Slavery, with the Appellation of Rebels, on that Account.

Pursuant to the above-mentioned Provisions, Proclamation was made in divers Parts of the City, that none of the King's Purveyors should take any Thing in London, without Consent of the Owner, except two Tons of Wine the King had out of every Wine-Ship, at two Pounds per Ton. And as long as the Oxford Provisions subsisted, the King had nothing in London, but what he paid ready Money for.

Soon after, the Commonalty of London exhibited a Complaint to the King of great Frauds committed by the Collectors of the Money for repairing the City Wall, who, instead of applying it as it was intended, fraudulently appropriated the same to their own private uses, as they had frequently done in collecting of Tallages, &c. Whereupon the said Collectors were apprehended, tried and convicted; but by Money, and the Intercession of Manfell the Chief-Justice, they were all pardoned.

On Candlemas Day, 1259, Henry, with his Brother Richard, King of the Romans, with their Queens, made their publick Entry into London, amidst the Acclamations of an infinite Number of People; on which Occasion, the City was embellished in a most sumptuous Manner: And soon after, Henry, at the Intercession of the King of the Romans, confirmed the Privileges of the Company of German or Hanseatick Merchants in London.

On or about the sixth of November, this same Year, the King came to St. Paul's Cross; where a Folkmore by his Order being assembled, he took Leave of the Citizens, (before he set out for France) whom he faithfully promised to maintain in all their Rights and Privileges; and at the same Time strictly enjoined the Mayor to have a great Regard to the Peace of the City during his Absence. This Promise and Charge were received by the Citizens with all the Demonstrations of Joy.

During the King's Stay abroad, a great Difference happened between Prince Edward and the Earl of Gloucester; for the composing of which, a Parliament was summoned to meet at Westminster, where both the Prince and Earl arrived, with armed and numerous Retinues; and both intending to lodge in the City with their Attendants, it occasioned the Mayor's going to advise with the Regency upon this extraordinary Emergency; who calling to their Assistance the King of the Romans to deliberate thereon, the Result was, that the Mayor should not give Admittance either to the Prince or Earl, or any of their Followers, into the City; and that he should command all the Citizens, of fifteen Years of Age and upwards, to provide themselves with Arms, to be ready on all Occasions; by which wise Precaution, the City was at this Time preserved in Peace, which otherwise might have proved of bad Consequence; and, for the more effectual Security of the Capital, the King of the Romans, Sir Hugh Bigot and Sir Philip Basset, two of the Regency, brought into London certain Bands of armed Men, who continued therein 'till the Storm was over. This Account, through Mistake, is placed by Fabian in the preceding Year. In the Interim the King arriving from France, he thought proper to take up his Residence in the Bishop of London's Palace in the City, 'till the Difference could be composed; and at the same Time he commanded the Prince to reside at Westminster, and the Earl in London:

And the Parliament, having this Affair very much at Heart, soon after compromised Matters, seemingly to the Satisfaction of both Parties.

An. de Civ. Lond. Henry, being conscious of the many Extortions and Impositions he had from Time to Time put upon the Londoners, began to be apprehensive of their leaving him, and joining with his Enemies, the Barons; which to prevent, as much as possible, he came into the City, and commanded a Folkmote to be convened at St. Paul's Cross, on the Sunday before Valentine-Day, Anno Dom. 1260; where, being present, attended by his Brother and divers of the Nobility, he ordered the Mayor to cause all the Males in the City, of twelve Years and upwards, to be sworn the next Day before the Aldermen of the respective Wards, to be faithful to the King and his Heir; and at the same Time strictly enjoined him to have always in Readiness a sufficient Number of armed Men, for Defence of the City. Which Precaution his Majesty renewed the very next Year: For, being resolved to be no longer bound by the above-mentioned Constitutions made at Oxford, he went to the Tower of London, accompanied by his Queen, and, opening his Treasury, employed it in repairing the decayed Fortifications of that Fortrefs. At the same Time he commanded the City Wall to be finished with the utmost Expedition. And at a Folkmote called by his Command, to meet at St. Paul's Cross, he again obliged the Mayor to take an Oath to be faithful to the King and his Heirs; and the Day after, all the Aldermen, in Presence of the Mayor, took the Oath in Guildhall; and, the Sunday following, all the Males of the City of twelve Years and upwards, were again obliged to swear to be true to the King and his Heirs. Then he commanded the City to be strongly guarded, and caused Proclamation to be made, that whoever would enter into his Service, should be maintained at his Expence. Yet all this Management had like to have been overturned by the Constable of the Tower, who, having stopped divers Ships laden with Corn, caused the same to be unloaded, and carried into that Fortrefs, where he fixed the Price according to Pleasure. This Proceeding highly incensed the Citizens; the Consequence whereof would in all Probability have proved fatal to the King's Affairs, had it not been happily accommodated by the Determination of the Chief Justice Basset; who, after having heard both Sides, decreed, that, whenever the Constable of the Tower, or any of his Officers, should have Occasion to buy Corn for the King, or the Inhabitants of the Tower, he should, for the future, come to the public Market in the City, where he should be supplied with Wheat, or any other Grain, at two Pence the Quarter cheaper than the common Price fixed by the Mayor: And if the said Constable, or any of his Officers, should at any Time act contrary to this Sentence, the Sheriffs should give Information thereof to the Privy Council, who should give immediate Order to have the same redressed.

Ibid. On the ninth of November following, a Quarrel happened in the Church of St. Mary Cole, at the Corner of the Old Jewry in the Poultry, between a Christian and a Jew; the latter, having dangerously wounded the former, endeavoured to escape; but being pursued by the Populace, was overtaken, and killed in his own House. But the Mob not stopping there, they fell upon other Jews, and killed and robbed many of them. The Winter following there was such an exceeding hard Frost, that the River Thames being strongly frozen over, it became as it were a common Highway for Men, Beasts, and Carriages.

In a Cause tried between the Londoners and Abbot of Westminster, Anno Dom. 1262, in the Exchequer, by a Jury, consisting of twelve Knights of the County of Middlesex; they, after hearing Witnesses on both Sides, brought in their Verdict, that the Sheriffs of London had a Right to enter the Town of Westminster, even to the Gates of the Abbey, and also into all Houses belonging to the Abbot in Middlesex; and there to summon and distrain all and every of his Tenants for Default of appearing.

Anno Dom. 1263, Prince Edward, at his Return from Wales, immediately went to the Temple or Monastery of the Knights Templars; where, breaking open their Treasury, he spoiled them of ten thousand Pounds, deposited there by the Citizens, as in a sacred Repository, not dreaming that any Person would be so wicked as to rob a Treasury that was under the immediate Protection of Heaven. This dishonourable Action enraged them so, that they instantly ran to Arms, to revenge themselves upon Edward and his Adherents, assaulted and plundered the House of Lord Gray, and the Houses of divers other Courtiers, and determined them to take Part with the Barons; who informed them that the King had openly rejected the Constitutions of Oxford, assembled, without a Royal Summons, in great Numbers in the Neighbourhood of this City; where, in a great Council, they publicly declared both against the King and Prince, as guilty of Perjury, in receding from the said Constitutions; and, having assembled a great Army, declared they were resolved to act in Defence of the same, and defied all such as opposed them: And having proceeded to open Acts of Hostility, by destroying the Estates, and plundering the Houses of all Strangers, especially those who were in Favour with the King and Prince; they sent a Letter to the Mayor and Citizens of London, under the Seal of Simon de Mountfort, Earl of Leicester, their General, to know whether they would assist them in the Recovery of their just Rights, and the Re-establishment of the Provisions made at Oxford, which they had some Time before not only confirmed by their Charter, but likewise in the most solemn Manner swore to maintain the same.

Henry being in the Tower of London for his greater Security, the said Letter was carried thither by Thomas Fitz-Thomas, the Mayor, (who, by Stow, through Mistake, is called Thomas Fitz-Richard, tho', in another Part of his Work, he gives him his proper Name.) The King, on this Occasion, being willing to know the Sentiments of the City relating to that Affair, asked the Mayor what his Opinion was in that respect. But Fitz-Thomas, unwilling to declare his Sentiments at so critical a Juncture, begged Leave to consult his Brethren the Aldermen on that Head, promising missing quickly to return with their Thoughts thereon. But, the King insisting upon his own Opinion without farther Delay, he boldly answered, That he, with his Brethren the Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of London, had frequently, by his Command, been sworn to obey all such Acts and Ordinances as had been made to the Honour of God, the Interest of the King, and Good of the Kingdom, which Oaths they thought themselves in Conscience obliged to keep; adding, that, in order to prevent any farther Misunderstanding between him and his Nobility, on the Account of Foreigners residing in London, they had taken a Resolution to expel all Aliens out of their City. This Answer cut the King to the Heart; but, as it was a very improper Time to shew his Resentment, he passed it over, as if he had not regarded what was said. The Mayor, at his Return, gave an Account of all that had passed between the King and him to the Barons. This Transaction, by Mistake, Fabian has placed in the preceding Year.

During this troublesome Time, a strong Guard was kept in the City by Day, and by Night a Party of Horse, supported by some Infantry, incessantly patrolled the Streets. This Guard gave a handle to a Gang of Thieves, who, under Colour of being Part of the Foot Patrol, gave out, they were ordered to search for Strangers; under which Pretence, they got into and robbed many Houses. For the preventing such villainous Practices for the future, a standing Watch was appointed in every Ward. Soon after which, the Barons were admitted into the City.

The King, finding himself disappointed of the long-expected Relief from the Prince his Son, thought it safest to give Way to the Times, by agreeing to the Terms insisted on by the Barons; and, by a Treaty, once more to oblige himself to observe the Oxford Statutes. Immediately after the Conclusion of this Peace, Henry went from the Tower of London to Westminster; whence he sent a Letter to the Mayor and Citizens of London, acquainting them, that the Differences between him and the Barons were accommodated; therefore strictly enjoined them to look to the Peace of the City, and that whosoever should be guilty of a Breach of the same, should be arrested, and his Goods seized and kept, till the King's Pleasure should be known how to dispose of them.

The Queen having used all the Arts she was Mistress of, to prevent the Conclusion of so dishonourable a Peace with the Barons, she became thereby so odious to the Citizens, that, some Time after, they being informed she was to pass from the Tower of London to Windsor by Water, the Populace assembled on the Bridge, where they not only saluted her with the most scurrilous and opprobrious Language, but likewise threw Volumes of Stones and Dirt at her, whereby she was compelled to return to the said Tower.

The Barons, still to ingratiate themselves farther into the Affections of the Londoners, desired them to draw up an Account of such of their Liberties as had been retrenched by the Advice of evil Counsellors; and also a Draught of such additional Privileges as they judged would be of Service to the City: All which they undertook to get granted by the King.

But Henry, never intending to keep the late Peace longer than to serve a Turn, was no sooner at Liberty, than the Garrison of Foreigners in Windsor Castle made an Excursion, and plundered the neighbouring Countries of their Provisions. However, the King and his Son Edward being soon after reduced, they were again necessitated to come to Terms with the Barons for a while: When finding Means to divide them, and to draw several of the Barons to his Party, Leicester and his Adherents were declared Rebels; and the King raised an Army to reduce them by Force; which was not doubted, provided it could be contrived to deprive Leicester of any Help from the City. But that not being possible to be effected, the Citizens not only opening their Gates to him and his Army encamped in Southwark, but joined and marched with him to give the King and Prince Battle in Lambeth Fields; where it was proposed and accepted by both Sides, to submit their Grievances to the Arbitration of Lewis, King of France.

In the Year 1264, and Palm-Sunday Week, a dreadful Disaster befel the miserable and unfortunate Jews in this City; for one of that People endeavouring to extort from a Christian more than legal Interest, viz. two Pence per Week for twenty Shillings, the Populace, assembling from all Parts of the City, fell upon them in a most cruel and barbarous Manner, massacring above five hundred of them, and afterwards robbed and destroyed their Houses and Synagogue; and such of them as were concealed, and saved by Persons of Humanity and Conscience, were sent to the Tower of London for their greater Security.

Lewis, King of France, readily accepting the Office of Arbitrator, after a full Hearing of both Sides, gave his Award in Favour of the King; whereby the Statutes of Oxford were annulled; and Henry in all Respects restored to his former Power; without taking any other Notice of the Barons, than that the King should use them kindly, and not remember any Thing to their Disadvantage on Account of what was passed.

This definitive Sentence of the French King, was looked upon by the Barons as an Act of great Partiality; wherefore, having discovered a Flaw therein, they would not abide by it; but began to exert themselves in an extraordinary Manner against the King. The first Step they took, was to secure this City to their Interest, into which they were readily admitted by the Citizens: But divers of the Aldermen and chief Citizens being suspected to be in the King's Interest, the Populace thought that a Reason sufficient to justify their usurping the Government of the City, which they were no sooner possessed of, than they (at the Desire of the Barons) rechose Thomas Fitz-Thomas for Mayor; and chose for their Captains, or Leaders, Thomas de Pywellton and Stephen Buckerell; at whose Command, by the tolling of St. Paul's great Bell, they obliged themselves to appear in Arms, and to march with the said Officers, wheresoever they were pleased to lead them. Their first Expedition was under Hugh de Spencer, Constable of the Tower of London, (and by the Barons lately made Justiciary of England) who having desired the said Pywell and Bukerell to join him with a Body of their Troops, they immediately caused the Alarm-Bell to be tolled. The Citizens (as it were one Man) instantly shut up their Shops, armed with the greatest Expedition, joined the Troops from the Tower of London, and marched with the greatest Chearfulness: But whither, or on what Design, they knew not; till, being arrived at Ipsworth, they were commanded to destroy the stately Manor-House of the King of the Romans, with all its Appurtenances; (as they likewise did, on their Return to London, the King's Summer-house near Westminster): After which they marched back to the City in Triumph, joined the Earl of Leicester, and marched out under his Banner to fight the King, who had pursued him up almost to the very Gates of the City: Which so provoked his Majesty, that he marched back to Kent; where he so effectually prevailed upon the Cinque Ports, as to engage them to send divers Ships to block up the River Thames, to prevent the carrying Provisions and other Commodities to London.

During the Democracy in this City, the most unheard of Ravages were committed; for the Populace, to enrich themselves, plundered the Houses of many of the most eminent Citizens, under Pretence of their being Friends to the King. But their greatest Fury was levelled against the Causini, or Italian Usurers, and the Jews.

And Leicester, reinforced by the Barons and their Troops, and with a great Body of Londoners, marched into Suffex, in Search of the King; and encamping at Flexingwith, within six Miles of his Army, sent the Bishops of London and Worcester to mediate a Peace; whose Proposals Henry rejected: And the Barons, perceiving they were to expect no Satisfaction but what they could obtain by the Sword, renounced their Allegiance, defied him, and marched to attack the Royal Army. Prince Edward, with the best of the Troops, began the Engagement, by a furious Assault upon the Wing composed of the Citizens, who, being raw and undisciplined, and incapable of sustaining the first Shock, were quickly put to Flight; and the Prince, eager to revenge the Affront offered to his Mother at London-Bridge, fiercely pursued, and made a terrible Slaughter of them for four Miles together. This rash and inconsiderate Action of Edward's, in pursuing the Citizens too far, cost the King his Father, Richard, King of the Romans, his Uncle, and himself, the Loss of their Liberties, and the entire Destruction of their Army by Leicester. — The remaining Part of the routed Londoners taking Shelter at Croydon, the Garrison of Tunbridge no sooner received Intelligence thereof, than they marched thither, and, falling upon them, killed a great many, and carried off Abundance of Plunder. About the same Time, a great Part of Westcheap, or Cheapside, was burnt down by Treachery.

Prince Edward made his Escape from the Guard; and, having assembled a considerable Power, he attacked Leicester's Army at Evesham;

which he not only routed, but likewise killed the Earl and one of his Sons.

Upon this a Parliament was held at Winchester, or, according to others, at Westminster, about Christmas; wherein it was enacted, that the City, of London, for its late Rebellion, should be divested of its Liberties, its Posts and Chains taken away, and its principal Citizens imprisoned, and left to the Mercy of the King; who, instead of having ever shewn them any Favour, was the only Person that drove them to those Extremities, by his unjust, cruel, and barbarous Treatment; to which its greatest Misfortunes were chiefly owing. Whence 'tis observable, how careful all British Kings ought to be, by good Usage, to keep this City their Friend; which, when otherwise, has sometimes terminated in the Ruin of the Prince; of which Instances may be brought: But, if well used by its Sovereign, never was any City more loyal, brave and dutiful, and at all Times ready to serve its Prince, both in Person and Purse; whereof there are many Instances.

Henry having obtained a Parliamentary and unlimited Power of punishing the Citizens of London, wanted not Inclination to put it in Execution; for, upon his Arrival at Windsor with a potent Army, 'twas given out, that he intended utterly to destroy the City for its obstinate Rebellion. This was melancholy News to the principal Citizens, while the infatuated Rabble were still for continuing in their Disobedience, and defending the City at all Events. But, after a long Deliberation, it was resolved to send some religious Persons, for whom the King had a Respect, to intercede for, and to endeavour to mollify his Resentment against the City: But all in vain, for his Counsellors were incessantly irritating him against the Citizens. It was then advised by their best Friends at Court, by a proper Instrument under the City Seal, to submit their Lives and Fortunes entirely to the King's Mercy: Which being agreed to, and executed, 'twas sent by eight Citizens, who were known to have the best Interest at Court; who, upon their Way to Windsor, were met at Colebrook by Sir Roger Leyburn, who acquainted them, that it was the King's Pleasure they should proceed no farther, but return from whence they came, he accompanying them Part of the Way; and, at his leaving them, ordered the Mayor, Aldermen, Sheriffs, and principal Citizens, to meet him the next Morning at Barking Church, near the Tower; where, being come, Sir Roger expatiated upon the Heinousness of their Crime, and the great Intercession that had been made for their Pardon; therefore, the only Way for obtaining the same, was, to send by him the above-mentioned Character of their Submission, which they readily delivered to him.

Sir Roger, returning to the same Place about a Week after, acquainted the Citizens, that the King, at the Intercession of their Friends, had received their Submission, but had commanded all their Posts and Chains to be taken away, (with which they used to barricade the Ends of their Streets and Lanes) and carried to the Tower of London; and that his Pleasure was, that the Mayor

Mayor, and forty of the principal Citizens, should the Day after be at Windsor, to confirm the above-mentioned Instrument; and, for their Security, delivered them the King's Safe-Conduct, or Pass, under Seal, for their coming and going in Safety, for the Space of four Days; in Confidence of which, they went to Windsor: But, the King being gone to divert himself with Hunting in that Neighbourhood, they waited his Coming; and being returned, tho' he saw them attending, took no Manner of Notice of them; and, being about to enter the Castle with the Domesticks, they were cautioned to attend without, whilst Orders were given not to molest them; Whereupon they were acquainted by Sir Roger Leyburn and Sir Robert Walleis, who brought them into the Castle, that the King would not see them that Night: Upon which they committed themselves to the Care of the Constable of the Castle, who caused them to be secured in a large Tower till the next Day; where, according to my Author, they had hard Fare, and worse Lodging.

The next Evening they were all removed from the Tower to Lodgings assigned them, except Thomas Fitz-Thomas, the Mayor, Michael Tony, Stephen Bukerell, Thomas Pywellson, and John Fleet; who, notwithstanding their Safe-Conduct, were, as Ringleaders of the late Rebellion, delivered up to the Prince, to be disposed of at his Pleasure: Whereupon Edward ordered them to be confined, till they had paid such Sums as he thought sufficient for their Ransoms. Hence 'tis observable, that neither Prosperity nor Adversity could ever bring this King to have the least Notion of Honour or Justice; though, even amongst the most savage Nations, a Safe-Conduct is held equally sacred with the most solemn Asseveration. Upon Receipt of this melancholy News in the City, many of the most eminent Citizens retired, with their Effects, into the Country, and never returned.

The King, having seized the Liberties of the City, and discharged the Magistrates, constituted Humphry de Bobun, Earl of Hertford, John de Baliol, Roger de Leyburn, and Roger de Walerand, Guardians thereof; and by his Writ, directed to them, recited, "That, whereas the Mayor, Citizens, and whole Community of London had submitted themselves, both as to their Lives and Limbs, together with their Lands, Tenements, and Estates, to the King's Mercy; they were to cause Proclamation to be made, that his Peace should be kept in the City and Parts adjacent. Given at Windsor, the Sixth of October."

By this original Writ 'tis apparent, that both Fabian and Stow are mistaken, in placing Otho, Constable of the Tower, Custos over the City at this Time. For by the King's Commission 'tis manifest, that it was some Time after, when Sir Hugh Fitz-Otho had the Custody of the City and Tower delivered to him by Sir Roger de Leyburn, one of the former Custodes, who surrendered the same to him by a special Command: Wherefore the Citizens were strictly enjoined to submit to him in all Things relating to his Office. Upon which he appointed John Adrian and Walter Harvey, Citizens, for his Bailiffs; in whose Stead, Stow has again erroneously substituted Edward Bland and Peter Anger.

Henry also bestowed upon his Domesticks many of the principal Citizens Houses, with all their Moveables, the Lands and Chattels they were possessed of in any Part of the Kingdom; and then caused many of the Sons of the most eminent Citizens to be taken as Pledges for their Fathers good Behaviour: Those were sent to the Tower, and maintained at the Charge of their Parents: And it was not till after a powerful Intercession, that the King ordered all the Citizens, that were in Custody at Windsor, to be discharged; still detaining Richard Bonaventure, Simon de Hadstock, William de Kent, and William de Gloucester; who, it seems, were, on account of their great Riches, to be more effectually fleeced.

The Citizens being now under the most deplorable Circumstances, having nothing they could call their own, resolved, if possible, to come at an End of their Misery; and, in order to which, by their Friends at Court, applied to the King in the most humble and moving Manner, to know what he insisted on as an Atonement for their past Offences. Henry at first demanded the immense Sum of sixty thousand Marks; but, falling to fifty thousand, that he positively insisted on: But the Citizens, in a Remonstrance, setting forth, that it was the baser Sort of the People that had been the greatest Offenders, and who had not only been the chief Actors in the late Rebellion, but likewise had robbed all the principal Citizens, who were known to be in his Majesty's Interest; besides the great and numerous Losses they sustained in the late unhappy Troubles by the Privateers of the Cinque Ports, by which they were rendered incapable of paying the vast Sum insisted on; therefore they most humbly intreated, that his Majesty would be pleased to accept of what they were able to give, without ruining their poor innocent Families.

This expostulatory Declaration had a very happy Effect; for Henry soon after committed the Government of the City and Tower of London to Sir John Linde and John Waldren, Clerk, under the Appellation of Seneschals: Whereupon the King's Council sent for twenty-four of the principal Citizens to appear before them at Westminster; where being come, they were told, it was the King's Pleasure, that they should have the immediate Direction of the City Affairs, under the aforesaid Seneschals; and that they were in a particular Manner commanded to have a strict Regard to the Peace and Quiet of the City; for which Purpose they were sworn accordingly. And, at the earnest Solicitations of the Queen and the Pope's Legate, and the Consideration of their low Circumstances, at last the King agreed to accept of the Sum of twenty thousand Marks, in full Satisfaction for all past Offences. For the Payment of which, the Citizens having given Security, the King sent a Charter of Remission, under the Broad Seal, from Northampton, to the following Purport:

"Henry, by the Grace of God, King of England, Lord of Ireland, and Duke of Guyan;
To all Men, Greeting.

"Know ye, that in Consideration of twenty thousand Marks, paid to Us by our Citizens of London, as an Atonement for their great Crimes and Misdemeanours committed against Us, our Royal Consort, our Royal Brother Richard, King of the Romans, and our dear Son Edward: That We have and do by these Presents remit, forgive, and acquit, for Us and our Heirs, the Citizens of London and their Heirs, of all Crimes and Trespases whatsoever; and that the said Citizens, as formerly, shall enjoy all their Rights and Liberties; and that from Christmas last they shall and may receive the Rents and Profits of all their Lands and Tenements whatsoever: And also, that the said Citizens shall have all the Goods and Chattels of such Criminals, as have or shall be indicted on Account of the late Rebellion; except the Goods and Chattels of the Persons already mentioned, which We have given to our Son Edward, and also, all the Lands and Tenements that shall escheat to Us, by Reason of the said Rebellion. And We likewise grant, that all the Citizens confined in our several Prisons shall be discharged; except those given as Pledges to our Son Edward for his Prisoners, and those for Citizens that are fled. In Consequence of this Pardon, the King sent an Order to John de Waldren and John de Linde, his Guardians of the City, reciting, "That, whereas he had received into his Favour the Citizens of London, according to a certain Form, specified in his Letters Patents; that they should release the Pledges or Security of the Citizens they had in their Custody, except those above excepted; and to suffer them to go wheresoever they pleased. On the same Day, the King granted the City a Charter, whereby the Citizens were empowered "to traffick with their Commodities and Merchandizes, wheresoever they please, throughout his Kingdom and Dominions, as well by Sea as by Land, without Interruption of him or his, as they see expedient, quit from all Custom, Toll, and Paying; and may abide for their Trading wheresoever they please, in the same his Kingdom, as in Times past they were accustomed, till such Time as it should be more fully ordered by his Council, touching the State of the said City; as by the said Letters Patents, amongst other Things, more fully appeareth."

Fab.

Notwithstanding the King's Order to the abovementioned Guardians for detaining certain of the City Pledges in Prison, yet it seems, that four thereof were not only soon after discharged, (though, 'tis to be presumed, not without paying the utmost Farthing, for the Satisfaction of Prince Edward) but likewise the Seneschals or Guardians aforesaid were dismissed; in whose Stead the Citizens chose William Fitz-Richard for their Mayor, and Thomas le Ford and Gregory de Rockesly for their Sheriffs; which shews Stow's Mistake in the latter. Arnold writes, that the Sheriffs for this Year were Walter Huyn and William Duresme. This Affair was no sooner settled, than the Citizens set about raising the Fine payable to the King; for the Payment of which, not only Householdiers, but also Lodgers and Servants, were assessed; the Assessment amounting so high, that many, rather than pay it, chose to be disfranchised.

Stow, Sur.

About the same Time, the Bailiffs, Aldermen, and Community of London entered into a Recognizance on Behalf of the King, (before the Barons of the Exchequer) to the Merchants of Doway, for the Payment of five hundred Pounds; agreeing, that, in Case of Non-payment, the said Barons might levy the same upon their proper Goods and Chattels. And, in the same Year, the Bailiffs, and fifteen others, principal Citizens of London, went to the Exchequer, and bound themselves in a Recognizance, on Behalf of the Community of the City, to pay four hundred Marks (the Residue of a greater Sum they owed the King) unto Herman le Tyers, Knight, and Envoy of the Duke of Brunswick, or to Folkemar de Brunswiz, or any other Person, who should bring an Acquittance from the said Duke; and to pay daily four Shillings to the said Herman and Folkemar, for their Expences, till the said four hundred Marks should be paid; and that, in Default of Payment, they agreed, that the said Sum might be levied, by the Barons of the Exchequer, upon their Goods and Chattels, according to the Custom of the Exchequer.

About the same Time, a Difference happened between the Magistrates and the Commonalty of London, concerning the Election of a Mayor; for which Purpose a Folk-mote being assembled, the Aldermen and chief Citizens declared for Alen Souche, and the Commons for Thomas Fitz-Thomas, tho' at that Time a State-Prisoner in the Castle of Windsor. Souche's Party, who were apprehensive of this Opposition, had previously engaged Sir Roger Leydorne (mistaken for Leyburn) a bold and enterprising Courtier, to come to their Assistance; who, with his Friends, ready prepared for Battle, repaired to the Place of Election, and furiously fell upon the naked Commons: many of whom they seized; and, having committed them to Prison, Souche was declared duly elected; no one daring to make further Opposition.

rous Army, under a Pretence of serving the King in his intended Wars against France, and against the Rebels in the Isle of Ely, (whose Cause he had privately engaged to support against the King) having by this Artifice deceived the Regent, and by his Permission quartered Part of his Army in the City, brought fresh Troubles upon them: For he no sooner found himself capable of forcing the Citizens to his Terms, but he pulled off the Mask, and acted at his Pleasure: And upon the Arrival of Sir John Dayville, alias de Evilli (one of the chief Rebels in the Isle of Ely) with a considerable Body of Troops, in Southwark, he discovered his Intention more plainly. The Magistrates of the City, being apprehensive of Danger from the Neighbourhood of those new Comers, (who had been so long inured to Plunder) drew up their Draw-bridge, and shut the Gates against them. But the Earl so highly resented their Behaviour, that he took the Keys of the City from the Mayor, and gave them to such as he could confide in. Whereupon Dayville's Men had Access to the City at Pleasure; which so intimidated the chief Citizens, that many of them retired into the Country, to avoid the King's Displeasure. Wherefore the Earl immediately seized upon their respective Effects: Of all which Proceedings the Mayor gave the earliest Intelligence to the King, who was then busy in Norfolk, in raising Men to reinforce his Army, to march against Gloucester; who in the Interim was continually employed in fortifying the City with additional Works.

Pillaged.

The Earl now sole Master of London, the Commonalty began to act in the same licentious Manner they did in Leicester's Time, (without regarding the late dreadful Catastrophe they brought upon the City by their former Behaviour) by seizing the several Aldermen they knew were in the Court Interest, whom they clapped into Prison, and divided their Effects among them; and, having degraded the Mayor and Sheriffs, chose in their Places Sir Richard Culworth and Robert de Langton; and then released all Persons, imprisoned on Account of the late Rebellion; and confederating with such as were excommunicated or proscribed on the same Account; who, returning to the City from all Parts in great Numbers, acted in all Respects as mischievously as formerly. The Legate, on his Part, put the City under a kind of Interdict; commanding, that the Bells should not be rung for Divine Service, nor that it should be sung, but said; and all Churches to be shut, during the Time of saying the same, lest any of the excommunicated Rebels should participate thereof. Gloucester invested the Tower of London, with a Design to reduce it. But the Legate, by the Assistance of the Jews, who fled thither with their Families for Security, made a brave Defence; 'till the King, who lay at Cambridge with his Forces to curb the Rebels in the Isle of Ely from making Incursions on that Side, received a Reinforcement of thirty thousand Scots and French, raised by his Son Edward, and marched to his Relief.

When he was come to Windsor, he there encamped, the better to inform himself how Affairs stood in the City, and how the People stood inclined, not wanting many loyal Persons there to give him secret Intelligence of what happened from Time to Time. He had not long staid at Windsor, but his Army daily increased; which made Gloucester and his Party begin to doubt of the promised Success, with which they had flattered themselves, and thereupon were very desirous of Peace: But the King would not harken to their Proposals: Whereupon they appointed to give him Battle upon Hounslow-Heath; but the King, coming thither with his whole Army at the Day appointed, found that they had altered their Resolutions, no Person being there to oppose him. After he had staid there some Time, he set forwards towards London, and, wheeling about, brought his whole Army to Stratford, where he encamped for two Months without acting any Thing remarkable, other than making a few petty Assaults upon the City; which he was as often compelled to leave without Success. In the mean Time, the Earl sent a Detachment into Kent and Surrey, who, having ravaged those two Counties without Opposition, returned with a great Booty. Soon after this mischievous Crew repaired to Westminster, where they destroyed the Church, defaced the Abbey, and the Doors and Windows of the Royal Palace, and spoiled it of its rich Furniture and Wine. Four of this strolling Gang of Robbers, who were Domesticks to the Earl of Derby, being taken, were put into Sacks, and thrown into the River Thames, by their Master's Order, for their Villainy.

The Earl of Gloucester, perceiving that the King's Army not only increased with Troops from divers Parts of the Kingdom, but that a great Number of foreign Auxiliaries were also arrived in the River Thames to join it, whilst his own Army in a starving Condition were shut up in London, was induced to make some Overtures to the King of the Romans for an Accommodation; which Henry readily accepted of; and after divers Meetings, a Peace was concluded, wherein the Londoners and all his Adherents were included. But, tho' a general Pardon was granted to the Citizens, whereby the King remitted all Offences committed by them against him, during the late Troubles, promising never to remember any Thing to their Disadvantage on that Account; yet, before the Delivery of the said Pardon, the Citizens were obliged to grant an Obligation of one thousand Marks to the King of the Romans, payable in two Years, for the great Damage they did him, by destroying his fine Country Seat at Ipsworth. A Peace thus happily concluded between the King, the Earl and the Citizens, all additional Works made to the City by the Earl were razed, and the Ditches thereof levelled.

Law Merchant.

Acquittal of Murder, &c.

Graves of the Dead.

Free of Toll and Luggage, &c.

What is due to the King.

"Know ye, that we have granted to our Citizens of London, for us and our Heirs, whom of late we have received again into our Grace and Favour, after divers Trespasses and Forfeitures of them and their Commonalty to us made, for the which, both for Life and Member, and all other Things belonging to the said City, they have submitted themselves to our Will; that none of them be compelled to plead out of the Walls of the said City, for any Thing except Foreign Tenures, and except our Moneyers and Officers, and except those Things which shall happen to be done against our Peace, which, according to the Common Law of our Realm, are wont to be determined in the Parts where those Trespasses were done; and except Pleas concerning Merchandizes, which are wont to be determined according to the Law-Merchant in Boroughs and Fairs, so yet notwithstanding that those Pleas be determined in the Boroughs and Fairs, by four or five of the said Citizens of London, who shall be there present; saving to us the Amendments in any wise coming, which they shall faithfully answer us and our Heirs, upon Pain of grievous Forfeitures.

"We have also granted to our same Citizens Acquittal of Murder in the said City and in Portoken; and that none of the said Citizens may wage Battle; and that for the Pleas belonging to the Crown, chiefly those which may chance within the said City and Suburbs thereof, they may discharge themselves according to the antient Custom of the said City; this notwithstanding except, that upon the Graves of the Dead, for that which they should have said, if they had lived, it shall not be lawful precisely to swear; but instead and place of those deceased, which before their Deaths, to discharge those which for concerning the Things belonging to the Crown, were called and received, there may other free and lawful Men be chosen, which may do and accomplish that without Delay, which by the Deceased should have been done, if they had lived; and that within the Walls of the City and in Portoken none may take Lodgings by Force, or Delivery of the Marshal.

"We have also granted to our said Citizens throughout all our Dominions, wheresoever they come to dwell with their Merchandizes and Things, and also throughout all the Sea-Ports, as well on this Side as beyond the Seas, they shall be free of all Toll and Luggage, and of all Customs, except every where our due and antient Custom and Prices of Wines; that is to say, one Tun before the Mast, and of one other behind the Mast, at twenty Shillings the Tun, to be paid in such Form as we and our Ancestors have been accustomed to have the said Prices; and if any in any of our Lands, on this Side or beyond the Seas, or in the Ports of the said Sea, on this Side or beyond the Seas, shall take of the Men of London Toll, or any Custom, contrary to this our Grant, (except the aforesaid Prices) after he "shall fail of Right, the Sheriff may take Goods therefore at London.

"We have also granted to them, that the Hustings might be kept in every Week once the Week, and that only by one Day; or as notwithstanding that those Things within the same Day cannot be determined, may continue till next Morning, and no longer; and that Right be holden to them for their Lands and Tenures within the same City, according to the Custom of the said City; so as nevertheless, that as well Foreigners as others may make their Attorneys, as well in pleading as defending, as elsewhere in our Courts; and they may not be questioned as miskenning in any their Pleas; that is to say, if they have not declared altogether well; and of all their Debts which were lent at London, and Promises there made, Pleas be there holden, according to the just and antient Custom.

"Furthermore, we do also grant, toward the Amendment of the aforesaid City, that all be quit of Childwite and Jerefigive, and from Scotale; so that our Sheriffs of London, nor any other Bailiff, shall not make any Scotale: And also, that the said Citizens may justly have and hold their Lands, Tenures or Promises; and also their Debts, whosoever do owe them; and that no Merchant or other do meet with any Merchant coming by Land or by Water, with their Merchandizes or Victuals, towards the City, to buy or sell again, till they come to the said City, and there have put the same to Sale, upon the Forfeiture of the Things brought, and Pain of Imprisonment; from whence he shall not escape without great Punishment: And that none shew out their Wares to sell, who owe any Custom, till the Custom thereof be levied, without great Punishment, and upon Pain of Forfeiture of all that Commodity, of him that happens to do otherwise: And that no Merchant, Stranger, or other, may buy or sell any Wares, which ought to be weighed or troned, unless by our Beams or Trone, upon Forfeiture of the said Wares.

"Moreover, those Debts, which of their Contracts or Loans shall be due unto them, may cause to be enrolled in our Exchequer, for the more Surety of them, upon the Recognizance of those who shall stand bound unto them in the said Debts: So as nevertheless, that no Debts be enrolled upon the Recognizance of any Person who is not there known; or unless it be manifested concerning his Person by the Testimony of six or four lawful Men, who be sufficient to answer as well for the Debt as for the Damages, which any may have of such Recognizances, if the same happen to be falsly done under their Names: And for every Pound to be enrolled in the Exchequer, one Penny to be paid to our Use, for the Charge of Sustentation of those which must attend to such enrolling: These Liberties and free Customs we grant to them, to hold to them and their Heirs, so long as they shall well and faithfully behave themselves to us and our Heirs, together with all their just and reason-

By the above-mentioned Charter, all past Of-forbidden under severe Penalties; no Sort of

The King by his Precept commanded Allen le Fab.

eligible for Sheriffs, who chose from amongst P. 7.
them Walter Harvey and William de Durham;
and they were sworn faithfully to collect the City Duties for the King's Use, and to render an exact Account thereof to the Barons of the Exchequer. Soon after he discharged the Mayor, and constituted Stephen Edworth, Constable of the Tower, Custos of the City. Many of the Citizens already mentioned, having deserted the City, to avoid being charged to the twenty thousand Marks, to be raised towards paying their Composition to the King, the Mayor and Citizens petitioned the King, that all the said Fugitives should be obliged to pay their several Assessments, as if they actually resided in London;
for which Purpose, Henry issued his Precepts to the Sheriffs of all the several Counties of England, strictly enjoining them to levy by Distress all such Mones of the Londoners in their several Jurisdictions.

About the same Time, a great Difference happened between the Company of Goldsmiths and that of the Merchant Taylors; and other Companies interesting themselves on each Side, the Animosity increased to such a Degree, that on a certain Night both Parties met (it seems by Consent) to the Number of five hundred Men, completely armed: When fiercely engaging, several were killed, and many wounded on both Sides:

And they continued fighting in an obstinate and desperate Manner, 'till the Sheriffs raised a great Body of Citizens, suppressed the Riot, and apprehended many of the Combatants; who were soon after tried by the Mayor, and Laurence were condemned and hanged.

In the three-and fiftieth Year of King Henry,

Time, the River Thames was so hard frozen, that all foreign Merchandizes were brought by

vernment of London, with all the Revenues thereunto belonging, upon his Son Edward; who appointed Hugh Fitz-Otbo Constable of the Tower, and Custos of the City; and commanded the Citizens to send him the Names of six Men qualified to serve the Office of Sheriff; out of whom he chose William de Hadesstone and Anketill de Alverne, who, according to Custom, were sworn into that Office. The Prince also lett to farm a Toll (a new Tax the King had some Time before imposed upon the Citizens) for twenty Marks per Annum, to a Foreigner; which greatly troubled the Citizens, who thought it not only a Grievance, but likewise a Dishonour to them, to be under the arbitrary Will of an Alien. But, upon their humble Petition and Covenant to pay him the Sum of two hundred Marks for it, Edward sold them his Right thereunto; and was so well pleased with their Deportment at this Juncture, that he became their Advocate to the King, to have the remaining Part of their antient Rights and Privileges restored to them; particularly that of electing their Magistrates, which they had so long been divested of. In consideration whereof, instead of three hundred and fifteen Pounds for the City Farm, the Citizens agreed to pay for the same the Sum of four hundred Pounds per Annum; and they immediately chose John Adrien for their Mayor, and Philip Tylour and Walter Petter for their Sheriffs, the Prince doing the City the Honour to present them to the King at Westminster; when they were admitted and sworn, and the Custos discharged. Moreover the Citizens, with the utmost Gratitude, having presented the King with the Sum of one hundred Marks, and the Prince with that of five hundred, they, on the twenty-first of July following, received a Charter, which confirmed all their antient Rights and Immunities.

PRINCE Edward, who, upon the ceasing of the Troubles at Home, had undertaken an Expedition into the Holy Land, then the fashionable School of War for Christian Soldiers, against the Saracens, no sooner received the Account of his own Accession to the English Throne, by the Death of his Father Henry III. than he dispatched Letters to the Mayor, Sheriffs and Commonalty of London, dated January 19, Anno Regni primo, at Naples; in which, after reciting the many Injuries done to his People by the Subjects of the Countess of Flanders, he strictly enjoined them to make Proclamation, that no Fleming whatsoever should be allowed to come into, or stay in London, on Penalty of having his or their Effects confiscated, notwithstanding any former Treaty to the contrary. He likewise charged the Magistrates, upon their Love and Duty to him, that they would carefully preserve Peace in the City till his Return, which he promised should be with all Expedition, hoping upon his Arrival to find Things in such good Order, that he should have Reason to thank them; concluding, that, as he had not the Seal of the Kingdom by him, he had therefore inclosed these Presents with the Seal of the King of Sicily. Teste me ipso, &c.

When King Edward arrived at London, he was received with the greatest Pomp and Magnificence imaginable; for on that Occasion the City was not only adorned with the richest Silks and Tapestry in the Fronts of the Houses, but the several Conduits ran with a Variety of the choicest Wines; whilst the chief Citizens profusely threw Gold and Silver amongst the Populace.

porations,

Corporations, and the best Bulwark against all Attempts and Encroachments upon their Liberties, had proved of very bad Consequence to their Privileges, under a Sovereign, who might have been more disposed to Oppression, than Edward shewed upon this Occasion: For, tho' the City Animosities grew so high, that there was no Probability of a Compromise, (the Mob being determined to maintain their Nomination of Sir Walter Harvey, in Opposition to the regular Choice of Philip le Tayleur) he only named a Custos of the City, till the Competitors could be brought to Reason. However, this convinced the Citizens of the Danger of their intestine Broils, and of the Interposition of Majesty in their civil Government: So that they unanimously (in a Falkmote) chose Sir Walter Harvey; though they next Year were so well convinced of his Perjury, and other Male-Practices, as to degrade him from the Office of an Alderman, render him incapable of sitting in the City Council, and to oblige him to give the Security of twelve substantial Citizens for his honest and quiet Deportment during his Life; being also accused of encouraging riotous Proceedings.

The Licentiousness of the late Times had made it necessary to provide new Laws against Engrossers, Forefallers, and all Sorts of Frauds and Impositions in the Sale of Provisions; especially against Bakers, who had got into a Way of making Bread under the Standard Weight; and against Millers, who dealt in bad Measure. Therefore his Majesty's next Care was to command the Mayor and Sheriffs to put them in Force, and to regulate the Prices of Provisions. These Laws subjected the Bakers to a Forfeiture of their light Bread for the first Fault, to Imprisonment for the second, and to be pilloried for the third: And they ordained that all the thievish Millers should be punished by the Tumbrel, i. e. carried in a Dung-Cart through certain Streets, exposed to the Derision of the People. Moreover, his Majesty admonished the Citizens to devise proper Laws for regulating the Prices of Poultry and Fish, which Sort of Provisions had been engrossed by a few rapacious Hucksters. Accordingly it was ordained by the Magistrates of the City, "By the Command of the Lord the King, and with the Assent and Consent of the Gentle-men of the Kingdom, and Citizens aforesaid, That no Huckster of Fowl [or Poulterer] go out of the City to meet them that buying Poultry into the City, to make any Buying from them; but buy in the City, after the Buyers of the Lord the King, of the Barons, and the Citizens have bought and had what shall be needful for them, namely, after Three o'Clock, and not before: And then let them buy thus:"

Grievances complained
of.

London.
3 Edw. I.
N. 4 in Scaccario.

But these were not the only Grievances under which the Citizens laboured: They complained of the great Oppression of those, who loaded them with heavy Taxes; as appears by a Presentment made in the third Year of this King's Reign, by the Juries of the several Wards of the City, under their respective Seals; complaining, That notwithstanding every Citizen should enjoy the same Privileges, and were upon an equal Footing in regard to their Freedom and Privileges, and that the said City ought not to be tallaged without the special Command of the King [who had a Right by Law to tallage all Cities, Boroughs, and Towns, as held of the Crown in antient Demesne, as London did] or without the common Assent of the whole Community; certain Mayors and Guardians of the City had from Time to Time, by their own Authority, without the Consent of the Community, tallaged the said City, not only once or twice, thrice or four Times, but very often. And some of these Inquisitions set forth, That, to the Disinheriting of the King, and the Destruction of the whole Commonalty, several of the Aldermen and others had obtained Charters from the late King Henry III. whereby they were quitted of Tallages, Quarterages, and from all other Aids which belong to the City of London; so that the whole Burden of the Tallage fell upon the middling Sort and the Poor, to their great Oppression. All which the Jury presented before the Justices in Eyre at the Tower, as Oppressions and illegal Exactions upon the Citizens.

His Majesty summoned a Parliament, which met at London; in which Usury was forbidden to the Jews; and it was ordained, that all Usurers should thence-forward wear a Badge, the Breadth of a Paveline on their Breast, or else to depart the Kingdom.

This same Year his Majesty, intending to employ the Mayor in an Embassy beyond Seas, directed a Writ to the Magistrates, and chief Men of the City, to send to him four of the discreetest Citizens, whom he might appoint to preserve Peace and Tranquillity, and distribute Justice in the Absence of their Mayor.

A dreadful Earthquake happened in London, and many other Parts of the Kingdom, which overthrew Abundance of Houses and Churches, and shattered many more.

Matthew Paris writes, That the City Wall, from Ludgate to the River Thames, being taken down by Licence from the Crown, to make Way for the Foundation of the Church of the Convent of Preaching-Friars, commonly called Black Friars, by Robert Kilwarby, Archbishop of Canterbury; to whom Gregory de Rockesley, Mayor of London, and the Barons of the same City, did grant and give two Lanes or Ways, next the Street of Baynard-Castle, and the Tower of Mounthquit or Mounthfichet, to be applied for the Enlargement of the said Church and Place: The Founder, under the Sanction of this Grant, pulled down not only the City-Wall on this Side, but entirely destroyed the Ruins of the Tower of Mounthfichet, and used the Stones found therein to complete his new Foundation. And King Edward, on his Part, commanded the Citizens to build a new Wall, and Tower at the Head of it, for his Reception: Which Wall was to run from Ludgate Westward to Fleet-ditch, behind the Houses, and thence Southward to the River Thames. For the accomplishing of this Work, King Edward granted the City a Toll for three Years, to be raised upon sundry Sorts of Merchandizes; and soon after sent them the following Letter:

"Whereas we have granted you, for Aid of the Work of the Walls of our City, and the Closure of the same, divers Customs of vendible Things, coming to the said City, to be taken for a certain Time; We command you, that you cause to be finished the Wall of the said City, now begun near the Mansion of the Friars Preachers, and a certain good and comely Tower at the Head of the said Wall, within the Water of the Thames there, wherein we may be received and tarry with Honour, to our Ease and Satisfaction in our Comings there, out of the Pence taken and to be taken of the said Customs, &c.

"Witness Myself, at Westminster, the eighth Day of July, An. 4."

In the fifth Year of this King's Reign, it was ordained, that there should not be kept a Market on London-Bridge, nor in any other Place, except those appointed for that Purpose: Also, that no Person should go out of the City to Southwark, either to buy Cattle, or any Wares, which might be bought in the City, under the Penalty of Forfeiture of the Thing bought. This is the first Ordinance of Common-Council we find on Record concerning the Regulation and Appointment of Markets in this City.

The next Year proved very fatal to the Jews; who, being convicted of clipping and diminishing the King's Coin, were all throughout England seized and imprisoned in one Day; and out of those seized in this City, two hundred and eighty of both Sexes were executed.

Edward being informed of the ruinous and dangerous Condition of London bridge, besides his Letters Patent for a general Collection in all Parts of the Kingdom towards its Repair, he issued out his Letters Patent to the Mayor of London, empowering them to take a certain Toll to enable them to perform so necessary a Work, as has been more particularly related before, on Page 47.

Amongst other Repairs, it was found necessary to call upon the Hanseatick Corporation of Merchants, who, in Consideration of divers Privileges granted to them by the City in the late King's Reign, had engaged to uphold, maintain and defend Bishopsgate; which was much decayed, and in a very ruinous Condition. This Demand of the City being rejected by the Company, the Affair was carried by Writ into the Exchequer; and, after a full Hearing, the Company was obliged (as related before, on Page 23.) to perform their Covenant. The State of this antient Company will be more particularly described, when we come to the History of the Steel-yard.

In this same Year, the Citizens obtained of the King, for a certain Sum of Money, a Pardon for whatever they had done to that Time contrary to their Charters; which Letters Patents were directed to the Mayor, Aldermen, Citizens and Commonalty of London. And in the following Year he granted them certain Customs for the Reparation and Inclosure of the City, by Letters Patents, dated at Nettleham, 4 Feb. An. Reg. undecimo, directed to the Mayor and his Fellow-Citizens.

This Year will be ever memorable for the Death of Llewellyn, the last Prince of the Britons Blood, that reigned in Wales; who having lost the Victory in the Field of Battle, fled to Blauis Castle for Safety; but was betrayed by the Men of that Place into the Hands of Roger le Strange, who, taking him off his Guard, ran upon him and cut off his Head with his Broad Sword, while he was reviling the English. The Head was sent to King Edward, who ordered it to be carried to London. The Citizens in Cavalcade met the Messenger that brought it, and conducted him to the City in Triumph, with the Sound of Trumpets and Horns, and carried the same through Cheapside upon a Lance, crowned with a Silver Chaplet or Circle; by which (according to some Authors, with an ill-natured Sneer) was fulfilled the Prediction of a Welsh Fortune-teller, who foretold him, that his Head should ride down Cheapside with a Silver Crown. But what was most blameable, they were not content only to glut their Eyes with this moving and melancholy Spectacle, the Head of this great, though unfortunate, Prince; but ignominiously set it upon the Pillory in Cheapside, for the remaining Part of the Day, and then fixed it upon the Tower of London, crowned with an Ivy Diadem.

In the Winter following a very great Frost happened; at the Breaking of which, by a Stag-nation of the Ice, five Arches of London-Bridge were carried away, as observed on Page 48.

Laurence Duckett, a Goldsmith, having dangerously wounded Ralph Crepin in Weslebiap, or Cheapside, took Sanctuary in Bow-Church-steeple. Divers Friends of the said Crepin surprized Duckett there by Night, and hanging him in one of the Windows, in such a Manner as even to deceive the Coroner's Jury; who, having sat upon the Body, brought in their Verdict, Self-Murder: Whereby Duckett's Corpse was drawn thence by the Feet, and buried in a Ditch without the City. But a Boy, who lay with him that Night, (and, during that barbarous Action, concealed himself) having ventured to give Information against the Murderers, many Persons were apprehended; sixteen were hanged, and a Woman, the Contriver of the said Murder, was burnt alive; others, Persons of Distinction, concerned therein, were amerced in pecuniary Mulcts: And the disgraced Body was dug up and buried in a decent Manner.

A.D. 1185, it was ordained, that the Millers should take no more than one Halfpenny for grinding a Quarter of Wheat. The great Conduit in Cheapside was first built. And John Peckham, Archbishop of Canterbury, commanded the Bishop of London to destroy all the Jews Synagogues in London.

It appears by the Liber Albus, that the City was now divided into twenty-four Wards, viz.

Which Council were to be consulted by the Aldermen, and their Advice to be followed in all Affairs of public Concern, relating to the City of London. And these Council-men were sworn into their Office.

The Lord Treasurer summoned the Mayor, Aldermen and Citizens of London, to attend him in the Tower, to render an Account how the Peace of the City had been kept; but Gregory Rockefly, the Mayor, for the Honour of the City refusing to attend in that Quality, laid aside his Ensigns of Mayoralty at Barking Church, delivered the City Seal to Stephen Afwy, (others write it Afly) and then repaired to the Tower as a private Gentleman. The Treasurer so highly reſented this Behaviour, that he committed Rockefly and divers of the principal Citizens to Priſon, at the Feaſt of St. Peter, in Summer; which the King not only approved of, but he alſo ſeized upon the City Liberties, diſcharged the Mayor, and appointed Stephen Sandwich Cuſtos of London, (unto Candlemas following, when John Beyton, or Briton, was appointed Cuſtos, 'till St. Margaret's Day, in the Year 1289, according to Arnold) under Pretence that the Mayor had taken Bribes of the Bakers, to connive at their cheating the Publick, by making their Penny Loaves ſix or ſeven Ounces too light; or for ſome Crime of a higher Nature. But, be that as it will, this is certain, that London had no Mayor for twelve Years after.

This Revolution in the City Government was attended with many Convulſions. The Streets were preſently infeſted with Robbers, who committed many Cruelties, and even Murders. Which produced the following Regulations: That no Stranger ſhould wear any Weapon, or be ſeen in the Streets after the Ringing of the Coverſeu Bell at St. Martin's-le-Grand. After which Time all Offenders were to be ſeized and carried to the Tonnell, and the Day after before a Magiſtrate, to be puniſhed according to the Nature of their ſeveral Crimes. That all Vintners and Victuallers were not to keep open their Houſes after the Ringing of the ſaid Bell, upon the Penalty of three Shillings and four Pence for the firſt Offence, to be gradually advanced to the fourth, which was a Fine of twenty Shillings. That, whereas it was cuſtomary for ſuch Profligates to learn the Art of Fencing, and were thereby emboldened to commit the moſt unheard-of Villanies, no ſuch School ſhould be kept in the City for the future, upon the Penalty of forty Marks for every Offence: And, the more effectually to prevent the growing Evil, that all the Aldermen ſhould make a thorough Search in their ſeveral Wards for the detecting ſuch Offenders, in order to bring them to Juſtice, and an exemplary Punishment: And, as moſt of the aforeſaid Villanies were ſaid to be committed by Foreigners, who from all Parts inceſſantly crowded hither, it was therefore ordered, that no Perſon whatſoever, that was not free of the City, ſhould be ſuffered to reſide therein; and even many of thoſe that were, were obliged to give Security for their good Behaviour; and ſome were baniſhed, under Pretence of a dangerous Conſpiracy, ſaid to be carrying on againſt the Government: Amongſt whom was Thomas Pyweleſden, who had been one of the City Captains, and very active, in the Barons War againſt the late King; who, with fifty ſeven more, after Examination before Ralph Sandwich, Cuſtos of the City, were, by Proclamation baniſhed the City for Life; and, in caſe of their returning, to ſuffer immediate Death. And, as a further Mortification, the foreign Merchants in London, by the great Intereſt of their Friends at Court, obtained Liberty to rent Houſes for the Accommodation of themſelves and their Merchandize; whereas before they were confined to Lodgings, wherein they ſold their Goods; and there Landlords, officiating as Brokers, were very conſiderable Gainers thereby. By this new Privilege, the Citizens were not only deprived of thoſe Advantages, but the Merchants had thereby an Opportunity of defrauding the Citizens with bad Goods and worſe Weights. However, an Information being given by the City againſt thoſe iniquitous Dealers for their villainous Practices, twenty of the chief Offenders were apprehended and committed Priſoners to the Tower, their Weights deſtroyed, and they, after a long Imprisonment, fined in a thouſand Pounds to the King. Hence it is obſervable, that the foreign Trade to this City was then chiefly carried on by Foreigners.

Edward, in the fifteenth Year of his Reign, commanded the Barons of the Exchequer to transfer that Court to the Huſtings of London; at which Place, I imagine, they audited the City Accounts: By the Credit Side of which, the Citizens were indebted thirteen thouſand two hundred and five Pounds, and three Pence Halfpenny: But, a Miſtake being made by my Author, either in the Debit or Credit Side of the ſaid Account, therefore, to make the Ballance answer, I ſhall make the Credit thirteen thouſand eight hundred and ſeventy-one Pounds, and three Pence; and, by deducting twenty thouſand Marks of the Debit from the ſame, it will appear, that the City ſtood then indebted to the King (according to my Author) five hundred and thirty-eight Pounds ſix Shillings and eleven Pence. And, becauſe all the Aldermen were not then preſent to be Security for the ſaid Debt, Time was given for the Payment of the Ballance 'till the Offaves of St. Michael. At which Time Corn was become ſo ſcarce, that Wheat was ſold at ſixteen Shillings the Quarter; which the Year before had been at eighteen Pence, and in ſome Parts of the Country at eight Pence, the Quarter. A Subſidy was granted this Year for the Repairs of London-Bridge.

The Jews he punished by a Confiscation of all their Goods, and Banishment out of the Realm; and he dismissed from their Office all the Justiciaries who were found guilty, fined them according to their particular Offences; and also banished Sir Thomas Weyland, the Chief Justice, being first in open Parliament convicted. A.D. 1295. Ralph Sandwich, being again appointed by the King the Custos of the City, disputed with the Prior of St. Bartholomew's, concerning certain Profits arising from the Fair of that Name in Smithfield; alledging that, as the City Privileges were forfeited to the Crown, all the Customs and Benefits arising within the said City must belong to the King. This Controversy coming to the King's Ear, then at Durham, his Majesty commanded that the Matter should be decided by his Treasurer and Barons; and for that Purpose sent the following Brief to the Custos and Sheriffs of London:

E. Ed. I.'s Brief concerning Bartholomew Fair.

"The Lord the King hath commanded the Custos and Sheriffs in these Words: Edward, by the Grace of God, to the Custos and Sheriffs of London, greeting: Whereas the Prior of St. Bartholomew in Smithfield, in the Suburbs of London, by the Charter of our Progenitors, Kings of England, and our Confirmation, claimeth to have a certain Fair there every Year, during three Days, viz. on the Eve, on the Day, and on the Morrow of St. Bartholomew the Apostle, with all Liberties and free Customs belonging to the Fair; a Contention hath arisen between the said Prior and you the said Custos, which sue for us, concerning the Use of the Liberties of the said Fair, and the free Customs belonging to it: And Hindrance being made to the said Prior by you the said Custos, as the same Prior asserteth, to wit, concerning a

"Moiety of the said Eve, and of the whole Morrow before said; concerning which, we will, as well for us, as for the foresaid Prior, that Justice be done, as is fit, before the Treasurer and Barons of the Exchequer, from the Day of St. Michael next, for one Month. We command you, that sufficient Security be taken of the said Prior, of restoring to us the said Day the Issues of the afore said Fair, coming from the Moiety of the afore said Eve, and of the whole Morrow, if the said Prior cannot then shew something for himself, why the said Issues ought not to belong to us. We command you, that ye permit the same Prior, in the mean Time, to receive the foresaid Issues, in Form afore said. And you have therefore this Brief.

"Witness Myself at Dunelm, the ninth Day of August, in the twentieth Year of our Reign."

It having been represented to his Majesty, that the Laity in London had, out of mere Spight, carried several of the Clergy for pretended Crimes to the Prison in Cornhill, called the Tun, appointed for the Confinement of Night-Walkers, and other lewd and disorderly Persons, directed the following Writ to the Mayor and Citizens, to forbid such Practices:

"Edward, by the Grace of God, &c. Whereas Richard Gravesend, Bishop of London, hath shewed unto us, that, by the Great Charter of England, the Church hath a Privilege, that no Clarke shall be imprisoned by a Layman, without our Commandment and Breach of Peace; which notwithstanding, some Citizens of London, upon mere Spite, do enter in their Watches into Clarke's Chambers, and like Felons carry them to the Tunne, which Henry le Walley, some time Mayor, built for Night-Walkers: Wherefore we will, that this our Commandment be proclaimed in full Hustings; and that no Watch hereafter enter into any Clarke's Chamber, under the Forfeit of twenty Pounds. Dated at Carlisle the eighteenth of March, in the five-and-twentieth Year of our Reign."

Edward's Writ of Prohibition in Favour of the Clergy.

This royal Mandate was so ill relished by some, that, though they durst not infringe upon this Exemption of the Clergy, nine of the principal Citizens, to express their Disgust, broke open the Tun-Prison, and set several of the Prisoners at Liberty. For which the Rioters were personally punished by a long and painful Imprisonment: And the City was amerced at twenty thousand Marks; which the Citizens were obliged to pay into the Exchequer, before they could regain the King's Favour, and a Restoration of their ancient Privileges: Which Sum, with the Addition of three thousand Marks more, according to Fabian, obtained, after twelve Years Seizure, a full Restoration and Confirmation of the City Charters and Privileges. For the King, returning victorious from his Conquest of Scotland, and being received into London with such extraordinary Rejoicings, as never had been known on any Occasion, commanded the Aldermen and principal Citizens of London to repair to Westminster on Easter Wednesday; where, by the Advice of his Council, his Majesty restored to them the Power of electing their Chief Magistrate, the Mayor. And, on the Friday after, they chose Henry Walley into that high Office; who, on the Wednesday following, was presented and accepted by the King at Fulham; and the Day after he was sworn before the Treasurer and Barons of the Exchequer. But, his private Affairs calling him into the Country, he constituted William de Brereton and Galfred de Norton his Representatives, to officiate during his Absence; and set out the next Day for Lincoln.

This Act of the royal Favour was immediately followed by a Charter of Confirmation of all the City's ancient Privileges, dated the eighteenth Day of April, in the six-and-twentieth Year of his Reign; in which Charter, amongst other Things, it is contained,

Charter of Confirmation.
16 Edw. I.

"That whereas our said Citizens, by the Charters of our said Progenitors, have been accustomed to hitherto to present every Mayor, whom they have chosen in the said City yearly, before the Barons of the Exchequer, (our Progenitor or we not being at Westminster) that he may be admitted by the said Barons as Mayor for us, notwithstanding that, at the next Coming of our Progenitor or of us unto Westminster or London, he may be presented to our Progenitors, or to us, and so admitted Mayor. We, willing to shew more ample Favour to the said Citizens in that Behalf, do grant to them, for us and our Heirs: The Mayor of the said City, when he shall be chosen by the said Citizens, we, and our Heirs, and our Barons, not being at Westminster or at London, they may or shall be presented or admitted to and by the Constable of our Tower of London yearly, in such Sort as before they were wont to be presented and admitted; so as nevertheless, that, at the next Coming of us or our Heirs to Westminster or London, the said Mayor be presented to us or our Heirs, and admitted for Mayor.

Permission to present the Mayor to the Constable of the Tower, in Absence of the King and Barons.

Citizens acquitted of Pannage, Pontage and Murage.

Sheriffs, how to be amerced.

Citizens to enjoy their Liberties and Customs.

Greatest Black Book, fol. 24.

"And also, we have granted for us and our Heirs, to our said Citizens, that they and their Successors, Citizens of the said City, be forever quit and free of Pannage, Pontage and Murage throughout all the Realm, and all our Dominions: And that the Sheriffs of the said City, as often as it shall happen them to be amerced in our Court for any Offence, they shall be amerced according to the Measure and Quantity of the Offence, as other the Sheriffs of our said Realm have been amerced for the like Offence.

"Wherefore we will, and streightly charge and command, for us and our Heirs, that the said Citizens and their Successors have all the Liberties, Freedoms, Quittals and free Customs aforesaid, and them may or shall use according to our Confirmation, Renovation, and Grants aforesaid, for ever; as by the aforesaid Charter (amongst other Things) more fully appeareth."

All which the King certified by the following Brief to his Officers of his Exchequer:

"Edward, by the Grace of God, &c. To his Treasurers and Barons of the Exchequer, Greeting. Whereas, for the good Service that our beloved Citizens of London have hitherto done us, by our Letters Patents we have rendered and restored to the same our foresaid City,

"together with the Mayoralty, all their Liberties (which City, Mayoralty and Liberties we have long since caused to be taken into our Hands) to be had and held to the same Citizens, according to their Will, as freely and intirely as they had and held them on the Day of the said taking them away, as is contained more fully in our said Letters: We command you, that ye permit the same Citizens to use and enjoy the Liberties which they have reasonably used on the Day of the foresaid taking, before you in the Exchequer before said, according to the Tenor of our foresaid Letters. Witness myself at York, the eight-and-twentieth Day of May, in the six-and-twentieth Year of our Reign."

Brief to the Exchequer for Admission of the Mayor.

The additional Privileges granted in this Charter, are, 1. In the Absence of the King and the Barons of the Exchequer from Westminster, the Mayor Elect is to be presented and admitted by the Constable of the Tower of London. 2. To be quit and free from Pannage, (Boken thinks it should be printed Pavage) i. e. a certain Duty payable to the King for the Liberty of sending Swine, or Cattle, to feed in any of his Forests. 3. Pontage, a Duty paid for passing over Bridges with Horses, Carts, or other Carriages; or under them with Boats, Ships, &c. towards the repairing of the said Bridges. And, 4. To be quit and free from Murage, which was a Duty paid towards building or repairing of the Walls of Cities and Towns throughout the Kingdom.

This Brief was accompanied with a Precipe to the Mayor and Sheriffs of London, commanding them to punish corporally all Bakers, Brewers, and Millers, who were found guilty of bad Practices; and all Malefactors, who went armed in the Night, and disturbed the Peace of the City, in such Manner as should seem best in their Wisdom, to deter others from the like Offences; and to oblige all Millers to return the Flour by Weight, according to the Weight of the Grain received by them to be ground. Tesse Rege, at York, 28 May. From an ancient MS. This is also confirmed among the Charters in Parliament, 7 Rieb. II. Art. 96, 97, 98.

King Edward's Precipe for keeping Peace, &c.

On the Feast of St. Simon and Jude, in the twenty-seventh Year of this Reign, Elias Russell was chosen by the unanimous Consent of the Mayor, Aldermen, and all the Commonalty of London, the Mayor of the said City, and was sworn and received by the Constable of the Tower of London, per Breve of the Lord the King, directed for that Purpose, and according to the Tenor of the Charter of the said City, granted by the Lord the King, on the Day after the said Feast, without the Gate of the said Tower, in the Time of R. de Mandwyc, then Constable of the said Tower.

Lib. C. fol. 36. b. For Mayor sworn at the Tower.

During this Mayoralty, there passed an Act of Common-Council, by Consent of the King and Nobility, to regulate the Prices of Provisions, which were sold in London, the Dealers in Victuals having deviated much from the former Regulations; but no Part thereof has reached our Knowledge, except what relates to Poultry, which is as follows:

The Case of Sir William Wallace.

A.D. 1304, Geoffrey de Hartilepole, Alderman, was this Year elected Recorder of this City, and took his Oath, and was appointed to wear his Apparel as an Alderman.

A.D. 1305, Sir William Wallace, a Scottish Knight, was brought a Prisoner to London, and lodged in the House of William de la, in Fenchurch-street; from whence, on the 23d of August, he was conducted through the City by John Seagrave and Geoffrey, Knights, accompanied by the Mayor, Aldermen, Sheriffs, and a prodigious Concourse of People, both of Horse and Foot, to Westminster; where being arrived in the Hall, he was, by Way of Derision, set upon a Bench, with a Laurel upon his Head, tried as one of the King's Enemies, condemned for High Treason against King Edward, and suffered a cruel and ignominious Death in Smithfield, being there hanged, drawn, and quartered, his Bowels cut out, and his Privities cut off, whilst alive. His Head was fixed upon a Pole on London-Bridge, and his Quarters sent into Scotland, to be placed over the Gates of as many of the principal Cities. And yet, when this Proceeding is coolly considered, it must be granted, that this Objection to the Authority of the Court that tried him, as not being a Subject to Edward, and his Plea of being no other than a Prisoner of War, taken in the Defence of the Liberties of his Country, while he commanded a Party of the Scots against the English Attempts to enslave them, were not fairly considered, and that this valiant and celebrated Champion of his Country had very hard Measure: Which induced an unprejudiced Historian to declare his Sentiments in the following Manner: "To excuse, in some Measure, so extraordinary a Severity, there are Historians who endeavour

NUM. X.

"to defame Wallace, and charge him with having committed excessive Cruelties. But, neither these Accusations, nor the Manner of his Death, have been able to hinder Posterity from doing him the Justice he deserved, and unprejudiced People from looking upon him still as a Hero, worthy of a better Fate."

When the King conferred the Order of Knighthood on the Prince of Wales, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens of London, paid to his Majesty two thousand Pounds towards the same.

Sir John Blount being ordered to accompany the Prince in his Expedition against the Scots, there were appointed four Guardians or Custodes by the Citizens themselves, to execute the supreme Magistracy of this City. And, this same Year, Sea-Coals being very much used in the Suburbs of London by Brewers, Dyers, and others requiring great Fires; the Nobility and Gentry resorting thither complained thereof to the King, as a publick Nuisance; whereby, they said, the Air was infected with a noisome Smell, and a thick Cloud, to the great endangering of the Health of the Inhabitants: Wherefore a Proclamation was issued, strictly forbidding the Use of that Fuel. But little Regard being paid thereunto, the King appointed a Commission of Oyer and Terminer to enquire after those who had contumaciously acted in open Defiance to his Proclamation; strictly commanding all such to be punished by pecuniary Mulcts; and for the second Offence, to have their Kilns and Furnaces destroyed.

In this Year King Edward directed his Writ from Lanercost, in Scotland, to the Mayor and Sheriffs of London, commanding them to observe the Statute of Winchester, which strictly enjoins the apprehending of Felons, whom the City seems at this Time to have been greatly pestered with. However, the Citizens, imagining that this Injunction affected their Liberties, returned the following Answer to the King's Writ:

"We answer further, that at the Eves, as it is fit, in Wards, and also at taking Inquisitions of Transgressions and Felonies, when Need requires, in the City, in each Ward, about Malefactors and Receivers, we were always ready, and will be, for the keeping of the King's Peace. But to keep the Statute of Winchester, in all its Articles, in the said City, as it is contained in that Brief, we cannot be charged in the foresaid City, by Reason of divers Customs in the said City hitherto used; yet Vagrants, Wanderers up and down, and such as are suspected of Evil in the said City, being found, we have arrested, and always, when there shall be Need, will cause to be arrested, and will have them forth-coming before the Justices of the Lord King; as it hath been appointed before, and after hath been accustomed to be done in the same City. Concerning the Inquisitions, as to returning under Seals the Articles contained in the Brief before you, without the City, it never was accustomed to be done; and therefore we have returned none thence."

The last Transaction between this Corporation and the Crown we meet with in this Reign, was an Agreement in the Exchequer by John le Blound, the Mayor, and all the Aldermen of London, for themselves and the whole Community of the City, to pay the King two thousand Marks for the Vintisme, or Twentieth of the Goods of the said Community; the greatest Part whereof they paid in Tallies.

THE Reign of Edward the Second began with an Act, which prognosticated no Favour from the Crown to the Citizens; for, there being left unpaid of the two thousand Marks for the Vintisme, the Sum of 83*l.* 11*s.* a Writ of Fieri facias was issued by the Court of Exchequer, and directed to the Sheriffs of London, commanding them to distrain the Goods and Chattels of the Mayor, Aldermen, and whole Community of the City, for the same. And this was followed by another Writ out of the said Court, returnable in Michaelmas Term, directed to the said Sheriffs, commanding them to summon Nicholas de Farndon, Alderman of Farringdon Ward, and several others of the Aldermen, Collectors of the Tallage lately assessed in London, by Roger de Hagham, &c. to appear in the Exchequer, and pass their Accounts of the said Tallage; and, if any of the said Aldermen were dead, then to summon the Executors of such Persons deceased, in order to finish their Accounts. For, when a Command was issued for tallaging the City of London, the Aldermen were the Collectors thereof in their several Wards, and paid it into the Exchequer; that is to say, when the Tallage was assessed, and answered singillatim, each Alderman, in his Wardmote, caused it to be equally proportioned, (see before, P. 92.) according to the Abilities of the several Inhabitants of his Ward; for the Amount of which, he was answerable to the King. However, when, soon after, Edward returned to London with his young Consort Isabella, Daughter to the King of France, the Citizens received them with the utmost Pomp and Magnificence.

It being represented to the King, that the new Part of the City Wall, on the West of Ludgate, and the Tower commanded by his Father to be built at the Extremity thereof, within the Thames, was not yet finished, his Majesty issued another royal Mandate to the Mayor and Citizens of London, to proceed in the said Work with the utmost Expedition: And, at the same Time, to prevent any Contest or Dispute concerning the Alterations made by their Founder in the changing of the Ways for the new Edifices of the Black Friars, the King granted to the said Founder and his Assigns the following Charter:

Precept to finish the City Wall

"Edward, the Son of King Edward, &c. To all, &c. Whereas Gregory de Rockesley, our Mayor of London, and the other Barons of the said City, at our Instance, have commonly and unanimously granted to the venerable Father Robert, Archbishop of Canterbury, and his Assigns, two Lanes, contiguous to his Place of Castle Baynard and the Tower of Mountfieb, to be stopped up for the enlarging of the fore-said Place, and to enclose them; while yet he shall assign a like Way to them, and as convenient for the Commonalty of the said City. And We, understanding from the foresaid Mayor and Barons of the said City, that the said Archbishop hath already prepared a better Way, and more convenient for the said Commonalty, than the foresaid Lanes were: We, to the said Archbishop and his Assigns, for Us and Our Heirs, as much as in Us is, do grant, ratify, and confirm the foresaid Grant. So that our said Barons of London, by occasion of their foresaid Grant, nor the Archbishop, nor his Assigns, on account of the said changing of the Ways, be accused or molested for time to come before our Justices Itinerants at the Tower of London, upon Cause of Purpresture made of the foresaid Lanes. In Testimony whereof, &c. Witness Myself at Westminster, the tenth Day of June, in the fourth Year of Our Reign."

Friars.

The King being indebted to sundry Persons in London, to the Amount of above seven hundred Pounds, and likewise to several foreign Merchants and others the Sum of one thousand Pounds, for Necessaries for the Royal Household and Wardrobe; the Mayor and Citizens undertook to pay the same; in Consideration whereof, the King assigned to them the Farm and other Issues of the City, arising by Aids, Tallages, &c. to the Amount thereof.

The Nobility, spirited up by the French King, who espoused the Cause of the Queen, his Daughter, complaining against the Familiarity of Edward, her Husband, with Gaveston, his Minion, threatening a Rebellion, or by Force of Arms to oblige the King to submit to their Demands, the King wrote to the Mayor and Citizens of London, to take Care of the City, and not to suffer any Person whatsoever with Horse or Arms to enter the

the same, without his special Permission. And, being informed that little Care was taken in the electing of substantial Citizens into the Office of Sheriff, he commanded, that, when Richard de Welleford, and Simon de Mereworth, Sheriffs of London, appeared at the Exchequer to pass their Accounts, the Mayor and Aldermen should be sent for, to shew by what Right they claimed certain Farms, and other Dues, demanded for the King's Use. And, after Examination of divers Persons who had served the Office of Sheriff, and of the Executors of others since dead, concerning the Matters in Dispute; the Barons declared, that the Citizens of London, for the Time being, were Sheriffs in Fee of London and Middlesex; and enjoined John Gisors, Mayor, John de Wengrave, Roger de Frowyke, William Servant, Nicholas Pycot, Anketine Gisors, Geoffrey de Cundays, Nigel Drury, and Richard de Gloucester, Aldermen, and Robert de Kelsye, Citizen of London, who were present on the Behalf of the Community of the City, to transact certain Affairs relating to the Office of Sheriff, which tended to the King's Service. This Injunction was given by the Barons of the Exchequer to the Mayor and Citizens, as being then virtually Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, and to represent those who were to be Sheriffs for the future.

A Resolution was also taken by the King and his Council, to tax his several Demesnes; under which Appellation the City of London was included; of which John Gisors the Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs of the City, were made acquainted, and at the same Time interrogated by the Privy-Council, sitting at the White Friars in Fleet-street, if they would fine for their Tallage, or, like others, by a Poll-Tax, and a general Assessment on their Estates, both Real and Personal, raise the Sum required. They desired Time to consult the Commonalty upon that Subject; and then returned for Answer, That the King might tax his Demesnes at Pleasure, but as such the City of London could not be taxed, for by their antient Rights and Liberties, confirmed by divers Charters, especially that of Magna Charta, they were free, and consequently not liable to any such Tallage; and that, in lieu of all Services, they paid the King a certain annual Sum for the Fee-Farm of their City; therefore humbly desired, that the intended Tallage might be deferred till the Meeting of the approaching Parliament, when they should have an Opportunity of conferring upon that Affair, with divers of the Nobility, who were Proprietors of fundry Lands and Tenements in the City. To which it was replied, that, if they would lend the King two thousand Marks, the Assessment should be deferred, according to their Request. But, the Citizens not readily agreeing to this Proposal, Commissioners were sent to Guildhall, to assess the said Tallage. However, their Commission being read, and the Friday following appointed for the Citizens to begin the said Assessment; the Mayor, &c. were so intimidated, that they proposed a Loan of one thousand Pounds, on Condition that the King would, by his Letters Patents, take Care that no Tallage singly by Poll, or in common upon their Goods, Chattels, Rents, or Tenements, might be assessed before the next Parliament. To which his Majesty assented, and granted his Letters Patent to the Citizens, as follows:

"Edward, by the Grace of God, &c. To all to whom the present Letters shall come, greeting. Know ye, that whereas our beloved the Mayor and Aldermen, and the rest of the Citizens of our City of London, have lately caused to be lent to us a thousand Pounds Sterling; we, willing to satisfy them, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens, of the same Sum of Money, as we are bound, have granted unto them, that in the next Aid to be granted unto us in our foresaid City, or in the County of Middlesex, or in levying Money in the said City and County for our Need, for whatever Cause next to be levied, we will cause the foresaid thousand Pounds to be allowed them.

"We have granted also to the same Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens, that we will by no Means cause to be assessed any Tallage singly by Poll, or in common upon them, their Goods, Chattels, Lands and Tenements, or Rents in the said City, or Suburbs of the same, before our next Parliament, or to be levied upon them; saving always to the Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens of the said City, the Assignments made before by us to them for Debt, concerning which they undertook to satisfy us; as in our Letters Patent made to them thereupon more fully is contained: In Witness whereof we have caused these our Letters to be made Patents. Witness Myself at Windfor, the thirteenth Day of February, in the sixth Year of our Reign."

And, in Consequence hereof, the King sent the following Letter to the Mayor and Citizens for the Payment of the said Sum of one thousand Pounds:

"Edward, by the Grace of God, &c. To the Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens of the City of London, greeting. Whereas ye lately freely lent us a thousand Pounds Sterling, under certain Conditions, as in our Letters Patents made to you thereupon more fully is specified; We command you, that you deliver in our Name the said Sum of Money to our beloved Clerk Ingelarde de Warlet, Keeper of our Wardrobe, without Delay, receiving from him his Letters Patents, testifying the Receipt of the said Money. Witness Myself at Windfor, the fifteenth Day of February, in the sixth Year of our Reign."

Which Sum of one thousand Pounds was paid to the said Ingelarde, as appears by a Receipt in the Chamber of London.

And, on the thirteenth of the same Month, we find upon the same Record a Brief directed to the Assessors of the County of Oxon, forbidding them to cels the Citizens of London among the Inhabitants of Henley to the Tallage, in this Form:

"The King to his beloved and faithful Servants, William Merre, Adam de Shobenbange, and Galsfride de Padenbam, appointed to cels the Tallage in our Cities, Boroughs, and Demesnes in the County of Oxon, greeting. The Citizens and Merchants of our City of London have shewn

Edw. to his May.

In the above Account 'tis to be observed, that Silver was then at one Shilling and eight Pence per Ounce; so that twelve Ounces went to a Pound Sterling: By which it does appear, that the Sum total expended in that Year amounts, in our Money, to two and twenty thousand and seventy-eight Pounds seventeen Shillings and eight Pence; whereby is shewn, that the Earl must have had a prodigious Estate, especially considering the vast Disparity between the Prices of Provisions then and now. Therefore we may justly conclude, that such an Estate at present would bring in at least two hundred thousand Pounds per Ann.

The King's Letter to the Sheriff for raising of Provisions.

"Edward, by the Grace of God, King of England, Lord of Ireland, Duke of Aquitain, to the Sheriffs of London, Greeting.

"We have heard the Complaint of the Archbishops, Bishops, Earls, Barons, and others of the Commonalty of our Kingdom, by their Petition exhibited before us and our Council; containing, that there is a great, and, as it were, an intolerable Dearth, in these Days, of Oxen, Cows, Sheep, Hogs, Geese, Capons, Hens, Chickens, Pigeons and Eggs, to the no little Loss and Grievance of them, and all others dwelling within the same Kingdom. For which they have besought us instantly, that we would take care to provide upon this concerning some suitable Remedy.

"We therefore, yielding to the foresaid Supplication, for the common Profit of the People of the said Kingdom, as it seemed expedient to us, have ordained, with the Counsel and Assent of the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and others, being of our Council, in our last Parliament held at Westminster, that the undermentioned Species of Provisions be sold as followeth:

The best Grass-fed Ox alive, at	0	16	0
The best Grain-fed Ox, at	—	1	4 0
The best Cow, at	—	—	0 12 0
The best Hog of two Years old, at	0	3	4
The best shorn mutton, at	—	0	1 4
The best Goose, at	—	—	0 0 3
The best Capon, at	—	—	0 0 2½

The best Chickens, two for	—	0	0 1½
The best young Pigeons, three for	0	0	1
Twenty Eggs, at	—	—	0 0 1

"And that, if it happen to be found, that any Persons, or any one Person will not sell these saleable Things for the Price appointed, as is before set forth, then the said saleable Things shall remain forfeited to us: And we will, that the foresaid Ordinance from this Time be firmly and inviolably observed in our said City.

"We command, firmly enjoining you, that in our City foresaid, and Suburb of the same, where ye shall see it to be expedient, that the foresaid Ordinance be publickly and distinctly "proclaimed; and that ye cause the same from Time to Time to be inviolably observed, in all and each its Articles, under the foresaid Forfeiture, throughout the whole Bailiwick; and this omit by no Means, as you will avoid our Indignation, and preserve yourselves without Blame. Witness Myself at Westminster, this fourteenth of March, in the eighth Year of our Reign."

The Time for the Election of Sheriffs and Mayor drawing near, which was frequently disturbed by popular Tumults, to the great Prejudice of the City; Edward, after the Example of his Predecessors on the like Occasions, issued out his Commands, by way of Proclamation, in the following Letter, to prevent the like Confusion:

fol. 331. b.

The Citizens of London having most negligently omitted their Application to the Parliament, as proposed, to prevent their being tallaged at the King's Pleasure; and the King's Affairs reducing him to great Straits for Money, he granted a Commission to Henry de Staunton, Henry Scrop, John de Markfield, and Rafe de Stoke, to tax the City of London; whereof he gave Advice to the Sheriffs by the following Precept:

Lib. Horn.
 Precept for Taxing the City.

" The King to the Sheriffs of London, Greeting.
 " Whereas we have constituted our beloved and " faithful Henry de Staunton, Henry Scrop, &c.
 " three or two of them, to assess our Tallage
 " within the foresaid City, and in the Suburbs
 " thereof, separately by Poll, or in common, as " they shall see to be more expedient for our
 " Profit; as in our Letters Patents to the same
 " Henry, Henry, John and Rafe made, more " fully is contained; we command you, that
 " when ye shall be warned by them, three or two " of them, ye cause to come before them, &c.

 " three or two of them, as they shall enjoin
 " you on our Part. Witness Myself at Spalding,
 " the twenty-fourth of October, the eighth Year
 " of our Reign."

This Letter, it seems, did not contain Instructions sufficient for the said Sheriffs; therefore the following Letter was sent them for their better Regulation:

Ibid.

" Edward, by the Grace of God, &c. To the " Sheriffs of London, Greeting. We command
 " you, that ye cause to come before our beloved

 " same Wards shall be greater or less, to hear,

Tallage
 respited.

However, the Citizens, by applying to the Ministry for a further Delay, and agreeing to lend the Government the Sum of six hundred Marks more, the Tallage was again respited till the ensuing Parliament, as appears by the following Letters Patent:

Ibid.

" Edward, by the Grace of God, King of Eng" land, &c. To all to whom these present Letters " shall come, Greeting. Know ye, that whereas

 " the foresaid Letter on the former Loan. Wit" ness Myself at Langley, the sixteenth of Decem" ber, the eighth Year of our Reign."

Corn being very dear, 'twas judged in a great measure to be occasioned by the great Quantities of Wheat malted in London; for the remedying of which, and preventing the like for the future, 'twas by Parliament enacted, that thenceforth no Wheat should be made into Malt;
 and an Order was published by the Mayor and Citizens for that Purpose; as also another for regulating the Prices of Ale; whereby the Strong was to be sold for three Half-pence, and the Small for a Penny the Gallon. However, Corn continued to advance in Price till it got to forty Shillings the Quarter; but, according to another Author, it rose to four Pounds: Whereby ensued the most dreadful Famine and greatest Misery that ever befel this Nation, if our Author's Relation be true, that Parents eat their own Children, or those of others they could come at; as did the Malefactors one another in Prison. And here followed so terrible a Mortality, that the Living scarce sufficed to bury the Dead.

The Ordinance made in the preceding Year for regulating the Prices of Provisions, being found of very pernicious Consequence, it preventing People from bringing Necessaries to the City, was revoked by the following Brief.

" The King to the Sheriffs of London, Greeting.
 " Although we lately commanded you, that in " each Place in the foresaid City, where it should " seem to you to be the best Expedient, ye shall
 " cause it to be publicly proclaimed, that Oxen,
 " Cows, Hogs, Sheep, Geese, Capons, Hens,
 " Chickens, Pigeons and Eggs, should be sold at " a certain Price; because nevertheless we have " understood, that such a Proclamation, which
 " at that Time we believed would be for the Profit
 " of the People of our Realm, redounds to their " greater Damage than Profit; we command
 " you, that in the said several Places ye cause
 " publicly to be proclaimed, that Oxen, Cows,
 " Hogs, Sheep, Geese, Capons, Hens, Chickens,
 " young Pigeons, and Eggs, be sold for a reason" able Price, as was accustomed to be done before
 " the said former Proclamation; certifying all
 " and singular, that the former Proclamation was " not made by virtue of the Ordinances late made " by the Prelates, Earls, and Barons, and Nobles
 " of the same Realm, and by us accepted, nor
 " was contained in them. Witness Myself at Lin-

the Crown, destroy the same: For which Act of Indiscretion they were now obliged to pay to the King a Fine of one thousand Marks. At the same Time the Freeholders in London were impowered to recover their Rents by a Writ of Gaveler, and in default thereof the Lands in Demesne. The Famine still raging, Wheat continued to sell at two Pounds thirteen Shillings and four Pence the Quarter. But Stow says, that, by reason of an early Harvest, Wheat, that was sold for ten Shillings the Bushel, was then sold for ten Pence: A Change incredible, were it not for the prodigious Number of Mouths swept away by the Famine, whereby the Consumption was vastly lessened.

A.D. 1318 The Favour shewn at this Time by the Court to the Magistrates of the City added so much to their Power, that they assumed the sole Right to appoint Officers, and to continue their Mayor for divers Years successively in that supreme Office; and, notwithstanding the frequent Presentments of the Wards to the Judges Itinerant in the Tower against their Impositions, they ceased not to lay arbitrary Taxes upon their Fellow-Citizens, spared themselves in all Assessments and Rates, and otherwise oppressed the Commonalty, as may be discovered by the Tenor of the Articles of Agreement. But the Freeman, no longer able to bear these arbitrary Proceedings and Impositions, which were entirely inconsistent with, and destructive to their Liberties, carried their Resentment to such a Pitch, that the City must once more have become a Prey to the Crown, had they not agreed among themselves to the following Constitutions drawn up by the Consent of both Parties:

For the Citizens of London, concerning new Articles then made to be observed.

"The King, to all whom, &c. Greeting.
"Know ye, that whereas our beloved and faithful the Mayor and Aldermen, and other Citizens of our City of London, had lately ordained and appointed among themselves, for the bettering of the same City, and for the common Benefit of such as dwell in that City, and resort to the same, certain Things to be in the same City perpetually observed, and had instantly beseeched, that we would take care to accept and confirm the same.
"We having seen certain Letters, Patentwise, signed with the Common Seal of that City, and the Seal of the Office of the Mayoralty of that City upon the Premises, and to us exhibited, have caused certain Articles to be chosen out of the foresaid Letters, and caused them in some Things to be corrected, as they are underneath inserted, viz.

"1. That the Mayor and Sheriffs of the same City be elected by the Citizens of the said City, according to the Tenor of the Charters of our Progenitors, heretofore Kings of England, made to them thence, and no otherwise.
"2. That the Mayor remain only one Year together in his Mayoralty.
"3. That the Sheriffs have but two Clerks and two Serjeants; and that they take such for which they will answer.

"4. That the Mayor have no other Office belonging to the City, but the Office of Mayoralty; nor to draw to himself the Sheriffs' Plea in the Chamber of London, nor hold other Pleas than those the Mayor, according to ancient Custom, ought to hold.

"5. That the Aldermen be removed from Year to Year, on St. Gregory's Day, and not re-elected; and others chosen by the same Wards.

"6. That Tallages or Aids henceforth to be assessed for the King's Business, or for the State and Benefit of the City, after they shall be assessed by the Men of the Wards elected and deputed for this, be not increased or heightened but by the common Consent of the Mayor and Commonalty. And that the Money coming from these Tallages and Aids be delivered into the Custody of four honest Men, Commoners of the City, to be chosen by the Commonalty, to be further delivered by the Testimony of the said four Men; so that they may inform the Commonalty to what Profit, and for what Uses, those Monies go.

"7. That no Stranger be admitted into the Freedom of the City in the Hustling; and that no Inhabitant, and especially English Merchant, of some Mystery or Trade, be admitted into the Freedom of the City, unless by Surety of six honest and sufficient Men of that Mystery or Trade he shall be of, who is so to be admitted into the Freedom; which six Men may undertake for him, of keeping the City indemnified in that Behalf. And that the same Form of Surety be observed of Strangers to be admitted into the Freedom in the Hustling, if they be of any certain Mystery or Trade. And if they are not of some certain Mystery, then that they be not admitted into the Freedom, without the Assent of the Commonalty. And that they who have been taken into the Freedom of the City (since we undertook the Government of our Realm) contrary to the Form prescribed; and they who have gone contrary to their Oath in this Behalf, or contrary to the State of the City, and are thereof lawfully convicted, lose the Freedom of the said City.

"Saving always, that concerning Apprentices the ancient Manner and Form of the said City be observed.

"8. That each Year in the same City, as often as Need shall be, Inquiry be made, if any of the Freedom of the same City exercise Merchandizes in the City, of the Goods of others not of the same Freedom, by calling those Goods their own, contrary to their Oath, and contrary to the Freedom of the said City; and they that are lawfully convicted thereof, to lose the Freedom of the said City.

"9. That all and every one being in the Liberty of the said City, and that would enjoy the Liberties and free Customs of the said City, be in Lot and Scot, and partake of all Burthens for maintaining the State of the said City, and the Freedom thereof, according to the Oath they have taken, when they were admitted into their Freedom; and who so will not, to lose his Freedom.

And that all and every one, being of the Freedom of the City, and living without the City, and that either by themselves, or by their Servants, exercise their Merchandizes within the City, be in Lot and Scot with the Commoners of the said City, for their Merchandizes, or else to be removed from their Freedom.

" 11. And that the Common Seal of the City remain in the Custody of two Aldermen and two others Commoners, to be chosen for this Purpose by the Commoners; and that that Seal be not denied, neither to poor nor rich Commoners, when they shall need it; yet so that they reasonably prove the Cause of their Demand: And that for the putting of the Seal nothing be taken. And that the giving of Judgments in the Courts of the City, and especially after the Verdicts of Inquisition taken, in Cases where Inquisitions have been taken, be not deferred, unless Difficulty intervene. And if Difficulty intervene by reason of this, giving Judgment shall not be put off beyond the third Court.

" 12. That Weights and Scales of Merchandizes to be weighed between Merchants and Merchants, the Issues coming of which belong to the Commonalty of the said City, remain in the Custody of honest and sufficient Men of the same City, expert in that Office, and as yet to be chosen by the Commonalty, to be kept at the Will of the same Commonalty; and that they be by no means committed to others than those so to be chosen.

" 13. That the Sheriffs for the Time being commit Toll, and other Customs belonging to their Farm, and other public Offices belonging to them, and to be exercised by others, to sufficient Men, for whom they will answer, and not commit them to others. And if any deputed by the said Sheriffs to any of the aforesaid Offices, take undue Custom, or carry himself otherwise in that Office than he ought, and is thereupon convicted at the Suit of the Complainant, let him be removed from that Office, and punished according to his Demerits.

" 14. Merchants, who are not of the Freedom of the City, not to sell, by Retail, Wines or other Wares, within the City or Suburbs.

" 15. That there be no Brokers hereafter in the City of any Merchandizes, unless elected to this by Merchants of the Mysteries, in which the Brokers themselves may have to exercise their Offices; and at least of this to make Oath before the Mayor.

" 16. That the common Harbourers in the City and Suburbs, although they are not of the Freedom of the same, be Partakers of the contingent Burdens for maintaining the said City, according to the State of it, as long as they shall be so common Harbourers, as other like Dwellers in the City and Suburbs shall partake, on the Account of those Dwellings. Saving always, that the Merchants of Gascogn, and other Foreigners, may, one with another, inhabit and be harboured in the said City, as hitherto they have accustomed to do.

" 17. That the keeping the Bridge of the said City, and the Rents and Profits belonging to that Bridge, be committed to be kept to two honest and sufficient Men of the City, other than the Aldermen, to be chosen to this by the Commonalty, at the Will of the said Commonalty, and not to others; and who may answer thereupon to the said Commonalty.

" 18. That no Serjeant of the Chamber of Guybald take Fee of the Commonalty of the City, or do Execution, unless one chosen for this by the Commonalty of the City; and that the Chamberlain, Common Clerk, and Common Serjeant be chosen by the Commonalty of the City, and be removed according to the Will of the same City.

" 19. And that the Mayor and Recorder, and the foresaid Chamberlain and Common Clerk, be content with their Fees antiently appointed and paid on Account of their Offices, and take not other Fees for the aforesaid Offices.

" 20. That the Goods of the Aldermen, in Aids, Tallages and other Contributions, concerning the said City, be taxed by the Men of the Wards in which those Aldermen abide, as the Goods of other Citizens, by the said Wards.

" Which Articles, as they are above expressed, and the Matters contained in the same, we accept, approve and ratify; and we yield and grant them, for us and our Heirs, as much as in us is, to the foresaid Citizens, their Heirs and Successors in the foresaid City and Suburbs, for the common Profit of those that inhabit therein, and resort thither, to obtain the same, and to be observed perpetually.

" Moreover, we willing to shew ampler Grace to the Mayor, Aldermen and Citizens, at their Request, have granted to them, for us and our Heirs, that the Mayor, Aldermen, Citizens and Commonalty of the Commoners of the City, and their Heirs and Successors, for the Necessities and Profits of the same City, may, among themselves, of their common Assent, assess Tallages upon their own Goods within that City, as well upon the Rents as other Things, and as well upon the Mysteries as any other Way, as they shall see expedient, and levy them, without incurring the Danger of us or our Heirs, or our Ministers whomsoever. And that the Money coming from such Tallages remain in the Custody of four honest and lawful Men of the said City, to be chosen to this by the Commonalty, and be laid out, of their Custody, for the Necessities and Profits of the said City, and not otherwise. In Witness whereof, &c.

" Witness the King, at York, the eighth Day of June."

The King this same Year sent his Writ from Nottingham, directed only to the Sheriffs of London (and not to the Mayor, Aldermen and Community, as the Return insinuates) commanding them to chuse two of their Fellow-Citizens to represent the City in the Parliament to be held

"To the most Excellent Prince, and their most Dear Lord, the Lord Edward, by the Grace of God, the most Illustrious King of England, Lord of Ireland, and Duke of Aquitaine: John de Wengrave, Mayor of the City of London, the Aldermen, Sheriffs, and the whole Community of the same City, themselves and their Heirs: Your Excellency may know we have assigned our beloved Fellow-Citizens, John de Cberleton, William de Flete and Roger de Palmere, or two of them, and have given to them, or two of them, full and sufficient Power, by these Presents, to do in this your instant Parliament, to be holden at York three Weeks after Michaelmas, what shall be ordained in the foresaid Parliament by common Advice, according to the Form of your Writ, lately to us directed. In Witness whereof we have made these our Letters Patents, to be sealed with the seal of our Community, or Commonalty aforesaid. Dated at London, the sixteenth Day of October, in the twelfth Year of your Reign."

By this Parliament (the Exigency of the Nation requiring it) it was ordained, that every City and Town in England, according to its Ability, should raise and maintain a certain Number of Soldiers against the Scots, who at that Time, by their great Depredations, had laid waste all the North of England, as far as York and Lancaster. The Quota of London to that Expedition being two hundred Men, it was five Times the Number that was sent by any other City or Town in the Kingdom: From whence may be formed some Judgment of the Grandeur and Opulency of London at that Time.

Murders, Robberies,
&c. in the City.

Complaints being made to the Treasurer and Barons of the Exchequer of divers Murders, Robberies, and other Outrages lately committed in the City of London; and in particular by the Pope's Nuncio, that on the preceding Midsummer Day, during Vespers, or Evening Prayers, four or five hundred of the Populace, armed, repaired to St. Paul's Church, and there insulted a certain Lombard, and others in his Company; the Mayor and Aldermen were ordered to attend the Treasurer, Barons and Council upon that Affair. In Obedience to which Order, John de Wengrave, the Mayor, attended by divers of the Aldermen and Sheriffs, appeared before the Treasurer, in Presence of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Exeter, and Humfrey Earl of Hereford; who examined the Mayor touching the Grievances complained of; for which, and other Neglects of Duty on the like Occasion, being severely reprimanded, and strictly enjoined to enquire into that Riot, and to bring to exemplary Punishment the Ringleaders thereof, he was dismissed with Orders so to deport himself in his Office, that the King might not have Occasion to set a Custos over the City, and to get the Inquisitions he should take in the said Affair ready against such a Time, upon Pain of forfeiting the City Liberties. The Mayor, &c. having taken the said Inquisitions, returned and acquainted the Council, that they had thoroughly scrutinized into that Affair, and would take Care for the future, that their Department should be such in respect to the good Government and Peace of the City, that thenceforth there should be no Cause of Complaint.

However, this and the continual Broils between the Freemen and Magistrates, which, by the following Presentment, do not appear to have anywise subsided by the late Articles of Agreement ratified by the King, had in all Probability drawn upon the City the usual Forfeiture of their Charters, and further Punishment by way of Fine and Imprisonment, had not the King's affairs at this Season required a more than ordinary Care to engage the Affections and Aid of the Citizens of London: For the Jury of Aldermanbury made the following Presentation before the Justices Itinerant, and the Lord Treasurer, sitting in the Tower of London; in which the Jury said,

They also complained, that the said Mayor and Aldermen had taken upon them to turn out Common-council Men at their Pleasure; and particularly, that the Mayor and Superiors of the City had deposed Walter Henry from acting in the Common-Council, because he would not permit the Rich to levy Tallages upon the Poor, till they themselves had paid their Arrears of former Tallages. Upon which Sir John Gisors, some time Lord-Mayor, and divers other principal Citizens were summoned to attend the said Justices, and personally to answer to the Accusations laid against them. But being conscious of Guilt, says our Author, they fled from Justice, screening themselves under the Iniquity of the Times; when the King had much Difficulty to maintain his Dignity and Crown against the Encroachments and Treason of his Barons, who at first covered their real Intentions, by impeaching the insolent Behaviour of the two Spencers, the King's Favourites. This occasioned the Meeting of a Parliament at London, to which the Nobility repaired, attended by great Numbers of armed Men, which together composed a very considerable Army, and took up their Quarters in the Suburbs of the City. Such dangerous Neighbours obliged the City to take the utmost Precaution for its own Safety: So that the Mayor appointed a Guard of a thousand Citizens, completely armed, to be posted at the Gates, and in other Places of the City, from Four in the Morning 'till Six in the Evening; who were relieved by the Night-Watch, consisting of the same Number of Men armed as the former; and two Aldermen, who, attended by certain Officers, patrolled the Streets by Night, to keep the Night-Watch strictly to their Duty; and the Gates were ordered to be shut at Nine at Night, and not to be opened 'till Seven in the Morning.

But at last the King, not being in a Condition to oppose the formidable Power of the enraged and haughty Barons, gave them Leave to enter his capital City of London with their whole Army: Nor could he get clear of their Threats, 'till he had ratified an Act of Parliament, for the perpetual Banishment of the Spencers, the Father and Son.

Ricks, &c.

But the Sentence of Banishment was soon after reversed; and they were no sooner restored to Favour, than they petitioned the King against the Barons; setting forth the great Damages they had sustained by them: By which Petition it appears, that the Father's Estates were vastly great: His Real Estate consisted of sixty-three Manors, and his Personal of two Crops of Corn, one in Barns, and the other upon the Ground; in Cash, Jewels, silver and golden Utensils, &c. ten thousand Pounds; Armour for two hundred Men, warlike Engines, and the Destruction of his Houses, thirty thousand Pounds; the Furnitures of his Chapel and Wardrobe, five thousand Pounds; eight-and-twenty thousand Sheep; one thousand Oxen and Heifers; twelve hundred Cows, with their Calves for two Years; forty Mares, with their Foals for two Years; five hundred and sixty Cart-Horses; two thousand Hogs; four hundred Kids; forty Tons of Wine; six hundred Bacons; eighty Carcasses of Beef; six hundred Muttons in Larder; ten Tuns of Cyder, and six-and-thirty Sacks of Wool; with a Library of Books.

The insolent Behaviour of the Lancastrian Faction towards his Majesty shewing itself again soon after, by their rebelliously approving of, and justifying the disloyal Behaviour of the Governor of the Castle of Leeds, in the County of Kent, who insolently and unjustly denied the Queen a Lodging in the said Castle; he, in order to quash the Rebellion, and to revenge the Indignity offered to his Consort, quickly raised a considerable Army, consisting chiefly of Londoners; with whom he marched against the said Castle, and summoned it to surrender: But, the Governor persisting in the Defence thereof, it was besieged in Form, and, after a considerable Time, forced to surrender at Discretion; for which powerful Assistance and gallant Deportment of the Londoners, Edward granted them the following Charter:

"Edward, by the Grace of God, King of England, Lord of Ireland, and Duke of Aquitain; to all to whom these present Letters shall come, greeting.
"Know ye, that whereas the Mayor and the good Men of the City of London have of late thankfully done us Aid of armed Footmen at our Castle of Leeds, in our County of Kent; and also Aid of like armed Men now going

"with us through divers Parts of our Realm for divers Causes: We, willing to provide for the Indemnity of the said Mayor and Men of our City of London in this Behalf, have granted to them, for us and our Heirs, that the said Aids, to us so thankfully done, shall not be prejudicial to the said Mayor and good Men, their Heirs and Successors; nor shall they be drawn into Consequent for Time to come. In Witness whereof we have caused these our Letters to be made Patents. Witness Myself at Aldermansbury, the twelfth Day of December, in the fifteenth Year of our Reign."

It is probable, that this Favour prevailed upon the Citizens to give Edward the Sum of two thousand Marks towards his War in Scotland.

Mad. Hist.

But these Favours of the loyal Citizens were not able to defend them from the rapacious Courtiers: For, the King having defeated the Barons, and beheaded the Earl of Lancaster and the other Chiefs of the Faction, and resolved to protect the Spencers, recalled from Banishment, not only commanded the Mayor to keep all Persons suspected of Disaffection to his Government out of the City; but, availing himself of the City Dissentions, that still subsisted on the Footing of the last Presentment, endeavoured to wrest from them a Sum of Money to redeem their Liberties, which he now caused to be seized into his Hands; but with this Moderation, that the Aldermen and Commonalty might chuse their Mayor at the next Election. This produced the designed Effect; for the Citizens were thereby prevailed upon to advance the King the Sum of two thousand Marks, by way of Aid towards the Scottish War, which Edward pretended to pursue with Vigour.

The Queen, after the Re-establishment of the Spencers in the Favour and about the King's Person, disdaining the Parsimony in which those Favourites obliged her to live, so craftily managed her Affairs, as to obtain Leave for herself and Son to visit her Brother, the King of France, and a Commission to negotiate the Business of her Husband at the French Court: But, her real Intention being to seek foreign Aid to drive the Spencers out of the Kingdom, she so conducted her Negotiations abroad, that in the Year 1326 the King received Advice of the Conclusion of a Treaty between his Consort and the Earl of Flaynault; whereby the said Earl obliged himself to supply her with a certain Number of Troops, for the invading of England. Edward, to prevent the impending Storm by a timely Preparation, amongst others, compelled the Citizens of London (notwithstanding the above-mentioned Charter) to supply him with one hundred Men at Arms, to be maintained at their own Expence, and to march wherever commanded, in open Defiance of his late Charter granted to the Citizens: Which they highly resented, as it soon after discovered itself to Edward's no small Disadvantage: For, upon News of the Queen's Landing, he sent and demanded a Supply of Men and Money of the City; but the Citizens, instead of answering his Demands, after some Deliberation, returned for Answer; "That they would at all Times revere their Sovereign Lord the King, the Queen, and the Prince their Son, the indubitable Heir of the Crown, and shut their Gates against, and to the utmost of their

"Power

"Power resist, all Foreigners and Traitors:" But added, "that they were not willing to march out to fight, unless, according to their ancient Privileges, they could return Home the same Day before Sun-set."

The King, not satisfied with this Answer, gave immediate Orders for storing the Tower of London with all military Provisions; left his Son John of Eltham therein, under the Government of Sir John de Wesson; and committed the Custody of the City to Walter Stapleton, Bishop of Exeter. He then set out from London to raise an Army in the Western Parts of England for the Defence of himself, and his iniquitous and baneful Favourites the Spencers, the Father and Son.

In the mean Time, the Mayor and Citizens received a Letter from the Queen, requiring their speedy and powerful Assistance, to reduce the Oppressors of the Nation: But they returned no Answer to it. However, their Silence did not prevent her from sending another, wherein she exhorted them, in the most pathetic Manner, to exert themselves in the common Cause, for the Relief of their distressed Country. This Letter was stuck upon the Cross in Westcheap, or Cheapside; and many Copies, taken therefrom, were put up in other Places. Upon which, the Bishop aforesaid, by virtue of his Commission, having in the King's Name demanded of the Mayor the Keys of the City, the Populace, suspecting some underhand Dealings between them, assembled in a riotous Manner, and, seizing the Mayor, compelled him to ransom his Life, by swearing faithfully to obey their Orders; and, entering into a more strict and solemn Confederacy, resolved upon the Destruction of the Queen's Enemies of all Degrees, wherever they could find them: And in Consequence of their Engagements, they first apprehended John Marshall, a Domestick of Spencer the younger, and without further Ceremony cut off his Head. Then in an enraged and furious Manner they ran to the Bishop of Exeter's, and, by firing the Gates, entered his Palace; but, not finding him, carried off his Jewels, Plate and Household-Goods. The unfortunate Prelate in the mean Time returning from the Fields, with an Intent to take Sanctuary in St. Paul's Church, was seized near the North Door there, and dismounted by the Rabble, who beat and bruised him in a very cruel and inhuman Manner; and dragging him into Cheapside, they first proclaimed him a Traitor, and then barbarously cut off his Head, and the Heads of two of his Domesticks; and, drawing their Bodies from the Place of Execution, buried them in the Rubbish of a Tower, which the Bishop was erecting near the River Thames. They were the more revengeful towards this Bishop, because, being High Treasurer, he had persuaded the Council that the Itinerant Judges might sit in the City; by whose Inquisition, the Citizens had been found guilty of divers Malversations; for which their Liberties were seized, and many of the principal fined in pecuniary Mulcts, whilst many others suffered in Durefs.

The Day after the Bishop's Execution, the Mob accidentally met with Sir John de Wesson, Constable of the Tower of London, from whom they took the Keys by Force, and, having possessed themselves of that Fortrefs, not only discharged the Prisoners, but likewise all the King's Officers; and appointed others under John of Eltham, the King's second Son, whom they constituted Guardian of the City and Kingdom; yet did they not cease to commit divers Ravages and Insolencies.

Soon after, Robert Baldock, the Chancellor, to whom most of the Miseries of the Kingdom were owing, was brought Prisoner from Hertford to London, where he met with severe Treatment from the Populace; who imagining him not secure in the Bishops Prison, to which he was committed, dragged him thence, and, in carrying him to Newgate, beat him so unmercifully, that he soon after died in that Prison, in the greatest Misery and Torment, occasioned by his Bruises.

The King not being able to resist the Power of those that joined with the Queen and his Son, and at last reduced to hide himself in Wales, where the Earl of Lancaster found him out, and had him seized; the Queen, with Prince Edward her Son, attended by many of the Nobility and Prelates, came to London, and were received by the Citizens with great Joy and many rich Presents; and, a Parliament being summoned upon the Occasion, the captive King was obliged to resign his Crown to his Son Edward.

of Joy at his Return from an unsuccessful Expedition against the Scots, than his Majesty expressed his Thankfulness to the Citizens for their Attachment and Affections, by granting the following Charter, with the Consent of Parliament :

King Edward III's
first Charter,
by Consent of Parliament.

Rot. Parl.

"Edward, by the Grace of God, King of "England, Lord of Ireland, and Duke of Aqu-
"tania, to his Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots,
"Priors, Earls, Barons, Justices, Sheriffs, Rulers,
"Ministers, and other his Bailiffs and faithful
"Subjects, greeting.

"Know ye, that we for the bettering of our "City of London, and for the good and laudable
"Service which our beloved Mayor, Aldermen
"and Commonalty of the said City heretofore
"have often done to us and our Progenitors,
"with the Assent of the aforesaid Earls, Barons,
"and all the Commonalty of our Realm, being "called to this our present Parliament at West"minster, have granted, and by this our Charter,
"for us and our Heirs, confirmed to the Citizens
"of the aforesaid City, the Liberties here under"written, to have and to hold to them and their
"Heirs and Successors for ever.

Liberties granted by former Charters
confirmed.

"First, Whereas in the Great Charter of the "Liberties of England it is contained, that the "City of London have all their ancient Liberties
"and Customs; and the same Citizens, at the "Time of the making of the Charter, from the "Time of St. Edward the King and Confessor,
"and William the Conqueror, and of other our "Progenitors, had divers Liberties and Customs,
"as well by the Charters of those our Progeni-
"tors, as without Charter by ancient Custom,
"whereupon in divers the Circuits, and other
"the Courts of our said Progenitors, as well by "Judgments as by Statutes, were invaded, and
"some of them adjudged; we will and grant, for "us and our Heirs, that they may have the Li"berties according to the Form of the above-said
"Great Charter; and that Impediments and "Usurpations to them in that Behalf made shall
"be revoked and annulled.

Mayor made use of the Justice of Gaol-Delivery.

"We have further granted, for us and our "Heirs, to the said Citizens, their Heirs and "Successors aforesaid, that the Mayor of the "aforesaid City, which for Time shall be one "of the Justices to be assigned of the Gaol-De"livery of Newgate, and be named in every "Commission thereof to be made; and that the "said Citizens may have Infangtheft and Out-
"fangtheft, and Chattels of Felons, of all those "which shall be adjudged before them within the "Liberties of the same City, and of all being of "the Liberty aforesaid, at the aforesaid Gaol to
"be adjudged.

To hold the Sheriffwicks of London and Middlesex, at 300l. per Annum.

"And whereas also, by the Charters of our "Progenitors, it was granted to the same Cit"izens, that they should hold the Sheriffwicks of "London and Middlesex, for three hundred Pounds
"yearly, to be paid at our Exchequer, and they "are charged with the Payment of four hun"dred Pounds yearly, every Year to be paid at
"our Exchequer, for the Sheriffwicks, contrary "to the Form of the said Charters;

"We will and grant, for us and our Heirs, that
"the said Citizens, their Heirs and Successors
"may henceforth the aforesaid Sheriffwicks hold
"for three hundred Pounds yearly, to be yearly

"paid at our Exchequer, according to the Tenor
"of the aforesaid Charters; and that they may "be from henceforth acquitted of the said hun"dred Pounds.

"Furthermore, we have granted, for us and our "Heirs, to the said Citizens, that their Heirs and "Successors may bequeath their Tenements with-
"in the Liberties of the aforesaid City, as well
"in Mortmain as in other Manner, as of ancient
"Time they have been accustomed to do.

To bequeath in Mortmain.

"And whereas in a certain Charter of the Lord
"Edward, late King of England, our Father, to "the said Citizens made (amongst other Things)
"it is contained, that the Sheriffs of the said City,
"as often as they shall happen to be amerced for "any Offence in the Court, shall be amerced ac"cording to the Measure and Quantity of their "Offence, as other the Sheriffs of our Realm
"were wont to be amerced for like Offences;
"and the Sheriffs of the aforesaid City, after the "making of that Charter, were otherwise amer-
"ced for the Escape of Thieves, than other Sher"iffs were on this Side Trent for such-like Es"capes, are amerced only, as it is said, one hun"dred Shillings :

Sheriffs to be amerced as other Sheriffs on this Side Trent.

"We will and grant, for us and our Heirs, that
"the Sheriffs of the same City, which for the "Time shall be in no wise amerced or charged
"for the Escape of Thieves, in any otherwise
"than as other the Sheriffs on this Side Trent;
"and that the aforesaid Citizens shall not be "charged for the Custody of those that fly to the "Churches within the aforesaid Liberty, for to "have Immunities, otherwise than of old hath "been accustomed to be charged; any thing in "the last Circuit at the Tower of London made
"or adjudged notwithstanding.

Not to be charged for those that fly to the Churches.

"And that the said Citizens may remove and
"take away all the Weirs in the Waters of Thames
"and Medway, and may have the Punishments
"thereof to us belonging.

May take away all Weirs in Thames
and Medway.

"Also we will and command straightly, that all "Merchant Strangers, coming to England, shall "sell their Wares and Merchandizes within forty "Days after their coming thither; and shall con"tinue and board with free Hosts of the said Ci"ty, and other Cities and Towns in England,
"without any Households or Societies by them
"to be kept.

Merchant Strangers to sell their Wares within forty Days.

"And also we will and grant, for us and our "Heirs, that the Marshal, Steward or Clerk of "the Market of our Household, may not sit from "henceforth within the Liberty of the aforesaid
"City, nor exercise any Office there, nor any "way draw any Citizen of the said City to plead
"without the Liberties of the said City, or any "Thing that happen within the Liberties of the "same, and that no Escheator, or other Officers,
"may, from henceforth, exercise the Office of "the Escheator within the Liberties of the said
"City: But that the Mayor of the said City for "the Time being may do the Office of the Es-
"cheator within the said Liberty; so as always
"he take his Oath that he exercise the said Office,
"and that he answer thereof to Us and our Heirs,
"as he ought to do. And that the said Citizens,

Also, at the same Time and Place, the said King graciously granted to the Citizens the following Charter:

second Charter.

"Edward, by the Grace of God, King of "England, Lord of Ireland, Duke of Aquitaine;
"To all to whom these present Letters shall "come, Greeting.

"Know ye, that whereas our well-beloved the "Citizens of the City of London, by their Peti"tion exhibited before us and our Council, in
"our present Parliament at Westminster assembled,
"have given us to understand, that Felons,
"Thieves, and other Malefactors and Disturbers
"of the Peace, who, in the said City and else"where, have committed Manslaughters, Rob"beries, and divers other Felonies, privily de"parting from the said City, after those Felonies
"committed, into the Village of Southwark,
"where they cannot be attached by the Mini"sters of the said City, and there are openly re"ceived, and so, for Default of due Punishment,
"are more bold to commit such Felonies; and
"they have beseeched us, that, for the Confirma"tion of our Peace within the said City, bridling
"the Naughtiness of the said Malefactors, we "would grant unto them the said Village, to have "to them, their Heirs and Successors for ever,
"for the Farm and Rent therefore yearly due to "us, to be yearly paid at our Exchequer: We "having Consideration to the Premises, with the "Assent of the Prelates, Earls, Barons and Com-
"monalty, being in our present Parliament afore"said, have granted for us and our Heirs, to the "said Citizens, the said Village of Southwark,
"with the Appurtenances, to have and to hold to "them and their Heirs and Successors, Citizens,
"of the said City, of us and our Heirs, for ever,
"to pay to us by the Year, at the Exchequer of "us and our Heirs, at the accustomed Times, the "Farms therefore due and accustomed.

"In Witness whereof we have caused these our "Letters to be made Patents. Witness Myself at Contents of this 1000

Charters.

The first of these Charters may justly be termed the Golden one; for in it is contained not only a Confirmation of all the ancient and valuable Liberties and Immunities of the Citizens, but likewise the following additional and advantageous Privileges: 1. That the Mayor shall, at all Times thereafter, be one of the Judges of Oyer and Terminer, for the Trial of Criminals confined in Newgate. 2. The Citizens to have the Right of Infangthefe and Outfangthefe; the former being a Privilege of trying a Thief or Robber, taken within the Jurisdiction of the City; and the latter a Right of reclaiming a Citizen apprehended elsewhere for Felony, in order to try him within the City. 3. A Right to the Goods and Chattles of all Felons convict within the Jurisdiction of the City. 4. A Remission of one hundred Pounds per Annu. heretofore unjustly extorted from the Citizens, for the Fee-Farm of their City and County of Middlesex, contrary to their Charters. 5. A Privilege of devising in Mortmain, which is an Alienation of Lands and Tenements to any Guild, Corporation or Fraternity, and their Successors, without the King's Leave, according to ancient Custom.

6. The Sheriffs of London and Middlesex to be amerced no otherwise than their Brethren South of the River Trent. 7. All foreign Merchants to dispose of their Merchandizes within forty Days, thereby to prevent enhancing the Prices of their several Commodities. 8. The Citizens not chargeable with the Custody of those that take Sanctuary in Churches. 9. The King's Marshal, Steward, nor Clerk of the Household, to exercise any Authority in the City. 10. The Office of Escheator conferred upon, and given in Perpetuity to the Mayor. 11. For the greater Convenience of the Citizens resorting to Country Fairs, they have granted to them the valuable Privilege of holding a Court of Pye-Powder in such Places, for the Determination of all Contests that happen in each of the said Fairs. 12. That the Citizens shall be free from all Tallages, other than being assessed in common with their Fellow-Subjects, towards general Subsidies, Grants and Contributions. 13.
A great and just Privilege, that the City Liberties shall not hereafter be seized for a personal Offence, or iniquitous Judgment of any of its Magistrates.
14. That none of the King's Purveyors, &c. presume to rate any Sort of Goods belonging to the Citizens, nor to deal in any Sort of Merchandize within the City. 15. And that no Market be kept within seven Miles of the City of London,
And, by the second Charter, Southwark is granted for the Good and Benefit of the Citizens.

Yet in this same Year there passed an iniquitous Grant from the Crown to one Simon, a Merchant of London, to exempt him not only from serving the Offices of Mayor, Alderman, Sheriff and Coroner of London, but likewise from the Charge of all Taxes and Duties whatsoever, in all Parts of this Kingdom.

Licence of Exemption granted to private Persons.

The Princess Philippa of Hainault, Royal Bride to Edward, being arrived at London, she was received in a very pompous Manner, and magnificently entertained by the Mayor and Citizens.
And about the same Time a dangerous Insurrection happened in London, of the Brewers, Vintners, Bakers, Millers, Cooks, Poulterers, Fishmongers,
Butchers, Cornchandlers, and divers other Trades,
(but upon what Occasion my Author does not mention) who, being joined by a villainous Crew, justly denominated Malefactors, or Evil-doers, (whose chief Pleasure was in doing of Mischief)
they rambled about the Streets, armed with Swords and Bucklers, committing many great and violent Outrages, by beating and abusing many, and killing some; for the remedying of which, and preventing such wicked Practices for the future, the King, by his Writ to the Mayor and Sheriffs of London, commanded them to apprehend all Rioters, and to prosecute them with the utmost Severity: But, that not proving effectual to quell those incorrigible Villains, the King sent the following Letter to the Mayor and Sheriffs:

Procl. H.8.
A.D. 1328

Riots.

"The King to the Mayor and Sheriffs of "London, greeting. Whereas it is given us to "understand, that very many Evil-doers, and
"Disturbers of our Peace, have made divers

"ticles within the foresaid City, and Suburbs of "the same, since we have taken the Government
 "of our Realm, and do wander about, and run
 "here and there, beating, wounding and mis-
 "using the People, and wickedly killing some "of them, and spoiling others of their Goods and "Possessions; and taking and imprisoning others,
 "as well of the City and Suburbs, as those that "come to the said City and Suburbs about their "Business, and detaining them in Prison until
 "they have made them give Fines and Redemp-
 "tions; and committing other Misdemeanors,
 "and not desisting daily to commit them, to the "Breach of our Peace, and the Terror of our "People in those Parts, and manifestly tending "to Commotion: We, willing to have such "Malefactors punished, and the Tranquillity of "our people to be inviolably kept, as we are "bound to do by our Oath, command you, that,
 "by the Oath of honest Men in your Bailiffwick,
 "ye diligently enquire of the Names of the fore-
 "said Malefactors, and of them that knowingly "receive and maintain them, and find out the "Truth concerning other Articles more fully "touching the Premises. And all those whom
 "thereupon it shall happen to be judged, and
 "also those whom ye shall find doing such "Things as are premised, ye cause, without De"lay, to be taken, and to be safely kept in our "Prison, until ye shall have some further Com"mand from us hereupon; and that ye so behave
 "yourselves in this Behalf, that the Damages
 "and Lewdnesses aforesaid may not happen there "any more: Whereby we might take heavily of
 "you, as of them to whom we have committed
 "the Custody of the said City under the Danger
 "that is incumbent. In Witness whereof, &c."

In Obedience to the above Precept, the Mayor and Sheriffs apprehended a considerable Number of the Seditious: And the King, in Conformity to the late Charter granted by him to the City, directed his Letters to the Judges, Mayor, Sherriffs and Aldermen, (for thereby the Mayor, in all Places of Judgment within the Liberties, was to sit as chief Judge, and the Aldermen past the Chair to be Justices of the Peace within London and Middlesex) for their speedy Prosecution, as follows:

"To Oliver de Ingham, John Matravers, John
 "de Stoner, Robert de Mabbertorpe and John de
 "Grantbarn; To the Mayor, &c. Forasmuch
 "as our City of London is our Chamber; and,
 "on that Account, the Men of the said City of "London are more firmly obliged to the Defence
 "of our Person, and Conservation of our Rights;
 "we more heavily bearing the Premises, and "willing that they be punished, as it is fit, have "commanded you our said Mayor and Sheriffs
 "of London, that ye shall enquire diligently of "the Premises, and should take those whom ye
 "should find culpable by the same Inquisition,
 "and keep them safe, until ye should have some "further Command thereupon from us. And
 "because the Premises do specially touch us and "the State of our Crown, willing to determine
 "the said Inquisitions, and all other Things
 "touching the Premises, according to the Exi"gence of Law, we have assigned you our
 "Justices to hear and determine the Inquisitions

"and Indictments made by the same Inquisitions,
 "&c."

We need only compare the Morals and Behaviour of this present Age with the riotous and wicked Lives and Practices of those in ancient Times, to be convinced, that not only the present Government, but the Morals and Behaviour of the Citizens now far excel those of the Times we are writing of: For, notwithstanding the Severity of their Punishments, and the Vigilance of the supreme Power, and the Interposition of Royalty itself, in order to clear the City of such Malefactors or Evil-doers, we shall find that the Peace of the City continued to be interrupted by such Ruffians, as above-mentioned;
 and that in a more daring and cruel Manner, than any Examples amongst us of late Years can be produced.

Divers Ambassadors from France being in London, the King, to shew them the Gallantry of his Subjects, entertained them with a solemn Tournament of thirteen Knights on a Side, which was performed in Cheapside, between the Cross at the End of Wood-street, and that of Seper-lane or Queen-street; on which Occasion the Street was covered with Sand, to prevent the Horses slipping; and across the Street, near the Cross, was erected a stately Scaffold, resembling a Tower, whereon the Queen and chief Ladies of the Court sat to behold the Performance. During this Shew, the Scaffold broke down, which might have proved fatal to the Queen, and the Ladies with her Majesty; but by good Providence they were only put into a terrible Fright. However, the King was with great Difficulty, and only by the immediate and earnest Intercession of his Royal Consort, prevailed upon from punishing the Builder in an exemplary Manner; which Condescension greatly engaged the Love and Affection of the Spectators.

Adulterating of Wine appears not to be of a modern Invention, no more than the Practice of it is peculiar to this Time; for, in the Second of Edward the Third, it appears, that the Custom of Brewing prevailed in a very dangerous Degree,
 as appears by the following Letter:

"The King to the Mayor and Sheriffs of
 "London, Greeting.

"Whereas it is given us to understand, that
 "Vintners (Wine-Merchants) of the same City,
 "and their Taberners (Tavern-keepers) selling
 "Wine at Retail in the same City and Suburbs,
 "do mingle and corrupt Wines with other Wines;
 "and are not afraid to sell the Wines so mixed
 "and corrupted at the same Price as they sell
 "the good and pure, not permitting Men,
 "drinking in their Taverns, or otherwise buy"ing Wine of them, to look whether the Wines
 "are drawn out of the Hogsheads into the Mea"sures, or taken elsewhere, to the Scandal of "you and the Commonalty of the City afore"said, and to the corrupting of the bodily Health
 "of those that buy Wine by Retail in the same "City, and drink in the Taverns, and the Dan"ger of their Lives; whereat we are not with"out just Cause, offended: We, willing to pre"vent these Dangers, command you, that in "the said City and Suburbs, in Places where ye
 "shall see it expedient, ye do, on our Behalf,
 "cause it to be publickly proclaimed and pro"hibited,

Rints continued.

In the sixth Year of the Reign of Edward,
the above-mentioned wicked Practices of assaulting, wounding, robbing and killing People in the Streets of the City, still continuing, a Proclamation was published by special Command of the King, strictly enjoining, that no Person whatsoever presume to wear any Coat of Plate, or other Weapon, in the City of London, or Town of Westminster, or the Suburbs thereof, on Pain of forfeiting all his Possessions.

*Hollinf.
Chron.

King's Order concerning Provisions.

Corn received so much Damage by the great Rains which fell in the Spring, that an excessive Dearth ensued, wherein Wheat was sold at forty Shillings the Quarter; and Provisions of all Sorts became so very scarce in London, that it occasioned the King severely to reprimand the Mayor and Sheriffs for not having a greater Regard to the Welfare of the City, by making a proper Provision against a Time of Scarcity. He likewise upbraided them for the little Regard they had to their Oaths, by suffering Bread, Wine, Beer, and other Kinds of Victuals, to be sold in the City at such excessive Rates; and also censured them for not inspecting and reforming the Abuses committed by bad Weights and Measures, according to their several Oaths; by which Neglect of Duty, most of all of them hitherto were perjured, to the great Reproach and Scandal of the City, and Detestation of all who have the least Regard to Truth and Justice. Wherefore he strictly commanded the Mayor, upon the Penalty of his All, forthwith to convene the Aldermen and Commonalty of the City, to deliberate upon, and regulate the Prices of all Sorts of Provisions, according to the prime Cost, thereby to prevent the Citizens from being imposed upon for the future. He likewise strictly enjoined the Mayor and Sheriffs to reform
all Abuses in respect to Measures and Weights;
and at the same Time gave the following Charge to the Mayor:

*King's Order concerning
Regrators.*

"That your Oath as Mayor remain inviolable,
"do you chastize and punish all from Time to
"Time who act against Right, and reform all
"other Things which you shall know to be re-
"pugnant to the good Government of the said
"City and Suburbs; that, by your Diligence ex"hibited in this Behalf, the City may be reduced "to its due State, and excessive Regrators wholly
"taken away: And that you publicly proclaim
"all and singular the Premises in the aforesaid
"City and Suburbs, in the accustomed Places.
"But, if they should not appoint a speedy Re"medy for all these Excesses, that then the "grieved should complain thereof to him and his

"Council; and he, in that Defect, would cause
"a Remedy to be applied to these Excesses with"out Delay."

This Command of the King, and the great Scarcity of Money occasioned by the Sums levied throughout the Kingdom for the Scottish War, presently reduced the Price of Provisions of all Kinds, as will appear by the following Prices soon after settled in London:

*Fab.
Chron.
p. 72*

The best Wheat, the Quarter, at	—	2	0 Price of
The best Ox, at	—	6	8 Provisions.
The best Sheep, at	—	0	8 Ran. Hig.
The best Pigeons, six for	—	0	1 Polych.
The best Goose, at	—	0	2 Hen. Key.
The best Pig, at	—	0	1 Chron.
			Fab.
			Chron.

Whence 'tis observable, that the Cheapness of Victuals at this Time was not so much owing to their Plenty, as to the Scarcity of Money.

All the just and laudable Measures taken by the King and the Magistrates of London, to suppress the villainous Proceedings of incorrigible Rogues in this City, still proving ineffectual, it occasioned the King to write from Scotland, to the Mayor and Sheriffs, "Concerning many Male-
"factors in the City, and Disturbers of the Peace,
"as well of the City as elsewhere, that made
"mutual Confederacies, Assemblies and unlaw"ful Conventicles, as well by Day as by Night,
"going armed, and carrying Arms, and leading
"an armed Power, and procuring them to be "led, wandered and ran about, beating and "wounding Men, and depriving some of their "Limbs, and spoiling others of their Goods and "Properties; and taking others, and detaining
"them in Prison privily, until they should make "certain Fines and Redemptions, according to "their Wills; and wresting from some, by "Threats and Fear of Death, and other such-"like Hardships, great Sums of Money. The "King therefore commanded the Mayor, &c.
"to remedy these Transgressions; and, if it were "more than he could do, to certify his Council
"under the Common Seal of the City. Witness

The Citizens of London being greatly alarmed at a Privilege granted to Foreigners; the King, to satisfy them that their Liberties and Immunities should not be thereby affected, granted them
the following Charter:

"the Realm, whether within Liberties or without, might, without Impediment, freely sell the same Victuals or Wares, to whom they would, as well to Foreigners, as English-born; the Enemies to us and our Realm only excepted, notwithstanding of the Charters of Liberties to any Cities or Places aforesaid, granted to the contrary, or Custom or Judgment upon the said Charters, as in the foresaid Statute is more plainly contain'd; yet nevertheless, because in the Statutes, as well in our said Parliament, as in other Parliaments of our Progenitors, sometimes Kings of England, made by us and our Progenitors, with the common Consent of the Prelates, Earls, Barons and Commonalty of our Realm, it was granted and established, that the Great Charter of the Liberty of England, in all and singular its Articles, should be maintained and firmly observed.

"And in the same Charter, amongst other Things, it is contained, the City of London may have its antient Liberties and free Customs unhurt; and it hath been the Intent and Meaning, as well of us as our Progenitors, and yet is, that the said Great Charter, in all the Articles thereof, may be still observed; and that by Pretext of the said Statute, or any other, nothing shall be done to the Prejudice or Infringement of the said Charter, or of any Article therein contained, or of the antient Liberties or Customs of the said City may be unjustly burthened; touching their said Liberties and free Customs, contrary to such Intent, with the Consent of the Prelates, Earls, and Barons, assistant with us in this our Parliament.

"Have granted, for us and our Heirs, that the Citizens of the said City, their Heirs and Successors, may have all their Liberties and free Customs unhurt and whole, as before these Times they more fully had the same; the foresaid Statute for the said Merchants, made to the Hurt of the Liberties and Customs of the said City, notwithstanding.

"In Witness whereof we have caused these our Letters to be made Patents. Witness Myself at Westminster, the twenty-sixth Day of March, in the eleventh Year of our Reign."

At this Time a very extraordinary Affair happened in the City, as will appear by the following Petition:

The Petition of Richard de Bettoyne, of London, to the Parliament, as rendered from the French into English.

"To our Lord the King, and his Council, Richard de Bettoyne, of London, sheweth,

"That whereas at the Coronation of our Lord the King, that now is, he, [Richard de Bettoyne] being then Mayor of London, performed the Office of Butler, with three hundred and sixty Valets, clothed in one Livery, each carrying a white Silver Cup in his Hand, as other Mayors of London, Time out of Mind, used to do at the Coronation of the Kings your Progenitors; and the Fee appendant to that Service, that is to say, a

"Gold Cup with a Cover, and with an Ewer of Gold enamelled, was delivered to him by Assent of Council, by the Hands of Sir Robert Woodhouse: And now there comes an Eltreut out of the Exchequer to the Sheriffs of London, for levying of eighty-nine Pounds twelve Shillings and six Pence for the said Fee upon the Goods and Chattels of the said Richard; wherein he prays that Remedy may be ordained him.

"And the Mayor and Citizens of Oxford are bound by Charter to come to London at the Coronation, to assist the Mayor of London in serving at the Feast, and so have always used to do. Or, if it please our Lord the King and his Council, we will willingly pay the Fee, so that we may be discharged from that Service."

As by this Petition it appears, that the State antiently used at Coronations by the Chief Magistrate of this City was very great; so does the Royal Return at this Time shew itself to have been as mean and pitiful, by endeavouring to recover the said Fee.

A. D. 1339, the Parliament granted the King a great Subsidy for the Support of his War, and Conquest of France; but, present Money being wanted, the City of London, at the King's Desire, advanced him twenty thousand Marks, upon the Credit of that Part of the Aid to be raised upon the Citizens. This being the first general Assessment upon the City that I can find published, it cannot be unacceptable to the Reader, to shew him the Proportions the several Wards were charged with; by which he'll perceive which of the said Wards were then esteemed the most opulent: And, by comparing a modern Assessment with the underwritten, he will thereby also find the Increase and Decrease of the several Wards in point of Riches.

The Assessment.

My Author, in adding up the several Sums above-mentioned, has over-reckoned one thousand Pounds, whereby he has given a Balance of fifty-one Pounds six Shillings and eight Pence to the King; whereas, by the Sum Total of the above, there appears to have been due to the City fourteen hundred and twenty-one Marks six Shillings and eight Pence, to make up the Sum of twenty thousand Marks.

And it may be a Matter of Enquiry, how the City was by this Assessment found divided into twenty-five Wards, when we are certain there were no more than twenty-four in the Year 1285; and that the Division of Faringdon-Ward, into Faringdon within, and Faringdon without the Walls, was not made till the seventeenth of Rich. Commission for preserving the Peace of the City.

The King, having taken a Resolution of going beyond Sea, granted a Commission to the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of London (dated in the preceding Year) for the Conservation of the Peace in the City, 'till his Return; commanding them at their Peril to exert themselves to the utmost of their Power, for the Good and Quiet of the City, during his Absence; and that, if they should apprehend any Malefactors and Disturbers of the said City, they should cause due and speedy Punishment to be done upon them.

Riot.

Soon after the King's Departure, a great Contest happened between the Companies of Fishmongers and *Skinner*s, inasmuch that, both assembling in the Streets, a hot Skirmish ensued; for the suppressing of which, the Mayor, Sheriffs, &c. with their Attendants, hastened to the Place of Riot, and apprehended divers of the Malefactors and Disturbers of the Peace, as required by their Office and Duty. But Thomas Haunsart and *John le Brewe*r, two bold and desperate Fellows, and some others their Accomplices in this Riot, resisted the Power of the Magistrates, and not only rescued the Malefactors attached by the Mayor and Sheriffs, but Thomas, with a drawn Sword, laid violent Hands on Andrew Aubrey, the Mayor, and endeavoured to overthrow him; and in the mean time the said John grievously wounded one of the Servants of the said City, then obeying the said Mayor and Sheriffs, in Contempt of the King, and Danger of the Commotion of the said City: For which they were immediately apprehended, and, in Obedience to the Royal Command, carried directly to Guildhall, where they were indicted and tried before the Mayor, &c. and having severally pleaded guilty, they were condemned to die, and forthwith carried into West Chepe or Cheapside, and there beheaded.

This Severity of the Mayor was so well timed for the Preservation of the Peace within the City, and for deterring those frequent Outrages and Riots, and so agreeable to the Intention of the King, that we find the following Patent, signed by the King himself on the fourth of June, at the Tower, in Justification and Commendation thereof:

"We considering, if so great Rashness of the forefaid Thomas and John had been passed over unpunished, it had yielded Boldness to others of doing the like Things; and so thinking the said Punishment very seasonable for the "Conservation of our Peace, and to be well done; and willing, by the Consideration afore-

"said, that the said Mayor, Sheriffs, Aldermen
"and Commonalty be secure; and to provide
"that they may not be troubled, by reason
"hereof, in future Times; what hath been done

"on occasion of these Deaths. Teste Rege, apud
"Turrim Lond. 4 Jun."

Some Time after, the King commanded his Itinerant Judges to make Inquisition in every County of the Kingdom concerning the Conduct of the Collectors of his Duties. But the Citizens of London, imagining this Precept to be contrary to their Liberties, would not suffer any of those Justices to sit in the City. Wherefore the King commanded them to repair to the Tower of London, to make Inquisition into the Management of those who had been his Collectors in the City. But the Citizens, who were summoned, refused to obey, as being directly contrary to their Rights and Privileges: And the Populace became so tumultuous, that the Judges thought fit to declare, that they would not hold a Session in respect to that Inquisition till after Easter. Which so irritated the King, that he commanded a strict Scrutiny to be made after the Authors of that Sedition: But, being informed that they, who were all of the baser Sort, had no other View in their late tumultuous Behaviour, but to preserve their Liberties from being incroached upon by the said Judges, the King remitted his Resentment; and the Itinerant Judges in the Tower broke up their Sitzings, without resolving upon any thing.

A.D. 1344

The King being in Want of Money for the Prosecution of his War in France, among other Ways and Means of raising it, he judged it would be the readiest Way to oblige every Citizen of London, possessed of forty Pounds per Ann. to take upon him the Order of Knighthood.

This Command of the King's was grounded upon a Statute made in the first Year of Edward II.
whereby it was ordered, that all Persons who were qualified for the Equestrian Order (that is, he that was possessed of twenty Pounds per Ann. in Fee, or for Term of Life) should take upon him the Title of Knight. But it seems, that Edward, willing to favour the Citizens, only insisted, that such of them as enjoyed forty Pounds per Ann. should become of that Order; and for this Purpose sent the following Writ to the Sheriffs of London:

Writ to call the rich Citizens
to the Order of Knight-hood.

"We command, firmly enjoining you, that
"in the City aforesaid, when you shall think
"convenient, ye cause it publicly to be pro"claimed, that all who have forty Pounds of "Land or Rent, as they have Revenue by the "Year, and have held them for three whole
"Years, and are not Knights, take upon them
"the Order of Knighthood, about the Feast of "St. Laurence next, (August 10) or at most on "the Feast, upon Danger which followeth: And "that ye diligently enquire of the Names of "those who have forty Pounds per Ann. of Land
"or Rents in the said City; and that ye certify
"us of those Names in our Chancery before the "aforesaid Feast: And by no Means omit ye this.
"Witnes Myself at Westminster, the thirtieth
"Day of June, in the Year of our Reign
"over England the eighteenth, but of our
"Reign over France the fifth."

To which Brief the Sheriffs returned the following Answer:

The Citizens Ensigne not to be made Knights.

"We have caused to be proclaimed throughout
"our whole Bailiffwick all the Articles contained "in the Brief, as it is commanded in the same.
"We have caused also Inquisition to be made,
"by the Oath of honest and lawful Men of our
"said Bailiffwick, if any have forty Pounds of "Land or Rent, by Year, in our said Bailiff-
"wick, and have held them for three whole
"Years; and of those that hold a Part in our "Bailiffwick, and a Part elsewhere, of the said
"Value. By whose Oath we find, that all the "Lands and Rents in the said City are held of "the Lord the King in Capite, as free Burgage
"in Fee-Farm. Nor is there any that hath "forty Pounds in Land or Rent in the same
"by the Year certain; because the Lands in the "said City, some are lett for more, some for less,
"and often stand empty, and are not lett, yet
"frequently have divers Burdens, and require "Repairs and Amendments. And for those "Causes, and the Burning of Houses, and di"vers other Dangers happening, the Certainty
"of the true Value of them cannot be known.
"And as to the Lands and Rents which the "Citizens have out of our Bailiffwick, the "sworn Men say, that they know nothing of the "Value of them by the Year, nor can enquire."

In which Answer, calculated to evade the King's Attempt to drain their Purfes for empty Honours, the Citizens also availed themselves on the Exceptions of the foresaid Statute of 1 Edw.
II. wherein such were excused from Knighthood, that had held their Lands but a small Time, or that were bounden in certain Debts in the Exchequer, to be paid yearly out of their Lands; and that held in Manors in antient Demefne of the Crown, as a Sokeman; and that must give Tallage, when the King's Demefnes were tallied; and such as held Burgage Lands, although they did amount to twenty Pounds yearly; not being willing to purchase Honours upon such chargeable Terms.

Reginald de Conduell, whom Arnold calls Roger Conduyt, and others Reginald at Conduyt, who had served the Office of Mayor in the 9th and 10th of Edw. III. having expended great Sums for the Honour of the City, to the involving his Estate, and Prejudice of his Family, owing to the Cessation of certain Perquisites, which former Mayors used to receive of foreign Merchants resorting hither with the Merchandize of their respective Countries; which Advantages were lost by the frequent Wars with Scotland and France; in Consideration whereof the King granted the said Reginald an Annuity of twenty-one Pounds per Ann.
arising from divers Messuages and Shops belonging to the Crown in the City.

As this Account, which is taken from the City Records, confirms that of Fabian, so doth it detect the Incorrectness of the Catalogue of the City Mayors, given us by Stow, in his Survey of London.

A. D. 1345, Richard Lacer Mayor, it was ordered, that from henceforth the new Mayor should be chosen by the Mayor and Aldermen for the Time being, and by the discreeter or wiser Sort of each Ward, or such only as should be summoned thereunto: That if he who shall be so chose on St. Edward's Day (13 Oct.) shall be absent at the Election, or refuse to serve the said Office of Mayor, should forfeit an hundred Marks, to be levied on his Goods, &c. by the Serjeants of the City, and to be paid to him who shall be chosen in his Place, on the Feast of St. Simon and Jude: And also that every Alderman, who shall absent himself at the Election of a Mayor, on the said Feasts of St. Ed-sonable Cause, to be allowed by the Mayor and Aldermen, shall pay to the Chamberlain of the said City the Sum of twenty Pounds.

Proclamation concerning Lepers.

In the twentieth Year of his Reign, Edward commanded the Mayor and Sheriffs of London to make Proclamation in every Ward of the City, that all leprous Perfons inhabiting therein should depart the fame within fifteen Days; and that no Perfon whatsoever should fuffer any Leper to remain in his Houfe, on Pain of the King's fartheft Difpleafure; and that they should caufe all the faid Lepers to be removed into fome of the Out-parts, from the Company and Converfation of the Healthy. Whereupon the Citizens claimed the Right left them by Queen Matilda, the Foundrefs, to fend fourteen leprous Perfons to be maintained in St. Giles's Hofpital.

A. D. 1348, and 21 Edw. III. This Year the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty of this City reprefented to the King and Council, That, whereas by Magna Charta all the Franchifes and Free Ufages are confirmed to the City by the King and his Progenitors, there are now fome new Ordinances made, to the great Prejudice of thofe their Franchifes, &c. viz. that Matters done in London should be tried by Perfons of foreign Countries; and therefore the good People of the faid City refufe to be Mayor, Aldermen, or other Officers, and to live and merchandize in the City, for fear of the great Penalty contained in thofe faid Ordinances. And, becaufe all Statutes made againft Magna Charta were to be null and void, they prayed to be difcharged from the Statute of 28 Edw. I. But it does not appear that they received any favourable Anfwer: On the contrary, from the fining of a Mayor for not ferving that high Office in 1368, it may be fupposed that they met with no Redrefs. And this Petition may ferve to account for the Reason why the Citizens [in the Year 1345] made the firft Ordinance for fining Officers refufing to ferve, when chofen.

This great Favour of having gold or silver

Our Historians, as well as Charters, being that no Time bids so fair for it as the present, when the chief Magistrate of the City had the taken John their King Prisoner; he and his royal Captive, upon their Arrival in the Neighbourhood of this City, were met in Southwark by above a

Hist. Angl.

As Edward the Black Prince appears to have been the greatest and most illustrious Prince that ever England produced, I cannot forbear adding a few Words more in Commemoration of him.

Edward, Son of King Edward the Third, and Prince of Wales, was denominated the Black Prince from the Colour of his Armour: He was possessed of all the Virtues in a very eminent Degree; a Prince the greatest for Magnanimity, Valour, and Bravery; the noblest for Humanity, Courtesy, and Wisdom; a good Soldier, and a great General; brave without Cruelty, bold in the most dangerous Enterprizes, and modest without Affectation; generous, liberal in rewarding Merit, and never better pleased,
than when he had an Opportunity of doing Good: In short, he was allowed, both by his Friends and Enemies, to have had all the Qualifications necessary to form a good Man and a great Hero.

With this great Prince died the Hopes of all Englishmen, (as will appear in the unfortunate Reign of Richard his Son, who succeeded to Ed- ward his Grandfather) whose Sorrow for his Death was inexpressible; but more particularly, that of his aged royal Father, whom he had never offended.

And the French King, (notwithstanding the Prince's having overcome that Nation in divers great Battles) in Commemoration of his great Worth, solemniz'd his Obsequies at Paris, in a very magnificent Manner.

A Difference subsisting between the King and the Pope, relating to the Collation to Bene-fices, Edward, by his Writ to the Mayor of Lon- don, commanded him to apprehend and imprison all Persons, whereon were found any of the Pope's Bulls; which Precept was dated at Westminster, October 10, 1357.

royal Houſhold, he uſed frequently to draw them out of the City to plead, contrary to the known Liberties of the Citizens; for the preventing of ſuch pernicious Practices for the future, the City, after this joyful Occaſion, petitioned the King for Redreſs, and received the following moſt gracious Answer:

Lib.Horn.
fol. 302.

The King's gracious
Answer.

"To the Petition of the Citizens of London asking Remedy, in that the Steward and Marshal of the King's Houſhold drew them into Plea without the ſaid City, againſt the Form of the Liberty, and againſt the Tenor of the Charters made to them upon this by the King and his Progenitors; it was thus answered, That the King willeth, that, if a Tranſgreſſion be made to any of the King's Houſhold, within the Liberty of the City of London, and within the Verge of the King, the Plea of ſuch Tranſgreſſion be held before the Steward and Marshal of the King's Houſhold; and if Inquiſition muſt be made, let that Inquiſition be taken within the ſaid City; and it is enrolled in the Rolls of John de Kirkeby, of the Parliament of the King, held in the Quinden of St. John Baptiſt, in the thirteenth Year of his Reign. And further,

"Be it remembered, that at the Parliament of our Lord King Edward, in the thirtieth Year of his Reign, by the ſaid King it was granted and commanded, that this Conceſſion be firmly obſerved; namely, that whereas before the Steward of the ſame Lord the King and his Marshal, the King at London or at Weſtmiſter, or elſewhere near the ſoreſaid City, certain Inquiſitions ought to be made upon Tranſgreſſions, or other Faſts within the ſoreſaid City, between any of the ſaid City, or between them and other Foreigners, or between ſome of the King's Houſhold and another of the City, or any Foreigner whatſoever; and of which Tranſgreſſion the Cognizance belongs to the ſame Steward and Marshal by Right:

"That all thoſe Inquiſitions be taken within the City, and not elſewhere, although the Parties of thoſe Inquiſitions have pleaded without the City before the Steward and Marshal, and have put themſelves in the former Inquiſition, whiſt ſome Jurors of that Inquiſition were of the ſaid City, and remained within the ſame.

"And this the Lord the King granted in Favour of the poor Workmen of the ſaid City, who lived of the Work of their own Hands; that they want not their Food, or be more impoverished: And it was enrolled in the Rolls of Lord Gilbert Fitz-Robert, the King's Juſtice."

Edit.
Stow. Sur.
b. 5. p. 361.

A certain Author mentions this to have happened in the Reign of Edward the Second; but that's a Miſtake, for that Prince only reigned twenty Years.

A. D. 1358. It was found by an Inquiſition made this Year, that Simon Francis, Mercer, and Mayor of this City in 1343, was poſſeſſed of theſe Manors and Eſtates in London and Middleſex, viz. Northall Manor, Northall; Blanchepleton Manor, Hertford-Court; Doane Manor, Allen;

Fulbam Manor, Harwe or Harrow; Harwe Manor, Fynchiſſe; Stammere Manor, Riſſeley; beſides what he had elſewhere.

A. D. 1359. Corn became ſo very ſcarce, that Wheat was ſold at one Pound ſix Shillings and eight Pence the Quarter at London. And in the next Year the French landed in ſuſſex, with an Army of twenty thouſand Men, where they committed the moſt unheard-of Cruelties, by ſacking and burning of Towns, killing the Men, and raviſhing the Women. Theſe terrible Depredations and Barbarities enraged the Nation to ſuch a Degree, that in a ſhort Time the City of London, and other Ports of the Kingdom, fitted out a potent Fleet of one hundred and ſixty Sail, whereon were embarked fourteen thouſand Men; who failing to the Coaſt of France, without Oppoſition from the French Fleet, they landed where they pleaſed, and ravaged, burnt and ſpoiled the Country at Pleaſure.

The Plague making its Appearance again in France, King Edward, amongſt other Precautions to preſerve his Britiſh Subjects from the direful Effects of the like Contagion, from which his City of London was ſcarce recovered, ſent the following Letter to the Mayor and Sheriffs, upon an Apprehenſion, that the noiſome Smells inceſſantly emitted from the putrid Blood and Entrails of Beaſts (killed in London, and thrown into the Streets) contributed much to produce the Plague.

"Beauſe by killing of great Beaſts, &c. from whoſe putrid Blood running down the Streets, and the Bowels caſt into the Thames, the Air in the City is very much corrupted and infected, whence abominable and moſt filthy Stinks proceed, Sickneſſes and many other Evils have happened to ſuch as have abode in the ſaid City, or have reſorted to it; and great Dangers are feared to fall out for the Time to come, unleſs Remedy be preſently made againſt it:

"We, willing to prevent ſuch Danger, and to provide as much as in us lies for the Honesty of the ſaid City, and the Safety of our People, by the Conſent of our Council in our preſent Parliament, have ordained, that all Bulls, Oxen, Hogs, and other groſs Creatures, to be ſlain for the Suſtentation of the ſaid City, be led as far as the Town of Stratford on one Part of London, and the Town of Knightsbridge on the other; and there, and not on this Side, be ſlain; and that their Bowels be there cleaned, to be brought, together with the Fleſh, to the ſaid City to be ſold: And if any Butcher ſhall preſume any Thing raſhly againſt this Ordinance, let him incur Forfeiture of the Fleſh of the Creatures which he hath cauſed to be ſlain on this Side the ſaid Towns, and the Punishment of Imprisonment for one Year. This Ordinance to be publickly proclaimed and held; and all Butchers doing otherwiſe to be chaſtized and puniſhed according to the Form of the Ordinance aforeſaid. Witneſs the King at Weſtmiſter, the twenty-fifth Day of February."

But no human Precautions were able to ſtay the Hand of the deſtroying Angel. The Plague reached England, and raged in ſo dreadful and destructive destructive a Manner, especially in this City, that in the Space of two Days it swept away no less than twelve hundred Persons; by which, and the great Mortality in other Parts, Corn was so exceeding plenty, that Wheat was sold at two Shillings a Quarter, and two Hens for a Penny. Yet, in the Month of May, we read of a great Tournament held in Smithfield, that was honoured with the Presence not only of a great Number of Knights from France and other Countries, but of the King and Queen.

A. D. 1363, the Kings of Scotland, France and Cyprus came into England to visit King Edward, who, together with the said Kings, the Prince of Wales his Son, and most of the Nobility, were sumptuously entertained at Dinner by Henry Picard, late Mayor of London; and Lady Margaret his Wife kept her Chamber, says our Author, for the same Intent: Which ought not only to be commemorated to the Praise of that publick-spirited Citizen, but also to the Honour of the City, in having had so generous and worthy a chief Magistrate. Though this was a very expensive Entertainment, yet it was such an Honour, as never English Subject had before, nor perhaps none of any other Nation.

Adam Bury, who was Mayor of the City in 1364, was, by an expresse Command of the King, discharged from the Office of Mayoralty in the Month of January, (but for what Offence my Author does not mention) and John Lovekin, or Lewken, was chosen in his Stead.

In the Mayoralty of Adam de Bury, and the 39th of Edward III. the following Ordinance was made, to ascertain what Things a Tenant in London might not move at his leaving the House he had rented in the City or its Liberties:

"It is ordained, that if any Person hire a Tenement, House, or Houses, in the City of London, or in the Suburbs of the said City, to hold the same for the Term of Life, or of Years, or only from Year to Year, or from Quarter to Quarter; if the said Tenant shall make, or cause to be made, any Pentyfes or other Easements in the said Tenement, House, or Houses, fixed with Nails of Iron or wooden Pegs to the Premises, or to the Soil thereof; it shall not be lawful for such Tenant to remove such Pentyfes or Easements at the End of the Term, or at any other Time to destroy them; but they shall always remain to the Landlord of the said Premises, as a Parcel thereof."

This Ordinance, translated from the Latin Original, was confirmed by the Mayor and Aldermen in the following Words:

"Whereas nowe of late amonge divers People was spongen Matter of Doubt upon the most olde Custome had and used in this Cyte of London, of such Thynghs which by Tenauntys Terms of Lyfe or Yerys been affixed unto Houses, without specyall Lycence of the Owner of the Soyle, whether they owe to remayne unto the Owner of the Soyle, as Parcel of the same, or ellys whether it shall be lawfull unto such Tenauntys on thende of her Terme all such Thynghs affixed to remove.

"Wherupon olde Bokys seen, and many Records, olde Proceffys, and Jugementys of the sayd Cyte, it was declared by the Mayre and Aldermen, for an olde prescrybed Custome of the Cyte aforseyd, that all suche Easementys fixyd unto Houses, or to Soyle by suche Tenauntys, without specyall and expresse Lycence of the Owner of the Soyle, yf they be affixed with Nayles of Irne or of Tree, as Pentyfes, Glasse, Lockys, Benchys, or any suche other, or elles yf they be affixed with Morter or Lyme, or of erther or any other Morter, as Forneys, Leedys, candorous Chemyneys, Corbels, Pavementtis, or suche other; or elles yf Plantys be roctyd in the Grounde, as Vines, Trees, Graffe Stounks, Trees of Frut, &c. it shall not be lafull unto suche Tenauntys in the End of her Terme, or any other Tyme therin, nor any of them, to put awaye more, or plucke up in any wyfe, but that they shall alway remayne to the Ownar of the Soyle, as Parcels of the same Soyle or Tenement."

Notwithstanding the great Advantages accruing to the Nation by the Use of Archery, it was at this Time so much in Disuse, that the King, to inforce the Practice thereof, sent the following Letter to the Sheriffs of London:

"The King to the Sheriffs of London, greeting. "Because the People of our Realm, as well of good Quality as mean, have commonly in their Sports before these Times exercised the Skill of shooting Arrows; whence it is well known, that Honour and Profit have accrued to our whole Realm, and to us, by the Help of God, no small Assistance in our warlike Acts; and now the said Skill being, as it were, wholly laid aside, the same People please themselves in hurling of Stones and Wood and Iron; and some in Hand-ball, Foot-ball, Bandy-ball, and in Cambuck, or Cock-fighting; and some also apply themselves to other dishonest Games, and less profitable or useful; whereby the said Realm is likely, in a short Time, to become destitute of Archers:

"We, willing to apply a seasonable Remedy to this, command you, that in Places in the foresaid City, as well within the Liberties as without, where you shall see it expedient, you cause publick Proclamation to be made, that every one of the said City, strong in Body, at leisure Times on Holidays, use in their Recreations Bows and Arrows, or Pellets, or Bolts, and learn and exercise the Art of Shooting; forbidding all and singular on our Behalf, that they do not after any Manner apply themselves to the throwing of Stones, Wood, Iron, Hand-ball, Foot-ball, Bandy-ball, Cambuck, or Cock-fighting, nor such other like vain Plays, which have no Profit in them, or concern themselves therein, under Pain of Imprisonment. Witnes the King at Westminster, the twelfth Day of June."

About the same Time arrived in London above an hundred and twenty Dutch Enthusiasts, wearing Hats with red Crosses before and behind; the upper Parts of their Bodies were naked, and the lower covered with a Linen Garment, with a Whip of three-knotted Cords in each of their Hands: Thus accoutred, they walked in Procession through the Streets of the City, with four of their Company finging before them; and, being answered by the rest, they unanimously fell a lashing and cutting their Bodies with their Whips in a cruel and most surprizing Manner, infomuch that the Blood issued from their Wounds very plentifully. This wholesome Discipline they practised twice a Day, sometimes in St. Paul's Church, and at other Times in the Streets.

The Plague broke out again in the Year 1369, and swept away Abundance of People; yet, thro' the great Scarcity of Corn, a Dearth prevailed to that Degree, that Wheat was sold at one Pound four Shillings the Quarter; and Corn continuing to rise, by reason of a wet Harvest, Wheat the succeeding Year was sold at the excessive Price of one Pound six Shillings and eight Pence the Quarter.

Brad.
Treat. Cit.
A.D. 1372
The Citizens, thinking themselves aggrieved by some Encroachments on their Liberties by private Grants from the Crown, as particularly by such as had been given to Foreigners in the Year 1337, presented the following humble and moving Petition to the King and Parliament:

Ibid.
City's Petition to Parliament against unjust
Licences to Foreigners.
"To our Lord the King, and his Noble Council, the Citizens of the City of London do shew, That they have nothing to live upon but their Industry and Franchise, upon which Franchise the said City was founded; and by reason of which Franchise they were wont to travel by Land and by Sea, in divers Countries, for their Profit; by which Travel they used to bring divers Merchandizes, to the great common Profit of the whole Realm of England, to the great Aid and Maintenance of the said City, Sustainance and Increase of the Navy of the said Land. And of late their Franchises are taken from them, against the Grant of our said noble Lord the King, and his noble Progenitors, sealed with their Seals, and against the Great Charter; to the great Destruction as well of the said City, common Damage of the Land, as also of the Navy.

"Whereupon they pray, that the King would please to have Regard, and take Notice, that the said City was founded upon the said Franchises, without which they could not maintain the City, nor bear the Taxes and other Charges, as they were wont to do: For which Cause they pray they may have their Franchises, according to the Grant of the King, and his noble Progenitors, and the Great Charter; and that all such Grants and Confirmations of Franchises may be made to all other Cities and Burghs of the Realm."

The Parliament being soon after adjourned, this Petition was not answered till the following Year, when the Citizens received this Answer: "Let them particularly shew the Breach of any Liberty, and they shall be answered."

About this Time, at a great Wrestling Match held by the Citizens on Blackheath, John Northwood, a Citizen and Mercer, was killed; which Misfortune occasioned Abundance of ill Blood among the several Corporations of the City, to their great Disturbance, for a long Time after.

The Citizens having ran too much into the abominable Practice of Usury, to the great Hurt of Trade in general, and the Oppression of their Fellow-Subjects, Mr. John Not, the Mayor, devised and published such Ordinances for the putting of the Laws in Execution against the Extortioners, that an effectual Stop was put to this growing Evil. And this Proceeding was so highly approved of by the King and Parliament, that all the rest of the Nation were strictly enjoined to follow the Example.

The King, in his old Age, this same Year, fell in Love with Alice Perrers or Pierce; who having soon got the Ascendant, she made him commit many Things very unbecoming his Character; and, this female Favourite having ingrossed most of the Money which was raised for the Service of the Publick, it occasioned a general Discontent. However, the old amorous Monarch, being bent upon pleasing his Mistress, studied nothing more than how to divert her; and, among other publick and costly Diversions, appointed a Tournament to be held in Smithfield. Alice, dignified with the Appellation of Lady of the Sun, on this Occasion appeared in a triumphant Chariot, in pompous Apparel, attended by a Number of Ladies of Quality, each of whom led a Knight by his Horse's Bridle; and, being also attended by a great Number of the principal Lords, most richly accoutred, the glorious Procession set out from the Tower of London, thro' Cheapside, to Smithfield, where many gallant Feats were performed by the young Nobility and Gentry for seven Days successively.

By the Inspeimus of Richard II. by which that King, in the seventh Year of his Reign, confirmed all the Liberties, Franchises, &c. of the City of London in Parliament, we find there was another Charter granted by Edward III. dated November 12, in the fiftieth Year of his Reign, in these Words:

"Edward, by the Grace of God, King of England and France, and Lord of Ireland, to all Men to whom we send, greeting. Among other Articles which our Lord Edward, some Time King of England, our Father, the Year

In the same Letters it is contained, that the Aldermen of the foresaid City, that every Year they be removed on the Day of St. Gregory, by the Commonalty of the said City, and that they so removed be not chosen again the next Year ensuing; but, instead of them that have been removed, others be chosen by the same Wards from which such Aldermen were removed, as in the same Letters plainly it is contained; concerning which, on the Part of the Commonalty of the foresaid City, by their Petition before us in our great Council, now again asked, to us meekly it is besought, that since divers Opinions and divers Strifes have been sprung between the Aldermen and the Commonalty of the said City upon the removing of Aldermen, for the wrong Interpretation of Words in the foresaid Articles contained, that is to say, that the foresaid Aldermen affirm, that by the two Words, viz. sint amovibiles per Communitatem, &c. i. e. let them be removed by the Commonalty, they ought not to be removed from the Office of Aldermanship, without sufficient Reason, or for some notorious Offence to be found in them. But others of the said Citizens being of a contrary Opinion, and willing to abolish this Article, they have besought us to explain the said Article, so as to remove all Doubt about the Premises: We being willing, as much as lieth in us, to contribute to the Peace and Tranquillity of the said Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty, and their Successors, henceforward, concerning the Interpretation of the said Article, do, by and with the Advice of our said Council, declare, that all and every Alderman of the said City, every Year, for ever, on the Feast of St. Gregory the Pope, from the Office of an Alderman utterly and precisely shall cease, and shall not be chosen again; but that, instead of those removed, other Aldermen shall be chosen every Year, for ever, out of the discreet Citizens of good Fame, by the said Wards from which the said Aldermen were removed. In Witness whereof we have caused these our Letters to be made Patents. Witness Myself at Westminster, the twelfth Day of November, the fiftieth Year of our Reign in England, and the thirty-sixth over France."

AD. 1376 The King's Answer to the City Petition to the last Parliament, viz. That the Citizens should shew the Breach of any of their Liberties, and they should be answered, occasioned their presenting the Petition inserted in the under-mentioned Charter:

Roy. Char. "Edward, King of England and France, and Lord. "Lord of Ireland, to all to whom these Letters shall come, greeting.

And now our well-beloved Subjects, the Mayor, Aldermen, and other Citizens of the said City, have humbly beseeched us and our Council in the last Parliament by their Petition exhibited in these Words:

"To our Lord the King and his good Council, your Liege Subjects the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty of the City of London, shew, That whereas they have often sued in divers Parliaments to have Consideration how that they are impoverished and undone, by reason their Liberties by him and his Progenitors to them granted are restrained, and great Part taken away; and now at the last Parliament held at Westminster, it was answered to them, That they should declare their Grievs specially, and they should have good Remedy therefore: Of which Grievs (amongst divers others) these be; That every Stranger might dwell in the said City, and keep a House, and be a Broker, and sell and buy all Manner of Merchandizes by Retail; and one Stranger to sell to another to sell again, to the great increasing the Prices of Merchandizes, and a Cause to make them remain there more than forty Days; whereas, in Time past, no Merchant Stranger might use any of these Points, contrary to the Franchises of the said City, before these Times had and used: By which Grievance the Merchants of the said City are greatly impoverished, and the Navy impaired, and the Privities of the Land by the said Strangers discovered to our Enemies by Spies and other Strangers into these Houses received.

"May it therefore please your Majesty and Council to ordain in this Parliament, that the Merchant Strangers may be restrained in the Points aforesaid, and the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons in the said City may enjoy the said Franchises.

"We, for the special Affection we bear to the said Citizens, willing to provide for the Tranquillity and Profit of the said Citizens in that Behalf, with the Assents of our Prelates, Nobles, &c. have granted for us, and our Heirs, to the said Mayor and Aldermen, and Citizens of the said City, and their Successors, upon Condition that they put the said City under good Government, to our Honour, and the Profit of our Realm of England, and right govern the same, That no Strangers shall from henceforth sell any Wares in the same City, or Suburbs thereof, by Retail, nor shall keep any House, nor be any Broker in the said

In Consequence of this Application to the King and Parliament, and their gracious Returns, several Prosecutions were commenced against those who had any ways abused the royal Authority, by suing for and obtaining deceitful Grants or Charters from the Crown: As Richard Lyons, Merchant, of London, who was, by the Commons, impeached of divers Deceits, Extortions, and other Misdemeanors, as well at the Time when he repaired to certain of the King's Council, as when he was Farmer of the Subsidies and Customs; and especially for his obtaining Licences for the Exportation of large Faizons of Wool and staple Ware; for procuring new Impositions upon staple Ware; for devising the Change of Money; for making the King, for one Chevizance of twenty Marks, to pay thirty Pounds; for buying Debts of divers Men due by the King for small Values; for taking Bribes by Way of Brokage for paying the King's just Debts. All which, it seems, he was guilty of, by tampering with the Council.

To some Part of which Articles Richard answered, and to the rest submitted himself to the King's Mercy: Whereupon he was committed to Prison, and his Estate, both real and personal, confiscated, and for which Crimes he was also disfranchised.

And against John Peach for procuring and selling Licences from the Crown.

John Peach of London was soon after impeached for procuring a Licence under the Great Seal, for the sole Privilege of selling sweet Wine in London; and that, by Colour of this Grant, he took of every Vintner four Shillings and four Pence for every Tun he sold. The which he justified, as lawfully he might; yet nevertheless he was adjudged to Prison, and to make Restitution to all Persons aggrieved. Whereupon the Grant was reversed, and the Citizens restored to their antient Right of selling such Wine, under the Restriction of having the Price thereof always regulated by the Mayor.

Tyr. Hist. Engl. Rot. Parl. Edw. III. n. 32. A.D. 1377 City petition to have the late Charter confirmed by Parliament.

Tho' the City Interest, at this Time, seems to have been but upon an indifferent Footing at Court; yet it was greatly in Favour with the House of Commons, then sitting at Westminster; who addressed the King to have the Charter, lately granted the Citizens, confirmed by Parliament. To which Answer was returned, "The King will be farther informed." Which shews, that Edward had no great Inclination to confirm it in this Way.

For Choice of a Coroner.

At the same Time the House of Commons, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty of London, in Consideration of frequent Mischiefs which happened in the City, occasioned by the Coroner's not being punishable by the Mayor, humbly petitioned the King, that the Citizens might chuse that Officer from amongst themselves, and remove him when they pleased, (as was practised in divers Cities and Towns in the Kingdom) they answering to the King in Manner as appertained to the said Office. The Answer was, "The King will not depart from his antient Rights."

Cot. Abrid Rec.

Nor had they any better Success, when the Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens petitioned the King to confirm their Liberties for punishing all Misdemeanors in Southwark; and that Command should be given, that the Marshal do not intermeddle with that Part of Southwark which is guildable: For his Majesty replied, "The King cannot do it, without doing Wrong to others." By this and the other Answers, it is evident, that the Citizens then had not Interest enough to obtain any Favour from the King.

For Confirmation of their Liberties in Southwark.

However, these Rebuffs at Court did not lessen their Esteem and Regard to the Royal Family; which they shortly after endeavoured to shew in a publick Manner. Hence it was resolved by the Citizens to divert Prince Richard, his Mother the Princess of Wales, the Nobility and their Attendants, at Kennington. For which Purpose, on the Sunday before Candlemas, one hundred and thirty-two Citizens on Horseback in Masquerade, attended by Trumpets, a Variety of other musical Instruments, and a vast Number of Flambeaux, marched from Newgate through the City and Borough of Southwark, to the Prince's Residence aforesaid. In the first Division rode eight-and-forty Persons dressed in the Habits of Esquires, with Red Coats, Say Gowns, and beautiful Vizards. Then followed the same Number of Persons apparelled like Knights, in the same Livery as the former. Then rode one in a very pompous Imperial Habit, followed at some Distance by a Person resembling the Pope, attended by four-and-twenty Cardinals; followed by ten Persons in hideous black Vizards, as Legates from an infernal Pontiff.

This Cavalcade of Masquers being arrived at the Palace, they dismounted and entered the Hall, whither instantly repaired the Prince, the Princess of Wales, and the Nobility their Attendants. They were saluted by the Masquers, who, producing a Pair of Dice, shewed their Inclination of playing with the Prince. The Dice were so artfully prepared, that, whenever the Prince threw, he was sure to win, and having thrown three Times, he won a Bowl, a Cup and a Ring, all of massy Gold; after which the said Masquers set the Princess, the Duke of Lancaster, and all the other Lords, each a Gold Ring, which they likewise won: Whereupon they were most sumptuously entertained at Supper; and, after having the Honour of dancing with the Prince and Nobility, they joyfully returned to the City.

Wickliff's Doctrine having greatly prevailed in England, the Pope was thereby so highly incensed, that, by his Bulls directed to the Archbishop of Canterbury and Bishop of London, he strictly commanded them to get the said Wickliff apprehended or cited, in order to examine and censure his Opinions: Pursuant to this Order, he was accordingly summoned by the Archbishop, to appear at a certain Time, to answer for the same in his Court at St. Paul's Church.

This Deportment of the Bishop was highly reſented by the Duke, inſomuch that he warmly told him, that the Marshal ſhould continue to act in that Affair as he thought proper, notwithstanding it was not agreeable to his Sentiments. And being come into the Chapel, the Duke and the Lords his Attendants, ſat themſelves down with the Archbishops and Bishops: And Wickliff ſtanding before them to answer what ſhould be objected againſt him, the Lord Marshal, with great Humanity, deſired him to ſit down; alledging, that, as he had many Things to answer, he had the more Need of a little Repoſe. This Declaration occaſioned hot Words on both Sides, eſpecially between the Duke and the Biſhop; who threatningly told the Prelate, that he would bring down his Pride and that of all the Prelates of England; adding, though he preſumed ſo much upon his Parentage, that ſhould not help him. To which the Biſhop replied, that he only acted in Defence of the Truth, and that his Confidence was not in his Parentage, but in the living God. The Duke finding himſelf out-done in Words, whiſpered one that ſat next him, that he had rather drag the Biſhop out of the Church by the Hair, than to be ſo uſed by him; which being overheard by ſome of the Citizens, they were thereby ſo highly exaſperated, that they loudly cried out, they would rather loſe their Lives than ſuffer their Biſhop to be thus treated. Theſe Differences occaſioned the Court to break up ſooner than otherwiſe: However, Wickliff was diſmiſſed, tho' not without a ſtrict Prohibition from the Biſhop, never to preach or write any more in Defence of thoſe Articles wherewith he had been charged.

It was answered, they were come to ſeiſe the Perſons of the Duke and Marshal, to compel them to releaſe Sir Peter de la Mere, unjuſtly detained in Priſon. To which the Prieſt imprudently replied, That Sir Peter was a Traitor, and had juſtly deſerved to be hanged; whereupon the Cry immediately ran, that this was Piercy the Traitor in Diſguiſe, and that his Speech betrayed him; then falling upon the ſimple Prieſt, they immediately murdered him.

on the contrary, rather desired to enlarge them, desiring them not to be uneasy in that Respect, but to return and keep the City in Peace. Well satisfied with this gracious Answer, they joyfully returned to report their Success to their Fellow-Citizens, who received it with the greatest Demonstrations of Joy.

Notwithstanding the laudable Precautions taken by the Magistrates to preserve the Peace of the City, they found it hitherto impracticable to prevent a few Incendiaries from writing and sticking up Pasquils in several Parts of the City, to incense the Populace against the Duke of Lancaster; therefore, to put an effectual Stop to this dangerous Practice, the Bishop of Bangor, assisted by the Mayor and Aldermen, publicly excommunicated all those, who, for the future, should presume to write or disseminate any Libel, whereby the Duke's Honour should be affected. And thus Matters remained 'till the Dissolution of the Parliament, when the Duke's Resentment against the City began more fiercely to appear; for the Mayor and Aldermen being summoned to attend the King at Shene (Richmond) they were adjudged to submit themselves, and ask Pardon of the Duke, whom they had so grievously offended; but, instead of complying therewith, they now, as before, pleaded their Innocence, earnestly intreated his Majesty not to punish the Innocent with the Guilty, and faithfully promised, that they would, to the utmost of their Power, endeavour to apprehend and bring to Justice all such as had offended, and to compel such Malefactors to make Satisfaction, as should be consistent with the Duke's Honour; adding, that more they could not do. Whereupon they were not only dismissed the Court; but likewise Adam Staple, the Mayor, and several of the Aldermen, were discharged their Offices, and others, by the King's Writ, appointed in their Places.

An Accommodation proposed between the Duke of Lancaster and the City of London.
In Answer to that Part of the above-mentioned Speech made by John Philpot to Prince Richard, just before the Demise of the late King, relating to an Accommodation between the Duke and the City, the King sent the Lord Latimer, Sir Nicholas Bond, Sir Simon Burley, and Sir Richard Adersbury, to assure the Citizens, in his Name, of the great Respect he bore their City, and of his speedy Return, according to their Desire, to reside there; and that he had, according to their Request, spoke to his Uncle the Duke of Lancaster in their Behalf, who had readily submitted all Differences between himself and the Citizens to his Determination; he therefore hoped they would do the same on their Part, not doubting but he should happily accommodate all Matters between them and the Duke.

But the Citizens being apprehensive, that, if they should submit their Cause to Royal Arbitration, they would, in all Probability, become very great Sufferers; considering that the King, on Account of his tender Years, was incapable of judging in that Affair; therefore wisely concluded, that the Differences in Controversy must be decided by the Duke's Friends and their Enemies: Wherefore they were unwilling to accept of the Proposal. However, after a long Debate, they came to this Resolution, That, if the Honourable Personages who brought the Message would oblige themselves, that their Submission should no ways prove prejudicial to the City, then they would as willingly submit all Matters in Dispute to his Majesty's Determination, as the Duke himself had done. Those worthy Gentlemen, willing to accomplish so good a Work, readily became Sureties to the Citizens, that the Decision of the Affair in Dispute should no ways prove detrimental to them, but, on the contrary, rather to their Advantage.

the Citizens.*
In Confidence of this Security, a Deputation of the principal Citizens was sent to Shene, where they found the young King and his Mother, the Duke of Lancaster, with his Brother, together with some Bishops who attended the Body of the late King. Richard was no sooner acquainted with the Arrival of the Citizens, than he ordered them immediately to attend him; when they declared, that they willingly submitted all Differences to his Determination; which the Duke no sooner observed, than he became reconciled to the Citizens, by not only remitting all past Offences; but likewise he intreated his Majesty, that all the Citizens that were in Dureſs upon his Account might be discharged. And, as a further Proof of his sincere Reconciliation, he embraced all the Citizens in Presence of the King: Whereupon they returned to the City with joyful Hearts for their happy Success, in making an End of this troublesome and dangerous Affair. And the Friday after, this Accommodation between the Duke and Citizens was proclaimed at Westminster.

Matters thus happily accommodated between the Duke and the City, the King, mounted upon a stately Horse, attended by the Duke of Lancaster, Lord High Steward of the Kingdom, Lord Piercy, Earl Marshall, and many of the prime Nobility, set out for London, Sir Simon Burley carrying the Sword of State, and Sir Nicholas Bond leading the King's Horse, followed by a numerous Train of the young Nobility about the King's Age, each Division having Trumpets sounding before it; and, entering the City, Richard was received by the Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens, with the utmost Splendor and Magnificence. A stately Pageant being erected in Cheapside, in Form of a Castle, it ran with Wine, during the March of the Cavalcade thro' the City. The King and Nobility were served with Part thereof in golden Cups, by four beautiful young Ladies, about the Age of his Majesty, who also bestrewed his Head with gilt Leaves, and threw amongst the Populace Florins resembling Gold; whilst the Princes of the Blood and the Nobility, but especially the Duke of Lancaster, endeavoured all they could, by their extraordinary Complacency and Easiness of Address, to gain the Love and Good-will of the Citizens.

A. D. 1378, the Naval Affairs of England were in so bad a Condition, that John Mercer, a Scots Privateer, was thereby encouraged to prey upon the English Merchant Ships, and, having entered the Port of Scarborough, carried off all in that Harbour: Flushed with this Success, he continued to infest the Coast, carrying off many considerable Prizes. The great Damage the Merchants sustained by Mercer, occasioned frequent Complaints to Court for Redress; but not being able to obtain any thing besides fair Promises, that brave and worthy Citizen Sir John Philpot was thereby so highly affected to see, that, by the Indolence of the King and his Ministry, the Merchants were exposed to the Ravages of Mercer, inſomuch that he fitted out, at his own Expence, a potent Fleet, on board of which he put one thousand Men completely armed, and, going on board himself as Commander in Chief, sailed in quest of Mercer: Whom in a short Time he fell in with, greatly embarrassed with a Number of Ships which he had taken at Sea and at Scarborough, among which were fifteen Spanish Ships richly laden. Philpot having engaged Mercer, a long and desperate Fight ensued, wherein he overcame and took the said Privateer, with most of his Ships; and returning to London in Triumph, he was by the Citizens received in a very grateful and joyful Manner. However, tho' by this generous and noble Action he gained the Applause of the People, the indolent Ministry, careless of the Interest and Honour of the Nation, highly resented this Proceeding; inſomuch that Sir John was soon after summoned before the King and Council, to answer for his Presumption and Contempt, in undertaking an Affair of so high a Nature, without the King's Permission: For which Expedition he assigned so many strong and nervous Reasons, and that with the greatest Modesty, that he was soon acquitted.

In a Subsidy granted at this Time by Parliament, all Degrees of Men were assessed according to their several Qualities or Stations of Life. On which Occasion the Lord-Mayor of London was rated, as an Earl, at four Pounds; and the Aldermen, as Barons, at two Pounds each; which seems in some measure to confirm, that the Epithet of Right Honourable was then ascribed to the Mayor: And every Tradesman, &c. Wives and Children, being of the Age of fourteen Years and above, were taxed at four Pence per Head; which occasioned great Murmurs among the Commonalty, and proved the Foundation of a Rebellion, headed by Wat Tyler, as you will read hereafter.

In the Month of May, a French Fleet penetrated up the River Thames, and spoiled and burnt the Town of Gravefend, and did other considerable Damage, threatening the very Capital itself.

A rich Genoa Merchant proposed to the King, that, if he would grant him Leave to erect a Castle at Southampton, for the Defence of that Port, and better Security of the Merchandize he intended to lay up there, he would make that Place one of the most famous Ports in Europe, by the great Refort of foreign Merchants, who would plentifully supply this Nation with the Riches of the East, and in Return thereof would carry back the Produce of England. But, several Merchants of the City being apprehensive that this Project would very much redound to their Disadvantage, they wickedly and perfidiously conspired the Death of that worthy Foreigner, whom they, in a most barbarous and detestable Manner, caused to be murdered in the Street near his own House, as he was returning home by Night. However, this horrid Piece of Villainy did not go long unpunished; for John Kirby, one of the infamous Perpetrators of that execrable Murder, was soon after punished in an exemplary Manner.

In this same Year, (and not in the next following, as Stow by Mistake has placed it) a powerful Fleet and Army were sent to the Assistance of the Duke of Bretagne against the French; to the fitting out of which that celebrated and worthy Citizen Sir John Philpot, being Mayor, contributed very largely; for he not only hired a considerable Number of Ships at his own Expence for that Expedition; but likewise redeemed the Armour and Arms of above one thousand Soldiers which, thro' Necessity, they had pawned, to purchase the common Necessaries of Life. He also caused the City Ditch to be cleansed, at the small Charge of five Pence rated upon each House-keeper. This I have taken Notice of, to shew the Wages given to a Labourer at that Time, which was the Sum paid by each Householder.

This wise, brave and rich Citizen appears, for many Years, to have been the Head, Heart and Hand of the City; for by his bold Deportment in Parliament, in defending the Rights of his Fellow-Citizens, and his indefatigable Zeal in the well-governing of the City, 'tis evident, that he had nothing more at Heart than the Honour and Interest of the same; the latter whereof is manifest, by his having exposed both his Life and Fortune in the late glorious Expedition; and the former, by the brave Opposition he made to a Bill in Parliament, (in 1377) whereby the City was to be deprived of its Mayor, and governed by a Custos; and that the Lord Marshal should have the Execution of Writs and Actions in London, as well as in other Parts of the Kingdom; which Attempt on the City Liberties was quashed by the brave and resolute Opposition of this truly worthy Citizen.

And that this great Man was not only the Darling of the City, but likewise of the Publick, I imagine, will appear from his, and his Brother Alderman Wakworth's being, in the preceding Year, by Parliament, appointed joint Treasurers of the Money given that Session.

In the fourth Year of Richard II. at a full Assembly in the upper Chamber of Guildhall, summoned by William Wakworth, Mayor, it was agreed by common Consent, and ordained, that the antient Seal of the Office of the Mayoralty of the said City, forasmuch as it was judged to be too small, ill-made, trifling, and unbecoming the Honour of the said City, should be broken; and that another new one, which the said Mayor had ordered to be made, in a much better and masterly Manner, for the said Office, should for the future be used in its stead. In which new Seal, besides the Images of St. Peter and Paul, was placed the Shield of the Arms of the said City, well engraved, supported by two Lions, and with two more on each Side of the Arms, and two Tabernacles, or Niches, containing two Angels, between whom, over the said Images of St. Peter and Paul, sat the Image of the glorious Virgin. Then the old Seal of the Office of the Mayoralty was delivered to Richard Odyham, the Chamberlain, who broke it; and the said new Seal was given to the said Mayor for his Use, as the Office of his Mayoralty demanded and required.

The Poll-Tax granted in the preceding Year, by Parliament, of four Pence, [some say, one Shilling] per Head, of all Persons above fifteen [Fabian says fourteen] Years of Age, such as took Alms only excepted, stirred up a dangerous Insurrection; which was not only owing to the grievous Oppressions and intolerable Exactions of the Collectors of that Tax, farmed out to some of the Nobility; but also to their unparalleled Insolence, which carried some of them to such a Degree of unheard-of Impudence, as to turn up Girls, to see if they were of Age to pay, or not.

This rude and scandalous Experiment so highly provoked Wat Hilliard, alias Tyler, (so denominated from his Occupation) of Dartford in Kent, that he not only knocked out the Brains of one of the shameless Collectors, who had served his Daughter after that Manner; but, to save himself from a Prosecution, persuaded the Populace to rise in his Defence, and to endeavour to extricate themselves from the Yoke of heavy Taxes they had so long groaned under.

The People, upon this Alarm, prone enough for such Undertakings, resorted from the neighbouring Towns and Villages, and quickly became so numerous, as to break out into the most dangerous Rebellion that had ever been known in England; to which they were greatly encouraged, on their Arrival at Maidstone, by John Ball, an excommunicated, factious and seditious Priest, who was released by the Populace from a long Confinement in the Gaol of that Town. Ball was no sooner at Liberty, than he assumed the Office of Chaplain to his Benefactors; and, as an Encouragement

From these Words he pleaded, that all Men were equal by Nature; and that, as Children of Adam, all Mankind were upon a Par; that, if God had appointed any Man to Slavery, he would have declared who should be Lords, and who Servants; and that Servitude, which is acquired by an unjust Power, is confirmed by as unjust Laws: He therefore advised them to go to the King, and require Liberty, which if they could not obtain by fair Means, to recover the same with their Swords. This Discourse was highly applauded by the Multitude; who, thus animated, took Arms, and unanimously chose Wat Tyler for their Leader. Wat was no sooner vested with that Dignity, than he caused the Rabble to take an Oath "for their mutual Defence; to be true to King Richard and the Commons of England; never to receive a King whose Name was John; (This was in Despite of John Duke of Lancaster, stiled King of Castile, whom they mortally hated) "to persuade their Neighbours to join in "the common Cause; and never to submit to the "Payment of any other Tax than a Fifteenth."

Then leaving Maidstone, they marched to Blackheath, where they were joined by an infinite Mob from Essex, and other Parts; and his Rebel Army encamped, to the Number of one hundred thousand Men, composed of Villains, Bond Tenants, Clowns, insolvent Debtors, run-away Apprentices, Out-laws, Vagabonds, and other Criminals. The Pretences of this wicked and desperate Crew of Banditti were for Liberty, and the abolishing of evil Laws and Customs; especially that of Villainage, (by which in Truth they were mightily oppressed) and likewise to abolish the intolerable Exactions and Corruptions of Lawyers; which Ball, their wicked Chaplain, told them, could not be so effectually done, as by destroying all the Nobility and Lawyers: And accordingly they beheaded all they could find, if they had but so much as Pen and Ink in their Possession.

The King sent to Blackheath to know the Reason of that Commotion, and what it was they wanted. They desired the Messengers to acquaint the King, that they were assembled to speak with him about Matters of the greatest Importance; therefore desired he would come to them forthwith. This peremptory Request was debated in Council, whether Richard should go or not. Some were of Opinion, that his Presence would be the only Means to appease them; but Simon Sudbury, Archbishop of Canterbury, and Lord Chancellor, and Sir Robert Hales, Prior of St. John of Jerusalem, and Lord High Treasurer, strenuously opposed the King's going, as inconsistent with the Safety of his Person; which Advice, as the most rational, was approved of. But the Rebels were so enraged to have their Request rejected, that they vowed the Destruction of those Counsellors; broke up from Blackheath; pursued their Rout to London; entered Southwark (on the tenth of June); broke open the King's-Bench and Marshalsea Prisons; released the Prisoners, who immediately joined them; and, having discovered the Houses of Lawyers, Jurors and Questmongers, they instantly levelled them with the Ground. Then the Body of Essex Rebels were sent to Lambeth, where they burnt the archiepiscopal Palace, with all its rich Furniture, together with all the Books, Registers and Writings relating to Chancery Affairs; whilst those in Southwark destroyed the common Stews or Bawdy-Houses along the Bankside, which were kept by Flemish Bawds, who farmed the fame of the City.

In this dreadful Confusion the Mayor caused the Bridge-gate to be shut and fortified against the Rebels; but by their terrible Threats of destroying the Borough of Southwark, and the great Assistance of their Friends, the baser sort of Citizens, they were admitted the next Day, being Corpus Christi, into London, and the Shambles and Wine-Cellars were set open to them for their Accommodation: Being joined by the City Rabble, they hastened to the Savoy, the Duke of Lancaster's Palace, the most magnificent Edifice in the Kingdom; and, firing the same, they caused Proclamation to be made, that none should presume to appropriate any thing belonging to the said Palace to his own Use, upon Pain of Death; to shew the Publick, that their Designs were not founded upon mercenary Views; and, as an Instance thereof, they flung one of their People into the Fire, for having reserved to his own Use a curious Piece of Plate; at the same time declaring, that they came not to enrich themselves by Plunder; but to do Justice to an injured People, by revenging them upon their cruel and inveterate Enemies. But it seems this equitable People were not so scrupulous in respect of Liquor; for two-and-thirty of them having got into the Duke's Cellar, they caroused in Mirth and Jollity, forgetting where they were, till the Rafter was consumed, and the House fell down, which so effectually stopp'd up the Passage, that they could not return. They continued there seven Days, incessantly calling for Help, but in vain; for they were all suffered to perish without Pity or Remorse. This stately Palace was consumed, with all its Plate, Jewels, and other inestimable Furniture.

The second Division encamped on Tower-Hill; whilst the third, which were the Essex Party, did the like at Mile-End. The former of which entered the Tower of London, notwithstanding its being strongly garrisoned with six hundred Men at Arms, and the same Number of Archers, all Veterans, for the Security of the King's Person: But another Author writes, That the King, being retired with his Family and Council to the Tower, was commanded by the Rebels, encamped at Mile-End, to come immediately to them, unarmed, and without any Force; or they would pull down the Tower, and take away his Life. His Majesty, with Advice of his Council, who were now intimidated, obeyed the Summons, and went unarmed on Horseback to Mile-End: And, the Tower-Gates being opened upon that Occasion, the Rebels lying on the Hill forced their Way thro' into the Tower; which so intimidated the Garrison above-mentioned, that they shamefully and tamely, without Resistance, suffered the monstrous Rabble, and the meanest Scum of the People, to enter the Royal Apartments, abuse every Thing and Person at their Pleasure, even to ask the Queen-Mother to kiss them, and after strict Search to take from thence Simon Sudbury, Archbishop of Canterbury, and Sir Robert Hales, Prior of St. John's, &c. as above-mentioned, whom they dragged out of the Chapel, while employed in their Devotions, and beheaded on Tower-hill.

The Archbishop, who was an eloquent Man, endeavoured to deter them from their Purpose of shedding innocent Blood, with many fair Speeches; but, not able to work upon their abandoned Hearts, he submitted his Neck to the Ax: At the first Stroke of which, he, putting up his Hand to the Wound, said, Aha, it is the Hand of God: At the second Stroke, the Executioner cut off his Fingers Ends, as they lay upon the Wound, and Part of the Arteries, so that his Body sunk down: But this great and good Man did not yield up the Ghost, 'till he was barbarously mangled, with eight Strokes of the Ax, on his Neck and Head. His Body was left on the Place of Execution, all that, and Part of the next Day, 'till the Afternoon, none daring to bury it; and his Head was placed by the Rebels on a Pole, upon London-Bridge.

Upon the King's Arrival at Mile-End, it was demanded by the Rebels, (1.) That all Men should, from thenceforth, be free from Servitude or Bondage, so as there should be no Bondsmen: (2.) That there should be a general Pardon to all Men, of all manner of Actions, and Insurrections, Treasons, Felonies, Transgressions, and Extortions: (3.) That all Men from thenceforward should be enfranchised to buy and sell in every County, City, Borough, Fair, Market, and other Place, within the Realm of England: And, (4.) That no Acre of Land, held in Bondage or Service, should be holden but for four Pence; and, if it had been holden for less in former Times, it should not hereafter be increased. His Majesty heard these and many other Demands and Threatenings; which indicating their Resolution to force his Concession, he regained his Liberty and Permission to return, by yielding to them all. On the same Day, which was June the fifteenth, this Party of the Rebels dispersed, and returned homewards.

In the mean Time, Wat Tyler, with his desperate Crew, committed the greatest Outrages and Barbarities in London and Westminster, under the plausible Pretences of reforming publick Abuses, by murdering many of the most eminent Citizens; amongst whom was Richard Lyons, a noted Jeweller and Goldsmith, and late one of the Sheriffs of London; particularly shewing their Dislike to foreign Merchants, especially the Flemish, whom they dragged from the Churches, where they had fled for Refuge, and, without further Ceremony, beheaded in the Street, if they could not pronounce Bread and Cheese, for which the Flemish were accustomed to say Brot and Cause. Nor did their villainous Cruelty stop here; for they proceeded in murdering and burning, in a most horrid and dreadful Manner, in many Places of the City; and, breaking open the Fleet and Newgate Prisons, released all the Prisoners; and made Proclamation for the decolating of all Lawyers, and Persons concerned in the Exchequer, and even all such as were capable of writing a Letter.

The King, upon his Return to the City, where he met with his Mother, and the remaining Part of his Council and Friends, at the Wardrobe in the Royal of London, whither they had retired in the Confusion, having reported the Issue of his Parley with the Rebels at Mile-End, it was resolved, in this great Perplexity and dreadful Confusion, to offer thelike Terms to the others, who were now posted about West-Smithfield. Wat Tyler pretended to accept of Peace, provided he liked the Conditions; but that was what he never intended, (as will presently appear); for three Charters being sent him, he approved of none: For his Drift was, to gain Time to execute his diabolical Designs, first by murdering the King and all the Nobility, and then to have pillaged the City of London, and burnt it that very Night.

The Court, though still ignorant of his Designs, yet willing to try all Ways and Means to satisfy this imperious and perfidious Traitor, sent Sir John Newton to invite him to a Conference with the King in Smithfield, relating to the Articles he would have inserted in the Charter he insisted on: One of which was, that he should have a Commission to behead all Lawyers, Escheators, and others, whosoever were learned in the Law, or communicated with the Law; willing, as he had boasted four Days before, that, all the Laws of England being destroyed, the Nation should receive their Laws from his Mouth only. And when Sir John desired him to hasten his Departure, he impudently answered, That, if he was so much in Haste, he might go and tell his Master, he would come when he thought proper.

However, he followed a slow Pace on Horseback, at the Head of his Army: But, at the first Sight of the King, setting Spurs to his Horse, he left his Companions, and stooped not, till his Horse touched the Crouper of the King's Horse, whom he accosted in this Manner: "Sir King, seest thou all yonder People?" "Yea truly," quoth the King: "Wherefore sayst thou so?" "Because," said he, "they be all at my Command, and have sworn to me their Faith and Truth, to do all that I would have them." "In good Time," replied the King, "I believe it well." "Then," said Wat Tyler, "believest thou, King, that these People, and as many more as be in London at my Command, will depart from thee thus, without having thy Letters?" "No," said the King. "Ye shall have

But, at these Words, Wat observing that Sir John Newton, who carried the King's Sword, was near him on Horseback, arrogantly told him, That it would better become him to be on Foot in his Presence. Newton replying, he thought there was no Harm in that, it so highly incensed Wat, that he drew his Dagger, with an Intent to stab him, and called him Traitor. Sir John gave him the Lye, and drew his Dagger also. He then demanded from him the Sword he carried: "No," replied the Knight, "it is the King's Sword, of which thou art not worthy; neither durst thou ask it of me, if we had been by ourselves!" Which put Wat quite out of Patience, so that he swore he would have Sir John's Life before he should eat; and was running upon him, when the King, to prevent Consequences, caused the Knight to dismount, in order to pacify the Clown.

Further Demands.

In the Conference held between the King and Tyler, on Horseback, it appeared, that as his Deportment was very rude, so were his Demands as unreasonable; for besides the general Manumission granted by the King to the Bondmen, he imperiously insisted upon the cruel Article above-mentioned, and the Abolition of all the antient Laws of the Kingdom, and that all Forests, Parks and Warrens should be made free and common to all; so that the Poor, as well as the Rich, might have the Liberty to hunt, fish and fowl in all Places; with several other very extravagant Demands.

Whilst Richard was deliberating upon these wicked and absurd Terms, Tyler behaved himself with such a brutish Insolence, that those about the King could not forbear telling him, that the Behaviour of that vile and impudent Traitor was as intolerable as dangerous; wherefore they advised him to get him arrested, which Richard approving of, with some Reluctance. (for fear of the impending Danger) he commanded William Walworth, the Mayor of London, to execute the same, as being within his Jurisdiction, which he readily and boldly performed, by giving Tyler a furious Blow upon the Head with his Sword, whereby he was so dangerously wounded, that he fell from his Horse; and the same being seconded by John Sandewich, and others, he was soon dispatched: Which his Men observing, they furiously cried, Our Captain is murdered, let us revenge his Death; and to that End immediately bent their Bows.

Rebels follow the King's Command into St.
George's Fields.

The King seeing the great Danger he and his Followers were exposed to, with a Prudence and Boldness far superior to the Age of fifteen, rode bravely up to the Rebels, and with a noble Resolution said, What, my Friends, will you kill your King? Be not troubled for the Loss of your Leader; I will be your Captain, and grant what you desire. These Words had so good an Effect upon them, that they soon changed their Resolution, and marched under his Conduct into St. George's Fields; whilst the bold and indefatigable Walworth the Mayor, and the brave Philpot, hastened to the City; where with an amazing and incredible Celerity they raised a thousand Citizens completely armed, and committed them to the Conduct of that brave and experienced Officer Sir Robert

Knots; who marching with his little Army to the King's Assistance, the Rebels at the Sight thereof (though near thirty thousand in Number) were so amazingly struck with a Panick Fear, that they threw down their Arms, and begged for Mercy; which the King not only granted, (though contrary to the Sentiments of his Ministers) but he likewise gave them a Charter of Manumission, as he had to those of Essex. Thus ended this Rebellion, the most dangerous that ever happened in England, or perhaps in any other Kingdom, as will appear from the following Confession of Jack Straw, a little before his Execution, being in a few Days after tried and condemned by the Lord-Mayor:

Threw down their Arms.

That when they assembled on Blackheath, and sent to the King to come to them, they had resolved to have killed all his Attendants, and carried him along with them wheresoever they went, that the Populace might with the greater Assurance join them; and when, by Help of the King's Presence, sufficient Numbers had got together in the several Counties of England, they were to have murdered all those from whom they could expect Resistance, the Nobility and Gentry, and at last the King, with all the Clergy, both Regular and Secular, except only the Friars Mendicants, whom they thought were sufficient for the Celebration of Divine Service throughout the Kingdom: These Things performed, they would have made such Laws as they judged proper for the Government of the People. Wat Tyler was to have been made King of Kent, and the other Ringleaders of the Rebels were to have been appointed Kings over the other Counties, each being to be made a distinct Kingdom: And in the Evening of that Day whereon Wat Tyler was killed, they were to have been joined by the London Rabble, when they were to have sacked and burnt the City. This Straw before his Execution affirmed to have been their real Design, as he desired God to have Mercy on his Soul.

Jack Straw's Confession.

As soon as Peace was restored to the City, the Archbishop's Head was taken down, and the Head of Wat Tyler placed in its stead; to which was added the Head of his Associate Jack Straw, and some others.

This appears to have been a Scheme so black and shocking, that surely the infernal Conclave could not have devised a worse; for, by the Execution thereof, this noble, opulent and populous Kingdom would have inevitably been destroyed; the Preservation of which, under God, was immediately owing to the Bravery of the Londoners: Wherefore the King, in Reward of this great and ever-memorable national Deliverance, (the greatest that ever happened to this Kingdom) not only conferred the Honour of Knighthood upon William Walworth the Mayor, John Philpot, Nicholas Brembre and Robert Laund, Aldermen of this City; but he likewise granted to the first a Fee-Farm of one hundred Pounds per Annum; and to the other three, forty Pounds per Annum, each of the same Tenure.

Several Writers ascribe to the Action of this Day the Addition of the Dagger to the Arms of the City of London, in remembrance of the great Assistance given to the King by the City, and the Overthrow of the Chief of the Rebels by their Mayor, at the Peril of his own Life.

To what has been said of this Rebellion, I shall add some judicious Remarks made thereon by an ingenious and learned Foreigner, viz.

Rapin.
Hist.
Engl.

"It is doubtless beyond the common Course of the Events of this World, that a single Man, as the Mayor of London, should dare to kill this Leader, attended by thirty thousand Men; it is still more surprising, that a young Prince, but fifteen Years of Age, should have the Presence of Mind, and the Resolution, Richard shewed on this Occasion, and that his Boldness should produce so happy an Effect: In fine, that so numerous a Multitude, just glutted with Blood and Slaughter, should disperse on a sudden by a Panick Fear at the Sight of a Handful of armed Citizens, is what cannot be considered without Astonishment, and without ascribing the Cause to Him who holds the Hearts of the People in his Hand."

Soon after, Anne Princess of Bohemia, Sister to the Emperor Wenceslaus, and Royal Bride to King Richard, being arrived at Dover, she was on her Journey to London met at Blackheath by the Mayor, Aldermen and a great Number of the principal Citizens on Horseback richly accoutred, by whom she was conducted to the City, where she was received with the greatest Pomp, and thence conducted in Triumph to Westminster.

The Mayor's Prosecution of Lewd-ness, &c.

Opposed by the Clergy.

The brave Walworth was succeeded this Year by John Northampton, as Mayor of this City, who, observing that Lewdness and Debauchery were connived at by the Bishops and their Subordinates, set about reforming the Licentiousness and Immoralities of the Citizens, severely punishing those found guilty of Whoredom, by causing the Women to be carried through the Streets with their Heads shaven, with Pipes and Trumpets sounding before them. However, these Proceedings of the Mayor drew upon him the Hatred of the Bishops and inferior Clergy, for usurping their Authority, as they pretended, and breaking in upon their Jurisdiction. Wherefore they strictly enjoined him to desist from such Practices for the future. But Northampton, without regarding this Order, or the Threats attending it, proceeded in the Work of Reformation, in Opposition to the Practices of the Mendicant Friars, who, instead of discouraging Vice, (according to some) were the chief Promoters of it; and in order to enrich themselves, tho' contrary both to their Institution and Oaths, they approved of the Vices of the Nobility and Gentry, and encouraged the Commonalty in all manner of Wickedness, calling Good Evil, and Evil Good, by which they became Gainers by the Vices of both; and whose Practice was to seduce Princes by Flattery, and the Populace with Lyes, precipitately hurrying both to Destruction, by corrupting their Manners, and debauching their Morals.

Stat. Larg.
4 Rich. II.
No Victualler to exercise a judicial Office.

The said Mayor procured an Act of Parliament, that no Victualler should exercise any judicial Office in London, nor in any other City, Borough, Town or Sea-Port in the Kingdom; unless in such Towns, where no other sufficient Person could be found qualified for such an Office; in which Case every such Person was to abstain from the Exercise of such Trade, during the Time of his Office, upon Pain of forfeiting all the Victuals he should sell during that Time; by which Act all those who were deemed Victuallers, such as Fishmongers, Butchers and Grocers, were rendered incapable of serving the Office of Mayor.

This Mayor appears to have been a great Enemy to the Fishmongers; for by his Management an Act of Parliament was obtained to lay that Trade open, by which all Foreigners in Amity with the King were allowed to sell their Fish in London, and elsewhere, both by Wholesale and Retail, by which the Company, which before had been justly esteemed one of the most flourishing of the City, was thereby reduced to be one of the poorest: Nor did his Ill-will to this Corporation stop here; for he compelled them to acknowledge, that their Occupation was no Craft, and therefore unworthy of being reckoned amongst the other Mysteries.

disfranchi-
sed.

Upon the Exhibition of the Bills to Parliament, whereon the two above-mentioned Acts are founded, the Mayor and Aldermen were not only present at the Reading thereof, but also most of the Fishmongers, who, by their Advocate Nicholas Exton, humbly intreated the King to take them and their Company into his Protection, so that no corporal Hurt might befall them: Whereupon the King strictly enjoined both Parties to keep the Peace, upon Pain of losing all their Possessions.

Co. Abrid.
Rec.

Walter Sibell, a Fishmonger, praying to be heard, he declared, that those Petitions were not exhibited with a View to serve the Publick, but rather out of Pique to the Fishmongers, because, when the principal Petitioners were convicted of divers high Crimes and Misdemeanors in the preceding Reign, they were therefore committed to Prison by certain Fishmongers, then the chief Magistrates of the City, for which they had bore them an irreconcilable Hatred ever since. This Speech nettled John Moore, a Mercer, to such a Degree, that he said, the Citizens of London intended nothing more than to live in Peace with them, unless they went about to let into the City again the Rebels of Kent and Essex, as the said Walter, and others, had lately done; which Walter laying hold of, desired the Lords to bear Witness; whereupon Moore explained himself, by saying, as the Report went, praying the same might be inquired into, which was granted.

[It agrees with the Record.]

The City of London looked upon this Grant to be an abſolute Infringement of its antient Rights and Privileges, granted and confirmed by former Kings; eſpecially by the firſt Charter of Edward III. dated the ſixth of March, in the firſt Year of his Reign, by Conſent of Parliamēt; which probably might be one Reaſon for the Application made to the King for a Confirmation of all their Rights, Liberties, Free Cuſtoms, Ordinances, Articles, Letters, and Charters, by the Mediation of the next Parliamēt. And yet, tho' the Citizens obtained their Requeſt; and the ſaid Charter of Confirmation in its ſeventy-third Article ſets forth, That the Conſtable of the Tower of London ſhould make no Prizes by Land, nor by Water, of Viſtual, or other Thing whatſoever, of the Men of the ſaid City, nor of any other coming towards the ſaid City, or going thence, or cauſe to be arreſted the Ships or Boats bringing Viſtuals, or other ſuch-like Goods, to or from the ſaid City; we ſhall find that the King, by and with the Advice and Conſent of his Parliamēt, did confirm this ſoreſaid Grant to the Conſtable of the Tower, in the very Year after he had granted and confirmed the City Charter, as above.

In the ſeventh Year of this Reign, we have another Inſtance of the great Intereſt the City of London had in Parliamēt; for the Commons diſcovering, as is ſuppoſed, ſome Intention of the Crown to ſhake the antient Government of the City, again petitioned the King to confirm the Liberties, &c. thereof. The Petition is recorded to Poſterity in French, and its Contents are as follow: "Alſo, the Commons in this preſent Parliamēt aſſembled pray, for the greater Quiet and Nouriſhing of the Peace amongſt your liege Subjects, and for common Benefit, That your Citizens of your City of London be entirely in this preſent Parliamēt reſtored to their Franchiſes and free Uſages, and that it may pleaſe your Highneſs, of your ſpecial Grace, to grant and confirm to your ſaid Citizens, and to their Succeſſors, by your Letters Patents, all their Liberties and free Uſages, as entire and full as they or their Predeceſſors have enjoyed at any time by the Favour of your noble Progenitors, with the Clause of Licet uſi non fuerint, vel abuſi fuerint; i. e. whether the ſame were not uſed, or ever abuſed; in like manner with the Franchiſes, which they enjoy by your own moſt gracious Charter, and are confirmed, any Statutes, Judgments, Surrenders, Ordinances, or any Charters or Grants of your Maſteſty, or your Progenitors aforeſaid, in Time paſt made and granted, to the contrary notwithstanding, &c."

To which the King answered, Le Roi le veſt, So it pleaſeth the King: And accordingly there paſſed in this preſent Parliamēt a Charter, reciting by Inſpecimus the ſeveral Charters of Confirmation

Upon the passing of this great Law for the ratifying and confirming of the antient Liberties and Customs of the City, a Proclamation was set forth and published by Sir Nicholas Brembre, Knight, then Lord-Mayor, as well on behalf of the King as of himself. The Proclamation is very memorable, (1.) Because it was published by Brembre, who, as Historians, and even the Parliament Rolls, assure us, was highly devoted to the Interest of Richard the Second. (2.) Because that Proclamation was a full and true Comment, Exposition, and Declaration of the then present Sense and Understanding, not only of the King and Parliament, when they enacted this Law, 7th Rich. II. but of the Generality of the City of London.

This Proclamation entered and enrolled, as a Matter of great Consequence to Posterity, is preserved among the City Records to this Day in Lib. H. fol. 169 a and b in the Latin Tongue, of which the following is a Translation:

A Proclamation made in the Mayoralty of Nicholas Brembre, Knight, Mayor, on Friday after the Feast of the B. V. Mary, and in the seventh Year of the Reign of Richard II. concerning the Liberties lately granted to the Citizens of London, by the Lord the King in his Parliament, and also concerning certain antient Liberties renewed by the Lord the King, and newly confirmed to the said Citizens by his Royal Charter.

Lord-
Mayor's Proclamation
of the said Charter.

"It is proclaimed, on the Part of the Lord our King, and of the Mayor of the City of London, by virtue of the Confirmation and Concession made by the said Lord the King, concerning the Liberties and antient Customs of the said City, as well by Charters of the Kings of England granted unto them, as without Charters, that it may be made known to all Foreigners concerning the following Liberties of the said Citizens, especially touching as well the said Foreigners as the Citizens of the City aforefaid:

"So that no Summons, Attachment, or Execution be made by any Ministers or Officers of the Lord the King, or of his Heirs, either with or without a Warrant, within the Liberties of the City aforefaid, but by the Officers of the City only.

"Also the same Lord our King has, out of his special Grace, by his Charter granted and confirmed, as will fully appear by having recourse to the said Charters and Letters, the Gifts,

"Grants,

"Grants, Confirmations, Innovations, and the Ordinances aforesaid; and also all the Articles, and all other and every Thing contained, recited, explained in all the Charters and Letters as well of him the Lord the King, as any of his Progenitors, ratifying and granting all and each thereof, at the Instance and Request of the Commons of the Realm of England, in his last Parliament, for the nourishing greater Quiet and Peace among his liege Subjects, and for the publick Good, and by and with the Assent of the Prelates, Lords, Nobility, and great Men, assisting him in the same Parliament, for himself and his Heirs, as much as in him lies, to the Citizens of the foresaid City, and to their Heirs and Successors, Citizens of the same City.

"Also the same our Lord the King has further granted, at the Instance and Request as aforesaid, and by the Assent aforesaid, and also by his own Charters confirmed, for himself and his Heirs aforesaid, that the foresaid Citizens, and their Successors, Citizens of the City aforesaid, shall be as entirely and fully restored to all their Liberties and free Customs, as ever they or their Predecessors have at any Time more freely and fully enjoyed the same under the Predecessors of him the Lord the King.

"Also the same the Lord our King willeth, That, altho' the same Citizens, or their Predecessors, Citizens of the City aforesaid, have not, on any Occasion whatsoever, hitherto fully used any or either of the Liberties, Acquittances, Grants, Ordinances, Articles, or free Customs, or other Things granted in the said Charters or Letters, or perhaps have abused any or all of the Acquittances, Grants, Ordinances, Articles, or free Customs, or any other Things, in the same Charters or Letters, as aforesaid, contained; nevertheless the same Citizens, and their Heirs and Successors, Citizens of the City aforesaid, may for the future fully enjoy and use all and singular the Liberties, Acquittances, Grants, Ordinances, Articles, free Customs, and whatsoever else is contained in the Charters and Letters aforesaid, whether the same were not used, or perhaps abused, and every one of them, without Let or Impediment of the same the Lord the King, or of his Heirs, Justices, Escheators, Sheriffs, or of any other his Bailiffs or Ministers whomsoever, any Statutes or Ordinances published, or Judgments given, or any Charters of the same the Lord the King, or of his Progenitors aforesaid, in Times past made and granted, to the contrary notwithstanding."

It may be observed, from the Tenor of this Proclamation, that it was not penned or published according to the mere Will and Understanding of Brembre, the Lord-Mayor, or of his Council, but that it had its original Authority from the King.

The Fishmongers, who in the preceding Year had been grievously pestered by Northampton, the Mayor, were now by Parliament restored to their antient Rights and Privileges, except the Liberty of holding Courts; all Affairs belonging to the said Company being to be decided in the Mayor's Court, conformable to the late Charter.

NUMB. XIII.

About the Beginning of February, John Northampton, alias Cumbertown, or Troubletown, (the late Mayor) so denominated from his factious Temper, raised a great Sedition in the City, by frequently walking the Streets in a riotous Manner, attended by a vast Concourse of People. While Nicholas Brembre, the Mayor, was employed in taking the necessary Precautions for preventing the bad Consequences thereof, John Constantine, a Shoemaker, was apprehended for encouraging the Populace to stand by Northampton; and, being carried directly by Sir Robert Knowles to Guildhall, he was immediately arraigned, and, as one of the chief Fomenters of the Insurrection, by Evidence and his own Confession, convicted, and presently beheaded. And Northampton being impeached by his own Chaplain, of conspiring against the King and Government, and of being the principal Author of the late Sedition, he was carried before a Convention of the Nobility at Reading; where he was sentenced to perpetual Imprisonment, at the Distance of one hundred Miles from London; and all his Effects were seized to the King's Use. The Sentence was rigorously executed, and he sent Prisoner to Tintagel Castle in Cornwall. As for the rest of these Rioters, they obtained a free Pardon of all Treasons, Felonies, and other Crimes regarding Life, by the King, at the Intercession of Parliament, except Northampton, John Moore, and Richard Northbury, Mercers; his Majesty reserving to himself all Forfeitures, Escheats, and the Right of selling Pardons for petty Offences.

In the seventh Year of King Richard II. at a great Meeting of the Commons, or a Common Hall, Petitions were presented to the Mayor, setting forth, that, for Want of sufficient Persons chosen, divers Things were passed in Common-Council more by Clamour than Reason; for Prevention whereof, several Articles were proposed to be experimented, and, if found good and useful, to be confirmed: Amongst which one is, that the Common-Council might consist of sufficient People: And it was ordained, that the Alderman of each Ward should cause to be chosen four of each Ward for Common-Councilmen. Which Choice of Common-Councilmen appears by the Liber Albus to have been aforesaid in certain Mysteries or Crafts; some of which chose six, others four, and others only two.

By the Means of Nicholas Brembre, then (8th of March) Mayor, most, if not all the Aldermen of the City, were turned out by the Common-Council, and new ones chosen in their Room for the respective Wards: The first Return whereof begins thus:

Bread-Street—Dominus Nicholas Brembre, Miles, electus est in Alderman Wardæ prædictæ per probos Homines ejusdem Wardæ; i. e. "Bread-Street—Sir Nicholas Brembre, Knight, was chosen Alderman of the said Ward by the discreet Men of the said Ward." Which Proceedings and Elections were confirmed by a Warrant from the King, dated the 8th of March, at Westminster, An. Reg. 7mo.

The Citizens of London lent the King four thousand Marks; for the Security and Re-payment of which, he granted to the Mayor and Commonalty of the City an Obligation in

Mad. Hist. Exch. A.D. 1385 John Gyffers, the Mayor, together with the Aldermen and Citizens, presented to the Treasurer and Barons of the Exchequer Hamon Godebeap and William de Buddle for Sheriffs; but, when required by the Barons to take an Oath for their good Deportment, the Mayor replied, that the Persons presented by them to that Office, were not obliged, nor ought they, to take an Oath concerning the Exercise of their Office any where but before the Mayor and Aldermen of the City; and that, since the first Concession made to the Citizens of chusing the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, and of discharging them at Pleasure, it had not been known that ever any such Oath had been taken, except once, when the City was seized in the Hands of Edward the First: Therefore they prayed, that the said Hamon and William might be admitted to the said Office upon their Presentation, according to Custom.

To which it was answered, That altho' it belonged to the Citizens, by Virtue of their Charters, to chuse Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, and to present them at the Exchequer; yet the Persons so chosen were not exempt from taking the afore-said Oath, unless a particular Exemption in that Behalf were granted by the King; therefore the Mayor, &c. were told by the Treasurer and Barons, that, unless the said Hamon and William took the Oath, they could by no Means accept of, or admit them for Sheriffs, without the King's special Command, although they did not thereby impeach or make void the said Election; and that, if the said Persons should presume to execute the Office of Sheriffs, without being sworn as afore-said, it would be at their Peril.

Nor was this the only Mortification received by the Citizens; for the Constable of the Tower, notwithstanding the late Confirmation of their Charters in Parliament, continued to demand the Customs, Pence, and Profits, granted to his Office in the sixth Year of this Reign; a Privilege so prejudicial to the City, that it was resolved to petition his Majesty to revoke the said Grant. But, instead of Redress, the Citizens were mortified by not only the King's, but the Parliament's Confirmation also of the said Grant unto the Constable of the Tower, in this Form, taken from the Original:

Ex. Rot. Clauff. An. 9 Rich. II.

Privileges of the Constable of the Tower confirmed.

"We, with the Advice and Assent of the Prelates and other Noblemen in our Parliament, have graciously consented on our Part to the fore-said Supplication of the Constable, according to his Petition. And therefore we command you, That on your Part ye take Care that all and singular the Liberties and Franchises belonging to our said Tower be published, proclaimed, and pronounced distinctly within your City afore-said, and its Suburbs, in such Places as shall be most proper: And that we will, that our said Tower may enjoy and use the Liberties and Franchises afore-said in the Form afore-said; the Liberties and Franchises granted by us to the said Citizens and the Commonalty notwithstanding: And that ye permit the said Constable to have and receive, by himself or by his Servants, the "Rights and Profits afore-said, belonging unto the said Tower. Witness Myself at Westminster, the twenty-second of November, in the ninth Year of our Reign."

By Petition granted by the King himself in Parliament. Et erat Patens.

[Agrees with the Record.]

This, however, proved a Bone of Contention for several Ages, till the Reign of King James I. when the Affair was settled by his Majesty in Favour of the City.

Nor can we in any wise wonder at this royal Favour, which at this and other Times has granted and supported the Privileges of this Fortrefs, and of which Fitz-Stephens writes, that "it was a most strong and very great Pala-tine Tower; whose Turrets and Walls do rise from a very deep Foundation, and its Mortar is tempered with the Blood of Beasts;" if we take a cursory View of it, from its Foundation to the present Time.

THIS famous Tower of London is situated on the East of the City, near the Thames; whose Limits are not circumscribed by the scanty Boundary of the Tower-Wall nor Ditch, but contain all that Plot of Ground called the Tower-Liberty, because subject to no Jurisdiction but that of the Tower itself. This Extent of Ground includes both the Tower-Hills, Part of East-Smithfield, Rosemary-Lane, Welleclose-Square, Little Minories and Artillery-Street, French-Alley, Duke-Street, Steward-Street, Gun-Street, Fort-Street, and the other Courts and Alleys within their Compass in Spital-Fields, &c. But the Tower, properly so called, is surrounded with a broad and deep Ditch, in some Places an hundred and twenty Feet broad, supplied plied with Water from the Thames, which washes its South Bounds, within which is a strong and lofty Wall.

Extent of the Tower.

The Contents of the Plot, within the Walls, measure twelve Acres and five Rods. And the Circumference, on the Outside of the Ditch, measures three thousand one hundred and fifty-six Feet: On which Ground stand eighteen Towers, commonly known by these Names, the White Tower, Bloody, Hall, St. Thomas's, Lamborn, Cradle, Well, Salt, Broad Arrows, Castle, Martin's, Bower, Flint, Dwelling, Beauchamp, the Bell, the Middle, and the Lions Tower, &c. and a spacious Wharf next the River.

If within the City Bounds.

It has been a Matter of great Debate, whether this royal Fortrefs be within the City of London: But that was finally determined, upon a View and strict Examination, in Michaelmas Term, 13 Jac. I. in the Trial of the Murderers of Sir Thomas Overbury, who was poisoned in a Chamber situate on the West Part of the antient Wall of London, which is yet discoverable, and extendeth through the Tower; when it was adjudged, that all that Portion of the Tower which is environed within the said Wall, or on the West Part thereof, is within the City of London, within the Ward of the Tower, and Parish of All-Saints, Barking; and that the Residue of this Fortrefs, lying on the East of the said antient Wall, is within the County of Middlesex. And accordingly the Murderers were tried in London.

White Tower built.

This Tower, which has been, without any credible Authority, vulgarly assigned to a Roman Original under Julius Caesar, consisted at first of no more than what at this Time is called the White Tower, at its first Foundation by William the Conqueror, as we have noted before in Page 38; as it is supposed, either to overawe the Londoners, or to defend the City on that Side, where the Wall and the Towers, originally built for its Defence on the South-East, were subverted by the Flux and Reflux of the Tide, and the City lay most exposed to an Enemy both by Land and Water, and for a Place of Safety and Retreat of the Royal Family in Case of Need: And this first Fortrefs, or great square Tower, stands upon the Spot where the second Bulwark once stood, in the East Part of the Wall from the Thames. It was greatly shaken in the next Reign, A. D. 1090, by a violent Tempest of Wind, which, amongst other Damages, (see Page 39) blew down six hundred Houses in the City: Which Misfortune was repaired, and a Castle was built under the same Tower, on the South Side; which was incastellated round about, at a great Expence: For History informs us, that William Rufus challenged the Investiture of Prelates, and pillaged and shaved the People by Tribute, especially to spend it about the Tower of London and the Great Hall at Westminster. These Repairs and Additions were not finished till the Reign of King Henry I. his Successor: And yet this Tower stood in need of further Help in 1155, when Thomas Becket, Archbishop of Canterbury, and Chancellor to King Henry II. caused it to be repaired again. In 1190 Lord Chancellor Lang-champ, Bishop of Ely, encompassed the Premises with a Wall and Ditch; and in this Work, in a very arbitrary Manner, broke into and deprived both the Church of the Holy Trinity, the Hospital of St. Catharine, and the City of London, of some of their Properties: For, after he had enclosed the Tower and Castle with an outward Wall of Stone embattled, he caused a deep Ditch to be dug round, from the South-East Point by the North Side to the South-West Corner of the said Wall, in order to environ it with the River Thames: In which Work the Mill belonging to the Brethren of the Hospital of St. Catharine's, and standing on the Site of Iron-Gate, as at present called, was removed, and Part of a Garden, which they had lett to the King at six Marks per Ann. was rooted up, and, for the most Part, laid waste; and another Piece of Ground next Smithfield, belonging to the Priory of the Holy Trinity without Aldgate, worth half a Mark per Annum, was taken from it; and the City was deprived of all the Ground from the White Tower to the Postern Gate.

In 1239 King Henry III. in order to overawe the Citizens, and to make them the more readily submit to his Exactions, added several Bulwarks to the foregoing: But they were so much damaged by an Earthquake in the following Year, that his Majesty commanded them to be restored and augmented; which, when finished, consisted of a Stone Gate, Bulwark, &c. on the West Side or Entrance. But this new Work, which is recorded to have cost upwards of twelve thousand Marks, fell down in the same Manner a few Years after.

The same King also commanded the Keepers of the Tower Work to repair the Garner within the said Tower, and to amend it well throughout, wherever it stood in Need; and so to lengthen the leaden Gutters of the great Tower, from the Top, for the Conveyance of Rain Water, that they should reach to the Ground, to prevent the dripping of the said Rain Water upon the new Plaster Work, to the great Detriment and Decay thereof; and to make upon the said Tower, on the South Side above, deep Alures, of good and strong Timber, and to be well leaded all over; by which People might see even to the Foot of the said Tower, and, if needful, to ascend and descend the better: Also to whiten the whole Chapel of St. John Evangelist in the same Tower; and to whiten all the old Wall about the often-mentioned Tower, as hereafter is more particularly related; from whence it is probable this Building took the Name of the White Tower.

King Edward I. so highly approved of the Improvements made to this Fortrefs by King Henry, that he, in the second Year of his Reign, commanded his Treasurer and Chamberlain certain Sums of Money out of his Exchequer for finishing the Work of the Ditch, then new made about the said Bulwark, now called the Lion Tower; so called from the Lions and other wild Beasts lodged therein by the King's Command, supposed to be the Fancy of Henry I. who greatly delighted in those foreign Animals. Henry III. whose regal Shield of Arms bore three Leopards, received a Present from the Emperor Frederick in 1235 of three living Animals of that Species, which were committed to the same Place under proper Keepers: And King Edward II. commanded the Sheriffs of London to pay out of the Fee-Farm of the

the City six Pence per Day to the Keeper of the Leopards for their Maintenance, and three Halfpence for the Diet of their Keeper. In the 16th of Edw. III. there remained in this Tower only one Leopard; but one Robert Bowre was charged with the Custody of one Lion, one Lioness, and two Cattes Lions. This Bulwark is still continued in the same Use, and much better stocked, as shall be more particularly shewn below.

King Edward IV. added to the Fortifications of this Tower of London, and inclosed with a Brick Wall that Parcel of Ground, which before was only encroached upon by a Mud Wall, as mentioned on Page 114, taken out of Tower-Hill, West from the Lions-Tower, now called the Bulwark. In the fifth Year of this Reign, the King's Officers erected a Scaffold and a Gallows for the Execution of Offenders: Of which when the City complained, the King commanded the following Proclamation to be published:

Scaffold and Gallows on Tower-Hill.

W. Dunthorn.

"Forasmuch as on the seventh Day of this present Month of November Gallows were erected and set up besides our Tower of London, within the Liberties and Franchises of our City of London, in Derogation and Prejudice of the Liberties and Franchises of this City; the King our Sovereign Lord willeth, that it be certainly understood, that the Erection and Setting-up of the said Gallows was not done by his Commandment. Wherefore the King our Sovereign Lord willeth, that the Erection or Setting-up of the said Gallows be not any Precedent or Example, thereby hereafter to be taken in Hurt, Prejudice, or Derogation of the Franchises, Liberties, and Privileges of the City, which he at all Times hath had, and hath in his Benevolence, tender Favour, and good Grace, &c.

"At Westminster, the ninth of November, in the fifth Year of our Reign."

From which Time the City has always a large Scaffold and Gallows of Timber, prepared at their own Expence, for the Execution of such as are ordered to be hanged or beheaded on Tower-Hill.

There are other Repairs recorded to have been done to this Fortrefs, particularly in the Year 1484, when Masons, Bricklayers, and other Workmen were pressed by the Surveyor of the King's Works to expedite the Buildings therein, commanded by King Richard III. In 1532 Henry VIII. repaired the White Tower, and some other Parts. And in the next Reign a Frenchman, who lodged in the round Bulwark, between the West Gate and the Postern or Draw-Bridge, called the Warders Gate, blew up the said Bulwark, and himself therewith, without further Damage; which Bulwark was immediately rebuilt.

Encroachments removed.

The Encroachments on the Soil of this royal Fortrefs in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, by a great Number of Tenements erected over the Ditch, and upon the waste Ground within its Liberty, became such a Nuisance, Incumbrance, and Weakening to the Tower, that, after a strict Enquiry into its present State, there issued an Order from the Privy Council for the pulling of them all down; which was accordingly executed, to the great Improvement and Advantage of the Fortification.

But the most thorough Repairs have been made since the Restoration: For in 1663 the Ditch was scoured, all the Wharfing about it was new built of Brick and Stone, and Sluices contrived for letting in and retaining the Thames Water, as Occasion may require. The Walls and Windows of the White Tower, being very much decayed, were mended: Two of the Turrets were wholly taken down, and new Funds set up, with the King's Arms and Imperial Crowns over them: All which were made entirely new, the old having been defaced by the Garrison in the Time of the late Rebellion.

The Buildings at present within the Walls are, the Church, the White Tower, the Offices of Ordinance, of the Mint, of the Keepers of the Records, the Jewel Office, the Horse Armory, the Grand Storehouse, the New or Small Armory, handsome Brick Houses for the chief Officers residing in the Tower, with many lesser Houses for other Officers, Barracks for Soldiers on Duty, besides Prisons for Prisoners of State, which are commonly delivered to the Care of some Warder. In digging the Foundations of those large Storehouses, which are situate on the South Side of what is called Cesar's Chapel, the Workmen (in 1720, or thereabout) met with old Foundations of Stone, above three Yards in Breadth, supposed to be the Remains of some antient Tower on that Spot, of which History gives no Account; and so cemented together, that it was with much Difficulty they were forced up by Beetle and Wedges.

The Church was founded by King Edward III. and dedicated in the Name of St. Peter-in-Chains, commonly called St. Peter ad Vincula within the Tower; who, as appears by the Tower Records, in the twenty-eighth Year of his Reign, granted certain Rents, at a certain Custom of Stabotes or Stalboters, a Kind of Fiber-Boats, for the Maintenance of a Rector and three Chaplains, settled here by his royal Appointment. To these he added two more Chaplains in his thirtieth Year; and, for the Maintenance of these five Chaplains and a Rector, he granted also certain Allowances, to be paid for some Tenements in London, and at Tower-Hill, and Petty-Wales; and ordained certain Fees to be paid by the Constable, Officers, and Moneyers, for the same Purpose, which is further explained by an old Record of 8 Hen. V. of a Grant to John Salmonby, Rector of the Chapel in the Tower; whereby is granted to him sixty Shillings Rent, and the Appurtenances in Candlewick-Street, London, for and towards his Subsistence; thirty-eight Shillings and eight Pence for a Tenement on Tower-Hill, and Little Wales; fifty-eight Shillings per Ann. from the Hospital of St. Catharine; ten Marks per Ann. to be paid by the Constable of the Tower, twenty Shillings per Ann. of his Good-will; thirteen Shillings per Ann. from the Master of the Mint; and of every Artificer and Stipendiary a certain Tithe out of their Wages and Stipends.

Pat. 8. Hen. V. m. 5.

From which and other Records it has been collected, that the Bounds of this Rectory are all the Compass of the Tower; and it hath some Territories without, as Little Tower-Hill, which was therefore called the King's Soil of Little Tower-Hill, adjoining unto which was a Place called

Parish of St. Peter's.

The

The King's Waife of Rosemary-Lane, or Hog-Lane. But these Boundaries, as well as the Precinct of the Tower, which contains all the Soil or Liberty between Barking Church and Crutbet-Friars, St. Mary Grace's, and St. Catherine's, have been an old Controversy between the Magistrates of the City, and the Officers of the Tower.

What this Church was in former Times.

As to the Capacity and Ornaments of this Church; it is very evident to have been a large and spacious Building, frequented by the Kings themselves for their Devotion, and adorned with Chancels, Shrines, and Images; as more particularly appears from a Letter mandatory of the King to the Keeper of the Tower Works, in the 25th of Hen. III. A. D. 1241, for the repairing and adorning of this Church, in this Form, Rex eisdem [Castrodiabus Operationis Turris] Salutem precipimus, &c.

King Hen. III's Letter for the Repair thereof.

Liberat. 25 H. III. m. 20.

"The King to the Keepers of the Tower Works sendeth, greeting. We command you to brush or plaister with Lime, well and decently, the Chancel of St. Mary, in the Church of St. Peter, within the Bailiffwick of our Tower of London, and the Chancel of St. Peter in the same Church, and from the Entrance of the Chancel of St. Peter to the Space of four Feet beyond the Stalls made for our own and our Queen's Use in the said Church; and the said Stalls to be painted; and the Little Mary, with her Shrine, and the Images of St. Peter, St. Nicholas, and St. Catharine, and the Beam beyond the Altar of St. Peter, and the Little Cross, with its Images, [i. e. of Christ, John, and Mary] to be coloured anew, and to be refreshed with good Colours: And that ye cause to be made a certain Image of St. Christopher holding and carrying Jesus, where it may best and most conveniently be done and painted in the foresaid Church: And that ye cause two fair Tables to be made, and to be painted of the best Colours, concerning the Stories of the blessed Nicholas and Catharine, before the Altars of the said Saints in the same Church: And that ye cause to be made two fair Cherubims, with a cheerful and joyful Countenance, standing on the right and left of the great Cross in the said Church; and moreover one Marble Font, with Marble Pillars, well and handsomely wrought. And the Cost that for this you shall be at, by the View and Witnes of liege Men, shall be reckoned to you at the Exchequer. Witnes the King at Windsor, the tenth Day of December."

In Situation, &c.

This Church is situate at the North-West Angle of Northumberland Walk, at the End of the new Armory, and fronting the Parade: Its Walls are built of bolder and squared Stone, and its Roof supported by Arches and Columns of the Gotbick Order: The Floor is paved with Stone, and there are two Isles.

The East End, and more than half down the Sides, is wainscoted, and the Pillars cased with Oak about eight Feet high: It is also pewed, and the Pulpit and Altar-piece are all of the same Wood; the latter is about fourteen Feet high, with a Cornish and Pediment; but the Decalogue is not there dependicled, though the Tables are arched, as those usually for the Commandments, and placed under a Cherub between two Festoons, &c. The Roof is ceiled with Timber. The Dimensions are, Length sixty-six Feet, Breadth fifty-four, Altitude about twenty-four.

The Living is a Rectory in the Gift of the King, valued at about sixty Pounds per Ann. The present Incumbent is the Rev. Mr. Hervey, paid by the King as Minister of the Tower Garrison, rated in the King's Books eighteen Pounds three Shillings and four Pence. There is no Lecture, nor Organ: Prayers are on Wednesdays, Fridays, and Holidays, about Eleven. The Rector hereof has no Institution and Induction, and the Living is exempt from Archiepiscopal Jurisdiction.

The antientest Monument in this Church is that of Sir Richard Cholmondeley, Lieutenant of the Tower in the Reign of King Henry VII. and of his Wife Elizabeth, as appears by the Inscription round the Table-Stone Edge—Jacent Corpora Richardi Cholmondeley, Militis, et Domine Elizabethæ, Conjugis sue: Qui—Quarum Animabus [Animabus] Deus propitiatur. Amen. Upon which lies his Figure in Armour, and hath a Collar gilded (which seems to be a Collar of SS) about his Neck, and a Rose hanging before. This Monument formerly stood in the Middle of the Church, but now is removed to the Side against the North Wall. In the Chancel is a very stately Monument of the Blounts; under which were interred Sir Richard Blount, Lieutenant of the Tower, who died August 11, 1564, and Sir Michael Blount, his Son and Successor in the same Post, and Dame Mary, Sir Michael's Wife, deceased December 23, 1592.

Monuments in this Church of St. Peter.

Sir Alan Appy, Lieutenant of the Tower, and Victualler of his Majesty's Navy, departed May 14, 1630.

On the Pavement are flat Stones in the Name of Frances, Wife of William Powoy, Gent. and Daughter to Edward Sherborn, Esq; Clerk of the Ordnance. She deceased October 22, 1669.—Of John Agges, Yeoman, Warder of the Tower, aged thirty-three Years, January 20, 1640.—Of Cobham Deves, late of Dover, Mariner, Aug. 20, 1608.—And of Talbot Edwards, late Keeper of his Majesty's Regalia, September 30, 1674, aged eighty.

There is also on the North Wall a Monument, with this Inscription, done in gold Letters on black Marble:

"Erected in Memory of Capt. Valentine Pyne, late Master-Gunner of England; second Son of George Pyne, of Currimallet, in the County of Somerset, Gent. who following the Footsteps of his Father, in Loyalty and Obedience to his Sovereign, trailed a Pike, under the Command of his said Father, in the late Expedition at Calais, in the Year 1625; and in the Year 1627, in the Expedition of the Isle of Rhee. After that he betook himself to his Majesty's Fleet, where he served at Sea till the late unhappy Rebellion, and, during that Rebellion, in his Majesty's Service by Land; after whose Death he voluntarily followed the Command of Prince Rupert, for the Space of fifteen Years, both in his Expedition at Sea, and in the Wars of Germany, till his now Majesty's happy Restoration; since which Time he commanded some of his Majesty's Ships in

"the first War against the Dutch: And in Re-
 "compence of his faithful Service, his Majesty
 "was graciously pleas'd to elect him Master-
 "Gunner of England. In which Capacity he "departed this Life, (which he led single) the "last Day of April, Anno Dom. 1677, in the "twenty-eighth Year of his Majesty's Reign.
 "Aged seventy-four Years.

Against a Pillar fronting Southward, is a great white Marble Monument, enriched with Trophy

 with this Inscription:

At the North-East Angle of the Church, a Monument of white Marble, with his Bust, is erected for William Bridges, Esq; on which is this Inscription:

To the MEMORY of

"William Bridges, Esq; late Inhabitant of "this Place, and Surveyor-General of the Ord"nance.

"In that, and other considerable Offices,

"through which he pass'd, at different Times,
 "a diligent and faithful Servant to the Crown,
 "and to his Country in Parliament; assiduous
 "in publick Business, and, in his private Life,
 "possessing an happy Equality of Temper, ad"orned with exemplary Sobriety and Virtue.
 "He died October 30, 1714, and lies buried at
 "the East End of this Chapel.

"Elizabeth Bridges, his only surviving Sister
 "and Executrix, hath caused this Monu"ment to be erected, as a grateful Memorial
 "of the best of Friends and Brothers. Anno Dom.

In the Pavement in the South Isle is a Stone
 with this Inscription:

"Here lies the Body of Mrs. Rebecca Sil-
 "vester, the youngest Daughter of Mr. Thomas
 "and Sarah Silvester, who departed this Life
 "the 7th of January, 1717, aged sixteen Years,
 "three Months, and three Days."

Near that, another with the following Inscription:

"Here lie the Bodies of Elizabeth and Han"nah, Daughters of John and Elizabeth Jones,
 "of the Tower. They departed this Life, Eli"zabeth on the 6th of August, 1704; and Han"nah on the 31st of January, 1706: As also the "Body of Mr. John Bristow, who departed this "Life the 30th of November, 1718."

How soon alas! for in his early Bloom,
 In Prime of Life he meets an earthly Tomb;
 As by the Number of his Days appears,
 Which reach'd but just to one and twenty Years.
 O! where's that stubborn Soul that can forbear,
 Hearing this Loss, and not let fall a Tear!

Near the Communion-Table is a Stone thus inscribed:

"Here lies the Body of Mr. Edward Sil-
 "vester, eldest Son of Mr. Thomas and Mrs.
 "Sarah Silvester, who departed this Life the "12th of October, 1718, in the twenty-eighth
 "Year of his Age.

"Also the Body of Thomas Silvester, the "youngest Son of Thomas and Sarah Silvester,
 "who departed this Life the 27th Day of "May, 1727, in the twenty-eighth Year of his "Age."

A little lower in the South Isle, on a white Marble Stone in the Pavement, is this Inscrp-
 tion:

"Here lies Catherine, the beloved Wife
 "of the Honourable Colonel Williamson, De"puty-Lieutenant of the Tower, who lived
 "esteemed, and died lamented by all who "knew her, March the 25th, 1729."

In the same Isle, a whole Family lies buried under a Stone, with this Inscription:

"To the Memory of Elizabeth, Wife of James
 "Whittaker, who died September the 11th, 1731,
 "aged thirty-nine; and of William, their second,
 "and Thomas, their third Son. And to the "Memory of James Whittaker, eldest Son of the "said James and Elizabeth, who died April the "7th, 1732, aged nine.

Memor ejus brevis avi.

"And to the Memory of James Whittaker,
"Gent. Husband of the abovefaid Elizabeth,
"and Father of the faid Children, who died
"December the 4th, 1732, aged thirty-nine.

See how the Just, the Virtuous, and the Strong,
The Beautiful, the Innocent, the Young,
Here, in promiscuous Dust, together lie.
Reflect on this, depart, and learn to die.

The last Person mentioned on this Grave-Stone died of the Bite of a mad Dog.

Besides these are the Ashes of many noble, and some royal Personages, executed in this Tower or on the Hill, deposited in Obscurity; namely,

John Fisher, Bishop of Rockester, who was beheaded on Tower-Hill the 22d of June, 1535.

George Bullen, Lord Rockford, beheaded on the 17th of May, 1536, on Tower-Hill.

Anna Bullen, Wife to King Henry VIII. beheaded two Days after, viz. on the 19th of May, 1536, on a Scaffold erected on the Green within the Tower, being accused of Incest and Adultery with her own Brother, George Lord Rockford, abovementioned; who, it is said, coming to her Bed-Side to solicit a Suit, leaned down to whisper her in the Ear, which the Spies gave out he did to kiss her; but it is the most probable, that her Death was rather sought after, than merited by her, forasmuch as that the King was married to the Lady Jane Seymour, the next Day after her Death.

Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Essex, who, from a Blacksmith's Son at Putney, came to be a great Favourite of King Henry VIII. but at last lost his Head on Tower-Hill, and was here buried, Anno 1540.

Catharine Howard, the fifth Wife of King Henry
VIII. beheaded on Tower-Hill, on the 13th of February, 1541.

Edward Seymour, Duke of Somerset, who was beheaded on Tower-Hill, January the 24th, 1552.

John Dudley, Duke of Northumberland, who lost his Head at the same Place, on the 22d of August, 1553.

Under the Communion-Table lies the Body of James Scott, Duke of Monmouth, Son of King
Charles II. beheaded for asserting his Right to the Crown against James II. He lost his Head on Tower-Hill on the 15th of July, 1685. And within the Altar-Rails was buried George Lord
Jefferies, Baron of Wem, Lord Chancellor of England; who, being committed Prisoner at the Revolution, died here of Grief, as reported, about the End of the Year 1688.

The White
Tower.

The White Tower is a large, square, irregular Building, topped with four Watch-Towers, not uniform; one of which is at present well adapted to the Science of Astronomy, being converted into an Observatory. This Building consists of three very lofty Stories, under which are most spacious and commodious Vaults, filled chiefly with Salt-Petre. The Roof is flat, and covered with Lead, affording an extensive and delightful Prospect. In the first Story are two noble Rooms;
one contains the small Arms for the Sea Service, curiously laid up, to furnish 10000 Men upon any Emergency: In the other Rooms are Abundance of Closets and Presses, filled with warlike Tools and Instruments of Death. There are two other Stories above, which are converted to the like Use; one being filled principally with small Arms, the other with Arms or Armourers Tools, such as Chevaux de Frize, Pickaxes, Spades, and Shovels. The upper Story serves for keeping a Store of Match, Sheepskins, tanned Hides, &c.

Here also are kept Models of the new-invented Engines of Destruction, which have from Time to Time been presented to the Government, and examined by the Officers of the Ordnance. Besides these, there is another lesser Room, called Julius Caesar's Chapel; in which are deposited Records, and other antient Charters and Transcripts, made and done before and since the Conquest, to the Reign of King John.

Julius Cæsar's,
or St.
John's
Chapel.
Rot.
Liberat.
25 Hen III
m. 20.

This Chapel was intended originally for the more private Use of the royal Family residing in the Tower, and was dedicated to St. John the Evangelist; as more largely appears from King
Henry III's Letter for its Repairs; where it is ordered to be whitened, and to have three Glass Windows; one on the North Side, with a little Mary holding her Child; one on the South, with the Image of the Trinity; and another on the same Side, with the Image of St. John the Apostle and Evangelist. He also ordered the Cross and the Beam [i. e. the Rood] beyond the Altar of the same Chapel to be painted well and with good Colours; and two Images to be made and painted, where more conveniently and decently they might be done in the said Chapel, one of St. Edward holding a Ring, and reaching it out to St. John Evangelist, &c. which Representation alludes to the Legend of the Power pretended to be given to King Edward the Confessor of curing the King's Evil, in Reward of his great Charity, which relieved St. John, in the Appearance of a poor Beggar, with his Ring from his own Finger; and probably this Chapel was in After-times set apart by his Successors for performing the Ceremony of Touching for that Evil; but can't be admitted to signify, as Mr. Styrpe writes in Stow's Survey, P. 69. B. I. that this Edward was the Founder of the Chapel, when the Tower itself did not exist till after the Conquest.

On the Top of this Tower is a large Reservoir for supplying the Garrison with Water in Case of Need, about seven Feet deep, nine broad, and sixty long, filled by an ingenious Contrivance from the River Thames.

The Office of Ordnance is a modern Building, a little to the N. E. of the last-mentioned Tower;
to which all other Offices for supplying Artillery, Arms, Ammunition, or other warlike Stores,
to any Part of the British Dominions, are accountable; and from which Office all Orders for the Disposition of warlike Materials for every Kind of Service are issued: By which it must appear, that this Office is of very great Account and Importance; forasmuch as it at all Times contains Ammunition for as many Land and Sea-Forces as may not only defend the Kingdom,
but protect our Allies, and terrify our Enemies.
In antient Times, before the Invention of great Guns and Use of Gunpowder, we find this Office supplied by Officers under the following Names;
the Bowyer, the Cross-Bowyer, the Galeator, the Bowyer, Armourer, and the Keeper of the Tents. Thus in the Office of Ordnance.

22d of Richard II. Robert Bridford was by Patent appointed the Officer for keeping and making the Bows, and allowed certain Houses belonging to his Office; and in the 13th of Edw. IV. the like Patent passed to Thomas Maſburgh, with the Grant of a House situate between Wakefield Tower and the Tower called West Smithfield, for the Exercise of the foreſaid Office.

Croſs-Bowyer.

The Officer belonging to the Croſs-Bow, called in the Records Attiliator Ballistarum, ſeems to have provided Harneſs and Accoutrements for thoſe Bows, and was allowed ſeven Pence Halfpenny per Day in the Reign of Edw. I.

Galeator.

One Richard Glover, Eſq; was the Galeator, or Purveyor of Helmets or Head-pieces, in the 5th of Hen. IV.

Armurer.

In the 1st of Richard II. William Snell, and in the 12th Edw. III. John Fleet, were appointed the Keepers of the King's Armour in the Tower, with the Fee of twelve Pence per Day. And in 19th of Henry VI. we read of the Tent-Keeper's Place granted to Richard Lound for Term of Life, with a Meſſuage appropriated to his Office, and ſituate upon the Wharf near St. Catharine's Hoſpital.

Smith.

Befides theſe were other Patent-Officers; as, the Maſter Smith; whoſe Fee in 1st of Edward I. was four Pence Halfpenny per Day from the Crown, and three Pence per Day from the Warders or Tower-Guards. He alſo had an Appointment of two Meſſuages on Wharfbam, i. e. on Tower-Wharf, and a Parcel of Land within the Palace of Weſtminſter, in the 24th of Henry VI.

Maſon and Carpenter.

The Maſter Maſon and Maſter Carpenter: For in the 10th of Edw. III. William de Ranſey was made chief Maſon of the King at the Tower, and chief Overſeer of all the King's Works in all his Caſtles on this Side Trent, with an Appointment of one Robe yearly, and twelve Pence per Day paid at the Exchequer. And at the ſame Time and Manner William Harle was made chief Carpenter.

Officers appointed by King
Hen. VIII.

In this State continued the Office of Ordnance, till King Henry VIII. placed it under the Management of a Maſter, a Lieutenant, Surveyor, &c. as it continues to this Day, with ſome Improvements.

Civil Branch of the Office of Ordnance.

The principal Officer at this Time is called the Maſter-General of the Ordnance, under whom is a Lieutenant-General, Surveyor-General, Clerk of the Ordnance, Store-Keeper, Clerk of the Deliveries, Treasuſer, and Pay-Maſter; who all hold their Places by Patent from the Crown, under the Great Seal of England, and are allowed Clerks, for the better Execution of the Duty in each reſpective Office.

Maſter-
General.

The Maſter-General is inveſted with a peculiar Jurisdiction over all his Maſteſty's Engineers employed in the ſeveral Fortifications of this Kingdom; to whom they are all accountable, and from whom they receive their particular Orders and Inſtructions, according to the Directions and Commands given by his Maſteſty and Council.

Lieutenant General.

The Lieutenant-General receives all Orders and Warrants ſigned by the Maſter, and from the other principal Officers, and ſees them duly executed; makes Orders, as the Occaſions of the State may require; and gives Orders for diſcharging the great Guns, when required at Coronations, on Birth-Days, Feſtivals, and other ſolemn Occaſions. And it is his particular Office to ſee the Train of Artillery and all its Equipage fitted for Motion, when ordered to be drawn into the Field.

The Surveyor's Office is to inſpect the Stores and Proviſions of War in the Cuſtody of the Store-keeper; and to ſee that they are ranged and placed in ſuch Order and Diſtinction, as ſhall be beſt for their Preſervation and Safety. He is to allow all Bills of Debt, and to keep a Check upon all Labourers and Artiſicers Work; and to ſee that all Proviſions received be good and ſerviceable, duly proved, and marked with the King's Mark, if they ought ſo to be; taking to his Aſſiſtance the reſt of the Officers and Proof-maſters.

The Clerk of the Ordnance records all Orders and Inſtructions given for the Government of the Office; all Patents and Grants; the Names of all Officers, Clerks, Artiſicers, Attendants, Gunners, Labourers, &c. who enjoy the ſaid Grants, or any other Fee for the ſame; draws all Eſtimates for Proviſions and Supplies to be made, and all Letters, Inſtructions, Commiſſions, Deputations, and Contracts for his Maſteſty's Service; makes all Bills of Impreſt, and Debentures for the Payment and Satisfaction for Work done and Proviſions received in the ſaid Office; all Quarter-Books for the Salaries, Allowances, and Wages of all Officers, Clerks, &c. belonging to the ſaid Office; and keeps Journals and Ledgers of the Receipts and Returns of his Maſteſty's Stores, to ſerve as a Check between the two Accomptants of the Office, the one for Money, the other for Stores.

Clerk of the Ordnance.

The Store-Keeper takes into his Cuſtody all his Maſteſty's Ordnance, Munitions, and Stores belonging thereto, and indents and puts them in legal Security, after they have been ſurveyed and approved of by the Surveyor: And he muſt not deliver any Part of the ſaid Ordnance, Munition, or Stores, without a Warrant ſigned by the proper Officers; nor muſt he receive back any Stores formerly iſſued, till they have been reviewed by the Surveyor, and regiſtered by the Clerk of the Ordnance in the Book of Remains: And he muſt take Care, that whatever is under his Cuſtody be kept ſafe, and in ſuch Readineſs, as to be fit for Service upon the moſt peremptory Command.

Store-Keeper.

The Clerk of the Deliveries draws all Proportions or Orders for Deliveries of any Stores and Proviſions, and is to ſee them duly executed: He alſo charges by Indenture the particular Receiver of the ſaid Stores delivered; and, in order to diſcharge the Store-keeper, he regiſters the Copies of all Warrants for the Deliveries, as well as the Proportions delivered.

Clerk of the Deliveries.

The Treasuſer and Paymaſter receives and pays all Monies, both Salaries and Debentures in and belonging to this Office. This Officer was created in the Reign of King Charles II.

Treasurer.

The foreſaid Officers are called the Civil Branch of the Office of Ordnance in the Tower of London: Befides whom there is a military Branch, conſiſting of a chief Engineer, two Directors, two Sub-directors, nine Engineers in Ordinary, ſeven Engineers Extraordinary, ſix Sub-engineers, ſix Practitioner-

The first Lieutenant of the Ordnance was Sir Christopher Morrice, appointed with a Fee of 56l. 13s. 4d. in the 36th of Henry VIII. and two Years before one Henry Johnson had been appointed Surveyor, with a Fee of 36l. 10s. or 2s. per Day.

The Clerk of the Ordnance, otherwise called the Clerk of the Armory, was about the same Time appointed, with a Salary of 12l. 13s. 4d. per Ann. or 8d. a Day. But we don't find any of the other Officers upon Record till the 7th of Edw. VI. when Fleming and Anthony were first appointed to this Office, with a Fee of 18l. 5s. per Ann. or 12d. a Day. Tho' this Place did not pass by Patent till the 16th of Elizabeth.

The first Patent for Office of Store-keeper bears Date the 14th of Eliz., at 54l. 15s. per Ann. or 3s. a Day; when Richard Rowland, the Gunner, was promoted to this Place.

There was also in that Queen's Reign a Patent-Officer named the Keeper of the Small Guns, with a Fee of 15l. 4s. 2d. or 10d. a Day.

However, these Fees were not all the Allowances to those Officers; for we find that the said Queen granted to each of them, in Proportion to their respective Charges and Stations, a reasonable Allowance for their Diet, Coals, Riding Expences, Boat-hire, Wood, Ink, Paper, Book-keeping, Clerks Wages, &c. as appears from several Bills paid in the Exchequer; in one of which it there is allowed, Queen Elizabeth's Commission for regulating the Office of Ordnance. Chart. D. Thes. Burgh.

About the same Time this provident Queen appointed a Commission of Enquiry into the State and Management of the said Office of Ordnance; in which any three of them, including one of the Auditors, were empowered, (1.) to make a perfect Survey of all the Ordnance then remaining in the Charge of the Officers of the Ordnance, and to deliver the same in Charge to those Officers to whom the Custody thereof belonged, by such Book or Books as to the said Commissioners should be thought meet; to the End that they might yearly account, as well for the Store presently remaining, as thereafter to be provided. (2.) To make Allowance and Determination of all Accompts and Charges. (3.) To set down such Orders in Writing as they should think meet for the better Ordering of the said Office. (4.) To cause such Things as have been lent out of the said Office (by Warrant or otherwise) to be restored, or Money to be answered to the Lieutenant to the Value of the same, and to put the same in Charge with the said Officers. (5.) To appoint Persons to survey and take account of all Ordnance, &c. remaining in any Castle or Block-house; and the broken and unserviceable to exchange or repair, as they should see Cause. (6.) Authority was given to any of the said Commissioners (whereof the Lord Treasurer to be one) by Bill subscribed by their Hand, to gain Allowance for the Travel and Pains of any Person used in that Service, or any otherwise, touching the Execution of this Commission, to be paid by the Lieutenant of the Ordnance; and that the Bills so subscribed should be allowed him upon his Account.

Which Commission was, in Consequence of various Complaints or Informations of Embezzlements of the Queen's Gunpowder and Saltpetre, lodged with the Lord Treasurer in 1578, and frequently afterwards.

The next Regulation we read of in this Office was [in 1587] concerning the Gun-founders, especially those in Suffex, who were grown very numerous, and, in Defiance of an Ordinance of the Privy-Council, and the express Command of the Master of the Ordnance, continued to cast and export by Stealth great Guns to the Enemy abroad. Wherefore the Earl of Warwick, then Master of the Ordnance, summoned all the said Founders before him, and obliged them to give Bond not to work in the said Business without Licence from her Majesty, and under and by some necessary Orders and Penalties; so as to prevent the Casting of any more Ordnance than what should be found needful, nor transport it without Intelligence. But it does not appear that the Government was ever able to restrain that illicit Trade.

Regulation of Gun-founders.

The Mint is the Office in which the King's Coin of Gold, Silver, or Copper is made, and which at present is restrained to the Tower of London, and is managed by divers Officers, formed into a Corporation; which consisteth of a Warden, Master-Worker, Comptroller, Master of the Assay, Auditor, Surveyor, Clerk of the Irons, Engraver, Melters, Blanchers, Provost, Moniers, &c.

The Mint.

The Warden receives the Silver, &c. from the Goldsmiths, and pays for it, and oversees all the rest that belong unto this Office; and he generally has been a Person of Quality.

The Warden.

The Master-Worker receives the Silver, &c. from the Warden, orders it to be melted, delivers it to the Moniers, and receives it back from them again.

Master-Worker.

The Comptroller sees that the Money be made of a just Assize; oversees the Officers, and controuls them, if the Money does not prove as it ought to be.

Comptroller.

The Master of the Assay weighs the Bullion, and takes Care it be according to Standard.

Master of Assay.

The Auditor takes the Accompts, and makes them up.

Auditor.

The Surveyor of the Melting is to see the Bullion cast out, and that the Metal be not altered after the Assay-Master has made trial of it, and it is delivered to the Melter.

Surveyor of the Melting.

The Clerk of the Irons Business is, to see that the working Irons are kept clean, and fit for Work.

Clerk of the Irons.

The Engraver graveth the Stamps for the Money.

The Engraver.

The Melters melt the Bullion before it comes to the Coining.

Melters.

The Blanchers assneal, boil, and cleanse the Money.

Blanchers.

The Provost of the Mint provides for all the Moniers, and oversees them.

Provost.

The Moniers are they who shear the Money, and forge it; some beat it broad, others round it, and some stamp or coin it.

Moniers.

The Manner of stamping is all we are permitted to see; and this is very quickly performed, by an Engine worked by three Men. This Engine works by a Spindle, like that of a Printing-Press, to the Point of which the Head of the Die is fixed with a Screw; and in a little Kind of Cup, which receives it, is placed the Reverse. Between these two Parts the Metal to be stamped, being already cut to the Size, and exactly weighed, is placed; and,

Manner of stamping the Money.

and, by once pulling down the Spindle with a Jirk, is completely stamped. The whole Process is performed with an amazing Dexterity: For, as fast as the Men, who work the Engine, can turn the Spindle, so fast does another with his Finger and Thumb put in a Piece unstamped, and twitch out with his middle Finger that which has been stamped. The Manner of stamping all Metal is the same; but a little more Care is taken in one more than in the other, according to their Value, to prevent Waste. And the Silver and Gold thus stamped are delivered to be milled round the Edges by a Method which no Person is permitted to see performed.

Keeper of the King's Coin.
Leidger K.
King Richard III. granted to one John Wood, Esq; the Coinage of the King's Money of Gold and Silver in the Tower of London, &c. in the first Year of his Reign.

Pardon for Mint-Officers.
MSS. de Turr.
In 1552, there passed a Pardon from Edw. VI. on the twenty-first of July, to several of the Mint-Officers for all manner of Transgressions, Abuses and Offences, touching or concerning the said Mint.

Officers and Fees of their Offices.
It appears by an Establishment thereof made and dated on the sixth of Dec. 1561, that the Officers serving the Mint, and their Fees, were as follows:

Before the Norman Conquest the Kings of this Nation ordained and set apart certain Monasteries for Mints, presuming that the Coinage would in those Places be the best secured from Frauds and Corruption. But Edward I. ordered a Mint of thirty Furnaces to be erected in the Tower of London, and others in Canterbury, Kingston upon Hull, Newcastle upon Tyne, Bristol, and Exeter. Thus the State of the Mint continued fluctuating, sometimes in one Place, and sometimes at another Place, according to the Will and Pleasure of the Prince, who, for a Sum of Money, was frequently prevailed upon to grant the Privilege of Coining to some Bishop, Nobleman, or Corporation: Which promiscuous Coinage of the current Money was attended with so many Inconveniences to the Publick, that Queen Elizabeth, in the Beginning of her Reign, endeavoured to rectify those Abuses, by reducing all the Mints to the Tower of London;

don; where the Coinage of Money has been confined ever since, except when King Charles I. by the Confusion of those Times, was obliged to erect new Mints at those Places, Oxford, York, and Newark upon Trent, where he occasionally quartered, when reduced to a Necessity of coining Money to supply his present Wants: And when King William III. having called in all the base and light clipped Money, was, for more Expedition, and Service of distant Parts of the Nation, obliged to erect Mints at Exeter, Bristol, York, and Winchester.

The same Power, which at all Times has fixed and settled the Places for Coining in this Nation, has also frequently altered and raised the Price and Value of the Coins. The Saxon King Offa, who reigned two hundred Years before the Conquest, ordained that an Ounce Troy Weight of Silver should be divided into twenty Pieces or Pence; so that an Ounce Troy of Silver was then of no more Value than twenty Pence, or five Groats.

After the Conquest, and not before the Reign of King Henry III. it was enacted, That an English Penny, called then a Sterling, round, and without any Clipping, should weigh thirty-two Wheat-Corns in the midst of the Ear; and that twenty of these Sterlings or Pence should make an Ounce. This was re-enacted in 51 Edw. I. with this Addition, that twelve such Ounces should make a Pound; which was also agreed on, by the Statute of 12 Hen. VII. concerning Weights and Measures; so that a Pound Troy at that Time contained two hundred and forty Pence.

This was a commendable Regulation, but far from adjusting the true Value of the Metal; because these Grains or Corns of Wheat sometimes weighed more, sometimes less, according to their Growth and Fulness, and being subject to the Influence of hot and moist Air. They were therefore reduced to Artificial Grains, cut out of thin Brads, marked with 1, 2, 3, 4, &c. according to their Weight, or Number of Grains: Each of those thin Plates or Pieces of Brads did weigh according to the King's Standard. Where observe, that as these Brads Grains had, and still retain the Names of Grains, from the Grains of Wheat formerly used in Weight; so the Penny Weight or the twentieth Part of an Ounce Troy, still remains and keeps its old Name, tho' the Value of such Penny Weight now is three Pence, which then was but a Penny. But King Edw. III. observing that foreign Nations raised the Value of their Coins, ordained that the Ounce of Silver should be raised also in England to 26 Pence: So that a Pound Weight contained 312. King Hen. VI. raised it to 30 Pence, making a Pound to contain 360 Pence, each Penny being then worth three Halfpence. King Edw. IV. in his fifth Year advanced it to forty Pence, or ten Groats, the Ounce; which brought every Penny Weight to two Pence: And the Pound Weight to 480 of these Pence, and King Hen. VIII. brought the Ounce of Silver to five-and-forty Pence, or, according to Sir Richard Baker, to four Shillings, in Value or Currency: So that the old Penny Weight was now worth two Pence Farthing, and the Pound contained 540 of these Pence. But his Necessities afterwards induced him to coin base Money; so that, after his Death, this Money would go for only three fourths of its first Currency. To remedy which, King Edw. VI. called it in: And Queen Mary, finding the Nation in great Distress for Coin, ordered the Groat, Half-Groat and Penny to be coined of Silver, Currency as before her Father's Debasement thereof. Yet the Perfection of this great Work was reserved for the happy Reign of Queen Elizabeth, who, in the second Year of her Reign, called in all the base Money; and to deliver her Subjects from the Inconvenience and Damage, which they had laboured under for above two hundred Years, by the bad Money of this Nation, she resolved to refine the Coin, not according to the legal, but natural Estimation of the Metal; and therefore ordered all the base Money to be marked, some with a Greyhound, others with a Portcullis, and other some with a Lion, Harp, Rose or Fleur de Lys. Then, with all convenient Speed, she having received all this Money so marked into her Majesty's Mint, repaid the Owners thereof so much pure Sterling Silver, as the base Money was intrinsically worth in Silver, and no more. She then raised the Ounce of Silver to sixty Pence or five Shillings, which brought every Penny Weight to the old Standard of three Pence in Value, as it continues to this Day, to our Benefit, and a Memorial of that great Princess's Wisdom.

A Table of the SILVER and GOLD COINS of the Kings of England, which have been current in the Kingdom of England, from the Conquest to the Reign of King George II.

Silver Coins Current from the Conquest to King George II.

* So called because they were the greatest or greatest Money then in Use.

From the Conquest it does not appear that the Silver Coins had any other Name or Value, than a Penny or Sterling, till 25 Edward III. who coined

Edward III. Pennies—Groats * or Groats—Half Groats.

Richard II. Groats—Half Groats—Sterlings—Half Sterlings.

Henry IV. The same. In this Reign it was enacted, That a third Part of the Bullion should be coined in Half-Pence and Farthings.

Henry V. The same. After the Battle of Agincourt he coined Blankets, or white Pieces, rated eight Pence, or two Groats.

Henry VI. The same. He was the first that coined Brass Money in Ireland.

Edward IV. Groats—Three Pennies, in the 18th Year of his Reign—Two Pennies—Pennies.

Edward V. Groats—Pennies.

Richard III. Groats. N. B. This King's is the most rare of all other Coins.

Henry VII. To the former Coins added the Shilling, which weighed one Third more than ours at this Time. [Anno 20.]

Henry VIII. Crown Pieces, one of which was lately preserved by the Earl of Pembroke—Testoons or Shillings—Groats—Half Groats—Sterlings—Half Pence—Farthings.

Edward VI. Crowns—Half Crowns—Testoons or Shillings—Six Pennies—Groats—Three Pennies.

Q. Mary I. Shillings—Six Pennies—Groats.

Q. Elizabeth. Crowns—Half Crowns—Shillings—Six Pennies—Groats—Three Pennies—Two Pennies—Pennies.

James I. Crowns—Half Crowns—Shillings—Six Pennies—Two Pennies—Pence—Half Pence.

Charles I. The same. And after his Troubles began, he coined Groats, Three Pennies, and other various Kinds of Money, which the Distraction of the Times and his urgent Necessities invented. N. B. This King's Coin appears with the most Variety.

After the 30th of January, 1648, the Parliament agreed upon a new Sort of Coin, by the Name of Crowns, Half Crowns, Shillings, and Six Pennies, with this Inscription, The Common-wealth of England; on the Reverse, God with us. Two Pennies, Pennies, Half Pennies, with no Inscription, only the initial Figures. Their Six Pence in 1651 was the first milled Money in England. Oliver, usurping the Government, coined the first English Crown Piece milled, with an Inscription on the Rim, inscribed NUMB. XIV.

Oliver. D. G. Ang. Scot. Hib. Sec. PRO. on the Reverse, Pax Quæritur Bello: A Half Crown and a Shilling also milled.

Charles II. Crowns—Half Crowns—Shillings—Six Pennies—Groats—Three Pennies—Two Pennies—Pennies.

N. B. In this Reign private Persons were indulged with a Liberty they had obtained in 1653 of coining their own Pennies, Half Pence, and Farthings, till Anno 1672, when the King's Copper Half Pence and Farthings took Place.

James II. The same. N. B. He coined Tin Farthings and Half Pence.

William III. } The same. He found the Coin so diminished, that Half a Crown would scarce weigh a Shilling, and so effectually cured and removed that Abuse, that we have enjoyed good Coin ever since.

Q. Anne }
K. George I. } The same.
K. George II. }

Edward III. Noble—Half Noble—Quarter Noble. N. B. His Son Prince Edward coined Gold in Aquitaine.

Richard II. The same.

Office of Records.

In Antiquity.

The Office of Records is of very antient Date, and mentioned in a Roll of the 33d of Edw. I. A. D. 1304. in these Words, Scrutentur Rotuli de Scotia que sunt in Custodia apud Turrim London. And the Place where these Records were kept, appears, by another antient Record of the 34th of Edw. III. to be a certain House, afterwards called a Tower, now known by the Name of Wakefield's Tower, wherein that King, it is said, "caused to be laid up the Rolls, and other memorable Matters of the Chancery, as well from "the Time of his Progenitors, heretofore Kings of England, as in his own, for the safe and secure Custody of the said Rolls and memorable Things."

In the first Year of the said Edw. III. Robert de Hoton was commanded to array and set in Order the Charters, Writings and Monuments in two Chests in the White Chamber, contiguous to a Hall, called the White Hall, whose Roofs, Doors and Windows were ordered to be repaired in the 36th Year of the said Reign; and is probably the same little House mentioned in another Record of the 14th of Hen. VI. in these Words: Joannes Malpas habuit Officium Custodis Armature infra Turrim London. una cum una parva domo tunc vacante. infra dictam Turrim, juxta Turrim infra quam Rotuli Cancellarie Regis continentur; i. e. "John Malpas, possessed the Office of Keeper of the Armory in the Tower of London, together with one little House then empty within the said Tower, near to the Tower within, which are kept the Rolls of the King's Chancery."

We also learn its Antiquity from the Mention of the Keepers of those Records, one of whom was Walter Reginald, the King's Treasurer, who was commanded by Edward II. to deliver to one Bensted all the Writings and Instruments touching the Negotiation of Peace between King Edward his Father, and the King of France, which were in his Custody in the Tower, An. Reg. 2. Robert de Hoton, above-mentioned, seems to have been another Keeper of the Records in the 1st of Edw. III. who by Writ was directed to bring into the Exchequer all the Writs, Muniments, &c. belonging to Thomas Earl of Lancaster, deceased, and in his Custody. In the fourteenth Year of the same Reign, William de Kildesby, Keeper of the Privy-Seal, seems also to have been Keeper of the Records; for John St. Paul, alias Powel, Keeper of the Rolls of the Chancery, was commanded to send all the Rolls, Bundles, and Memoranda of Chancery to the Tower, and to deliver them there to the said William de Kildesby. One John Burton, Clerk, enjoyed the same Office in the 10th of Rich. II. And in the Reign of Hen. VI. Thomas Smith, Clerk, after a Prosecution and Conviction in the Star-Chamber, for the razing of a Record of the Chancery in his Custody in the Tower of London in the Reign of Edw. III. was discharged his Office, and was probably succeeded by John Malpas above-mentioned. Ralph Pextal, Keeper of the Records in the 20th of Hen. VIII. erased, by Command of the said King, certain Words negligently written long before in the Rolls of the Chancery of the 22d of Edw. IV. then being in the Tower, viz. in a Levy granted to Edmund Cheurb.

In the 3d of Edw. VI. Edward Hales was Keeper of the Records: In whose Time one Hoby, an Officer in the Ordnance, gave Notice to him, that he had accidentally discovered a great many Records in an old empty House in the Tower, as he searched for a convenient Place to lay up Gunpowder; which, by laying damp, and many of them against the Walls, were much damaged and eaten with the Lime.

But it is to the glorious Reign of Q. Elizabeth that Posterity is indebted for the Advantages the Publick diggs and Records.

Publick has reaped from this Office: For these Records, which were in no Order, and consequently but little serviceable to any who desired to consult them, as not knowing where to find what they looked for, were reduced first into Order, and then digested into Repertories, making six large Volumes in Folio, by William Bower, Esq; in which Work, now lost, he spent eight Years, and above a thousand Pounds of his own Estate. He also solicited to have all the antient Records in Chancery, till that Time, removed from the Rolls into the Tower; but this Motion, how reasonable soever it might be, met with no Success; tho' assisted both in this, and in the Work of methodizing, &c. by that learned Nobleman Lord Henry Stafford.

This Method of Mr. Bower encouraged many Antiquarians, Lawyers, and others, whom either Curiosity or Interest led to search into the Papers and Transactions of former Times, to have frequent Recourse to this Office, which before had been almost useless: And as these Records became of greater Service to the Publick, so the Office grew more and more into Reputation: Which was thence-forward filled successively by Thomas Hentage, and William Hentage, Roger Wilbram, Esq; Robert Bower, and Henry Effing, Esq; John (afterwards Sir John) Burroughs, and Nicholas Parker, Esq; William Prinn, Esq; William Petyt, Esq; George Holmes, Esq; David Polhill, Esq; and the present Keeper of the Records.

King Charles II. soon after his Restoration, of his own mere Motion, and without Fees, conferred the Office of Keeper of the Records in the Tower upon William Prinn, of Lincoln's-Inn, by Letters Patent, during his Life; and appointed him an honourable annual Salary, to be paid in the Exchequer, to enable him to peruse, calendar, and improve the Records for the publick Good, and to rescue them from Obscurity and Oblivion. How far Mr. Prinn answered this great End, may be seen by his three great Tomes in Folio, collected partly out of the Office where the Records and Rolls lay, and partly out of the loose, rude Heaps of Instruments in the Chapel of the White Tower. In which Collection, all great Officers both in Church and State, Common Lawyers, Canonists, Members of Parliament, Historians, Herald, Divines, may find some Antiquities and Rarities worth their Attention. He also added fourteen Tables to his third Volume (which made a Volume of itself) for the better finding out and knowing the multifarious Matters contained in the Body of his Work.

William Petyt.

William Petyt, Esq; his Successor, employed his Clerks for many Years in making Extracts of such Records and Rolls in his Office, as might be of publick Use in these Times both to Church and State, which filled a great Number of Volumes. These, with his Books, are, pursuant to his last Will, placed in a Library in the Inner-Temple, towards the Building of which he bequeathed one hundred and fifty Pounds.

Dignity of the Keeper's
Office.

From the Premises it appears, That the Keepers of the Records have usually been such as have been skilled in the Law, and studious in Antiquity, addicted to the Perusal of antient Records and Instruments, and withal Persons of great Faithfulness. He that hath the Custody of these Records, is nominated and appointed thereto by the Sovereign on the Throne; who grants a Warrant to the Master of the Rolls to admit and swear him, and then confirms him by Letters Patents. His Salary is five hundred Pounds per Ann. and he is allowed a Deputy and several Clerks.

The Records at present are deposited in Julius Caesar's Chapel within the White Tower; and in Wakefield's Tower, where the Office is kept, joining to the Bloody Tower, near Traitor's Gate: And their present good Order is principally owing to the Care and Direction of Queen Anne and her Parliament in the Year 1703, &c. By whom it was appointed, That proper Care should be taken to provide a convenient and safe Place for the depositing of all the Records in this Tower, and a sufficient Number of Clerks to clean, sort, digest, &c. the same, under the Inspection and Direction of William Petyt, Esq; above-mentioned.

These Records in the Tower, among other Things, contain the Foundations of Abbies, and other religious Houses, Leagues of foreign Princes, and Treaties with them: Whereof several Volumes have been transcribed and printed at the publick Expence by Mr. Rymor, in his Fœdera: All the Atchievements of this Nation in France, and other foreign Parts: The Originals of all the Laws that have been enacted, or recorded, unto the Reign of Edw. III. The Homage and Dependency of Scotland upon England: The Establishment of Ireland; its Laws and Dominions: The Dominion of the British Seas, totally excluding both French and Dutch from Fishing therein, without Licence from England; proved by several Prescriptions and Records before the Conquest: The Interests of the Isles of Man, Jersey, Guernsey, Sark and Alderney, being only the remaining Parts of the Norman Possession left to the Crown of England: The Title to the Realm of France; and by what Means obtained: And what all the Kings or Princes of England, to the Time aforesaid, have done abroad, or granted and confirmed unto their Subjects at home or abroad: Tenures of all the Lands in England: Extents or Surveys of Manors or Lands: Inquisitions post Mortem, of great Use upon Trials of Interest or Descent: Liberties and Privileges granted to Cities and Towns Corporate, or to private Men; as Courts Leets, Waifs, Estrays, Markets, Fairs, Free-Warren, Felons Goods, or what else could come to the Crown, or pass out of it: Several Writs, Pleadings and Proceedings, as well in Chancery, as in all the Courts of Common Law and Exchequer: Inspecimus's and Enrolments of Charters and Deeds, made and done before the Conquest: Deeds and Contracts between Party and Party; and the just Establishment of all the Offices in the Nation: The Metes and Bounds of all the Forests in England, with the several respective Rights of the Inhabitants therein to Common Pasture, &c. besides many other Privileges and Evidences.

The following Records are, or have been in the Office, as they are mentioned in an old Book, called, The Repertory of Records, wherein is contained whatsoever may give Satisfaction to the Searcher for Tenures or Titles, viz.

Kalendar of these Records.

One Kalendar, called, The Book of Names, made by way of Alphabet, containing the Names of all Men, whose Offices or Inquisitions (taken after their Deaths) are there to be found: In which you may see what Lands any such died seized of, with the Tenure of the same; and in many of them, the last Wills and Testaments of such Persons recited in the same; which Wills are sometimes to be found no where else.

Item, Divers Kalendar of Escheators Bundles; as one of each of these Kings, viz. Henry III. Edward I. Edward II. Edward III. Richard II. one of Henry IV. and Henry V. and lastly, one of Edward IV.

Item, The Book of Heirs of Henry III's Time, containing the Names of such Persons as had Offices found at that Time, declaring who were their Heirs, and their Age; and sometimes mentioning their Wives, with the Counties wherein they had any Lands.

Item, The like Books, severally made up, of the Times of Edward I. II. and III. and of Richard II. Henry IV. and V.

Item, A little Kalendar, by way of Alphabet, containing such Manors and Lands as were found in any of the aforesaid Offices or Inquisitions, in the County of Essex, but not perfect.

Item, The like Book of the County of Lincoln; the like Books of the Counties of Berks and Buckingham; and one great Book for the Counties of Somerset, Dorset, Devon, and Cornwall; but not by way of Alphabet.

Item, A Kalendar and Collection out of the old Rolls, called Charta Antiqua, without Date.

Item, A like Kalendar of the Rolls of King John, and another of King Henry III. unto the 11th of his Reign.

Item, A Kalendar and Collection of all Grants of Inheritance, granted by any of our Kings before Richard III. and as antient as there are any Records here. This, with the like, was transmitted hither out of Chancery.

Item, Certain Rolls of Edward I. for his whole Reign.

Item, Two Books, or Kalendar, of Free-Warrens, Markets, Fairs, Leets, and other Liberties, gathered out of the Charter Roll of the Time of Edward I. and during his whole Reign.

Item, An old Kalendar of Charters of Corporations, and other Liberties, granted, of Cities, Boroughs, Abbies, Colleges, and Cathedral Churches, during the said King Edward's Reign.

Item, A Kalendar, or Collection, of the Parliament Rolls of Attainders, Restitutions, Resumptions, from the 29th of Hen. III. till the End of his Reign.

Item, Certain Paper Rolls, for Confirmations of Charters, and Liberties of Colleges, Corporations, and Religious Houses; and for Licences of Lands to be given in Mortmain, from the first of Edward I. till the last of Edward IV. done by way of Alphabet.

Item, One Book of Confirmations of Charters, of Liberties of Colleges, Corporations, and Religious Houses; and for Licences of Lands to be given in Mortmain, as aforesaid, collected out of the Patent and close Rolls of all the Time of Edward II. except two or three of the last Years.

Item, Certain small Bundles of loose Papers of like Nature, by way of Alphabet, of sundry Kings Times, confusedly laid together.

Item, A Collection of the Patent Rolls gathered, of all Presentations made by the King to any Church, Prebendary, or Chapel, as well in the Right of the Crown, as in the Right of any other, the same being, for that Time, in the Hands of the King, from the first of Edward I. till the Middle of the Reign of Edward III.

Here are also two Books, the one of the Taxation of all the Spiritual Livings in England, the other of the Temporalities.

Item, The antient Perambulations of the Forests.

Some Parliament Busineses, &c.

Some foreign Busineses, as Treaties.

Here are also these particular Rolls, viz. Particular Rolls.

Computus totius Reversionis Principis Wallie, i. e. An Account of the whole Revenue of the Prince of Wales, in the Time of Edward III. A Visitation of the Hospital of Bethlem, Anno 4 Henry IV. another, De Superioritate Maris Anglie, Anno 26 Edward I. Franchises of LONDON, confirmed by Parliament in the Time of Edward III. Roll 15; the Process of the Court Military, in the Cause of Arms between Richard le Scrope, Knight, and Grosvenor, in the Time of Richard II.

Among the printed Books belonging to this Office of Records, is a Book of Common-Prayer, under the Great Seal; which was that which was printed and authorized to be used in the Church of England, upon King Charles II's coming in: To which Recourse might be had, as the antient Common-Prayer then established.

The Sum Total of all the Rolls now in the Office, reckoning several lately rescued from the rude Heaps in the White Tower, and brought in thither, are as followeth:

In the Reign of	Rolls.
King John	68
Henry III.	305
Edward I.	242
Edward II.	157
Edward III.	575

Henry V.	93
Henry VI.	285
Edward IV.	150

These English Records, preserved here, were, for some Time, accompanied with the Treasure of those of Scotland. For Oliver Cromwel, after he had beat the Scots in their own Nation, seized all the publick Registers, Records, and Rolls of that Kingdom, and sent them up to the Tower, where they lay for some Years, till King Charles's Restoration: And Pity it was they continued not there longer; since, being sent back by that King's Order, to be laid up in the Castle of Edinburgh, they most unhappily perished, together with the Ship that carried them, being cast away near Holy-Island.

This Office is kept open, and Attendance constantly given here, from the Hour of Seven o'Clock to One, every Day in the Week, except in the Months of December, January, and February;

Orders for the Regulation of this Office.

The good Orders made for this Office, in the Reign of Queen Anne, whereof a Table was hung up, were, "That the Deputy and Clerks should duly and diligently attend in the Office, during the Times aforesaid, and give their best Attendance and Expedition, to all Persons resorting thither, in their Searches, in copying and examining Records. That they should not procure, or suffer any Books, Writs, Rolls, Memorandums, or Records, to be embezzled, falsified, corrupted, rased, blotted, torn or defaced: Nor carry, or cause any of them to be carried out of the Office; unless by special Order of the Queen, or Lord Chancellor, or Master of the Rolls, or of her Majesty's Judges, Barons of her Exchequer, or her learned Counsel at Law, or some other great Officers of State, for her Majesty's Service upon special Occasions. Special Entry to be made in a Book for that Purpose, of any particular Book, Writ, Roll, or Record, sent out; of the Person that sent for it, and that carried it out of the Office; the Day of the Month when carried out, and when returned: To be subscribed by the Clerk who carried and returned it; and to be brought back without Delay, when done with. Every Book, Writ, Roll, &c. removed out of its Classis, or Place, by reason of any Search, Examination or Transcript, to be returned to its proper Place immediately after made use of. That, if any Membrana, or Schedule, be unstitched, or torn off, to be new stitched, or fastened again by the Clerk. All Books, Bundles of Writs, Rolls and Records, to be diligently inspected once every Quarter of the Year, to see if any be missing or misplaced. No Person to be suffered to tittle, or take Tobacco in the Office. No Fee to be taken from any Person for a Search, who thro' Ignorance desires to search any Book or Record not kept in the Office. No Fee for Searches, Copies, or Examinations of Records, other than the antient Fees of the Office. A particular Entry to be duly made of all Searches, Copies, and Examination of Records, and of Fees taken for the same. No clandestine Searches, and Examinations and Copies to be made, concealed, or entered by the Deputy, or any Clerk. No Person to peruse any Record in private, but only publicly in the Office. The first Comer to be first served, and dispatched without Delay, or Preference given to another that comes after. The Rooms in the Office to be kept clean, and swept once, or more, every Week; and the Writs and Records therein preserved from Cobwebs, Dust, Filth, and Putrefaction; and the outward Doors duly locked every Night, for the Preservation of the Records. The Deputy and Clerks to spend their vacant Time in the Office, in making exact Kalen-dars and Tables to the Records, for publick Good; and in reducing the loose Records in the Office and White-Tower Chapel, that are useful, into Order and Bundles, as the Master of the Office shall direct them. Every Deputy and Clerk of the Office, before his Admission, voluntarily to make and subscribe such an Oath before the Master of the Office, as is suitable to his Trust."

I shall conclude the Account of this Office, by observing, That the Repairs thereof cost two thousand Pounds in Queen Anne's Reign. The Entrance into it is now very graceful and clean, through a small Yard paved with Free-Stone, and a fine carved Stone Door-Case. The Stair-Case is made more commodious and light-some; and the antient Gothic Windows are converted into Sashes, for the Benefit of the Light. The Rooms are all wainscoted in a very durable and beautiful Manner, framed in such a Manner as to form Presses for the Reception of Records, both those already deposited, and others that henceforward may be repositied for the Time to come.

The Jewel-Office is a dark strong Stone Room about twenty Yards to the Eastward of the grand Store-house, or new Armory. It is not certain whether this was always the identical Repository of the Crown Jewels: But the Records inform us, that they have been kept in this Fortrefs from very antient Times: For in the 14th of Hen. III. William Bishop of Karliall was commanded to receive four little Coffers with the King's Jewels to be laid up in the Tower, as aforetime had been usual. And in 12 Edw. III. we find one John Flete Keeper of the Jewels in the Tower of London, with a Fee of twelve Pence per Day.

The Jewel-Office.

Record-Turr.

The Jewels, which are at this time shewn to Visitors, are,

1. The Imperial Crown that all the Kings of England have been crowned with since Edward the Confessor, in 1042. It is of Gold, enriched with Diamonds, Rubies, Emeralds, Sapphires and Pearls. The Cap within is of Purple Velvet, lined with white Taffaty, turned up with three Rows of Ermine.—They are mistaken in shewing this as the antient Imperial Diadem of St. Edward; for that (with the other antient Regalia of this Kingdom) was kept in the arched Room in the Cloysters in Westminster-Abbey till the grand Rebellion, when in 1642 Harry Martin, by Order of the then Parliament, broke open the Iron Chest in which it was secured, took it thence, and sold it, together with the Robes, Sword, and Scepter of St. Edward. After the Restoration, King Charles II. had one made like it, which is this now shewn.

Imperial Crown.

2. The Golden Orb or Globe, put into the King's Right Hand before he is crowned; and borne in his Left, with the Scepter in his Right, upon his Return into Westminster-Hall, after he is crowned. It is about six Inches in Diameter, edged with Pearl, and enriched with precious Stones. On the Top is an Amethyst, of a Violet Colour, near an Inch and a Half in Height, set upon a rich Cross of Gold, adorned with Diamonds, Pearls, and precious Stones. The whole Height of the Ball and Cap is eleven Inches.

3. The

Golden
Scepter.

3. The Golden Scepter, with its Cross, set upon a large Amethyst, of great Value, garnished round with Table Diamonds. The Handle of the Scepter is plain, but the Pommel is set round with Rubies, Emeralds and small Diamonds. The Top rises into a Fleur de lis of six Leaves, all enriched with precious Stones, from whence issueth a Mound or Ball made of the Amethyst already mentioned. The Scepter is a very antient Ensign of Kingly Power. Among the Jews, it was used as an Emblem of Power and Royalty, and spiritually as a Weapon to oppose the Wicked, and protect the Good. The Cross is quite covered with precious Stones.

Scepter
and Dove.

4. The Scepter with the Dove, the Emblem of Peace, perched on the Top of a small Jerusalem Cross, finely ornamented with Table Diamonds and Jewels of great Value. This Emblem was first used by Edward the Confessor, as appears by his Seal. It is also marked on the Seals of Henry I. Stephen and Henry II. but omitted by Richard I. Richard II. assumed it again on his Seal; and it was used also by Edward IV. and Richard III. The antient one was sold with the rest. This now in the Tower was made after the Restoration.

St. Edward's
Staff.

5. St. Edward's Staff, in Length four Feet seven Inches and a Half, and three Inches and three Quarters in Circumference, all of beaten Gold, which is carried before the King at his Coronation.

Salt-Seller.

6. A rich Salt-Seller of State, in Form like the square White Tower, and so exquisitely wrought, that the Workmanship of modern Times is in no Degree equal to it. It is of Gold, and used only on the King's Table at the Coronation.

Curtana.

7. The Curtana, or Sword of Mercy, the Blade thirty-two Inches long, and near two broad, is without a Point, and is borne naked before the King at his Coronation, between the two Swords of Justice, Spiritual and Temporal.

Silver Font.

8. A noble Silver Font, double gilt with Gold, and elegantly wrought, in which the Royal Family are christened.

Silver
Fountain.

9. A large Silver Fountain, presented to King Charles the Second by the Town of Phymouth, very curiously wrought, but far short of that already described.

Crown of State.

10. The rich Crown of State, that his Majesty wears in Parliament; in which is a large Emerald, seven Inches round; a Pearl, the finest in the World; and a Ruby of inestimable Value.

Prince of Wales's
Crown.

11. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales's Crown. These two last-named Crowns, when his Majesty goes to the Parliament-House, are carried by the Keeper of the Jewel-Office, attended by the Warders, privately in a Hackney-Coach to White-Hall; there they are delivered to the Officers appointed to receive them, who, with some Yeomen of the Guard, carry them to the Robing Rooms, where his Majesty and the Prince robe themselves. The King wears his Crown on his Head as he sits upon the Throne; but that of the Prince of Wales is placed before him, to shew that he is not yet come to it. As soon as the King is disrobed, the two Crowns are reconducted to the Tower by the same Persons that brought them.

12. The late Queen Mary's Crown, Globe, and Scepter, with the Diadem she wore in proceeding to her Coronation with her Consort the late King William.

Queen
Mary II's Crown,
&c.

13. An Ivory Scepter with a Dove on the Top, made for the late King James the Second's Queen, whose Garniture is Gold, and the Dove on the Top Gold, enamelled with white.

Ivory Scepter and Dove.

14. The Golden Spurs, and the Armillas, which are Bracelets for the Wrists, very antique, and worn at the Coronation.

Golden Spurs.

15. Lastly, The Ampulla, or Eagle of Gold, finely engraved, which holds the Holy Oil, the Kings and Queens of England are anointed with; and the Golden Spoon that the Bishop pours the Oil into. These are two Pieces of great Antiquity. The Golden Eagle, including the Pedestal, is about nine Inches high, and the Wings expand about seven Inches; the whole weighs about ten Ounces. The Head of the Eagle screws off about the Middle of the Neck, which is made hollow, for holding the Holy Oil; and when the King is anointed by the Bishop, the Oil is poured into the Spoon out of the Bird's Beak.

The Am-pulla.

Of this Eagle, take the following Legend: St. Thomas Becket being in Disgrace at Sens in France, the holy Virgin appeared to him, and gave him a Stone Vessel of Oil enclosed in a Golden Eagle, and bid him give it to William a Monk, to carry to Pisavia, and there hide it in St. Gregory's Church under a great Stone, where it should be found for the Use of pious and prosperous Kings: Accordingly Henry III. when Duke of Lancaster, received it from a Holy Man in France; and Richard II. finding it among other Jewels, endeavoured to be anointed with it; but was supplanted by Archbishop Arundel, who afterwards anointed Henry IV. Such is the fabulous History of the Ampulla.

There are in the Jewel-Office, besides those commonly shewn, all the Crown Jewels, worn by the Prince and Princesses at the Coronations, and a vast Variety of curious old Plate; but what is already described is sufficient to gratify any moderate Curiosity, tho' it must be confessed that the Eye can never be satisfied with seeing, where the Objects are worthy of Notice.

Here we shall subjoin one of the most daring Attempts that ever was recorded of the like Sort, Captain Blood's Contrivance to steal the Crown, &c. This happened in the Year 1673. The Captain who was a Gentleman of Ireland, having spent his Substance in the King's Service, during the late Troubles, and finding himself neglected after the Restoration, resolved to reimburse himself by engaging in several desperate Plots, first to surprize the Castle of Dublin, and to seize the Person of the Duke of Ormond, and others; which not proving successful, he thought to make himself amends by this following Scheme. For this Purpose Blood assumed the Habit of a Reverend Clergyman, and with a Woman, whom he called his Wife, came to see the Curiosities of the Tower, especially the Regalia. This pretended Wife, at the Time of seeing the Crown, feigned to have a Quailm come upon her Stomach, and desired Mr. Edwards (who was Keeper of the Regalia) to send for some Spirits, who immediately caused his Wife to fetch some; whereof when

when she had drunk, she courteously invited her up Stairs to repose herself upon a Bed: Which Invitation she accepted, and soon recovered. At their Departure they seemed very thankful for this Civility.

About three or four Days after, Blood came again to Mrs. Edwards, with a Present of four Pair of white Gloves from his Wife: And having thus begun the Acquaintance, they made frequent Visits to improve it; she professing, that she should never sufficiently acknowledge her Kindness.

Having made some small Respite of his Compliments, he returned again, and said to Mrs. Edwards, that his Wife could discourse of nothing but of the Kindness of those good People in the Tower: That she had long studied, and at length bethought herself of a handsome Way of Requital. You have, said he, a pretty Gentlewoman to your Daughter, and I have a young Nephew who hath two or three Hundred a Year in Land, and is at my Disposal. If your Daughter be free, and you approve of it, I will bring him hither to see her, and we will endeavour to make it a Match.

This was easily assented to by old Mr. Edwards, who invited the Parson to dine with him that Day; and he as readily accepted of the Invitation; who, taking upon him to say Grace, performed it with great Devotion, and, casting up his Eyes, concluded his long-winded Grace, with a hearty Prayer for the King, Queen, and Royal Family. After Dinner he went up to see the Rooms, and seeing a handsome Case of Pistols hang there, he expressed a great Desire to buy them to present to a young Lord who was his Neighbour. That was his Pretence; but his Purpose, probably, was to disarm the House against the Time that he intended to put the Design in Execution.

At his Departure, (which was with a Canonical Benediction of the good Company) he appointed a Day and an Hour to bring his young Nephew to his Mistress, and it was that very Day that he made his Attempt, viz. the ninth of May, about seven in the Morning, Anno Dom. 1673.

The old Man was got up ready to receive his Guest, and the Daughter had put herself into her best Dress to entertain her Gallant; when, behold, Parson Blood, with three more, came to the Jewel-House, all armed with Rapier-Blades in their Canes, and every one a Dagger, and a Pair of Pocket-Pistols. Two of his Companions entered in with him, and the third staid at the Door, it seems, for a Watch. The Daughter thought it not modest for her to come down till she was called; but she sent the Maid to take a View of the Company, and to bring her a Description of the Person of her Gallant. The Maid conceived that he was the intended Bridegroom who staid at the Door, because he was the youngest of the Company, and returned to her young Mistress with the Character that she had formed of his Person.

Blood told Mr. Edwards, that they would not go up Stairs till his Wife came, and desired him to shew his Friends the Crown to pass the Time till then. As soon as they were entered the Room, where the Crown was kept, and the Door, as usual, was shut behind them, they threw a Cloak over the old Man's Head, and clapped a Gag into his Mouth, which was a great Plug of Wood, with a small Hole in the Middle to take Breath at; this was fastened on with a waxed Leather, which went round his Neck. At the same Time they fastened an Iron Hook to his Nose, that no Sound might pass from him that Way neither.

When they had thus secured him from crying out, they told him, that their Resolution was to have the Crown, Globe, and Scepter; and that, if he would quietly submit to it, they would spare his Life, otherwise he was to expect no Mercy. He thereupon forced himself to make all the Noise that possibly he could, to be heard above: Then they knocked him down with a wooden Mallet, and told him, that, if he would lie quietly, they would spare his Life; but if not, upon the next Attempt to discover them, they would kill him, and pointed three Daggers at his Breast. But he strained himself to make the greater Noise. Whereupon they gave him nine or ten Strokes more upon the Head with the Mallet, for so many Bruises were found upon the Skull, and stabbed him into the Belly.

Whereat the poor Man, almost eighty Years of Age, fell and lay some Time entranced; one of them kneeled on the Ground to try if he breathed, and not perceiving any Breath come from him, said, He is dead, I'll warrant him. Mr. Edwards, come a little to himself, heard these Words, and conceived it best for him to be so thought, and lay quietly.

Then one of them, named Parrot, put the Globe into his Breeches. Blood held the Crown under his Cloak. The third was designed to file the Scepter in two (because too long to carry); and, when filed, it was to be put into a Bag brought for that Purpose.

But, before this could be done, young Mr. Edwards (Son of the old Gentleman) who had attended upon Sir John Talbot into Flanders, and upon his first Landing in England, was, with Sir John's Leave, come away Post to see his old Father, chanced to arrive at the very Instant that this was acting, and coming to the Door, the Person that stood Centinel for the rest, asked him, with whom he would speak? He made Answer, he belonged to the House. But young Edwards perceiving, by his Question, that he himself was a Stranger, told him, that if he had any Business with his Father, he would go and acquaint him with it, and so went up, where he was welcomed by his Mother, Wife and Sister.

In the mean Time, the Centinel gave Notice of the Son's Arrival, and they forthwith hastened away with the Crown and Globe, but left the Scepter, not having Time to file it. The old Man, recovering himself, got upon his Legs, pulled off the Gag (for they concluded him dead, and, surprized with the Son's unexpected Arrival, had omitted to tie his Hands behind him) and cried out, Treason! Murder!

The Daughter, hearing him, hastened down, and, seeing her Father thus wounded, ran out upon the Tower-Hill, and cried, Treason! The Crown is stolen! This gave the first Alarm; and Blood and Parrot, making more than ordinary

Haste,

Haste, were observed to jog each other with their Elbows as they went, which caused them to be suspected and pursued.

By this Time young Mr. Edwards and Capt. Beckman, upon the Cry of their Sister, were come down, and left their Father likewise, to run after the Villains; but they were advanced beyond the Main-Guard, and the Alarm being given loudly to the Warder at the Draw-Bridge, he put himself in a Posture to stop them. Blood came up first, and discharged a Pistol at him. The Bullet (if any there were) missed him; but the Powder, or Fear, made him fall to the Ground; whereby they got safe to the little Wardhouse-Gate, where one Sill, who had been a Soldier under Cromwell, stood Centinel; who, although he saw the Warder shot, made no Resistance: By whose Cowardice, or Treachery, the Villains got over that Draw-Bridge, and through the outward Gate upon the Wharf, and made all possible Haste towards their Horses, which attended at St. Catharine's Gate, called the Iron Gate, crying themselves, as they ran, Stop the Rogues. And they were by all thought innocent, he being in that grave canonical Habit, till Capt. Beckman got up to them. Blood discharged his second Pistol at Capt. Beckman's Head; but he, stooping down, avoided the Shot, and seized upon the Rogue, who had the Crown under his Cloak: Yet had Blood the Impudence, although he saw himself a Prisoner, to struggle a long while for the Crown, and, when it was wrested from him, said, It was a gallant Attempt, how unsuccessful soever; for it was for a Crown.

A Servant belonging to Capt. Sherburn seized upon Parrot, before Blood was taken.

There was such a Confusion in all Men, and so much Confusion in the Pursuit, that it was a Wonder some innocent Persons had not suffered for the Guilty; for young Edwards overtaking one that was bloody in the Scuffle, and supposing him to be one of those who had murdered his Father, was going to run him through, had not Capt. Beckman cried, Hold, he is none of them.

And, as Capt. Beckman made more than ordinary Haste in the Pursuit, the Guards were going to fire at him, supposing him to be one of the Rogues; but one of them, who by good Fortune knew him, cried out, Forbear, he is a Friend.

Blood and Parrot being both seized, as hath been said, Hunt, Blood's Son-in-Law, leaped on his Horse, with two more of the Conspirators, and rid far away; but a Cart standing empty in the Street chanced to turn short, and Hunt ran his Head against a Pole that stuck out: But he recovering his Legs, and putting his Foot in the Stirrup, a Coffer running to enquire after the Disaster, said, This is Tom Hunt, who was in that bloody Attempt upon the Person of the Duke of Ormond; let us secure him. A Constable, being accidentally there, seized him upon that Affirmation, and carried him before Justice Smith; who, upon his confident Denial of himself to be Hunt, was about to let him go; but the Hue and Cry coming, that the Crown was taken out of the Tower, he was committed to safe Custody.

Hunt (as has been said) was Son-in-Law to Blood, and trained up in his Practices.

Parrot was a Silk-Dyer in Southwark; and, in the Rebellion, had been Major-General Harrison's Lieutenant.

Blood was the Son of a Blacksmith in Ireland; a Fellow that thought small Villainies below him: One of his virtuous Comrades having received Sentence of Death in Yorkshire for some Crime, he was rescued out of the Hands of the Sheriff's Men, as they were leading him to the Gallows.

In the robustious Struggle for the Crown, as was shewed before, the great Pearl and a fair Diamond fell off, and were lost for a while, with some other smaller Stones: But the Pearl was found by Catharine Maddox (a poor Sweeping-Woman to one of the Warders) and the Diamond by a Barber's Apprentice, and both faithfully restored. Other smaller Stones were by several Persons picked up, and brought in. The fair Ballas Ruby belonging to the Scepter, was found in Parrot's Pocket; so that not any considerable Thing was wanting; the Crown only was bruised, and sent to repair.

His Majesty was persuaded by some about him to hear the Examination himself; and the Prisoners were forthwith sent for to Whitehall. Nothing but that could possibly have saved Blood from the Gallows: But that which ought to have been his surer Condemnation, proved to be his Safety. For all Men concluding, that none but those who had the Courage to venture upon such a daring Villainy as that of the Crown, could be guilty of the Practice upon a Peer of that Magnitude, as was the Duke of Ormond, especially as the Parliament was then sitting; amongst other Questions therefore it was thought fit to interrogate him, Whether he had not a Hand in that Assault? for the Authors of it were as yet altogether in the Dark.

Blood, as if he had valued himself upon the Action, and possibly suspecting that the King might have made some Discovery of it already, without any Manner of Scruple or Hesitation, confessed he had. It was then asked him, Who his Associates were? He answered, That he would never betray a Friend's Life; nor ever deny a Guilt, in Defence of his own. It was next asked him, What Provocation he had to make so bold an Assault upon the Duke of Ormond? He said, The Duke had taken away his Estate, and executed some of his Friends; and that he and many others had engaged themselves by solemn Oath to revenge it.

He moreover confessed, that he had been engaged in a Design to shoot his Majesty from out of the Reeds by the Thames Side above Battersea, where he often went to swim, because his Majesty had exercised too great Severity over the Consciences of the Godly, in suppressing their religious Assemblies; but that, after he had taken his Stand in the Reeds for that Purpose, his Heart was so overawed with the Majesty of his Person, that he did not only himself relent, but diverted his Associates from the Design. He then added, that he was now in his Majesty's Power, and might expect the utmost Rigour of the Law upon his own Confession; for which he was prepared, without without much Concern of his own; but that he was leagued with some hundreds more, who were tied by Oath to revenge the Death of each other upon those who should bring them to Justice; which would expose both his Majesty and Ministers to the daily Fear and Expectation of a Massacre. On the other Side, he promised, in the Name of himself and Friends, that if his Majesty would pardon and receive into his Favour a few, he should engage the Hearts of many, who would perform eminent Services for the Crown. This produced such an Effect on the Mind of his Majesty, that these Ruffians and Robbers were not only pardoned and set free, but five hundred Pounds per Ann. was settled upon Blood in Ireland, and he was admitted into all the Privacy and Intimacy at Court; whereas Mr. Edwards had no more than a Gratuity of two hundred Pounds, and his Son, who saved the Regalia, but an hundred.

Spanish
Armory.

Near the South-West Angle of the White Tower is the Spanish Armory. In it are repositied the Spoils of the Invincible Armada, as it was stiled, of Philip II. King of Spain, in order to perpetuate to latest Posterity the Memory of that signal Victory obtained by the English over the whole Naval Power of Spain, which will ever make the Reign of Queen Elizabeth glorious in the British Annals. Of an hundred and thirty-two Ships that arrived in the British Channel, scarce seventy of them returned home again; and of thirty thousand Souls on board, upwards of twenty thousand were either killed, drowned, or remained Prisoners in England.—Such was the Fate of this vain-glorious Enterprize.

The Reliques that are preserved here of this memorable Victory, so glorious for our Country, together with some other Curiosities of the like Kind, are,

1. The common Soldiers Pikes, eighteen Feet long, pointed with long sharp Spikes, and shod with Iron, which were designed to keep off the Horse, to facilitate the Landing of their Foot.

2. The Spanish Officers Launces, finely engraved: These were formerly gilt, but the Gilding is now almost worn off with cleaning.—There is a Story current concerning these, that when Don Pedro de Valdez passed his Examination before Lord Burleigh, he told his Lordship, that those fine polished Launces were put on board to bleed the English with; to which that Nobleman replied jokingly, that, if he were not mistaken, the English had performed that Operation better on their good Friends the Spaniards with worse Instruments.

3. The Spanish Ranceurs, made in different Forms; which were intended either to kill the Men on Horseback, or pull them off their Horses.—At the Back is a Spike, with which, they tell you, they were to pick the Roast Beef out of the Englishmens Teeth.—On one of them is a Piece of Silver Coin, which they intended to make current; on it are three Heads, supposed to be the Pope's, Philip II's, and Queen Mary's.—This is a Curiosity that most Spaniards come to see.

4. An uncommon Piece of Arms, being a Pistol in a Shield, so contrived as to fire the Pistol, and cover the Body at the same Time with the Shield. It is to be fired by a Match-lock, and the Sight of the Enemy is to be taken thro' a little Grate in the Shield, which is Pistol Proof.

5. A small Train of ten Pieces of pretty little Cannon, neatly mounted on proper Carriages, being a Present from the Foundry of London to King Charles I. when a Child, to practise the Art of Gunnery with. These, tho' no Part of the Spanish Spoils, are yet a great Curiosity.

6. The Banner, with a Crucifix upon it, which was to have been carried before the Spanish General. On it is engraved the Pope's Benediction before the Spanish Fleet sailed; for the Pope's Nuncio came to the Water-Side, and on seeing the Fleet, blessed it, and, as has been said, stiled it INVINCIBLE.

7. Danish and Saxon Clubs, which Weapons those People jointly are said to have used in the Conquest of England, and are, perhaps, Curiosities of the greatest Antiquity of any in the Tower, having lain there above 742 Years. The Warders call them the Womens Weapons, because, say they, the British Women made Prize of them, when in one Night they all conspired together, and cut the Throats of 35000 Danes; the greatest Piece of Secrecy the English Women ever kept, for which they have ever since been honoured with the right Hand of the Man, the upper End of the Table, and the first Cut of every Dish of Victuals they happen to like best.—Indeed in 1012, a prodigious Slaughter was made of the Danes on the Feast of St. Brice; not by the secret Conspiracy of the Women alone, but by the private Orders of Etihelred II. who commanded his Officers on that Day to extirpate the whole Race of the Danes out of his Dominions, at once, sparing neither Man, Woman, nor Child; which Orders were so punctually obeyed, that only about sixteen, who got on board a Ship, escaped; but these alarming their Countrymen, afterwards returned, and took a severe Revenge.

See before,
Page 34.

8. The Spanish Cravats, as they are called: These are Engines of Torture, made of Iron, and put on board to lock the Feet, Arms, and Heads of English Hereticks together.

9. Spanish Bilboes, made of Iron likewise, to yoke the English Prisoners two and two.

10. Spanish Shot, which are of four Sorts; Spike-shot, Star-shot, Chain-shot, and Link-shot; all admirably contrived, as well for the Destruction of the Masts and Rigging of Ships, as for sweeping the Decks of their Men.—But some attribute the Invention of those to Admiral Drake, to be employed against the Spaniards.

11. Spanish Spada's, or long Swords, poisoned at the Points, so that, if a Man received but ever so slight a Wound with one of those, it proved certain Death.

12. Spanish Halberts, or Spears, some whereof are curiously engraven, and inlaid with Gold.

13. The Ax, with which Queen Ann Bullen (Mother of Queen Elizabeth) was beheaded. This was performed May 19, 1536, a little before Noon, by an Executioner sent for on Purpose from Calais. At the Time of her Death

the

she was not quite thirty Years of Age, and fell a Sacrifice to the Jealousy, or rather the Caprice of Henry VIII. to whom she was lawfully married.—The Earl of Essex (Queen Elizabeth's Favourite) was likewise beheaded with the same Ax.

14. A Spanish Poll-Ax, used in boarding of Ships.

15. Thumb-screws, of which there were several Chests full on board the Spanish Fleet. The Use they were intended for is said to have been, to extort Confession from the English where their Money was hid, had that cruel People prevailed.—Certain it is, that, after the Defeat, the whole Conversation of the Court and Country turned upon the Discoveries made by the Spanish Prisoners of the Racks, the Wheels, and the Whips of Wire, with which they were to scourge the English of every Rank, Age, and Sex. The most noted Hereticks were to be put to Death; those that survived were to be branded on the Forehead with a hot Iron; and the whole Form of Government, both in Church and State, was to be overturned.

16. The Spanish Morning-star, a destructive Engine, resembling the Figure of a Star, of which there were many thousands on board, and all of them with poisoned Points; and were designed to strike at the Enemy, as they came on board, in Case of a close Attack.

17. The Spanish General's Halbert, covered with Velvet. All the Nails of this Weapon are double gilt with Gold, and on its Top is the Pope's Head, curiously engraven.

18. A Spanish Battle-Ax, so contrived as to strike four Holes in a Man's Skull at once; and has besides a Pistol in its Handle with a Match-lock.

19. King Henry the VIII's Walking-Staff, which has three Match-lock Pistols in it, with Coverings to keep the Charges dry. With this Staff, the Warders tell you, the King walked round the City sometimes, to see that the Constables did their Duty; and one Night as he was walking near the Bridge-Foot, the Constable stooped him, to know what he did with such an unlucky Weapon at that Time of the Night: Upon which the King struck him; but, the Constable calling the Watchmen to his Assistance, his Majesty was apprehended and carried to the Poultry-Compter, where he lay confined till Morning, without either Fire or Candle. When the Keeper was informed of the Rank of his Prisoner, he dispatched a Messenger to the Constable, who came trembling with Fear, expecting nothing less than to be hanged, drawn, and quartered: But, instead of that, the King applauded his Resolution in honestly doing his Duty, and made him a handsome Present. At the same Time he settled upon St. Magnus Parish an annual Grant of twenty-three Pounds and a Mark, and made a Provision for furnishing thirty Chaldron of Coals, and a large Allowance of Bread, annually for ever, towards the comfortable Relief of his Fellow-Prisoners and their Successors, which, the Warders say, is paid them to this Day.

20. A large wooden Cannon, called Policy, because, as we are informed, when Henry VIII. besieged Bulloign, the Roads being impassable for heavy Cannon, he caused a Number of these wooden ones to be made, and mounted on proper Batteries before the Town, as if real Cannon; which so terrified the French Commandant, that, when he beheld such a formidable Train, as he thought, just ready to play, he gave up the Town without firing a Shot.—The Truth is, the Duke of Suffolk, who commanded at this Siege under the King, soon made himself Master of the lower Town; but it was not till seven Weeks afterwards that the upper Town capitulated; in which Time the English sustained great Loss, in possessing themselves of the Braye: After which, springing some Mines with good Success, and the Garrison losing Philip Corse, their best Officer, at length surrendered on honourable Terms. The lower Town was taken July 26, 1544, and the upper Town surrendered September 14, the same Year.

22. The last Thing they shew of these memorable Spoils, is the Spanish General's Shield, not worn by, but carried before him as an Ensign of Honour. On it are depicted, in most curious Workmanship, the Labours of Hercules, and other expressive Allegories, which seem to throw a Shade upon the boasted Skill of modern Artists. The Date is 1376, near an hundred Years before the Art of Printing was known in England.

The Small Armory adjoins to the East End of the Tower Chapel; the Ascent to which is by a grand Stair-Case of fifty easy Steps. On the left Side of the uppermost Landing-place is the Work-shop, wherein are constantly employed about fourteen Furbishers, in cleaning, repairing, and new-placing the Arms. When you enter the Armory itself, you will see what they call a Wilderness of Arms, so artificially dispersed, and so admirably ranged, that at one View you behold Arms for near 80000 Men, all bright and shining, and fit for Service at a Moment's Warning: A Sight that no one ever beheld without Astonishment, and is not to be matched perhaps in the World. Besides those exposed to publick View, there are sixteen Chests shut up, each Chest holding about one thousand two hundred Muskets. Of the Disposition of the Arms Description can convey no adequate Idea; but, as what we have to say may assist the Spectator to view it to Advantage, and help him to retain what he sees, take it as follows:

The North and South Walls are adorned with sixteen Pilasters (each Side eight) of Pikes sixteen Feet long, with Capitals of Pistols in the Corinthian Order. At the West End, on the left Hand as you enter, are two curious Pyramids composed of Pistols, standing upon Crowns, Globes, and Scepters, finely carved, and placed upon a Pedestal five Feet high. At the East, or farther End, in the opposite Corner are two Suits of Armour, one made for Henry V. the other for Henry VI. over each of which is a Semicircle of Pistols: Between these is represented the Figure of an Organ, the large Pipes composed of Brass Blunderbusses, the small of Pistols. On one Side of this Figure is the Representation of a fiery Serpent, the Head and Tail of carved Work, and the Body of Pistols, winding round in the Form of a Snake; and on the other a Hydra, or seven-headed Monster, whose whose Heads are very artificially combined by Links of Pistols.

The Inter-columns which compose the Wilderness, are,

1. Some Arms taken at Bath in the Year 1715. These are distinguished from all others in the Tower, by having what they call Dog-locks; which Kind of Locks have a Catch, to secure them from going off at Half-cock.

2. Bayonets and Pistols put up in the Form of Half-Moons and Fans, with the Imitation of a Target in the Center, made up of Bayonet-blades: These Bayonets, of which you will observe several other Fans composed, are of the first Invention, having Plug-Handles, which go into the Muzzle of the Gun, instead of over it, and thereby prevent the firing of the Piece without shooting away the Bayonet. These were invented at Bayonne in Spain, from whence they take their Name.

3. Brass Blunderbusses for Sea-Service, with Capitals of Pistols over them. The Waves of the Sea are here represented in old-fashioned Bayonets.

4. Bayonets and Sword-Bayonets, in the Form of Half-Moons and Fans, and set in Scalloped-Shells, finely carved. The Sword-Bayonet is made like the old Bayonet, with a Plug-Handle, only differing from it by being longer.

5. The rising Sun, irradiated with Rays of Pistols, set in a chequered Frame of Marine Hangers of a peculiar Make, having Brass Handles, and the Form of a Dog's Head on their Pommels.

6. Four beautiful twisted Pillars, made with Pistols up to the Top, which is about twenty-two Feet high, and placed at right Angles, with the Form of a falling Star on the Ceiling exactly in the Middle of them, being the Center of this magnificent Room. Into this Place opens the grand Stair-Case Door, for the Admission of the Royal Family, or any of the Nobility, whose Curiosity may lead them to view the Armory; opposite to which opens another Door into the Balcony, that affords a fine Prospect of the Parade, the Governor's House, the Surveyor-General's, Store-Keeper's, and other General Officers Houses in the Tower.

7. The Form of a Pair of large Folding-Gates, made of Serjeants Halberts, of an antique Make.

8. Horsemen's Carbines, hanging very artificially in Furbelows and Flounces.

9. Medusa's Head, commonly called the Witch of Endor, within three regular Ellipses of Pistols, with Snakes represented as flinging her. The Features are finely carved, and the whole Figure contrived with curious Art.—This Figure terminates the North Side.

10. Facing the East Wall, as you turn round, is a grand Figure of a lofty Organ, ten Ranges high, in which are contained upwards of two thousand Pair of Pistols.

11. On the South Side, as you return, the first Figure that attracts Attention is that of Jupiter, riding in a fiery Chariot drawn by Eagles, as if in the Clouds, holding a Thunder-bolt in his left Hand, and over his Head is a Rainbow. This Figure is finely carved, and decorated with Bayonets.

Note, The Figures on this Side answer pretty nearly to those on the other, and therefore need no further Description 'till you come again to the Center; where, on each Side the Door leading to the Balcony, you will see,

12. A fine Representation, in carved Work, of the Star and Garter, Thistle, Rose and Crown, ornamented with Pistols, &c. and very elegantly enriched with Birds and other Creatures.

13. The Arms taken from Sir William Perkins, Sir John Friend, Charnock, and others concerned in the Assassination Plot, in 1696; among which they shew the very Blunderbuss with which they intended to shoot King William near Turnham-Green, in his Way to Hampton-Court; also the Carbine with which Charnock undertook to shoot that Monarch as he rode a hunting.

14. Lastly, the Highlanders Arms, taken in 1715, particularly the Earl of Mar's fine Piece, exquisitely wrought, and inlaid with Mother of Pearl: Also a Highland Broad-Sword, with which a Highlander struck General Evans over the Head, and at one Blow cut him through his Hat, Wig, and Iron Scull-cap, on which that General is said to have shot him dead: Others say he was taken Prisoner, and generously forgiven for his Bravery. Here is also the Sword of Justice (having a sharp Point,) the Sword of Mercy (having a blunt Point,) carried before the Pretender when proclaimed in Scotland in 1715: Some of the Highlanders Pistols, the Barrels and Stocks being all Iron: Also a Highlander's Loughaber Ax, with which it is said Col. Gardiner was killed at the Battle of Preston-Pans.

A discerning Eye will discover a thousand Peculiarities in the Disposition of so vast a Variety of Arms, which no Description can reach; and therefore it is fit that every one who has a Taste for the admirable Combinations of Art, should gratify that darling Passion with the Sight of a Curiosity, the noblest in its Kind the World affords.

Beneath the small Armory, on a Ground-Floor of equal Dimensions, is the Royal Train of Artillery, which one cannot view without a Kind of awful Dread.

First, here are two large Pieces of Cannon, employed by Admiral Vernon before Carthage: They have each a large Scale driven out of their Muzzles by Balls from the Castle of Bocca-Chica.

2. Two carved Pieces, of excellent Workmanship, presented by the City of London to the young Duke of Gloucester, Queen Ann's Son, to learn him the Art of War.

3. Four small Mortars in Miniature, for throwing Hand-Granadoes, the Invention of Colonel Brown. They are fired with a Lock, like a common Gun; but have not yet been introduced into Practice.

4. Two fine Brass Cannon, taken from the Walls of Vigo by the late Lord Cobham, in 1704. Their Breeches represent Lions Couchant, with the Effigy of St. Barbara, to whom they were dedicated.

5. A Petard, for the bursting open City or Castle Gates.

Royal Train of Artillery

6. A large Train of fine Brads Battering-Cannon, twenty-four Pounders, never yet used.

7. A Parcel of Cannon of a new Invention, from six to twenty-four Pounders. Their superior Excellence consists, first, in their Lightness, the twenty-four Pounders weighing not quite 1700 Weight, whereas formerly they weighed 5000: The rest are in Proportion. And, secondly, in the Contrivance for levelling them, which is by a Screw, instead of Beds and Quoins.—This new Method is more expeditious, and saves two Men to a Gun, and is said to be the Invention of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland.

8. Brads Mortars of thirteen Inches Diameter, which throw a Shell of 300 Weight; with a Number of lesser Mortars, and Shells in Proportion.

9. A Carcase, which they fill at Sieges with Pitch, Tar, and other Combustibles, to set Towns on Fire. It is thrown out of an eighteen Inch Mortar, and will burn two Hours where it happens to fall.

10. A Spanish Mortar, of twelve Inches Diameter, taken on board a Ship in the West-Indies.

11. Six French Pieces of Cannon, six Pounders, taken from the Rebels at the Battle of Culloden, fought April 16, 1745. This Battle lasted but thirty-five Minutes, but the Slaughter was so great, that three thousand Rebels fell on the Spot. It is said, that Lord Kingston's Horse killed ten or twelve of them a-piece in the Pursuit.

12. A beautiful Piece of Ordnance, made for King Charles I. when Prince of Wales. It is finely ornamented with several emblematical Devices, among which is an Eagle throwing a Thunder-bolt in the Clouds.

13. A Train of Field-pieces, called the Galloping-Train, carrying a Ball of one Pound and a Half each.

14. A destroying Engine, that throws thirty Hand-Granadoes at once, and is fired by a Train.

15. A most curious Brads Cannon made for Prince Henry, eldest Son of King James I. the Ornamenting whereof is said to have cost 200*l*. It is inscribed with the Makers Names, Thomas and Richard Pitt, 1608; who, no Doubt, were proud of the Performance, which is indeed admirable.

16. A Piece with seven Bores, for throwing so many Bullets at once; and another with three, made as early as Henry VIII's Time.

17. The Drum-major's Chariot of State, with the Kettle-drums placed. It is drawn by four white Horses at the Head of the Train, when upon a March.

18. Two French Field-pieces, taken at the Battle of Hochstadt, in 1704; in which the French had 12000 Men killed, 5000 wounded, and more than 20000 taken Prisoners.

19. An Iron Cannon of the first Invention, being Bars of Iron hammered together, and hooped from Top to Bottom with Iron Hoops, to prevent its bursting. It has no Carriage, but was to be moved from Place to Place by Means of six Rings, fixed to it at proper Distances.

20. A huge Mortar, weighing upwards of 6600

Weight, and throwing a Shell of 500 Weight two Miles. This Mortar was fired so often against Namur in King William's Time, that the very Touch-hole is melted, for Want of giving it Time to cool.—This Siege is one of the most memorable in History. The Place was thought to be impregnable, and yet taken from a complete Army within, headed by a Marshal of France, in the Sight of 100000 Men without, that came to relieve it. Lord Cutts commanded the English at the general Assault of the Castle, where he acquired the Name of the English Salamander. Scarce an Officer or Soldier in his Corps came off unhurt: The greatest Part fell in the Action, than which none was ever more desperate.

21. A fine twisted Brads Cannon, twelve Feet long, made in Edward VI's Time, called Queen Elizabeth's Pocket-pistol; which, the Warders, by Way of Joke, will tell you, she used to wear on her right Side when she rode a hunting.

22. Two Brads Cannon, three Bores each, carrying six Pounders, taken by the Duke of Marlborough at the Battle of Ramellies. Here the famous French Household Troops, which had been boasted of as impenetrable, were totally defeated and ruined. The French lost 8000 Men killed, and 6000 Prisoners.

23. A Mortar that throws nine Shells at a Time; out of which the Balloons were fired at the late Fire-works.

Besides those above enumerated, there are in this Store-room a vast Number of Brads Cannon, all new; together with Sponges, Ladles, Rammers, Hand-spikes, Wad-hooks, &c. wherewith the Walls are lined all round; and under the Ceiling there hang on Poles upwards of 4000 Harness for Horses, besides Mens Harness, Drag-ropes, &c. This Room, which is at least three hundred and eighty Feet in Length, fifty wide, and twenty-four high, has a Passage in the Middle sixteen Feet wide, on each Side of which the Artillery are placed. In it are twenty Pillars for supporting the Small Armory above, all hung round with Implements of War: And besides the Trophies of Standards, Colours, &c. taken from the Enemy, it is now adorned with the transparent and well-coloured Pictures brought hither from the Fire-works played off at the Conclusion of the late Peace.

These two last Armories, which form a grand Store-house, is a noble Building to the Northward of the White Tower, and extends in Length two hundred and forty-five Feet, in Breadth sixty. It was begun by King James II. and by that Prince built to the first Floor; but finished by King William, who erected that magnificent Room called the New or Small Armory; in which he, with Queen Mary his Consort, dined in great Form, having all the Warrant Workmen and Labourers to attend them, dressed in white Gloves and Aprons, the usual Badges of the Order of FREE MASONRY. This noble Structure is of Brick and Stone, and on the North Side is a stately Door-Cafe, adorned with four Columns, Entablature, and triangular Pediment of the Doric Order. Under the Pediment are the King's Arms, with Enrichments of Trophy-Work, very ornamental.

A little

*Horſe
Armory.*

A little Eaſtward of the Office of Ordnance is the Horſe Armory, where the Spectator is entertained with a perfect Representation of thoſe illuſtrious Kings and Heroes of our own Nation, of whoſe gallant Actions he has heard and read ſo much; all of them equipped, and ſitting on Horſeback, in the ſame bright and ſhining Armour they were uſed to wear at the very Time when thoſe glorious Deeds were performed.—In aſcending the Stair-caſe, juſt as you come to the Landing-place, by caſting your Eye inward you will ſee the Figure of a Grenadier in his Accoutrements, as if upon Duty, with his Piece reſted upon his Arm; which, at the firſt Glance, you will be apt to miſtake for real Life. Having entered the Room, you firſt behold a vaſt Number of Iron Caps and Breaſt-plates, moſt of which were in Uſe in the late War: But they were not thought neceſſary at firſt, till the Want of them was felt at the Battle of Dettingen; when the Black Muſketeers of the Enemy, being covered with their Cuiraffes, (the ſame Piece of Armour, with the Addition of a Back-piece) pierced the very Lines of our Army, and rode up undaunted to the Muzzles of our Guns; till being flanked by our Foot, and ill-ſupported by their own Troops, they were forced to retire, tho' with an inconfiderable Loſs, conſidering their deſperate Attempt. This plainly diſcovered the great Uſe of Breaſt-plates, and Orders were ſent to England for the immediate Embarkation of all that were in the Tower fit for Service. In the Wars of Queen Ann there was the ſame Omiſſion, till the Duke of Marlborough, being convinced of the Diſadvantage his Horſe fought under, againſt an Enemy entrenched, as it were, in Iron, ſent Lord Cadogan over; who went himſelf to the Tower, and choſe out as many Breaſt and Back-plates as he could find fit for his Purpoſe: But the Duke would not ſuffer the latter to be worn, being, as he ſaid, an uſeleſs Incumbrance; for he was ſure His Men would never ſhew their Backs to the Enemy. Moſt of thoſe Breaſt-plates are Muſket-Proof; they are quilted on the Inſide, and ſo contrived as to cover the whole Trunk of the Body, and yet, by the Manner of fixing them on, are very little Trouble to the Wearer. There are likewiſe to be ſeen here a great many Cuiraffes, taken from the French out of a Ship called the Holy Ghoſt, and marked Terraz, perhaps the Admiral's Name.

When you enter the Room, the firſt Thing your Conductor preſents to your Notice is,

1. The Figures of the Horſe and Foot, on your left Hand, ſuppoſed to be drawn up in military Order to attend the Kings on the other Side of the Houſe. Theſe Figures are as big as the Life, and have lately been new painted, and look indeed very nobly.

2. A large Tilting-Launce of Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, King Henry VIII's General in France.—This Nobleman excelled at the then fashionable Diverſion of Tilting, and, engaging King Henry VIII. who was likewiſe paſſionately fond of that royal Exerciſe, gave the King ſuch a Shock with his Spear, that had like to have coſt him his Life.—The Duke's Valour had indeed been ſufficiently tried in France, when he attended Princeſs Mary of England on her Marriage with

NUMB. XV.

Lewis XII.—On this Occaſion Francis de Valois, prefumptive Heir to the Crown of France, being willing to give ſome Proof of his Valour, cauſed Juſts to be proclaimed. Theſe Juſts continued three Days, in which three hundred and five Men at Arms were answered by their Defendants; of whom ſome were ſo hurt, that they died ſoon after. Francis had choſen the Duke and the Marquis of Derſet two of his Aids, and, being hurt himſelf at firſt, deſired the Duke and Marquis to fight at Barriers, who therefore took the firſt Place againſt all Comers. In the mean Time Francis, as was thought, intending an Affront to the Duke, cauſed a German, the ſtrongeſt about the Court, to be armed ſecretly, and to preſent himſelf. They both did well: Yet the Duke, at laſt, with the But-End of his Spear, ſtruck the German till he ſtaggered, when the Rail was let fall. Having breathed a while, they renewed the Fight, when the Duke ſo mauled the German about the Head, that the Blood guſhed out at his Noſe and Ears, and then he was ſecretly conveyed away. Before this Encounter, the Duke had likewiſe unhorſed a Gentleman at Tilts, and hurt him deſperately.

3. A complete Suit of Tilting-Armour, ſuch as the Kings, Nobility, and Gentlemen at Arms uſed to exerciſe in on Horſeback; at which Diverſion one of the Kings of France is ſaid to have been killed, by a Shiver of a Spear ſtriking him in the Eye.—Likewiſe the Tilting-Launce, the Reſt for the Tilting-Launce, with the grand Guard, and the Slits before the Eye, thro' which they take the Sight.

4. A complete Suit of Armour made for King Henry VIII. when he was but eighteen Years of Age, rough from the Hammer. 'Tis at leaſt fix Feet high; and the Joints in the Hands, Arms and Thighs, Knees and Feet, play like the Joints of a Rattle-Snake, and are moved with all the Facility imaginable. The Method of learning the Exerciſe of Tilting was upon wooden Horſes ſet on Caſtors, which, by the Sway of the Body, could be moved every Way; ſo that by frequent Practice the Rider could ſhift, parry, ſtrike, unhorſe, and recover with ſurpriſing Dexterity. Some of the Horſes in this Armory had undoubtedly been made Uſe of for this Purpoſe; and it is but lately that the Caſtors have been taken from their Feet.

5. A little Suit of Armour made for King Charles II. when he was Prince of Wales, and about ſeven or eight Years of Age, with a Piece of Armour for his Horſe's Head; the whole moſt curiouſly wrought, and inlaid with Silver.

6. Lord Cesary's Armour, who was grand Champion in Ireland, and his very Sword which he took from the Champion of France; for which valiant Action he, and all his Succeſſors, have the Honour to wear their Hats in the King's Preſence; which Privilege is enjoyed by Lord Kinsale, as Head of that antient and noble Family, at this Day.

7. Real Coats of Mail, called Brigandine Jackets. They conſiſt of ſmall Bits of Steel, ſo artfully quilted one over another, as to reſiſt the Point of a Sword, or even, I believe, a Muſket-Bullet; and yet they are ſo flexible, flexible, that you may bend your Body in them any Way, as well as in ordinary Cloathing.

U u

8. An Indian Suit of Armour, sent as a Present to King Charles II. from the Great Mogul. This is indeed a great Curiosity: It is made of Iron Quills, about two Inches long, finely japanned, and ranged in Rows, one Row slipping over another very artificially; they are bound together with Silk Twist very strong. They are used in that Country as a Defence against Darts and Arrows, poisoned or unpoisoned.

9. A neat little Suit of Armour, in which is a carved Figure, representing Richard Duke of York, King Edward IV.'s youngest Son, who, with his Brother Edward V. were smothered in the Bloody Tower, by Order of Richard III. commonly called Crook-back'd Richard, their Uncle and Guardian. The Manner of their Deaths was this: One Sir James Tyrrel, a strong, resolute Fellow, having a Commission from the King for that Purpose, and employing one Miles Forrest, a common Ruffian, and John Dighton, his own Groom, those two Wretches, by Night, entered the Room where the young Princes, attended only by one Servant, were confined, and, while they slept, smothered them in their Bed-Cloaths. After this, Tyrrel ordered them to be buried at the Stair-Foot, deep under Ground; where their Bones were actually found in the Reign of King Charles II.

10. The Armour of the Great John of Gaunt, Duke of LANCASTER, who was the Son of a King, the Father of a King, and Uncle of a King, but was never King himself. Dugdale says, that more Kings and sovereign Princes sprung from his Loins, than from any King in Christendom. The Armour here shewn is seven Feet high, and the Sword and Launce of an enormous Size.

We come now to the Line of Kings, and, to follow the Order of our Conductors, we must reverse the Order of their Chronology, and describe the last first; as,

1. His late Majesty King George I. in a complete Suit of Armour, sitting with a Truncheon in his Hand on a white Horse richly caparisoned, having a fine Turkey Bridle gilt with Gold, with a Globe, Crescent, and Star, Velvet Furniture laced with Gold, and Gold Trappings.

2. The late King William III. dressed in the very Suit of Armour worn by Edward the Black Prince, Son of Edward III. in the famous Battle of Cressy, wherein the French lost eleven Princes, eighty Bannerets, one thousand two hundred Knights, one thousand five hundred Gentlemen at Arms, four thousand 'Squires, who were mounted on Horseback, and thirty thousand common Men. He is mounted on a sorrel Horse, whose Furniture is green Velvet embroidered with Silver, and holds in his right Hand a flaming Sword.

3. King Charles II. dressed in the Armour that was worn by the Champion of England at the Coronation of his present Majesty. He sits with a Truncheon in his Hand, on a fine Horse, richly caparisoned with Crimson Velvet laced with Gold.

4. King Charles I. in a rich Suit of his own proper Armour, gilt with Gold, and curiously wrought, presented to him by the City of London when he was Prince of Wales, and is the same Armour that was laid on the Coffin at the Funeral Procession of the late great Duke of Marlborough; on which Occasion a Collar of SS was added to it, and is now round it.

5. James I. of England, and VI. of Scotland. He sits on Horseback, with a Truncheon in his right Hand, dressed in a complete Suit of figured Armour.

6. King Edward VI. the first Protestant Prince that ever reigned in England (if the Father of the Reformation be excepted.) He is said by some to have been cut out of his Mother's Belly (Lady Jane Seymour;) but that Queen lived twelve Days after her Delivery. The memorable Acts of his Reign are those of Charity and Beneficence. He gave to the Citizens of London three Hospitals; to wit, that of Christ-Church, for the Maintenance and Education of poor Citizens Children; that of Bridewell, for breeding them up to Trades; and that of St. Thomas, for healing the Sick and Diseased. He is dressed in a most curious Suit of Steel Armour, whereon are depicted, in different Compartments, a vast Variety of Scripture Histories, alluding to Battles and other memorable Passages. He sits on Horseback, like the rest, with a Truncheon in his right Hand. He was born October 12, 1537, proclaimed King January 31, 1547, and died July 6, 1553.

7. King Henry VIII. in his own proper Armour, being of polished Steel, the Foliages whereof are gilt or inlaid with Gold. In his right Hand he bears a Sword.

8. Henry VII. who killed Richard III. in the memorable Battle of Bosworth Field, and by marrying Elizabeth, eldest Daughter of Edward IV. united the two famous Houses of York and Lancaster. This Prince holds likewise a Sword in his Hand, and sits on Horseback in a complete Suit of Armour, finely wrought, and washed with Silver.

9. King Edward V. who, with his Brother Richard, was smothered in the Bloody Tower. He was proclaimed King, but never crowned; for which Reason a Crown is hung over his Head. He is in a rich Suit of Armour, finely decorated, and holds in his right Hand a Launce.

10. King Edward IV. Father to the two unhappy Princes above-mentioned. His Reign is stained with Blood and Lust; and though he was fortunate in most of his Battles, yet his Victories were all at the Expence of his own Subjects. At the Battle of Tewton 36000 English are said to have been killed; and, during his Reign, Guthrie says, no less than 200000 English lost their Lives, in the Contest betwixt Henry of Lancaster and this Edward of York. He was equally formed for Love and War; and his Gallantries with the Citizens Wives, among whom was the famous Jane Shore, are still remembered with Detestation. He is here distinguished by a Suit of bright Armour studded, and by holding in his right Hand a drawn Sword.

11. King Henry VI. who, tho' crowned King of France at Paris, lost all that Kingdom. The Rebellion of Jack Cade, who entered London, and beheaded Lord Say, happened in this Reign.

12. Warlike and Victorious Henry V. who, by his Conquests in France, gained immortal Glory. He caused himself to be acknowledged Regent and presumptive Heir of that Kingdom. With only nine thousand English he defeated an hundred and fifty thousand French at the Battle of Agincourt, where he took more Prisoners than he had Men in his Army. Near Harfleur, fifteen thousand French were defeated by one thousand five hundred English. This Prince was Sir John Falstaff's Companion. He was born in 1389, began to reign March 20, 1412, and died August 31, 1422. A short Reign, but full of Glory!

13. Henry IV. Great John of Gaunt's Son. Four Insurrections against him were defeated, the greatest of which he quelled himself by the Battle of Shrewsbury, wherein Harry Hotspur and ten thousand Rebels fell, besides as many of his own Troops. He twice beat the Welch under Owen Glendower.

14. Edward III. John of Gaunt's Father, and Father to Edward the Black Prince, is represented here in a venerable grey Beard, and in a Suit of plain bright Armour, with two Crowns on his Sword, alluding to the two Kingdoms, France and England; of both which he was crowned King, and was the first who quartered the Arms of France with his own, adding the Motto, Dieu et mon Droit.

15. Edward I. in a very curious Suit of gilt Armour, with this Peculiarity, that the Shoes thereof are of Mail. He is represented with a Battle-Ax in his Hand, perhaps to distinguish him from the rest, he being the only King in the Line that had employed his Arms against the Turks and Infidels, by an Expedition to the Holy Land. This warlike Prince conquered Wales, asserted a Right of Sovereignty over Scotland, raised Balliol to the Throne of that Kingdom, and afterwards cited him before the Parliament at Westminster, to answer to a Complaint made against him by the Earl of Fife. He was every where victorious, and his Reign is famed for Acts of Justice, and is one of the fairest in the English History.

16. First in the Line sits William the Conqueror, Duke of Normandy, in a Suit of plain Armour. This valiant Prince having with his Normans, on some Pretence of Right to the Crown, invaded England, by one decisive Battle accomplished his great Design. This memorable Battle was fought October 14, 1066, near Hastings in Sussex; in which King Harold, with the Flower of the English Nobility and best Warriors, were slain.

17. Over the Door, as you go out of this Armory, is a Target, on which are engraved, by a masterly Hand, the Figures, as it should seem, of Fortune, Fortitude, and Justice; and round the Room the Walls are every where lined with various old, uncommon Pieces of Armour, such as Targets, Caps, Horns Heads, Breast-Plates, and many other Sorts, for which the very Names are now wanting,

There remains nothing more to be added concerning the Curiosities in the Tower, but some short Account of the Lions and other wild Beasts, &c. kept in a Place that bears the Name of the Lions Tower, at the West Entrance, as before remarked; over whom has been appointed a Keeper from very early Time, as may be learned from Records already recited; and more particularly from the Appointment of Robert Marfield, Esq; to that Office by King Henry VI. And it further appears by the said Records in the Tower, that this Office was continued by Letters Patents by succeeding Kings to some Person of Distinction and Quality, with an Allowance of six Pence a Day, and an Apartment for himself, Conveniences for the wild Beasts, and six Pence a Day for the Maintenance of every Lion and Leopard; which seem to have been the only Beasts kept here for many Ages, except a white Bear and an Elephant in the Days of King Henry III. (See Page 88.) who, in the thirty-sixth Year of his Reign, issued Orders to the Sheriffs of London, dated at St. Edmund's, Sept. 13, and again at Windfor, Sept. 29, for them to allow four Pence a Day for the Maintenance of a white Bear and his Keeper in the Tower of London; whom also he next Year commanded to provide a Muzzle and an Iron Chain to hold the Bear out of the Water, and a long and strong Cord to hold the same Bear fishing [or washing] himself in the River Thames; which Command was dated at Windfor, on the 30th of October. And in the Years 1255 and 1256 came out the following Precepts:

"The King to the Sheriffs of London greeting. We command you, that of the Farm of our City ye cause (without Delay) to be built at our Tower of London one House of forty Feet long and twenty Feet deep, for our Elephant." Dated February 26.

Again, the next Year the King, on the 11th of October, commanded the said Sheriffs "to find for the said Elephant and his Keeper such Necessaries as should be reasonably needful."

Anno 1604, June 3, King James I. taking with him the Duke of Lenox, (with divers Earls and Lords) went to see the Lions at the Tower. And here he caused two of them, a He-Lion and a She, to be put forth; and then a live Cock was cast to them, which being their natural Enemy, they presently killed it, and sucked the Blood. Then the King caused a live Lamb to be put to them; which the Lions, out of their Generosity, (as having Respect to its Innocence) never offered to touch, although the Lamb was so bold as to go close to them. Then the King caused the Lions to be taken away, and another Lion to be put forth, and two Mastiffs to be turned to him. The Mastiffs presently flew upon the Lion, and turned him upon his Back; and tho' the Lion was superior to them in Strength, yet, it seems, they were his Match in Courage.

There was a Spaniel Dog, for some Offence or other, cast into the Lion's Den; but the Lion did not attempt to hurt him: And this Dog continued in the Den with the Lion several Years, and there died.

In the Month of June, 1609, a Resolution was taken to make Trial of the Valour of the Lions and other wild Beasts.

King James I. goes to the Tower, where the Courage of the Lion is tried before him.

Abridg. of Engl. Chron.

the Lion; which was by turning him loose to a Bear.

The Bear was brought into an open Yard, and the Lion was turned out of his Den to him; but he would not assault him, but fled from him: And so it was done with other Lions, one after another: And, lastly, two together were turned to him; but none set upon him, but rather fought to return to their Dens. A Stone-Horse soon after being put into the Yard with the first Lion and the Bear, the Horse fell to grazing between them. After he had gazed a little upon them, two Mastiff Dogs were let in, who boldly fought with the Lion. Afterwards six Dogs more were let in; who flew upon the Horse, being most in Sight, at their first Entrance, and would soon have worried him to Death, had not three stout Bearherds entered, and rescued the Horse, and brought away the Dogs, while the Lion and Bear stood staring upon them. At this Sight were present King James I. the Queen, the Prince, and divers great Lords.

*Wild Beasts
now in the Tower, 1754.*

The wild Beasts and other savage Animals in the Tower at this Time, March 25, 1754, are,

Two Egyptian Nightwalkers, and two Apes from Turkey.

Three beautiful Tygers, and a fine Leopard.

A Golden Eagle, which has been kept here upwards of ninety Years.

Several other Eagles, brought from different Parts.

A horned Owl, which is indeed a rare and wonderful Bird. Its Head seems full as big as that of a Cat, its Eyes large, having Circles round them, of a bright shining Gold Colour. The Feathers that compose the Horns begin just above the Eyes, and rise intermixed with a little White, but as they extend onward, beyond the Head, they become of a red Brown, clouded with Dusky, and tipped with Black. The Spaces round the Eyes, which compose the Face, is of a light Brown, confusedly mixed with Orange Colour, gradually becoming dusky, as it borders on the Eyes. The Top of the Head, Neck, Back, Wings, and upper Side of the Tail, are of a dark Brown, spotted, and intermixed with some confused transverse small Lines of Ash Colour and reddish: The greater Wing Feathers and the Tail are barred a-crofs with dusky Bars of Half an Inch in Breadth, less or more. Between the Back and Wings the Feathers are of an Ash Colour. The fore Part of the Neck and Breast are a bright Brown, inclining to Orange, which gradually grows fainter on the Sides. This brown Part is spotted with pretty large dark Spots, and intermixed between the Spots with the same dusky Colour. The Middle of the Breast, Belly, Thighs, and under Side of the Tail, are a faint Ash Colour, barr'd transversely with dusky Lines pretty regularly. The Inside of the Wings are coloured and variegated in the same Manner. The Legs and Toes, almost to the Ends, are covered with light Ash-coloured Feathers. The Ends of the Toes and Claws are of a dark Horn Colour, and very strong and sharp. I have been the more nice in this Description, as there is not, perhaps, another such Bird in England.

The Lion Pompey, and the young Lionses Helen, about seven Years old.

Two Bears.

A young Man-Tyger, a curious Animal, of astonishing Strength, and very mischievous if affronted. He has an admirable Art of throwing Stones, and will throw any Lead or Iron that happens to be within his Reach with such Force as to split Stools, Bowls, or any such wooden Utensils, in an hundred Pieces. When he came over, he killed a poor Boy on board the Ship that brought him, by throwing a Cannon Shot of nine Pounds Weight at him, upon some Disgust. He is fed in the nicest Manner, with as good Bread as the Keeper eats at his Table; and, if his Feeder brings him bad Bread, he never fails to shew his Repentment. He has a Stool to sit upon, is as big as a Boy of ten or eleven Years old, and has many Actions nearly approaching to those of the human Species.

Another Man-Tyger, but neither so large nor so dextrous.

A Guiney Racoen, much more beautiful than those that come from America; a Jackall; and a fine Tyger Cat. This last is a beautiful Creature, larger than the largest Boar Cat, delightfully coloured, and fierce beyond Description.

An Ostrich, which was sent as a Present to his Majesty from the Dey of Tunis.

All these Creatures are regularly fed with Food proper for them, and as carefully tended, as if they were indeed of royal Dignity.—This takes off much of their savage Nature, and makes them tame and submissive; and, perhaps, contributed not a little to disappoint the Expectations of King James I. when he made Trial of the fierce Nature of the Lion.

Besides the divers Custodies in the Tower described above, we read of another of the Little Wardrobe, in the 36th of Henry VI. and another Patent passed in the 25th of Henry III. to the Keeper of the Work of the Tower.

The Tower is, perhaps, the best chosen Situation for such a Fortrefs of any in the World. It lies to the Eastward of London, near enough to cover that opulent City from Invasion by Water, being eight hundred Yards only from the Bridge, and to the North of the River Thames, from which it is parted by a narrow Ditch, and a convenient Wharf, to which it has a Communication by a Draw-bridge, for the readier issuing and receiving Ammunition, and Naval or Military Stores. This Wharf is now mounted with upwards of sixty Pieces of heavy Cannon, chiefly used to fire upon Days of State. Parallel to the Wharf, within the Walls, is a Platform seventy Yards in Length, called the Ladies Line, because much frequented by the Ladies in the Summer, as within it is shaded with a lofty Row of Trees, and without it has a delightful Prospect of the Shipping, with Boats passing and repassing on the River Thames. You ascend this Line by Stone Steps, and, being once upon it, you may walk almost round the Walls of the Tower without Interruption; and in your Course will pass three Batteries, the first called the Devil's Battery, where is also a Platform, on which are mounted seven Pieces of Cannon, tho' on the Battery itself are only five; the next is called the Stone-Battery, and is defended by eight Pieces of Cannon; and the third and last is called the Wooden-Battery, mounted with six Pieces of Cannon: All these are nine Pounders.

Principal Gate.

Other Entrances.

The principal Entrance into the Tower is by a Gate to the West, large enough to admit Coaches and heavy Carriages; but these are first admitted through an outer Gate, and must pass a stout Stone Bridge, built over the Ditch, before they can approach the main Entrance. There is besides an Entrance for Persons on Foot, over the Draw-bridge already mentioned, to the Wharf, which Wharf is only divided from the main Land by Gates at each End, opened every Day at a certain Hour, for the Convenience of a free Inter-course between the respective Inhabitants of the Tower, the City, and its Suburbs. There is also a Water-Gate, commonly called Traitors-Gate, through which it has been customary to convey Traitors and other State-Prisoners to or from the Tower, perhaps, for greater Privacy, and which is seldom opened on any other Occasion; but the Lords, committed to the Tower on Account of the late Rebellion, were publicly admitted at the main Entrance. Over this Gate is a regular Building, terminated at each End by two Bastions, or round Towers, on which are Embrasures for pointing Cannon; but there are at present none mounted. In this Building there are the Infirmary, the Mill, and Water-Works that supply the Tower with Water.

Great Ceremony is used at opening and shutting the principal Gate Night and Morning. A little before Six in the Morning in Summer, and as soon as well light in the Winter, the Yeoman-Porter goes to the Governor's House for the Keys; from whence he proceeds to the innermost Gate, attended by a Serjeant and six Men from the Main-Guard: This Gate being opened to let them pass, is again shut, while the Yeoman-Porter and the Guard proceed to open the three outermost Gates; at each of which the Guards rest their Firelocks, as do the Spur-Guard, while the Keys pass and repass. Upon the Yeoman-Porter's Return to the innermost Gate, he calls to the Warders in Waiting to take in King George's Keys; upon which the Gate is opened, and the Keys lodged in the Warders Hall till the Time of locking, which is usually about Ten or Eleven at Night, with the same Formality as when opened. After they are shut, the Yeoman and Guard proceed to the Main-Guard, who are all under Arms, with the Officers upon Duty at their Head: The usual Challenge from the Main-Guard to the Yeoman-Porter is, Who comes there? His Answer is, The Keys. The Challenger says, Pass Keys. Upon which the Officer orders the Guard to rest their Firelocks. The Yeoman-Porter then says, God save King George. Amen, is loudly answered by all the Guard. From the Main-Guard the Yeoman-Porter with his Guard proceeds to the Governor's, where the Keys are left; after which no Person can go out or come in, upon any Pretence whatsoever, till next Morning, without the Watch-Word for the Night, which is kept so secret, that none but the proper Officers, and the Serjeants upon Guard, ever come to the Knowledge of it; for it is the same on the same Night in every fortified Place throughout the King's Dominions. When that is given by any Stranger to the Centinel at the Spur-Guard, or outer Gate, he communicates it to his Serjeant, who passes it to the next on Duty, and so on till it comes to the Governor or commanding Officer, by whom the Keys are delivered to the Yeoman-Porter, who, attended as before, the Main-Guard being put under Arms, brings them to the outer Gate, where the Stranger is admitted, and conducted to the Commandant. Having made known his Business, he is reconducted to the outer Gate, dismissed, the Gate shut, and the Keys re-delivered with all the Formality as at first.

The principal Officers to whom the Government and Care of the Tower is committed, are, first, the Constable of the Tower, who is usually of the highest Quality, as his Post at all Coronations and other State-Ceremonies is of the utmost Importance, having the Crown and other Regalia in his Custody. He has under him a Lieutenant and a Deputy-Lieutenant, commonly called Governor, whose Offices are likewise of great Dignity; a Tower-Major, Gentleman-Porter, Yeoman-Porter, Gentleman-Gaoler, four Quarter-Gunners, and forty Warders, whose Uniform is the same with the King's Yeomen of the Guard: Upon their Heads they wear round flat-crowned Caps, tied round with Bands of Party-coloured Ribbands. Their Coats are of a peculiar Make, but very becoming, with large Sleeves and flowing Skirts, and are made of fine scarlet Cloth, laced round the Edges and Seams with several Rows of gold Lace, and girt round their Waists with a broad laced Girdle. Upon their Breasts and Backs they wear the King's silver Badge, representing the Thistle and Rose, on which are the Letters G. R. in Capitals.

Besides these and other inferior domestick Officers, if I may be allowed to call them so, there is always a Battalion of Foot-Guards on Duty, quartered in Barracks.

The first and principal Officer of this Fortress, and under whom all these particular Custodies are held, is called the Constable, a Place of high Honour and great Trust. The first upon Record that enjoyed this Post was one Otbouenus in the Reign of King Stephen, who was succeeded by Acolivillus, Otbo, and Godfrey Magnaville Earl of Essex, in the same Reign. We afterwards find John Holland, Duke of Exeter, in the Reign of Henry VI. the Earl of Oxford in 1485, and the Earl of Lincoln in the Reign of Edward VI. amongst these Constables, of whom History does not afford any perfect List.

King Richard III. intending the black Design of murdering his Nephews the two young Princes Edward and Richard, appointed Robert Brakenbury, Esq; Constable of the Tower in 1483, as one well attached to his Interest, and ready to obey all his Commands; and, to keep him the more tight to him, his Majesty gave him also the Office of Master and Operator of Monies; the Office of Keeper of the Exchange within the Tower of London; the Office of keeping the Lions, as mentioned before; the Constableship of Tunbridge Castle in Kent, with a Fee of ten Marks; the Stewardship of the Lordship of Ware, with a Fee of an hundred Shillings; the Manors of Mote, Morden, Delbing, Newington in Kent, and all the other Lands late the Earl Rivers's, to the Value of 26*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* yearly; the Manors of Croftbury and Cobereide, and other Tenements and Lands in Rumney-Marsh, of the yearly Value of 50*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.* the Manor of Glasfenbury, and all other Lands and Tenements in the Counties of Kent, Surrey, and Suffex, which were Walter Roberts's, Value 40*l.* per Annum. besides a yearly Salary of 100*l.* to be paid him out of the Revenues of Writtle, &c. But all these Favours were not sufficient to engage him to perpetrate that black Design: Wherefore he was, by a special Warrant from Richard, commanded to surrender up the Keys of the Tower, which, in Effect, was all his Power in that Fortrefs, to Sir James Tyrrel, for the Space of one Night, under the Pretence of ordering some special Matters therein: In which Night Tyrrel, a Man of a profligate Conscience, and loaded with great Promises of Advantage, being constituted Constable, during that short Sequestration of the Office, undertook and executed the Treason upon the two Princes. Richard, having by this bloody Means secured the Crown to himself, shewed his Liberality to the Traitor and Murderer, by conferring on him great Favours. But the scrupulous Brakenbury, notwithstanding his Patent of Constable of the Tower was granted for the Term of his Life, was discharged from that honourable Post in the Year 1485.

Ledger Book, 1 Rich. III. A.D. 1483.

Privileges
of the Constable
of the Tower.

This Officer had many great Privileges due to him from the Ships of the Merchants of London; as more particularly is set forth by the Instruments granted by King Richard II. and his Parliament, to Sir Thomas Murriex, recited in Pages 143, 146.

He was enjoined in 10 and 11 Henry III. to compel those who brought Fish in Ships to sell at London, to deliver the said Fish at Queen-bithe.

The Power of the Constable of the Tower extended to the five Ports, and to arrest their Ships in the Thames, if there were Occasion. A Precept was sent to him in the 9th of Henry III. to arrest those Ships in Time of Dearth of Corn, to prevent the Transportation of it.

In the 52d of Henry III. the King commanded the Abbot of Westminster, carriare Buscam, Blada, & alia Viſualia tam per Terr. quam per Aquam, usq. ad Abbiem prædict. ita quod nulla inde fiat Priza ad Opus Regis: That is, to carry Bruſh or Underwood, Corn, or other Viſuals, as well by Land as by Water, to the said Abbey, so that no Prizal be made to the King's Use.

In the 14th of Edward III. there were Letters Patents for making Allowances to the Constables of the Tower for the Wages of the King's Prisoners there, viz. for a Knight two Pence a Day, and for a Squire one Penny.

In the 38th of Edward III. there were Orders for the Constable of the Tower to repair the Defects in the Water [the River Lea,] or the Banks thereof, running from Ware to Waltham, and so to London.

Salary and Fees of the Constable in
Q. Mary's Days.

These Fees were ordered by Philip and Mary, in the second and third Years of their Reign; That the Constable shall have of their Majesties at the Receipt of the Exchequer, for his Entertainment, the yearly Fee or Wages of an hundred Pounds, and an hundred Pounds by the Year for the Diet of poor Prisoners, who have not wherewithal to pay for their Diets. So that the said poor Prisoners may be examined within seven Days after their coming into his Custody, and be discharged again from his Custody within seven Days after they have been examined.

The said Constable shall have of every Duke, if there be any committed by their Majesties to the said Tower, for the Suit of his Irons, twenty Pounds; and for a Marquis sixteen Pounds; and for the Board of every such Duke or Marquis, weekly, three Pounds ten Shillings; and for the Chaplain's Board of every such Duke or Marquis every Week six Shillings and eight Pence; and for every of his Gentlemen six Shillings and eight Pence; and for every of his Yeomen waiting upon him five Shillings before his Attainder, and after his Attainder as their Majesties shall appoint.

Item, The said Constable shall have for every Earl and Viscount, for the Suit of his Irons, twenty Marks; and for their Board every Week forty-six Shillings and eight Pence; and for the Gentlemen and Yeomen, as in the Duke's Diet, before the Attainder; and after, at their Majesties Will.

Item, The said Constable shall have for every Baron and Lord, of the Degree, as the younger Son of a Duke or Marquis; and for a Knight of the Garter, for the Suit of Irons, ten Pounds; and for his Board weekly thirty-five Shillings, and for his Gentleman and Yeoman as before.

Item, The aforesaid Constable shall have for every other Knight or Gentleman of above an hundred Pounds Estate, for Suit of his Irons, five Pounds; and also for his Board weekly twenty-three Shillings and four Pence; and for every of his Gentlemen and Yeomen as before.

Item, The said Constable shall have of every Gentleman of the Estate of an hundred Pounds by the Year, and under, for the Suit of his Irons, forty Shillings; and his Board weekly seventeen Shillings and six Pence. And other Men, not having Lands and Possessions, and yet having Goods sufficient to find themselves, for Suit of Irons, twenty Shillings; and for their Week's Board thirteen Shillings and four Pence.

Item, All other to live of the House, except their Majesties appoint the same a better Diet by Warrant.

Item, The Porter shall have, of every Prisoner committed by the King and Queen's Majesties for Treason to the said Tower, his uppermost Garment, or agree with him for it.

Item, He shall have of every Person delivered out of the Tower five Shillings.

Item, It is ordered, That the Constable shall no more take Bedding, Goods, and Plate, or Money of any Person attainted, or not attainted, except that he may stay the same for the Time that he be answered, and contented for his Fees and Diets after the Rate aforesaid; and except that, upon the Attainder of every such Prisoner, the said Constable shall have the Wearing Apparel and Bedding of the same Prisoner so attainted, and the Plate and Jewels of the same, if any do remain, to be kept to their Majesties Use.

The Porter's Fee.

These

These Orders were made through the Queen's Frugality. For these Allowances to the Prisoners were, for the most Part, out of the Princes Purves.

It is very evident from many Passages in the Records, that the Office of Constable was frequently suspended, and supplied by a Keeper, who had the same Authority, and was inferior to the Constable only in Title, and at other Times by a Lieutenant. Thus Thomas Iggreve was appointed Keeper both of the Tower and City of London in the 25th of Henry III. and Randolph de Sandwich was in the same Station in the 13th and 17th of Edward I. William, Archbishop of York, was Keeper of the Tower in the 1st of Edward I. and in the 31st of Henry VI. we find Mention made of John Chauncy, Lieutenant to the Duke of Exeter, then Constable of the Tower: And again, a royal Mandate was sent to John Winwicke, Lieutenant to the Constable of the same, in the 16th of Edward III.

There is also recorded, that the Constable was sometimes the Keeper, and was then paid his Fees as for two distinct Places. Thus Henry Fitz-Aucher, the Constable, received 50*l.* per Annum, particularly for keeping the Tower, in the 13th and 14th of Henry III.

Lieutenant
of the Tower.

Rec. Tur.

In the long Reign of Queen Elizabeth there was no Constable of the Tower: His Place was supplied by a Lieutenant: The Importance of which Office cannot be better collected than from the Declaration of Sir Michael Blount, who succeeded Sir Owen Hopton in that Place of Trust in the Year 1590, and declared, that if the Queen should die, and her Majesty was then very sick, he should not think himself bound to obey any Counsellor, for then all Counsellors would be private Men; but would keep his Post till the Successor should be established, according to the Justice of his Title; and that he would permit none of the Officers of the Ordnance to enter into the Tower, unless they were sworn to take the same Side with himself, for then the whole Charge would be his: And, because he looked upon several of the Warders to be Knaves, he would turn them out, and call the rest before him; and such as would not be sworn to obey him, as by their Oath, he said, they were obliged to, he would turn them out also, and supply their Places with his own Friends; that by this Means, and having Ammunition in his Power, he should be able to arm more than half the Realm beside. All this was testified by Edmond Nevyl de Latimer, Esq; before the Lord Cobbam and Lord Buckburgh, two of the Privy-Council appointed to examine him. He also testified, that the Lieutenant had often asked him his Opinion how many Men would serve to keep the Tower, and what Course was best to take for victualling it. These Things looking very suspiciously, raised Jealousies in the State against him, and brought him into Trouble.

Modern State of this Officer.

As to the modern State of this great Officer of the Tower, he is, by Virtue of his Office, to be in Commission of the Peace for the Counties of Kent, Surrey, and Middlesex: He is High Steward of a Court held within the Tower; he may refuse an Habeas Corpus; he may give Protection to all Debtors belonging to the Tower, infra Reg-

num Anglie; he hath the Privilege, before spoken of, to take one Flagon, that is, two Gallons and a Pint, before, and as much behind the Mast, of all Wine Ships that come to London. Some hold, that he is to be Custos Rotulorum of the County of Middlesex. His Salary is two hundred Pounds per Annum. His Perquisites are large. His usual Fee for every Prisoner sent to the Tower is twenty Pounds; and three Pounds a Week for an Earl, and five Pounds for a Knight; for a Baron, or a Degree higher, fifty Pounds at his Entrance; to whom the King allows weekly ten Pounds, whereof two Parts go to the Prisoner, and the other Third to the Lieutenant for Lodging and Diet; and fifty Pounds to the Lieutenant upon the Prisoner's Discharge.

The present Lieutenant is the Right Hon. Lord Harry Powlett.

A third chief Officer of the Tower is the Gentleman-Porter, who holds his Place by Patent, and, at the Entrance of any Prisoner, hath for his Fee Vestimenta Superiora, (his upper Garment) or a Composition for the same.

Gentleman-Porter.

This Office is at least as old as the Time of King Edward III. for in the Tower Records Mention is made, in that King's Reign, of the Custody of the Tower-Gate being granted to John de London.

This Officer had allowed him, out of the King's Wardrobe, yearly, Broad-Cloth for a Watching-Gown, as appears by this Extract out of King Edward's Book of Warrants: "A Warrant to Sir Rose Sadler, Knight, (who was Master of the King's Wardrobe) to deliver to Henry Webb, Porter of the Tower of London, and to fourteen Yeomen of the Chamber attending there, and to every of them, five Yards of Broad-Cloth, of London-Ruffet, at four Shillings and one Penny the Yard, for their Watching-Gowns."

Allowed a Watch-
Gown.

In the Reign of Queen Elizabeth it appears, by a Complaint made by the Occupiers of certain Houses built within the Liberties, some at the Postern-Gate, some within and some without the Bulwark, and others on Tower-Wharf, that the Gentleman-Porter had lett as much Ground upon Building-Leases as was covered with forty Houses, built within the Space of ten Years, and produced a Ground-Rent of seventy-six Pounds nineteen Shillings and six Pence.

Enjoyed the Benefit of Ground within the Liberties.

The Gentleman-Jailer is an Officer put in by the Lieutenant of the Tower. His Fee is forty Shillings for a Gentleman, and five Pounds for a Knight.

The Gentleman-Jailer

There are likewise forty Warders of the Tower, who are accounted the King's domestick Servants, and are sworn by the Lord-Chamberlain of his Majesty's Household, or by the Clerk of the Checque. They are all habited with the same Caps and Coats as those of the Yeomen of the Guard that attend the King, and come into Waiting ten every Day.

Lieutenancy of the Tower.

As to the Lieutenancy of the Tower, or Military Government thereof, the Constable or Lieutenant hath the Command of the Militia, for a considerable Compass about it, in divers Divisions, called Hamlets, lying in the Parishes of Hackney, Stepney, Whitechapel, Minorities, St. Catharine's, Wapping, Shadwell, Shoreditch, and the Liberty of Norton-Falgate, and Bromley. The Names of which Hamlets are as follows :

Hackney.	Ratcliff.
Norton-Falgate.	Shadwell.
Shoreditch.	Limchouse.
Spital-Fields.	Poplar.
Whitechapel.	Blackwall.
Trinity-Minorities.	Bromley.
East-Smithfield.	Bow.
Tower Extra.	Old Ford.
Tower Intra.	Mill-End.
St. Catharine's.	Bednal-Green.
Wapping.

The Hamlets.

These one-and-twenty Hamlets, being all the Hundred of Osulfston, in the County of Middlesex, are exempted from the said County by Act of Parliament, 14 Car. II. to be the standing Militia of the Tower. The Constable, or Lieutenant, is Lord-Lieutenant of the same. They raise two Regiments, consisting of eight hundred Men each. And this, Time out of Mind, hath been the constant Militia and standing Force of the Tower; and was confirmed by a Clause in an Act of Parliament under King Charles II. in these Words :

Statutes at Large.

" Provided also, and be it enacted, That
" whereas the Militia of the Tower-Division in " the County of Middlesex, commonly known by " the Name of the Tower-Hamlets, are, and al" ways have been, under the Command of his " Majesty's Constable or Lieutenant of the " Tower, for the Service and Preservation of that " his Royal Fort; that it shall and may be law" ful for his Majesty's Constable or Lieutenant of
" the Tower, for the Time being, to continue
" to levy the Trained-Bands of the said Division,
" or Hamlets of the Tower, in such Manner and
" Form, as to the Number and Quality of Per" sons, as was observed in forming the present
" Forces thereof."

Choice and Duty of Common-Councilmen. City-Walls, &c. repaired. Conspiracy against the Duke of Gloucester detected by the Lord-Mayor. City Address to the King, concerning Publick Grievances. King's Answer, and Proceedings thereupon. Revenge on the City for refusing a Loan to the King.

The Mayor, &c. imprisoned and fined. Liberties seized, and a Custos appointed. Liberties restored for Money. The King received into the City with great Magnificence. Act of Parliament restraining Slaughter-Houses, &c. for preserving the City Liberties, continuing Aldermen in their Offices, and for preventing Frauds in Malt. Graiers Complaint against the City Officers. More Troubles threatening the Citizens. Henry Duke of Gloucester received into London. Is proclaimed King.

ON the last Day of July, in the eighth Year of Richard II. in a Common-Council held before the Mayor and Aldermen, it was ordained, That the Common-Council should be chosen by the Wards fifteen Days after St. Gregory; and that they should chuse those who had served the Year before, or others; and that once a Quarter at least the Common-Council should be assembled to consult and take care of the Affairs of the City.

In the ninth Year of the said King, there was a Confirmation and Settlement of the Choice of Common-Councilmen by the Wards, by four, six, and eight, according to the Bigness of each Ward.

Richard, at the pressing Instances of the King of Portugal, as also to support the Pretences of his Uncle the Duke of Lancaster to the Crown of Castile, sent the said Duke with an Army of twenty thousand Men into Spain. The King of France thought it a proper Time to make a fresh Attempt to conquer England, concluding that, as it was then deprived of the Assistance of its best Troops, he should find it no difficult Matter to accomplish his Designs: With which View he made such prodigious Preparations, that all Europe stood in Amaze, expecting the Event of this mighty Undertaking, which, by contrary Winds, and the vast Preparations made in this Kingdom to oppose them, vanished into Smoke. In which Time of great Confusion and Danger, the King sent the following Writ to the City :

" The King to his beloved the Mayor and
" Aldermen, and the rest of the Citizens of Lon" don, sendeth Health. Know ye, that as well
" the Walls and other (Afforciamenta) Forts of " the said City be old and weak, and, for Want
" of Repair, are fallen down in some Places; as " also the Ditches of the same City are exceed" ingly filled with Dirt, Dunghills, and other
" Filth, and with Grass growing in the same,
" not only to the evident Danger of the said
" City and Inhabitants thereof, (and chiefly
" at this present Time of War) but also to the " manifest Disgrace and Scandal of us and the " whole City, &c."

And for the more effectual repairing the same, the King empowered the Mayor and Citizens to take, not only of Merchandize, but also of all Sorts of Victuals brought to the City, a certain Toll (as King Edw. I. had done before, A. D. 1276) for the Term of ten Years: Whereupon the Citizens set heartily to work about repairing the Wall, Bulwarks, and cleansing the Ditch, demolishing molishing several Houses contiguous to the Wall without, to prevent their being of Service to the Enemy, in case of their advancing this Way. But the French Expedition was no sooner laid aside, than the Citizens retired from their Works of Fortification, and, with a Joy inexpressible, began to regale themselves and Friends in the most sumptuous Manner.

The Differences between the King and his Nobility now rose to a very great Height, occasioned by his Male-Administration, under the Management of his two Favourites, Robert de Vere, and Michael de la Pole: The former whereof being created Duke of Ireland, and the latter Earl of Suffolk and Lord High Chancellor; these perfidious Men, perceiving that they could not with Safety ingross all the Royal Favours during the Life of Thomas Duke of Gloucester, the King's Uncle, entered into a Conspiracy to remove him, and others of their Enemies, by Death: And, for the more effectually accomplishing their wicked Intentions, they resolved to try if they could engage Nicholas Exton, the Mayor of London, in their Measures, who might intrap the said Duke, and divers of his Friends, by inviting them to sup at the House of one of his Friends in the City, (which is supposed to be that of Nicholas Brembre, who was Mayor in the preceding Year, and who was deeply concerned in that wicked Contrivance) and there to assassinate them all. But Exton not only rejected this wicked Proposal with the utmost Detestation and Abhorrence, boldly declaring that he would never consent to such a flagitious Piece of Villany as the Shedding of innocent Blood; but is thought to be the first that acquainted the Duke therewith; whereby he was enabled to provide for the Security of himself and Friends, against the wicked Machinations of his Enemy. The Duke, to spirit up the Nation to carry their Complaints against the Favourites to the Throne, caused a Rumour to be spread, that an excessive Poll-Tax of a Noble a Head was to be raised throughout the Kingdom. Which Report soon had the desired Effect: For the Citizens of London immediately thereupon sent a Deputation to the Duke of Gloucester, desiring him to take upon him the Government of the Kingdom, and to bring to Justice all those who were concerned in the bad Management thereof, by ruining the People with intolerable and grievous Taxations, in order to enrich themselves at the Charge of the Publick.

The Duke replied, That tho' he could not comply with their Request; yet he was very much troubled they had so just Reason to complain; and that tho' he was the King's Uncle, he was nevertheless incapable of redressing their Grievances, by reason the King was intirely governed by his two Favourites. However, he advised them to engage the other Cities and Towns of the Kingdom severally to address the King upon Account of their Grievances, and that he would be sure to attend the King on St. George's Day following, when they should find him and his Brother ready to assist them.

At the Time prefixed the Mayor and Citizens sent a Deputation of about sixty of their principal

Members to attend the King at Windsor, accompanied by the Deputies of divers other Towns and Cities. The King, being acquainted with their Arrival, would have departed without seeing them: But the Dukes of York and Gloucester, and the Earl of Salisbury, prevailed upon him to grant them an Audience; wherein Sir Simon Sudbury, in Behalf of the rest, acquainted his Majesty with their Grievances, and humbly intreated, that a Parliament might be speedily summoned, for calling to an Account all such as had misbehaved in the Administration of publick Affairs, and to substitute in their Stead Men of Worth and Probity, according to the Advice of Parliament.

To which the King answered; That their Supplications being long, he had not Time to answer; therefore desired them to bring their Requests at the ensuing Michaelmas, when he would communicate them to the Parliament that should then be held at Westminster, and what were judged reasonable should be granted them; but that his Subjects should not be his Masters by prescribing to him; for he never perceived, that either himself, or those about him, had ever intended any thing else but Right and Justice.

To which one of the zealous Deputies boldly replied, "That, with humble Submission to his Majesty, Justice was never less practised in England than at present; and that, by the subtle Management of certain Persons, 'twas impossible for him to come at the Truth of Things, seeing his Ministers found it their Interest to conceal from him the Management of his Affairs as much as possible; in Consideration of which, they did not think it consistent with their Interest, nor that of the Kingdom, to wait the Meeting of the Parliament, seeing a speedier Remedy might be applied, by calling to an Account those Plunderers, who had embezzled the publick Treasure; and to inquire how those immense Sums, raised for nine Years past, had been applied; and that all those who could not discharge themselves honourably, should stand to the Judgment of Parliament."

The King, greatly surprized at this bold and unparalleled Speech, turned to his Uncles, to hear what they would say. The Duke of Gloucester said, "That he could not see any thing unreasonable in this Demand of the Commonalty of his Realm." Then turning to his Brother, the Duke of York, desired his Opinion of this Affair: Who replied, "That he was of the same Mind." Then all the Nobility present being asked their Sentiments, they unanimously declared, "That they were of the same Opinion with the Princes." Whereupon the Parliament was appointed to meet at Westminster on the third Day of May following, to inquire into the State of the Nation.

But the King in the mean time retired to Bristol, and, in order to screen his darling Favourite, the Duke of Ireland, from a Parliamentary Inquiry, took him along with him, and gave him a secret Commission to levy Troops in Wales, to enable him to reduce the City of London, and his Uncles, who were supported by it, to his Obedience. The favourite Duke presently assembled an Army of fifteen thousand Men, and marched with them towards London; but was routed at Oxford by an Army of twenty thousand, chiefly Londoners, conducted by the Duke of Gloucester. As for his Majesty, upon Advice of his Favourite's Defeat, not judging himself safe in the Country, he resolved, with his Consort, and the Archbishop of York, &c. to shut himself up in the Tower of London, to wait the further Issue of this Civil War. But, on the News of his Approach to his Capital, he was met, at a considerable Distance from the City, by a great Number of the Citizens on Horseback, richly accoutered, and conducted to St. Paul's Church in a pompous Manner, and thence to his Palace at Westminster. But he soon after receiving Intelligence of the Approach of the Barons Army from Haringeye (Hertsey) Park towards London, was advised by his Favourites not to rely upon the Fidelity of the Londoners, and to think of a Place of greater Security. He therefore retired to the Tower; but was not carried there a Prisoner, as Stow has through Mistake asserted. And in the mean Time, to distress the confederate Army as much as possible, he caused Proclamation to be made in London, That no Person, upon Pain of Death, and Confiscation of Effects, should dare to supply their Army with any sort of Arms, Ammunition, or Provisions. By which Proceeding the Nobility perceived, that the King was not only resolved not to accommodate Matters with them, but likewise to screen from Justice his rapacious and wicked Favourites. Wherefore the confederate Barons endeavoured to bring over the City of London to their Side, by the following Letter, in French, to the Mayor, Aldermen, Sheriffs and Citizens of London, subscribed by the Duke of Gloucester, and the Earls of Arundel and Warwick. In English thus:

"That they the Lords above-mentioned were, and always would be, obedient and loyal Subjects to the King; yet, that they the Mayor, &c. should not wonder at the Cause of their assembling in that Manner, they thought good to let them know, that it had been ordained by the King in the last Parliament, that certain Lords, thereunto appointed and sworn, were to have the Governance of the King's Council and Realm, for the Honour and Profit of both, during the Space of one Year; which Government had been, and was then, disturbed and interrupted by Alexander Archbishop of York, Robert Vere Duke of Ireland, Michael de la Pole Earl of Suffolk, Robert Tresilian that false Justice, and Nicholas Brembre a false Knight of London, every one of them being Traitors to the King and Kingdom; who falsely and traiterously, by their wicked Advices, and Conduct of the King's Person, had carried him into divers remote Parts, far from his Council, to the Ruin of him and his Realm; and falsely counselled him, against their Oaths, to do divers Things in Disinheritance and Disfranchising of his Crown, he being ready to lose his Heritage beyond Sea by their Means, to the great Infamy and Destruction of the whole Nation; and had also wickedly made several Differences betwixt the King and the Lords of his Council, so as some of them were in great Fear and Danger of their Lives, as they had lately

"informed the King by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Duke of York, the Bishops of Winchester and Ely, and divers other Lords: Wherefore, to redress those Things, and punish these Traitors according to Law, they were now assembled, requiring and charging the Mayor and Citizens, by Virtue of their Allegiance, that they should make Proclamation through the whole City, that this was their true Intent, and no other; and that, for the Honour, Profit, and Safety of the King, and all his loyal Lieges, they would be aiding and assisting with all their Power to the said Lords, not favouring or aiding the said Traitors, or any of them, as they tendered the Honour of God, the King and Kingdom, and the Safety of their City; and that they neglect not this Advice, as they would avoid the Dangers that may happen in Time to come: And then warned them to certify the said Lords of their Resolutions in this Matter, on Friday next, which was the fifteenth of November."

This Letter was favourably received by most of the Aldermen and principal Citizens, who, without requiring much Time to deliberate upon this Message, not only immediately sent them the Keys of the City by Nicholas Eston, the Mayor, but likewise supplied their Army with Plenty of all sorts of Provisions.

As soon as the Parliament met, Sir Nicholas Brembre, late Mayor of London, one of the wicked Favourites of Richard, was condemned for High Treason, and was adjudged to be drawn and hanged; which Sentence was accordingly executed upon him at Tyburn: And not (according to that idle Story mentioned by Holingshead, Stow, and others) beheaded with an Ax, which he had prepared for the Execution of all such as opposed his Measures. If this perfidious and cruel Man, and his Accomplices, had succeeded in their wicked Schemes, he was to have been made Duke of New Troy or London, so denominated by the fabulous Geoffrey of Monmouth.

A.D. 1389, the Streets of London were so abused with common Lay-stalls, to the great Annoyance of the Citizens, that a Proclamation was made throughout the City, by Authority of Parliament, That no Person whatsoever should presume to lay any Dung, Guts, Garbage, Offals, or any other Ordure, in any Street, Ditch, River, &c. upon Penalty of twenty Pounds, to be recovered by an Information in Chancery.

The Civil War being over, King Richard appointed a great Tournament to be held at London, to commence on the Sunday after Michaelmas; and, for the better publishing his Intentions, sent divers Heralds to proclaim the same in all the principal Courts of Europe: On which Occasion divers Princes, and many of the prime Nobility, resorted hither from Germany, France, the Netherlands, &c. to participate of the Solemnity; which began on Sunday Afternoon, from the Tower of London, with a pompous Cavalcade of sixty Ladies, magnificently dressed, and mounted on the same Number of stately Horses, richly accoutered, each leading an armed Knight by a Chain of Silver, attended by their Esquires of Honour: Who passing thro' Cheapside, rode to Smithfield; where the Jests continued four Days

(and not, according to Higden, twenty-four) in a most sumptuous Manner, with a great Variety of noble Entertainments, in the Presence of the King, (who justed himself on the second Day) Queen, and the whole Court, besides an infinite Number of Spectators of all Conditions: Open House being kept the whole Time, at the King's Expence, at the Bishop of London's Palace, in a very sumptuous Manner, for the Entertainment of all Persons of Distinction; where the Diversions every Night concluded with a Ball.

By an Act of Parliament made in the Year 1391, for removing the Staple from Calais to England, to be held in the several Places appointed by the Statutes relating to the same, the Exportation of Wool was so greatly discouraged, that the Price thereof fell to twenty Pence the Stone.

The Price of Wheat being very high, at sixteen Shillings and eight Pence per Quarter, Adam Bamme, the Mayor, to prevent a Famine in the City, took out of the Orphans Fund in the Chamber of London two thousand Marks, to which twenty-four of the Aldermen added twenty Pounds each, wherewith they procured Corn from abroad, and the Wants of the Poor were effectually supplied. By which good Conduct the City was preserved in Peace, and those worthy Magistrates universally applauded as the common Parents of the Poor.

Richard, by his excessive Luxury and immoderate Profuseness, had so reduced his Treasury, that he found himself necessitated to apply to the City of London for a Loan of one thousand Pounds, or, according to some, ten thousand. Be the Sum what it will, he had not only the Mortification of receiving a flat Denial, but also to hear that the Citizens did barbarously and inhumanly beat and abuse a certain Lombard Merchant, for offering to advance the Sum required. Richard was highly incensed against the Citizens for this undutiful and intolerable Behaviour; yet, tho' prompted by all about him to inflict an exemplary Punishment, he waved his Resentment, till another Opportunity should offer to revenge himself effectually upon them; which soon after happened, on the following Account:

A Baker's Man carrying Bread along Fleet-street, as he passed by the Bishop of Salisbury's House, had a Loaf taken out of his Basket by Walter Roman, one of the Bishop's Servants; and, as the Baker endeavoured to recover it, he was wounded in the Scuffle by the said Roman. Divers Persons, seeing this Robbery and Abuse, attempted to secure the Offender, in order to bring him to Justice. His Fellow-Servants rescued him, and, running him into the House, secured him from further Danger, though a Constable was sent to demand him; which so enraged the Populace, that they threatened to fire the Episcopal Palace, if he was not immediately delivered up to them.

The Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs no sooner received Advice of this dangerous Riot, than they immediately repaired thither, and with much Persuasion and great Difficulty, appeased and sent home the People, without much Violence committed. All would have happily ended here, had it not been for that implacable

Son of Revenge, Waltham, the Bishop of Salisbury, (whose villainous Servant was the Cause of the whole Disturbance) who rekindled the Fire, as it is said, out of an old Grudge he bore the Citizens for being Favourers of Wickliff's Doctrine. But, whatever the Motive might be, the furious Prelate, without troubling himself to enquire into the Bottom of the Affair, full fraught with Rage and Malice, went to the King with a loud Complaint against the Citizens; affirming, that it was not only the highest Indignity offered to the Church, but it would likewise endanger the State, if the Londoners were suffered to go on with Impunity. The King, as glad of this Opportunity to punish the Citizens, as the Bishop could be, on Account of the late Indignity offered him in the Person of the Italian Merchant above-mentioned; to which being added the reiterated Aggravations of the Clergy; Richard furiously threatened to plunder, and even to raze the City. But, by the Interposition of many of the prime Nobility, his Anger being in some measure alleviated, he commanded the Mayor, Aldermen, Sheriffs, and four-and-twenty of the principal Commoners of the City, to attend him at Nottingham, to answer to such grievous Crimes and Disorders objected against them, as were more than sufficient (as was given out) to cancel all Obligations on the King's Part, and of so high a Nature, that nothing could be offered as a satisfactory Atonement for their Offences.

The Citizens, before their Arrival at Nottingham, came to a Resolution of faithfully standing by each other, in order to justify their Innocence. But the King's Threats and severe Deportment soon dissolved the Confederacy; for some of its timorous Members, to ingratiate themselves with the King, impeached others of their Brethren, who recriminated upon them. By which surprizing Conduct, they found themselves in the direct Road to Destruction; and therefore it was judged the safest Way to throw themselves intirely upon the King's Mercy. Pursuant to which, the Mayor was committed Prisoner to the Castle of Windsor, and the rest to other Prisons; and a Commission under the Great Seal was directed to Edward Duke of York, and Thomas Duke of Gloucester, (the King's Uncles) and others, for enquiring into all and singular the Errors, Defects, and Misprisions committed in the City, through the bad Conduct of the said Magistrates; and William Venour, the late Mayor, John Lovynge, and John Walcote, late Sheriffs, and William Baret, and Nicholas Exton, &c. Aldermen, were indicted before the said Commissioners, for Male-Administration in the Government of the City; and, after Conviction, they were for the first Fault adjudged to pay the King one thousand Marks, for the second two thousand, and for the third the Liberties of the City to be seized to the King's Use. The last of which was directly contrary to Justice, and the Immunities of the Citizens; for by the first Charter of Edward the Third, he granted, "That the Liberties of the City should not be seized upon by him, or his Heirs, nor a Custos set over the same, for the Offences of its Magistrates; but that every Person so offending be punished according to the

"the Nature of his Crime." However, by Virtue of this arbitrary Decree, the King seized upon the City Liberties, discharged John Hynde the Mayor, and appointed Baldwyn Radington Custos in his stead. Whereby are shewn the Mistakes of Knighton and Walsingham, in asserting, that Sir Edward Baleryge, or Dalyngrygge, was first appointed Custos of the City.

At the same Time Henry Vanner, or Vamer, and John Shadworth, or Chadworth, Sheriffs, were likewise degraded, and in their stead were constituted Gilbert Magbefeld and Thomas Newington: And William Venour, William Baret, William Brampton, William Olyver, William More, Thomas Wylford, John Frauncys, John Leveneys, William Sheryngham, Adam Bamme, Henry Bamme, Adam Changerour, Thomas Vynent, Adam Karhyll, Drugo Barentyn, Gilbert Magbefeld, and Thomas Newington, by the King's Precept, were appointed Aldermen, to be continued during the Royal Pleasure. And, as a farther Mortification to the City, the King not only withdrew himself and his Nobility from it, but he likewise removed the Courts of Justice to York. However, upon the Payment of the Fine of three thousand Marks, the City Liberties were all restored, exclusive of the Privilege of chusing its Mayor. And the King returning to the City, he was met at Sbene, or Richmond Heath, by four hundred Citizens on Horseback, richly dressed in one Sort of Apparel, with the Recorder at their Head, who, in an ingenious Speech, humbly begged Pardon for past Offences, and earnestly intreated his Majesty, that he would be graciously pleased to honour his Chamber of London with his Presence: Which he condescending to, they attended him to St. George's Church in Southwark; where he was received by a solemn Procession of the Clergy and five hundred Boys in Surplices, with the Bishop of London at their Head. Whence he proceeded to London-Bridge, where he was presented with a stately Courser, richly trapped with a Golden Brocade, and likewise his Queen with a stately white Pad, with a very rich Furniture. Never was the City so richly embellished as on this Occasion; for the Citizens of all Ranks, both as to Houses and Apparel, strove to outvie each other, for the Honour and Entertainment of their reconciled Sovereign; and all the Streets, through which the Cavalcade passed, were lined by the City Companies in their Formalities; the Conduits all the while running with Variety of Wines, and the Populace with loud Acclamations incessantly crying, King Richard for ever.

At the Standard in Cheapside was erected a very magnificent Pageant, whereon was placed a Boy in white Apparel, representing an Angel, who, upon the King's Approach, presented him with Wine in a Golden Cup, and put on his Head a rich Crown of Gold, most curiously garnished with a Variety of precious Stones and Pearls of an inestimable Value, and likewise another on the Head of the Queen. And thence riding to St. Paul's Church, he made an Offering. After which, he was conducted to his Palace of Westminster by the Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs, who the Day after presented Richard with two gilt Silver Basons, and in each of which a thousand Nobles of Gold, together with a curious Picture of the Trinity, valued at eight hundred Pounds. They also presented him with a Silver Tablet for an Altar, gilt with Gold, with the Story of St. Edward the Confessor, worth one thousand Marks, besides other Gifts of great Value, to procure them a Remission of all past Offences, and an intire Restoration of all their valuable Rights and Privileges. But they soon found themselves mistaken; for, though the Queen generously and graciously exerted herself to accomplish an intire Reconciliation between the King and them, yet they found there was no other Way of recovering the Right of chusing their Chief Magistrate, but by paying the King his own Price, which, according to my Author, they soon came to know, that it was no less a Sum than ten thousand Pounds.

Richard by this severe Usage intirely lost the Affections of the Citizens ever after; and at last, when too late, he was made sensible, how dangerous it is for a King of England to have the City of London for his Enemy.

The Parliament, which now was held at Winchester, enacted, That all the Filth of a certain Lay-stall upon the Bank of the River Thames be forthwith removed; and, for preventing the like for the future, the Butchers of London were, before the ensuing Easter, to erect a House or Houses, in a proper Place, fit for the Reception of all their Ordure, whence 'twas to be carried in Boats into the middle of the said River, and there to be thrown in at the Turn of the Tide at High Water; and that no Person whatsoever should presume to throw any Muck, Rubbish, Laystige, or other Ordure, in at the Sides of the Thames, or lay any Filth or Nastiness on the Banks of the same, between the Palace of Westminster, and the Tower of London, upon the Penalty of ten Pounds. Whence 'tis observable, that at that Time a greater Regard was had to the Cleanness of the River at the Sides, than to its Navigation.

On Christmas-Day following a great Dolphin, of ten Feet in Length, was taken at London-Bridge. His coming so far up the River was looked upon as a Prefage of that stormy and tempestuous Weather which soon after happened.

In the seventeenth of the same Reign, upon the City's being restored to the King's Favour and their ancient Privileges, the Courts of Justice, which upon the King's Displeasure had been removed to York, were now again brought back to London. And, for the better preserving the City Liberties against all future Attempts of the Prince, 'twas at this time by Parliament enacted, "That it is not the King's Meaning or Intent, nor the Meaning of the Statute made in the twenty-eighth of Edward the Third, that the Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs of London, that have been, now are, or hereafter shall be, should incur the Penalty contained in the said Statute, for any erroneous Judgment given, or to be given, in the said City." But as to all other Defects respecting the Government of the City, they were to be answerable for.

This Act is explanatory of the former, for the Ease and Satisfaction of the Citizens, who were sadly apprehensive, that the future Malversation of their Magistrates would likewise endanger the

The Ward of Candlewick-Street, taxed in London at 16*l.* and in the Exchequer accounted for 16*l.*

It was also enacted, That all Malt, coming from the several Counties of England to London, for the domestick Uses of the King, Nobility, and Citizens, should be thoroughly cleaned from all Dust and Filth, so that the Buyer might have eight Bushels of clean Malt to the Quarter. And for the more effectual Execution of this Act, the Mayor of London was empowered to search all the Malt brought to the City; to prevent the great Frauds of the Country Maltsters.

Stow in his Annals relates, that about this Time three Scottish Gentlemen challenged the same Number of English to fight at Jufts, viz. the Earl of Mar, the Lord Nottingham, Sir William Darrell, the King of Scotland's Banner-bearer, Sir Pierce Courtney, the King of England's Standard-bearer, Cockburn, Esq; and Sir Nicholas Hawkirke. These Challenges were decided in Smithfield, wherein the English remained Victors; for the Earl of Mar and Cockburn were unhorsed by their Opponents, the former being so bruised and wounded by the Fall, that he died on his Return home; but Darrell and Courtney were so equally matched that neither were Victors.

The Country Graiers frequenting Smithfield Market petitioned the Parliament, complaining of the grievous and intolerable Exactions of the City Officers belonging to the said Market, by their unjustly extorting from many Persons carrying Cattle thither the third Beast; for which scandalous and detestable Imposition, the Mayor and Sheriffs were ordered to answer before the Council.

In the ninth, twelfth and fifteenth Years of King Richard, the Mayor, Aldermen and Citizens of London presented their Sheriffs to the Treasurer and Barons of the Exchequer for Admittance, with their Reasons, as mentioned in the Year 1385, for the said Sheriffs not taking an Oath in the Exchequer, nor any where else, but in the City; wherefore they were refused to be admitted, and at the said Times were severally cautioned by the Barons not to act as Sheriffs at their Perils, without qualifying themselves as is necessary and customary on such Occasions.

It seems, the Mayor and Citizens had better considered of this Affair; for in this Year Nicholas de Farendon, the Mayor, &c. presented Adam de Saresbury and John Oxford for their Sheriffs, who were admitted and sworn to behave themselves

For, if a Sheriff of London, being chosen, did not go to the Exchequer, in Obedience to the King's Command, to take upon him the Office of Sheriff, he was to be amerced for the Contempt; as is manifest in the Case of Philip de Taylor, who was fined in the twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh of Edward the First in the Sum of fifty Pounds, for his Contempt in not appearing at the Exchequer to qualify himself as aforesaid.

The Mayor of this City having received Advice of the King's Arrival at Dover, with his young Consort Isabella, a Daughter of France; he, with his Brethren the Aldermen, accompanied by a select Body of Citizens well mounted and dressed in one Sort of Apparel, with a Symbol of their respective Mysteries richly embroidered on each of their Sleeves, met them on Blackbeatb, where the Recorder, on Behalf of the City, in a congratulatory Oration, joyfully welcomed and conducted them to Kennington; from whence, soon after, the young (then but eight Years of Age, therefore called the Little) Queen was brought to the Tower of London with the utmost Pomp and State. On which Occasion the Crowds of Spectators were so exceeding great, that nine Persons were crowded to Death on London-Bridge, among whom were the Prior of Tiptree in Essex, and a worthy Lady of Cornhill. And the Day following the Queen passed through the City, with the greatest Magnificence, to Westminster.

According to a foreign Author, the Citizens of London, at the Instigation of the Duke of Gloucester, the King's Uncle, petitioned the King, that, seeing the War with France was happily ended, they might have all grievous Taxations annulled; and also that his Majesty would not enter into any Treaty with the King of France about the delivering up of Calais.

Which Proceedings of the Citizens were in a proper Time highly resented by the King, who intended to punish them severely for their Insolence: But by the Mediation of their good Friends, Roger Walden, Archbishop of Canterbury, and their own worthy Bishop Robert Braybrooke, they were again taken into Favour. However, many of the richest and most eminent Citizens were obliged to sign and seal sundry blank Charters sent them by the Ministry, who afterwards in a shameful Manner filled them up at their Pleasure, some with large Sums, and others with such Sums as would effectually drain them: By which oppressive and tyrannical Government,

Richard became at last so odious to his Subjects, that the principal of the Nobility, Gentry and People invited Henry Duke of Hereford, Son to John of Gaunt, late Duke of Lancaster, and Grandson to Edward the Third, then an Exile in France (who some time before was unjustly banished the Kingdom) to come over and head them, in order to extricate an oppressed Nation from an Abyss of Slavery they were sunk into. Henry accepted of their Invitation, and, landing at Ravenspurre in Yorkshire, was quickly joined by the Nobility and Gentry of those Parts, and by Persons of all Ranks on his March Southward; so that his Army in a few Days increased to sixty thousand Men. With these he hastened to London; wisely concluding, if the Capital should declare for him, he would have nothing to fear from the King or his Adherents. The Citizens received their Deliverer with open Gates, Hearts and Hands, (supplying his Army with a Superfluity of all Sorts of Provisions) expressing their Joy with magnificent Shews, solemn Processions of the Clergy, and loud Acclamations of the People.

The Duke, having his Interest greatly strengthened by the Accession of this potent and opulent City, thought he might safely march thence to secure the Western Parts of the Kingdom; where Richard, soon after, arrived with his Army from the Reduction of Ireland. But the King, being soon deserted by most of the Great Men about him, thought proper to accept of the Terms offered him by the Earl of Northumberland, on behalf of the Duke of Lancaster, which the Earl solemnly swore to see performed: Nevertheless he perfidiously seized upon the King's Person, carried him Prisoner to Roteland Castle, and thence to that of Flint; and there delivered him to the Duke, who brought the King to London. At some Distance from which, he was met by the Recorder of the City, accompanied by a great Number of Knights and Esquires, who, in a most inhuman and barbarous Manner, desired the Duke, in the Name of the whole Community of London, to behead the King, and all those that were taken with him: But the Duke would by no means oblige them in the Perpetration of such an unparalleled and horrid Act of Cruelty; telling them, that, if he should agree to their unreasonable Request, it would be an eternal Reproach to him and all his Adherents; wherefore he would leave him and them to the Disposal of the ensuing Parliament. But other Authors only write, that the London Rabble intended to have assassinated Richard, on his Approach to the City, had they not been prevented by the Mayor and Aldermen.

HENRY, Duke of Hereford, and Son of John of Gaunt, late Duke of Lancaster, being recognized King of England, and all the Dominions belonging to that Crown, by the States in Parliament assembled, after they had obliged Richard to resign; he took Possession of the Throne on the last Day of September, A. D. 1399, and was crowned on the thirteenth of October following in Westminster Abbey. After which a splendid Entertainment was provided in the Hall adjoining; and the Mayor and Aldermen of London were admitted to their Seats next the Side-board, in Right of the Office of Chief Butler of England.

After these Rejoicings were over, the Parliament sat again to do Business, and among other Things enacted, That all Reppers and other Fishers from Rye and Winchelsea, and other Parts on the Sea-Coasts, should sell their Fish themselves in Cornhill and Cheap, and other Streets of London, unto all Men that would buy them, except Fishmongers and others that would buy the said Fish to sell it again. And also it was enacted, That the deposed King Richard should be kept in such Prison during his natural Life, as King Henry, then reigning, should assign; which was afterwards resolved to be the Castle of Leeds in Kent; and from thence Richard was removed to Pontefract Castle in Yorkshire, on the Discovery of a Plot by certain of the Nobility to assassinate Henry: Which proved fatal to the Royal Prisoner. For, as most ancient Writers affirm, Richard was murdered in this Place of Confinement by one Sir Piers of Exton, assisted by eight other Ruffians; four of whom he slew in his own Defence, before they could overpower him in his Chamber, with an Ax he wrested out of one of their Hands.

Henry's Regard for the City.

In the first Year of Henry the Fourth, on the thirteenth of October, being the Day appointed for his Coronation, the Mayor and Aldermen of the City, dressed in Scarlet, and mounted upon stately Horses, rode to the Tower of London, where they received and attended the King to Westminster; where the Mayor, assisted by his Brethren the Aldermen, officiated as Chief Butler of the Kingdom. And Henry, to declare his great Affection to the Citizens, caused all the Blank Charters that had been extorted from them in the late Reign, to be burnt at the Standard in Cheapside.

And whereas, by an Act of Parliament made in the seven-and-twentieth of Edward the Third, the Mayor, Aldermen and Sheriffs of London, in Default of good Government in the City, were to be tried as Delinquents by a foreign Inquest, to be taken out of the Counties of Kent, Essex, Suffex, Hertfordshire, Bucks and Berks; and who, upon their being found guilty, for the first Default were to pay one thousand Marks; for the second two thousand Marks; and for the third the Franchises of the City to be forfeited to the King: He also caused these several Forfeitures to be repealed by Parliament. As a further Encouragement to them, it was by the same Parliament enacted, that the Merchants of London should have the same Liberty of packing their Cloths, as foreign Merchants have within the City; and that all foreign Fishermen in Amity with the King, as well as domestick, shall have the Privilege of retailing their Fish in the City, either whole, or in Pieces, to all Persons whatsoever, exclusive of Fishmongers. By which Favours the King won the Hearts of the Citizens, and effectually secured them in his Interest; as may be more fully collected from the following Circumstances.

Stat. 7. Ed. III.

Repeals several Forfeitures,
&c.

A Conspiracy was formed a little before Christmas by the Abbot of Westminster, and entered into by the Dukes of Albemarle, Surrey and Exeter, the Earls of Gloucester and Salisbury, the Bishop of Carlisle, and Sir Thomas Blunt, to assassinate the King; and, in order to carry it into Execution the more effectually and privately, they agreed upon a Tournament to be held at Oxford, under a Pretence of diverting the King; and the Duke of Exeter humbly intreated Henry, that he would be pleased to honour them with his Presence, and likewise to be Judge, if any Dispute should occur in their Exercise. To which Henry, not in the least suspecting any Treachery, readily assented, and promised to be there at the Time prefixed. But the Duke of Albemarle, in his Way to Oxford, called to visit his Father the Duke of York; and staying to dine, the Duke, seeing a Paper in his Son's Bosom, asked him what it was: The Son, confounded at this unexpected Question, replied, but with a visible Concern, that it was a Thing of no Consequence. The Duke, observing the great Confusion his Son was in, snatched it from him; and by its Contents discovering its dangerous Tendency, immediately posted to Windsor, to acquaint the King with this unnatural Conspiracy. The Son, knowing that he should be utterly undone, if the Plot should be discovered by any but himself, resolved to prevent his Father in the Discovery; and by setting out immediately, and taking a different Way, arrived at Windsor, before the old Duke; and casting himself at the King's Feet, he humbly implored Mercy, and discovered the whole Design. The King told him, if what he said were Fact, he readily pardoned him; but if he found it to be a malicious Information, he should find no Favour. The Duke of York, arriving soon after, put Henry out of all Doubt, by delivering him the Paper he took from his Son. In this Situation of Affairs, the the King, to provide for his own Security, retired to London; and, sending for the Mayor, acquainted him with the impending Danger, and commanded him with the utmost Expedition to raise the Citizens for his and the City's Defence. The Mayor effectually executed these Orders in a very short Time, by bringing before Henry six thousand Citizens completely armed, and ready to march wheresoever it should be judged necessary, besides those he had appointed for Defence of the City.

Conspirators become desperate.

In the Interim the Conspirators at Oxford became very uneasy, and apprehensive that their Plot was discovered; which was soon after confirmed, by Advice, that both Albemarle and the Duke of York, his Father, had been with the King at Windsor. However, they becoming desperate, resolved to accomplish by Force what they could not by Treachery, and marched to Windsor, with such Troops as they on a sudden could draw together, with an Intent to surprize the King; but were disappointed, his Majesty having left that Place the Night before.

Henry marches against them.

Henry, receiving Intelligence of this bold Attempt, marched out of London at the Head of his Citizens and the neighbouring Auxiliaries, to the Number of twenty thousand, completely armed, to Hounslow-Heath; where he encamped, expecting the Rebels. But they retired at his Approach with so potent an Army; and the Duke of Surrey and the Earl of Salisbury, two of the chief Leaders, being surprized at Cirencester, their Army was dispersed, and the other Conspirators were left to shift for themselves; all of whom were soon after taken and executed. Thus, by the timely and potent Assistance of the Citizens, an End was put to this Rebellion, which otherwise might have been attended with very bad Consequences.

Rebellion

Beside the above-mentioned Favours conferred upon the Citizens, the King, willing to the utmost of his Power to oblige them, at this Time granted them a Charter, dated the twenty-fifth of May, in the first Year of his Reign; wherein is contained the following Clause:

"And moreover, of our ample Grace, we have granted for us and our Heirs, as much as in us is, to the same Citizens, their Heirs and Successors, as aforesaid, that they shall have the Custody, as well of the Gates of Newgate and Ludgate, as all other the Gates and Posterns of the same City; and also the Office of Gathering of the Tolls and Customs in Cheap and Billingsgate and Smithfield, there rightfully to be taken and accustomed; and also the Tronage, that is to say, the Weighing of Lead, Wax, Pepper, Allom, Madder, and other like Wares, within the said City for ever; as by the said Charters, amongst other Things, more plainly may appear." Dated the 25th of May, 1399.

Towards the Close of this Year Emanuel Palæologus, the Grecian Emperor, arrived in England, to solicit Succours against Bajazet, Emperor of the Turks. He was met by the King and Nobility in great State at Blackheath, who conducted him to London; where he was received by the Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens, in a very pompous Manner.

A. D. 1401, the Prison called the Tun in Cornhill was converted into a Cistern or Conduit for Tyburn Water; on one Side of which was erected a Cage, with a Pair of Stocks over it, for the Punishment of Night-Walkers; together with a Pillory, for punishing of cheating Bakers and thievish Millers.

The Merchants of Jeane or Genoa, upon their petitioning the Parliament, had the Privilege granted them of Importing their Merchandise into London, without paying to the City the Duty called Scavage, provided they landed their Goods first at Southampton. And in the same Year we read, that the Citizens petitioned against the Liberty of St. Martin's le Grand, as a Receptracle of Murderers, Thieves, Bankrupts, &c. humbly praying, that their Privileges might be annulled. To which it was answered, that, upon Sight of their Liberties, Order should be taken therein by the King's Council. But I cannot find that ever there was any Thing farther done in this Affair for the present.

A Contest happened in the Year 1405 between the Companies of Goldsmiths and Cutlers, concerning certain Privileges challenged by the former, of inspecting all the gold and silver Work made by the latter. This being strenuously opposed by the Cutlers, the Goldsmiths applied to Parliament, to have their Right in that respect ascertained. The Matter in Dispute was by the King referred to the Mayor of London; who, having carefully examined into the Affair, made his Report, That the Cutlers had a Right of working in Gold and Silver; yet all such Things as were made by them were to be assayed by the Goldsmiths, according to their antient Immunities. And the Goldsmiths had their Charter of the first of Edward III. confirmed by Parliament, with additional Privileges, and the Clause of Licet.

and Cutlers.

The Italian Merchants in London finding themselves greatly aggrieved by a late Act of Parliament obtained by the Citizens of London, whereby they were obliged to lodge in such Houses as the Mayor and Aldermen should think proper to appoint for them, applied also to Parliament, and obtained a Repeal thereof: By which they were not only restored to their antient Liberty of chusing Lodgings for themselves, but likewise they had the Privilege granted them of disposing of their Merchandizes as they saw proper; and also that the said Merchants should, in all Actions of Debt, Accompts, or Trespases, be tried before the King's Council, Mayor, or Aldermen of London, according to the Laws of Merchants, and not by Inquest. And the Mayor and Citizens of London having for a long Time debarred Country Chapmen from selling their Goods in London to foreign Merchants, they, regarding this as an unjustifiable Imposition, had Recourse also to Parliament for Redress; by which they had their antient Privileges restored, of selling their several Commodities to all Persons whatsoever within the City of London, in a wholesale Way.

The Year 1407 is memorable for a dreadful and destructive Plague which raged in this City, and carried off thirty thousand of its Inhabitants; whereby Corn became so cheap, that Wheat was sold at three Shillings and four Pence the Quarter. But this Affliction did not prevent the publick Diversions; for we read, that the Company of Parish-Clerks of this City acted with great Applause for eight Days successively, at Skinners-Well near Clerkenwell, a Play concerning the Creation of the World; at which were present most of the Nobility and Gentry of the Kingdom; who from thence went to Smithfield, where solemn Jufts were holden between the Marshal of Hennault, and divers of his Countrymen, Challengers, and the Earl of Somerset, and the like Number of English Gentlemen, Defendants; in which Engagement the last gained Abundance of Honour, being all Victors, save one. Two of each Side, after a long and sharp Engagement, were parted by the King, without a Decision in Favour of either Party. However, Henry was so well satisfied of the Gallantry of those foreign Gentlemen, that he not only entertained them in a very sumptuous Manner, but likewise made them divers Presents of great Value; whilst he rewarded his own Subjects Bravery with the Honour of Knighthood; which, on such Occasions, is more acceptable to the Magnanimous than Loads of Treasure.

The Princes Thomas and John, two of the King's Sons, being at an Entertainment in Eastcheap, a Difference happened between their Servants and some belonging to the Court; which at last got to such a Head, that the Mayor, Sheriffs, and other Citizens, found it necessary to repair thither to appease the Tumult; and it may be presumed, that, during the Confusion, some Indignity was offered to the said Princes, because the King appointed Commissioners to enquire into their Conduct in that Affair. When the Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs, in Obedience to a Summons, attended the said Commissioners, they were advised by the Chief Justice Gascoyne to submit themselves, in Behalf of the Citizens, to the King's Mercy: But, being conscious of no Guilt, they strenuously asserted their Innocence, by alledging, they had done no more than their Duty, by exerting themselves to the utmost of their Power to preserve Peace: With which Answer the King being fully satisfied, they joyfully returned to the City. And the King granted to his Son, the Prince of Wales, by a Writ of Privy Seal, a magnificent Building in Thames-Street, in the Ward of Dockgate, called Cold Herbergh, (that is, Cold Inn) probably so denominated from its Vicinity to the River. Reign, repaired to St. Edward's Shrine in Westminster Abbey; where, as his Majesty was deeply engaged in his Devotions, he was struck with Death, and carried into the Jerusalem Chamber in a Swoon. Being come to his Senses, and neither knowing what had passed, nor the Place in which he lay, he demanded where he was; and, hearing that the Apartment was called Jerusalem, he replied, God's Will be done, for here I am brought to finish my Life, according to the Prophecy which has gone before of me, That I should die in Jerusalem. And he accordingly gave up the Ghost there on the 20th Day of March.

Henry V's Accession to the Throne.

His eldest Son was immediately proclaimed, by the Style and Title of Henry V. of whom the People had conceived but a very mean Opinion; his former Life being led in Debauchery, and all Kind of Vice and Licentiousness, in Company of the most Profligate, Wicked, and Riotous. But he no sooner touched the Reins of Government, than he became a new Man, and resolved to practise the Virtues he expected in his Subjects: He dismissed his former Companions with Means to live upon, and commanded them, under Pain of Death, not to approach within ten Miles of his Presence, from a certain limited Time then prescribed. However, his former vicious Course of Life had given a Plea to the Enemies of his Family to stir up some Trouble in the Beginning of his Reign: And, being informed of a Conspiracy against his Life, he commanded Sir Thomas Falconer, Mayor of London, to shut the City Gates, and apprehend all suspicious Persons. Pursuant to this Order, Falconer caused a strong Guard to be kept by every Alderman in his Ward; and, about Midnight following, went with a sufficient Power to the Ar without Bishopsgate, and apprehended John Borgate, a Carpenter, and seven others, who, upon Examination, readily acknowledged their Guilt. And, to prevent the City's being surprized in this Time of common Danger, he, with the utmost Expedition, caused the City Ditch to be cleansed, which at that Time in many Places was levelled with Mud and Dirt.

Many publick Nuisances being again set up in the River Thames, the City petitioned the Parliament for the Removal of all Kiddals, Wears, Fishgarths, Stanks, Milnes, Stakes, and all other Machines whatsoever, in the Rivers of Thames, Medway, and Lea. Whereupon the Mayor and Citizens were impowered rigorously to execute all the Statutes in Force against all such Offenders; and that in all Commissions relating to the Office of Water-Bailiff, the Mayor or Custos always to be one.

See Page

This Parliament revived the Bill brought into the House of Commons in the late Reign, for secularizing or seizing upon the Ecclesiastical Benefices. But the Bishops found Means to ward off the Blow, by persuading the King to reclaim the French Dominions formerly subject to the Crown of England, and to use all the Power of his Crown to recover them; which had its desired Effect.

As Nicholas Wotton, on the Lord-Mayor's Day, was riding to Westminster to qualify himself for the Office of Mayor, he received from one of the King's Messengers a Letter, acquainting him of the great Victory obtained by the King at Agincourt in France; and, returning from Westminster, accompanied by the Bishop of Winchester, Lord High Chancellor, &c. they repaired to St. Paul's Cathedral, where Te Deum was sung with great Solemnity: And on the Day following a very pompous and solemn Procession was performed by the Queen, Nobility, Clergy, Mayor, Aldermen, and the several Corporations of the City, with the utmost Devotion, from St. Paul's Church to Westminster, on Foot; where the illustrious Company made a great Oblation at the Shrine of St. Edward, and returned in Triumph.

The Gate called Moorgate was built this Year. See Page 24.

The King soon after returning from France, with great Numbers of the French Nobility, his Prisoners, was met on Blackheath by the Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs of London, in scarlet Robes, attended by three hundred of the principal Citizens, mounted on stately Horses, richly accoutred; and, at St. Thomas of Watering, he was met by a solemn and pompous Procession of the London Clergy, with rich Crosses, magnificent Copes, and massy Censers; and the City, on this joyful Occasion, was embellished, in a very sumptuous Manner, with rich Tapestry, containing the glorious Actions of his Majesty's illustrious Predecessors; with a beautiful Variety of stately Pageants, in some of which sat very amiable Children, dressed in Imitation of Angels, chanting Praises to the eternal King; to whom Henry, justly and humbly, ascribed all the Honour and Glory of the late great Victory. During this magnificent Cavalcade, the City Conduits ran with divers Sorts of Wine, for the Entertainment of the Populace; and, the Day following, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens presented the King at Westminster with one thousand Pounds in Gold, in two rich Basons of the same Metal and Value. The Citizens also, for the Honour of their King and Country, received the Emperor Sigismund in the like magnificent Manner, who came into England, out of a pious Design to make Peace between England and France. He was met on the Road to London, on the 7th of May, at Blackheath, by the Mayor, Aldermen, and many of the principal Citizens on Horseback, gorgeously apparelled; who, conducting him to London, were met upon the Road at St. Thomas of Watering, (Fabian says, at St. George's, Southwark), by the King and principal Nobility; whence they brought him to the City; where he was received in a very pompous and stately Manner.

This Year Sir Henry Barton, the Mayor, first ordered Lanthorns to be hung out for illuminating the Streets by Night, for the Convenience and Safety of the Citizens: And Wheat was sold at sixteen Shillings the Quarter.

The King's Charge for his second Expedition into France having vastly exceeded the Aid granted him by Parliament; he therefore, finding himself obliged to raise more Money, pawned

This Year Sir Simon Eyre, some time Mayor of London, built Leadenhall, at his proper Expence, as it now appears, and gave the same to the City, to be employed as a publick Granary for laying up Corn against a Time of Scarcity. In the East Side of this Structure originally was a Chapel, which not being endowed according to the Design of the Founder, William Rouse, John Rishy, and Thomas Afsby, Priests, by Licence from Edward IV. in the seventh Year of his Reign, founded therein a Fraternity of the Trinity, consisting of sixty Priests, besides other Brethren and Sisters; Part whereof performed the Divine Offices every Market-Day, to such Persons as frequented the Market. In this Hall was afterwards kept the common Beam for weighing of Wool, and a publick Market for many foreign Commodities; and, since that, it has been employed as an Armory, or common Repository for the military Utensils belonging to the City; but, at present, it is converted into Warehouses, and the Area thereof into a Meat and Leather-Market.

King Henry having concluded a Peace with Charles, King of France, on Condition that he should have in Marriage the Princess Catharine, Daughter of the said Charles, and that, after his Demise, Henry should immediately succeed to the Crown of that Kingdom; and having effectually settled every Thing in that Country, he set out with his Royal Consort for England. The Mayor, Aldermen, and a great Number of the principal Citizens, mounted on stately Horses, most sumptuously apparelled, meeting them on the Road, conducted their Majesties to the City; where they were, by the Citizens, received in a very magnificent Manner; on which joyful Occasion the City was adorned with rich Carpets, fine Silks, and a Variety of stately Pageants.

In the Year 1422, on the last Day of August, died that celebrated Hero Henry V. in the Flower of his Age, in France; from whence his Corpse was brought thro' London (with a funeral Pomp suitable to the Grandeur and Honour he enjoyed while alive) on an open Chariot, drawn by four stately Horses, sumptuously accoutred. On the upper Part of the Chariot lay an Effigy, representing his Person, in Royal Robes, with an Imperial Crown of Gold, beset with Jewels of an inestimable Value, on its Head, with a Scepter in the right Hand, and a Globe in the left. The Covering of the Bed whereon this Figure lay, was a golden Brocade, and the Canopy over it of an immense Richness, supported by divers of the principal Nobility. This stately Funeral was accompanied by James, King of Scotland, as chief Mourner, attended by the Princes of the Blood, all the Nobility, and most of the principal Gentry of the Kingdom, to St. Paul's Church; where his Obsequies being performed with the greatest Solemnity, the Procession set out for Westminster, where the royal Corpse was deposited amongst his Ancestors.

Newgate rebuilt by the Executors of Sir Richard Whittington.

A.D. 1423

The City this Year petitioned the King's Council for Leave to remove the Prisoners out of Newgate, in order to rebuild that Prison, according to the Will of Sir Richard Whittington, some time Lord-Mayor of this City; and accordingly they gave Leave to John Coventry, John Carpenter, John White, and William Grove, Executors of Richard Whittington, to do it.

About the same Time Water-Conduits were first erected at Billinggate, Paul's Wharf, and St. Giles's Cripplegate, for supplying those Neighbourhoods with Water.

Disputes between the Duke of Gloucester and Bishop of Winchester.

Every thing seemed to prognosticate a happy Reign; when, on a sudden, a great and dangerous Quarrel happened between the Duke of Gloucester, the Protector of the Kingdom, and the haughty and imperious Bishop of Winchester, his Uncle, and Great-Uncle to the King; which had like not only to have proved fatal to this City, but likewise to have involved the whole Nation in Blood.

Cost. Lon. A.D. 1426 The Bishop's Design to surprize the City.

The Protector having received Intelligence of the Bishop's Design to surprize the City of London in the Night of the Lord-Mayor's Day, when the Citizens were engaged in banqueting and rejoicing in Honour of their new Magistrate; he sent for the Mayor, and strictly enjoined him, for the Safety of the City, immediately to raise such a Body of Citizens, as were sufficient to baffle all the Attempts that should be made against them.

How prevented.

This Information soon appeared to be well-grounded; for the next Morning a great Number of the Bishop's Faction endeavoured to enter the City from Southwark, by the Bridge; and, being denied Admittance, were so highly enraged, that they assembled a great Number of Archers and Men at Arms, in order to force their Way. The Citizens immediately shut up their Shops, and, arming with the greatest Expedition, ran to the Bridge to oppose the Assailants, and would have fallen out upon their Enemies, had they not been prevented by the prudent Conduct of John Coventry, the Mayor, and his Brethren the Aldermen; which happily prevented the Effusion of much Blood.

Obliges the Duke of Bedford to interpose.

The Prince of Portugal being at this Time on his Travels in England, he, with the Archbishop of Canterbury, generously undertook to compose the Difference between the Protector and the Bishop; but, their Endeavours proving unsuccessful, the Duke of Bedford, Regent of France, and Brother to the Protector, for the Good of the Publick, judged it necessary to come over to accommodate the Affair in Controversy. At his Landing, he was met by a great Number of the Nobility, and, at Merton, by the Mayor, Aldermen, and many of the principal Citizens of London, on Horseback, who conducted him to and through the City in great State to Westminster; where, the Day after, the Mayor and Citizens presented him with one thousand Marks in Gold, in two gilt silver Basons. However, they met with a very cold Reception; for their inveterate Enemy, the Bishop of Winchester, had prepossessed the Duke with false Notions of the Citizens.

Sir John Rainwell, the Mayor, having received an Information of the Male-Practices of the Lombard Merchants, in adulterating their Wines, to the great Prejudice of the Health of his Majesty's Subjects; he caused to be seized, in divers Parts of the City, one hundred and fifty Buts of that pernicious Liquor; the Heads whereof being knocked out, the Wine, or putrid Matter, ran into the Street Channels, and emitted such a very noxious Smell, that it infected the Air to a great Degree.

Bad Wines seized and destroyed.

This worthy Mayor gave certain Lands and Tenements for defraying parliamentary Taxes, for the Ease of the Poor in the Wards of Aldgate, Bishopsgate, and Dowgate, provided they did not exceed three Fifteenths.

Sir John Rainwell's Charity.

The Bishop of Winchester, lately made Cardinal of St. Eusebius in France, being returned from thence, was, on his Approach to London, met by the Mayor, Aldermen, and many of the chief Citizens, on Horseback, who conducted him in great State to his Palace in Southwark.

Bishop of Winchester's Reception into London.

Stow, in his Annals, relates, that in this Year Jaqueline, the Duchess of Gloucester, being detained a considerable Time in Prison by the Duke of Burgundy, without the Duke her Husband giving himself the least Uneasiness in that Respect, and who, instead of endeavouring to have her released, lived in open Adultery with a certain Woman; this vile Treatment of his Duchess was so highly resented by the London Virago's, that they drew up a Petition against the Duke, and, with one Mrs. Stokes at their Head, presented the same to the Parliament. But what the Result of that Petition was, my Author does not mention; and, perhaps, it is one of his Mistakes: And, if ever such an Affair was transacted, it must have been two Years before; for Jaqueline, instead of being a Prisoner at this Time, was divorced from the Duke, and he married again to the Daughter of Reginald Lord Cobham.

London Petition against the Duke of Gloucester.

In this Year the stately Palace of Baynard's Castle was destroyed by Fire; but, in a short Time after, magnificently rebuilt by the said Duke of Gloucester.

Baynard-Castle burnt.

We being almost entirely ignorant of the ancient Customs of the City of London before the Conquest, I shall therefore subjoin a Letter from Henry VI. to the Mayor and Aldermen, with their Answer; wherein appears one of the antientest Immunities of this City.

"Henry, by the Grace of God, King of "England and France, and Lord of Ireland, to "the Mayor and Aldermen of the City of London, "*greeting. K. Henry's Letter concerning the antient Liberties of the City before the Conquest.

"the twentieth of January, in the seventh Year
"of our Reign."

To which the Mayor and Aldermen returned the following Answer:

The City's Answer thereto.

"We, Henry Barton, Mayor, and the Aldermen of the City of London, send before the Lord
the King in his Chancery, as within is commanded us, the Tenors of divers Liberties, Customs, Records, and Memorials, concerning Servants and Natives had and inrolled in our Court in the Chamber of Guildhall of the said City; which Tenors lie open in a Schedule fastened to this Brief, of the following Tenor:

"Be it remembered, That in the Time of "holy King Edward, heretofore King of England, and before from all Time no Memory
"of Man, then was extant such Dignity, Liberty
"and royal Custom, among others was had,
"used, and approved in the City of London, which "is, and from all Time hath been called, The free Chamber of the King of England, as from
"antient Time it was used and had in the great "City of Troy; to wit, That every Servant,
"whosoever he were, that came to the City of "London, and tarried in it for a Year and a Day,
"without Reclamation of his Lord there, after"wards he may, ought, and hath accustomed
"through his whole Life, so freely and securely
"to tarry there, as it were in the House or "Chamber of the King: And thence it is, that "the same holy King Edward, amongst other "Things, by his Laws remaining of Record in "the Treasury of Guybold of the said City, and "reciting the City itself to be the Head of his "Kingdom, and that it was founded like and "after the Manner of Old Troy; and that it
"containeth in it the Laws, Liberties, Dignities,
"and royal Customs of great Troy: He ap"pointed and ordained, that the said City of "London may have and keep every where, by
"one Inviolability always, all her old Usages
"and Customs, whosoever the King him"self shall be, whether in an Expedition or "otherwise.

"And afterwards King William the Conqueror,
"King of England, by his Charter, which re-
"maineth of the Record in the same Treasury,
"granted to the Men of London, that they be "worthy of all that both Law and Right, as they "were in the Days of the aforesaid Edward. And
"moreover, the said William the King, among "other Laws at the said City made, with the "Consent of noble and wise Men of the whole
"Kingdom, and remaining in the said Treasury,
"likewise remaining of Record, appointed and "ordained, that if Servants remain, without "Complaint, by a Year and a Day in a Burgh
"compassed with a Wall, or in Castles, or in "the Cities of the said King; whence the said
"City of London, to that Time, and from all
"Time before, was one, and the more princi"pal of the whole Kingdom, as is said before;
"from that Day let them become Freemen, and
"let them be for ever free and quit from the "Yoke of their Servitude. And the Record con"tinues, viz. It is to be noted, that the Laws,
"Recitements, and Statutes of holy King Edward, of which Mention is made above, are

"contained in Folio 34 of this Book, in the Title
"De Heretochis & Libertatibus London; and in
"Folio 113 of the Book of Customs of the said
"City; and in Folio 36 of the Book called "Recordatorium London, &c. It is also had in "Folio 162 of the Red Book of the Exchequer,
"called The true Charter; by which the foresaid
"Lord the Conqueror hath confirmed to the "Citizens of London all Rights and Laws which "they had in the Time of holy King Edward,
"together with certain other Charters, by which
"the said Lord, immediately after the Conquest,
"gave the whole Hyde and Land of the City of "London, whereof he had then been possessed in "his Demefne, to the Men of the said City,
"patent and remanent under the Seal of the said
"King, in the Custody of the Chamberlain, in
"the Treasury of the said City; which Charters
"are contained and incorporated in the Great
"Charter of the Liberties and Customs of the "City of London, and are confirmed by the "Lord the King (Henry the Sixth) and his "Progenitors. But the Tenors of the said Char"ters are patent in the Latin Tongue, in Folio
"238 of the Book of Ordinations of the said
"City."

The Citizens of London finding themselves greatly aggrieved by an Act of Parliament made in the seventh of Henry the Fourth, whereby all Persons whatsoever, who were not possessed of Land to the Amount of twenty Shillings per Annum, were expressly forbid to put out any of their Children as Apprentices to any Trade; and likewise, all Persons that should presume to take as Apprentices the Children of Parents so disqualified, were liable to the grievous Penalty mentioned in that Statute: Wherefore, to get rid of this slavish and oppressive Law, the Mayor and Citizens applied to Parliament to have the Act repealed: And, in Consideration of the many great and faithful Services performed by the City of London to the King, it was reversed, to the great Satisfaction of the Citizens.

Statute of Apprentices repealed.

John Upton, a Notary in Feverham, accused
John Downe, Gent. his Neighbour, of a Design of murdering the King on the Day of his Coronation; but he, not being able to prove the same, offered to make good the Accusation by Combat; which being accepted of by Downe, they met in Smithfield, on the fourteenth of January; where, in the Presence of the King and Nobility, they fought a long and desperate Battle; which moving the King with Compassion, he graciously pardoned them both.

A Duel between Upton and Downe.

The King, being crowned at Paris, on his Return from France was, on the twenty-first Day of February, met on Blackheath by the Mayor of London, dressed in Crimson Velvet, with a large furred Velvet Hat, a Girdle of Gold about his Middle, and a Bawdrick of Gold about his Neck, waving down his Back. He was followed by three Horsemen on stately Horses, cloathed in Scarlet bespangled with Silver, and attended by the Aldermen in scarlet Gowns, with sanguine Hoods, and the Citizens in white Gowns and scarlet Hoods, with the Symbol belonging to each Mystery richly embroidered upon their

Sleeves, and all on Horseback, sumptuously accoutred; whence they preceded his Majesty to London, where he was received with the utmost Pomp. The City on this Occasion was decorated with rich Silks and Carpets; and on the Bridge, and Streets thro' which the Cavalcade passed, were erected a Variety of stately Pageants, filled with Persons representing the Lares, Graces, and Sciences; who, by their curious Orations and charming Melodies, added very much to the Elegancy of the Procession. Two Days after, the Mayor and Aldermen attended the King at Westminster, and presented him with a golden Hammer, containing one thousand Pounds in Nobles.

At this Time the Tyburn Water was laid into the Standard in Cheapside, at the Expence of Sir John Wells, the late Mayor.

A. D. 1434, a great Frost began on the 24th of November, and held till the 10th of February following; whereby the River Thames was so strongly frozen, that all Sorts of Merchandizes and Provisions brought into the Mouth of the said River were unladen, and brought by Land to the City.

By the great Rains that fell in the preceding Autumn, Corn was so greatly damaged, that a very great Dearth ensued, wherein Wheat was sold at the excessive Rate of one Pound six Shillings and eight Pence per Quarter.

The Duke of Burgundy having not only perfidiously broke his Alliance with the English, but likewise openly joined his Troops to those of France, their professed Enemy; the Citizens of London, who knew they could not revenge themselves upon the Duke, fell like so many enraged Furies upon his innocent Subjects residing in this City, and, before the Tumult could be repressed, they, with an unheard-of Barbarity, cruelly murdered many Burgundians, Hollanders, and Flemings. The King immediately caused Proclamation to be made for restraining his Subjects from all Cruelties and Disorders under the severest Penalties, and effectually prevented the Effusion of more innocent Blood.

The Company of Fishmongers of this City having again intended to impose upon their Fellow-Citizens in selling their Fish, by preventing all foreign Fishermen from cutting to Pieces, or otherwise selling their Fish by Retail; the Parliament enacted, That no Person whatsoever should presume to hinder or obstruct any Fisherman, either foreign or domestick, from disposing of his Fish as he should see convenient, upon the Penalty of ten Pounds.

A. D. 1436, Philip, Duke of Burgundy, intending in good earnest to act against his old Friends the English, in favour of his new Ally the French King, resolved upon the Siege of Calais; which so alarmed the Nation in general, that all the Cities and Towns of the Kingdom were commanded, against an appointed Time, to have in Readiness a certain Number of Men, completely armed, to march to its Relief, under the Command of the Duke of Gloucester. Upon this Emergency, the Citizens of London distinguished themselves in an extraordinary Manner; for they not only got their Quota ready against the Time prefixed, but likewise undertook to maintain them at their own Expence.

This Army effectually answered the End for which it was raised; for, upon its Arrival in the Neighbourhood of Calais, the Burgundians were so intimidated, that they raised the Siege, and fled with the utmost Precipitation.

About the same Time two Arches at the South End of London-Bridge, together with the Bridge-Gate, fell down: The Ruins of the latter still remaining, one of the Locks, or Passages for the Water, is thereby almost rendered useless; wherefore it has received the Appellation of the Rock-Lock, which has occasioned the Citizens to take it for a natural Rock. These Ruins, though they have lain in Water for three Centuries, are still as impenetrable as a solid Rock.

At every uncommon low Neap-Tide (such as happened in the Year 1716, when People walked through divers Arches of the Bridge with dry Feet) as many Hands are set to work, to demolish these Ruins, and remove the Obstruction, as can conveniently labour: But all Attempts hitherto proving abortive, they will, in all Probability, out-last the Bridge.

A. D. 1438, Sir William Eastfield, Knight of the Bath, and Mayor of this City, at his proper Cost, brought Water from Tyburn and Highbury-Darn to London; where he caused to be erected Conduits in Fleet-Street, Aldermanbury, and at Cripplegate, for the Convenience of his Fellow-Citizens.

By excessive Storms of Wind and Rain that happened this Year in Harvest-Time, Corn suffered so very much, that in many Places the Poor were necessitated to make Bread of Fern-Roots and Ivy-Berries: At which Time Wheat was sold in London at the excessive Rate of one Pound six Shillings and eight Pence the Quarter. But by the laudable Care of Stephen Brown, the Mayor, who, at the Beginning of that dreadful Calamity, sent divers Ships to Prussia to fetch Rye, the City by this wise Precaution was so plentifully supplied, that, to his great Honour, the Famine was but little felt in London.

This publick Calamity was attended with a terrible Storm of Wind, which happened on the 25th of November; whereby not only many Churches and Houses were uncovered, but likewise almost one half of the Houses in the Old Change in Cheapside were blown down.

A. D. 1439, the Abbot of Westminster granted to Robert Large, the Mayor, and Citizens of London, and their Successors, one Head of Water, containing twenty-six Perches in Length, and one in Breadth, together with all its Springs, in the Manor of Paddington: In Consideration of which Grant, the City is for ever to pay to the said Abbot and his Successors, at the Feast of St. Peter, two Pepper-Corns. But, if the intended Work should happen to draw the Water from the ancient Wells in the Manor of Hida, then the aforesaid Grant to cease, and become entirely void. This Grant Henry VI. not only confirmed to the Mayor and Citizens, but likewise, by a Writ of Privy Seal, granted them further Advantages towards the performing thereof, as will be seen in the Year 1441.

On the 1st of September in this Year, as an Officer led a Prisoner from Newgate to Guildhall, in order to take his Trial, five of his Companions rushed out of Pannier-Alley in Newgate-Street, wrestled him from his Keeper, and ran him into the College of St. Martin le Grand, where they all took Sanctuary. But Philip Malpas and Robert Marbal, the Sheriffs of London, were no sooner acquainted with the Violence offered their Officer, and the Rescue of the Prisoner, than they, at the Head of a great Number of Citizens, repaired to the said College, and forcibly took from thence the Criminal and his Refcuers, whom they carried in Fetters to the Compter, and thence, chained by the Necks, to Newgate.

*Complained of by the Dean and

The Dean and Chapter, in a great Rage, went and complained of this Breach of Privilege to the King, remonstrating, that their sacred Immunities were trampled upon; wherefore they earnestly intreated Henry, as their Patron, to maintain them in their antient Rights and Privileges, as his royal Predecessors had hitherto done.

The Answer of the Citizens.

In Answer to this, the Mayor and Citizens undertook to prove, that the Collegiate Church of St. Martin had no peculiar Privilege more than any other Church in the City. However, after long Debates on that Head, the King, by the Advice of his Council, commanded the Sheriffs to bring the Prisoners before him in his Court of Chancery, on the Vigil of All-Hallows, together with the Reasons of their being apprehended and detained.

In which Charities he was imitated by Robert Large, Mayor, in the same Year; who gave 200*l.* to his Parish-Church of St. Olave in Surrey; 25*l.* to St. Margaret's, Lothbury; 20*l.* to the Poor, and 100 Marks to the Bridge; 200 Marks towards the vaulting over the Water-Course of Wallbrook; to poor Maids in Marriage 100 Marks; to poor Householders 100 Marks, &c.

A. D. 1440, Sir Richard Wick, Vicar of Hermesworth, in Essex, was burnt on Tower-Hill for Religion; and, being by the People reputed a pious and holy Man, the Vicar of Barking Church, a fraudulent and covetous Priest, in that Neighbourhood, embraced this Opportunity to impose upon the credulous Multitude, by mixing Ashes with the Powder of odoriferous Spices, which he secretly strewed on the Place where the Vicar was burnt, and industriously published the pretended Miracle of the Fragrancy of the Ashes: Which was no sooner known, than it produced the desired Effect; for the People, in great Numbers, from all Parts, hurried to the Place of Execution; where finding the Ashes answerable to the Report, they began in a tumultuous Manner to arraign the Justice of the Judges for condemning that holy Man: And, by the Address and dextrous Management of the crafty Vicar, the People were inadvertently drawn into Idolatry; for great Numbers resorted thither, and not only invoked him as a God, but likewise at his Shrine profusely offered considerable Sums of Money, Statues of Wax, &c. in Return for which, they were by the roguish Priest plentifully supplied with odoriferous Ashes, as sacred Relicks; which he carefully reinstated before the next Morning. This Practice continued about a Week, when, by an Order of the Government, 'twas suppressed by the Mayor and Aldermen; who, apprehending the Vicar, and many of those he had gulled, committed them to Prison: Whereby the Impostor was detected and punished, and an End put to the Fraud; and the whole Scene of Villainy laid open, by the Confession of the said Vicar, the iniquitous Contriver.

Know ye, That whereas our beloved John Hatherly, Mayor, and the Citizens of London, do intend, for the common Utility and Decency of all the said City, and for the universal Advantage, likewise for the well-pleasing of all liege Subjects flowing thither from other Parts, at convenient Places therein, as it well becomes them so to do, to build and erect divers Aqueducts of fresh Water, with Standards, and other Machines and leaden Pipes, which have and do run under and above the Earth for above three Miles; and to rebuild a certain common Granary, and a certain beautiful Cross in the West-Cheap of the said City, which may serve for a Recevoir, or, as it were, a Mother to the said Conduits or Aqueducts; which Works cannot be performed without a very large Quantity of Lead, and Workmen proper to carry on the said Works: We, well considering the Utility, Decency, and Advantage of the said Works, do, of our special Grace, grant and give our Licence for com-pleting the same; and for the said Citizens to take up two hundred Fodder of Lead for the building thereof, and to impress Plumbers and

A. D. 1442, in the Month of August, a nocturnal Tumult happened in Fleet-Street, between the Students of the Inns of Court, and the Citizens of that Neighbourhood, occasioned by one Harbottle of Clifford's-Inn. Many were killed and wounded on both Sides. But the Mayor, attended by the Sheriffs and a great Body of Citizens, repaired thither towards the Approach of Day, and happily put an End to that dangerous Riot, which had like to have involved the whole City in the Fray.

The Citizens having chosen, and returned to the Court of Aldermen, Robert Clopton, Draper, and Ralph Holland, Merchant-Taylor, for their Choice of one for the Office of Mayor for the ensuing Year; the said Court, according to an antient Custom, chose the former: However, the Merchant-Taylors then present, having drawn in many of the simple and unwary Citizens to side with them, behaved in a very insolent Manner, by crying out, They would not accept of their Choice, but would have the latter, as being a Member of their Company. Sir John Paddesley, the Mayor, perceiving that they were not to be wrought upon by fair Means, caused several of the Rioters to be apprehended and committed to Newgate; which effectually put an End to the Disturbance; for which those in Dureff were soon after punished in an exemplary Manner. But this does not seem to have prevented the Malecontents from caballing for the future, as may be inferred from his Majesty's Letter under-written, purporting,

"That whereas the Mayors of London used to be chosen by the Aldermen, and certain more discreet Persons of the said City, especially summoned and warned for that Purpose; yet some that had not, nor ought to have, any Interest in such Elections, came, and with their Noise and Clamour disturbed them, with an Intention to choose such who might afterwards favour their Evil-doing and Errors: He therefore, willing to provide for the Quiet and Peace of his Subjects, and to apply a suitable Remedy on this Behalf, did command and firmly enjoin the Mayor and Sheriffs, to make Proclamation through all the City and Liberty, before the Time of the Election of the Mayor, strictly forbidding, that none be present at such Election, or any way, or under any Colour, thrust himself into it, but such as by Right, and according to the Custom of the City, ought to be there; and that such Election be made by the Aldermen and other of the more discreet and able Citizens, especially warned and summoned, according to the Custom aforesaid: Letting them know for certain, that if any, some other way elected, were presented to him, or his Treasurer, and Barons of the Exchequer, they would by no means admit him: And that they should arrest and commit to Prison all those who should act contrary to the said Proclamation and Prohibition."

Comm-
Council for

The Common Council granted one thousand Marks toward erecting a new Conduit near St. Paul's Gate at the upper End of Cheapside, and for the repairing of others. About the same

Time, the King, by his Letters Patent, empowered Thomas Knowles, John Chickie, Sec. Executors of John Wells, some time Mayor of London, to repair the Highway leading from London, to Westminster, before and near the Palace of the Survey, which, for the Space of five hundred Feet, they substantially performed with Stones and Gravel.

And the said Common Council with great Concern observing the general Profanation of the Sabbath-Day by Victuallers and petty Artificers, they made a severe Law, to be observed within the City and Liberties thereof, for preventing all Persons from buying and selling any Sort of Goods, and even Victuals, on that Day; and also for restraining all Mechanicks from doing any Manner of Work on the said Day. However, according to my Author, it was but little regarded; for it seems this Ordinance was too good to be observed in a Time of general Depavity.

On the Candlemas Eve following, by a dreadful Storm of Thunder and Lightning, the Steeple of St. Paul's Church was set on Fire; but, timely Assistance coming, 'twas thought to be happily extinguished: But, thro' the Carelessness of the People employed in quenching the same, it broke out again between the Hours of Eight and Nine at Night, when it raged with such Violence, that it consumed the greatest Part of the wooden Frame before it could be extinguished.

Margaret, Daughter of Rayner, Duke of Anjou, and titular King of Sicily, Naples, and Jerusalem, newly espoused to King Henry, was on her Way to London met at Blackbeath by the Mayor, Aldermen, Sheriffs, and principal Citizens of London: The former were richly clothed in Scarlet, and the latter in Violet-coloured Gowns, with embroidered Sleeves, all mounted on stately Horses. Whence they conducted her to London, where she was received in the utmost Pomp and Magnificence; the City on that Occasion being richly decorated with a Variety of rich Silks and Tapestry, and a great Number of stately Pageants.

John David impeached William Catur, his Master, an Armorer, of St. Dunstan's in the West, of High Treason: But not being able to make good his Charge, other than by Combat; for the performing thereof, both Time and Place being appointed, the Master, who was well-beloved, had many Friends, who, knowing him to be of a timorous Nature, plied him with Wine to support his drooping Spirits; and Catur, entering the Lists in Liquor, was soon overcome, and killed by his perfidious Servant, who not long after being convicted of Felony, he confessed that he had falsely and unjustly accused and killed his late Master. Hence 'tis observable, what a miserable Government England was then under, when a bold and malicious Miscreant had the Liberty of impeaching any Man of Treason, without producing the least Evidence; and that for no other Reason (as is manifest in the Case before us) than to murder the Person he had an Aversion to, with Impunity. But, Thanks to Heaven, it is now otherwise! for, instead of a Man's being obliged to vindicate his Innocence by Arms against a desperate, profligate and bloody Villain, he can now justify himself in a

The Murder of the Duke of Gloucester

A. D. 1447, the great and worthy Duke of Gloucester, the King's Uncle, was by the Queen's Faction apprehended, under a Pretence of High Treason, for endeavouring to murder the King, as was falsely and maliciously insinuated, with a wicked Design to cut off that good Prince, who was deservedly beloved by the whole Nation, being a Lover of the Commons, a Friend to the Learned, a continual Defender of the Innocent, and a Terror to the Guilty; therefore was deemed a fit Sacrifice to make room for the Execution of the wicked Schemes of a detestable Party, who well knew, that during his valuable Life they could not be put in Execution. But, being conscious of the Falsity of the Charge, they durst not bring him to an open Trial: Wherefore they murdered him in Prison the Night after his Commitment, and, exposing his Body to the Publick, gave out, that he died of an Apoplexy. His Domesticks being seized at the same Time, five of them were sent to London, where they were tried and convicted, and then drawn to Tyburn and hanged, cut down alive, stripped naked, and marked with a Knife, in order to be quartered; but they were saved by a Pardon produced by the Duke of Suffolk; which it is supposed, was procured by him out of a Remorse of Conscience for the Murder of their Master, as well as on Account of their Innocence. Whereupon they all recovered, and were brought back to the City, to the great Joy of the Citizens. However, their Estates were divided among the King's Domesticks, and their Cloaths kept by the Hangman.

The Rebellion of Jack Cade.

The Duke of York taking Advantage of the Death of the Duke of Suffolk, the King's Incapacity to govern, and the Male-Administration of the Queen, judged it a proper Time for him to put in for the Crown. To which End he began to found the Inclinations of the People; and for the carrying on his Design with the greater Security, he pitched upon Jack Cade, an Irishman, who much resembled John Mortimer, a Prince of the Blood of the Family of March, who was beheaded in the Beginning of this Reign. Under this fictitious Name, Cade went into Kent, (where the Duke had many Friends): And, under the specious Pretence of reforming Abuses in the Government, and rescuing the People from the great Grievances and Hardships they laboured under, he soon prevailed upon the Populace to join him, for the attaining so salutary an End: And having faithfully promised to free them from all Taxes and Impositions, his Army soon increased to such a Degree, that he found himself in a Condition to march towards London. Being arrived at Blackheath, he encamped there for near the Space of a Month, frequently sending out Parties to prey upon those that would not join him. At this Time, there seems to have been a good Understanding between Cade and some of the Citizens; for he often sent Letters of Safe-conduct to Thomas Cook, a Draper, to repair to him for the transacting of certain Affairs; and in one of which he strictly enjoined the said Cook to charge all the Genoa, Venetian and Florence Merchants, to send him Horses, Arms, and one thousand Marks in Money; threatening, in case of Refusal, to destroy as many of the said Merchants as should fall into his Hands. This Command was undoubtedly complied with; for, upon Cade's Arrival at, and during his Stay in the City, I cannot learn that he offered the least Violence or Indignity to any of the said Merchants.

His Correspondence

Citizens.

Ibid.

The King assembled an Army of fifteen thousand Men, with whom he marched, in order to fight the Rebels: But Cade, receiving Intelligence of his Approach, retreated (as if afraid) into a Wood in the Neighbourhood of Seven Oaks, where he formed an Ambuscade, expecting the King's Army would be emboldened at his Retreat, and pursue him in Disorder. This Stratagem had the desired Effect; for the King in reality believed, that the Rebels fled for fear of his Army, and would soon dissolve, and return to their respective Homes. Wherefore he returned to London, contenting himself with sending a Detachment against them, under the Conduct of Sir Humphry Stafford, with Orders, that whatever Part of the Rebels he should light of, to disperse them: But Stafford, falling into their Ambuscade, had the Misfortune to lose his Life, together with those of his best Officers; and his Army was cut to Pieces.

Cade's Success increased his Army by the Accession of great Multitudes; and, being puffed up by his Victory, he armed himself with Sir Humphry's Brigandine, finely embellished with gilt Nails, and set out for London. On his Arrival at Blackheath, he was met by the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Humphry Duke of Buckingham, from the King, in whose Name they desired to know his Demands, and endeavoured to persuade him to lay down his Arms, and submit to the King's Mercy; which he refused to do, unless Henry would come to him in Person, and grant all his Demands. The King no sooner received this Answer, than he set out with his Queen for Killingworth-Castle, leaving no other Troops behind, but those in Garrison in the Tower of London.

Message from the King.

His Demands.

Cade, upon Advice of the King's Flight, straight began his March for London; and, arriving in Southwark, took up his Quarters in the White-Hart Inn. His near Approach occasioned a great Commotion in the City: Some were for opening the Gates to receive him, whilst others were for opposing him to the utmost. In this great Confusion, the Mayor summoned a Council to deliberate upon the present Emergency; when most of the Members, either thro' Fear or Faction, were for admitting Cade. But Robert Horn, an Alderman and Fishmonger, boldly and strenuously opposed his Reception into the City: And the Rebels were so highly enraged, that the Mayor found himself not only obliged to commit the brave Horn to Newgate, in order to pacify those Miscreants, but also to open the Gates, and admit them into the City.

Ibid.

Received into the City.

Cade, to ingratiate himself with, and engage the Citizens in his Interest, at his entering the City, caused Proclamation to be made, strictly commanding all his Followers not in the least to molest, or offer any Violence to the Citizens, nor extort any thing from them without Payment, upon Pain of Death. In his March through Canon-street, he struck London-Stone with his Sword, saying, Now is Mortimer Lord of this City: And, to confirm the Citizens in a good Opinion of him, he returned at Night to his Quarters in Southwark. From whence he returned the Day after, and caused the Lord Say, High-Treasurer of England, to be apprehended and brought to Guildhall, and to be arraigned before the Lord-Mayor and divers of the Judges, who sat there by his Command to try that noble Lord. But, he refusing to plead before such improper Judges, and insisting upon his Right of Peerage, to be tried by his Peers; Cade caused him to be instantly taken from the Bar, and led to the Standard in Cheapside; where, without allowing him Time to finish his Confession, (according to the Custom of those Times) he had him beheaded, and his Head, fixed upon a Spear, was carried before the Rebels in Triumph; and his Body, at a Horse's Tail, was drawn through the City to Thomas of Watling's; which, after having some time hung upon a Gibbet, was afterwards quartered.

Behaviour
in the City.

Beheaded
Lord Say
and others.

The next Sacrifice to this Rebel's Vengeance was Sir James Cromer, the late Chancellor's Son-in-Law, and Sheriff of the County of Kent, whom he fetched out of the Fleet Prison, and beheaded at Mile-End, amidst the Rebels of Essex. This Head being also fixed upon a Pole, 'twas with the former carried before that vile Wretch thro' the principal Streets of the City; where he sportingly made them kiss in each

Ibid.

each Street, to the Detestation of all the Spectators.

Ibid.

Plunders the Citizens.

Having thus glutted himself with Blood, Cade now began to think of enriching himself by Plunder (which soon accomplished his Destruction): For being invited by Philip Malpas, an Alderman, to an elegant Entertainment at his House, and the Day after to a sumptuous Feast at Mr. Ghersey's; in Return for these Acts of Generosity, the ungrateful Villain caused both their Houses to be spoiled and stripped of all their valuable Furniture and Treasure. He also robbed many others of the principal Merchants: And wherever he had a Suspicion of Persons concealing rich Goods or Treasure, he compelled such to ransom their Lives at his own Price. As for the worthy Alderman Horn, who had exposed himself most to the Rage and Fury of this abandoned Crew of Robbers, by his brave and laudable Zeal for the Safety of the City, he was, with great Difficulty, permitted to live, by the Interposition of his Friends, and on the Payment of five hundred Marks.

Ibid.

However, these Miseries at last awakened the Mayor, Aldermen and principal Citizens; who, seeing no End of them, and that no Citizen of Distinction could be sure of Life or Estate, except proper and resolute Measures should be taken to prevent the further Encroachments and Depredations of this Rebel and known Robber (besides the great Danger their Wives and Daughters were exposed to, of having their Honour violated by the brutish Rabble) it was unanimously agreed, that, as soon as Cade was marched into Southwark, they would shut the Gates, and oppose his Return. This Resolution was communicated to the Lord Scaler, Constable of the Tower of London, and Sir Matthew Gough, a celebrated Warrior, his Lieutenant; who greatly encouraged the Citizens to persevere in their laudable Design; and not only promised them his utmost Assistance, under the Conduct of the famous Gough, but likewise assured them, that, if the Rebels should attack the Bridge, he would endeavour to drive them from thence by his Artillery in the Tower.

Shut out of the City

Ibid.

Attempts to force the Bridge.

Cade was no sooner acquainted with the Execution of this Resolution, than he advanced to attack and force his Passage over the Bridge: But the Citizens being prepared to receive him, there ensued a dreadful Battle, which was maintained with equal Desperation and great Loss on both Sides; for, by the many Advances and Repulses, there were killed on the City Side the brave Alderman Sutton, Robert Haysand, and the renowned Gough, Lieutenant of the Tower, besides a great Number of brave Citizens that were killed and drowned in Defence of the Drawbridge. By this gallant Action of the Citizens, the Rebels were greatly discouraged; and Cade, by the great Loss he had sustained, found himself obliged to recruit his Army with the Prisoners of the King's-Bench and Marshalsea Prisons.

Repulsed by the Citizens.

Hall. Chron.

All of Indemnity.

John Stafford, Archbishop of Canterbury, and High Chancellor of the Kingdom, then residing in the Tower of London for his Security, being informed, that the Rebels by their bad Success in the late Engagement were greatly dispirited, wisely judged, that it was then a proper Time, by the Offer of a general Pardon, to prevail upon the People to return to their respective Habitations. This being communicated to the Bishop of Winchester, they immediately drew up an Act of Indemnity, and, giving it the Sanction of the Great Seal, caused it to be proclaimed in Southwark the Night following; which produced so sudden and wonderful an Effect, that before Day Cade was deserted by most of his Followers; who, returning Home, left him to shift for himself, with a small Number of his Adherents.

Cade's Army disbanded itself.

Ibid.

He flies in Disguise.

Jack, perceiving that his Affairs were now become desperate, thought it not advisable to wait for the Succours promised him by the Partizans of the Duke of York; but rather to provide for his own Safety, together with that of his rich Booty, which he sent by Water to Rocksey; and he himself in Disguise fled into the woody Part of Sussex. Which was no sooner known, than a Proclamation was issued by the Government, with a Reward of one thousand Marks to any Person that should bring him, either dead or alive. And he was discovered lurking in a Garden at Hothfield in Sussex, by Alexander Eden, a Kentish Gentleman; who, endeavouring to apprehend him, killed him in Fight; and, having put his Corpse into a Cart, brought the same to London, where he received the promised Reward. Thus happily ended this dangerous Rebellion, by the Bravery and gallant Deportment of the Citizens of London, which the Royal Army was not able to effect.

His Character.

By the above Transactions, and Proclamation for apprehending Jack Cade, he appears to have been one of the worst of Miscreants: For in the Year preceding his Rebellion he murdered a Woman with Child; for which he took Sanctuary in a Church; but having, through the Intercession of Friends, obtained Leave to transport himself, he obliged himself, by Oath, never to return to England; and set out for France; where he immediately qualified himself to the Government of that Country: But, as no Oath was sufficient to bind him, he soon after returned to England; where he fomented the above-mentioned Insurrection under a fictitious Name.

The King informed of this Success, marched his Army through the City on the fourth of December following: On which Occasion the gallant Citizens were under Arms, ranged on each Side the Streets through which the Royal Army passed. And though Henry had not been able to prevent the Rebels Entry into London, he was now resolved to bring their Ringleaders to Punishment: So continuing his March to Kent, attended by the Judges, he caused (after a legal Conviction) six-and-twenty of the principal to be executed. But in his Return to London, being met on Blackbeath by a Multitude of Kentish Yeomanry in their Shirts, who, with pitiful Cries and Tears, humbly implored Mercy, he was graciously pleased to pardon them all. And the Citizens, as a further Proof of their sincere Joy, had erected on Poles upon the Bridge the Heads of ten of the chief Rebels, among which was that of Jack Cade, their Leader; to congratulate him at his Entrance into London.

We find, in the Year 1453, a Bull from Pope Nicolas, to confirm the Offerings to be paid by the Parishioners of every Parish of London, at the Rate of one Farthing for every House, Shop or Tenement, of the yearly Rent of ten Shillings; and to advance the Offering a Farthing for every ten Shillings more Rent of each House, Shop or Tenement; and to command the Mayor, Sheriffs, Aldermen, Citizens and Inhabitants, to pay the same to the Curates of their respective Parishes, and to oblige every one to do the same, as much as in their Power, under the Pain of the Greater Excommunication to be ipso facto incurred; in Conformity to a Constitution made by Roger Bishop of London, confirmed and approved by Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury, and enjoined by a Bull from his Predecessor Pope Innocent the Seventh. By which said Bull it was further ordained, That Heirs should be accountable for what should be left unpaid of those Offerings at the Death of any of the said Parishioners; and that the Ordinaries of the said Churches might proceed for the Recovery of the said Offerings in a summary Manner, without Citation, and to excommunicate, and otherwise to punish all those who should do any thing contrary to the said Bull; which Arnold rehearses at large.

In Consequence of this Bull, it appears, that the Clergy in London insisted rigorously on the Offerings therein allowed to them by the Pope; and the Laity, not being able to withstand the Power by which they acted, proposed an Arbitration and Composition for the same, which was concluded and signed on the seventeenth Day of December, 1457.

But the Joy of the Court was greatly allayed with a Report and Slander raised by the Common People, who ran away with an Opinion, that he was not the real Son of Henry, but had been secretly placed in the Cradle to impose a Prince upon the Nation.

John Norman being chosen Mayor of London for the Year ensuing, he changed the Custom of riding to Westminster, (to qualify himself for that Office) to that of going by Water: To which End he caused to be built a stately Barge at his own Expence, and on the usual Anniversary was rowed thither, attended by the several Companies of the City, who, in Imitation of their Chief Magistrate, had likewise built their own Barges; which, being all magnificently adorned, formed a most beautiful aqueous Triumph. This Alteration proving very advantageous to the Watermen, they were so highly pleased therewith, that they made a Song in Praise of the said Mayor, beginning with Row thy Boat Norman, row to thy Lemman, &c. which Custom of going by Water has been practised ever since.

This Year, 1454, proved fatal to the King, who permitting himself to be carried away by the evil Counsel of the Queen, and her Junto the Dukes of Somerset and Buckingham, &c. to the great Detriment of his Subjects, they called in the Assistance of the Duke of York; who, with an Army of Welshmen, and disaffected English, gave his Majesty Battle at St. Alban's, in the Week before Whitsontide; and, after an obstinate Engagement, the Royal Army was routed, and the King taken and sent Prisoner by the Duke to London, and lodged in the Bishop of London's Palace, till the Parliament called to sit at Westminster constituted the victorious Duke of York Protector of the Kingdom, and removed from the King all his evil Counsellors.

These Commotions of State, which are most frequently attended with Disorders among the People, countenanced the Mob in divers Places to breed Riots; amongst whom we read of one begun by divers Persons of St. Martin's le Grand, who in a riotous Manner assaulted the Citizens, and, having beat and wounded several, returned to their Habitations in the Sanctuary. The Mayor and Aldermen being advised of this barbarous and vile Treatment of their Fellow-Citizens, some of them, attended by a great Number of People, instantly repaired to the Monastery, forced it open, and carried off the Authors of the late Riot. The Dean made a heavy Complaint to the King, against the Mayor and Citizens, for a Breach of Privilege; wherefore they were summoned to attend the Council to answer the same. In Obedience to this Command, the Recorder, with a Deputation of the Aldermen, attended the King then at the Castle of Egle in Hertfordshire; who, after a long Examination of both Parties, dismissed the City Deputies with a Letter to the Mayor, commanding him to keep the said Rioters in Custody till his Return to London, when he intended to have that Affair more strictly inquired into.

In May 1456, a simple and passionate young Mercer, who having been denied the Liberty, or punished for wearing a Dagger in Italy, contrary to the Laws of that Country, where he had resided for some Time, being returned to this City, met an Italian in Cheapside with a Dagger by his Side; which so enraged him, that, without considering the different Laws and Customs of Countries, he insolently told him, that, as the English were not allowed to wear Swords in Italy, neither ought he to wear any Weapon in England: And the Italian, somewhat irritated at this manner of Address, returning him an Answer not agreeable to the furious Temper of the young Censor; he not only snatched the Stranger's Dagger from his Side, but broke his Head therewith. The injured Foreigner applied to the Lord-Mayor for Redress, who, greatly concerned at the Indignity offered to the Stranger, summoned the Mercer to appear and answer to the Complaint, on the next Day, at Guildhall, before him and a full Court of Aldermen; who committed the Aggressor to the Prison of Newgate, he not being able to alledge any thing in Alleviation of his Guilt. But the Servants of the Mercery, says Fabian, way-laid them near the End of Laurence-Lane in Cheapside, and rescued the Prisoner in a very tumultuous Manner. After which, the baser Sort of the Populace, laying hold of the Confusion of this Proceeding, rose in a great Body, and running to the Houses of the most eminent Italian Merchants, pillaged them. The Mayor and Aldermen, assisted by a Number of the principal Citizens, seized upon divers of the Ringleaders, and committed them to Newgate. But the Tumult was not appeased without some Bloodshed. In the mean Time the Offender made his Escape, and took Sanctuary in St. Peter's Westminster, till the Affair was finally determined.

The Court
alarmed.

The Court were so alarmed with the Report of this Riot, that, fearing it might be the Beginning of some Troubles fomented against the State by the Faction of the Duke of York, the Queen sent into the City the Dukes of Exeter and Buckingham, and others of the Nobility, with a special Commission to assist the Mayor and Aldermen in the Trial and Punishment of the Transgressors in an exemplary Manner. But, while the Mayor, as Chief Judge, assisted in the Commission by the forefaid most noble Lords and the Chief Justice, was calling the Pannels of the Inquests at Guildhall, the Rabble assembled in greater Numbers than before, threatening that, if they proceeded in the Commission to try their Fellow-Citizens, then in Prison on account of the late Tumult, it would be attended with fatal Consequences. The Commissioners were so greatly intimidated, that they, without executing their Commission, hastily took leave of the Mayor, and retired from the Bench. As soon as the Mayor was informed of the Cause, he, wisely considering that, if a Stop were not suddenly put to the dangerous Practices of the Multitude, all manner of Government in the City would soon be at End, summoned a Common-Council, and commanded all Wardens of Fellowships to appear on the Morrow at Guildhall; and, assisted by the Recorder, he then and there ordered each Warden to assemble his whole Fellowship that same Afternoon in their respective Halls, and there to charge every Member of their Community both to keep, and to use the best of his Endeavours to maintain, the Peace of the City; and that, if they should discover or suspect any Person or Persons to favour any riotous Assemblies, or the forcible Delivery of such Persons as were committed to Prison, the said Wardens should with good Words try to dissuade him or them from their evil Intentions, and give their Name or Names privately and expeditiously unto the Mayor. By such excellent Measures an effectual Stop being put to the villainous Proceedings of the Mob, the above-mentioned Commissioners returned to the City, and, in Conjunction with the Mayor, tried and condemned divers Persons; three whereof were soon after hanged at Tyburn, and several others amerced in pecuniary Mulcts.

In the thirty-fourth of Henry VI. five other Schools were set up in other Churches in London, by the Care of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Bishop of London, confirmed by the King's Letters Patents; to wit, one within the Church-yard of St. Paul's, a second at the Collegiate Church of St. Martin's le Grand, another at St. Mary de Arcubur, that is, Bow-Church in Cheapside, another at St. Dunstan's in the East, and the fifth at the Hospital of St. Anthony's.

This was done to check and suppress other smaller Schools set up by illiterate Men, who did the Youth more Harm than Good, as is hinted in the said Letters Patents.

About the End of this Year, there were taken in the River Thames, at Erith, two Whales, a Sword-Fish, and one called Mors Marina, which by the Superstitious were regarded as so many Prodigies and Prognosticks of future Troubles.

The Prisoners in Newgate, having broke out of their several Wards, got upon the Leads, where they defended themselves with great Obstinacy against the Sheriffs and their Officers, insomuch that these were obliged to call the Citizens to their Assistance, before they could be reduced to their former State.

The Contests between the Clergy and Laity, which arose in London by the Power given to the Curates of this City to levy certain Offerings or Rates, as above, in the Year 1453, were now finally adjusted after this Manner, according to Arnold:

The Composition of all Offryng within the City of London, and Suburbs of the same.

 Parish-Churches in London and its Suburbs.

The King and Queen, together with the Dukes of York, Exeter and Somerset, the Earls of Warwick, Northumberland and Salisbury, and the Lords Egermond and Clifford, being arrived in the City, and the smallest of their Retinues consisting of four hundred Men, as their respective Guards; Godfrey Buloine, the Mayor, for the better securing the Peace of the City during the Stay of these potent Guests, caused five thousand Citizens completely armed to mount Guard daily under his own Command, and two thousand by Night, under the Command of three Aldermen. By this wise Precaution Peace was preserved in all Parts of the City, during the Stay of those Personages and their respective Troops.

About the same Time happened a great Tumult in Fleet-Street, between the Students of the Inns of Court and the neighbouring Inhabitants; wherein was killed the Queen's Attorney: Wherefore the Principals of Furnival's, Clifford's and Barnard's Inns were committed Prisoners to the Castle of Hertford; and William Taylor, Alderman of Farringdon Ward Without, and others were committed to the Castle of Windsor. At the same Time, all the Genoese Merchants in this City were by the King's special Command committed close Prisoners to the Fleet, by way of Reprisal for the Capture of an English Ship in the Levant, by a Ship of War of that Nation:
 And, to make good all Damages sustained by the Master and Owners of the said Ship, the said Merchants were amerced in the Sum of six thousand Marks.

The King, with the Advice of his Council, resumed the Enquiry into the Privileges of the Sanctuary of St. Martin's the Great; whose Determination is recorded in divers Articles preserved in Lib. K. p. 299. to be seen in the Guildball of London, and will be given at large under the Title of St. Martin's le Grand, in the Course of this Work.

The King also receiving Advice at Coventry of the Landing of the Earls of March, Warwick, Salisbury, &c. at Sandwich in Kent, from Calais, immediately commanded the Lord Scales to march with a considerable Body of Troops, and possess himself of the City of London, as the most important Place of the Kingdom; which,
 if he could secure it, would of itself be sufficient to baffle all the Efforts of the Rebels. The said Lord, accompanied by the Earl of Kendal and Baron Lovell, set out forthwith for this City;
 where being arrived, he in the King's Name demanded Admission, assuring the Mayor and Citizens,

Citizens, that his Master, out of his great Love to them, had sent him to protect the City from being pillaged by a great Body of rebellious Traytors, that were now almost at their Gates. The Mayor, who secretly favoured the Designs of the above-named Lords, answered, That he wanted no Help, either to defend or govern the City; and therefore would not permit an armed Power to come within his Jurisdiction. This resolute Answer highly enraged Scales, who perceived the Disloyalty of the Citizens, and plainly foresaw, that they intended to admit the Malecontents at their Arrival. For the preventing of which, he possessed himself of the Tower of London, and threatened, that, in case they admitted the Rebels, he would batter and lay the City in Ashes. However, it appears that those Menaces had but little Weight with the Citizens; for, upon the Arrival of the Earl of March with his Army, they immediately opened their Gates, and received him with the greatest Demonstrations of Joy.

This mighty Point gained, of having the City declare for him, March set out with an Army of twenty-five thousand Men in Quest of the King; having left the Earl of Salisbury with a considerable Power to defend the City against the Attempts of the Lord Scales in the Tower, who incessantly from thence plied the City with his Ordnance, and beat down and destroyed a Number of Houses with their Inhabitants. Wherefore Salisbury block'd up that Fortrefs on all Sides; and, by erecting a Battery on the adverse Bank of the Thames, he reduced the Garrison to such Straights, that Scales was soon obliged to desist from firing upon the City.

The Earl of March came up with, engaged, and routed the King's Army near Northampton; and, taking the King Prisoner, brought him to London, and lodged him in the Bishop's Palace. The Lord Scales, now despairing of Relief, delivered up the Tower upon Terms. However, imagining that the Articles of Surrender were not sufficient to secure him from the Fury of the enraged Citizens, whom he had so highly injured during his late Government, he endeavoured to get off in Disguise by Water; but, being unfortunately discovered by some of the Earl of Warwick's Watermen, they knocked him on the Head, and stripping him, left his naked Corpse on the Shore, where it continued many Days, without the least Pity or Compassion.

The Queen, after the fatal Battle of Northampton, wherein the King was taken Prisoner, retired into the Northern Parts; where, in a short Time, she raised a considerable Army for releasing the King. The Duke of York marched against her with the utmost Expedition; but, in the Neighbourhood of Wakefield, inconsiderately engaging a Power far superior to his own, he had the Misfortune of being killed, with most of his principal Adherents, and his Army cut to Pieces. Upon this lucky Turn of the Queen's Affairs, she forthwith began her March Southward: But, on her Arrival at Barnard's Heath near St. Alban's, she was met by the Earl of Warwick's Army from London. A terrible Battle ensued; which, by the Treachery of Lovelace, in keeping back the principal Part of Warwick's Army, went in Favour of the Queen; who not only became a second Time victorious thereby, but also recovered the King from his State of Captivity.

Whilst the Queen lay at St. Alban's, a great Scarcity of Provisions happened in her Army; for the remedying of which, she, in the King's Name, commanded the Mayor of London to send her a sufficient Quantity of Lent Provisions (that great Fast being just begun) for the Sustainance of the Soldiery. The Mayor, being a great Favourer of the Queen, readily complied with her Order; and, having loaded a great Number of Carts with all Sorts of Provisions proper at that Season, ordered them to proceed to St. Alban's. But the Citizens had a strict Eye over the Mayor, and seized the afore said Carts and Provisions at Cripplegate, declaring it was not reasonable to feed those that intended to rob the City, (as they had done that of St. Alban's) and possess themselves of all they were Masters of.

The Mayor, under a very great Concern at this Proceeding, earnestly exhorted the Populace to let them pass; acquainting them with the Danger they exposed themselves and Fellow-Citizens to, by denying Relief to an Army flushed with Victory. However, the Citizens being assured by the Favourers of the Earl of March, that he was marching with a potent Army to their Assistance, they rejected every Thing said by the Mayor, and resolved, let the Consequence be what it would, to defend the City against the Queen and all her Adherents; firmly believing, that she, upon her Admission into the City, intended to spoil the same: Which, in some Measure, they had Reason to believe, by the great Depredations committed by her Cavalry in the Suburbs; who, not being satisfied with the Pillage of those Parts, endeavoured in a forcible Manner to enter the City at Cripplegate; but were repulsed by the Citizens with great Loss.

The Mayor, being justly apprehensive of the Queen's highest Resentment, sent a Deputation of Aldermen, accompanied by the Recorder, to Barnet, to intercede with the King's Council in Behalf of the City, and to endeavour to mitigate the Queen's Displeasure, justly conceived against the Citizens; and to assure her Majesty, that he would admit her into the City, as soon as the Commonalty were brought to a little better Temper: Withal making Request, that she would dismiss the Northern Men, who were suspected of an Intention to rob the City.

The Queen, like a great Politician, wisely concealed her Resentment of this great Indignity, and seemingly satisfied herself with sending only four hundred Men to prepare for her Entry into the City; concluding that, if she could become Mistress of this important Place, she would, without any great Difficulty, soon restore all Matters to their pristine State. During this Transaction, the Queen had the Unhappiness to receive Advice of the entire Discomfiture of her Army, under the Conduct of the Earls of Pembroke and Ormond, by the Earl of March. Upon the Receipt of this disagreeable News, she judged it not safe to wait the Earl's Approach, therefore immediately immediately decamped, and marched toward the North. The Earl, tho' advised of this precipitate Retreat, did not judge it convenient to pursue; but, marching directly to London, was received by the Citizens on Thursday, in the first Week of Lent, with a Joy inexpressible; where, in a Convention of the Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and Citizens, held at Baynard's-Castle, (which had been rebuilt by Humfrey, Duke of Gloucester, and by his Death and Attainder devolved to the Crown) King Henry was deposed, as incapable of governing; and the Earl of March, the eldest Son of the Duke of York, unanimously chosen King in his Stead, under the Name of Edward the Fourth; and, on the 5th Day of March, he was proclaimed at the usual Places in the City.

EDWARD IV. the same Day he was proclaimed, dined at the Palace at Paul's, (i. e. Baynard's-Castle, near St. Paul's) in the City, and continued there till his Army was ready to march in Pursuit of the late King: During which Stay in the City, he caused Walter Walker, an eminent Grocer in Cheapside, to be apprehended and tried for a few harmless Words innocently spoken by him, viz. That he would make his Son Heir to the Crown, inoffensively meaning his own House, which had the Crown for its Sign; for which imaginary Crime he was beheaded in Smithfield, on the eighth Day of this Reign.

On the same Day Edward marched his Army through Bishopsgate toward the North, in Quest of King Henry, who, by this Time, had assembled a mighty Army of sixty thousand Men; and, both Armies meeting at Tewkesbury, or Skerrybourn, in Yorkshire, after a terrible and desperate Engagement, which continued fourteen Hours, with a prodigious Slaughter, Victory declared in Favour of Edward. After Edward had taken Care for preserving the Peace in the North, he began his March back Southward; and in the Beginning of June he arrived at his Manor of Shene, now Richmond, in Surrey, till all Things were got ready for his Coronation. On the 27th of June his Majesty set out from thence for London, and was on the Way met at Lambeth by the Mayor and Aldermen in their Formalities, dressed in Scarlet, attended by four hundred Citizens on Horseback, all in Green, richly accoutred, by whom he was conducted to the Tower of London; from whence, two Days after, he rode thro' the City to Westminster, and was crowned with very great Solemnity at St. Peter's; on which Occasion the publick Rejoicings in the City were exceedingly great.

In the Month of July following one John Dary, Servant of the King's Household, had one of his Hands cut off at the Standard in Cheapside, for striking a Man within the Palace of Westminster.

Fabian.
ib. p. 427.

Edward, in the second Year of his Reign, to shew his Gratitude to the Citizens of London, for the many great and signal Services done to him, granted them the following Charter:

"Edward, by the Grace of God, King of England and France, and Lord of Ireland; to all Archbishops, &c. greeting.

King Edward IV's first Charter.

"Altho' as we understand such Things all together, as ought to be holden and determined by Conservators of the Peace, and Justices assigned for hearing and determining divers Felonies, Trespases, and Misdemeanors in all the Counties of our Realm of England by the King's Authority, by Virtue of the Ordinances and Statutes of our Realm aforesaid, made for the Good of the Peace, and Rule of our People, have always, Time out of Mind, been used and well affirmed, and yet be in our City of London: Nevertheless, to the End that from henceforth one good, certain, and undoubted Manner may be continually had in our said City, for the Conservation of the Peace, and governing our People of the same, and that the same may always be and remain a City of Peace and Quietness; we will, of our mere Motion, and, by Tenor of these Presents, do grant, for us, and as much as in us is, to the Mayor and Commonalty of the City aforesaid, and to the Citizens of the same, and to their Successors for ever, that they may have and hold all and singular their Liberties and free Customs, as whole and sound as ever they had and held them in all Time of our Progenitors.

Confirmation of former Liberties and free Customs.

"And

The Mayor, Recorder, and Aldermen pass the Chair, made perpetual Justices.

"And further we grant, for us and our Heirs aforefaid, to the Mayor and Commonalty and Citizens, and to their Succellors, the Liberties and Authorities, Acquittals and Franchifes under-written; that is to say, that from henceforth the Mayor and Recorder of the faid City who now be, and their Succellors, and the Mayors and Recorders which for the Time fhall be, as well thofe Aldermen which before this Time have been Mayors of the fame City, as other Aldermen who fhall hereafter fustain the Charge of Mayoralty, and fhall be thereof difmiffed, as long as they fhall there remain Aldermen for ever, fhall be Confervators of the prefent Peace of our City, and the Peace of our Succellors of the faid City, and Liberties thereof, as well by Land as by Water; and to keep or caufe to be kept all Ordinances and Statutes, made and to be made for the Good of our Peace, and for the Quietnefs, Rule, and Government of our People in all their Articles, as well within the City aforefaid as the Liberty and Suburbs of the fame, as well by Land as by Water, according to all the Force, Form, and Effect of the fame, and to chaftize and punifh whom they fhall find offending, contrary to the Form and Effect of the faid Ordinances and Statutes, as according to the Form of the Ordinances and Statutes aforefaid fhall be done.

And they, or any four of them, to be Juftices of Oyer and Terminer for ever, to enquire, hear, and determine of all Felonies, Treafpaffes, &c.

"We will alfo, and grant to the faid Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens, and their Succellors, that the now Mayor and his Succellors aforefaid, and the Recorder of the faid City, which for the Time fhall be, and fuch Aldermen as aforefaid, or four of the fame, Mayor, Recorder, and Aldermen, of whom we will, that fuch Mayor for the Time being and his Succellors, to be one, be Juftices, and have fo affigned them Juftices for us and our Succellors for ever; to enquire, hear, and determine, as often and at fuch Times as to them fhall feem meet, of all Manner of Felonies, Treafpaffes, Foreftalling and Reagratings, Extortions, and other Mifdemaneors within the faid City, or the Liberties or Suburbs thereof, as well by Land as by Water, by whomsoever, or after what Manner foever, done or committed, and which from henceforth fhall happen to be done; and alfo to hear, and determine, and execute all and fingular other Things, which fhall pertain to our Juftices of the Peace within our Realm of England; fo always that the faid Mayor and Citizens, and their Succellors, may have and hold all and fingular their antient Liberties and Customs, whole, free, and found, the Premifes in any Thing notwithstanding, given to our Sheriffs of the City aforefaid for the Time being, and to their Succellors, and to all whatfoever, Citizens of the faid City, which now be, and which hereafter for the Time fhall be, by Tenor of thefe Prefents, freightly in Commandment, that they be attendant, counfelling, anfwering, and aiding the faid Keepers of the Peace aforefaid, the now Mayor, Recorder, and their Succellors, and to fuch Aldermen as aforefaid, in all Things they do, or may pertain to the Office of Confervator of the Peace,

"and of fuch Juftices within the faid City and Liberties thereof, according to the Form aforefaid, as often and at fuch Times as fhall be by them or any of them on our Behalf duly required: Saving always to the Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the fame City, and to their Succellors, their Customs, Liberties, and Franchifes, which we will and freightly command inviolably be obferved in all Things, as they and their Predeceffors, before the making of thefe Prefents, have obferved the fame.

"And becaufe we underftand, that by the moft antient Custom of the faid City, it is there had, and in the Circuits of the Juftices of our Progenitors, fome times Kings of England, it is allowed to the faid Citizens, that the Mayor and Aldermen of the faid City, for the Time being, ought to record all their antient Customs by Word of Mouth, as often and at fuch Time as any Thing fhall be moved in Aét or Queftion before any Judges or Juftices touching their Customs aforefaid, as in their Claims in the laft Circuit of Juftices holden at our Tower of London, it is more fully contained: We, confidering the fame Thing, being willing rather to enlarge than diminifh the Customs of the faid City, of our fpecial Grace have granted, for us and our Heirs and Succellors, unto the faid Mayor and Commonalty and Citizens, and their Succellors, that whensoever any Ifsue fhall be taken in any Plea of or upon the Customs of the City of London between any Parties in Pleading, (yea, tho' themfelves be Parties) or if any Thing in Plea, Aét, and Queftion, touching the faid Customs, be moved or happen before us, or our Heirs, to be holden, the Juftices of the Common Bench, the Treafurer and Barons of our Exchequer, or of our Heirs, or before the Barons of fuch-like Exchequer, or any other the Juftices of us, or of our Heirs, which fhall exact or require Inquifition, Recognizance, Certificate, or Trial; the fame Mayor and Aldermen of the faid City for the Time being, and their Succellors, fhall record, teftify and declare, whether fuch be a Custom, or not, by the Recorder of the fame City for the Time being, by Word of Mouth; and that there may be speedy Procefs by that Record, Certificate, and Declaration, fuch Custom fo alledged fhall be allowed for a Custom, or accounted not for a Custom, without any Jury therefore to be taken, or further Procefs thereupon to be made.

Diffutes concerning City Customs to be determined in Court, upon hearing the Recorder's Report thereof.

"And furthermore, we have granted to them, the Mayor and Commonalty and Citizens, that though they and their Succellors, or the faid Mayor and Aldermen, and their Predeceffors in Times past, or their Succellors hereafter, have, for fome Caufe, perchance fully not ufed, or abufed any of the Liberties, Acquittals, Grants, Ordinances, Articles, or free Customs, or other Thing contained in thefe our Writings, or in other our Writings, or of our Progenitors fome times Kings of England, to the fame Mayor and Commonalty granted, notwithstanding we will not, that the fame Mayor and Commonalty, Aldermen and Citizens, or their Succellors, fhall therefore incur

No Forfeiture to be taken for any Crime or Default in the Mayor, &c.

" the

"the Forfeiture of any of the Premises; but that they and their Successors may, from henceforth, fully enjoy and use all and singular the Liberties, Grants, Acquittals, Ordinances, Articles, free Customs, and other Things whatsoever, so not used or abused, in the Charters aforesaid contained, and every of them, without Impachment or Let of us or our Heirs, Justices, Escheators, Sheriffs, or other our Bailiffs and Ministers, or of any other whatsoever Ally, Statutes or Ordinances made, or Judgments given, or any other Charters, or any the Charters of our Progenitors whatsoever in Times past granted to the contrary notwithstanding.

All Inhabitants of the City liable to be assessed in all Taxes.

"And we, being willing further to do the same Mayor and Commonalty a greater Pleasure, and also for the Bettering and common Profit of our said City, will and grant to the same Mayor and Commonalty, and their Successors, that from henceforth all and singular Merchants, as well Denizens as Aliens, abiding within the said City, and the Liberties and Suburbs of the same, and exercising Merchandizing or Occupations there by any Means, by themselves or others, tho' they be not of the Liberty of the same City, shall be Partakers, shall be taxed and contribute according to their Faculties in Subsidies, Tallages, Grants, and other Contributions whatsoever by any Means to be assessed for the Need of us, or of our Heirs, or of the said City, for the Maintenance of the State, and Profit of the same, with the Citizens of the same City: Yet notwithstanding that this our present Grant be not in Prejudice or Derogation of any Grants by us, or any of our Progenitors, made or granted to those Merchants of Almain, which have an House in the City of London, which is commonly called the Guildhall of the Almains, or their Successors.

But not in Prejudice to the Grants to the Merchants of Almain.

Aldermen not to be put upon Assizes, Attaints, or Juries, nor to be appointed Collectors or Taxers, out of the City.

"And further, because it is well known and manifest, that those of the said City which are called, elected, and taken to the Degree of Aldermen, proper for the Conditions and Merits requiring the same, have sustained and supported great Charges, Cost, and Pains for the Time they make their Abode and Residence in the same City, being vigilant for the common Good, Rule, and Government of the same, and for that Cause oftentimes do leave their Possessions and Places in the Counties there, that therefore they, and every of them may, without all Fear of Unquietness or Molestation, peaceably abide and tarry in such their Houses, Places, and Possessions, when they shall return thither for Comfort and Recreation's Sake.

"We have, of our special Grace, granted to the said Mayor and Commonalty, and to their Successors aforesaid, that all and every of these, which be Aldermen of the said City, and their Successors, which for the Time shall be Aldermen there, for the Term of their Lives, shall have this Liberty; that is to say, that as long as they shall continue Aldermen there, and shall bear the Charge of Aldermen proper; and also those which before had been Aldermen, and have also with their great Costs and Expences borne the Office of Mayoralty, shall not be put in any Assizes, Juries, or Attaints, Recognizances, or Inquisitions, out of the said City; and that they, nor any of them, shall be Trier or Triers of the same, altho' they touch us, or our Heirs or Successors, or other whomsoever.

"And that, without that City, neither they, nor any of them, be made Collectors or Collector, Assessor, Taxer, Overseer, or Controller of the Tenths, Fifteenths, Taxes, Tallages, Subsidies, or other Charges or Impositions whatsoever, to us, our Heirs or Successors hereafter to be granted or given; and if they or any of them be elected to any of the Offices or Charges aforesaid, and that the same Mayor or Aldermen do deny, refuse, or not do the Offices or Charges aforesaid, then they or any of them shall not, by any Means, incur any Contempt, Loss, Pain, Fine, Imprisonment, or Forfeiture, by Occasion of their so refusing or not doing, nor shall, for that Cause, forfeit any Issues by any Means.

"And further, as we understand, Lord Edward, some time King of England, the Third after the Conquest, our Progenitor, with the Assent of the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and Commonalty of the Realm of England assembled in Parliament holden at Westminster, in the first Year of his Reign, at the Petition of the then Citizens of the said City, by his Letters Patents granted for him and his Heirs to the same Citizens the Town of Southwark, with the Appurtenances, to have and hold to them and their Successors, Citizens of the same City, of the same our Progenitors and their Heirs forever, paying unto him by the Year, at the Exchequer of him and his Heirs, at the Terms accustomed, the Farm therefore due and accustomed, as in the said Letters Patents more fully is contained: And now the Mayor and Commonalty of the same City, and their Predecessors, have and hold certain Liberties and Franchises in the Town aforesaid, by Virtue of those Letters Patents, and do use the same as their Predecessors have had and held them, and have used and enjoyed them; and they now fear that divers Doubts, Opinions, Varieties, and Ambiguities, Controversies, and Dissensions, may light, and be likely to spring, grow, be imagined, holden and had in Time to come, in and about the Use and Exercise of such Liberties and Franchises, for Want of more clear and full Declaration and Expressing of the same, for that divers diversly interpret, judge, and understand: We therefore, to the End to take away from henceforth, and utterly to abolish all and all Manner of Causes, Occasions, and Matters, whereupon such Opinions, Ambiguities, Varieties, Controversies, and Dissensions may spring, be holden and moved in this Behalf, have, of our special Grace, and from our mere Motion, granted to the said Mayor and Commonalty of the said City which now be, and their Successors, Mayor and Commonalty and Citizens of that City, which for the Time

"selling Wine, Bread, Beer, Ale, and other Vic-
"tuals, and of all other inhabiting and exercising
"any Arts whatsoever; and with all Manner of "Forfeitures, Fines, and Amerciaments to be for"feited, and all other which there do, and in "any Time to come may there pertain to us,
"our Heirs or Successors: And that they shall "have in the said Town the Execution of all "Manner of Writs of ours, or of our Heirs and "Successors, and of all other Writs, Command"ments, Precepts, Extracts, and Warrants, with
"the Return of the same by such their Ministers

"so always that the Clerk of the Market of our "House, or of the House of our Heirs, or the "Sheriff or Escheator of the County of Surrey,
"which now is, or hereafter shall be, do not, by "any Means, intermeddle, enter, or do any Exe"cution.

"We have also granted to the same Mayor
"and Commonalty and Citizens, and their Suc"cessors for ever, that they shall and may have

By this Charter all the antient Rights and Liberties of the Citizens are not only confirmed, but likewise the following additional Privileges granted: 1. The Mayor, Recorder, and Aldermen past the Chair, are appointed perpetual Justices of the Peace of the City, during their continuing Aldermen of the same. 2. The Mayor, Recorder, and Aldermen past the Chair, are constituted Justices of Oyer and Terminer, for the trying of all Malefactors within their own Jurisdiction. 3. For the better ascertaining the Customs of the City, when a Plea is brought in any of the superior Courts touching the said Customs, the Mayor and Aldermen are hereby impowered, by the Mouth of their Recorder, to declare whether the Point in Controversy be a Custom of London, or not; and if, upon Enquiry, it be found to be such, then the same to be recorded, and remain an established Custom to all Futurity. 4. The Mayor and Aldermen are for ever exempt from serving in all foreign Assizes, Juries, or Attaints, and also from the Offices of Assessor, Collector of Taxes, or Overseer or Comptroller of all publick Duties without the Jurisdiction of the City. 5. The Concession of the Borough of Southwark, with its Appurtenances, is confirmed; with the Right of Waifs, Strays, and Treasure Trove. The first purports, all Goods dropp'd by Thieves and fugitive Felons, when pursued, and Goods lost when an Owner cannot be found. The second implying all tame Beasts strayed into a foreign Lordship, which not being reclaimed by the Owner within a Year and Day, after their being legally cried in the neighbouring Market-Towns, they become the Property of the Lord of the Manor wherein they were found. And the third signifies all hidden Money, which by the Civil Law is given to the Finder, but by the Law of England 'tis annexed to the Crown; wherefore the King disposes of it by Grant at Pleasure. 6. The Citizens are intitled to the Goods and Chattels of Traitors, Felons, &c. with a Privilege of holding an annual Fair in the said Borough, together with a Court of Pye-powder, with the Rights and Customs thereunto belonging, all at the antient Fee-Farm Rent of ten Pounds per Annum.

A.D. 1463 Edward, still willing farther to endear himself to the Citizens of London, granted them the under-mentioned Charter:

King Edward IV's second Charter, granting Tronage, Weighing, and Measuring.

"Edward, by the Grace of God, King of England and France, and Lord of Ireland, to all to whom these present Letters shall come, greeting.

"Know ye, that for certain and notable Causes us specially moving, of our special Grace and certain Knowledge, we have granted to the Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of our said City of London, That the Tronage and Weighing, and Measuring, Laying-up, and Placing, and Housing of whatsoever Wools, by whomsoever, from whatsoever Parts, brought or to be brought to the City aforesaid, or which have beforetime been accustomed to be brought to the Staple at Westminster, shall from hence be, and be made in the Place called Leadenhall, within our City aforesaid, and in no other Place within three Miles of the said City, to have the Laying-up, Placing, and Housing aforesaid, together with all Fees, Profits, and Emoluments to the same Laying-up, Placing, and Housing, or any of them due, used, or accustomed to the aforesaid Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the same City, and their Successors, for ever, without any Account to be made, or any other Thing therefore to us to be paid, although express Mention be Weighing of Wool confined to Leadenhall.

"not in these Presents made of the clear yearly Value or Certainty of the Premises, or of any other Gifts or Grants by us or our Progenitors to the said Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens, and their Successors, by any Means made, or any other Statute, Act, Ordinance, or any other Thing whatsoever made to the contrary notwithstanding.

"In Witness whereof, we have caused these our Letters to be made Patents: Witness Ourself at Westminster, the twenty-seventh Day of August, in the third Year of our Reign."

In pursuance of this Charter, Thomas Cook, Mayor of London, the City Council, Geoffrey Fielding, Mayor of the Staple at Westminster, and the King's Council, were appointed to regulate the Prices to be paid for Warehouse-room and Tronage in Leadenhall.

On a Call of new Serjeants at Law, a great Entertainment was given by them at Ely-House in Holborn; to which were invited the Mayor, Aldermen, Sheriffs, and divers of the principal Citizens; who, upon their entering the Place of Entertainment, perceived that Baron Rutben, the Lord High-Treasurer, had assumed the most honourable Seat at Table, in Derogation of the Dignity of the Lord-Mayor, who at all Times, and on all Occasions, as the King's Representative, in Honour of his Principal and Sovereign, assumes the Pre-eminence or most honourable Place of all Subjects, of what Denomination soever, within the City and Liberties thereof. However, the imperious Treasurer, tho' in Detraction to his Master's Honour, keeping Possession of the Place, this undutiful and ungenerous Behaviour was by the Mayor and Citizens no otherwise resented than by their withdrawing from the Hall, and returning to the City, where they were by the Mayor entertained in a very elegant Manner; whilst the Lords of the Feast were left to bewail the rude and insolent Deportment of their Guest Rutben.

The Lord-Mayor insists upon his Right of Pre-eminence in the City.

On the 15th of May, 1465, and the Night before the Coronation of Queen Elizabeth, Relict of the late Sir John Gray, and Daughter of Lord Rivers, whom his Majesty had married on the first of this Month, Thomas Cook, then Lord-Mayor of London, was, amongst many others, in the Tower installed a Knight of the Bath.

Lord-Mayor created Knight of the Bath.

Edward this Year, 1465, repaired the Fortifications of the Tower, and performed other Things relating thereto, as already noted on Page 148.

A very ridiculous Fashion now prevailed in London, of wearing Shoes with Toes turned up of a monstrous Length: For preventing the Use of which, Proclamation was made in the City, strictly enjoining, that, for the future, the Beaks or Toes of Shoes and Boots should not exceed two Inches in Length, upon Pain of Excommunication, (a Punishment in Terrorem then much in Fashion) and Forfeiture of twenty Shillings for each Offence, to be divided between the King, Chamber of London, and Company of Cordwainers. Hence 'tis observable, that a greater Regard was then had to the Make of Mens Shoes, than to the Salvation of their Souls; whom they

People excommunicated for wearing long-toed Shoes.

on

on this Occasion delivered over to Satan to be buffeted, on Account of the ridiculous Dimensions of the Toes of their Shoes.

King Henry VI.
Prisoner in the Tower.

The deposed King Henry VI. was taken in a Wood in the North by one Cantlowe, after the Defeat of an Army lately raised in Scotland, and brought this Year to the Tower of London, and kept a Prisoner there a long Time.

Sir Tho.
Cook's unjust Prosecution.

This Year Sir Thomas Cook, late Lord-Mayor, and others, were impeached of High Treason by one Hawkins, a Servant to Lord Wenlock; which said Sir Thomas was admitted to Bail: But, after the Departure of his Friend Margaret, the King's Sister, to Flanders, where she was married to Charles Duke of Burgundy, or Burgundy, he was arrested, committed to the Tower, his Goods seized, and his Wife committed to the Care of the present Mayor. Yet, though Sir Thomas, upon his Trial at Guildhall, was acquitted of the Treason, his Riches, which the Courtiers chiefly aimed at, influenced the Prosecutors and his Judges to keep him a close Prisoner, till he purchased his Liberty at the exorbitant Price of eight thousand Pounds to the King, eight hundred Marks to the Queen, and the Loss of much Treasure and Goods by the Servants of his Enemies, who were in Possession of all his Estates.

Alderman
Derbyan fined.

John Derbyan, Alderman, for opprobrious Language given to the Mayor, and his Obstinacy in refusing to remove, or pay for removing, the noisome Carcass of a Dog from before his Door, was, by the Court of Aldermen, fined in the Sum of fifty Pounds, and was obliged to pay it.

Princess Margaret married.

The Earl of Roche, natural Son to the Duke of Burgundy, being sent his Father's Plenipotentiary to Edward, to treat of a Marriage between the Earl of Charolois, the Duke's eldest Son, and the Princess Margaret, Sister to the King, soon accomplished his Embassy, by espousing the Princess in Behalf of his Brother.

A Combat
between the Earl of Roche and the Lord Scales.

Roche, who was better known by the Appellation of the Bastard of Burgundy, being greatly celebrated for his Acts of Chivalry, challenged the Lord Scales, Brother to the Queen, to just with him; which Scales readily accepting, the King commanded Lifts to be prepared in Smithfield (wherein to perform the Combat) of the Length of three hundred and seventy Feet, and Breadth of two hundred and sixty, with magnificent Galleries for the Reception of the illustrious Spectators; where assembled the King, the Nobility, and principal Gentry of both Sexes. The first Day they justed with Spears, without a visible Advantage on either Side. The second Day they tourney'd on Horseback; when the Lord Scales, having a long Spike fixed on his Chaffron, (Pommel of his Saddle) this, as they enclosed, ran into the Nostrils of the Bastard's Horse; by the Anguish whereof he reared himself with such Violence, that he tumbled backwards, whereby his Rider was unfortunately unhorsed, which occasioned him to cry out, that he could not hold by the Couls; and that, tho' his Horse had failed him, he would not fail to meet his Adversary the next Day; which being accordingly performed, they fought on Foot with Pole-axes, when Scales soon penetrating the Bastard's Helmet, the King threw down his Warder; whereupon they were immediately parted by the Marshal. But, the Bastard insinuating upon fighting out that Weapon, a Council was held to deliberate thereon; the Result whereof was, that if he persisted in renewing the Combat, he must, according to the Law of Arms, be delivered to his Adversary, in the same Condition he was in at his Horse's Misfortune. But, rather than submit to those Terms, he waved his Pretension.

NUMB. XVIII.

In the Year 1468, divers of the London Jury were tried and convicted before the Lord-Mayor of Perjury; for having taken Bribes to favour a certain Person, whose Cause was to be tried before them: For which Crime they were sentenced to ride from Newgate to Cornhill, with Paper Mitres upon their Heads; where having been exposed the usual Time, they returned in the same Manner.

On the 18th of June following, the Princess Margaret, espoused by Proxy, as above, to Charles Duke of Burgundy, set out on her Journey thither from the Wardrobe in London. At her entering into Cheapside, she was met by the Mayor and Aldermen of the City, who, in the Name of the Citizens, presented her with two rich Basons, containing one hundred Pounds in Gold.

In the same Year Sir William Taylor, the Mayor, gave divers Tenements, the Rents whereof to be appropriated towards the discharging of Cordwainer-Street Ward from all Fifteenths.

The Year 1469 was again the Beginning of more Troubles, stirred up by the Earl of Warwick, disgusted with the King's Marriage; who, assuming a Power to make and depose Kings at his Pleasure, deserts the Interest of Edward, and resolves to attempt to force him to resign the Crown of England to his Brother the Duke of Clarence, who had married the Earl's Daughter. He began his Rebellion by raising an Insurrection under one Robbin Ryddysdal in Lincolnshire, who was bold enough to march to the Capital; and, surprizing the Lord Rivers and his Son Sir John, in the Palace called the Mews, near Charing-Cross, carried them away, and beheaded them at Northampton. However, these Rebels soon after dispersed, upon the King's granting them a general Pardon; which obliged the Earl of Warwick to act with more Vigour, and more openly; who engaged such a powerful Confederacy with the Nobility, and raised so potent an Army, that the King thought it most prudent to try to obviate the bad Consequences of his Discontent by way of Negotiation: During which, his Majesty, trusting too much to the Honour of his Enemies, suffered himself to be surprized by the Earl in the Night; who carried him off, and committed him to Middleham Castle, under the Custody of the Archbishop of York. Soon after Edward found Means to escape, and repaired with his Friends to York, and thence to Lancaster; where joining the Lord Hastings, his Chamberlain, who had raised some Troops for his Service, he marched directly for London, (his sure Refuge;) where, being arrived with a considerable Army, he was by his sincere and hearty Friends, the Citizens, received in a triumphant Manner.

The Earl of Warwick instantly began to re-assemble his Army. However, the pacifick Lords propos'd renewing the Negotiation, which was set on Foot before the King's Captivity. But, the Conference being spent in mutual Invektives and bitter Reproaches, both Parties prepared anew for War; which ended with the Battle of Stamford, in favour of the King. This great Success of Edward's occasioned both Clarence and Warwick to fly into France: From whence they returned with a powerful Aid; which, being joined by a numerous Army in England, soon made Edward sensible of his Error, in not making a timely Provision against all Events; therefore, instead of being able to make Head against the Earl, he, with many of his Adherents, were forced to fly the Kingdom, and in a few Days landed in Holland.

Elizabeth, his Consort, went privately by Night from the Tower of London by Water, and took Sanctuary at Westminster. Whereupon the Custody of the said Tower was immediately surrendered to Sir Richard Lee, the Mayor of this City, and his Brethren the Aldermen; who instantly entering the same, on the 12th Day of October, removed King Henry from the Place of his Confinement to the Royal Apartments there.

During these public Distractions, Sir Geoffrey Gates, an abandoned Miscreant, assembled, from the Houses of ill Repute and Prisons in London, a great Number of the most wicked Profligates; by whose Assistance he spoiled the Flemings and other foreign Merchants Houses in Blanch Appleton (now Mark-Lane in Fenchurch-Street), and from thence running into the County of Kent, they joined a great Body of Thieves and Robbers, as desperate as themselves, and, without declaring in Favour either of Henry or Edward, they began their Rout to London, with a Design to enrich themselves with the Spoil of the City: But, being beat off by the Citizens, they pillaged Southwark, and, crossing the River Thames, fell upon Limehouse, Ratcliff, and St. Catherine's; where they robbed and burnt Houses, ravished the Women, and murdered all that made the least Resistance. But the Duke of Clarence and the Earl of Warwick entering London in the mean Time, the Earl of Warwick marched out against the before-named numerous Body of Robbers, whom he easily dispersed; and, taking many of the Ringleaders, hanged them forthwith; and, returning to the City, went on the sixteenth of October, accompanied by the Duke of Clarence, and divers of the Nobility, and a vast Concourse of People, to the Tower of London, and released King Henry, after a Confinement of above six Years, and lodged him in the Bishop's Palace.

Worcester.

Henry being restored to the Crown, the Earl of Worcester was immediately arrested, and, after a full Conviction before his Peers at Whitehall, Westminster, was beheaded on the 18th Day of the same Month of October. As this noble Earl, who, for his Cruelties, had the Name of the Butcher of England, was led by the Sheriffs from the Place of Judgment to his Execution, the People pressed so strongly upon him, that he was obliged to be laid in the Fleet for that Night, to prevent their pulling him to Pieces.

The Parliament, which was summoned by those now in Power to meet at Westminster on the 26th of November, in 1471, was prorogued to Paul's, where it continued till Christmas; and where Sir Thomas Cook, before mentioned, was admitted to his Seat, and restored to his Estates. King Edward was declared an Usurper, and, with his Brother the Duke of Gloucester, attainted by the said Parliament. Which violent Proceedings were so much dreaded by the Lord-Mayor, John Stockton, Esq; that, to keep himself clear of joining therein, he feigned himself sick, and Sir Thomas Cook was admitted his Locum Tenens, or Deputy, for a considerable Time.

Policy of the Lord-
Mayor.

Edward, on his Part, prevailed upon the Duke of Burgundy, his Brother-in-Law, to supply him with some Ships and a small Body of Troops; wherewith he sailed from Vere in Holland, and landed soon after at Ravensthorpe in Yorkshire, with his petty Army of two thousand Auxiliaries; and, advancing Southward, was joined by the Army of the Duke of Clarence, (who had just abandoned the Earl of Warwick) who together continued their March to London. Being arrived at St. Albans, Edward wrote to his Friends in the City, to use their utmost Efforts with the Citizens to receive him. Warwick, on the other Hand, sent Letters to his Brother the Archbishop of York, and the Duke of Somerset, both then in London, to use their best Endeavours with the Citizens not to admit Edward into the City, and, in Case of an Attack, to defend themselves against him; faithfully promising to come to their Assistance, with a powerful Army, in two or three Days at farthest. The Archbishop, for the more effectually prevailing upon the Citizens not to admit Edward, caused King Henry to ride thro' the City to shew himself, imagining that his Presence would be a Means to confirm them in their Loyalty: But the Citizens on that same Day, being Shrove-Tuesday, readily opened their Gates, and received Edward. Therefore that Prelate, judging it convenient to provide for his own Security, dispatched a Messenger privately to treat with Edward; who, upon his Submission, the Surrender of the Tower of London, and of the unfortunate King Henry, (who was still reserved to be the Sport of Fortune) received him into Favour again; and Sir Thomas Cook endeavoured to escape to France, but was taken, and delivered to Edward; who, taking up his Residence in the same Palace with King Henry, put him again under Arrest, and continued there till Easter-Even, the 13th Day of April, to the general Satisfaction and Joy of the Citizens; whom he not only thanked for their sincere Attachment to him, but likewise, as a Demonstration of his hearty Acknowledgments, freely pardoned all those who had been his most strenuous Opposers; notwithstanding the great Sums advanced by them for the Service of Henry, and his own Destruction.

Fab.
Chron.
P. 7.

Edward, having settled every Thing to the entire Satisfaction of the Citizens, and taken proper Measures for the Security of the City, began his March to fight Warwick, who was advancing toward London to give him Battle. The Armies meeting early on Easter-Day near Barnet, there ensued a dreadful and desperate Battle, which continued

continued 'till Noon; when Warwick's Army was discomfited, and himself killed; which effectually decided the Fate of the contending Parties, and Edward was thereby restored to his Crown and Dignity. He posted to London in Person, to carry the first News of this great and decisive Victory to his loving Citizens himself, by whom he was received with a Joy inexpressible; being freed from their late Anxieties, and the Danger they would inevitably have been exposed to, if Warwick had obtained the Victory. After Edward had returned Thanks in St. Paul's Church for his late Success, he re-committed, for Life, the most unfortunate King Henry to his old Prison in the Tower of London, who was obliged to ride through the City in a long blue Velvet Gown. But this was not the End of the City's Troubles: For, while Edward was obliged to march after, and give Battle to, another Army commanded by King Henry's Queen and Son, &c. which he routed; and took Prisoners the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Somerſet, and the Prior of St. John's; Thomas Nevil, Natural Son to the Lord Falconbridge, therefore generally called The Bastard Falconbridge, a Person as debauched in his Morals as wicked in his Practices, who had been a Pyrate for several Years, thought it was then a proper Time to enrich himself at once; and, in order thereto, landed a considerable Number of Seamen in Kent; who being joined by a Body of Freebooters from all Parts, under the specious Pretence of restoring the captive King Henry (by which Stratagem, the Partisans of the House of Lancaster were artfully cajoled to join the Bastard) his Army soon increased to seventeen thousand Men, with whom he easily possessed himself of Southwark; and, being denied Admittance into the City, caused three thousand of his Men to cross the Thames at St. Catharine's, in order at once to attack Aldgate and Bishopsgate; whilst he, with the other Part of his Army, were employed in storming London-Bridge. Those three Attacks were carried on by that infamous Crew of Robbers with the utmost Desperation; who, storming the Bulwark at Aldgate, repulsed the Citizens, and entered the Gate with them: But, the Portcullice being let down, those that had entered were soon cut to Pieces. Whereupon Robert Bassett, an Alderman, and the commanding Officer there, being reinforced by a great Number of Citizens, sallied out, and repulsed the Enemy with great Loss. At which Time the Earl of Rivers sallied out at the Postern on Towerhill, with five hundred Men of the Tower Garrison, and flanked the Rebels; who, finding themselves violently attacked on both Sides, fled with the utmost Precipitation as far as Blackwall and Stratford; but, being closely pursued, they had abundance killed and taken Prisoners. Those Thieves were not only repulsed at Aldgate, but likewise at the Bridge, by that gallant Citizen Ralph Jocelin, late Mayor of the City, who, after having bravely defended his Post against the terrible Fire and furious Assaults of the Enemy, compelled them to retreat; and, falling upon their Rear, pursued them with great Slaughter as far as Redriff.

The King being returned to the City from his late Expedition against Queen Margaret, he was

by the Citizens received with the greatest Demonstrations of Joy; and he knighted the twelve following Aldermen for their gallant Behaviour in defending the City against the Bastard, viz. John Stockton, the Mayor, Ralph Verney, John Young, William Taylor, Richard Lee, Matthew Philips, George Ireland, William Stoker, William Hampton, Thomas Stallbrooke, John Crosby and Bartholomew James, Aldermen, and Thomas Urswick, Recorder. But what chiefly confirmed the peaceable Possession of the Throne to Edward, was the Death of Henry his Competitor; who departed this Life, some write, naturally; others that he was murdered with a Dagger by the Hands of the Duke of Gloucester, who succeeded to the Crown after Edward IV. The Royal Corpse was exposed to publick View in St. Paul's, on Ascension Day.

Upon the Monday following, King Edward marched in pursuit of the Bastard above-mentioned, who fled before the Royal Army, as it advanced to Canterbury; and his Rebel Accomplices deserting of him, his Majesty seized upon many of them both in Kent and Essex, who, after a fair Trial, were executed, and their Heads set on London-Bridge: Where also the Head of their Leader, the Bastard, at length bore them Company, having been discovered and taken near Southampton about three Months after.

There being at this Time only one Pair of Stocks in London (and those at the Market from which it received its Name) for the punishing of Vagrants, Sir William Hampton, the Mayor, caused Stocks to be erected in every Ward, for the more effectual Punishment of Strollers.

In 1473, it was ordained, that the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex should each have sixteen Serjeants, and every one his Yeoman; and also six Clerks, viz. a Secondary, Clerk of the Papers, and four others, besides the Under-Sheriff's Clerks.

Sir William Hampton, Knight of the Bath, Lord-Mayor of London, did his Endeavours this Year (1473) to clear the City and Liberties of disorderly Women; for which Purpose he gave the notorious Bawds and Whores corporal Punishment, and ordered them to be led through the chief Streets, and exposed in a most shameful Manner.

King Edward having entered into an Alliance with the Duke of Burgundy for the Recovery of his Rights in France, he called a Parliament to enable him to put the same in Execution, by carrying on a vigorous War against that Nation. But the Parliament two Years before having granted a Tenth of all the Revenues and Profits of the Kingdom, besides the Sum of fifty-one thousand one hundred and seventeen Pounds four Shillings and seven Pence; which, together with the great Depredations committed in the late Civil War, whereby the Country was almost entirely ruined; they found themselves not in a Condition to grant a new Subsidy at that Time, other than by making an Ordinance for the more effectual and speedy Raising of the above-mentioned Supply, which Rapin erroneously calls a Subsidy granted in this Session.

The King, for the above Reasons, not judging it proper to urge them to a Compliance with his Demands, contrived a new Method for supplying his his Necessities (hitherto unknown) under the specious Appellation of a Benevolence; to which End he caused Lifts secretly to be made of all the rich and most opulent of his Subjects, whom he prevailed upon, either by publick Intreaties or private Menaces, largely to contribute. Upon which Occasion he sent to the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen of London, whom he in a very pathetic Speech exhorted to set a good Example to others by their generously contributing. The Mayor, in obedience to his Majesty's Request, gave thirty Pounds, divers of the Aldermen twenty Marks, and the least ten Pounds each. Then he sent for the principal Commons of the City, to whom he addressed himself in the aforesaid Manner; which had so good an Effect, that the major Part gave him the Sum of four Pounds eleven Shillings and four Pence each: Which, according to Computation, amounted to half the Charge of a Soldier for one Year. By these great Contributions, together with those from the Country, Edward was enabled to raise an Army of thirty-one thousand Men, which he transported to Calais: But, by the ill Performance of the Duke of Burgundy, and perfidious Dealings of the Constable St. Paul, Edward found it necessary, without striking a Stroke, to clap up a Peace with Lewis, the French King, more to the Advantage of his Courtiers, than to his own Honour: Tho', on his Return with his Army to London, he was met at Blackheath by the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen in Scarlet Robes, attended by five hundred of the most eminent Citizens on Horseback, clothed in Murrey, and richly accoutered; by whom he was conducted thro' the City to Westminster in a very pompous Manner.

In the above-mentioned Sessions of Parliament, a great House in the Parish of Alballoes the Great in Thames-street, antiently known by the Appellation of Guyballa Threutonicorum (at present the Stilliard) was confirmed to the Antient Merchants and their Successors for ever, together with the other Tenements thereunto belonging, they paying annually for the same to the Mayor and Citizens of London seventy Pounds, and some petty Rents to others.

By another Act of Common-Council made at this Time, the Masters, Wardens and Liveries of the City Corporations were empowered to assist as Electors at all future Elections of Mayor and Sheriffs of London, &c. Since which Time, the said Magistrates have been chosen by the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, Common-Council-Men and Liverymen.

In the Year 1476, we find the Citizens very active both in regard to the Security and Well-governing of their City: For they not only agreed to purchase several valuable Privileges from the Crown at a great Price, as will appear by the following Charters; but the Mayor, Sir Ralph Joceline, by the Consent of the Bench and Common-Council, came to a Resolution to repair the City Walls with Brick, made of Earth, dug, tempered and burnt in Moorfields; and ordained, that in every Parish-Church, on every Sunday, every Parishioner should pay towards the Charge of the said Repairs six Pence; and, for an Example unto other Companies, prevailed with his own Company of Drapers to build as much of the said Wall as reached from the Church of Alballoes within the said Wall unto Bishopsgate; who were imitated in some measure by other Companies: And likewise Richard Rawson, one of the Sheriffs in 1477, gave by his Will large Legacies to the Prisons, Hospitals, and Lazars, to the Poor, Highways, and Water-Conduits, besides 340 l. to marry poor Maids, and Money to be applied by his Executors in building a large House, in the Yard of St. Mary Spital, for the Mayor, &c. to sit during the Time of Sermon. The Town-Ditch was this Year cast and cleaned throughout.

Edward in the fourteenth of his Reign granted to the Citizens the two following Charters, on certain Conditions therein mentioned:

"Edward, by the Grace of God, King of England and France, and Lord of Ireland, to all to whom these present Letters shall come, greeting.

"Know ye, that whereas the Sum of twelve thousand nine hundred and twenty-three Pounds nine Shillings and eight Pence is by us, amongst other Things, due to our beloved and faithful Subjects, the Mayor, Commonalty and Citizens of our City of London, as in the Receipt of our Exchequer more plainly appeareth, of which Sum the said Mayor and Commonalty are willing to remit and release unto us nineteen hundred and twenty-three Pounds nine Shillings and eight Pence, to the Intent we should vouchsafe to grant them Licence, that they and their Successors might purchase Lands, Rents and Services, and other Possessions whatsoever, to the Value of two hundred Marks by the Year, over all Charges and Reprizes, although they should be holden of us or of others by any manner of Service, of whatsoever Person or Persons willing to give, bequeath or assign the same to them; to have and to hold to the same Mayor and Commonalty, and their Successors aforesaid, for ever, in Form following:

"In Witness whereof we have caused these our Letters to be made Patents. Witness myself at Westminster, the twentieth Day of June, in the eighteenth Year of our Reign."

By the first of the above-recited Charters it appears, that the Citizens of London purchased (at the extravagant Rate of nineteen hundred and twenty-three Pounds nine Shillings and eight Pence) the Liberty of purchasing in Mormal, Lands, &c. to the Amount of two hundred Marks per Annum, clear of Reprizes.

It likewise by the second Charter does appear, that for the Sum of seven thousand Pounds the Citizens purchased of the King the Offices of Package, Portage, Garbling, Gauging, Wine-Drawer and Coroner, to be enjoyed by them and their Successors for ever.

In the same Year a very great Pestilence raged in London, which (begun about the End of September in the preceding Year, and lasted to the Beginning of November in this Year) swept away an incredible Number of People. During this Calamity, Sir Bartholomew James, the Mayor, being at his Devotion before St. Erkenwald's Shrine in St. Paul's Church, Robert Byfield, one of the Sheriffs, kneeled down hard by him, in like manner to perform his Devotion to the said Saint: But, whether the Mayor imagined himself thereby affected in his Devotion, or in his Honour, is not certain: However, he highly resented this Proceeding of the Sheriff, and with some Warmth asked him, How he could be guilty of such an Indignity towards him? The Sheriff, instead of acknowledging himself guilty of a Crime, treated the Mayor in a very opprobrious Manner, who complained thereof to the Court of Aldermen; which Court amerced him in the Sum of fifty Pounds for his rude Deportment, to be appropriated towards repairing the City Conduits. And in the following Year we read an extraordinary Sentence by the same Court of Lord-Mayor and Aldermen; who fined one Robert Deyns the Sum of twenty Pounds, to be paid unto the Chamber, for presuming to marry an Orphan in the City without their Licence.

This Year also gives a notable Example of a Punishment inflicted on four Robbers of Churches, who were hanged on Towerhill, and their Bodies burnt to Ashes, with the Gibbet, as they hung.

In the Year 1481, being invaded by the Scots, King Edward raised an Army of two-and-twenty thousand Men, for the Support of which he applied to the City of London for a Loan; where, in a Consultation of the Citizens, it was resolved to advance him the Sum of five thousand Marks: For the rating and levying of which, a Commissioner was chosen out of each Ward; who, together with two of the Inhabitants of each Parish, were appointed the Assessors.

A House fell in this Year from off London-Bridge, whereby five Persons were destroyed.

The Citizens of London, by their many great and faithful Services, had so endeared themselves to the King, that he appointed a great Hunting-Match in Waltham Forest, for the Entertainment of William Hareot, alias Haryat, a Draper, the Mayor, the Aldermen, and many of the chief Citizens; where, after the Chase was over, (wherein were killed a great Number of Deer, both Red and Fallow) they were elegantly entertained in a beautiful and stately Arbour, erected for that Purpose. And in the Month of August following his Majesty, in great regard to the said Mayor, who by his great Trade with foreign Countries encreased the Royal Customs very largely, and other Things that had given great Contentment, sent two Harts, six Bucks, and a Tun of Wine, for the Entertainment of the Lady Mayores, and the Wives of the Aldermen and principal Citizens; wherewith they sumptuously regaled themselves in Drapers Hall.

the greatest Commotion; and many of the Nobility taking Arms, were joined by a vast Number of Citizens, for their mutual Defence, 'till they knew what Gloucester intended by seizing the King's Person. However, the Lord Hastings, a Man in great Favour with the Citizens, being sent into the City to assure them that the King was not in the least Danger, and that the Earl of Rivers, Lord Grey, and the Knights that were apprehended with him, were arrested for certain Conspiracies formed against the Dukes of Gloucester and Buckingham, which would soon be made appear in a legal Way; and to represent to the Citizens, that their taking Arms in such a riotous and seditious Manner would prove of dangerous Consequence to themselves, if they did not speedily lay them down, and return to their several Habitations, and not take upon them to censure the Proceedings of their Superiors, (who intended nothing more than the Publick Good) lest they themselves should be deemed the only Enemies of the Nation, Violators of the Publick Tranquillity, and Obstructors of the King's Coronation, which the Duke and other Lords were coming to London to celebrate; this Speech had so good an Effect upon the Citizens, that they immediately dispersed and returned to their respective Habitations.

The King, on his Way to London, was on the fourth of May met at Hornsey-Park (now Highgate) by Edmund Shew, the Mayor, accompanied by the Aldermen, Sheriffs, and five hundred Citizens on Horseback, richly accoutered in purple Gowns; whence they conducted him to the City; where he was received by the Citizens with a Joy inexpressible, and lodged in the Episcopal Palace. In this solemn Cavalcade the Duke of Gloucester's Deportment was very remarkable; for, riding before the King, uncovered, he frequently called to the Citizens, with an audible Voice, to behold their Prince and Sovereign. This Behaviour of Gloucester's not only gained him the Affection of the Citizens, but likewise persuaded them, that the late Misrepresentations of his Conduct were purely the Effects of Malice: And, in order to confirm this good Opinion of him in the Minds of the Londoners, he not only did Homage to the King himself, but also invited all the Nobility to do the same; which Deportment put his Loyalty beyond Dispute both with the Nobility and Citizens; and gained their unanimous Consent to make him Protector of the Kingdom during the young King's Minority. He then engaged the Archbishop of Canterbury to prevail with the Queen, who, dreading the Consequences, had taken Sanctuary at Westminster, to deliver to his Care also the Infant Duke of York. Richard Duke of Gloucester lodged the King and his young Brother in the Tower of London, and took up his Residence in Crosby's Place, where now Crosby-Square is, in Bishopsgate-Street. Whose Person he had no sooner got Possession of, than he wickedly set about usurping the Crown, at the Expence of the Blood of his innocent Nephews, the King and his Brother. But, dreading the Influence and Honesty of Lord Hastings, one of the King's best Friends, and not finding any thing to accuse him of, so as to strike at his Life in a judicial Manner, he had him seized by a Parcel of Ruffians, upon their Outcry of Treason in the Tower: Who, by the Protector's Order, dragged the said Lord out of his Presence to the Platform near the Chapel within the Tower, and without Conviction or Trial, or giving his Lordship Time to prepare for Death, cut off his Head on the Butt-End of a large Piece of Timber, which lay there accidentally for the repairing of the said Tower. The Protector then, in order to obviate the bad Consequences which might be justly apprehended would follow the News of this Murder in the City, put on a rusty Suit of Armour, as did also the Duke of Buckingham, his Accomplice in this tragical Scene, and immediately sent for the Mayor and Aldermen of London to the Tower, where he gave them a specious Account of the justly deserved Sufferings of Hastings; to whom, at their Coming, Gloucester addressed himself in the following Words:

"That the Lord Hastings and several other Persons had conspired and contrived together suddenly to kill him and the Duke of Buckingham that Day in Council, for what Cause or for what Design he could not guess, and had not yet Time to search it out, because he had no certain Knowledge of the intended Treason before Ten o'Clock of the same Day; so that he had enough to do, to stand upon his own Guard, and provide for his own Defence; which though they had both done in an undecent Manner, by putting on such filthy Armour, yet, Necessity obliging them to it, they were forced to take what was next at Hand: That God had wonderfully protected them from the Danger, he hoped, now the Lord Hastings was dead, against whom though there might seem to be something of Cruelty used in so sudden an Execution, without any legal Trial and Hearing; yet there appearing to the King and the Lords of his Council many Reasons to believe, that if he had been kept in Prison, his Complices would have made a formidable Insurrection in the Country to rescue him, and his Guilt being very evident, they judged it best to inflict the deserved Punishment of his Crimes upon him immediately, that the Peace of the Nation might not be in Danger.

"This is the real Truth of the Business, and we have therefore called you hither to inform you of it, that you may, as you see Cause, satisfy the People of the Justice of the Lord Hastings's Sufferings; which tho' we are no ways obliged to do, yet, out of our Care to please them, we have condescended to it, and we require you thus to report it."

This Speech they seemingly approved of, by declaring their Readiness to obey his Commands, as if in Reality they had believed every Word he said to be Truth: However, they tacitly concluded, that what he had said to extenuate the Murder, by unjustly aspersing the Deceased, were detestable Falshoods. Gloucester, soon after perceiving that the above Stratagem had not the desired Effect, sent into the City an Herald at Arms, to make Proclamation in all publick Places of the same, to the following Effect:

"That the Lord Hastings, with divers other wicked Conspirators, had traiterously con-

"wisely foreseen, and as effectually prevented,
"was the only Means under God's Providence
"to preserve the whole Realm in Peace and "Quietness."

Reflections
on this Proclamation by the Citizens.

This Attempt had no better Success than the former; for the Citizens reflecting on the great Length of the Proclamation, the Elegancy of its Composition, and the beautiful Manner of its being ingrossed on Parchment, and yet published within two Hours after Hastings's Execution, concluded that his Death was predetermined, and that the Proclamation had been prepared before his Execution; therefore were confirmed in Opinion, that he had not fair Play. He then had recourse to other Means to engage the City of London in the wicked and detestable Conspiracy; without whose Concurrence, Gloucester plainly foresaw, that it would be impossible for him to obtain the Crown: Therefore, he made Sir Edmund Shore, the Lord-Mayor, a Privy-Counsellor: Which succeeded according to Wish; for he was not only easily prevailed upon himself, but he likewise drew in his Brother Dr. Shaw, a celebrated Preacher, and one Pinker a Monk, Provincial of the Augustine Friars. The Protector's Interest being greatly strengthened by the Accession of those three eminent Men; the next Step to be taken was, that Dr. Shaw should preach a Sermon the Sunday after at St. Paul's Cross; wherein he should open the Matter, by endeavouring to the utmost of his Power to bastardize the Children of the late King, and to shew the Citizens that none of them had any Right to the Crown. On the Sunday Morning following, the wicked Doctor, taking his Text from the Wisdom of Solomon, preached upon these Words, Bastard Slips shall take no deep Root: From which he endeavoured to shew the great Blessings usually conferred by God upon lawful Marriages; and, on the contrary, by raking both sacred and prophane Histories, shewed the many and great Calamities that befel the Offspring of unlawful Marriages; and inferred, that the late King's was one of the latter, because he had promised Marriage to the Lady Elizabeth Lucy, before he could obtain his Ends of her, and by her having a Child by him, he was told by his Mother the Duchess of York, that he was her Husband before God; consequently, that the Children he had by his Queen were spurious, and could be no otherwise looked upon than as so many Bastards; therefore, that 'twas to be feared, that the Reign of Edward the Fifth would prove fatal to the Kingdom of England.

But, lest this should not weigh with the Citizens, Shaw received from the abandoned Protector the most detestable, wicked and infamous Command, that can be shewn in History, which was to accuse his own Mother of Adultery; whereby it would appear, that neither the late King, nor the late Duke of Clarence, Brothers to Gloucester, had any Right to the Crown, and consequently none of their Descendants; whereby at one Blow were cut off the King, his Brother, and the Earl of Warwick, Son to the Duke of Clarence; and, in order to confirm the Duchess of York their Mother's Incontinence, the Preacher declared, that it was well known to divers Persons acquainted with her Intrigues with some Persons of her Husband's Court, whom the two Brothers exactly resembled; therefore, they were not to look for true Heirs of the Duke of York, either in the Children of the late King, or in those of the Duke of Clarence: And, raising his Voice, he said, But my Lord Protector, that Noble Prince, the Pattern of all Virtue and Heroick Actions, carries in his Air, in his Mien, and in his Soul, the perfect Image of his illustrious Father the Great Duke of York. It was designed, that when Shaw entered upon this Panegyrick, Gloucester should appear, as if he came by Chance; in Hopes that the Citizens, moved by the Preacher's Eloquence, would salute him King: But the Protector staying longer than he ought, the Doctor had gone through that Part of his Oration. However, upon the Duke's Approach, he unseasonably reassumed his Encomium, by inculcating the aforesaid Words, which, instead of being received by the Citizens with an Huzza of Long live King Richard, he had the Mortification to see the Audience stand like so many Mutes; and, instead of approving of what was said, they conceived it to be a wicked Discourse, stuffed with the most fulsome and servile Adulation; and which soon after appeared to have been an impious Prologue to the most detestable and horrid Murder of the two innocent young Princes, the King and his Brother, in the Tower of London.

Fabian. ib. Shew's Sermon not having had the desired Effect, Orders were sent to the Mayor to convene the Aldermen, Common-Council, and principal Citizens in Guildhall; to whom repaired the Duke of Buckingham, a celebrated Orator, and one of the Protector's best Friends, accompanied by divers of the Nobility of the same Faction; and, mounting the Huttings, he spoke to the Assembly to this Effect:

"Gentlemen, Out of the Zeal and sincere Affection we have for your Persons and Interests, we are come to acquaint you with a Matter of high Importance, equally pleasing to God, and profitable to the Commonwealth, and to none more than to you the Citizens of this famous and honourable City; for the very Thing which we believe you have a long while wanted and wished for, what you would have purchased at any Rate, and gone far to fetch, we are come hither to bring you, without any Labour, Trouble, Cost or Peril to you; and what can this be but your own Safety, the Peace of your Wives and Daughters, the Security of your Goods and Estates, which were all in Danger till now? Who of you could call what he had his own; there were so many Snares laid to deceive you, so many Fines and Forfeitures, Taxes and Impositions, of which there was no End, and often no Necessity? or, if there was, it was occasioned by Riots and unreasonable Waste, rather than a just and lawful Charge for Defence or Honour of the State: Your best Citizens were plundered, and their Wealth squandered by profuse Favourites: Fifteenths and the usual Subsidies would not do; but, under the plausible Name of Benevolence, your Goods were taken from you by the Commissioners against your Will; as if by that Name was understood, that every Man should pay not what he pleased, but what the King would have him, who never was moderate in his Demands, always exorbitant, turning Forfeitures into Fines, Fines into Ransoms, small Offences into Misprision of Treason, and Misprision into Treason itself. We need not give you Examples of it; Burder's Case will never be forgot, who, for a Word spoken in Haste, was cruelly beheaded. Did not Judge Markham resign his Office, rather than join with his Brethren in passing that illegal Sentence on that honest Man? Were you not all Witnesses of the barbarous Treatment one of your own Body, the worshipful Alderman Cook, met with? And your own selves know too well, how many Instances of this Kind I might name among you.

"King Edward gaining the Crown by Conquest, all that were any ways related to those that were his Enemies, lay under the Charge of Treason: Thus half of the Kingdom became at once Traitors, for half of the Kingdom were either Friends to King Henry, or Relations or Friends to some that were so. Though open War with Invaders is terrible and destructive to a Nation, yet civil Dissentions are much more fatal, and to be dreaded; with which his Reign was more disturbed, than the Reigns of all his Predecessors: But he is dead and gone, and God forgive his Soul! It cost the People

"more Blood and Treasure to get the Crown for this, than it had done to conquer France twice: Half of the Nobility of the Realm lost their Lives or Estates in his Quarrel; and, when the Dispute was over, the Peace that followed was not much safer than the War; every rich and landed Man was in Danger; for whom could he trust, that distrusted his own Brother? whom spare, that killed his own Brother? or, who could perfectly love him, whom his own Brother could not love? We shall, in Honour to the Memory of one that was our Sovereign, forbear to mention, who were the Persons on which he was so lavish of his Favours; only 'tis well known, that those that deserved them most, had the least of them. Was not Shore's Wife his chief Minister? Was there not more Court made to her than all the Lords of England, except those that were the Strumpet's Favourites? who, poor Woman! was herself chaste and of good Reputation, till he deluded her to his Lust, and tempted her from her Husband, an honest substantial young Man, whom you all know. Indeed, I am ashamed to say it, the King's Appetite in that Point was insatiable and intolerable; no Woman could escape him; Young or Old, Rich or Poor, Wife or Virgin, all fell Victims to his Lust; by which Means the most honourable Houses were defiled, and the most honest Families were corrupted.

"You of this renowned City suffered most; you who deserved most from him for your Readiness to serve the House of York with your Lives and Fortunes; which tho' he ill requited, there is of that House, who, by God's Grace, shall reward you better. I shall not enlarge on this Subject: You have heard it from one whom you will hearken to more, as you ought to do; for I am not so vain as to think what I can say will have so great Authority with you, as the Words of a Preacher; a Man so wise and so pious, that he would not utter a Thing in the Pulpit, especially which he did not firmly believe it was his Duty to declare. You remember, I doubt not, how he set forth the last Sunday the Right of the most excellent Prince Richard, Duke of Gloucester, to the Crown of this Realm; for, as he proved to you, the Children of King Edward IV. were never lawfully begotten, the King leaving his lawful Wife, the Lady Lucy, to contract an illegal Marriage with the Queen. My noble Lord the Protector's Reverence to the Dukes his Mother will not permit me to say any Thing further concerning what the worthy Doctor alledged of her Familiarity with others besides her own Husband, for fear of offending the Duke of Gloucester her Son; tho', for these Causes, the Crown of England is devolved to the most excellent Prince the Lord Protector, as the only lawfully begotten Son of the Right Noble Duke of York. This, and the Consideration of his many high Qualities, has prevailed with the Lords and Commons of England, of the Northern Counties especially, who have declared they will not have a Bastard reign over them, to petition that High and Mighty Prince to take on him the sovereign Power, for the

The Oration being finished, the Duke expected to have heard the Assembly cry out, God save King Richard; but all remaining silent, as if struck with Horror at the Injustice, Extravagancy, and Absurdity of the Proposal, the Duke, being greatly amazed, took aside the Mayor, with others of the Conspirators, and whispering, asked them, How it came the Citizens were so silent? The Mayor replied, Perhaps they don't understand you. This occasioned the Duke to recite his Speech with some Variation, yet with such a graceful Energy of Eloquence, that it was not possible for any Man to have said more in Behalf of so bad a Cause: However, the Assembly continued as before. Whereupon the Mayor acquainted the Duke, that the Citizens were not accustomed to hear any other Orator but their Recorder, and therefore imagined their Silence was owing to that. He then ordered Fitz-William, the Recorder, to speak to the Citizens upon the aforesaid Subject; which he, with great Reluctance, did, by repeating the Heads of the Duke's Speech, without the least Addition. But this having no greater Effect upon the Auditory than the two former, it occasioned the Duke to whisper to the Mayor, that the Citizens were amazingly obstinate; and, turning to the Audience, he further added:

"Dear Friends, we came to acquaint you with a Thing which we needed not have done, had it not been for the Affection we bear you. The Lords and Commons could have determined the Matter without you, but would gladly have you join with us,
which is for your Honour and Profit, tho'
you do not see it, or consider it: We require you therefore to give your Answer one Way or another, whether you are willing, as the Lords are, to have the most excellent Prince the Lord Protector to be your King, or not?"

Upon this the Assembly began to murmur;
and at last divers of the Protector and Duke's Servants, together with some Apprentices, and the Rabble who crowded into the Hall, cried out,
King Richard, King Richard! and, as a Demonstration of their Joy, threw up their Hats in the Air. The Duke, perceiving from what Quarter the Noise came, laid hold of the Opportunity,
as if the Acclamation had been general; and said,
"Tis a goodly and joyful Cry, to hear every Man with one Voice agree to it, and nobody say no. Since therefore, dear Friends, we see you are all, as one Man, inclined to have this noble Prince to be your King, we shall report the Matter so effectually to him, that we doubt not it will be much for your Advantage. We require you to attend us To-morrow, with our joint Petition to his Grace, as has been already agreed on between us."

Then the Duke and the Lords withdrew, and left the Assembly to break up with woeful Hearts and weeping Eyes; for the concealing of which, they hurried home to vent their Grief in private,
to prevent the dangerous Consequence a publick Lamentation would have been attended with.
Thus, by the vile Practices of that wicked Man,
the innocent Citizens of London were brought in,
as if assenting to that unjust and iniquitous Proceeding, of deposing their young and harmless King, and choosing in his Stead one of the most perfidious Monsters of Cruelty and Barbarity that ever lived; and who, having no sooner usurped the Crown, than he caused his two infant and innocent Nephews, the King, and his Brother the Duke of York, to be cruelly and barbarously murdered in the Tower of London, by the Hands of that infamous and execrable Villain Sir James Tyrrel.

The Day after the above-mentioned mock Election, the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, and divers of the Common-Council, repaired to Bay-nard's Castle, the present Residence of Gloucester; whither the Duke of Buckingham, attended by several of the Nobility, also resorted; who, by a Messenger, acquainted Gloucester, that a great Company waited to address his Highness about an Affair of the greatest Importance; therefore desired his Grace would be pleased to admit them to an Audience. Gloucester, seeming jealous of what they came about, made some Difficulty of admitting them; which gave Buckingham an Opportunity of letting the Mayor and Citizens know how ignorant the Protector was of their Design; and sending another Messenger, with an earnest and humble Supplication to the Protector, he was, seemingly with great Difficulty, prevailed upon to come forth, yet with such an affected Air of Diffidence, that he appeared as if unwilling to approach them till he knew their Business: Whereupon the Duke of Buckingham, in the most suppliant Manner, humbly begged Pardon for himself and the Company for the present Trouble, and that his Grace would be graciously pleased to hear what they had to offer, because it not only highly affected his Grace's Honour, but likewise the Good and Welfare of any Harm, therefore he permitted them to propose what they thought proper. Upon this Buckingham, in an elegant and elaborate Speech, set forth the Grievances of the People, and prayed him to redress them, by assuming the royal Authority, which, of Right, belonged to him, and which the whole Kingdom, with an unusual Unanimity, desired he would take upon him, for the Good of the Commonwealth, as much as for his Grace's Honour.

Duke of Gloucester's political Refusal of the Crown.

Gloucester, seemingly greatly surprized at this Proposition, with the utmost Hypocrisy, replied, "That tho' he knew the Things he alledged to be true, yet he loved King Edward and his Children above any Crown whatsoever, and therefore could not grant their Request; however, he pardoned their Petition, and thanked them for their Love; but desired them to be obedient to the Prince under whom himself and they lived at that Time, and whom he would advise to the best of his Capacity, as he had already done, to the Satisfaction of all Parties."

The Duke of Buckingham's Demand of the Protector's positive Answer.

Buckingham, seemingly dissatisfied with this Answer, after having asked and obtained Pardon for what he had further to offer, declared to Gloucester, "That they were all agreed not to have any of King Edward's Line to reign over them; that they were gone too far to go back; for which Reason, if his Grace would be pleased to take the Crown upon him, they humbly beseeched him to do it; or, if he would give them a resolute Answer to the contrary, which they should be loth to hear, they must and would look out for some other Person that would accept of their Proposal." At which Words Gloucester began to yield to their Request, and delivered himself as followeth: "Since we perceive that the whole Realm is bent upon it, not to have King Edward's Children to govern over them, of which we are sorry; and knowing that the Crown can belong to no Man so justly as to ourself, the right Heir, lawfully begotten of the Body of our most dear Father Richard, late Duke of York; to which Title is now joined your Election, the Nobles and Commons of this Realm, which we, of all Titles possible, take for the most effectual; we are content, and agree favourably to receive your Petition and Request, and, according to the same, take upon us the royal Estate, Preheminence, and Kingdoms of the two noble Realms of England and France, the one, from this Day forward, by us and our Heirs, to rule, govern and defend; the other, by God's Grace and your good Help, to get again, subdue, and establish for ever in due Obedience to this Realm of England; and we ask of God to live no longer than we intend to procure its Advancement."

Foreigners. A Dispute about the Vicarage of Stepney. A great Fire.

FROM the before-mentioned mock Election Richard commenced his Reign, in the Month of June; and, on the sixth Day of July following, he rode thro' the City, accompanied by his Queen, in a pompous Manner, to Westminster, where they were crowned with greater Solemnity than Affection of the People; having been obliged, for the Security of their Persons, to send for five thousand Men from the Northern Parts of the Kingdom; who, being arrived in the Neighbourhood of the City, in a very ragged, contemptible, and ridiculous Condition, with sorry Horses and rusty Arms, were mustered in Finsbury-Fields. Fabian, who was an Eye-witness of these Transactions, writes, That these Guards were almost four thousand, and were mustered in Moorfields, and were countermanded home, with sufficient Rewards for their Trouble, shortly after his Coronation: For which Bounty, rather than stoop to ask a Supply from his new, unsettled, and male-content Subjects, he chose to dispose of the following Parcels of the Crown Plate to Sbarro, his Friend in Iniquity, viz. seven Pots, Parcel gilt, five Bowls with a Cover, twelve Dishes, twelve Plates, eight Chargers, twenty-two Sauces, and an Ewer, Parcel gilt, weighing together two hundred and seventy-five Pounds and four Ounces, at three Shillings and four Pence per Ounce, five hundred and fifty Pounds thirteen Shillings and four Pence; which Sum Richard acknowledged to have received from the said Sbarro, by the Hands of his trusty Chaplain Edmund Chatterton.

Between the Election and Coronation of Richard, it seems as if the Citizens of Winchester had renewed their Claim to the Office of Chief Butler at the Coronation, in Prejudice to the Citizens of London; as in some Measure will appear by the following Letter:

Citizens Claim of the Office of Chief Butler of England.

To the Right High and Mighty Prince the Duke of Norfolk, Seneschal of England.

"Shewen unto your good and gracious Lordship, the Mair and Citezeins of the Citee of London, that where, after the Liberty and commendable Customes of the said Citee, of Time that no Man's Mind is to the contrary, used, enjoyed, and accustomed, the Mair of the same Citee for the Time being, by reason of the Office of Mairalty of the said Citee, in his own Person, oweth of Right and Dury to serve the Kyng our Sovereigne Lord in the Day of his ful noble Coronation, in such Place as it shall please his Highness to take his Spices, and the same Cup, with the Kevering belonging thereunto, and a Layer [Ewer] of Gold, the said Mair to have, and with him to bear away at the Time of his departing, for his Fee and Reward.

Which Privilege was confirmed, by admitting the Mayor and Citizens to officiate at the Coronation, according to their antient Rights and Immunities. (See the first Year of Richard II.)

The Names of the Citizens nominated by the Common-Council on this Occasion to represent the City, as Chief Butler of England, were, Henry Cole, Goldsmith; John Tote, Mercer; William Sanders, Grocer; William Sparke, Clothworker; John Swane, Ciffor, i. e. Taylor; Thomas Ostriche, Haberdasher; William Mariner, Salter; Richard Knight, Fishmonger; John Pasmer, Pellipar, i. e. Skinner; Thomas Bretayn, Ironmonger; Roger Ford, Vintner.

Commerce injured by foreign Merchants.

The Number of Italian and other foreign Merchants being at this Time greatly increased in the City, they usurped many Liberties peculiar to the Citizens, by not only selling most of the Goods they imported by Retail, but likewise caused great Quantities of Wool to be manufactured into Cloth by their own Countrymen, brought hither for that Purpose, whereby they ingrossed most of the Trade, both foreign and domestick; besides, having the Balance of Trade on their Side, they drained the Kingdom of Cash by their vast Remittances.

Commerce having continued on this Foot for divers Years, it occasioned a great Resort both of Merchants and Artificers, from most Parts of Europe, to this City; insomuch that they not only became the general Traders and Manufacturers of the Kingdom, but likewise kept most of the Inns and Publick-houses for the Entertainment of Strangers, and that without employing any English Person in their Service; by which Practice, many of the meaner Sort of Citizens were reduced to very great Streights; wherefore it was judged proper to apply to Parliament for Redress: By whom (for the more effectual preventing such Practices for the future) it was enacted, That no Merchant Alien should be concerned in any Manufacture in this Kingdom, or sell Cloth, or other English Commodity, to an Englishman, either by Wholesale or Retail; and also not to remit any Money on Account of the Balance of Trade; but, in lieu thereof, Merchandize of the Produce of England: Likewise all foreign Artificers were commanded to depart the Kingdom, other than those who should become Servants to English Masters of their several Professions.

In this same Year, about Christmas, there happened a great Dispute between one Nicholas Sudbury of London, Haberdasher, to whom Williams Kemp, Rector of St. Dunstan's, Stepney, had granted the next Presentation to the Vicarage of the said Parish, concerning Degory Watour, Cl. presented to the said Vicarage by Nicholas Sudbury aforesaid, and the Bishop of London, for delaying the Institution of the said Degory Watour, till one Richard Fox, then in the Earl of Richmond's Army, and afterwards Bishop of Winchester, was also presented; Wherefore, upon Complaint thereof by Degory Watour to King Richard and his Council, a Mandamus was issued out from his Majesty to the Bishop of London, to grant Institution of the foresaid Vicarage to the Complainant Degory Watour. But, notwithstanding this Command, Watour was rejected; and Fox, who soon after triumphed with the Conqueror and his Patron the Earl of Richmond, obtained the same, as appears by the Bishop of London's Register, where his Name stands immediately after the Name of Richard Luke, the Vicar last deceased.

his victorious Army, proclaimed King on the 22d Day of August, he soon after set out for London; and, on the Way, was met at Hornsey-Park, (now Highgate) on the 28th of the same Month, by the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen, in their scarlet Robes, accompanied by a great Number of Citizens on Horseback, in violet-coloured Gowns; whence they conducted him to Shore-ditch; where he was received by the several Corporations of the City in their Formalities, and thence by them conducted to St. Paul's Church; where, after having offered his three Standards, he took up his Residence in the Episcopal Palace.

On the 11th Day of October following an unheard-of Distemper began violently to rage in this City, which, from its Symptoms and Quality, was denominated the Sweating-Sickness, and carried off the Afflicted in twenty-four Hours; but those that survived that Time, generally recovered. This hitherto-unknown Distemper swept away a great Number of Citizens; among whom were the new Mayor, Thomas Hylle, and his immediate Successor Sir William Stokker, and one Sheriff; so that the City had in this Year three Mayors and three Sheriffs.

Henry Earl of Richmond, being advanced to the Throne, bethought himself of the Marquis of Dorset and Sir John Bourchier, whom he had left at Paris as Pledges for the Money advanced him by the King of France towards his late Expedition to England; on which Account he sent his Treasurer and Mr. Bray to the Lord-Mayor and Citizens of London, to solicit a Loan of six thousand Marks. This Demand met with great Difficulties at first, because the People were, as yet, unacquainted with his Temper; however, the Citizens advanced him half the Sum demanded, (of which the Companies of Mercers, Grocers, and Drapers lent nine hundred thirty-seven Pounds six Shillings) wherewith Henry seemed well satisfied, and punctually paid the same according to his Time.

Henry had no sooner, for his own Security, committed Edward Plantagenet, Earl of Warwick, (Son to the late Duke of Clarence, and Nephew to Edward IV. and Richard the Usurper) Prisoner to the Tower of London, than a Rumor was spread, that he had made his Escape out of Prison, to the universal Joy of the People: Wherefore Richard Simon, an Oxford Priest, in Concert with other Enemies of Henry, laid hold of this Opportunity, and set up Lambert Simnel, a Baker's Son, his Pupil, a Youth of a beautiful Personage and majestick Air, to personate the Earl of Warwick: But, lest the Fraud should be detected before he had given the Impostor proper Instructions, he retired with him into Ireland; where, on his Arrival at Dublin, he was not only received with all the Demonstrations of Joy by the Populace, but likewise by the Nobility, who soon after got him crowned, and raised an Army for his Support, which was in a short Time joined by the Earl of Lincoln, (who is believed to have been the principal Contriver of this Plot, in order thereby to advance himself to the Crown) and his Friends, with a Body of two thousand Germans, sent over by Margaret Duchess of Burgundy, Sister to Edward IV. and Aunt to the said unfortunate Earl of Warwick.

King Henry, in order to undeceive the People in respect to this Imposture, caused the unhappy young Earl to ride from the Tower through the principal Streets of London, and then in a solemn Procession to St. Paul's Church, where an incredible Number of People were assembled to behold him; who being well known to many of the Nobility and others, produced a good Effect, by preventing an Insurrection in these Parts in favour of Simnel. No sooner had the Citizens and others satisfied their Curiosity in beholding that unfortunate Prince, than he was re-conducted to his former Lodgings in the Tower.

At the same Time there was such a Dearth of Corn, that Wheat was sold at one Pound four Shillings the Quarter.

This Year, and not before, was finished the beautiful Cross in West-Cheap, curiously wrought at the Charge of divers Citizens; amongst whom one John Fisher, a Mercer, contributed six hundred Marks.

Amongst other Regulations for the Well-being of the Citizens, and to keep out of the Freedom mean and improper Persons, it was now, in the Mayoralty of Nicholas Exton, renewed and confirmed, That no Apprentice should be taken, nor Freedom given, but to such as were Gentlemen born, agreeable to the Clause in the Oath given to every Freeman at the Time he was made free, in these Words; Ye shall take none Apprentice, but if he be free-born; that is to say, no Bondman's Son, nor the Son of any Alien. Such was the Care of the Citizens at this Time to keep out a foreign Attachment or Interest.

In the Year 1487 his Majesty rebuilt Baynard's Castle, not after its former Manner with Imbatlements and Towers, but much more beautiful and commodious for the Entertainment of any Prince or great Estate.

In the second of Henry VII. February 1, Anno 1487, an Act of Common-Council was passed by the Lord-Mayor and Commonalty of this City, whereby the Citizens were enjoined, upon the Penalty of one hundred Pounds, (one Third to the Informer) not to carry any Goods or Merchandize to any Fair or Market within the Kingdom for the Term of seven Years: Which scandalous and mercenary Act was so highly resented by the Legislature, that in the Year following it was set aside by an Act of Parliament, (to the great Dishonour of the City) which empowered the Citizens to carry on their Commerce to the several Parts of the Nation as usual, with a Penalty of forty Pounds upon every Person that should molest any of the Citizens in their said Trade.

After the Defeat of Lambert Simnel, the sham Earl of Warwick, and new King of Ireland, at Stoke near Newark in Lincolnshire, the King with his Queen, on their Return to London, were met at Hornsey-Park by the Mayor, Aldermen, Sheriffs, and most of the eminent Citizens, on Horseback, richly accoutred in one Sort of Apparel: On which Occasion Henry was graciously pleased to confer the Honour of Knighthood upon William Littlebury, alias Horn; (so denominated by Edward IV. for his inimitable Performance upon Against his publick Entry, the Streets of the City, through which the Cavalcade was to pass, were new gravelled, and lined by the several Corporations in their Formalities; by whom, and the rest of the Citizens, he was received in a very pompous and triumphant Manner; and, proceeding to St. Paul's Church, he heard Te Deum sung with the greatest Solemnity, and the Day after went in Procession to St. Paul's Cross, and heard the Thanksgiving Sermon for his late Victory; being willing to render it as conspicuous as possible, thereby to strike the greater Terror into his Enemies.

4000 l.

King Henry being resolved to assist his old Friend the Duke of Britagne with a considerable Number of Troops against the French, but Money being wanting, he applied to the Citizens for a Loan of four thousand Pounds; which they not only chearfully advanced, but likewise two thousand Pounds more soon after.

The Inhabitants of the Parishes of St. Faith and St. Gregory being greatly annoyed by an intolerable Stench, incessantly emitted from the putrid Blood of Beasts running through the said Parishes from the Butchery, or Slaughter-House, in the Parish of St. Nicholas's Shambles, (now Newgate-Street) together with the noxious Vapours arising from the Ordure and Scalding of Swine; whereby the Air was so much infected, that it not only occasioned frequent Distempers in that Neighbourhood, but likewise endangered the Health of the whole City: For the remedying of which Evil, Recourse was had to Parliament, wherein it was enacted, That, for the future, no Butcher shall presume to kill any Beast within the Walls of London, upon Penalty, for every Ox and Cow so killed, of one Shilling, and for every other Beast eight Pence. And the same Parliament confirmed to the Mayor of London, and his Successors, the Conservation and Authority in and over all the Issues, Breaches, and Ground overflowed, as far as the Water ebbeth and floweth from the River Thames, touching Punishments to be inflicted on Persons using unlawful Nets.

The Money offered in the City.

Henry, to all Appearance, being resolved to prosecute the War against France with Vigour, applied to Parliament for a Supply; who, firing with Zeal at the Motion, unanimously resolved, That the most expeditious Way of raising Money upon this Emergency would be by Way of Benevolence; which they accordingly granted: Whereupon the wealthier Sort of People were everywhere rated to the same, according to the Discretion of the Assessors; on which Occasion, the Aldermen of this City were assessed at two hundred Pounds each; and the Sum total collected among the Commonalty of the City amounted to nine thousand six hundred and eighty-two Pounds seventeen Shillings and four Pence; which, together with that paid by the Aldermen, came to near fifteen thousand Pounds. A very great Sum, considering that there were hardly any, or at most but very few, of the Citizens that were then possessed of a real Estate of ten Shillings per Annum.

The King considering the Inactivity of his Ally the King of the Romans, and the dangerous Practices of the Dukes of Burgundy, in setting up Perkin Warbeck, a Pretender to his Crown, was thereby so highly incensed against the Flemish Nation, that he not only banished all the Merchants of that Country from this City, but he likewise prohibited all Intercourse with that People; whereby the Company of English Merchant-Adventurers became very great Sufferers, by being deprived of the principal Part of their Commerce; which the Anseatick or Easterling Merchants taking Advantage of, they imported from their own Ports vast Quantities of Merchandize of the Produce of Flanders; by which (notwithstanding the above-mentioned Prohibition) they not only ingrossed the Commerce into their own Hands, but also chose other Servants than those formerly employed in the Flemish Trade. Wherefore the Outed becoming desperate, they entered into a Conspiracy against the said Anseatick Merchants, and, assembling in a riotous Manner, were joined by some Apprentices and others, who running to the Guybalda Theatonicorum (the Hall and Repository belonging to the aforesaid Merchants, now the Still-Yard) in Thames-Street, they broke in, and pillaged several Rooms and Warehouses. But, Assistance coming across the Thames from Southwark, they were prevented from putting their wicked Designs in Execution; and the Lord-Mayor having, with the utmost Diligence, raised a great Number of armed Citizens, marched to their Assistance, and having dispersed and taken a considerable Number of them, they confessed the Conspirators were above eighty in Number, who were all sworn to Secrecy: Whereupon they were committed Prisoners to the Tower of London, and, after a long Imprisonment, some were discharged, and others hanged.

Robert Fabian, Alderman, and one of the Sheriffs in the Year 1494, collected out of divers good Authors, Latin and French, a large Chronicle of England and France; which he published in English, at a great Expence, for the Honour of the City, and Profit of the whole Realm.

Fabian the Historian.
A.D. 1494

This same Historian informs us, that King Henry VII. in the ninth Year of his Reign, holding his Feast of Christmas at Westminster, on the twelfth Day, feasted Ralph Austrey, then Mayor of London, and his Brethren the Aldermen, with other Commoners in great Number; and, after Dinner, dubbing the Mayor Knight, caused him with his Brethren to stay and behold the Disguisings and other Disports in the Night following, shewed in the great Hall, which was richly hang'd with Arras, and staged about on both Sides: Which Disports being ended, in the Morning, the King, the Queen, the Embassadors, and other Estates, being set at a Table of Stone, sixty Knights and Esquires served sixty Dishes to the King's Mefs, and as many to the Queen's, (neither Flesh, nor Fish) and served the Mayor with twenty-four Dishes to his Mefs, of the same Manner, with fundry Wines in most plenteous wife. And, finally, the King and Queen being conveyed, with great Lights, into the Palace, the Mayor, with his Company, in Barges, returned turned and came to London by Break of the next Day.

Ld. Verul. Life of Hen. VII. A.D. 1495. K. Henry's Avarice.
King Henry's excessive Avarice began to discover itself in a very oppressive Manner, by the scandalous Course he took to extort Money from his Subjects, by Forfeitures upon penal Laws; whereat the People were greatly surprized, as knowing it not to be the Effect of Necessity; for he then abounded in Money, having a little before received a prodigious Sum by Way of Benevolence, and then one hundred and eighty-six thousand two hundred and fifty Pounds for the late French Peace: Wherefore every one justly concluded, that it was purely the Effect of his avaricious and insatiable Nature.

Ibid. The Case of Alderman Capel.
The first remarkable Instance of this Kind was the Case of Sir William Capel, an Alderman of London, who, upon sundry penal Laws, was condemned in a Fine of two thousand seven hundred Pounds; but, by the powerful Intercession of Friends, it was mitigated to sixteen hundred Pounds. Yet, notwithstanding this severe and cruel Usage, Empson, an infamous Minister, and Master Court-Leech, intended to have had another Slice off Sir William for himself, had not his Master Henry died in the Interim.

Fab. Chro. P. 7.
The great Plenty of Corn this Year lowered Wheat to four Shillings the Quarter; and white Herrings were sold at three Shillings and four Pence the Barrel.

Stat. Larg. 11 Henry VII. A.D. 1496. Who to force on City Juries.
The wicked and detestable Crime of Perjury having at this Time greatly prevailed among the London Juries, to the great Dishonour of the City, it was therefore by Parliament enacted, That, for the future, no Person or Persons be impannelled or sworn into any Jury or Inquest in any of the City Courts, unless he be worth forty Marks; and if the Cause to be tried amount to that Sum, then no Person shall be admitted as a Juror worth less than one hundred Marks; and every Person so qualified, refusing to serve as a Jurymen, for the first Default to forfeit one Shilling, the second two, and every one after to double the Sum, for the Use of the City.

Ibid. Unjust Verdict how to be punished.
And when upon Trial it shall be found, that a Petty Jury have brought in an unjust Verdict, then every Member of the same to forfeit twenty Pounds, or more, according to the Discretion of the Court of Lord-Mayor and Aldermen; and also each Person so offending to suffer six Months Imprisonment, or less, at the Discretion of the said Mayor and Aldermen, without Bail or Mainprize, and for ever after to be rendered incapable of serving in any Jury.

Ibid. Bribery in a Jurymen how to be punished.
And if upon Enquiry it be found, that any Juror has taken Money as a Bribe, or other Reward, or Promise of Reward, to favour either Plaintiff or Defendant in the Cause to be tried by him, then, and in every such Case, the Person so offending to forfeit and pay to the Party by him thus injured ten times the Value of such Sum or Reward by him taken, and also to suffer Imprisonment as already mentioned, and besides, to be disabled from ever serving in that Capacity; and that every Person or Persons guilty of bribeing any Juror, shall likewise forfeit ten times the Value given, and suffer Imprisonment as aforesaid.

In the latter End of October, 1497, by a great Council held at Westminster, says my Author, was granted to the King for his Defence against the Scots, or to enable Henry to repel the Scottish Invasion in favour of Perkin Warbeck, the Sum of 120000*l.* and in November was granted to the King a Present by the City of 4000*l.* and, on the 16th Day of January following, a Parliament began, whereby was granted two Dynies and a half, two Aids and two Fifteenths, to levy the former 120000*l.* which was so much disliked by the Nation, that it occasioned a Rising in Cornwall. The Rebels, spirited up particularly by the Lord Audley, marched to Wells; where being joined by that Lord, they appointed him their Leader; and thence marching into Kent, they incamped on Blackheath on the 17th Day of June, threatening either to attack the King's Army, or reduce the City of London. This News put all into the greatest Commotion; but, by the indefatigable Application of the Mayor and Sheriff's, the Citizens were not only recovered from their Panic, but likewise prevailed upon to arm in Defence of the City; so that, in a short Time, by erecting of Batteries, and placing of Guards in proper Places, they put it into such a formidable Posture, as to be able to baffle all the Attempts of their Enemies: And, the more immediately to remove the Apprehensions of Danger from the Citizens, the King incamped his Army in St. George's Fields, covered the Borough of Southwark and the Bridge; and, soon after decamping, attacked and routed the Enemy, on the 22d of June, to the Safety and Satisfaction of the Citizens.

The King having entered into a League for the Defence of Italy, the Pope, as an Evidence of his Gratitude, sent, by his Nuncio, as a Present to Henry, a consecrated Sword, and a Cap of Maintenance; for whose magnificent Reception, his Majesty commanded the Mayor and Aldermen of this City to receive him at the Bridge Foot; on which Occasion the Streets thro' which the Cavalcade passed were richly embellished, and lined by the several Companies in their Formalities.

There was now such a Dearth of Corn, that Wheat was sold at twenty Shillings the Quarter.

In the Year 1498 many beautiful Gardens at Finsbury were turned into a spacious Field for the Use of the London Archers or Trained-Bands; Part whereof is now walled in, and denominated the Artillery-Ground; and the other Parts, to the North, consist of a large Burial-Ground belonging to the Dissenters, and divers handsome, new-built Streets, which reach to Old-Street.

The Impostor Perkin, receiving Advice of the King's Advance towards him, was thereby so intimidated, that, with the utmost Precipitation, he raised the Siege of Exeter; and, marching towards Taunton, deserted his Army by Night, and went and took Sanctuary at Bewly in New Forest. But, upon the King's Arrival in that Neighbourhood, and the Promise of Life and a Par-

Engl.* in Cheapside in Fetters and Stocks, for that was not till his being retaken after his Escape from Prison] whence he returned thro' Tower-Street, Cannon-Street, &c. to Westminster, amidst the Scoffings and Reproaches of an infinite Number of People.

Stow. An. Engl. A.D. 1499. By the two plentiful preceding Seasons, Corn became so cheap, that Wheat was again reduced to four Shillings the Quarter: At which Time Wine was sold at ten Shillings the Hoghead, and Bay Salt at four Pence the Bushel.

Hall. Chro. A great Plague. In the Year 1500 a dreadful Plague raged in many Parts of the Kingdom, but especially in this City, where it carried off about thirty thousand [Fabian, who was then in London, writes, that there died only somewhat more than twenty thousand] Persons. During this destructive Pestilence, the King, for Safety, removed from Place to Place, and at last, accompanied by his Consort, repaired to Calais in France; where Philip, King of France, admitted to an Interview with his Majesty, to evince his profound Respect to Henry, called him frequently his Patron, Father, and Protector; which tender and uncommon Expressions of great Love and Esteem the King soon imparted to the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen of London by a Letter, wherein he likewise acquainted them with the most material Passages that occurred during the Interview. This extraordinary Favour and Condescension of the King gained him entirely the Love and Hearts of the Citizens, who, by their many Services and dutiful Behaviour, had induced Henry thus to honour them.

Fab. ibid. In this Year the Earl of Warwick, mentioned in the Beginning of this Reign, was beheaded on Tower-Hill; and, on the 21st of December, in the Night, the City and Parts adjacent were terrified greatly by a most violent Thunder and Lightning.

Hall. Chro. Stow. An. A.D. 1501. Catherine, Princess Royal of Spain, being espoused to Arthur, Prince of Wales, landed at Plsmouth on the 4th of October, 1501, and made her publick Entry into this City on the 12th of November; when she was received by the Mayor and Aldermen in their Formalities: On which Occasion the Streets were adorned with pompous Decorations, and a Variety of stately Pageants. And, on the 14th of the same Month, their Nuptials were solemnized in St. Paul's Church; where were present the Lord-Mayor in a Robe of crimson Velvet, and the Aldermen in scarlet Gowns; who, after the Ceremony was over, were conducted into the great Hall of the Bishop of London's Palace, where they were entertained in a very sumptuous Manner at the Nuptial Banquet.

Ibid. Two Days after, the King and Queen went from Baynard's-Castle to Mass in St. Paul's Church, and from thence to dine with the Princess at the aforesaid Bishop's Palace; and, after Dinner, the illustrious Company took Water at Paul's Wharf in their proper Barges, attended by the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, and City Companies in their several Barges, beautifully adorned with a Variety of rich and stately Flags and Streamers, to Westminster.

In the same Year Sir John Shaw, the Mayor, by a Contribution from the several Companies of the City, caused to be erected the Kitchens and other Offices at Guildhall; by the Convenience of which, he first entertained his Brethren the Aldermen, and principal Citizens, at a very magnificent Banquet in the said Hall; which Entertainments were formerly given at that of the Grocers. The said Mayor also caused his Brethren the Aldermen first to accompany him on Horseback to the Water-Side, to take Barge to Westminster.

On the 25th of January, the Espousals of the Princess Margaret, by Proxy, with James IV. of Scotland, being published at St. Paul's Cross in London, it occasioned an incredible Joy among the Citizens, by making of Bonfires, ringing of Bells, and every Thing else that could contribute to the publick Rejoicings; for, by this Match, the Citizens apprehended that all Causes of Difference would be removed from between the two Nations, and a happy Tranquillity restored; whereby all dreadful and destructive Wars for the future would be happily prevented, to the great Advantage of both Kingdoms.

Queen Elizabeth, Consort of Henry VII. died this Year of Childbirth in the Tower.

Fleet-Dike, now called Fleet-Ditch, the Remains of the old River of Wells, (See P. 83) was this Year well scoured down to the Tbames; so that it was navigable for large Boats laden with Fuel and Fish up to Old-born or Holborn-Bridge.

The like Care was taken of the Citizens on the East Part of the City, by paving over the filthy and noxious Place called Houndsditch: Of which more largely in our Account of Portoken Ward.

The Taylors Company in this same Year purchased a Charter of the King, by which they thenceforwards obtained the Stile of Merchant-Taylors of the City of London.

On the 21st of November, 1503, in the Beginning of the Night, there was a dreadful Fire on the North End of London-Bridge; and, on the 7th of January following, certain Houses were burnt down in Tbames-Street, facing St. Botolph's Church.

Fabian further writes, That the Citizens, in the Year 1505, granted to the King 5000 Marks for Confirmation of their Liberties; one thousand whereof they paid in Hand, and covenanted to pay the other four thousand in the Course of four Years; which is particularly levelled against the Encroachments upon the Liberties, Franchises, and Customs of the Citizens by Foreigners, in Buying and Selling, and concerning the Qualifications of Brokers, &c. in the same Form as that of Edward III. dated December 4, in the fiftieth Year of his Reign, and that of Richard II. confirmed by Parliament; and is dated on the 23d Day of July, in the twentieth Year of his Reign; wherein, amongst other Things, it is recited, recited, "That of all Time, of which the Memory of Man is not to the contrary, for the Commonweal of the Realm and City aforesaid, it hath been used, and by Authority of Parliament approved and confirmed, that no Stranger from the Liberty of the City may buy or sell, from any Stranger from the Liberties of the same City, any Merchandise or Wares within the Liberties of the same City, upon Forfeiture of the same. The said Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens, and their Predecessors by all the Time aforesaid, have had and received, and have been accustomed to receive, perceive, and have, to the Use of the said Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens, all and all Manner of Merchandizes and Wares bought and sold within the Liberties of the same City as aforesaid, and Forfeitures of the same Merchandizes and Wares, until of late past Time they were troubled or molested.

"The same Lord Henry the Seventh, by his Letters Patents as aforesaid, for pacifying and taking away from henceforth Controversies and Ambiguities in that Behalf, and to fortify and by express Words to explain and declare the Liberty and Custom aforesaid to them the said Mayor and Commonalty and Citizens, and their Heirs and Successors, and willing the said Liberties to be peaceably and quietly had, possessed, and enjoyed to the said Mayor and Commonalty and Citizens, and their Successors, with the Forfeitures aforesaid, against the said late Lord King Henry, his Heirs and Successors, granted, and by his said Charter confirmed to the same Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens, and their Successors, that no Stranger from the Liberties of the same City may buy or sell, from any other Stranger to the Liberty of the same City, any Merchandizes or Wares within the Liberties of the same City; and if any Stranger to the Liberty of the same City shall sell or buy any Merchandizes or Wares within the Liberty of the same City of any other Stranger to the Liberty of the same City, that the same Mayor, Commonalty and Citizens, and their Successors, may have, hold, and receive all and all Manner of such-like Merchandizes and Wares, so bought and to be bought, sold or to be sold, within the Liberty of the said City, between whatsoever Strangers to the Liberty of the same City, as forfeited; and all the Forfeitures of the same, and also the Penalties, Fines, and Redemptions whatsoever any Ways forfeited, lost or to be lost, or to be forfeited or due thereon, to the Use and Profit of the same Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens, and their Heirs and Successors, without Hindrance of the same late King, his Heirs or Successors, and without any Account, or any other Thing to be rendered or paid thereof to the late King, his Heirs and Successors, any Statute, Act, or Ordinance of us or our Progenitors made to the contrary notwithstanding; although the same Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the said City, or their Predecessors, have before that Time used, abused, or not used those Customs and Liberties: Saving always, that the great Men, Lords and Nobles, and other English and Strangers, of what

"And further, the same late King, of his ample Grace, by his said Letters Patents, amongst other Things, did give and grant to the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of the same City of London, and their Successors, the Office of Gauger within the said City, and the depoling, ordering, surveying, and correcting of the same, to have, hold, exercise, and occupy the said Office, and other Premises, with all Fees, Profits, and Emoluments to the said Office in any Manner belonging or appertaining to the same Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens, by themselves, or by their sufficient Deputy or Deputies, from the 22d Day of August, in the first Year of his Reign, for ever, without any Account to be made thereof, or any other Thing rendering or paying to the said Lord Henry the Seventh, his Heirs or Successors, as by the said Letters Patents doth more plainly appear."

The Archduke Philip, in Right of his Consort, having succeeded to the Crown of Castile, set out with his Queen from Flanders with a considerable Fleet on his Way thither; but, meeting in the Channel with a dreadful Storm, was forced into Weymouth; from whence he came by Land to Windsor, to pay his Respects to King Henry, who from thence brought him to London, to see his capital City; where they were entertained by the Mayor and Citizens, with a Pomp and Magnificence proper for the Accommodation of such illustrious Guests.

King Henry, being apprehensive of his approaching End, was seized with a Remorse of Conscience for his many, great, and grievous Exactions; wherefore he attempted to bribe Heaven with the Spoils of his Subjects, and to purchase Favour of the Almighty, by making (as he vainly imagined) an Atonement for his past Crimes, by hastening the Construction, and endowing his religious Foundations; giving much greater Alms than usual; and, at his own Expence, discharged all the Prisoners in London, whose Debts did not exceed forty Shillings.

Henry, once more willing to honour the City of London, sent the Mayor a Letter, wherein he acquainted him with his having concluded a Match between Charles Prince of Castile (afterwards the great Emperor Charles the Fifth) and the Princess Mary, his youngest Daughter: On which Occasion he commanded him to make all the publick Demonstrations of Joy imaginable; expressing himself with all the Signs of an unfeigned Joy, by saying, That now he had built a Wall of Brass about his Kingdom, by having for his Sons-in-Law the King of Scotland and a Prince of Castile and Burgundy.

Yet nevertheless his rapacious and infamous Ministers, Empson and Dudley, continued their grievous Extortions and Oppressions of the People with the utmost Rigour, by a second Prosecution of Sir William Capel, some time Mayor of London, for a Neglect in not discovering and prosecuting some false Coiners; for which pretended Crime he was amerced in two thousand Pounds: But, being a bold Man, he would not submit to such vile and arbitrary Proceedings; and, instead of paying his Fine, highly reflected on those iniquitous Ministers, the Authors of his Troubles; for which he was committed first to the Compter, and then to the Tower of London; where he continued a Prisoner during the King's Life.

UPON the Demise of Henry VII. on the 21st of April, 1509, his Son Henry was proclaimed King in London on the 23d of April, with the usual Solemnities; and, two Days after, all foreign Beggars were banished the City, and compelled to repair to their several Parishes; and, on the 20th of June following, the King and Queen, in a magnificent Procession, rode from the Tower to Westminster. On which Occasion the City was gorgeously embellished with rich Silks and Tapestry, and Part of Cornhill, and Goldsmiths-Row in Cheapside, with golden Brocades; and the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen and Sheriffs, together with the City Companies, in their Formalities, attended and adorned this pompous Shew, whilst the Populace incessantly proclaimed their Joy with repeated Huzzas.

His Majesty, to rivet the Affections of his City of London, and of all his Subjects, the more securely towards him, committed Sir Richard Empson, Knight, and Edward Dudley, Esq; Serjeant at Law, to the Tower. These two were employed by King Henry VII. to raise Money, upon penal Laws, for filling his Coffers, which they did very rigorously, in a Commission of Forfeitures; for which they were now both condemned and attainted by Parliament, and, upon the 18th of August, 1510, beheaded on Tower-Hill. Divers of their inferior Agents, called Promoters, were set on the Pillory in Cornhill, with Papers on their Heads, and forced to ride through the City with their Faces to the Horse-Tails.

Henry, in the Habit and Arms of one of the Yeomen of his Guard, came into the City on St. John's Eve, to see the pompous March of the City Watch; wherewith he was so highly delighted, that, on the St. Peter's Night after, accompanied by his royal Consort, and attended by the principal Nobility, he returned to the City, and, in Cheapside, stood and saw the stately March of the aforesaid Watch; which was performed every St. John Baptist's Vigil, and on the Vigil of St. Peter and Paul, according to ancient Custom, in the following magnificent Manner:

The March was begun by the City Musick, followed by the Lord-Mayor's Officers in Party-coloured Liveries; then the Sword-Bearer on Horseback, in beautiful Armour, preceded the Lord-Mayor, mounted on a stately Horse richly trapped, attended by a Giant, and two Pages on Horseback, three Pageants, Morrice-Dancers, and Footmen; next came the Sheriffs, preceded by their Officers, and attended by their Giants, Pages, Pageants, and Morrice-Dancers. Then marched a great Body of Demi-Lancers, in bright Armour, on stately Horses: Next followed a Body of Carabineers, in white Fustian Coats, with a Symbol of the City Arms on their Backs and Breasts; then marched a Division of Archers, with their Bows bent, and Shafts of Arrows by their Side; next followed a Party of Pikemen in their Corsets and Helmets; after whom marched a Body of Halberdeers in Corsets and Helmets; and the March was closed by a great Party of Billmen, with Helmets and Aprons of Mail; and the whole Body, consisting of about two thousand Men, had between every Division a certain Number of Musicians, who were answered in their proper Places by the like Number of Drums, with Standards and Ensigns as veteran Troops. This nocturnal March was illuminated by nine hundred and forty Cressets, [large Lanterns fixed at the Ends of Poles, and carried over Mens Shoulders] two hundred whereof were defrayed at the City Expence, five hundred at that of the Companies, and two hundred and forty by the City Constables. The March began at the Conduit at the West End of Cheapside, and passed thro' Cheapside, Cornhill and Leadenhall-Street to Aldgate, whence it returned by Penchurch-Street, Grasschurch-Street, Cornhill, and so back to the Conduit. During this March, the Houses on each Side the said Streets were decorated with Greens and Flowers, wrought into Garlands, and intermixed with a great Number of Lamps.

Feb. p. 7.

Sir William Fitz-William.

Sir William Fitz-William was this Year disfranchised, because he refused to serve the Office of Sheriff. He was Alderman of Bread-Street Ward, and retired to Milton in Northamptonshire. In the Fall of the Cardinal, his former Master, he gave him kind Entertainment there at his House in the Country: For which Deed being called before the King, and demanded, How he durst entertain so great an Enemy to the State? His Answer was, That he had not contemptuously or wilfully done it; but only because he had been his Master, and (partly) the Means of his greatest Fortunes. The King was so well pleased with his Answer, that, saying, Himself had too few such Servants, immediately he knighted him, and afterwards made him a Privy-Counsellor.

This worthy Knight dying, gave 100*l.* to poor Maids Marriages. His Debts and Debtors (over whose Names he had written, Amore Dei remitto) he freely forgave. He gave to the Universities 40*l.* to the Poor 30*l.* to mend the Highways betwixt Chigwell and Copersall in Essex, 50*l.* to mend other Highways, about Torney and Savetry Chapel, and the Bridge, 50*l.* more: And to the Merchant-Tailors, his Brethren, he gave his best standing Cup, as a friendly Remembrance of him for ever.

To mention a few more of this noble Knight's Legacies. He gave to King Henry VIII. his great Ship, with all her Tackles, &c. and his Collar of the Garter, with his best George, beset with Diamonds. He gave to Sir Thomas Wriestley, Knight, Chief Secretary of State, the best of his gilt Cups.

To Mabel, Daughter of Sir Anthony Brown, his Brother, for her Advancement in Marriage, 100*l.* per Annum, going out of his Manor of Coudray, &c.

To the Poor within four Miles of his Manor of Guildford, 100*l.*

He bequeathed his Body to be buried in the Church of Midhurst in Sussex, if he died within an hundred Miles of it; and willed his Executor should build a new Chapel, joining to the said Parish-Church, and a Tomb to be erected therein for himself and Mabel his Wife.

He died Anno 1542. His Will was proved on the sixteenth of February that Year.

When he died, he had all these Places and Honours: He was Knight of the Order of the Garter; Lord Keeper of the King's Privy Seal; and Chancellor of the Dutchy of Lancaster.

Roger Achley, the Mayor, caused Leadenhall, the City Granary, to be plentifully stored with all Sorts of Grain, for preventing a Scarcity. The said Mayor likewise caused Moorfields to be levelled, and Bridges and Causeways to be erected over the same.

In this Year, the Chapel in the White Tower was burnt; and the Sheriffs of London and Midsex were first by Act of Parliament impowered to have the empanelling of Juries for the City Courts, each Juror so empanelled to be a Citizen worth one hundred Marks, and who, in case of Non-appearance upon the first Summons, to forfeit one Shilling and eight Pence, for the second three Shillings and four Pence, and for every Default afterwards the Penalty to be double.

A great Mortality raged in this City, which swept away a great Number of Citizens; but whether pestilential or not, my Author does not mention.

The Inhabitants of the neighbouring Villages of Islington, Hoxton and Shoreditch, having so inclosed their Grounds, that the Citizens were thereby not only debarred from their usual Exercises in those Fields, but likewise, when any of them endeavoured to divert themselves with Shooting, their Bows and Arrows were seized and destroyed before their Eyes, whilst others were indicted for Trespasses; the Citizens, greatly enraged at this rude Treatment, at the Instigation of a Turner, in a Merry-Andrew's Coat, who ran up and down the Streets, incessantly crying Spades and Shovels, assembled in great Numbers, and, running to the Fields, soon levelled Hedges, Banks and Ditches. The King sent Commissioners into the City to enquire into the Cause of the Tumult; and being met in the Convent of Grey Friars (now Christ's Hospital) they convened before them the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen to know the Occasion of the late Sedition; which when acquainted with, they reprimanded the Mayor for not being careful of the Peace of the City, and strictly enjoined him to prevent all farther Mischiefs for the future.

In the Year 1515, the Thames was frozen over, and so hard, that Carriages of all Sorts might pass on the Ice between Westminster and Lambeth.

In the Month of May, on May-Day, there were used to be May-Games; all the Citizens, who were able, going into the Woods and Meadows to divert themselves. A notable Example of this is given by Edward Hall, who saith, That King Henry VIII. in the seventh Year of his Reign, on May-Day in the Morning, with Queen Catharine his Wife, accompanied by many Lords and Ladies, rode a Maying from Greenwich to the high Ground of Shooter's-Hill; where, as they passed along, they saw a Company of tall Yeomen, clothed all in Green, with Green Hoods, and with Bows and Arrows, to the Number of two hundred: One, being their Chieftain, was called Robin Hood, who desired the King and all his Company to stay and see his Men shoot; which the King consented to;

and then Robin Hood whistling, all the two hundred Archers shot off at once, and when he whistled again, they likewise shot again. Their Arrows were so contrived in the Heads of them, that they all whistled when shot off; so that the Noise was strange and loud, and greatly delighted the King, Queen, and their Company.

Moreover, this Robin Hood desired the King and Queen, with their Retinue, to enter the Green Wood, where, in Arbors made with Boughs, and decked with Flowers, they were set and served plentifully with Venison and Wine, by Robin Hood and his Men, to their great Satisfaction.

About two Years after this, an Accident happened, which occasioned the Epithet of Evil to be added to this Day of Rejoicing, and that Day was afterwards noted by the Name of

Evil May-Day.
Fabian ib.
Hall ib.
A.D. 1517

Evil May-Day. In the ninth Year of the Reign of King Henry VIII. A great Heart-burning, and malicious Grudge, grew amongst the Englismen of the City of London, against Strangers; and namely, the Artificers found themselves much aggrieved, because such Number of Strangers were permitted to resort hither with their Wares, and to exercise Handicrafts, to the great Hindrance and Impoverishing of the King's Liege People: Which Malice grew to such a Point, that one John Lincolne, a Broker, busied himself so far in the Matter, that about Palm-Sunday, or the fifth of April, he came to one Dr. Standish, with these Words; "Sir, I understand that you shall preach at the Spital on Monday in Easter Week; and so it is, that Englismen, both Merchants and others, are undone by Strangers, who have more Liberty in this Land, than they, which is against Reason, and also against the Commonweal of this Realm. I beseech you, therefore, to declare this in your Sermon, and in so doing you shall deserve great Thanks of my Lord-Mayor, and of all his Brethren." And herewith he offered unto the said Doctor a Bill containing the Matter more at large: But Doctor Standish, wisely considering, that there might more Inconvenience arise from it, than he would wish, if he should deal in such Sort, both refused the Bill, and told Lincolne plainly, that he meant not to meddle with any such Matter in his Sermon.

Whereupon the said Lincolne, went unto one Dr. Bell, or Bele, a Canon of the aforesaid Spital, that was appointed likewise to preach upon Tuesday in Easter Week, at the same Spital, whom he persuaded to read his said Bill in his Pulpit. Which Bill contained (in effect) the Grievances that many found from Strangers, for taking the Livings away from Artificers and the Intercourse from Merchants, the Redress whereof must come from the Commons united together; for, as the Hurt touched all Men, so must all set to their helping Hands: Which Letter he read, or the chief Part thereof, comprehending much seditious Matter, and then he began with this Sentence; Calum Celi Domino, Terram autem dedit Filiis Hominum, i. e. The Heavens to the Lord of Heavens, but the Earth he hath given to the Children of Men: And upon this Text, he shewed how this Land was given to Englismen, and, as Birds defend their Nests, so ought Englismen to chorise and maintain themselves, and to hurt and grieve Aliens for Respect of their Commonwealth: And on this Text, Pugna pro Patria, i. e. Fight for your Country, he brought in, how (by God's Law) it was lawful to fight for their Country, and thus he subtilly moved the People to oppose Strangers. By this Sermon, many a light-headed Person took Courage, and spoke openly against them: And by chance there had been divers ill Things of late done by Strangers, in and about the City of London, which kindled the People's Rancour the more furiously against them.

The twenty-eighth Day of April, divers young Men of the City picked Quarrels with certain Strangers, as they passed along the Streets: Some they smote and buffeted, and some they threw in the Channel; for which the Lord-Mayor sent some of the Englismen to Prison, as Stephen Studley, Skinner, Stevenfon Betts, and others.

Then suddenly rose a secret Rumour, and no Man could tell how it began, that on May-Day, next following, the City would slay all the Aliens, inasmuch that divers Strangers fled out of the City.

This Rumour came to the Knowledge of the King's Council; whereupon the Lord Cardinal sent for the Mayor, and other of the Council of the City, giving them to understand what he had heard.

The Lord-Mayor, as one ignorant of the Matter, told the Cardinal, that he doubted not so to govern the City, but that Peace should be obtained.

The Cardinal willed him so to do, and to take heed, that, if any riotous Attempt were intended, he should by good Policy prevent it.

The Mayor coming from the Cardinal's House, about four o'Clock in the Afternoon, on May-Eve, sent for his Brethren to the Guildhall; yet was it almost seven o'Clock before the Assembly was set. Upon Conference had of the Matter, some thought it necessary, that a substantial Watch should be set of honest Citizens, which might withstand the Evil-Doers, if they went about any Mischief: Others were of contrary Opinion, as rather thinking it best, that every Man should be commanded to shut up his Doors, and to keep his Servants within. Before eight o'Clock, the Recorder was sent to the Cardinal with these Opinions, who, hearing the same, allowed the latter: And then the Recorder, and Sir Thomas More, late Under-Sheriff of London, and of the King's Council, came back again to the Guildhall, half an Hour before nine o'Clock, and there shewed the Pleasure of the King's Council; whereupon every Alderman sent to his Ward, that no Man, after nine o'Clock, should stir out of his House, but keep his Doors shut, and his Servants within, until nine o'Clock in the Morning.

After this Command was given in the Evening, as Sir John Mundy, Alderman, came from his Ward, he found two young Men in Cheap, playing at the Bucklers, and a great many young Men looking on them: for the Command seemed to be scarcely published: He ordered them to leave off; and, because one of them asked, Why? he would have them sent to the Compter: But the Prentices resisted the Alderman, derman, taking the young Man from him, and cried, 'Prentices, 'Prentices! Clubs, Clubs! then out of every Door came Clubs, and other Weapons, so that the Alderman was put to Flight. Then more People arose out of every Quarter, and forth came Serving-men, Watermen, Courtiers, and others, so that by eleven o'Clock there were in Cheap fix or seven hundred; and out of St. Paul's Church-yard came about three hundred. From all Places they gathered together, and broke open the Compter, took out the Prisoners committed thither by the Lord-Mayor for hurting the Strangers; they went also to Newgate, and and took out Studley and Betts, committed for the like Cause. The Mayor and Sheriffs were present, and made Proclamation in the King's Name, but were not obeyed.

Being thus gathered in Crowds, they ran thro' St. Nicholas's Shambles; and at St. Martin's Gate Sir Thomas More, and others, met them, desiring them to return to their Homes, which they had almost persuaded them to do; when some within St. Martin's, throwing Sticks and Stones, hurt several who were with Sir Thomas More, particularly one Nicholas Dennis, a Serjeant at Arms, who, being much wounded, cried out, Down with them; and then all the unruly Persons ran to the Doors and Windows of the Houses within St. Martin's, and spoiled all they found. After that they ran into Cornhill, and so on to a House East of Leadenball, called the Green-Gate, where dwelt one Mewtas, a Picard, or Frenchman, with whom dwelt several other Frenchmen. These they plundered; and, if they had found Mewtas, they would have struck off his Head.

They ran to other Places, and broke open and plundered the Houses of Strangers, and continued thus 'till three o'Clock in the Morning, at which Time they began to withdraw; but by the Way they were taken by the Mayor and others, and sent to the Tower, Newgate, and the Compters, to the Number of three hundred.

The Cardinal, being advertised of this by Sir Thomas Parre, sent him immediately to inform the King of it at Richmond; and he forthwith sent to learn what Condition the City was in. Sir Roger Cholmeley, Lieutenant of the Tower, during the Time of this Business, shot off certain Pieces of Ordnance against the City, but did no great Hurt. About five o'Clock in the Morning, the Earls of Shrewsbury and Surrey, Thomas Dockery, Lord Prior of St. John's, George Nevil, Lord Abergavenny, and others, came to London, with what Forces they could get together; so did the Inns of Court: But, before they came, the Business was all over.

Then were the Prisoners examined, and the Sermon of Doctor Bell called in Question, and he sent to the Tower. A Commission of Oyer and Terminer was directed to the Duke of Norfolk, and other Lords, for the Punishment of this Infurrection. The second of May, the Commissioners, with the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, and Justices, went to Guildhall, where many of the Offenders were indicted; whereupon they were arraigned, and pleaded Not Guilty, having one Day given them, 'till the fourth of May.

On which Day, the Lord-Mayor, the Duke of Norfolk, the Earl of Surrey, and others, came to sit in the Guildhall. The Duke of Norfolk entered the City with one thousand three hundred Men, and the Prisoners were brought thro' the Streets tied with Ropes; some Men, some Lads but of thirteen or fourteen Years old, to the Number of two hundred seventy-eight Persons. That Day John Lincoln, and divers others were indicted; and the next Day thirteen were adjudged to be drawn, hanged and quartered; for Execution whereof ten Pair of Gallows were set up in divers Places of the City, as at Aldgate, Blanchapleton, Graft-Street, Leadenball, before each of the Compters, at Newgate, St. Martin's, at Aldersgate, and Bishopsgate: And these Gallows were set upon Wheels to be removed from Street to Street, and from Door to Door, as the Prisoners were to be executed.

On the seventh of May, Lincoln, Sherwin, and the two Brothers named Betts, with several of their Confederates, were found guilty, and received Sentence as the former; when, within a short Time after, they were drawn upon Hurdles to the Standard in Cheapside; where Lincoln was first executed; but, as the rest were about to be turned off, a Reprieve came from the King to stay the Execution; upon which the People shouted, crying, God save the King; and thereupon the Prisoners were carried back to Prison, there to attend the King's farther Pleasure.

After this, all the Armed Men, which before had kept Watch in the City, were withdrawn; which gave the Citizens Hope that the King's Displeasure towards them was not so great as themselves conceived: Whereupon, on the eleventh of May, the King residing at his Manor of Greenwich, the Mayor, Recorder, and divers Aldermen, went in Mourning Gowns to wait upon him; and having Admittance to the Privy-Chamber Door, after they had attended there for some Time, the King, attended with several of his Nobles, came forth; whereupon they falling upon their Knees, the Recorder in the Name of the rest spake as followeth:

"Most Natural, Benign, and our Sovereign Lord, We well know that your Grace is highly displeased with us of your City of London, for the great Riot done and committed there; wherefore we assure your Grace, that none of us, nor no honest Person, were consenting to that Enormity; yet we, our Wives and Children, every Hour lament that your Favour should be taken from us; and forasmuch as light and idle Persons were the Doers of the same, we most humbly beseech your Grace to have Mercy on us for our Negligence, and Compassion on the Offenders for their Offences and Trespases."

To which the King replied; "Truly you have highly displeased and offended us, and therefore you ought to wail and be sorry for the same; and whereas you say that you the substantial Citizens were not consenting to what happened, it appeareth to the contrary; for you never moved to let them, nor stirred to fight with those whom you say were so small a Number of light Persons; wherefore we must think, and you cannot deny, but that

"you did wink at the Matter: Therefore at this Time we will neither grant you our Favour nor Good-will, nor to the Offenders Mercy; but refer to our Lord Chancellor, and he shall make you an Answer, and declare to you our Pleasure."

At this Speech of the King's, the Citizens departed very sorrowful; but, having Notice that the King intended to be at his Palace of Westminster on the twenty-second of May, they resolved to repair thither, which they did accordingly, though not without the Appointment of Cardinal Wolsey, who was then Lord Chancellor; when as a Cloth of Estate being placed at the upper End of Westminster-Hall, the King took his Place, and after him the Cardinal, the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, the Earls of Wiltshire, Surry, Shrewsbury, and Essex, with several others; the Lord-Mayor, Recorder, and Aldermen, together with many of the Commons, attending in their Liveries; when, about nine o'Clock, Order was given for the bringing forth the Prisoners, which was accordingly done; so that in they came in their Shirts, bound together with Ropes, and Halters about their Necks, to the Number of four hundred Men, and eleven Women, one after another; which Sight so moved several of the Nobility, that they became earnest Intercessors to the King for their Pardon.

When Silence was made, and they were all come into the King's Presence, the Cardinal sharply rebuked the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty, for their Negligence; and then, addressing his Speech to the Prisoners, he told them, That for their Offences against the Laws of the Realm, and against his Majesty's Crown and Dignity, they had deserved Death: Whereupon they all set up a piteous Cry, saying, Mercy, Gracious Lord, Mercy; which so moved the King, that, at the earnest Intreaty of the Lords, he pronounced them pardoned; upon which giving a great Shout, they threw up their Halters towards the Roof of the Hall, crying, God save the King. When this News was bruited abroad, several that had been in the Insurrection, and had escaped, came in upon their own accords with Ropes about their Necks, and received the Benefit of the King's Pardon; after which the Cardinal gave them several good Exhortations tending to Loyalty and Obedience; and so dismissed them, to their no small Joy; and within a while after the Gallowses that were set in the several Parts of the City, were taken down, which so far pleased the Citizens, that they expressed infinite Thanks to the King for his Clemency.

This Company was called the Black Waggon; and the Day whereon this Riot and Insurrection happened, bears the Name of Evil May-Day to these our present Times. And thus have you heard how the Citizens escaped the King's Displeasure, and were again received into Favour; though, as it is thought, not without paying a considerable Sum of Money to the Cardinal to stand their Friend, for at that Time he was in such Power, that he did all with the King.

These great Mayings and May-games, with the triumphant Setting-up the great Shaft, a principal May-pole in Leadenball-Street before the Parish Church of St. Andrew, thence called Underbush, were not so commonly used after this Insurrection on May-Day, 1517, as before.

On the first of February this same Year, there passed an Act of Common-Council, enacting, "That the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen for the Time being should monthly assign and appoint two Aldermen, and four discreet Commissioners, to sit at Guildball, in a judicial Manner, twice a Week, viz. on Wednesdays and Saturdays, there to hear and determine all Matters brought before them, between Party and Party (being Citizens and Freemen of London) in all Cases where the due Debt or Damage did not exceed forty Shillings." This Act was to continue but for two Years: But, it being found of great Relief and Advantage to the Citizens, it was afterwards continued by several Acts of the said Council, with some little Variation as to the Number of Commissioners, 'till the first Year of King James I. when this laudable Institution was confirmed for all Debts in the City under forty Shillings, as will be more particularly noted in that Year.

About the same Time, London was again grievously afflicted with the Sweating-Sickness, which carried off a great Number of Citizens; and as this Distemper was peculiar to England, and to Englishmen in foreign Parts, it went by the Appellation of Sudor Anglicus, or the English Sweat.

King Henry, in the tenth of his Reign, granted the Citizens of London the following Charter:

"Henry, by the Grace of God, King of England and France, and Lord of Ireland, to all to whom these Presents shall come, greeting.

"Whereas Edward the Third, sometime King of England, our Progenitor, by his Letters Patents, amongst other Things, has granted to the Citizens of the City of London, that all Inquisitions from hence, to be taken by the Justices, and other the Ministers of the Men of the said City, should be taken at Great St. Martin's in London, and not elsewhere, except Inquisitions to be taken in Circuits in the Tower of London, and for the Gaol-Delivery of Newgate.

"Know ye, that we, for some urgent Causes reasonable us moving, at the Petition of the Mayor and Commonalty aforesaid, and of the Citizens of the same City, have, of our special Grace, and from our certain Knowledge and mere Motion, granted, and by these Presents do, for Us and our Heirs (as much as in us is) grant to the said Mayor and Commonalty, and unto their Successors, and unto the same Citizens of the same City, that all Inquisitions by the Justices, or other our Ministers, or of our Heirs, to be from henceforth taken of the Men of our City aforesaid, shall be taken at the Guildball, within the City aforesaid, or at any other Place within the same City, where it shall from Time to Time be thought to our Justices for the Time being, before whom those Inquisitions ought hereafter to be taken, most expedient and most convenient, and not elsewhere, except Inquisitions

An infectious Distemper.

Dearest of Corn.

Hall. Chron. Polyd. Virg. A.D. 1522

The Emperor Charles V. at Lond.

In the Year 1521, an infectious Distemper raged in this City, which carried off Abundance of the Citizens; yet nevertheless, by the great Scarcity of Corn, Wheat was sold at twenty Shillings the Quarter, and in some Places in the Country at six-and-twenty and eight Pence, an excessive Price at that Time!

Next Year, the Emperor, Charles the Fifth, came into England to pay a Visit to King Henry, who received him at Dover, and conducted him to Greenwich, where he was received by the Queen his Aunt; from whence he was conducted by their Majesties and the Nobility to London, which on that Occasion was embellished with the most rich and pompous Decorations that could be devised, with a Variety of magnificent Pageants; and as those great Princes approached the City, they were received by the Mayor, Aldermen and Sheriffs in their Formalities, attended by a great Number of the principal Citizens on Horseback, richly accoutered; by whom they were conducted thro' the City to the Imperial Apartments in Black Friars; and the Princes and Nobility of his Retinue to theirs in the new Palace at Bridewell.

The English, in all Parts of France, but especially at Bourdeaux, having their Effects seized by Order of the French King; the French Ambassador, residing in London, was ordered to be confined to his House; and all the Merchants of his Nation were committed to Prison, and adjudged to pay large Sums for their Liberty: However, many of them, after a Confinement of ten Days, were released, upon their giving Security to appear before the Lord-Mayor against a certain Day, to pay their several Fines. The King, now engaged in War with France, had an immediate Occasion for Money, and, not willing to wait the Meeting of Parliament, borrowed of the City the Sum of twenty thousand Pounds; but the Lenders being in a manner compelled to advance the same, it was raised with great Difficulties and Heart-burnings among the Citizens.

Sir John Milbern, Draper, Mayor, 1522, builded Alms-Houses, fourteen in Number, by the Crossed Friars Church in London, there to be placed fourteen poor People, and left to the Drapers certain Messuages, Tenements, and Garden-Plats, in the Parish of St. Olave in Hart-Street, for Performance of Stipends to the said Alms-People, and other Uses. See more hereafter in Aldgate Ward.

At this Time, Christian King of Denmark, with his Queen (Niece to Queen Catharine) came into England to pay the King and Queen a Visit; and, being arrived in London, they were received by the Mayor and Citizens with the utmost Splendor, and by them conducted to the Bishop of Bath's Palace, the Place appointed for their Residence; from whence, on St. Peter's Eve following, they were attended by the prime Nobility, who conducted them to the King's Head in Cheap-side, where they beheld the pompous March of the City Watch; and afterwards were sumptuously entertained by Sir Thomas Baldry, the Mayor.

Ibid. A.D. 1523 King and Queen of Denmark at Lond.

King Henry being in great Want of Money for the Prosecution of his War in France, Cardinal Wolsey, his Prime Minister, in a very illegal and arbitrary Manner, issued out Commissions in the King's Name, for levying the sixth Part of all the Goods and Chattels of the Laity, and a fourth of those of the Clergy; by which absolute and tyrannical Proceeding, the whole Kingdom was so much inflamed, that the People in all Parts were ready to break out in a general Rebellion; which so greatly affected Henry, that he openly disavowed those irregular Proceedings; and by his Letter to the Mayor and Citizens of London declared, that he would not exact any Thing of his People by Compulsion, nor demand any Thing of them but by way of Benevolence, as had been practised by his Predecessors: But this soon discovered itself to be only an Artifice to extort large Sums under another Name; for what the People refused to pay to the Cardinal's Commission, they now found themselves obliged to raise by way of Benevolence.

Ibid. Lord Herbert's Life of Henry VIII. A.D. 1525 Wolsey's Attempt to raise Money in an arbitrary Manner.

The Citizens of London being the first to be rated to this Benevolence, the Cardinal sent for the Mayor and Aldermen, and acquainted them in an expostulatory Manner of his Majesty's most gracious Condescension, in remitting the Payment of the sixth of all their Effects; and, in lieu thereof, had only appointed them to pay a certain Benevolence; therefore he desired them to return, and make proper Assessments in their several Wards for raising the same. To which the Recorder answered, That by a Statute of the first of Richard the Third such Benevolences were abolished. To which the Cardinal replied, That Laws made by Usurpers are not obligatory to legitimate Princes; that Richard was not only a Tyrant, but a Murderer of his own Nephews, therefore more fit to suffer by Law, than to make any; and who did that with no other View, than by a popular and licentious Way to ingratiate himself with the People, as the only Means to support his Usurpation: But our King, being the true and undoubted Heir to the Crown, could be thereby no farther affected than it pleased himself; it being absurd to imagine, that a Statute contrived by a factious Assembly, and confirmed by one of the

The Cardinal thereupon resolved to try the Mayor and Aldermen separately, to know what each were willing to contribute; and, having begun with the Mayor, he excused himself from making any Declaration in that Affair, 'till he had consulted the Common-Council thereon, who, by their former Deportment, the Cardinal had Reason to believe, they never would agree to; he therefore desired the Mayor and Aldermen in their private Capacities to give what they thought proper: However, before they complied with the Cardinal's Proposal, they communicated the same to the Common-Council, who, instead of agreeing to it, in a great Rage were for expelling Richard Greyham, John Hewster and Richard Gibson, three of their Members, for speaking in Behalf of so great an Imposition; yet, without coming to any Resolution in that respect, they broke up in the greatest Ferment: However, this Stand occasioned the Benevolence to be rejected in all Parts of the Kingdom. In this Year a great Mortality raged in London, which occasioned the King's removing to Eltham, and the Adjournment of the Term, whereby the City was so much deserted by its Inhabitants, that the great Festival was denominated the Still Christmas.

The Splendor of Cardinal Wolfey.

About the same Time, the Cardinal being appointed Ambassador Extraordinary to the Court of France; on his Way thither he rode thro' the City in the greatest Pomp, attended by a numerous Train of the Prime Nobility, Gentry, and Prelates, who, together with his and their Domesticks, formed a Body of twelve hundred Horsemen. This magnificent Cavalcade was preceded by sixty Sumpter-Horses and Mules, and eighty Baggage-Carriages, which were followed by a great Number of Gentlemen, three in a Rank, richly dressed in Velvet, with large golden Chains about their Necks; then followed two Gentlemen, each carrying a very large Silver Crofs; next came two others, with a stately Silver Column each, followed by two other Gentlemen, one carrying the Great Seal of England, and the other the Cardinal's Hat; after them rode a Gentleman carrying the Cardinal's Portmanteau of Scarlet, richly embroidered, with a Cloak therein; then came the Cardinal gorgeously apparalled, mounted on a stately Mule, followed by a led Horse, and a Mule trapped with Crimfon Velvet;

then came the Nobility, Gentry, and Clergy, followed by his and their Domesticks, all clothed in dark Orange-coloured Coats, with T. C. embroidered on each, that is, Thomas Cardinal. And his Servants daily attending in his House were about four hundred, omitting his Servants Servants, which were many. He had in his Hall continually three Tables, or Boards, kept with three principal Officers; to wit, a Steward, who was always a Priest; a Treasurer, a Knight; and a Comptroller, an Esquire: Also a Cofferer, being a Doctor; three Marshalls; three Yeomen-Ushers in the Hall; besides two Grooms and Almoners: Then in the Hall-Kitchen, two Clerks of the Kitchen, a Clerk Comptroller, a Surveyor of the Dresser, a Clerk of the Spicery; all which together kept also a continual Mefs in the Hall. Also, in his Hall-Kitchen he had, of Master-Cooks two, and of other Cooks, Labourers, and Children of the Kitchen, twelve Persons; four Yeomen of the ordinary Scullery, two Yeomen of the Pastry, with two other Paftelers under the Yeomen.

See. See.

In the Privy-Kitchen, he had a Master-Cook, who went daily in Velvet and Sattin, with a Chain of Gold about his Neck, and two other Yeomen, and a Groom. In the Scalding-house, a Yeoman and two Grooms. In the Pantry, two Yeomen. In the Buttery, two Yeomen, two Grooms, and two Pages. In the Chandery, two Yeomen. In the Wafery, two Yeomen. In the Wardrobe of Beds, the Master of the Wardrobe, and ten other Persons attending. In the Laundry, a Yeoman, a Groom, thirty Pages, two Yeomen-Purveyors, and one Groom. In the Bake-house, a Yeoman and two Grooms. In the Wood-Yard, a Yeoman and a Groom. In the Barn one. In the Garden, a Yeoman and two Grooms: A Yeoman of his Stage; a Master of his Horse; a Clerk of the Stable; a Yeoman of the same; the Saddler; the Farrier; a Yeoman of his Chariot; a Sumpterman; a Yeoman of his Stirrup; a Muletier, and sixteen Grooms of his Stable, every one of them keeping four Geldings; Porters at his Gate; two Yeomen, and two Grooms. In the Armoury, a Yeoman and a Groom.

In his Chapel he had a Dean, a great Divine, and a Man of excellent Learning; a Sub-dean, a Repeater of the Choir, a Gospeller, a Pistler; of singing Priests, ten; a Master of the Children; twelve Seculars, being singing Men of the Chapel; ten singing Children, with a Servant to attend upon the Children. In the Vestry, a Yeoman and two Grooms over and beside divers Retainers, that came thither at principal Feasts.

For the Furniture of his Chapel, it exceedeth my Capacity to declare, or to speak of the Number of costly Ornaments and rich Jewels that were used in the same continually. There have been seen in Procession about the Hall, four and forty very rich Copes worn, all of one Suit, besides the rich Croffes and Candlesticks, and other Ornaments belonging to the Furnishment of the same. He had two Crofs-Bearers, and two Pillar-Bearers, in his great Chamber; and in his Privy-Chambers these Persons; first, The Chief Chamberlain and Vice-Chamberlain: Of Gentlemen-men-Ushers (beside one in his Privy Chamber) he had twelve daily Waiters; and of Gentlemen-Waiters, in his Privy Chamber, he had six; of Lords nine or ten, who had (each of them) two Men allowed to attend upon them, except the Earl of Derby, who always was allowed five Men. Then had he of Gentlemen Cup-bearers, Carvers, Sewers, both of the Privy Chamber, and of the Great Chamber, with Gentlemen (daily Waiters there) forty Persons: Of Yeomen-Ushers six: Of Grooms in his Chamber eight: Of Yeomen in his Chamber forty-five daily. He had also Alms-Men, sometime more in Number than at other times.

There were attending on his Table, daily, of Doctors and Chaplains (besides them of his Chapel) sixteen: A Clerk of his Closet, two Secretaries, two Clerks of his Signet, and four Counsellors learned in the Laws. And forasmuch as it was necessary to have divers Officers of Chancery to attend upon him; that is to say, the Clerk of the Crown, a Riding Clerk, a Clerk of the Hamper, and a Clerk of the Wax; then a Clerk of the Cheek, as well upon the Chaplains, as on the Yeomen of his Chamber; he gave Allowance to them all. He had also four Footmen, who were clothed in rich running Coats, whenever he rode on a Journey. Then had he an Herald at Arms, a Serjeant at Arms, a Physician, an Apothecary, four Minstrels, a Keeper of his Tents, an Armourer, an Instructor of his Wards, two Yeomen of his Wardrobe and Robes, and a Keeper of his Chamber, continually in the Court.

He had also in his House the Surveyor of York, and a Clerk of the Green Cloth. All these were daily attending, down-lying and up-rising, and at Meals. He kept in his great Chamber a continual Table for the Chamberlains and Gentlemen Officers; having with them a Mess of young Lords, and another of Gentlemen. And besides all these there was not an Officer, Gentleman, or other Person of Worth, but was allowed in the House, some three, some two, and all other one at least, which amounted to a great Number of Persons; besides Retainers, Suitors, and who most commonly dined in his Hall.

Two Ambassadors Extraordinary arrived from France, and made their publick Entry into this City in a pompous Manner, attended by a great Number of their Countrymen of the first Quality, for whom Apartments were provided in the Bishop of London's Palace; where they were presented by the Mayor and Citizens with five fat Oxen, twenty Sheep, twelve Swans, twelve Cranes, twelve Pheasants, four Dozen of Partridges, twenty Sugar-loaves, eight Hogheads of Wine, and all Sorts of Spices, &c.

By a great Scarcity of Corn, a terrible Famine happened in this City, whereby many of the meaner Sort of Citizens were starved; and, had it not been for the King's paternal Care in sending a thousand Quarters of Corn to the City, and the laudable Care of the Mayor and Sheriffs in preventing the Bread-Carts of Stratford from being plundered by the Populace, many more must have suffered by this dreadful Calamity. In the mean Time, great Quantities of Wheat and Rye being imported by the Anseatick Merchants from Dantzick, Corn became much cheaper in this City than in any other Part of the Kingdom.

A War happening between England and the Emperor, it put an entire Stop to the Trade with Spain; whereby the Clothiers became such Sufferers, that, not being able to dispose of their Goods, they were obliged to dismiss their Servants; which had like to have occasioned Insurrections in divers Parts of the Kingdom: Wherefore the Cardinal Minister ordered several of the principal Merchants of this City to attend him, whom he simply threatened, that if they did not take off Cloths, &c. from the Clothiers, as usual, (notwithstanding the Merchants being as great Sufferers by the War as the Clothiers, by their not being able to export one Piece to the Imperial Dominions, where formerly their principal Commerce lay) the Cloth-Market should be removed from Blackwell Hall in the City, to Westminster: However, it was neither in the Power of the King, nor in that of his Minister, to execute the aforesaid Injunction; wherefore Commerce continued on the same Foot as before till the Conclusion of a Peace.

At a Common-Council, on the first of June, 18 Hen. VIII. it was agreed, granted, ordained, and enacted, "That, if hereafter any Freeman or Freewoman of this City take any Apprentice, and within the Term of seven Years suffer the same Apprentice to go at his large Liberty and Pleasure; and within or after the said Term agree with his said Apprentice for a certain Sum of Money, or otherwise, for his said Service, and within or after the End of the said Term, the said Freeman present the said Apprentice to the Chamberlain of the City, and by good Deliberation, and upon his Oath made to the same City, the same Freeman or Freewoman assureth and affirmeth to the said Chamberlain, that the said Apprentice hath fully served his said Term as Apprentice: Or if any Freeman or Freewoman of this City take any Apprentice which at the Time of the said taking hath any Wife: Or, if any Freeman or Freewoman of this City, give any Wages to his or her Apprentice, or suffer the said Apprentices to take any Part of their own Getting or Gains: Or if any Freeman or Freewoman of this City hereafter colour any foreign Goods, or from henceforth buy or sell for any Person or Persons, or with or to any Person or Persons, being foreign or Foreigners, Cloths, Silks, Wine, Oils, or any other Goods, or Merchandize, whatsoever they be, whether he take any Thing or Things for his or their Wages or Labour, or not: Or if any Person or Persons being free of this City, by any Colour or deceitful Means, from henceforth do buy, sell, or receive of any Apprentice within this City, any Money, Goods, Merchandize, or Wares, without the Assent or Licence of his Master or Mistress; and upon Examination duly proved before the Chamberlain of the said City for the Time being, and the same reported by the Mouth of the said Chamberlain, at a Court to be holden by the Mayor and the Aldermen of the same City in their Council-Chamber: That as well the said Ma-

"Ye shall constantly and devoutly on your "Knees, every Day, serve God, Morning and

"the right Practice thereof in your Life and

"our towards all Men, and especially to all your
"Governors. And according to your Carriage, "expect your Reward, for Good or Ill, from
"God and your Friends."

It is said in the Liber Albus, that none was made Apprentice, or at least admitted into the Freedom of the City, unless he were Liberæ Conditionis, that is, of the Quality of a Gentleman born. And that, if, after he was made free, it was known he was of servile Condition, he lost his Freedom: As certain Citizens, Thomas le Bedel, and others did, that held Lands of the Bishop of London in Villenagio.

*Sweating-

The Sweating-Sickness broke out anew in the City, with such Violence, that it carried off a great Number of People in the Space of five or six Hours; which not only occasioned the adjourning of the Term, but likewise suspended the annual Solemnity of the nocturnal March of the City Watch, which, on Account of its great Expence to the City, was afterwards forbidden by the King, and discontinued 'till the second of Edward VI.

A Thousand Men raised at the City Expence. Water brought to Lothbury. Earl of Surry tried at Guildhall.*

ELEVEN Gentlemen of the Law being promoted to the Dignity of the Coif, they gave a splendid and elegant Entertainment in the Bishop of Ely's Palace in Holborn for five Days successively; at which were present the King, Queen, Foreign Ministers, Lord-Mayor, Judges, Master of the Rolls, Aldermen of the City, Masters of Chancery, Serjeants at Law, Principal Merchants of London, together with many Knights and Esquires, and a certain Number of Citizens belonging to the chief Companies of the City.

This being one of the greatest Entertainments recorded in History, an Account thereof can't be unacceptable to the Reader: But, as there were three Poulterers concerned in providing the same with Poultry, and only one of their Accounts to be come at, the Quantity of Provisions will thereby be considerably lessened: However, tho' the following be only Part of the Bill of Fare, it will nevertheless appear to have been one of the greatest Banquets that ever was given in this City, to one of the most numerous Companies, as above specified; and tho' the said Entertainment was given but about two hundred Years ago, the subjoined Account will shew the vast Disparity between the Prices of Provisions then and now:

Quarrel between the Bishop of London
and his Clergy.

The Reformation of Religion advancing apace in this Kingdom, Mr. Tindal and others translated and published the New Testament in the English Tongue; but Stokeley, Bishop of London, ordered as many of the Copies thereof to be bought up, as could be got; which, out of a false and furious Zeal, he caused to be burnt at St. Paul's Cross. But the Clergy fell into a Premunire, for supporting Cardinal Wolsey's Legatine Power: Wherefore the Convocation petitioned the King to accept of the Sum of one hundred thousand Pounds, in full Satisfaction for their Offence; which Henry agreeing to, they were soon after called upon for the Money. The Bishops, to ease themselves in raising the said Sum, endeavoured to draw in the parochial Incumbents of their respective Dioceses to contribute towards the same: And Stokeley, Bishop of London, attempting to lead the Way with the Priests of this City, they so highly resented the same, that in an outrageous Manner they forced themselves into the Chapter-house of St. Paul's Cathedral, where they beat and abused the Bishop's Servants. This so intimidated their Master, that, for the Security of his own Person, he not only forgave them, but, giving them his Blessing, exhorted them to depart in Charity. But the Bishop by this Artifice escaping unhurt, instead of adhering to the Remission granted by him, he applied to the Lord Chancellor for Redress, who thereupon sent to the Mayor to secure the Persons that were chiefly concerned in the Riot. Pursuant to this Order, fifteen Priests and their Accomplices were arrested and committed to the Tower and other Prisons; where they suffered a long Duress, to the no great Honour of that implacable Prelate.

The King, out of his great Affection to the Citizens of London, granted them the following Charter:

"Henry the Eighth, by the Grace of God, King of England and France, Defender of the Faith, and Lord of Ireland, to all to whom these present Letters shall come, greeting.

"Whereas we by our Letters Patents, the Date whereof is the eighteenth Day of June, in the thirteenth Year of our Reign, have of

"our special Grace, and from our certain Knowledge and mere Motion, given and granted for Us and our Heirs, forasmuch as in us then was, to Sir William Sidney, Knight, the Office of Keeper of the great Beam and common Balance or Weight within our City of London, for weighing all Merchandizes of Averdupoize, and also all Weights whatsoever within the same City; which Office one William Stafford, deceased, lately exercised and occupied, by what Name soever the same Office was named or known; and have ordained, made and constituted the said Sir William Sidney Keeper of the great Beam, Balance and Weight, and of all other Weights whatsoever; and also of the Weights of all Spices, Wares, Commodities, Merchandizes and Things in the City aforesaid, there to be weighed and accustomed, and used to be bought and sold by Weight.

Right of weighing at the Beam.

"And have granted also, by our said Letters Patents, to the said Sir William, Authority and Power to make, name and assign, from time to time, all manner of Clerks, Porters, Servants and Ministers of the great Beam and Balance, and of the Iron Beam, and of the Beam of the Stillyard, and of the Weights aforesaid; and also all other Clerks, Porters, Servants and Ministers to the same Office belonging; and also to remove the same or any of them, and other or others to make, put and constitute in his or their Place, as often as to him shall seem expedient, to have, occupy and exercise the Office and Offices aforesaid, together with the Authority aforesaid, to the said Sir William Sidney, by himself, or by his Deputy or Deputies, during our Pleasure, to his proper Use and Behoof, with all and singular Commodities, Houses, Advantages, Profits, Fees and Emoluments to the said Office in our Time, or in the Times of any of our Progenitors, Kings of England, due and accustomed, pertaining or belonging, in as ample Manner and Form, as any Person, having or occupying such Office before this Time, had, received or enjoyed the same: And have given and granted the same Commodities, Houses, Advantages, Profits, Fees and Emoluments, and all and singular the Premises, for the Exercise and Occupation of the Office aforesaid, in Manner and Form aforesaid, to the said Sir William, during our Pleasure, to the Use and Behoof of the said Sir William, without Account, or any other Thing to Us or our Heirs, in this Behalf, for the Premises to be made, given or paid; altho' express Mention be not made of the true yearly Value, or of any Certainty of the Premises, or any Grant or Grants by us or any of our Progenitors to the said William before this Time made, contained in the said Letters Patents above specified, or any Statute, Act, Ordinance, Restraint or Provision before this Time made or provided to the contrary, or any other Thing, Cause or Matter whatsoever in any Thing notwithstanding, as by our Letters Patents fully appeareth; which our Pleasure in that Behalf we will by these shall be determined; and which Letters Patents the same William Sidney hath surrendered into our Chancery to be cancelled, to the Intent we "would

"would vouchsafe to grant our Letters Patents
"to the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of "our City of London.

"And because now of late we understand of
"the grievous Complaint of our well-beloved the "Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of our
"said City of London, that the said Lord Ed"ward, some time King of England, the Se"cond, our Progenitor, by his Charter, dated
"the 18th Day of June, in the 12th Year of his "Reign, amongst other Things, granted to the "then Citizens of our said City, Predecessors to
"the now Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens
"afore said, that the Weights and Beams for
"the weighing of Merchandizes between Mer"chants and Merchants, of which the Profits
"growing and Knowledge of the same pertain
"to the Commonalty of the said City, should "remain to be kept, at the Will of the said
"Commonalty, in the Custody of two sufficient
"Men of the same City, expert in that Office,
"to be thereunto chosen by the Commonalty
"of the same City; and that they should in "no wise be committed to any others, than to
"such as should be so chosen; as by the same
"his Letters Patents, which we have seen, more "fully appeareth.

"And because also the Lord Henry, some "time King of England, the Fourth, our Pro-
"genitor, by his Letters Patents dated the "25th Day of May, in the first Year of his "Reign, of his favourable Grace, amongst "other Things, granted to the said Citizens of "the said City Tronage; that is to say, the "Weighing of Lead, Wax, Pepper, Alum,
"Madder, and all other such Wares within the
"said City for ever: Which Letters Patents we,
"of our special Grace, by our Charter dated
"the 12th Day of July, in the first Year of our "Reign, ratified and confirmed to the same
"then Citizens, and to their Successors, as by "the same our Letters Patents more fully ap-
"peareth: By which Letters Patents, and by the "continual Keeping of the Office of Beam, Ba"lance, Weights, and of other the Premises
"Time out of Mind, by the said Citizens and "their Predecessors, and by the Exercise and
"Occupation of the same within the said City,
"without any challenging, it is manifest, and
"without any Difficulty evident and apparent
"unto us, that said Office of the great Beam and "common Balance ordained for weighing between "Merchants and Merchants, and the Office of "Keeping of the great Balance or Weight within
"our City of London, for the Weighing of all
"Merchandizes of Averdupoize, and also of all "Weights whatsoever within the said City; and "also of all Spices, Wares, Merchandizes, and "Things in the City afore said, there to be "weighed; and also the Authority and Power
"to make, name, and assign all and all Manner
"of Clerks, Porters, Servants, and Ministers of "the said great Beam and Balance, and of the "Iron Beam, and of the Beam of the Stillyard;
"and also all other Clerks, Porters, Servants,
"and Ministers to the said Office pertaining,
"and the Issues and Revenues thereof coming,
"and all and singular the Premises pertaining
"and of antient Right belonging to the Mayor,

"Commonalty and Citizens, we will in no wise
"be wronged.

"And to the End that from henceforth all
"Ambiguities in such Case might be taken away,
"and that the said Mayor and Commonalty,
"and Citizens, and their Successors, may not in "Time to come be impeached, impleaded, or "grieved by us, or our Heirs or Successors, or "any of our Justices or Ministers, of or for the "Premises, or any of them, we will and grant
"to the now Mayor, Commonalty, and Citi"zens, and to their Successors, that the Weights
"and Beams for weighing of Merchandizes be"tween Merchant and Merchant, whereof the "Profits growing, and the Knowledge of them,
"to pertain to the Commonalty of the City afore-
"said, shall remain at the Will of the Common-
"alty of the same City, to be kept in the Cus"tody of good sufficient Men of the same City,
"expert in that Office, and to be thereunto
"chosen by the Commonalty afore said, and "that to others then so to be chosen in no
"wise they be committed; and that they shall "have Tronage; that is to say, the Weighing of "Wax, Lead, Pepper, Alum, Madder, and all
"other such-like Wares within the said City for "ever.

"Willing also to do the said Mayor and Com-
"monalty a more ample Pleasure in this Behalf,
"we have, of our favourable Grace, and from
"our certain Knowledge and mere Motion, given
"and granted, and by these Presents do give and

"of them, and to make, constitute, and place
"other in his or their Place, as often as to them
"shall seem expedient, to have, occupy, and "exercise the Office afore said, together with "the Authority and Power afore said, to the "said

"said Mayor and Commonalty and Citizens,
 "and their Successors, by themselves, their
 "Deputy or Deputies for ever, to their own
 "proper Use and Behoof, together with all
 "and singular Commodities, Houses, Ad-

 "and Form as the same Citizens and their "Predecessors, or any other Person or Persons "having or occupying the same Office before
 "this Time, had and received, or enjoyed the
 "same.

"And also we give and grant by these Presents

 Privilege.

City Rec.
 Guildhall.
 A.D. 1532

A general Muster of the Citizens.

In the twenty-third Year of King Henry, a general Muster of the Citizens was held at Mile-End; wherein were taken the Names of all the defensible Men within the City of London, and the Liberties thereof, from the Age of sixteen to that of sixty; and also an Account of the Weapons, Armour, and other military Accoutrements belonging to the City.

The Citizens, on this Occasion, appeared in white Apparel, with Caps and Feathers of the same Colour; and the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, Recorder, and Sheriffs, in white Armour, and Coats of black Velvet, with the City Arms embroidered therein, and, having large golden Chains, were mounted on stately Couriers, magnificently accoutred. On their Heads were Velvet Caps, and in their right Hands gilt Battleaxes. Each of the Aldermen and the Recorder was attended by four Halberdiers, in white Silk or Buff Coats, with gilt Halberds; and the Lord-Mayor by sixteen portly Men, in white Sattin Jackets, with Caps and Feathers, and Chains of Gold, with long gilt Halberds, together with four Footmen in white Sattin, and two Pages in crimson Velvet, with Gold Brocade Waistcoats, mounted on stately Horses, with gorgeous Furniture; one of whom carried the Lord-Mayor's Helmet, and the other his Pole-ax, both richly gilt. Most of the Citizens of Distinction, on this Occasion, were apparelled in white Silk or Sattin, with Chains of Gold, and a Variety of rich Jewels.

The Citizens rendezvoused and were mustered early in the Morning at Mile-End; and, before Nine in the Forenoon, they began to march; and, entering at Aldgate, proceeded through the City in admirable Order to Westminster; where they passed in Review before the King and most of the Nobility, who were highly delighted to see this splendid and most pompous Appearance:
 From thence they marched round St. James's Park, and down Holborn, to Leadenhall, where they separated at Five o'Clock: Whereby it appears, that the March took up eight Hours.

The King, having divorced Catherine his Consort, espoused Anne Bullen, or Bolaine (descended from Godfrey Bolaine, Mayor of this City in the Year 1457,) and intending her Coronation, he acquainted the Lord-Mayor therewith by Letter; wherein he commanded him not only to make all the Preparations necessary for conducting his royal Consort from Greenwich by Water to the Tower of London, but likewise to adorn the City after the most magnificent Manner, for her Passage thro' the same to Westminster.

As the City on this Occasion appears to have been decorated in a more pompous Manner than at any Time heretofore, I shall, for the Satisfaction of the Reader, insert a full Account of the same.

In Obedience to the royal Precept, the Mayor and Common-Council not only ordered the Company of Haberdashers (of which the Mayor was a Member) to prepare a magnificent Barge for the Bachelors, but they likewise enjoined all the City Corporations to provide themselves with Barges, and to get the same adorned in a more sumptuous Manner than usual, and especially to have the same supplied with good Bands of Musick.

On the 29th of May, the Time prefixed for this pompous Procession by Water, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons assembled at St. Mary-Hill; the Mayor and Aldermen in Scarlet, with golden Chains, and those of the Equestrian Order with Collars of SS. At One o'Clock they went on board the City Barge at Billingsgate, which was most magnificently decorated, and attended by fifty stately Barges belonging to the several Companies of the City, with each its own Corporation on board; and, for the better Regulation of this luminous Procession, Orders were given, that the Barges should keep at least twice their Lengths asunder.

Thus regulated, the City Barge was preceded by another, which was mounted with Ordnance, and the Statues of Savages, Dragons, and other

King's and Queen's Arms at her Head and Stern, besides an agreeable Variety of Streamers and Flags, containing the Companies Arms, and those of the Merchant-Adventurers; and the Shrouds and Ratlines being hung with a Number of small Bells, produced a pleasant Noise; and on the Left was a Barge which contained a beautiful Mount, on which stood a white Falcon crowned, perching upon a golden Stump, encircled with red and white Roses, being the Queen's Emblem; and round the Mount sat divers beautiful Virgins, singing and playing melodiously. Then followed the other Barges in pleasant Order, according to their Stations and proper Distances; in which beautiful Order they proceeded below Greenwich. But, in returning, the Procession began with the last Barge outward-bound, wherein were the Mayor's and Sheriffs Officers, which was followed by those of the inferior Companies, and so ascending to the Lord-Mayor's, which immediately preceded that of the Queen, which was closely attended by the Batchelors or State Barge, with the Magnificence whereof her Majesty was highly pleased; and, being arrived at the Tower of London, she returned the Mayor and Citizens hearty Thanks for their pompous Attendance.

The grand Procession from the Tower.

Two Days after, the Lord-Mayor, in a Gown of crimson Velvet, and a rich Collar of SS, attended by the Sheriffs and two Domesticks in red and white Damask, went to receive the Queen at the Tower of London; whence the Sheriffs returned to see that every Thing was in Order for the Accommodation of the Cavalcade: For which Purpose the Streets were just before new gravelled, from the Tower to Temple-Bar, and railed in on each Side; within which, near Grass-Church, stood a Body of Anseatick Merchants, and next to them the several Corporations of the City in their Formalities, reaching to the Aldermens Station at the upper End of Cheapside; and on the adverse Side were placed the City Constables, dressed in Silk and Velvet, with Staffs in their Hands, to prevent the Breaking-in of the Mob, or any other Disturbance. Grass-church-Street and Cornhill were, on this Occasion, hung with crimson and scarlet Cloth, and Goldsmiths-Row, in Cheapside, with gold Brocades, Velvet, and rich Tapestry.

Every Thing being ready, the Procession began to move from the Tower of London, preceded by twelve of the French Ambassador's Domesticks in blue Velvet, whose Horses were trapped with blue Sarsnet, interspersed with white Crosses; after whom marched those of the Equestrian Order, two and two, followed by the Judges in their Robes; then the Knights of the Bath, in violet Gowns purfled with Meniver. Next came Abbots, Barons, Bishops, Earls, and Marquisses in their Robes, two and two; then the Lord Chancellor, followed by the Venetian Ambassador and the Archbishop of York; next the Ambassador of France and the Archbishop of Canterbury, followed by two Gentlemen, representing the Dukes of Normandy and Aquitain; after whom rode the Lord-Mayor of London, with his Mace and Garter in his Coat of Arms; then the Duke of Sussex, Lord High Steward, and the Lord Howard (in the Absence of his Brother the Duke of Nor- folk) Deputy Marshal of England; next followed all the other great Officers of State in their Robes, carrying the Symbols of their several Offices; then the Nobility in crimson Velvet, and all the Queen's Officers in Scarlet, followed by her Chancellor, uncovered, who immediately preceded his Mistress, sitting in a Litter, covered on all Sides with a silver Tissue, and carried by two beautiful Pads, cloathed in white Damask, and led by her Footmen. Her Majesty was dressed in a silver Brocade, with a Mantle of the same furred with Ermine, with her Hair disheveled, and a Chaplet upon her Head, beset with Jewels of an inestimable Value; and over the Litter was carried a Canopy of Cloth of Gold, with a silver Bell at each Angle, supported by sixteen Knights alternately, by four at a Time; then came the Queen's Chamberlain, followed by her Master of Horse, leading a stately Pad, with a Side-Saddle and Trappings of silver Tissue. Next came seven Ladies in crimson Velvet, faced with a golden Brocade, mounted on beautiful Horses, richly trapped with Gold; then followed two Chariots covered with Cloth of Gold, in the first of which were the Duchesses of Norfolk and Marchioness of Dorset, and in the second four Ladies in crimson Velvet; then followed seven Ladies in the same Apparel on Horseback, with magnificent Trappings; next came the third Chariot all in white, with six Ladies in crimson Velvet; then followed a fourth all in red, with eight Ladies, in the same Dress with the former; next came thirty Gentlewomen, Attendants to the Ladies of Honour, on Horseback, dressed in Silks and Velvet; and the Cavalcade was closed by the Guards, well mounted and richly accoutred.

Her Dress.

The pompous Procession being arrived in Fenchurch-Street, the Queen stopped at a beautiful Pageant, crowded with Children in mercatorial Habits; who, addressing themselves to her Majesty, congratulated her upon the joyful Occasion of her happy Arrival in the City. Thence she proceeded to Grass-church Corner, where was erected a very magnificent Pageant, at the Charge of the Company of Anseatick Merchants; wherein was represented the Mount Parnassus, with the Fountain of Helicon, of white Marble, out of which arose four Springs about four Feet high, centering at the Top in a small Globe, from which issued Plenty of Rhenish Wine till Night; on the Mount sat Apollo, at his Feet Calliope, one of the Muses, and beneath, the rest of her Sister Deities, surrounding the Mount, and playing upon a Variety of musical Instruments; at whose Feet were inscribed, in Letters of Gold, divers curious Epigrams proper to the Solemnity.

The Pageants in the several Streets.

Thence the Queen proceeded to Leadenhall, where stood a stately Pageant, representing a Hillock, encompassed with red and white Roses; above which was a golden Stump, and a little higher a Tippe, with a celestial Rose, from which descended a white Falcon, and perched upon the Stump; which was quickly followed by an Angel in a celestial Choir, who put a Crown of Gold upon his Head. A little lower on the Hillock sat St. Anne, surrounded by her Progeny, one of whom made a notable Oration to

to

to the Queen, touching the Prolificacy of its Mother, earnestly wishing, that her Majesty might be blessed with the same good Fortune.

Then the Proceſſion advanced to the Conduit in Cornhill, where the Graces ſat enthroned, with the Fountain of Grace inceſſantly playing with Wine before them, and underneath a Poet, who deſcribed the Qualities peculiar to each of them, and preſented the Queen with their ſeveral Gifts.

Thence the Cavalcade proceeded to the great Conduit, oppoſite Mercers-Hall in Cheapſide, which, on that Occaſion, was beautifully painted with a Variety of curious Emblems, and which, during the Solemnity, and remaining Part of the Day, ran with a Diverſity of Wines, for the Entertainment of the Populace.

Then moving forward to the End of Wood-Street, the Standard there was finely embellished with royal Portraits, encompassed by a Number of Flags, whereon were painted a Variety of Coats of Arms and Trophies, and above was a fine Concert of Vocal and Inſtrumental Muſick. And, paſſing the Croſs at the End of Gutter-Lane, the Proceſſion proceeded to the Aldermens Station, near the little Conduit at the upper End of Cheapſide; where John Baker, the Recorder, in a very elegant Oration, addreſſed the Queen, and, in the Name of the Citizens, preſented her with a thouſand Marks in a Purſe of golden Tiſſue; which ſhe gratefully received.

Then advancing to the little Conduit aforeſaid, in a rich Pageant were ſeated the Goddeſſes Pallas, Juno, and Venus; before whom ſtood the God Mercury, who, in their Names, preſented the Queen with a golden Ball trebly divided, purporting their three Gifts of Wiſdom, Riches, and Felicity. And, being come to St. Paul's Gate, a ſtately Pageant preſented itſelf, wherein ſat three Ladies in ſumptuous Apparel, with each a Chaplet on her Head, with this Inſcription:

Regina Anna, proſpere procede, & regna.

The middlemoſt of thoſe Ladies held a Tablet in her Hand, whereon was portrayed a crowned Angel, over whoſe Head was written,

Veni amica, coronaberis.

She on the right Hand ſupported a Tablet of Silver, on which was inſcribed,

Domine, dirige greſſus meos.

And ſhe on the Left held one of Gold, with an azure Inſcription,

Confido in Domino.

And underneath their Feet were the following Lines:

Regina Anna, paris Regis de ſanguine nata, Et paries Populus aurea ſæcla tuis.

From thence paſſing to the Eaſt End of St. Paul's Church, Anne was entertained by ſome of the Scholars belonging to St. Paul's School with Verſes made in Praise of the King and her; wherewith ſhe ſeemed highly delighted.

Thence proceeding to Ludgate, which was finely decorated, ſhe was diverted with divers Songs, adapted to the Solemnity, which were ſung in Concert by Men and Boys upon the Leads over the Gate; and, proceeding to the Conduit at the End of Shoe-Lane in Fleet-Street, a handſome Tower with four Turrets was erected thereon; in each of which ſtood one of the cardinal Virtues, with their ſeveral Symbols; who, addreſſing themſelves to the Queen, promiſed they would never leave her, but be always her conſtant Attendants. Within the Tower was an excellent Concert of Muſick, and the Conduit all the while running with a Diverſity of Wines.

Then moving to Temple-Bar, ſhe was again entertained with various Songs, ſung in Concert by a Choir of Men and Boys; and from thence proceeding to Weſtminſter, whither ſhe was attended by the Lord-Mayor, ſhe returned him ſincere and hearty Thanks for his good Offices, and thoſe of the Citizens that Day. And the Day after being the Time appointed for her Coronation, the Lord-Mayor, in a Gown of crimſon Velvet, and his Collar of SS, attended by the Aldermen and Sheriffs in Scarlet, repaired to Weſtminſter, where they performed their ſeveral Offices belonging to that Ceremony.

On the Wednesday following the King ſent for the Mayor and Aldermen to Weſtminſter, where he returned them Thanks for their good Services both to him and his Queen; and, as a greater Mark of his Gratitude and ſincere Affection to the City, invited the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, and forty of the principal Citizens, to the Chriſtning of the Princeſs Elizabeth his Daughter, at Greenwich; whither, at the Time prefixed, the Mayor, in his crimſon Velvet Gown and Collar of SS, and the Aldermen in Scarlet, with their Collars and golden Chains, repaired to the Celebration of the ſaid Ceremony.

Till this Time foreign Butchers, or Non-Freemen, kept their Stalls in Leadenball-Street, where they ſold their Meat on Wedneſdays and Saturdays before the Citizens Houſes; and the Inhabitants thereof made a conſiderable Advantage of the Ground whereon they ſtood; which being obſerved by the Court of Lord-Mayor and Aldermen, they obliged the ſaid Butchers to repair to Leadenball-Market, to diſpoſe of their Meat; and, Stalls being erected for their Accommodation, the Revenue of the City was thereby conſiderably increaſed. And the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen, in Purſuance of an Act of Parliament for regulating the Price of Proviſions, having aſcertained the Prices of Beef and Mutton, the former at one Halfpenny the Pound, and the latter at three Farthings, this Regulation rather enhanced than lowered the Price; ſo that Ordinance was ſoon after repealed.

In the Year 1534, John Fiſher, Biſhop of Rochester, and Sir Thomas More, Lord Chancellor, were committed to the Tower, for denying to ſwear to the Act of Succeſſion, made in the laſt Parliament; yet, both profeſſed a Readineſs to ſwear to the Succeſſion itſelf, but not to the whole Act; wherein the Marriage with Queen Catharine, rine, the King's first Wife, was declared to be against the Law of God, and wherein also were some Touches against the Pope's Authority. For this Refusal they were attainted by Parliament. And afterwards, in another Parliament, an Act passed for the King's Supremacy, and for abolishing the Pope's Power in this Realm: This Act they also refused to swear to. Upon the said Attainder, they were both executed on Tower-Hill, the Bishop in June, 1535, and the Knight the Month following. Bishop Fisher was much lamented, being reputed a Man of great Learning, and of a good Life. The Pope had elected him Cardinal, and his Hat was come as far as Calais; but, before it could come to England, his Head was cut off. Sir Thomas More was both learned and wise, but so given to Jestings, that he could not refrain from it even under Misfortunes, and at the very Time of his Death. At his Entrance into the Tower, the Gentleman-Porter asking for his Fee, which is the upper Garment, he pulled off his Cap to give him, saying, This is the uppermost Garment I have: But that not sufficing, he pulled out a Handful of Angels, and gave him. A Knight, who was in his Company, saying, He was glad to find that he was so full of Angels: Yes, answered he, I always love to have my best Friends about me. When he had been close Prisoner for some Time, his Books were all taken from him, whereupon he shut up all his Windows; and being asked, why he did so? It is Time, answered he, to shut up Shop, when the Ware is all gone. When he was upon the Scaffold, the Headman kneeling down to ask him Forgiveness, I do forgive thee, said he, but I promise thee thou wilt get no Credit by cutting off my Head, my Neck is so short. And, when he was to lay his Head down upon the Block, having a great grey Beard, he stroaked it out, and said to the Headman, I pray you let me lay my Beard over the Block, lest you should cut it; for, tho' you have a Warrant to cut off my Head, you have none to cut off my Beard.

Aldgate.

Two Fifteenthhs were granted by the Common-Council of this City for defraying the Expence of bringing Water from Hackney to Aldgate, where a convenient Conduit was erected for it on the South Side of the Street, just without the Gate; which proved very useful to the Inhabitants in the Eastern Parts of the City.

In the same Year the high Street of Holborn was, by an Act of Parliament, first ordered to be paved from Holborn-Bridge to the Bars, and kept in Repair at the Charge of the Ground-Landlords.

His Majesty in this Parliament was pleased to sign the Act mentioned on Page 61, for the Conservation of the River Thames. See also Page 64.

Queen Anne Bullen beheaded.

In the Year 1536 Queen Anne Bullen, King Henry VIII's second Wife, was, in the Month of May, brought to the Tower by Sir Thomas Audley, Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Cromwell, Secretary, and Sir William Kingston, Lieutenant of the Tower. At the Tower Gate she fell on her Knees before the said Lords, beseeching God to help her, as she was innocent of what she was accused. She was arraigned in the Tower before the Duke of Norfolk, he sitting as High Steward of England. When her Indictment was read, she made such wife and discreet Answers, that she seemed fully to clear herself of every Thing laid to her Charge: But she was nevertheless found guilty, and beheaded in the same Month on a Scaffold upon the Green.

The Prices of Wines were ascertained by Parliament, viz. all French Wines at eight Pence the Gallon; Maltese and Romney Sacks, and all other sweet Wines, at one Shilling.

At the same Time, Coals were sold at Newcastle upon Tyne at two Shillings and two Pence the Chaldron; wherefore I imagine, that they were then sold in this City at about four Shillings.

The King having thrown off the spiritual Yoke of Rome, the Pope, at the Instigation of Cardinal Poole, was so highly enraged against him, that, to the utmost of his Power, he endeavoured to stir up both the Emperor and the French King for the Destruction of him and his Country; for the obviating of which, Henry, like a prudent Prince, began to provide against the worst, by fortifying the Coasts of his Kingdom, fitting out his Navy, and, by Commissions to the several Counties and principal Cities in England and Wales, caused all his male Subjects, from the Age of sixteen to sixty, to be mustered. One of which Commissions being directed to Sir William Ferman, Mayor of London, he immediately caused a general Muster of the Citizens to be held at Mile-End; on which Occasion they made as splendid an Appearance as in the Year 1532. This Army, consisting of three Divisions of five thousand Men each, exclusive of Pioneers and other Attendants, marched through the City in admirable Order to Westminster; where being reviewed by the King, Queen, and the Nobility, with the greatest Pleasure and Satisfaction, they returned to the City by Way of Holborn.

This I imagine to have been the greatest Muster that ever was made by the Citizens of London till this Time; notwithstanding the absurd Relation of Fitz-Stephens, a fabulous Monk, who tells us, that, at a great Muster in the Reign of King Stephen, the City sent into the Field sixty thousand Foot and twenty thousand Horse; which I doubt not in its proper Place to refute, to the Satisfaction of the Reader.

The Common-Council of this City, in Consideration of the great Sagacity and Discretion of Paul Wythyn Pool, made an Order on the 22d of October, Anno 1539, whereby the said Pool was empowered to be present at all Common-Councils, as well as at the Elections of Mayors and Sheriffs.

This was an Honour so very great, that it never was granted to any other unqualified Citizen, that I can learn.

The King, who had lately forbid the annual March of the City Watch at Midsummer, on Account of its great Expence, endeavoured, by a Charter to the Company of Archers, to restore the manly, useful, and healthy Exercise of Shooting with the Long Bow; whereby (Anno Reg. 29.) he 29.) he granted to Sir Christopher Morris, Master of his Ordnance, Anthony Kneyst and Peter Mewtas, Gentlemen of his Privy Chamber, (who were Overseers of the Fraternity or Guild of St. George) that they should be Overseers of the Science of Artillery, that is, for Long Bows, Cross Bows, and Hand Guns; and others were appointed to be Masters and Rulers of the said Science. And, for the Continuance of the same, he granted that the said Masters and Rulers, and their Successors, Masters and Rulers, might begin, found, and establish a perpetual Fraternity of St. George, and full Power to admit into the Fraternity all honest Persons, whosoever they were, and to be a Body Corporate. And, for the better Increase and Maintenance of this Science, they might, for their Disport and Pastime, from Time to Time, use and exercise Shooting at all Manner of Marks and Butts, and at the Game of the Propinjay, and other Games, as at Fowl and Fowls, as well in the City as Suburbs, and in all other Places. And there was one remarkable Passage in this Charter, that in Case any Person were shot and slain in these Sports by some Arrow shot by any of these Archers, he was not to be sued or molested, if he had, immediately before he shot, used that common Word, Fagß.

The Citizens used to exercise their Sport of Shooting at Mile-End. The Chief of these Archers was called Prince Arthur, and the rest of them his Knights: The Exercise whereof was so manly and useful, that, as this King used it himself, so he disdained not sometimes to come to Mile-End, and see it.

*Princess Anne of Cleve's Reception
by the City.*

Anne, Princess of Cleve, newly espoused to the King, being arrived in England, was, on the 3d of January, received at Blackheath by the Antieatick Merchants, and those of Genoa, Florence, Venice, and Spain, Inhabitants of this City, (the latter whereof were all dressed in Velvet) together with a Number of the principal Citizens, City Council, and Aldermen, about one hundred and sixty in Number, richly dressed in Velvet, with Chains of Gold, and mounted on stately Horses sumptuously trapped. Whence she was conducted by the King, divers foreign Princes, the Nobility, Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, City Council, and Merchants, to the royal Palace at Greenwich: In her Way to which, she, with the greatest Pleasure, beheld the City Companies in their several Barges, richly adorned with a great Variety of Flags and Streamers, gliding along the Thames; and which, by their excellent Concerts of Vocal and Instrumental Musick, ravished the Ears of the illustrious Company with their melodious Sounds, whilst the Guns from all Quarters, like rolling Thunder, incessantly proclaimed her Welfare.

The 4th of February following being the Day appointed for their Majesties Removal to Westminster, the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen in the City Barge, attended by the twelve principal Companies in their respective Barges, most pompously equipped, repaired to Greenwich; whence they conducted the King and Queen by Water to Westminster. By the Queen not making her publick Entry into the City, it shewed the King's little Esteem for her, which soon after appeared. At this Time the River Thames was so destitute of fresh Water, by an excessive Drought, that the salt Water flowed above London-Bridge.

Mr. Stow writes, that in his Remembrance the Moore Ditch was cleaned in the Mayoralty of Sir William Hollies, A. D. 1540.

In 1542, George Ferrers, a Member of Parliament for Plymouth, was arrested in London, and committed to the Compter, at the Suit of one White, for the Sum of two hundred Marks; Complaint whereof being made to the House of Commons, they immediately sent their Serjeant at Arms with an Order of the House into the City to reclaim him. The Serjeant, in Obedience to the Command of the House, repaired to the Compter in Bread-Street, and demanded the said Member. But the Compter Officers, instead of complying with the Order, resisted the Officer: Whereupon a Quarrel ensued between Ferrers, the Prisoner, and the Compter Officers; on which Occasion the Serjeant at Arms and his Servant were assaulted, and his Mace broken.

In the Interim came the Sheriffs, to whom the Serjeant at Arms addressed himself, complaining of the rude and barbarous Treatment of him by their Officers; and, at the same Time, demanded the Release of the Prisoner, by Virtue of the above-mentioned Order. But the Sheriffs, instead of obeying, not only rejected the said Order, with the most opprobrious Language, but likewise maltreated the Officer; who returning, acquainted the House with the whole Proceedings. The Members, highly enraged against the Sheriffs for their unparalleled Insolence and Contempt, ordered the Serjeant at Arms forthwith to return to the said Sheriffs, and peremptorily to demand the Discharge of their Member, without Writ or Warrant for their so doing. The Sheriffs, in the mean Time, receiving Advice of the violent Ferment they had put the House into by their bad Conduct, in order to appease them, and prevent their just Resentment, upon the Return of their Officer, they immediately discharged the Prisoner. But this not being an Atonement adequate to their Crime, the Serjeant charged them, by a special Order of the House, not only to appear themselves the next Day before the Commons at Westminster, but likewise to bring along with them their Clerks and Officers concerned in the Assault upon their Officer, and especially White, at whose Suit Ferrers, their Member, was arrested.

By Reason of a great Mortality among the Cattle, occasioned by great Rains in the preceding Season, Meat rose to such an excessive Price, that Mutton was sold at two Shillings and four Pence the Quarter, and a Lamb at three Shillings and four Pence. The Consideration whereof induced the Lord-Mayor and Common-Council to make a sumptuary Law, for preventing luxurious Eating; whereby the Mayor was restrained from having more than seven Dishes at either Dinner or Supper, and the Aldermen and Sheriffs to six, upon the Penalty of forty Shillings for every supernumerary Dish; the Sword-Bearer to have four, and the Mayor and Sheriffs Officers three Dishes.

And it was further enacted, That the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, &c. of London, should have Power to enquire into, hear, and determine the Defaults of Paving and Reparation of Streets; and that any three Justices in London, whereof the Mayor to be one, may sit Fines upon such as do not pave and repair any Street or Lane in London, or the Liberties thereof; to be levied by Distress or Action, &c. by the Chamberlain, to the Use of the Mayor and Common-

Notwithstanding the vast Expence the Citizens of London had been at to bring Water to, and erect Conduits in, the City, it was now by Experience found, that there was not near a sufficient Quantity to supply the common Demands; therefore, upon Application to Parliament, an Act was passed, whereby the Mayor and Citizens were empowered to bring Water to the City from Hampstead-Heath, St. Mary le Bon, Hackney, and Muswell-Hill, upon their indemnifying the Owners of all Lands, where they should be obliged to dig, raise, or build, according as the Damage should be valued by Commissioners appointed by the Lord Chancellor for that Purpose.

On the 18th of October in the same Year, Margaret Atkinson, by her Will, appointed, that the Sunday after her Interment, a Collation should be provided by her Executors for the Entertainment of her Fellow-Parishioners, to consist of two Dozen of Bread, a Kilderkin of Ale, two Gammons of Bacon, three Shoulders of Mutton, and four Rabbits; to be eaten in the Church, on a Table placed there for that Purpose.

Burial.

The King, having Occasion for Money to carry on the War against Scotland, borrowed of the twelve Companies of London the Sum of twenty-one thousand two hundred and sixty-three Pounds six Shillings and eight Pence upon a Mortgage of Crown Lands. And, in the Prosecution of this War, he resolved upon raising a Sum by Way of Benevolence; and sent into the City the Lord Chancellor, Duke of Suffolk, &c. as Commissioners to assess the Citizens. They sent for the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen to Baynard's Castle, where a certain Sum was demanded of each of them. To this arbitrary Proceeding Richard Read, an Alderman, not only objected, but also absolutely refused to pay the Sum required; for which Refusal he was, in a tyrannical and cruel Manner, sent to Scotland, to serve in the King's Army as a common Soldier; where he had not been long, before the

By an Act of Parliament made in the twenty-third Year of the present Reign, only the Citizens of London, that were possessed of a Freehold Estate of twenty Marks per Ann. were capable of serving upon the Grand Jury; but the Number of Citizens thus qualified being so very small, the said Office could not be duly executed: For the Redress of which, the Citizens found themselves necessitated to apply to Parliament; by whom it was enacted, That, for the future, all Citizens possessed of four hundred Marks both in real and personal Estate, should be qualified to serve upon the Grand Jury.

proclaimed.

In the Month of August in this Year, the City of London, at its own Expence, raised and completely fitted out a Regiment of Foot, consisting of a thousand Men, as a Reinforcement to the Army in France.

A Peace being concluded between England and France, it was on Whitsunday proclaimed in the City with the greatest Solemnity; on which Occasion a solemn Procession was made from St. Paul's Church to Leadenhall, and back again, which was preceded by a Number of Men carrying the parochial Silver Crosses, followed by all the Parish Clerks, Choristers, and Priests in London, together with the Choir of St. Paul's, in their richest Copes, followed by the several Companies of the City in their Formalities; and the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen in their scarlet Robes closed the Procession.

And, at the said Ambassador's Return to France, the City presented him with Wine, Wax Torches, and four large Silver'd Flagons richly gilt.

IN the first Year of Edward the Sixth, the Day for his Coronation being appointed on the 24th of February, attended by the Nobility on Horseback, he rode from the Tower of London to Westminster in the greatest Pomp; on which Occasion the City was sumptuously embellished, and a Variety of stately Pageants erected in divers Places thereof; and, in St. Paul's Church-Yard, he was particularly diverted by a Spaniard, who on his Breast slid down a Rope, Head foremost, with Arms and Legs extended, from the Battlements of St. Paul's Steeple, to the Dean's Gate in the Church-Yard.

but a certain Work in a Day, or shall not work but at certain Hours or Times; that then every Person so conspiring, covenanting, or offending, being thereof convicted by Witnesses, Confession, or otherwise, shall forfeit for the first Offence 10*l.* or twenty Days Imprisonment; for the second Offence 20*l.* or Pillory; and for a third Offence 40*l.* or to sit on the Pillory, and to have one Ear cut off, besides being rendered infamous, and incapable of ever giving Evidence upon Oath.

This Act included all Butchers, Bakers, Brewers, Poulterers, Cooks, &c. And all Justices of Assize, Justices of the Peace, Mayors, Bailiffs, &c. in their Sessions, Leets, and Courts, have full Power and Authority to enquire, hear, and determine all and singular the Offences against this Statute, and to cause the Offenders to be punished.

A.D. 1548 In this Year the Marching Watch was revived by Sir John Gresham, the Mayor, who, as formerly, caused the same to march on Midsummer-Night, in a very pompous Manner; but that which added the greatest Splendor to the Procession was the Addition of three hundred Light Horsemen, who were raised by the Citizens to reinforce the King's Army in Scotland.

Stow. Sur. Lond. A Plague. Soon after, a Plague broke out in this City, which carried off Abundance of its Inhabitants.

A. D. 1549, Henry Amcotes Mayor, the Town Ditch was cleaned at the Expence of the Companies.

Graft. Chron. Engl. A.D. 1549 The Earl of Warwick, and divers Lords of the Privy-Council, being highly dissatisfied with the Administration of Edward Seymer, Duke of Somerset, the Protector, withdrew from Court, associated, and armed themselves and Domesticicks, and secured the Tower of London by a Stratagem of the Lord Treasurer's, without the Effusion of Blood; and, having removed the Governor, substituted one of their Friends to succeed him. Having luckily succeeded in their first Attempt, Warwick removed into the City, and lodged at the House of John York, one of the Sheriffs of London.

Ibid. Upon Advice of these Proceedings at London, the Protector was so greatly intimidated, that he instantly removed with the King from Hampton-Court to Windsor, and began strongly to fortify the Castle. In the Interim the Lords at London

Endeavour to engage the Citizens to their Party. had a Conference with the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen, whom they earnestly importuned to provide a Power sufficient for Defence of the City: Which being assented to, the several Companies were ordered alternately to mount Guard, to be ready to oppose all Attempts that might be made against them. They likewise desired a Supply of five hundred Men, to enable them to bring the Protector to Justice. To which Answer was returned, That nothing could be done in that Affair without consulting the Common-Council; to which End, the Lord-Mayor summoned all the Members thereof to assemble the next Day in Guildhall.

Proceedings thereupon. In the mean Time the Lords convened in the Mayor's House; where after having drawn up a trifling Charge against the Protector, they caused it to be proclaimed in divers Parts of the City. After which they conferred with the Mayor and Aldermen in the Council-Chamber, (before they met the Commons) and, having come to several Resolutions, the Mayor and Aldermen repaired to the Common-Council; where, in a full Assembly, they produced a Letter from the King, commanding them immediately to send him five hundred Men completely armed to Windsor. However, Robert Brook, the Recorder, earnestly exhorted them rather to supply the Lords with that Number, by whose Assistance they would be enabled to call the Protector to an Account, and thereby redress the Grievances of an injured Nation; without which the City was not only in Danger of being ruined, but likewise the whole Kingdom to become a Prey to his insatiable Avarice. This Speech, instead of having the desired Effect, occasioned a profound Silence; which greatly amazing the Orator, he reassumed his Discourse, and seriously pressed them for an Answer: Whereupon George Stadlow, a prudent and judicious Citizen, rose up, and spoke as followeth:

"I remember, sayth he, in a Story written in Fabian's Chronicle, of the Warre betwene the King and his Barons, which was in the Time of King Henry III. and the same Time the Barons, as our Lordes do now, demanded Ayde of the Maior and Citie of London, and that in a rightful Cause for the Commonweale, which was for the Execution of divers good Lawes, whereunto the King before had given his Consent, and after would not suffer them to take Place; and the Citie did ayde the Lords, and it came to an open Battayl, where in the Lordes prevayled, and toke the King and his Sonne Prisoners, and upon certaine Condycions the Lordes restored againe the King and his Sonne to their Liberties; and, amonge other Condycions, this was one, That the King should not only graunt his Pardon to the Lordes, but also to the Citezens of London; which was graunted, yea, and the same was ratified by Act of Parliament: But what followed of it? Was it forgotten? No, surely, nor forgiven during the King's Life; the Liberties of the City were taken away, Straungers appoynted to be our Heades and Gouvernors, the Citezens geven away Bodye and Goodes, and from one Persecution to another were most miserably afflicted. Such it is to enter into the Wrath of a Prince, as Solomen sayth, The Wrath and Indignation of a Prince is Death. Wherefore, forasmuch as this Ayd is requyred of the King's Majestie, whose Voyce we ought to hearken unto, for he is our high Shepherd, rather than unto the Lords; and yet I would not wish the Lords to be clearly shaken off, but that they with us, and we with them, may joyne in Sute, and make our most humble Petition to the King's Majestie, that it would please his Highness to heere suche Complaynt against the Government of the Lorde Protector, as maye be justly alleged and proved; and, I doubt not, but this Matter will be pacified, that neither shall the King, nor yet the Lordes, have Cause to seeke for further Ayde, neyther we to offend any of them bothe."

The King demands their Aid.

This plain and honest Speech had so good an Effect, that the Common-Council broke up without coming to any Resolution in that Affair; wherefore the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen held a Conference with the Lords in the Star-Chamber; at the Conclusion of which, Sir Philip Hobby was dispatched with a Letter of Credence, wherein they most humbly implored his Majesty to give Credit to all the said Sir Philip should declare to him in their Names; which Message he delivered in a very emphatical Manner; and, tho' in Presence of the Protector, he bitterly inveighed against his grievous Proceedings, insomuch that the Protector was not only commanded instantly to withdraw, but soon after committed to Beauchamp's Tower in the Castle; from whence he was brought to London, and, in a Kind of Triumph, rode down Holborn between the Earls of Southampton and Huntington, followed by three hundred Noblemen and Gentlemen on Horseback: At Holborn-Bridge certain of the Aldermen attended on Horseback, and the Streets through which he passed were lined with armed Citizens; and, at the End of Soper-Lane (now Queen-Street) in Cheapside, he was received by the Lord-Mayor, Recorder, and Sheriffs, with a numerous Attendance of Halbardiers, who conducted him to the Tower of London.

The Prices of Meat at this Time being greatly enhanced, the King, to restrain all Graiers, Salefmen, and others, from imposing on the Publick, judged it necessary to ascertain the Prices of Cattle fold in the several Seasons of the Year, as specified in the following Table:

NUMB. XXI.

Several of the City Corporations being possessed of Lands given by Papists to superstitious Uses, they were now by Act of Parliament suppressed, and appropriated to the King's Use, to the Amount of one thousand Pounds per Annum, which were purchased by the several Companies of London at the dear Rate of twenty Years Purchase; and, for the Payment thereof, some of the said Corporations, to their great Loss, were obliged to dispose of other Lands at fourteen and sixteen Years Purchase.

Mary Queen of Scotland, and Dowager of France, (after the Demise of the King her Husband, in her Return from France through England) was sumptuously entertained at the Bishop of London's Palace by the Mayor and Citizens for four Days successively; and, at her Departure from hence, was attended by the prime Nobility with the utmost Magnificence: On which Occasion, the Duke of Northumberland had in Cheapside one hundred Men on Horseback, armed with Javelins, forty whereof were dressed in black Velvet, with Velvet Hats and Feathers, and golden Chains about their Necks; and next to whom stood one hundred and twenty Horsemen belonging to the Earl of Pembroke, with Javelins, Hats and Feathers; then one hundred Gentlemen and Yeomen belonging to the Lord Treasurer, with Javelins; which three Bodies of Horse reached from Gutter-Lane End in Cheapside, to Birchin-Lane in Cornhill; and, being attended by all the Nobility to Shoreditch Church, she was thence conducted by the Sheriffs of London to Waltham.

In this same Year the River Thames ebbed and flowed thrice within the Space of nine Hours. As this is not said to have happened by an Earthquake, it must have been occasioned by a violent Easterly Wind's repelling the Ebb, before it performed its natural Course; then easing a little, it returned with the same Impetuosity a second Time before the Expiration of the said Ebb, and had the same Effect as at first.

About the same Time happened a great Dearth of Provisions; wherefore, to prevent the Poor from being imposed upon, the Government ascertained the Prices of the following Sorts of Provisions:

By the above Charter, as a further Benefit to the City, are granted to the Mayor and Citizens of London, divers Lands and Tenements in Southwark, with the Manor thereof, and its Appurtenances; the Assize of Bread, Wine, Beer and Ale; a Fair for three Days; and the Offices of Coroner, Escheator, and Clerk of the Market, which are for ever vested in the Lord-Mayor and his Successors.

There being divers Terms in this Charter difficult to be understood, I shall add their Explanation:

1. Court-Leet, that is, a Court held by the Lord of a Manor, for inquiring into Offences committed in the said Manor, and wherein all Copyholds thereunto belonging are surrendered upon Alienation.

2. View of Frankpledge is an Office belonging to the Sheriff of the County, and the Bailiff of the Hundred, who are to have a strict Regard to the Preservation of the Peace, and, for the better Conservation thereof, were obliged to take a Pledge of every Freeman at the Age of fourteen (Religious, Clerks, Knights and their Sons excepted) for his good Deportment towards his King and Country, otherwise to be secured in Prison; but that seldom happened, for Neighbours were mutually bound for one another, and who, upon the least Malversation of a Person guaranteed, were either obliged to surrender him, or commute for his Offence by a pecuniary Consideration.

3. Deodand, that is, a Thing given, or rather forfeited to God, for appealing his Anger, in case of Misfortune, whereby a Person is brought to a violent Death, without the Concurrence or Assent of a rational Being; such as a Man's being killed by the Kick of a Horse, a Fall from a Cart, or other Casualty of the like Nature, wherein no Man was concerned; in which Case the Horse, and Cart and Horses, and such-like, became Deodands;
which are sold and divided among the Poor, as an Expiation for such a melancholy Event.

The Sweating-Sickness now broke out again in London, and carried off a great Number of People; which Distemper, as formerly, was peculiar to the English: For it became epidemical to the Nation both at home and abroad. The Citizens of London, as they were great Sufferers by this dreadful Pestilence in their Persons; so were they likewise soon after in their Estates, by the Reduction of the base Coin, coined in the Time of the late King, which was now by Order of Council lowered one Moiety.

The King having borrowed a large Sum of Money of Anthony Fugger and Company, Bankers in Antwerp; the Lord-Mayor and Citizens of London were jointly bound with his Majesty for the Payment thereof: And Edward granted to Sir Andrew Jud, the Mayor, a Recognizance to indemnify him and the Commonalty of the City.

The Government being apprehensive of a Disturbance in the City, on Account of the Duke of Somerset's Trial, which nearly approached, a Royal Precept was sent to the Mayor, commanding him strictly to enjoin all the Citizens to have a strict Eye over their respective Families, and likewise to cause each Householder to provide a Man completely armed, but not to stir abroad till called for. The Mayor was also enjoined to provide a strong Guard of Citizens in each Ward: All which being carefully performed, the Peace and Quiet of the City was thereby effectually preserved. And the twenty-second of January being the Day appointed for the Execution of the said Duke, another Letter was sent from Court to the Lord-Mayor, commanding him not to suffer any of the Citizens to go abroad 'till Ten o'Clock that Morning, in order to prevent Tumults at the Execution. How-

The Company of Anseatick or German Merchants, commonly called Merchants of the Stillyard, having engrossed almost the Trade of the whole Kingdom (for, in the preceding Year, they exported no less than forty thousand Pieces of Cloth, whilst all the English Merchants did not export eleven hundred) were dissolved in the Beginning of this Year.

On the eighth of July, the Lord-Mayor, six Aldermen, and twelve of the principal Merchants of the City, were sent for to attend the Privy Council at Greenwich; where they were not only made acquainted with the Death of the King, but likewise of his having appointed the Lady Jane Grey for his Successor: Pursuant to which, the said Lady, two Days after, was proclaimed Queen in London: But, the Council perceiving that the Nation were generally inclined to the Princess Mary, they began to change Sides, and, meeting at Baynard's-Castle, sent privately, and desired a Conference with the Lord-Mayor, and as many of the Aldermen, Recorder and Sheriffs, as he should judge convenient: Whereupon the Mayor having secretly convened his Brethren, they repaired to the Conference, when the Lords acquainted them with their Intentions, and exhorted them to join with them in proclaiming the Princess Mary; to which the Mayor and Aldermen readily assenting, they rode in a Body to Cheshamside, where they proclaimed her at the Cross, seemingly with the greatest Demonstrations of Joy.

Soon after the young Lady Jane Grey was beheaded in the Tower; who, upon the Scaffold, made a most moving Speech to the Spectators, to this Effect: "That she came thither for an Example amply to Posterity, that Innocence cannot be any Protection against Greatness; and that she was to die, not for aspiring to a Crown, but for not refusing one when it was offered her."

Her Husband, the Lord Guilford, was beheaded the same Day; and, about eleven Days after, her Father, Henry Grey, Duke of Suffolk, suffered the same Fate on Tower-Hill.

On the thirteenth of August a great Tumult had like to have happened in this City by the Preaching of one Bourne, a Canon of St. Paul's, and Creature of the cruel and bloody Bonner, Bishop of London, who, in his Sermon at Paul's Cross, not only prayed for the Dead, but likewise bitterly inveighed against the late Government, for unjustly committing his Patron Bonner (who was present) to the Marshalsea, a loathsome Prison, (for preaching a Sermon in the same Place about four Years before) where he had lain 'till her Majesty's happy Accession to the Crown.

Bourne's

This Discourse caused a mighty Commotion among the Auditory, inasmuch that one of them frankly told the Bishop, that he had not been unjustly, but lawfully committed, for his vile and scandalous Doctrines; whilst others cried, Down with the Incendiary; and, in order thereto, some began to mount the Pulpit; which Bradford, a reformed Minister, observing, he stepped into the Pulpit before Bourne, and earnestly exhorted the People to forbear Violence: But, a Dagger being thrown at Bourne, Bradford perceived, that the Populace were not to be mollified by Reason; therefore, by the Assistance of one of his Brethren, he conveyed Bourne out of Danger, without his having received the least Damage.

On the last Day of the same Month, the Queen rode from the Tower of London to Westminster, with the utmost Magnificence; on which Occasion the City was sumptuously adorned, together with a Variety of Pageants in divers Places, the Conduits all the while running with a Diversity of Wines: And the Lord-Mayor attending her Majesty to Westminster, she returned him Thanks for his great Affiduity, and also for the great Expence the Citizens had put themselves to on that Occasion.

On Confirmation of the Report of Mary's intended Marriage with Philip of Spain, the Face of the publick Affairs began to darken, and a gloomy Cloud to diffuse itself around the Court, which was dreaded in a short Time would break out into a devouring Flame. For the obviating of which, in respect to this City, the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, and divers of the principal Citizens, were by a Precept enjoined to attend the Queen in Council on the fifteenth of January; when the Lord Chancellor in a pathetick Speech earnestly exhorted them in their several Stations so to exert themselves in that critical Juncture, that the Peace of the City might be preserved.

On the twenty-fifth of the said Month, the Mayor received Advice from the Lord Chamberlain of a dangerous Insurrection in the County of Kent, under the Leading of Sir Thomas Wyatt; therefore strictly enjoined him to put the City into such a Posture of Defence, as to be able to baffle all the Attempts that should be made against it by the Rebels.

On the seven-and-twentieth of the said Month, the Lord Treasurer came to Guildhall, to solicit in the Queen's Name for a Supply of five hundred Men, to march against Wyat; which were got ready with such an incredible Expedition, that the very next Day, under the Conduct of Alexander Brett, an experienced Officer, they were sent by Water to Gravesend, where they joined the Duke of Norfolk, who thereupon began his March to Rockester, to dispossess Wyat thereof: Upon his Approach to the City, he dispatched Norrey King at Arms, with an Offer of a general Pardon to Wyat and his Men upon their Submission: Which being rejected, he advanced to attack the Bridge; but Brett, the Commander of the Londoners, drawing his Sword, turned to his Men, and addressed himself to them after this Manner:

"Gentlemen,

"Nothing can be more barbarous and unjust, than for us to fight against our Friends and Countrymen, especially considering, that they are engaged in Defence of the Rights and Liberties of our dear Country, in Opposition to the proud and imperious Spaniard; from whom, if the intended Match succeeds, we can expect no other Favour, than that (if it may be called so) of becoming their Slaves; therefore, as that worthy Patriot Sir Thomas Wyatt has laudably undertaken to protect and prevent us from being imposed upon by those lordly Foreigners, I am humbly of Opinion, that, instead of opposing, we ought in Duty to our Country to join him, for the more easily obtaining so salutary an End."

Ibid.
They join

This Speech met with such a Reception among his Followers, that they not only instantly cried out a Wyat, a Wyat, but also turned their Ordinance against the other Part of their Army; whereby Norfolk and many of his principal Officers were so greatly intimidated, that they fled in the utmost Precipitation, leaving their Ordnance and Ammunition, together with all their Equipage, a Prey to Wyat; who, upon this unexpected Turn of Affairs, marched the Day after towards London, where Advice arriving of his being at Deptford, the City was immediately thrown into the greatest Commotion, inasmuch that not only the Mayor, Aldermen, Sheriffs and Citizens had Recourse to Arms, but likewise (being Term-Time) the Judges sat, and Council pleaded, in Westminster-Hall in Armour.

Queen at

The Queen, in this general Confusion, came to the City, and, repairing to Guildhall, was attended by the Mayor, Aldermen, Sheriffs, and several of the City Companies in their Formalities; to whom she addressed herself to the following Purport:

Speed.
Hist.

"In my owne Person I am come unto you, to tell you that which yourselves already doe see and know; I mean, the traitorous and seditious Number of the Kentish Rebels, that are assembled against Us and You: Their Pretence, as they say, is to resist a Marriage between Us and the Prince of Spain. Of all their Plots, pretended Quarrels and evil-contrived Articles, you have been made privy; since which Time our Council have resorted to the Rebels, demanding the Cause of their continued Enterprize; by whose Answers the Marriage is found to be the least of their Quarrel, or rather, a Cloake to cover their pretended Purposes against our Religion; for, swerving from their former Articles, they now manifestly bewray the inward Treason of their Hearts, most arrogantly demanding the Possession of our Person, the Keeping of our Tower, and not only the Placing and Displacing of our Counsellors, but also to use them and Us at their Pleasures: What I am, loving Subjects, you right well know, your Queene, to whom at my Coronation, when I was wedded to the Realme, and to the Lawes of the same, (the Spousal Ring whereof I have on my Finger, which never hitherto was, nor hereafter shall be left off) ye promised your Allegiance and Obedience unto me; and that I am the right and true Inheritor to the English Crown, I not only take all Christendome to Witness, but also your Acts of Parliaments confirming the same.

Her Majesty's Speech to the Citizens.

"My Father, as you all know, possessed the Regal Estate by Right of Inheritance, which now, by the same Right, is descended unto me: To him you alwayes shewed yourselves both faithful and loving Subjects, as to your Liege Lord and King, and therefore I doubt not, but you will shew yourselves so to me his Daughter; which if you doe, then may you not suffer any Rebel to usurpe the Government of our Person, or interpose our Estate, especially so presumptuous a Traitor as this Wyat hath shewed himself to be; who most certainly, as he hath abused our ignorant Subjects to be Adherents to his traitorous Quarrel, so doth he intend by the Colour of the same to subdue the Lawes to his Will, and to give Scope to the Rascal and forlorne Persons, to make general Havocke and Spoile of your Goods.

"And this I say further unto you in the Word of a Prince, I cannot tell how naturally a Mother loveth her Children, for I was never the Mother of any; but certainly, if a Prince and Governour may as naturally love their Subjects, as the Mother doth her Child, then assure yourselves, that I, being your Sovereigne Lady and Queene, doe as earnestly and tenderly love and favour you; and I, thus loving you, cannot but thinke, that you as heartily and faithfully love me againe; and so, this Love bound together in the Knot of Concord, we shall be able, I doubt not, to give these Rebels a short and speedy Overthrow.

"Now, as concerning my intended Marriage, you shall understand, that I entered not into the Treaty thereof without the Advice of our Privy Council, yea, and by the Assent of those to whom my Father committed his Trust, who have so considered the great Commodities that may thereof ensue, as they not only have thought it very honourable, but also expedient

"both

"both for the Wealth of our Realme, and also
"of our loving Subjects.

"But as touching myself, I assure you, I am
"not so desirous of wedding, neither am I so "precisely wedded to my Will, that either for "mine own Pleasure I will chuse where I list, or "else so amorous, as needs I must have one; for
"I thanke God, to whom be the Praise, I have "hitherto lived a Virgin, and doubt not but,
"with God's Grace, to be able to live so still.

"But if, as my Progenitors have done before,
"it might please God that I might leave some "Fruit of my Body to be your Governour, I "trust, you would not only rejoyce thereat, but "also I know, it would be to your great Comfort;
"and certainly, if I either did know or thinke,
"that this Marriage should either turne to the "Danger or Loss of any of you, my loving Sub"jects, or to the Detriment of any Part of the "Royal Estate of this English Realme, I would "never consent thereunto, neither would I ever
"marry, whilst I lived; and in the Word of a "Queene, I promise and assure you, if it shall "not probably appeare before the Nobility and
"Commons in the High Court of Parliament,
"that this Marriage shall be for the singular
"Benefit and Commodity of the whole Realme,
"that then I will abstaine, not only from this
"Marriage, but also from any other.

"Wherefore, good Subjects, plucke up your "Hearts, and, like true Men, stand fast with "your lawfull Prince against these Rebels, both
"ours and yours, and fear them not, for I assure
"you, I do not, and will leave with you my "Lord Howard and my Lord Treasurer, to be
"assistant with my Lord-Maior, for the Safe"guard of the City from Spoile and Sackage,
"which is the onely Scope of this rebellious Com"pany."

Ibid.

As the Queen, on an Information that Wyat had many Friends in London, had joined the Lord Howard as an Assistant to the Lord-Mayor, they unanimously and assiduously set about the Defence of the City: In the mean Time, Wyat on the third of February arriving with his Army in Southwark, he was joyfully received, and plentifully supplied with all Sorts of Necessaries for his Men; but instead of being admitted into London, according to his Expectation, the Gates were shut against him, and the Draw-bridge cut down; and the Mayor and Sheriffs in Armour riding up and down the Streets, commanded all Shops to be immediately shut, and the Citizens forthwith to appear in Arms, to be ready upon all Emergencies. Wyat, highly enraged at this unexpected Opposition, raised a Battery of two Guns, in order to batter the City; but, considering that the Destruction of London would rather irritate than oblige the Citizens to a Compliance, he changed his Resolution, and marched towards Kingston, in order to pass the River Thames over the Bridge at that Place. Wyat, on his Way thither, met one Dorrell, a Merchant of London, whom he desired to remember him to his Fellow-Citizens, and to acquaint them, that, as they had denied him Entrance, and rejected Liberty, when offered, they deserved no Pity when under the cruellest Treatment and Oppression that Strangers could inflict.

The same Day, about Four in the Afternoon,

Wyat arrived at Kingston; when finding the Bridge broke down to prevent his Passage, and the adverse Bank guarded by two hundred Men, he instantly played upon them with two Pieces of Ordnance; which had so good an Effect, that they were soon compelled to exchange their Post for a Place of greater Security; whereupon he caused divers Sailors to swim across the Thames, to bring over the Barges that lay on the other Side; which being performed without Opposition, he repaired the Bridge with an admirable Celerity, and passed both his Army and Ordnance over it the Night following, and continued his March to London, where he intended to arrive the next Morning by Break of Day, before the Palace of Whitehall: But, on his March, the Carriage of one of his Guns breaking at Turnham Green, he, contrary to the Opinion of all his Officers, halted to have it repaired, which proved his Ruin; for, by this Loss of Time, he lost the Opportunity of joining his Friends in London, who, at a certain Time of that Night, had promised to admit him into the City: This egregious Blunder lost him the Fruits of his Enterprize; for Harper, who had been very instrumental in bringing over Brett and his Body of Citizens, deserted him, and discovered his whole Design to the Court. Harper's Example being followed by others, the Desertion became almost general, inasmuch that in a few Hours he found himself forsaken by near one half of his Army: However, he continued his March towards the City. In the Interim, all Means possible were used to defeat the Execution of his Designs by posting divers Bodies of Troops in proper Places, to obstruct his Passage to the City, where they were making all the Preparations imaginable for a vigorous Defence.

During this Consternation, Wyat, with his little Army, arrived in the Neighbourhood of St. James's; where, on an Eminence, he caused his Artillery to be mounted, and, detaching two Companies under the Conduct of Cadbert Vaughan, sent them to Westminster; and, leaving the greatest Part of his Troops, he put himself at the Head of only five Companies, and pursued his March to London; and being attacked at Charing-Cross by Sir John Gage with a superior Force, he not only repulsed him, but likewise obliged him to seek Shelter in the Palace of Whitehall, where Gage, for his greater Security, shut the Gates. Now, all being given over for lost, the Palace began to resound from all Parts with the doleful and piteous Cries of the Ladies and Children, who expected every Moment to be their last.

But Wyat, returning from the Pursuit, continued his March towards the City; whereupon the Earl of Pembroke, with his Cavalry, fell upon his Rear, and cut off a considerable Number of his Men: However, Wyat, with the Van, in the greatest Distraction and Confusion advanced (thro' the Strand) towards London, with incessant Acclamations of Long live Queen Mary, who has granted our Requests; under Colour of which, they came to Ludgate, and desired Admittance; but, instead of that, they were scoffed and derided at by the Lord Howard from within.

Wyat finding himself thus unhappily circumstanced, in being disappointed of the Assistance of his City Friends, and on all Sides surrounded by Enemies,

Enemies, and no Way to retire by, but that he came, attempted to return; but found his Retreat was cut off at Temple-Bar by Pembroke's Horse; which he preparing to force, Clarenceux King at Arms interposed, and earnestly pressed him to yield, and not, by drawing on himself the Blood of so many brave Men, forfeit all Hopes of Mercy: Here-upon, tho' the Soldiers were resolute to fight at all Events, yet Wyat, overcome with Despair, followed the Advice of Clarenceux, and surrendered himself to Sir Maurice Berkley; which not only put a Period to this Rebellion, but likewise some Time after to his Life by the Ax on Tower-Hill; whose Head was set upon the Gallows at Hay-Hill, near Hyde-Park, and his Quarters in several Places of the City. This Man, in Hopes of saving his Life, had accused the Lord Courtney, and the Lady Elizabeth, the Queen's Sister, of being privy to his Conspiracy; but at his Death he cleared them, and openly protested, that they were altogether innocent, and had never been acquainted with his Proceedings: However, this Matter was so urged against them by Stephen Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester, that both of them were committed to the Tower in the Month of March, but were released from thence, tho' not out of Confinement, in May following. Bishop Gardiner's Malice was so great towards the Lady Elizabeth, that he had procured a Warrant to be framed under certain Counsellors Hands to put her to Death, which had been done, if Mr. Bruges, Lieutenant of the Tower, pitying her Case, had not gone to the Queen (Mary) to know her Pleasure, who utterly denied that she knew any Thing of it; by which Means her Life was preserved.

The Match between Philip and Mary (howsoever disagreeable to the Nation) being concluded, and their Nuptials solemnized, they on the twelfth of August made their publick Entry into the City, attended by most of the English, and many of the Spanish Nobility, and were received by the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, Sheriffs, and all the Companies in their Formalities; on which Occasion, the City was most pompously embellished, and adorned with a Variety of stately Pageants, and all the Conduits run with a Variety of Wines, during and after the Cavalcade 'till Night.

The Parliament this Year, for the better Regulation of Trade, enacted, "That, whereas the Cities, Boroughs, Towns Corporate and Market Towns, did heretofore flourish, where Youth were well educated, and civilly brought up, and were highly serviceable to the Government; but were brought to great Decay, and were like to come to utter Ruin and Destruction, by Reason that Persons dwelling out of the said Cities and Towns came and took away the Relief and Subsistence of the said Cities and Towns by selling their Wares there: For Remedy whereof, be it enacted, That no Person or Persons dwelling any where out of the said Cities or Towns, (the Liberties of the two Universities only excepted) shall hereafter sell, or cause to be sold, by Retail, any Woollen and Linnen Cloth, (except of their own making) or any Haberdashery, Grocery, or Mercery Ware, at or within any of the said Cities, Boroughs, Towns Corporate, or

"Market Towns within this Realm, (except in open Fairs) on Pain to forfeit and lose, for every Time so offending, six Shillings and eight Pence, and the whole Wares so sold, offered or profered to be sold."

Luxury now prevailed to such an excessive Degree, in the sumptuous and extravagant Way of living of the City Magistrates, that many of the principal Citizens chose rather to retire into the Country, than be obliged to serve any of those chargeable Offices. Therefore, to prevent the excessive Superfluities and Extravagances of their Tables for the future, 'twas by the Common Council enacted, That thenceforth the Mayor should have no more than one Course either at Dinner or Supper; and that on a Festival, being a Flesh Day, to consist of no more than seven Dishes, whether hot or cold; and on every Festival, being a Fish Day, eight Dishes; and on every common Flesh Day, six Dishes; and on every common Fish Day, seven Dishes, exclusive of Brawn, Collops with Eggs, Sallads, Pottage, Butter, Cheese, Eggs, Herrings, Sprats and Shrimps, together with all Sorts of Shell-fish and Fruits: That the Aldermen and Sheriffs should have one Dish less than the above-mentioned; and all the City Companies at their several Entertainments the same Number of Dishes as the Aldermen and Sheriffs; but with this Restriction, to have neither Swan, Crane, nor Bustard, upon the Penalty of forty Shillings; and that all the Serjeants and other Officers belonging to the Mayor or Sheriffs on Flesh Days to have three, and on Fish Days four Dishes: But, when any Foreign Ministers or Privy Counsellors are invited to any of the City Entertainments, then the Regulations or Additions are left to the Discretion of the Mayor; always provided, that no other Entertainment be given after Dinner than Ipocras and Wafers: And for the more effectually removing the foresaid Stumbling-Block, and preventing unnecessary Expences, the annual Feasts on the three Days after Whitsunday and Bartolomew-tide were intirely laid aside.

It was also about the same Time and by the said Authority enacted, That each of the Sheriffs for the future should only have fourteen Serjeants and their Yeomen, who, instead of having Liveries given them, were each to have ten Shillings in Money annually, to supply themselves and the Clerks of the Compters; and such as had been accustomed to have Liveries, were each to have a Gown annually at Christmas.

It was likewise enacted, That thenceforth no Wyth should be carried away from the Mayor's or Sheriffs Houses, nor shall any of them keep a Lord of Misrule; and that in Consideration of the great and annual Expence the Mayor and Sheriffs are at in providing a sumptuous Entertainment every Lord-Mayor's Day at Guildhall, for the Honour of the City, and regaling of Persons of the greatest Distinction, 'twas therefore ordained, that every subsequent Mayor, as an Alleviation of that Charge, shall be paid out of the Chamber of the City the Sum of one hundred Pounds. This Act was revived in the Year 1680, with Reasons shewing that a fifth Part of the Charge of a Sheriffalty is in Wine. But, if we may Credit a late Authority, the present Charge in Wine at the Exchequer Feasts is eighty Pounds, and at the Spital not less than three hundred Pounds.

Sir Thomas White, Lord-Mayor in this Year, and a worthy Merchant-Taylor, being a Lover of Learning, first purchased the Hall in Oxford, called Glocester-Hall, for Scholars and Students to receive there the Benefits of Learning: But his private Thoughts very often soliciting him, That he should (in Time) meet with a Place where two Elms grew, and that there his further Purpose should take Effect; at length he found out the Place, where (at his own Cost and Expences) he founded the famous College, called St. John Baptist College, and where these two Elms (it is said) are yet standing; endowing it with such liberal Gifts, Lands, and Revenues, as would require too much Time here to be remembered or set down.

Besides his Provision for Learning in this worthy Place, he erected other Schools, as at Bristol, Reading, and a College at Higbam-Ferries: Moreover, he gave to the City of Bristol the Sum of 2000*l.* to purchase Lands, amounting to the yearly Value of 120*l.* the Mayor and Citizens paying therefore yearly 100*l.* 800*l.* to be lent to sixteen poor Clothiers, 50*l.* each Man, for the Space of ten Years, sufficient Security being given by them for the same: Afterwards that 800*l.* was to pass to other sixteen poor Clothiers, according to the Direction of them put in Trust. 200*l.* besides was reserved for Provision, for Corn, and needful Occasions for the Poor, in the Order and Care of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens.

Then, according to his Will, out of this bountiful Gift to Bristol, these memorable Branches and Benevolences were (by himself) devised and thus ordered, beginning in the Year 1577, and so thence-forward they went on according to his own Direction: On the Feast of St. Bartholomew, was brought to the Merchant-Tailors Hall 104*l.* The 100*l.* to be lent (for ten Years Space) to four poor young Men in the City of York, Freeman and Inhabitants, being Clothiers; and the 4*l.* Overplus, to be employed about the Charges and Pains, that no Man (used in the Business) might receive Discontentment.

Then in 1578, the like Sum was to be delivered thence to Canterbury; and so, thence-forward the same Sums (yearly) to the Cities and Towns following, orderly, viz.

This Sum of 104*l.* passing thus yearly to the afore-named Places, was ordered to take Beginning again at the City of York, and so successively, for ever, to the Towns before-named.

He gave to the City of Coventry 1400*l.* therewith to purchase Lands, to the annual Value of 70*l.* Twelve aged, poor Inhabitants of that City, were to have, in free Alms, 24*l.* each Man 40*s.* yearly, on the 11th Day of March, or within six Days after. Four poor young Men also were to have 40*l.* lent them, in free Loan, 10*l.* to each Man, and for nine Years Space, upon sufficient Security given: And their Turns being thus served, then four other poor young Men were to have the like Sums, and for like Limitation: And so from nine Years to nine Years for ever. Afterwards it was ordered, in free Loan, to two poor Men of the same City; and lastly to one.

Also the same Sum was appointed to one young Man in Northampton, for nine Years, in free Loan; next to one in the City of Leicester; thirdly, to one in Nottingham; fourthly, to one in Warwick; and for the like Time. Then returning again to Coventry for one Year, it re-passeth to the said Towns again, each after the other, in like Manner, for ever.

And, lest his worthy Intent should fail in the Continuance, he enlarged his first Gift to Coventry, of 1400*l.* to 2000*l.* and 60*l.* to be employed as hath been mentioned; 40*l.* being yearly paid out of it to St. John Baptist College in Oxford; and Allowances also by himself given in each Place, that Bonds should be made, without any Charge to the Receiver.

The Number of Taverns and Wine-Vaults being greatly increased, to the Hurt and Debauching of the Morals of the People, 'twas by Parliament enacted, That thenceforth the Number of Taverns or Retailers of Wine, within the City and Liberty of London, should not exceed forty, nor those of Westminster three; and that all Gascain, Guyen and French Wines, to be sold at eight Pence the Gallon, and those of Rochel at four Pence. But then there were not the present Duties upon Wine.

Richard Husbands, Keeper of the Compter in Bread-Street, had not only cruelly and barbarously treated his Prisoners, with a View of extorting Money; but he likewise made his House, the Prison, a common Receptacle for Whores and Thieves; for whose greater Security, he suffered them nightly to lodge there for a Groat a-piece; and, notwithstanding the several Prosecutions carried on against him by the City, and the Durefs he suffered upon these Accounts, he nevertheless continued barbarously to treat his unfortunate Prisoners, and to protect Whores and Thieves, to the great Scandal and Dishonour of the City: Wherefore the Mayor and Citizens were induced, at the publick Expence, to erect a large and convenient Building in Wood-Street, for the Reception and Accommodation of those unhappy Citizens, and Sufferers under the inhuman Husbands; into which they were soon after removed, to their no small Joy of being freed from their cruel and merciless Tormenter.

A great Number of the City Mechanicks were reduced to a very great Degree of Misery, by the general Employment of Foreigners; wherefore it was by the Mayor and Common-Council ordained, that thenceforth no Citizen should presume to employ any Foreigner in any manner of Oſep Napea, who was ſent by the Emperor of Ruſſia his Ambaſſador Extraordinary to the Court of England, had the Miſfortune of being ſhipwrecked on the Coaſt of Scotland in the preceding Year, and with great Difficulty ſaved his own Life; but moſt of his Domeſticks and Equipage were loſt. Upon Advice of this great Diſaſter, the Ruſſia Company of London applied to the Queen for her Letters Recommendatory to the Queen of Scotland, for the good Reception and Entertainment of the ſaid Ambaſſador. And, immediately after, the ſaid Company diſpatched thither Lawrence Huſſy, L.L. D. and George Gilpin, with Money, and all other Neceſſaries for his Journey hither; when, after having been generously and nobly entertained in Scotland, he ſet out the 14th of February on his Journey to London, attended by the aforeſaid Gentlemen; and, approaching the City, was met about twelve Miles off by eighty Merchants on Horſeback richly accoutred, with golden Chains about their Necks; by whom he was conducted to a Merchant's Houſe in Highgate, where he was ſumptuouſly regaled, and preſented with a large Sum in Gold, together with a great Quantity of Silks and Velvets; and the next Day ſetting forward for the City, was attended by one hundred and forty Ruſſia Merchants, well mounted and richly dreſſed, attended by their Servants in beautiful Liveries.

And upon the Way the ſame Ambaſſador, on Behalf of the Queen, was met by the Lord Viſcount Montague, accompanied by three hundred Knights and Gentlemen on Horſeback, by whom he was conducted to Iſlington; where he was received by four Merchants in rich Apparel, who preſented him with a ſtately Horſe, richly trapped in crimſon Velvet, enriched with Gold; upon which the Ambaſſador mounted; and, proceeding to London, he was received by the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen at Smithfield-Bars; and, being preceded by a vaſt Number of Merchants and other Perſons of Diſtinction, he rode thro' the City between the Lord-Mayor and the Viſcount Montague, in great Pomp, to his Apartments in Fenchurch-Street; where he was no ſooner entered, than he was preſented, in the Name of the Queen, with two Pieces of golden Brocade, one of ſilver, and divers of Velvet, purple and crimſon Damask. And 'tis remarkable, that, during the Ambaſſa-

Citizens.

By Virtue of a Proclamation, the Litany, as now used, was, on the 1st of January, read in all the Churches of London; and, on the 12th following, the Queen came from Westminster to the Tower of London by Water, attended by the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs in the City Barge, together with those of all the City Corporations, magnificently adorned; and, on the 14th of the same Month, she rode through the City to Westminster in the most pompous Manner, attended by the Lords and Ladies of the Court, the Nobility, Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs in Scarlet, and all the City Companies in their Formalities: On which Occasion, the City never was at any Time more magnificently decorated, nor more beautifully embellished with Brocades, Velvets, rich Silks, Carpets, Flags, and Streamers, together with a Variety of stately Pageants; but, for avoiding Prolixity, I shall refer the Reader to a full Account thereof in Holinshed's History of England; and shall only add, that Ranulph Cbolmley, the Recorder, in the Presence of the Aldermen, at the upper End of Cheapside, in a handsome Speech, acquainted the Queen, that the Lord-Mayor and Citizens of London, as a sincere Testimony of their unfeigned Love and Respect toward her Majesty, did present her with a thousand Marks in Gold, (in a Purse of crimson Velvet, richly embroidered) and, humbly intreating her Acceptance, desired she'd be pleased not to regard the Value of the Donative, so much as the real Affection and Good-will of the Donors, who earnestly intreated, that she would be graciously pleased to continue their good and kind Sovereign.

On the 7th of April, Peace was proclaimed in London between the Kingdoms of England, Scotland and France, with the usual Solemnities, by Garter and Norroy Kings at Arms, assisted by the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen in their scarlet Robes.

Ibid.

On the second of July the twelve principal Corporations of London sent out twelve Companies, consisting of fourteen hundred Men, to be mustered in Greenwich Park before the Queen; eight hundred whereof were Pikemen in bright

Armour, four hundred Harquebusses in Coats of Mail and Helmets, and two hundred Halberdeers in German Rivets. These Troops were attended by twenty-eight Whiffers, richly dressed, and led by the twelve principal Wardens of the aforesaid Corporations, well mounted, and dressed in black Velvet, with six Ensigns in white Sattin, faced with black Sarfnet, and rich Scarves.

The Populace at this Time not only destroyed all the Statues and Portraitsures of their Saints in the Popish Churches, but likewise most of their rich Robes, Altar-Cloths, Books, and sepulchral Banners.

The Mayor at this Time was that eminent Citizen and Clothworker Sir William Hewet, the Son of Edmund Hewet, of Wales in Yorkshire. This Knight was possessed of an Estate, Value 6000*l.* per Ann. at his Death, and was blessed with an Issue of three Sons and one Daughter; of which Daughter we have the following Tradition from the most noble Family of the Duke of Leeds: Sir William, her Father, living at that Time on London-Bridge, it happened that the Maid-Servant, as she was diverting the Infant-Miss on the Edge of an open Window, accidentally let her drop into the Thames, and, to all Appearance, without Hope of being saved: But a young Gentleman, named Osborne, then Apprentice to Sir William the Father, and one of the Ancestors of the Duke of Leeds in a direct Line, seeing the Accident, immediately leaped into the River after her boldly, and brought the Child out safe, to the great Joy of its Parents, and Admiration of the Spectators. This brave and friendly Action so engaged the Affections of Sir William, the Infant's Father, that, when she was grown to Woman's Estate, and asked in Marriage by several Persons of Quality, especially by the Earl of Shrewsbury, the Knight rejected all their advantageous Proposals, and, with a deep Sense of Gratitude, betrothed his Daughter, with a very great Dowry, to her Deliverer, and with this emphatical Declaration, Osborne saved her, and Osborne shall enjoy her. Part of the Estate given with her in Marriage was the Estate of Sir Thomas Fanshawe, late of Barkin in Essex, and several other Lands now enjoyed by the most noble Family of the Duke of Leeds, in the Parishes of Hartbil and Wales, in the County of York. This remarkable Story is represented in a Painting, carefully preserved by that most noble Family. Sir William was buried under a very magnificent Tomb, between that of Dean Collet on the West, and that of Sir William Cockain, Knight and Baronet, on the East, and on the North Side of the South Isle in St. Paul's Cathedral.

*A. D. 1561, on Wednesday the 4th of June, as appears by a Letter before me from Mr. Richard Jones to Sir Nicholas Trockmorton, Ambassador from Queen Elizabeth to the Court of France, communicated by the honourable Mr. Yorke, it rained all the Day, and, towards Four of the Clock in the Afternoon, it began to thunder terribly: "When suddenly a Thunder-bolt, with "a great Thunder following, hit within a Yard "of the very Top of the Steeple, which forth- "with shewed his Effect, and appeared a little "Fire, like unto the Light of a Torch, which, "increasing towards the Weather-cock, caused "the same within half a Quarter of an Hour to "fall down; whereby the Wind, which was "great, and the more vehement by Reason of "the Opening of the Steeple and Height thereof, "caused the Flame so to augment, and burn the "Steeple, which no Man could succour, as within "an Hour the high Steeple of Paul's, which was "so long in building, and so renowned, was "utterly consumed to the very Battlements; "which being of some Breadth and Strength, "as was needful to uphold such a Weight, re- "ceived most Part of the Timber which fell "from the Spire, and began to burn with such "Vehemence, as all the Timber was burnt, the "Iron and Bells melted and fallen down upon "the Stairs in the Church within a short Space. "This was judged to be the End of the Effect "of the Lightning; when forthwith the East "and West Roofs of the Church, partly kindled "with the Timber which fell from the Battle- "ments, and with the Beating of the Fire whiles "it remained within the Stone Steeple, were on "Fire, and ceased not to burn so extremely, as "could not be provided for by no Means, till "that not only those Ends, but the North and "South Ails, before One of the Clock after Mid- "night, were consumed, and not a Piece of "Timber left, nor Lead unmolten, upon any of "the higher and cross Roofs and Battlements. "The Side Ails, tho' they were a little touched, "by reason of their Crowns, remained safe, "Thanks be to God. And this is all that is "happened by this Misfortune, and the Church "within is untouched.—Your Lordship may "guess what Stir and Removing there was in St. Paul's Church-yard, especially towards the "North Door, where divers Houses were pulled "down, and much Lamentation on all Sides. "On the East End a Pinnacle fell down and "ruined a House, wherein there were seven Per- "sons, not hurt, but the good Man of the House "a little. Many other Turmoils there were, as "in like Cases it happens; which, as it grieves "me to hear, so I am loth to write the same. "The French here are not sorry for the Matter.— "All good and honest Men are sorry for it, and*

"impute it to a terrible Remembrance of God's "Anger towards us for our Offences. This is "enough, and too much of so grievous a Mat- "ter; and yet I thought I should perhaps satisfy "your Lordship in writing thereof thus largely.

Anno 1563, the Infection of the Plague begin- ning to threaten the City, July the 5th, Com- mandment came from the Queen to the Mayor, and the Mayor sent for the Master and Wardens of the Company of Clerks, and commanded them to enquire within their respective Parishes, whether any died of the Plague, and to make a Certificate thereof; and that the Curates and Churchwardens should give them Warning of any House where the Plague should appear, and to command, that no one of such a House should come to Church for the Space of one Month following, after that the Plague hath been in the House; and to fix a Cross on the Door of every House, of Blue, and a Writing under it, signifying that the Infection is there, and to avoid it.

On the 9th it was also ordained, that every Man in every Street and Lane should make Bon- fires three Times in the Week, Mondays, Wednes- days, and Fridays in every Week, till the Infection should cease.

In the Beginning of August, the Plague continu- ing to rage, the Lord-Mayor issued out a Procla- mation against Dogs running about the Streets, and to give Notice, that a Man was hired to kill Dogs found in the Streets, both by Day and by Night. There died between the 1st of January, 1562, and last of December, 1563, 20372 Per- sons, of all Diseases.

*At the same Time Edward Skeggs, a worthless Citizen, was disfranchised for Mal-Practices; however, upon his Submission, he was soon after restored to his Freedom. But, being of an im- placable and revengeful Temper, he resolved to be revenged on the Authors of his Disgrace; which he soon after endeavoured to accomplish; for, being appointed one of the Queen's Pur-veyors, he not only seized upon twelve Capons bought for the Lord-Mayor's Table, but also in a very insolent Manner highly reflected upon his Lordship: For which Crimes he was carried before the said Magistrate, who not only obliged him to restore one Moiety of the Capons he had maliciously possessed himself of, but like- wise assured him, that, if ever he was again found guilty of the like Misdemeanour, he would commit him to the Prison of Newgate, where he should be loaded with the most ponderous Fetters.*

Skeggs, having got what he longed for, imme- diately applied to the Earl of Arundel and Sir Edward Rogers, Steward and Comptroller of the Household, for Redress; who, without enquiring into the Affair, imprudently sent the following very indecent and threatening Letter to the Lord-Mayor:

"We be advertised that you have much mis- "used Edward Skeggs, Purveyor for the Queen's "Mouth, in making Provision for her Highness's "own Person, as in denying him of taking twelve "Capons of twenty-two; and of the twelve de- "livered

"From the Court at Greenwich, the 19th of July.

"ARUNDEL. E. ROGERS."

The Lord-Mayor, fenfible of the Injuftice done him by Skeggs, and the great Partiality of Arundel, and likewise his Incapacity of vindicating himfelf at Court in Perfon, on account of the destructive Peftilence then raging in London; he therefore thought fit by Letters to acquaint the Lord Dudley and Mr. Secretary Cecil, his Friends at Court, with the whole Proceeding. The Purport of that to the latter is as follows:

Ibid.

Lord-Mayor's Letter to Secretary Cecil.

"That, upon an untrue Report by the faid Skeggs, the Lord Steward and Mr. Comptroller had conceived great Difpleafure againft him: But he affured the Secretary, that Skeggs's Reports were moft untrue, and his Demeanor fo intolerable, that if the fame were duly examined, he would be judged an unfit Man for the Place where he ferved; and, if the contagious Time were not fuch, but that he might repair to his Anfwer, it fhould well appear; and that, if he and fuch-like were more to be credited than he (the Mayor) was, he thought himfelf a far unmeet Man for the Place wherein he ferved; yet he had fufficient Witneffes both of that Man's intolerable Comparifons and Demeanors, and of his (the Mayor's) Dealings with him. That he had not feen, for his Time, that the Mayor of London had been fo dealt with. He prayed the Secretary to have Consideration of this his Grief, as it might come in queftion thereafter; for their Threatning portended a Difpleafure to come. What they meant thereby, he knew not; but that it feemed very ftrange to be fo threatned upon the falfe Report of fo flender a Perfon; and efpecially, he being of the City, fo to be borne with againft the State of the fame, where- at he kicked to his fimple Power; becaufe,

"for his unjuft Dealing (before he was retained in the Queen's Service) he was disfranchifed; and afterwards, upon Suit made, reftored again."

The City in this Year was not only vifited with the dreadful Plague of Peftilence, but likewise by a great Scarcity of Money and Dearth of Provisions, whereby the Citizens were reduced to a very great Degree of Mifery.

On the 26th of January at Night, the River Thames was greatly agitated by preternatural Fluxes, which obliged the natural Tide twice to recoil five Hours before its Time; which was not only as often repeated the next Day, but likewise once again on the third; which frequent Phenomena were, by the Simple, looked upon to portend fome very extraordinary Events.

On the 21ft of December following, a very hard Froft fet in, which incrufting the River Thames with Ice, it foon became as the common Roads and Fields for Paffage and Diverfion.

Some Time after, Sir Thomas Greffham, a worthy Merchant and Citizen of London, propofed to the Lord-Mayor and Citizens, upon their finding him a convenient Scite, to erect at his own Charge a commodious Edifice, for the Convenience of Merchants to meet in.

This Propofal was no fooner made, than agreed to by the Mayor and Citizens; who, for that Purpofe, purchafed New St. Christopher's and Swan Alleys, leading from Cornhill to Treadneedle-Street, for the Sum of three thoufand five hundred and thirty-two Pounds; the Materials of which Houfes, which were eighty in Number, were fold for four hundred and feventy-eight Pounds. The Ground being cleared, 'twas conveyed to Sir Thomas by certain Aldermen in the Name of the Citizens of London: In confequence of which, the Foundation being dug, and Materials prepared for the intended Structure, Greffham, accompanied by divers of the Aldermen, on the 7th of June, laid the firft Brick, being followed therein by the Aldermen, who laid each his Brick, and a Piece of Gold for the Workmen; who profecuted the Work with fuch Afiduity, that the Building was roofed by the Month of November in the enfuing Year, and foon after finifhed, under the Appellation of the Burfe.

This ftately Fabrick Sir Thomas, by his Will of the 26th of November, Anno 1579, devifed to the Mayor and Citizens of London, and Company of Mercers, to be equally enjoyed and poffeffed by them, with all its Appurtenances, and Profits arifing thereby, under the following Reftrictions, viz. The Citizens, for their Moiety of the faid Edifice, are from Time to Time to appoint four Perfons duly qualified to read Lectures of Divinity, Aftronomy, Mufick, and Geometry, in his Manfion-houfe, (now Greffham-College) and to pay annually to each of the faid Lecturers a Salary or Stipend of fifty Pounds. And alfo to pay yearly to his eight Alms-People in Broad-Street (whom the Mayor and Citizens have likewife the Power of chufing) the Sum of fix Pounds thirteen Shillings and four Pence each. And befides, to pay annually to the Prifons of Newgate, Ludgate, King's-Bench, Marshalsey, and Wood-Street Compter, the Sum of ten Pounds each.

And the Mercers, for their Half, are, from Time to Time, to chuse three Persons well accomplished, to read Lectures of Law, Physick, and Rhetorick, in the aforefaid Mansion-house called Gresham-College, with the same Salaries to each of the Lecturers as to the above-mentioned. The said Company of Mercers are likewise obliged to pay the Sum of one hundred Pounds per Ann. for four Quarterly Dinners to be provided at their Hall, for the Entertainment of the whole Company; and also to pay to Christ's, St. Bartholomew's, the Spital, Bethlehem, and St. Thomas's Hospitals, and the Poultry Compter, the Sum of ten Pounds per Ann. each.—See a further Account of this great and good Man, and of his Foundations, in their proper Places.

Tho' mutual Jealousies were daily arising between the English and Spanish Nations, yet some of the latter continuing to arrive in this City, gave Umbrage to the Queen, that they were come upon no good Design; therefore, to provide against all Attempts they might make against the publick Tranquillity, 'twas judged necessary to come at the Number of them residing in London, in order to make a suitable Provision to defeat all the dangerous Measures they might enter into. Wherefore Orders were given to take the Names, Quality, and Professions of the respective Strangers that resided in the several Wards of the City; whose Numbers, upon Enquiry, were found to be forty Scots, four hundred and twenty-eight French, forty-five Spaniards and Portuguese, one hundred and forty Italians, two thousand and thirty Dutch, forty-four Burgundians, two Danes, and one Liegeois.

Sir Thomas Rowe, Knight, Lord-Mayor of the City of London, in 1568, a worthy Brother also of the Merchant-Tailors Company, besides his charitable Cost and Charges in building the new Church-yard in Bethlehem, now Old Bedlam Burial-Ground, containing near one Acre of Ground, and enclosed with a Wall of Brick, for the Burial of the poor Citizens gratis; and a Sermon to be preached every Whit-sunday in the Morning, in the Presence of the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen; as also giving 100*l.* to be lent to eight poor Men; gave to the Merchant-Tailors Lands or Tenements, out of them to be given 40*l.* yearly, to maintain ten poor Men for ever; such as were not Brethren of his own Society, but chosen out of five several Companies, viz. Clothworkers, Armourers, Carpenters, Tylers, and Plasterers; as considering, that by Over-toiling, Labour, Dangers, Falls, Bruises, and such-like Inconveniences, they were soonest like to become impotent, and unable to help or maintain themselves. Therefore, to each of these ten Men he freely gave the Sum of four Pounds, quarterly to be paid them at Merchant-Tailors Hall, during their Lives; and then to succeed to other Men in the same Companies, according to the due Consideration of just Cause, and most Necessity.

In the Year 1569 a Lottery was set on Foot in St. Paul's Church-yard, where it was begun to be drawn at the West Door of the Church on the 11th of January, and continued incessantly drawing Day and Night till the 6th of May following. Whether this Lottery was on Account of the Publick, or the selfish Views of private Persons, my Authors does not mention. But 'tis evident, by the Time it took up in drawing, it must have been of great Concern. This I have remarked, as being the first of the Kind I read of in England.

A Lottery drawn Day and Night.

The City being at this Time greatly pestered by sturdy Beggars, and loose, idle, disorderly People of both Sexes, the following Orders were devised and executed with Rigour: Sixteen Beadles belonging to the Hospitals were enjoined to take up all Vagrants, &c. and to carry them to Bridewell; all Sick, Lame, Blind, Aged, and to carry them to St. Bartholomew's; and all Children Beggars, under the Age of sixteen, to Christ's Hospital. These Orders were made in April, 1569, in this Form:

The Circuite appointed to the four Beadles of Christ's Hospital.

Cheap Ward,	Farringtonne within, and
Cripplegate, within and	so moche of Farringtonne without,
Aldrichegate,	the Deputy of Sainte Sepulchres.

The Circuite appointed to the four Beadles of St. Bartholomew's Hospital.

Cornhill Ward,	Bassinghall,
Coleman-Streate,	Allgate,
Bylhopegate,	Lyme-Streate,
Broad-Streate,	Portfoken.

The Circuite appointed to the four Beadles of St. Thomas's Hospital.

Towre Ward,	Byllingsgate,
Dowgate,	Walbroke,
Candellweke-Streate,	Langbourne.
Bridge,

The Circuite appointed to the four Beadles of Bridewell.

Castle-Baynard Ward,	Farringtonne without, except the Precinct of the Deputy of St. Sepulchres.
Queenhith,
Bread-Streate,
Vintrie,
Cordwayner,

All which are to be diligently attended, over and above these Orders hereunder prescribed; that is to say,

First, That there do attend at all the Gates of this Cittie everie Morninge from Three of the Clocke until Seven in the Forenone, and from Seven in the Eveninge until Eleven at Nyght; and also at the Tyde Tymes fallinge in the Nyght, as well at Byllingsgate as at Lyons-Keye, one of the sayde xvj Beadles, thear to watche the coming of all Vagabonds, Beggars, Children, and masterless Men and Women, to the Intent they may by them be apprehended. Provided allwaies, that the said Beadles so agree and accord together, together, that they indifferentlie appoynt themselves for the Accomplishment of their Attendance in this Behalf, so that one attend as moch and as often as another.

Item, That the Beadle (in whose Circuite standeth anie of the Gates of this Cittie) faile not to see the same Gates continually attended all the Daie long, from vij of the Clock in the Forenone untill vij at Night; and soche other of them as be not occupied at the Gates, to continue in walking the Circuite whereunto they are appointed.

Item, In walking their Circuites before-mentioned, that they faile not to go once every Daie to the Collectours Houses, in every Parish within the Circuite, to understand of them, or some of their Neighbours, if either Vagabond, Beggars, Children, or masterless Men or Women, be in the Streates of their Parishes, that by them they may be apprehended.

Item, That one of the said Beadles twyse everie Daie (that is to saie, at vij o'Clock in the Morning, and at One in the Afternoon) shall repair to the Treasurer of the Howse where he serveth, to know his Pleasure.

Item, For London-Bridge, the Barges of GraveSEND, and other Tide Boates coming up in the Daie Tyme, the better to apprehend the Vagabonds, Beggars, Children, and masterless Men and Women, and the Bringers of them, whereuppon there is iij of the same xvj Beadles appoynted to attend every Day; that is to say, ij of them from vij of the Clock in the Morning untill One at Afternone; and th'other twaine for to be ij of St. Thomas's Hospital onlie, for that it is in their owne Circuit; and they to remaine from One of the Clock untill vij at Night; and one of the twaine (when the Tyde happeneth in Tyme of their Attendance, either in the Forenone or Afternone) shall repaire to Billingsgate, and to the Lyon-Key, to the Purpose before declared: Provided alwayes that one of the same ij Beadles there appointed, be one of them last admitted; to the Intent he may growe the more perfect in his Dewtie, by the Instruction of his Fellowe: And the Appointment of the Forenones Attendance shall be as followeth:

Wednesdaie, one of Christ's Hospital and one of St. Bartholomew's.

Thursdaie, one of St. Thomas's Hospital and one of Bridewell.

Fridaie, one of Christ's Hospital and one of St. Bartholomew's.

Saturdaie, one of St. Thomas's Hospital and one of Bridewell.

Sundaie, one of Christ's Hospital and one of St. Bartholomew's.

Item, Those Beadles which serve the said Place fower Tymess in one Week, shall serve but iij Tymess the next Week followinge.

Item, When the Vagabonds be set on work abroade, the iij Beadles that shall attend daillie uppon them, shall be appoynted in the like Order as the Appoyntment is for London-Bridge, saving that those which serve the Bridge one Day, shall serve in the Attendance of the Vagabonds the Day next followinge, and to be one of every Howse. And they shall conduct them from their Lodginge to their Worke, wheresoever it shall happen to be, and very diligentlie attend that they loyter not; and at Night also conduct them to there appointed Lodginge.

Item, That all the Vagabonds and sturdie Beggars, with all the masterless Men or Women, by them apprehended, shall be carried to Bridewell, and to none other Place, of what Howse soever the Beadles be that take them.

Item, That all the aged, impotent, sick, sore, lame, and blind Persons, taken by any of the said Beadles, shall by them be apprehended and carried to St. Bartholomew's and St. Thomas's Hospitals.

Item, That all the Children taken by them (being under the Age of xvj Yeares) be brought to Christ's Hospital.

Furthermore, It is agreed by the said Courte, that yf anie of the said xvj Beadles neglect anie Part of their Dutie which to them is appointed, either by these foresaid Orders prescribed, or other for them appoynted, or hereafter to be appoynted, or at any Tyme they take any Manner of Bribes, or the poore People's Monie from them; the Governours of that House where they serve (by an Ordre taken before the Lorde-Maior and Courte of Aldermen) shall not only deprive the said Person of his Office, Staffe, and Livery, and place another at their Discretion, but further punish the said Offender according to his Deserts in that Behalfe.

But, notwithstanding the former Order, and the Charges committed to the Beadles of the Hospitals to clear the City of Vagabonds and Beggars, it had not its full Effect. For in the very next Year we read, that the City swarmed again with Beggars; many whereof were valiant and sturdy Rogues, and masterless Men and Vagrants, and maimed Soldiers. For the preventing the Mischief occasioned by some of these, and the great Annoyance they gave the City, the City took a more regular Course, and appointed a Committee to treat with some fit Persons to be Marshalls of the City; who should take some good Course with these wandering People, for the clearing of the Streets of them, and appointing them to their several Places and Punishments, if they deserved it. And these were to be armed and well assisted with Servants, for the safer Execution of their Office. These Committees chose two able Persons, viz. William Sympsen and John Read, to take upon them this Office, to be the City-Marshalls, for the Consideration of six Shillings and eight Pence a Day, for them and their Horses, and six Persons a-piece to attend on each Day, at twelve Pence a-piece, which is twelve Shillings the Day for either of them. The Appointment of those Men to be left unto the Marshalls themselves, to make the better Choice of fit Men for their Purpose. They required moreover, that one Month's Pay, amounting to 35*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* at twenty-eight Days to the Month, for them and their Attendants, might be paid them beforehand, the better to furnish them in their their Preparation and Want. And, to help forward this Work, tending to so notable a Purpose, with all Speed to be expedited, the Committees thought convenient that this Month's Pay might, by Way of Loan, be supplied among the Aldermen; and in that mean Time, and upon the well proceeding therein, the Commons might be moved to the Establishment of a settled Supply for the Continuance thereof in some convenient Manner; and that then after there might be a weekly Payment of their Salary by Mr. Chamberlain, and the Aldermens Disbursements satisfied, when that Contribution should be established. It was also thought convenient, that twelve fair Partizans, suitably and conveniently armed, should be presently provided by the Chamberlain for this Service, at the Charge of the City; and Coats or Mandilions for the Attendants upon the Marshals.

City-Marshal appointed.

It was also thought by the Committees, that the Name of MARSHAL, for the disorderly Persons in the City of London, would be most proper, and might be best used without Offence. And this seems to have been the Beginning of the Office of the CITY-MARSHAL, there being no Mention of such an Office in this Corporation in former Times.

Stow. Sur. Lond. The standing Watch begun.

The Midsummer after, the pompous Cavalcade of the City marching Watch was entirely laid aside, for saving the vast Expence of such an unnecessary Procession; and in lieu thereof was substituted a standing Watch, as at present; which is much more useful, and less chargeable.

Stow. An. Engl. Russian Ambassador at London.

Iohn Basilicowitz, Emperor of Russia, having sent Andrew Gregoritz his Ambassador Extraordinary to the Court of England, he arrived at London, and landed at the Tower-Wharf, on the 27th of August; where he was received by the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs in their Formalities, attended by the English Company of Russia Merchants, in black Velvet, mounted on stately Horses, magnificently accoutred, by whom he was conducted to a House in Seeding-Lane, appointed for his Residence.

Ibid. Plague.

The Plague beginning to rage in this City, it occasioned the adjourning of Michaelmas Term to that of Hillary.

On this melancholy Occasion, the Court and City greatly terrified by the frequent Returns of this pestilential Visitation, Orders were made by the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen for preventing its Spreading, and for hindering idle Persons going about, that might carry it among them, in this Form:

ALDERMEN or their DEPUTIES were enjoined,

Orders and Regulations for preventing it.

1. To give Charge to Churchwardens, Constables, Parishes-Clerkes, Sextons, and Bedells, to enquire what Houses be infected.

Vagrant, Maisterlesse, and Poore PEOPLE.

1. That all such as be diseased be sent to St. Thomas's or St. Bartylmew's Hospital, there to be first cured and made cleane; and afterwards, those which be not of the Cittye, to be sent awaie, according to the Statute in that Case provided; and the other to be sett to worke in such Trades as are least used by the Inhabitants of the Cittye; for the avoyding all such vagrant Persons, as well Children Male and Female, Soldiers lame and maymed, as other idle and loytering Persons that swarme in the Stretes, and wander upp and downe begginge, to the great Danger and Infecting of the Cittye, for the Increase of the Plague, and Annoyance to the same.

2. That all maisterlesse Men, who live idlie in the Cittye, without any lawfull Calling, frequenting Places of common Assemblies, as Interludes, Gaming-Houses, Cockpitts, Bowling-Allies, and such other Places, may be banished the Cittye, according to the Laws in that Case provided.

All which Orders abovesaid the Aldermen and their Deputies are every one in their Place to see performed, both in themselves and others; and, in Cases of Doubt, to yeld their Opinions, and give Direction.

In this same Year, for cleansing the City Ditch between Aldgate and the Postern, and making a new Sewer and Wharf of Timber, from the Head of the Postern into the Tower-Ditch, the Sum of 814*l.* 15*s.* 8*d.* was laid out. Before which Time the Ditch lay open, without either Wall or Pale; having therein great Store of very good Fish of divers Sorts. This Charge of cleansing was soon after spared, and great Profit made by letting out the Banks, and the whole Soil of the Ditch.

Our Intercourse with the City of Antwerp, which was formerly in a manner the Treasury of the Kings of England, from whence, upon any Emergency, they could have what Sums of Money they had Occasion for immediately advanced, being stopped by the Duke of Alva, and the Queen in great Want of Money, she was obliged to apply to the Company of Merchant-Adventurers of the City of London for a Loan; who, thro' great Inadvertency, were thought to have spurn'd at the Message, by bringing the Affair before a General Court, where, to her Majesty's great Dishonour, her Demand was rejected by the holding up of Hands. But this Proceeding being highly resented by the Privy Council, as appears by a Letter sent by one of the Secretaries of State to the said Company, importing, "How this Offer of the Queen's was a Matter of great Grace and Favour, not much used before this Time by any Prince; and therefore, in Right, to have been very thankfully received;" divers of the Aldermen and Merchants, to the Number of thirteen, and Lady Joan Laxton, lent the Queen, for the Term of six Months, sixteen thousand Pounds, at six per Cent. and each of them received a Bond for the Money by him advanced; which was then prolonged on the same Terms for six Months longer.

The Queen, attended by the Nobility, came into the City on the 23d of January, and dined at Sir Thomas Gresham's, now Gresham-College in Bishopsgate-Street; and, after Dinner, returning through Coruill, went into the Burse; when, after viewing it in all its Parts, she caused Proclamation to be made by a Herald, with Sound of Trumpet, that thenceforth it should go by the Appellation of the Royal-Exchange.

A Dispute arose about this Time between the Lord-Mayor of this City, and the Bishop of Ely's Tenants in Holborn, concerning the Exercise of his Authority among them, they alledging they were not within the City-Jurisdiction. To compose this this Difference in an amicable Manner, the Lord-Mayor and Bishop agreed to refer the Point in Controversy to the Arbitration of the Lord Keeper Earl of Leicester, the two Chief Justices, and Chancellor of the Exchequer; and, after divers Hearings of both Sides, the Arbitrators agreed to refer the farther Consideration thereof to the two Chief Justices, who were to report their Opinion to the other Referees touching the same: When, after having seriously and deliberately considered the Proofs and Allegations of both Parties, in Presence of all the other Gentlemen concerned, they declared the Right to be in the Lord-Mayor and Citizens of London; and that, for the future, the Mayor might as justly exercise his Authority in the Bishop's Rents in Holborn, as in any other Part of the City.

Stat. Larg. 15 Eliz. A.D. 1571
Upon the Petition of the Lord-Mayor and Citizens of London, it was by Parliament enacted, That, for the greater Convenience and Advantage of the City, a navigable Canal should be made from the River Lea at Ware, to London, at the Charge of the Citizens, within the Space of ten Years. But this Design was never put in Execution, as hereafter will appear.

Holin. Chron. Engl. A.D. 1572
Queen's Command to train the Citizens in the Art of War.
Queen Elizabeth, by her Letters to the Lord-Mayor, commanded him to cause a considerable Number of the strongest and most robust young Men in the City to be selected from among the Citizens, in order to their being instructed in the military Art, that upon all Emergencies they might be ready for the Defence of the City. The Mayor, in Obedience to the Royal Precept, summoned the Masters and Assistants of the several Companies to meet in their respective Halls, for chusing a certain Number of such young Men out of their respective Corporations. In Obedience to the Mayor's Order, the several Fraternities assembled on the 25th and 26th of March, and chose out of all their several Societies three thousand of the most sizeable and active young Citizens; Part whereof being appointed Musketeers, and the rest Pike-men, they were armed with Breast-plates and Head-pieces; over whom were appointed Officers of great Experience, to instruct them in the Art military; wherein they soon became such Proficients, as to have the Honour of being reviewed by the Queen in Greenwich Park about the Beginning of May.

About the same Time the Poulterers of London, by a Combination, greatly enhanced the Prices of Poultry, to the great Grievance of their Fellow-Citizens: Wherefore the Court of Lord-Mayor and Aldermen, on the 4th of April, ascertained the Prices of Poultry Ware, as appears in the following Table:

The Queen, intending a Progress, strictly enjoined the Lord-Mayor to have a special Regard to the good Government and Peace of the City during her Absence; and, for the better accomplishing of which, gave him, as Assistants, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Bishop of London, &c. and upon that Occasion wrote to him the following Letter:

To the Lord-Mayor of London.

"Right Trusty and Well-beloved, We greet you well. Altho' we doubt not, but that, by the Authority you have as Lord-Mayor of our City of London, with the Assistances and Advices of your Brethren of the same, you may and will see our said City well governed, and, by our good and faithful Subjects, ordered and continued in Quietness, as other your Predecessors and yourself have commonly done; yet, for the special Care we have for our said City, and Weale of our good Subjects, thinking it convenient for your own Ease to have you assisted by other Persons of great Trust, Wisdom, and Experience, during this Time of our Progress and Absence in remote Parts from thence; and especially that no Disorder should arise in the Suburbs, or other Places adjoining to the City, out of your Jurisdiction: We have, for that Purpose, made Choice of the most Reverend Father in God the Archbishop of Can-

Great Scarcity of Corn, &c.

In the Year 1573, an excessive Dearth raised the Price of Wheat to two Pounds six Shillings the Quarter, of Pease to one Pound twelve, and of Oatmeal to one Pound seventeen Shillings and four Pence; whereby the Price of Meat was so much affected, that Beef was sold for one Shilling and ten Pence the Stone. This Scarcity extended to Butter and all Sorts of Victuals, and was chiefly occasioned by the secret Exportation of them, and all Sorts of Grain, to the Netherlands, then laid waste by a civil War, as Sir Lionel Duckett, Lord-Mayor at that Time, signified in a Remonstrance to the Lord Treasurer of England; and suggested, that, unless the Ministry would see Redress thereof in Time, the Scarcity must shortly be felt more powerfully, even by those in the highest Station of Life.

Plague.

The Plague having again broke out in this City, the Queen, out of her tender Regard to the Welfare of her People, and Care to prevent the Spreading of the Infection, enjoined the Lord-Mayor not to give any Entertainment at Guildhall on the Anniversary of his going to Westminster, thereby to prevent the vast Resort of People from all Parts, which usually assembled there on such an Occasion, whereby the pestilential Malady might be carried into all Parts of this great Metropolis: And the Citizens in Common-Council observing, that the antient and innocent Recreation of Stage-Plays or Interludes, which in former Days ingenious Tradesmen and Gentlemen's Servants sometimes practised, to expose Vice, or to represent the noble Actions of their Ancestors, at certain Festival Times, or in private Houses at Weddings, and at other splendid Entertainments, for their own Profit, was now in Process of Time become an Occupation; and that many there were that followed it for a Livelihood, and, which was worse, that it was become the Occasion of much Sin and Evil; great Multitudes of People, especially Youth, in Queen Elizabeth's Reign, resorting to these Plays; and being commonly acted on Sundays and Festivals, the Churches were forsaken, and the Playhouses thronged, and great Disorders and Inconvenience were found to ensue to the City thereby, forasmuch as it occasioned Frays and evil Practices of Incontinency: Great Inns were used for this Purpose, which had secret Chambers and Places, as well as open Stages and Galleries; where Maids, especially Orphans, and good Citizens Children, under Age, were inveigled and allured to privy and unmeet Contracts; and where unchaste, uncomely and unshamefaced Speeches and Doings were published; where there was an unthrifty Waste of the Money of the Poor; sundry Robberies, by picking and cutting Purfes, uttering of popular and seditious Matter, many Corruptions of Youth, and other Enormities; besides sundry Slaughters and Maimings of the Queen's Subjects, by falling of Scaffolds, Frames, and Stages, and by Engines, Weapons, and Powder, used in the Plays; and believing that, in the Time of God's Visitation by the Plague, such Assemblies of the People in Throngs and Presses were very dangerous for spreading the Infection; they regulated these Plays, lest the People, upon God's gracious withdrawing of the Sickness, should, with sudden forgetting of the Visitation, without Fear of God's Wrath, and without some Respect of those good and politick Means (as the Words of the Act ran) that were ordained for the Preservation of the Commonwealth and People in Health and good Order, return to the undue Use of such Enormities. Therefore, for the lawful, honest, comely Use of Plays, Pastimes, and Recreations in good Sort permitted, by the Authority of the Common Council, it was enacted, "I. That no Play should be openly played within the Liberty of the City, wherein should be uttered any Words, Examples, or Doings of any Unchastity, Sedition, or such-like unfit and uncomely Matter, upon Pain of Imprisonment for the Space of fourteen Days, and 5*l.* for every such Offence. II. That no Innkeeper, Tavernkeeper, or other Person whatsoever, within the Liberties of the City, shall shew or play, or cause to be shewed or played, within his House or Yard, any Play, which shall not first be perused and allowed by the Lord-Mayor and Court of Aldermen's Order. III. No Person shall suffer any Plays to be played in his House or Yard, whereof he then shall have Rule, but only such Persons, and in such Places, as, upon good Consideration, shall be thereunto permitted and allowed by the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen. IV. Nor shall take and use any such Benefit or Advantage of such Permission, until such Person be bound to the Chamberlain of London, in certain Sums, for the Keeping of good Order, and avoiding of Disorders and Inconveniences. V. Neither shall use or exercise such Licence or Permission at any Time, in which the same shall be by the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen restrained, or commanded to stay and cease, in any usual Time of Divine Service on the Sunday or Holiday, or

Play-regu-

"receive any to that Purpose in Time of Service, to the same, upon Pain to forfeit for every Offence 5*l*. VI. And every Person to be licensed shall, during the Time of such Continuance of License, pay to the Use of the Poor in Hospitals of the City, or of the Poor visited with Sickness, such Sums and Payments, as between the Mayor and Aldermen, and the Person to be licensed, shall be agreed upon; upon Pain that, on the Want of every such Payment, such License shall be utterly void. VII. All Sums and Forfeitures to be incurred for any Offence against this Act, and all Forfeitures of Bonds, shall be employed to the Relief of the Poor of the Hospitals, or of the Poor infected or distressed in the City: And the Chamberlain, in his own Name, shall have and recover the same, to the Purposes aforesaid, in the Court of the outer Chamber of Guildhall, London, called The Mayor's Court.

"Provided, That this Act shall not extend to Plays shewed in private Houses, Lodgings of a Nobleman, Citizen, or Gentleman, which shall have the same then played in his Presence for the Festivity of any Marriage, Assembly of Friends, or other like Cause, without publick or common Collection of Money of the Auditors or Beholders."

The publick Players petitioned the Queen and Council for License to act as usual: But, after due Consideration, and a full Hearing of Arguments for and against them, they could obtain no Permission, except on Condition that they hold them content with playing in private Houses, at Weddings, &c. without publick Assemblies. That, if it were thought good they should be tolerated, that then they be restrained to the Order in the Act of Common Council, made in the Time of Hawes, Mayor. That they play not openly till the whole Deaths have been, by twenty Days, under fifty a Week, nor longer than shall so continue. That no Plays be on the Sabbath. That no Plays be on Holidays, but after Evening-Prayer; nor any received into the Auditory till after Evening Prayer. That no Playing be in the Dark, nor continue any such Time, but as any of the Auditors may return to their Dwellings in London before Sun-set, or at least before it be dark. That the Queen's Players only be tolerated; and of them their Number, and certain Names, to be notified in the Lord Treasurer's Letters to the Lord-Mayor, and to the Justices of Middlesex and Surrey; and those her Players not to divide themselves into several Companies. And that for breaking any of these Orders their Toleration cease.

But all these Prescriptions were not sufficient to keep them within due Order; but their Plays, so abusive oftentimes of Virtue, or particular Persons, gave great Offence, and occasioned Disturbances; whence they were now and then stopped and prohibited. So in the Year 1589, Hari Mayor, Complaint was made of them to the Lord Treasurer, who signified the same to the Mayor; and he sent for all the Players in Town, (and there were some Companies of them, as one belonged to the Lord Admiral, and another to the Lord Strange) and charged them to forbear till further Order.

On the 6th of November following an exceeding high Tide happened in the River Thames, which, after high Water, having ebbed about an Hour, a preternatural Reflux returned with such an amazing Impetuosity, that it soon overflowed its Banks, and, filling all the neighbouring Cellars, subterraneous Warehouses, and vicinal Marshes, occasioned incredible Damage.

The Lord Chancellor Bacon, in the Star-chamber, having taken Minutes of several Regulations to be made for reforming of publick Grievances, among which was that of suppressing a Number of superfluous Alehouses, he communicated the same to the Lord-Mayor; who, calling to their Assistance the Recorders of Southwark and Lambeth, set about a Reformation, by putting down above two hundred Alehouses in their several Jurisdictions: Which Example was quickly followed by those of Westminster, Dutchy of Lancaster, Liberty of Tower-Hamlets, and other Parts of Middlesex contiguous to London.

At this Time, the Lord-Mayor, Recorder, and other Magistrates, did so effectually exert themselves in putting the Laws in Execution against Vice and Immorality, that, at the Assizes then held for the City of London, there was not one Criminal to be tried; the Reason whereof is set forth in the following Letter from William Fleetwood, Recorder of London, to the Lord Treasurer, then with the Court at Buxton, viz. "The only Cause that this Reformation taketh so good Effect here about London, is, that when, by Order, we have either justly executed the Law, or performed the Council's Commandment, we were wont to have either a great Man's Letter, a Lady's Ring, or some other Token from such other inferior Persons, as will devise one Untruth or other to accuse us of, if we perform not their unlawful Requests. The Court is far off; here we are not troubled with Letters, neither for the Reprieve of this Prisoner, nor for sparing that Fray-maker. These Secretaries, Chamber-keepers, and Solicitors in the Court, procure many Letters from their Lords and Ladies upon untrue Suggestions; the which Letters do great Hurt."

Upon digging the Well in Ladenball-Street, wherein the present Pump is placed, near the End of Lime-Street, about the Depth of thirteen Feet, upon the Virgin Earth, was discovered a Hearth built of Roman Bricks, with Charcoals thereon; but what Use the said Hearth was appropriated to, is unknown.

William Lamb, some time a Gentleman of the Chapel to Henry VIII. Citizen and Clothworker, having drawn together several Springs of Water into a Head, now from him denominated Lamb's Conduit, near the Foundling Hospital, at the upper End of Redlion-Street in High-Holborn, whence, in a leaden Pipe two thousand Yards long, he conveyed the same to Snow-Hill; where, having re-edified a ruinous Conduit long in Disuse, (and now entirely demolished) he laid his Water into the same, to the great Advantage and Convenience of that Neighbourhood. This Conduit, finished March 26, 1577, tho' removed a little from its Place, still retains the Name of its Re-builder; the Charge whereof, together with that of the other Parts of the Work, amounted to 1500*l*.

He also gave 15 l. towards the Bells and Chimes of St. Giles without Cripplegate; 6 l. 13 s. 4 d. yearly to the Company of Stationers, for the Relief of twelve poor People of the Parish of St. Faith, under Paul's, at the Rate of 12 d. in Money, and 12 d. in Bread, to each of them, on every Friday through the Year; 6 l. per Ann. and 100 l. to purchase Land, for the Relief of Children in Christ's Hospital; 4 l. to St. Thomas's Hospital in Southwark; besides some other Charities to the Prisons, and for portioning poor Maids.

The Government, being still apprehensive of the Designs of Foreigners, caused the Numbers of those residing in the City of London again to be taken; when, upon Inquisition, there were, by Certificate, found to be in the City and Liberties six thousand four hundred and ninety-two: Whereof two thousand three hundred and two were Dutch; one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight

French; one hundred and sixteen Italians; English, born of foreign Parents, fifteen hundred and forty-two; and of other Nations, not specified, four hundred and forty-seven; besides Persons not certified, two hundred and seventeen.

Some Time after the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen acquainted the Ministry of the vast Increase of new Buildings, and Number of Inhabitants within the City and Suburbs of London, chiefly occasioned by the great Resort of People from all Parts of the Kingdom to settle here; which was imagined would prove of dangerous Consequence, not only to this great Metropolis, but likewise to the Nation in general, if not timely remedied: Wherefore to redress the imaginary Grievance, and obviate the bad Consequences thereof, the Queen judged it convenient to issue out the following Proclamation:

"The Queenes Majestie perceiving the State

"thereof to increase dayly, by Accessse of People

And to the Intent this her Majesties Royal Commandment and necessary Provision may take Place, and be duly observed, for so universal a Benefite to the whole Body of the Realme, for whose Respects all particular Persons are bound, by God's Lawe and Man's, to forbear from their particular and extraordinarie Lucre; her Majestie straightly chargeth the Lorde-Mayor of the Citie of London, and all other Officers having Authoritie in the same, and also all Justices of Peace, Lordes and Bailiffs of Liberties not being within the Jurisdiction of the said Lorde-Mayor of London, to foresee, that no Person do begin to prepare any Foundation for any newe House, Tenement, or Building, to serve, to receive or hold any Inhabitants to dwell or lodge, or to use any Victualling therein, where no former Habitation hath bene in the Memorie of such as now doe live; but that they be prohibited and restrained so to do. And both the Persons that shall so attempt to the contrary, and all manner of Workmen that shall (after Warning given) continue in any such Work tending to such newe Buildings, to be committed to close Prison, and there to remain without Baile, until they find good Sureties, with Bonds for reasonable Sums of Money (to be forfeitable and recoverable at her Majesties Suite, for the Use of the Hospitals in and about the said City) that they will not at any Time hereafter attempt the like.

And further the said Officers shall seaze all manner of Stuff, so (after Warning given) brought to the Place where such newe Buildings shall be intended, and the same cause to be converted and employed in any publick Use for the City or Parish where the same shall be attempted.

monly termed, Inmates or Underfitters, which have been suffered within these seven Years, contrary to the good auncient Laws or Customes of the City, or of the Boroughes and Parishes within the foresaid Limit of three Miles afore-mentioned, the said Lorde-Mayor, and the other Officers above-mentioned, shall speedily cause to be redressed in their ordinarie Courtes and Law Dayes, betwixt this and the Feast of All-Saintes next coming; within which Times such Underfitters or Inmates may provide themselves other Places abroad in the Realme, where many Houses rest uninhabited, to the Decay of divers auncient good Boroughes and Townes. And, because her Majestie intendeth to have this Ordinance duly executed, her Pleasure is, that the said Lord-Mayor of London, and other the Officers having Jurisdiction within the said Space of three Miles above-mentioned, shall, after the Proclamation hereof, as speedily as they may, meete in some convenient Place near to the said City, and there (after Conference had) accord among themselves how to proceed to the Execution hereof; and, if any Cause shall so require, to impart to her Majesties Privie Counsell, any Let or Impediment that may arise, to the Intent that Remedy be given to any such Impediment, according to her Majesties Pleasure heretofore expressed.

Given at Windsor, the seventh Day of July, 1580, in the two-and-twentieth Year of her Majesties Reigne.

In the same Year 1580, Sir Jehan Branch entering Lord-Mayor, when he came to the Court of Exchequer to take the Oath, the Lord Treasurer declared himself, for the Nearness of his Place about the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, to understand her Pleasure; and delivered unto him several Advertisements of certain Matters, to be had in Remembrance, and diligently looked into:

Lord Treasurer's Directions to the Lord-Mayor for enforcing this Proclamation.

First, For Execution of the Queen's late Proclamation, namely, against the Increase of new Buildings, and Multiplication of Families, within the City of London, and three Miles Compass of the same: Which Proclamation his Lordship said to have proceeded from Information given from the Mayor himself; who had advertised the Council, that the Multitude in and about the City did so overgrow, that there was some Fear and Peril of ruling them. And further, he alledged three Considerations as Grounds of that Proclamation, viz. the over-peopling for Governance, especially of the worst and basest Sort; the Excess of Prices of Victuals and Fewel; and the Danger of Plague and Infection; from which her Majesty's Person could not be insured to be free.

Secondly, For Provisions of Hospitals, and other good Means to be thought of in Time of Health against Time of Sicknes.

Thirdly, The Conservation of the River of Thames: Wherein his Lordship first made Mention of the City's Jurisdiction from London-Bridge to Stanes; and therein did remember, that Hatches, Stops, and Wayres, wherewith her Majesty was grieved, and found Fault in the Passage of her own Barge; beside the Multitude of Fry of Fish destroyed destroyed thereby, and made Meat for Swine. He also made Mention of the Commodity of the River for bringing of Fewel, Victual and Carriages that Way to the City; and concluded, That Order had been given for Redress thereof; but he heard not of the executing it. It was answered, That it was done. And then he further said, That her Majesty did find Fault with a great Enormity about the Bridge, by certain Things which she called Trinkets: Which her Pleasure was, that the Lord-Mayor should cause to be redressed.

X x x

Fourthly, His Lordship did remember certain lewd Persons, Fugitives come from beyond the Seas, and especially from Rome; Mislikers of the Religion, State and Government; and Practisers of Sedition; Persons dangerous to the Realm, and of whom the City of London, being the greatest and wealthiest Place of the Realm, had chief Cause to beware; and where the greatest Number of them lurked. And therefore he willed, that such should be diligently sought.

These Admonitions of so grave and wise a Counsellor, and delivered as the express Pleasure of the Queen, had this Success; That at the very first Court of this Mayor, which was held November 3, 1580, it was ordered, That the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen should both in their own Persons, and with their earnest Travail, and by their inferior Officers, see and cause the said Admonitions to be most carefully and vigilantly looked unto, and the said Disorders reformed, to the uttermost of their Power.

The wild Chimeras which both the Court and City seem at this Time to have been pestered with, appear, by this Proclamation, to have been purely the Effect of Incogitancy; for, had they had the least Regard to Retrospection, they would easily have discovered in History much greater and more populous Cities than London then was, without their having been more obnoxious either to Pestilence, Famine, or a greater Difficulty in governing, than smaller Cities. This is at present demonstrated by this City, and its vastly extended Suburbs, which are at least quadruple, both in Dimensions and Number of Inhabitants, to what they were then, as is apparent by the yearly Bill of Mortality. And by the Histories of those and these Times, 'tis manifest, that this vast Metropolis is now much better governed, and far less subject, either to Pestilence or Famine; as is evident from the less numerous Tumults, Plagues and Dearth.

Sir Thomas Offley, Merchant-Taylor, Mayor, deceased 1580, appointed by his Testament the half of his Goods, and 200*l.* deducted out of the other half, given to his Son Henry, to be given and bestowed in Deeds of Charity by his Executors, according to his Confidence and Trust in them.

THE Cross in Cheapſide having been frequently presented by the Inquest as a publick Nuisance, in obstructing Carriages, to the great Detriment of the Inhabitants of that Street, but without Redress; it was so highly resented by the Neighbourhood, who were likewise offended at the Figures wherewith the Cross was decorated, that in the Night-time it was almost demolished by Persons unknown; who not only stripped it of its Puppets, but likewise robbed the Virgin Mary of her Son; and, breaking both her Arms, had, by the Assistance of a Rope, almost destroyed her Body, which they left in a tottering Condition. Upon which a Proclamation was published for discovering and apprehending the Person or Persons concerned in this Deformation, with a Reward of ten Pounds, upon Conviction.

The Standard of Weights belonging to the City of London being either lost or mislaid, it occasioned the committing of numerous Frauds in the Weighing of Goods; for the remedying of which, Sir James Harvey, the Mayor, wrote a Letter to the Lord Treasurer, purporting,

"That whereas great Abuses and Frauds were daily committed against her Majesty's loving Subjects, by reason of false Weights, as well within this City, as in other Cities and Places elsewhere in the Realm; and whereof, as he was informed, his Lordship had heretofore been made privy, and had taken care for the Reformation thereof. And that notwithstanding the Abuse did yet continue; for that the true

Luxury having greatly prevailed in this City amongst People of all Degrees, but in particular among Apprentices, in their Apparel, &c. which then was justly apprehended might prove of dangerous Consequence to their Masters: For the remedying of which, and preventing the bad Effects thereof, 'twas by the Lord-Mayor and Common Council enacted, That from thenceforth no Apprentice whatsoever should presume, 1. To wear any Apparel but what he receives from his Master. 2. To wear no Hat within the City and Liberty thereof, nor any thing instead thereof, than a Woollen Cap, without any Silk in or about the same. 3. To wear no Ruffles, Cuffs, loose Collar, nor other thing than a Ruff at the Collar, and that only of a Yard and a half long. 4. To wear no Doublets but what were made of Canvas, Fustian, Sackcloth, English Leather, or Woollen Cloth, and without being enriched with any manner of Gold, Silver or Silk. 5. To wear no other coloured Cloth, or Kersey, in Hose or Stockings, than White, Blue or Russet. 6. To wear little Breeches, of the same Stuffs as the Doublets, and without being stitched, laced or bordered. 7. To wear a plain upper Coat of Cloth or Leather, without Pinking, Stitching, Edging or Silk about it. 8. To wear no other Surcoat than a Cloth Gown or Cloak, lined or faced with Cloth, Cotton or Bays, with a fixed round Collar, without Stitching, Guarding, Lace or Silk. 9. To wear no Pumps, Slippers, nor Shoes, but of English Leather, without being pinked, edged or stitched, nor Girdles nor Garters, other than of Crewel, Woollen, Thread or Leather, without being garnished. 10. To wear no Sword, Dagger, or other Weapon, but a Knife; nor a Ring, Jewel of Gold, nor Silver, nor Silk in any Part of his Apparel.

Penalties on the Offenders.

It was likewise further enacted, That every Apprentice offending against any of the above-mentioned Items, was for the first Offence to be punished at the Discretion of his Master; for the second, to be publicly whipped at the Hall of his Company; and for the third, to serve six Months longer than specified in his Indentures. And every Master conniving at the Crimes of his Apprentice committed against the Tenor of the Premises, should, for every such Offence, forfeit to the Poor of the Parish wherein he dwelt six Shillings and eight Pence. It was also farther ordained, That no Apprentice should frequent, or go to any Dancing, Fencing, or Musical Schools; nor keep any Chest, Press, or other Place for the keeping of Apparel or Goods, but in his Master's House, under the Penalties aforesaid. And every such Master permitting or allowing his Apprentice to offend in any of the said Cases, to forfeit as in the Case of forbidden Apparel.

By the laudable Care of the Government of the City at that Time, in seasonably restraining the Excesses of Apprentices by a sumptuary Law, 'tis not to be doubted but many, both Masters and Servants, were thereby saved from Destruction. And 'tis now to be wished, that some such good Law were thought of, to restrain the far more destructive Practices of our modern Apprentices, viz. those of Whore and Horse-keeping, frequenting of Tavern-Clubs and Playhouses, and their great Excesses in Cloaths, Linen, Periwigs, Gold and Silver Watches, &c.

About the same Time, Peter Maurice, a German Engineer, proposed to the Court of Lord-Mayor and Aldermen the erecting a Machine in the River Thames for raising Water for the more effectual Supply of the City; which being approved of, he erected the same in the River near London-Bridge. See this at large in Book I. Ch. VII.

The Lord Treasurer sent an Order to Sir Thomas Blanke, the Lord-Mayor, commonly known by the Name of the Good Knight, to make a Catalogue of all the Victualling-Houses in London that were infected; which Catalogue was to be set up publicly to be read, to the End that all Strangers, that resorted to London about their Occasions, might avoid Setting up, or Lodging at those Houses, to prevent their carrying Infection into the Country; and so to do it, from two Months to two Months. This Sir Thomas Blanke diligently did; and, employing an expert Person to draw up this Catalogue, he had special Regard to two Things; the one, to give such plain Descriptions and Notes of the Streets and Places, as might serve for easy Notice to such as repaired to the City; the other, the List to be so brief and contracted, as it might be brought into less than one Side of a Sheet, to be fixed in Places convenient. The Mayor prayed the said Lord, to consider of the proper Places which he thought good to note, having Respect to Westminster, and the Way thereto out of the Liberties, and the Entrance always into the City. The Mayor put him also in Mind, how in Term-Time, usually, all the Houses in Fleet-Street, and the Streets and Lanes adjoining, as also without Temple-Bar, did use Lodging, Victualling, and Letting-out of Chambers; leaving to his Lordship's Consideration, whether such Houses, tho' they were not Victuallers, should not be likewise noted, if they had been infected within the Space of two Months.

Then he thanked his Lordship for his honourable and loving Care of the City, in the Matter of the Infection, and the Repair of the Queen's Subjects thither. And, for his own Part, he promised, he would not fail in Diligence, according to his Direction. This the Lord-Mayor signified by his Letter, dated the fourteenth of January, 1583.

And whereas upon a Lord's Day, a great Number of People being met for Sport at Paris Garden, all the Scaffolds fell down at once, to the slaying and wounding of a great many People; this Mayor piously looked upon it as a Judgment of God for Breach of the Lord's Day, and wrote to the Lord Treasurer to this Tenor: "That it gave great Occasion to acknowledge the Hand of God, for such Abuse of his Sabbath-Day; and

"and moved him in Conscience to beseech his Lordship to give Order for Redress of such Contempt of God's Service. And that he had for that End treated with some Justices of Peace of that County, who shewed themselves to have very good Zeal, but alledged Want of Commission; which they humbly referred to his honourable Wisdom."

According to an Account of the Mortality within the City and its Liberties, printed in the following Year, and now in my Hand, there died of this Plague, from the twenty-eighth of December, 1581, to the twenty-seventh of December, 1582, only six thousand nine hundred and thirty: And it appears further by the said Bill, that there was not one died in the Parishes of St. Mary-Bow, St. Margaret Moses in Friday-Street, St. Matthew in Friday-Street, St. Augustine near St. Paul's.

Notwithstanding the Application made to the Lord Treasurer by Sir James Harvey the late Mayor, for the Redress of enormous Frauds committed in this City, in the weighing of Goods and Merchandize, which was chiefly owing to the Loss of the Standard, as above-mentioned; which Defect remaining still unsupplied, it occasioned the present Mayor to send the under-written Letter to the aforesaid Treasurer:

"My Duty most humbly done to your Lordship: Having lately entered with my Brethren and the Common Council of this City, into the establishing of Orders for true and upright Use of her Majesty's Beam, with the Weights thereto belonging; which upon Continuance do daily wear, and need to be renewed and sized from Time to Time; we have found it necessary to be humble Suitors to your Lordship, that your Lordship will have in your honourable Remembrance the great Want that this City and the whole Realm findeth for Lack of Order to affize Weights; whereby the Commonweal taketh Detriment, and private Men presume without Order to sell and use unlawful Weights both in the City and in the Country, that are accustomed to take their affizing from hence.

"We have thought the Time more convenient now to move your Lordship, because we hear, that the latter Verdict touching Weights is long since delivered before your Lordship and the rest in the honourable Court of Exchequer; it may please your Lordship to take Order with such Speed, as your Lordship shall think meet, for Certainty in this Behalf; and that your Restraint be so released, as our Officers may be at Liberty to affize accordingly; and so I leave to trouble your Lordship. At London, the last Day of July, 1583, &c."

In the Year 1583, one Day in the Month of July, there were two great Feasts at London, one at Grocers Hall, and another at Haberdashers Hall, (as perhaps there was in all the rest upon some publick Occasion.) Sir Edward Osborne, Mayor, and divers of his Brethren the Aldermen, with the Recorder, were at Haberdashers Hall; where the said Mayor, after the second Course was come in, took the great standing Cup, the Gift of Sir William Garret, being full of Hypocrase, and Silence being commanded through all the Tables, all Men being bare-headed, my Lord openly, with a convenient loud Voice, used these Words: "Mr. Recorder of London, and you my good Brethren the Aldermen, bear Witness that I do drink unto Mr. Alderman Maffam, as Sheriff of London and Middlesex, from Michaelmas next coming, for one whole Year; and I do beseech God to give him as quiet and peaceable a Year, with as good and gracious Favour of her Majesty, as I myself, and my Brethren the Sheriffs now being, have hitherto had, and as I trust shall have." This spoken, all Men desired the same. The Sword-Bearer in Haste went to the Grocers Feast, where Mr. Alderman Maffam was at Dinner, and did openly declare the Words that my Lord-Mayor had used; whereunto Silence made, and all being hush, the Alderman answered very modestly in this Sort: "First, I thank God, who, through his great Goodness, hath called me from a very poor and mean Degree unto this worshipful State. Secondly, I thank her Majesty for her gracious Goodness in allowing to us these great and ample Franchises. And Thirdly, I thank my Lord-Mayor for having so honourable an Opinion of this my Company of Grocers, as to make choice of me, being a poor Member of the same." And this said, both he and all the Company pledged my Lord, and gave him Thanks.

On the seventeenth of September following, the Citizens of London held a very splendid Shooting-Match, under the Direction of the Captain of the London Archers, who was stiled, The Duke of Shoreditch, on the following Occasion: King Henry the Eighth having appointed a great Shooting-Match at Windsor, it happened, that towards Night, when the Diversion was almost over, one Barlow, a Citizen of London, and Inhabitant of Shoreditch, out-shot all the rest; wherewith Henry was so exceedingly pleased, that he told Barlow, that thenceforth he should be called, The Duke of Shoreditch; which Appellation the Captain of the London Archers enjoyed for Ages after.

This Captain of the Band of London Archers summoned his nominal Nobility to accompany him with their several Companies on so solemn an Occasion, under the following Titles, viz. The Marquisses of Barlo, Clerkenwell, Islington, Hoxton, and Shacklewell, and the Earl of Pancras, &c. who being met at the Time and Place prefixed, the pompous March began from Merchant-Taylors Hall, consisting of three thousand Archers, sumptuously apparelled, nine hundred and forty-two whereof having Chains of Gold about their Necks: This splendid Company was guarded by Whiffers and Bill-men, to the Number of four thousand, besides Pages and Footmen; and marching thro' Broad-Street, the Residence of the Duke their Captain, continued their March thro' Moorfields, by Finsbury, to Smithfield; where, after having performed their several Evolutions, they shot at the Target for Glory.

Elizabeth, in the twenty-seventh of her Reign, being justly apprehensive of an Invasion from Spain, not only by repeated Advices, but likewise by the prodigious naval Preparations making in that Country, took all the Precautions necessary, such as the fitting out of Ships of War for Sea-Service, and raising and disciplining of Men for that of the Land, to prevent the bad Consequences of the impending Storm. The several Corporations of this City sent a handsome Body of Men into the Field at their own Expence; who, assembling on Blackheath, about five thousand in Number, completely armed, encamped thereon about a Week; during which Time they had the Honour of being reviewed divers Times by the Queen. The Companies of Grocers, Haberdashers and Merchant-Tailors on this Occasion sent each three hundred and ninety-five Men; the Mercers, two hundred and ninety-four; and the other Companies according to their several Abilities.

Some Time after, a considerable Body of Soldiers were fitted out, by and at the Expence of the aforesaid Companies; who being completely armed, and clothed in Red, were sent to the Assistance of the Dutch against the Spaniards.

At a Sessions in July 1585, this may be worthy to be related, as it was written by Fleetwood the Recorder to the Lord Treasurer: That he, and some others that were then upon the Bench, spent a Day about searching out sundry that were Receivers of Felons; and a great many were found in London, Westminster, Southwark, and Places about the same. And they got the Names of forty-five masterless Men and Cut-Purses, whose Practice was to rob Gentlemen's Chambers and Artificers Shops, in and about London; and seven Houses of Entertainment for such in London; six more in Westminster; three more in the Suburbs, and two in Southwark. Among the rest they found out one Wotton, a Gentleman born, and some Time a Merchant of good Credit, but fallen by Time into Decay. This Man kept an Alehouse at Smart's-Key, near Billinggate, and after, for some Misdemeanor, put down, he reared up a new Trade of Life; and in the same House he procured all the Cut-Purses about the City to repair to his House. There was a School-house set up to learn young Boys to cut Purse. Two Devices were hung up; one was a Pocket, and another was a Purse: The Pocket had in it certain Counters, and was hung about with Hawks-Bells, and over the Top did hang a little Sacring Bell: The Purse had Silver in it: And he that could take out a Counter without any Noise, was allowed to be a publick Foyster: And he that could take a Piece of Silver out of the Purse without Noise of any of the Bells, was adjudged a judicial Nipper, according to their Terms of Art. A Foyster was a Pick-Pocket, a Nipper was a Pick-Purse or Cut-Purse.

It gave great Encouragement to Evil-doers

about these Times; and good Men complained of it, that Thieves and Malefactors condemned were so frequently and commonly spared: And this Evil came from the Court, inasmuch that the Recorder aforesaid, a wise and honest Man, observed to the Lord Treasurer, that it was grown a Trade in the Court to make Means for Reprives.

In this same Year, a Controversy arose between the City of London, and a very litigious Man, Sir Owen Hopton, Lieutenant of the Tower of London; who, by colour of his Office, pretended a Right to a Garden on Tower Hill, and, in consequence thereof, in an illegal and arbitrary Manner sent his Servants to dispossess the lawful Possessor, and to possess themselves thereof for his Use. Those illegal Ministers not only executed their imperious Master's Command, by possessing themselves of the said Garden, but likewise brought along with them two Men they found upon the Premises, whom the Lieutenant immediately committed to Prison; whereupon a Writ of Habeas Corpus being obtained of the Court of King's Bench, for removing Robert Shapely, one of the said Prisoners, it was by the City Solicitor delivered to the said Lieutenant, who, instead of paying a due Obedience to that Authority, caused the Solicitor to be likewise imprisoned; wherefore the City applied to the Privy Council for Redress, who immediately referred the Hearing thereof to the Lords Chief Justices and Master of the Rolls, as will appear by the following Letter:

duced, effectually to examine the Matters thereby informed against him; and that you also take Knowledge of such other Complaints and Controversies, as the Lord-Mayor and the Recorder of London shall deliver unto you against the Lieutenant of the Tower, concerning their former Debates and Strifes, for Matter of Liberties, Prescriptions and Customs, and the like, on the Behalf of the Lieutenant against them, praying you to take some Pains to hear the Matters at large on both Sides, and to see upon what Privileges, Customs and Prescriptions, their several Claims are grounded and pretended; as also to consider of their Strength and Validity in Law; wherein after you shall have spent some Time, and heard and understood the Matters at large, we require you then to make Report to us, what you shall have found on both Sides, as well touching the Complaints of Smith and Wikins, as of the Lord-Mayor and Citizens, with your Opinions of their said Complaints and Controversies, and what Course were fittest to be taken between them, which we pray you to do with as convenient Speed as you may; and so bid you heartily farewell."

In Obedience to this epistolary Order, the said Chief Justices and Master of the Rolls summoned both Parties to appear before them; when, after having carefully examined and heard the Allegations and Proofs on each Side, they reported the same, with their Opinion thereon, by the following Certificate:

Ibid.

Their Report.

"First, upon Examination of the Matter, touching the said Smith and Wikins, mentioned in your Honours Letters; it appeareth unto us, that (some Controversy being between the Mayor and Citizens and the said Lieutenant, touching a Garden Plot near the said Tower) one Ralph Gasken, Servant to the said Lieutenant, violently did draw forth of the said Garden one Shapeley, Servant to the said Wikins, then labouring there for his said Master, in such violent Manner, as thereby Blood was drawn of him in several Places, and carried him to the Tower, and there kept him in Prison eight Days; and that one Sbarwe, another of the Lieutenant's Servants, was present with the said Gasken, aiding him, but that he did not hurt the said Shapeley; which Gasken and Sbarwe did detain some of the Apparel of the said Shapeley, and yet do, for any Thing known to us.

"And that likewise one Payne was taken forth of the said Garden, and carried to the Tower, and there imprisoned three Days, and then delivered upon Bond to render his Body to the Tower, when he should be required; and that Payne hath left a Pawn of the Value of ten Shillings for his Meat and Drink.

"And that her Majesty's Writ of Habeas Corpus for the Body of Shapeley was issued forth of her Bench, directed to the Lieutenant, which was carried and delivered to him by the said Smith, who prayed the said Lieutenant to make Allowance thereof, and paid him the Fee due therefore; but forthwith he would have forced the said Smith to have received the Money again, and the Writ; which Smith refused to do, praying him not to be offended for bringing of her Majesty's Process.

"And thereupon Master Lieutenant said, he would put his Writ in his Pocket, as he had done many, and therewith rubbed Smith on the Checks, and threatened to imprison him, if he would not carry back the Writ again, and the Money; whereupon the said Lieutenant imprisoned Smith, and detained him about three Hours, until, upon a Bill of his Hand to return to Prison when the Lieutenant should send for him, he was delivered; which Matter the Lieutenant confesseth to be true.

"And touching such Liberties as Master Lieutenant claimeth to have been used for the Officers and Attendants in the Tower, as not to be arrested by any Action in the City of London, and Protections to be granted to them by Master Lieutenant, and not obeying of Writs of Habeas Corpus; we think such Persons as are daily attendant in the Tower, serving her Majesty there, are to be privileged, and not to be arrested upon any Plaint in London; but for Writs of Execution, or Capias ut ligatum, and such like, we think they ought to have no Privilege.

"Moreover, touching Protections granted by Master Lieutenant, for such as be condemned in any Action in the Court, kept in the Tower, to go at large, and not to be arrested by any Process out of the Queen's high Courts, or elsewhere, or any other Protection to that Effect, for any privileged Person, we think the same against her Majesty's Laws and Dignity.

"Item, That Mr. Lieutenant ought to return every Habeas Corpus out of any Court at Westminster, so as the Justices, before whom it shall be returned, (as the Cause shall require) may either remand it with the Body, or retain the Matter before them, and deliver, as Justice shall require.

"As touching the Jurisdiction of the Court in the Tower, and the Controversies for certain Liberties upon the Tower-Hill, and the Soil there, and divers Places about the Tower, we are not yet fully resolved, but desire your Lordships to have some farther Time to consider thereupon; for that there be many Materials alledged, and to be shewed in Writing for the same, as we are informed, which we have not yet seen.

"Item, The said Lieutenant doth claim a Liberty, that, if any Person privileged in the Tower be arrested in London, he may take the Body of any Citizen, who shall come within the Liberties of the Tower, and keep his Body there, until the other be delivered, which we think altogether against the Laws of this Realm."

Upon Receipt of the above Certificate, the Lords of Council made an Order to confirm the same: But, as the Preamble to the said Order is not very material, and the Body of the same only a Repetition of the Judges Opinions, as specified in the said Certificate; I shall therefore only insert the two last Paragraphs of the said Order, viz.

"The Lords therefore of her Majesty's said Privy Council, upon grave and deliberate Considerations had of the Certificate and Opinions

"It was this Day by their Lordships ordered and decreed, betwixt the Lord-Mayor, Commonalty and Citizens of London, and their Successors, and the Lieutenant of her Highness's said Tower of London, and all other Lieutenants and Officers of the Tower, at any Time hereafter to succeed, That the Matters, Points and Articles contained in the Certificate of the said Justices and Master of the Rolls before-mentioned; wherein their Resolutions, Opinions and Determinations be set down, declared and signified, shall at all Times from henceforth stand and remain for Rules and Resolutions, and final Determination and Decision; for so much and so many of the Points of Controversies, as are contained in the said Certificate, (whereof they have delivered their Opinions) to be for ever hereafter duly observed and kept; and that nothing be hereafter at any Time done or attempted on either Part, to the violating or interrupting of the same."

Foreigners.

A. D. 1586, a Conspiracy was entered into by the Apprentices and other ill-designing Persons of this City, for a general Insurrection to be made against Foreigners, but especially against those of the French Nation: Which wicked Design was founded upon the same Principles with those of evil May-Day, in the Year 1517: But, by a timely and happy Discovery, the Innocent were saved from Destruction; and many of the Conspirators were apprehended, and committed to Newgate.

About the same Time, another far more dreadful and dangerous Conspiracy was happily discovered against the Life of the Queen; and many of the Traitors being apprehended, occasioned a Joy inexpressible among the Citizens of London, who on that Account not only returned Thanks to God for her happy Deliverance, but likewise caused their Bells and Bonfires to proclaim their unfeigned Joy; while every Householder, according to his Ability, regaled himself and Friends on this joyful Occasion.

The Queen being informed of the extraordinary Rejoicings made by the Citizens on this Occasion, and being sensible that it was the Effect of their sincere and hearty Love towards her, she sent the following Letter to the Lord-Mayor:

Queen's
Letter to

"Right Trustie and Wel-beloved, we greet you well. Being given to understand how greatly our good and most loving Subjects of that City did rejoyce at the Apprehension of certaine divelish and wicked-minded Subjects of ours; that through the great and singular Goodnesse of God have been detected, to have most wickedly and unnaturally conspired, not onely the taking away of our owne Life, but also to have stirred (as much as in them lay) a general Rebellion throughout our whole Realme: Wee could not but by our own Letters witness unto you the great and singular Contentment wee received upon the Knowledge thereof, assuring you that wee did not so much rejoyce at the Escape of the intended Attempt against our owne Person, as to see the great Joy our most loving Subjects took at the Apprehension of the Conspirers thereof, which to make their Love more apparent, they have (as we are to our great Comfort informed) omitted no outward Shew; that by any externall Act might witness to the World the inward Love and dutifull Affection they beare towards us."

"And as we have as great Cause with all Thankfulness to acknowledge God's great Goodnesse towards us, through the infinite Blessings he layeth upon us, as many as ever Prince had, yea, rather as ever Creature had; yet do we not, for any worldly Blessing received from his divine Majesty, so greatly acknowledge the same, as in that it hath pleased him to incline the Hearts of our Subjects, even from the first Beginning of our Raygne, to carrie as great Love towards us, as ever Subjects carryed towards Prince, which ought to move us (as it doth in very Deede) to seeke with all Care, and by all good Meanes that appertaine to a Christian Prince, the Conservation of so loving and dutifull affected Subjects; assuring you, that we desire no longer to live, then while we may in the whole Course of our Government carry ourselfe in such Sort, as may not only nourish and continue their Love and Good-will towards us, but also increase the same: Wee thinke meete, that these our Letters should be communicated in some general Assembly to our most loving Subjects the Commoners of that Cittie.

"Given under our Signet at our Castle of Windsor, the 18th of August, 1586, in the 28th Yeare of our Reigne."

On the sixth of December the Lord-Mayor, assisted by divers of the Nobility, the Aldermen in their Formalities, and eighty of the principal Citizens in Velvet and Chains of Gold, with the greatest Solemnity, proclaimed in Cheapside, at Leadenball, the End of London-Bridge, and that of Chancery-Lane, the Sentence of Death lately passed upon that unfortunate Princess, Mary, Queen of Scotland.

This Year a general Scarcity of Corn happened in England; and the Scarcity increasing, the Dearth became so excessive, that Wheat was sold in this City the Spring following at three Pounds four Shillings the Quarter, and in divers Places of the Kingdom at five Pounds four Shillings.

The Queen, continuing to make the most formidable Preparations for securing the Kingdom against the Attempts of the Spaniards, sent the following Letter to the Lord-Mayor of this City:

" Trusty and Well-beloved, we greete you well.

" Whereas upon Information given unto us of great Preparations made in foreign Parts with an Intente to attempte somewhat against this our Realme, wee gave present Order that our said Realme should be put in Order of Defence; which wee have caused to be performed in all Partes accordingly, savinge in the Cittie of London.

" Wee therefore knowinge your Readiness, by former Experience, to performe any Service that well-affecte Subjects ought to yealde to their Prince and Sovereigne, do lett you understand, that within our saide Cittie our Pleasure is, that there be forthwith put in a Readiness to serve for Defence of our own Person, upon such Occasions as may fall out, the Number of ten thousand hable Men, furnished with Armour and Weapons convenient; of which Number, our Meaning is, that six thousand be enrolled under Captaines and Ensignes, and to be trained at Tymen convenient, according to suche further Direction as you shall receive from our Privye Councell, under six of their Handes, which our Pleasure is you do follow from Tyme to Tyme in the Ordryng and Trayninge of the said Nombres of Men. And theis our Letters shall be your sufficient Warrant for the doing of the same.

Two Days after, the Queen's Letter was followed by the subjoined from the Privy Council:

Purpose.

" After our hartie Commendations.

" Whereas the Queenes Majestie having received divers Advertisements of great Preparations in forreine Partes, with Intent and Purpose to attempte somewhat on this Realme, did very providently give speedie Order for to provide all Things necessarye to withstande any Invasion or Attempte that might be offered; and, to that End, did direct her Letters to you, thereby willinge and requiringe you to put in a Readiness the Number of ten thousand armed Men within the Cittie and the Liberties of the same, being the principal and chief Cittie in all the Realme, to serve as well for the Defence of the same, as for the Safe-garde of her Majestie's Person, if Neede should so require; whereof six thousand were to be enrolled, and to be reduced under Captaines and Ensignes.

" And, for the better orderinge and disposing of the said Souldiers, you were required to follow such Directions as you should from Tyme to Tyme receive from us. Theis are therefore to let you understand, that wee have thought good to require our loving Friendes, Sir Francis Knowles, Knt. Treasurer of her Majestie's Housholde, and Sir John Norris, Knt. to conferre with you in that Behalf, to appoint convenient Tyme for the better trayninge of the said six thousand, and for the better or-

" dringe and sorting them with Armour and Weapons, and reducing the same under Captaines and Ensignes, to the Ende that they may be trayned and made experte to use their Weapons, and disciplined, whereby they may be the more serviceable, and better instructed to serve either for the Defence of the said Cittie, or to joyne with that Armye that shall be appointed for the Defence of her Majestie's Person, as Occasion shall serve.

" And that the other four thousand Men also have their severall Armour and Weapons appointed unto them, and to be commanded to be in a Readiness to serve also in Case of Necessitie for like Purposes as is aforesaid; wherein wee are to praye you, that you will use the Aide and Help of Mr. Treasurer, and omit no Care and Diligence to see this her Majestie's Pleasure put in Execution, tending to your owne Preservation and Safe-garde, as becometh all good Subjects to do; and to advise us of the Order you shall have taken, as well in trayning of the six thousand, as having in a Readiness the Residue.

" So we bid you hartely farewell. From the Courte at Greenwich, the 10th of Marche, 1587.

Your very loving Friends,

CHRIST. HATTON, Canc. FRA. WALSHINGHAM,
W. BURGHLEY, T. HENAGE,
R. LEYCESTER, J. WOOLEY."

These Letters being read in the Common Council, it was unanimously resolved to grant her Majesty the desired Number of Troops, which were to be raised in the several Wards of the City by the Aldermen and Common Councilmen thereof respectively. And, for the more effectually supplying the aforesaid Number of Men with all the Necessaries of War, the Common Council appointed a Committee of twenty-six of their Members, to consider of Ways and Means for that Purpose.

And, the better to enable the Citizens to raise the Sum necessary for this great Undertaking, a Deputation was sent by the Common Council to the Privy Council, to intreat that Right Honourable Board, that the Inhabitants of the several pretended Privileged Places within the City and Liberty thereof, together with all Strangers, might be obliged to contribute towards the said necessary Charges; and that the City might appoint Officers duly qualified to train and command the said Troops, as should be approved by the Court of Lord-Mayor and Aldermen.

The Danger of an Invasion from Spain still approaching, the Lords of the Privy Council sent the following Letter to the Lord-Mayor:

" After our hartie Commendations to your Lordship.

" Whereas her Majestie hath thought it convenient, that as well such Nombres of Trayned Bandes and others, as by former Orders have been erected in the several Counties in the Realme, should be disposed and divided, some to repaire to the Sea Coastes, as Occasion may serve, to impeache the Landinge, or With-

I have added this Account to shew how greatly Stow was mistaken, where he tells us, that the Privy Council at this Time only demanded of the City a Supply of five thousand Men.

The Citizens, on this extraordinary Occasion, being willing to exert themselves to the utmost, on the 3d of April, in the same Year, the Common Council passed a Resolution to grant the Queen a Supply of sixteen of the largest Ships in the River Thames, and four Pinnaces or light Frigates. Pursuant to which, they took the said Ships into their Service, fitted them out with the greatest Expedition, and plentifully supplied them with all the Necessaries of War; and, during the Time of their being in the Service of the Publick, defrayed the Charge thereof, as well as that of the ten thousand Men above-mentioned. And, if we may credit the Manuscript of these Transactions preserved in the King's Library, we find that their naval Supply was afterwards increased to the Number of thirty-eight Ships.

On the 30th of January the Queen, being arrived at St. James's from Richmond, was waited upon and congratulated by the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council; who, on that Occasion, were richly dressed in Velvet, with golden Chains, and mounted on stately Horses.

The Fleet sent by the Queen, under the Command of Norris and Drake, to the Assistance of Don Antonio, late King of Portugal, against the Spaniards, being returned, and the Soldiers and Sailors, who had been inured to Plunder, disbanded, they confederated themselves to the Number of five hundred, with an Intent to pillage Bartolemew Fair, and, for the Execution of their villainous Design, assembled at Westminster; which Sir Richard Martin, the Mayor, receiving Intelligence of, he, with the utmost Expedition, raised about two thousand Citizens completely armed, and marched against those Free-booters; which they being advised of, instantly dispersed, and shifted for themselves after the best Manner they could: Whereupon the Citizens returned to their several Habitations without striking a Blow.

Soon after, the City lent the Queen fifteen thousand Pounds, for which she allowed Ten per Cent. Interest; and, on the 21st of September following, they supplied her with a thousand Men, whom she sent into France, to the Assistance of Henry, King of Navarre, who then claimed that Crown.

A. D. 1590, a Combination being entered into by the Owners of the Coal-works at Newcastle upon Tyne, the Price of Coals in this City was thereby enhanced to an excessive Rate of nine Shillings the Chaldron; whereas the common Price, for several Years before this iniquitous Confederacy, was only four Shillings.

In the Year 1591, according to Stow, the Thames was almost empty of Water for the Space of two Days. And, in this same Year, a Contest arose between the Lord-Mayor and Citizens of London and the Lord High Admiral of England, in respect to the Right of Coal-Metage: But, on the Mayor and Citizens shewing their indubitable Right to the same, the Admiral receded from his Pretensions, and acknowledged the Property to be in them. Wherefore, to prevent all Controversies in that respect for the future, the Citizens had this Right confirmed by the Queen, at the Intercession of their fast Friend the Lord Treasurer Burleigh; to whom the Lord-Mayor, for the obtaining so salutary an End, wrote the following Letter:

"My humble Duty remembered unto your good Lordship.

"Whereas it pleased your good Lordship to refer to Mr. Attorney and Solicitor for perusing of the Book that is to pass from the Queen's Majesty to the City of London, as touching the Measure of Sea-coal, and other Things measurable upon the River of Thames, it may please you to understand, that they have accordingly perused the same, and have reformed it in what Points they thought good; which we now return again to your good Lordship, in that Form as by them is corrected and set down. And so far as much as the said Mr. Attorney and Solicitor (besides Allowance from my Lord Admiral, which they have already) do further require your Lordship's Warrant, for their Approbation of the same under their Hands, we humbly beseech your good Lordship to peruse the said Book, and to vouchsafe us your good Favour in directing your Warrant to her Majesty's said learned Council for the signing of the same: That, this Controversy being ended between my

Soon after, a few wild Enthusiasts and wicked Impostors appeared in this City: William Hacket, the Chief whereof, gave out, that he was Jesus Christ, come to judge the World; which was soon proclaimed throughout the City of London by Ed- mond Coppinger and Henry Arbington, two of his Disciples; who, going from Hacket's Lodgings at Broken-Wharf, thro' Walling-Street and the Old- Change, amidst an excessive Multitude, to Cheap- side, they mounted an empty Cart near the End of Gutter-Lane, and proclaimed Mercy from Heaven to all such as should repent and believe that Christ (William Hacket) was come with his Fan in his Hand to judge the Earth, and to establish the Gospel in Europe, and that he was then to be seen, with his glorious Body, at one Walker's, at Broken-Wharf; and that they were Prophets, the one of Mercy, and the other of Judgment, sent by God himself as Witnesses, and to assist in the present great Work. The first of whom incessantly proclaimed Mercy and Joys inexpressible to all such as should receive this acceptable Message; and the last denounced terrible Judgments against the Obdurate, which should not only immediately fall upon the Incredible in this City, but that likewise all such were condemned to eternal Punishments; and, in a particular and very treasonable Manner, thundered out bitter Invectives against the Queen and her Ministry: Wherefore they were all apprehended, and Hacket, the pretended Messiah, soon after tried and convicted at the Old-Bailey of Treason; whence he was carried to the Place of Execution in Cheapside, where,
instead of shewing the least Sorrow for his Crimes,
he committed the most horrid and execrable Blas-phemies against God, and detestable Imprecations against the Queen and her Ministers; and his Associate Coppinger, refusing all Manner of Sustenance, died the next Day in Bridewell, as did Arbington, his Companion, some Time after in Wood-Street Compter.

A Plague.

The Plague having again broke out in this City, it raged with such Violence, that Application was made to the Queen and Council, that, upon the Infection of any House, the Sound might be removed from the Infected to proper Places for their Preservation; and that Provision might be made for the Poor, who were reduced to the greatest Extremities: And, to prevent the Spreading of the Contagion, the Term was adjournd to Hertford.

Rym. Foe.
Con. Lit.
A.D. 1593

The Plague continuing to increase and rage in this City, it occasioned the publishing a Proclamation for the more effectual preventing the Spreading of the Contagion, as will appear by the following Extracts made from the said Proclamation, viz.

Ibid.

Orders to prevent its spreading.

"And therefore, to prevent those Daungers,
"her Majestie doth nowe commande, that in the "usual Place of Smythfeilde there be no Manner
"of Market for any Wares kepte, nor any Stalles

"or Boothes for any Manner of Merchandize, or
"for Victualls, suffered to be set up; but that
"the open Place of the Grounde called Smyth-
"feilde be only occupied with Sale of Horses
"and Cattle, and of staule Wares, as Butter,
"Cheese, and such-like, in Groesse, and not by
"Retaile; the same to continue for the Space of "two Dayes onely.

"And for Vent of Woollen Clothes, Kerseis,
"and Linnen Clothe, to be all solde in Groesse,
"and not by Retaile, the same shall be all
"brought within the Close-yard of St. Bartholo-
"me's, where Shoppes are there continued,
"and have Gates to shut the same Place in the "Nights, and there such Clothe to be offered
"to Sale, and to be bought in Groesse, and not
"by Retaile; the same Market to continue
"but three Dayes, that is to say, the Even, the "Daye of St. Bartholemew, and the Morrow
"after.

"And that the Sale and Vent for Leather be "kept in the Outside of the Ringe in Smythfeilde,
"as hath been accustomed, without erecting any
"Shoppes or Boothes for the same, or for any
"Victualler or other Occupier of any Wayes
"whatsoever."

Notwithstanding all the salutary Measures taken for stopping the Plague in its destructive Progress, it nevertheless in this Year swept away ten thousand six hundred and seventy-five of the Citizens.

Some Time after, the Number of Strangers residing in the City and Liberties of London was again taken; which, by the Certificates brought in from the several Wards, appeared to be five thousand two hundred and fifty-nine; among whom were two hundred and sixty-seven Denizens born.

About the Year 1593, and before, the City, as well as other Parts of the Kingdom, was grievously pestered with Beggars; and they, many of them poor disbanded Soldiers, become poor and maimed by the Wars in the Low Countries and with Spain; and many more that pretended themselves to be so; who committed many Robberies and Outrages. This caused the Queen to set forth a Proclamation in the Month of February, for the Suppressing of the Multitudes of idle Vagabonds, and avoiding mischievous, dangerous Persons from her Majesty's Court.

It sets forth, "How idle Persons and Vaga"bonds were manifestly seen wandering in the "common Highways, to the Annoyance of the "common People, both in their Goods and "Lives; a Multitude of able Men, neither
"impotent nor lame, exacting Money continu"ally upon Pretence of Service in the Wars
"without Relief; whereas many of them never "did so serve: And yet such as had served,
"if they were maimed or lamed by Service,
"were provided for in the Countries, by "Order of a good Statute made the last Parlia"ment.

"For Reformation whereof, she commanded
"her Justices and Officers to have a better Re"gard thereto, and to appoint upon certain

"It was found, in and about the City of "London, and in the Parts near about her Ma"jesty's Court, that there did haunt and repair
"a great Multitude of wandering Persons; where-
"of some were Men of Ireland, that had these "late Years unnaturally served as Rebels against "her Majesty's Forces beyond the Seas, who "could not have any good Meaning towards her "Majesty, as of late had been manifestly proved
"in some already taken, that had secretly come "into the Realm with full Purpose, by Procure"ment of the Devil and his Ministers, Enemies
"and Rebels on the other Side the Sea, to en"danger her Majesty's noble Person; which
"Kind of Persons, having so served against her "Majesty, were directly to be taken, wherefoever
"they might be found, and proceeded withal as "Traitors.

"to continue.

"But, considering the Discovery of these Irish
"Traitors could hardly be made, where there "were also many others like vagrant Persons of "that Nation that haunted about the Court
"by Pretence of Suits, where they had no just "Cause to make any; therefore her Majesty
"willed and commanded, that no Manner of "Person born in the Realm of Ireland, except
"he were an Housekeeper, known in some "Town, where he lived in Obedience to her "Majesty's Laws, or were a menial Servant with
"some Nobleman, Gentleman, or other honest
"Householder, or did reside or were in Com"mons in any House of Court or Chancery, or
"a Student in the Laws, or a Student in any of "the Universities; or else be sent out of Ire"land by her Majesty's Deputy, or some Gover"nor of the Provinces there, with Commenda"tion, or about any Service or Suit recommen"ded, should remain in this Realm, but should
"without Delay repair into the Realm of Ireland,
"to the Places of their natural Habitation, &c.
"upon Pain of Imprisonment and Punishment,
"as Vagabonds.

"There was a Number of like vagrant Persons,
"both English and others (beside Irish) that "haunted about the Court, using a Colour of "Suits to her Majesty, or to her Council, and
"other Attendants on her Majesty; where, in "Truth, many of them had no just Cause of "Suits. Others, that having Suits, and had re"ceived their Answers, did not depart, but lived

"idly about the Court. For Remedy of this,
"her Majesty forbade all Persons that were not
"Servitors to her Majesty in her Court, or that "were not Attendant Servitors upon the Counfel-
"lors, or upon other Lords and Ladies, or Gen"tlemen attending on her Majesty, to forbear to "come to the Court, or near to the Court. But,
"if any Person had Cause to refer any Com"plaint or Request to her Majesty, or her Coun"cil, being in the Court, it was lawful for any "such Person to come to one of the Masters of "Requests, to whom a Room was appointed near
"the Court, to receive daily such Requests, and "to prefer them as Cause should require, with"out coming into the Court; but to depart
"within twenty-four Hours towards their Dwell-
"ling-Places.

"And for the executing of this Order, for the "excluding of these Vagrants, either Irish or "English, or of any other Nation, her Majesty
"charged the Knight-Marshal, her Porters, her
"Masters of Request, and her Knight-Harbin-
"ger, and every other ordinary Officer in her "Majesty's Court, to take every one in these "Cases, which might belong unto them, and to "commit the Offenders to Prison; there with"out Delay to be tried, and proceeded withal
"according as Rogues and Vagabonds ought "to be.

"Given at the Honour of Hampton-Court,
"the 21st of February, 1593, in the thirty-
"sixth Year of her Majesty's Reign."

This was backed soon after with an Order to be published and executed by the Lord-Mayor of the City of London, and other Officers in all Places within three Miles of the said City, for avoiding of all Kind of Beggars, that did wander about contrary to the Laws and Statutes of the Realm; and it was signed by several of the Privy Council. The Order was as follows:

"Whereas it hath been ordered by Act of "Parliament, that all poor, aged, and impotent
"Persons, should repair to the Places where they "were born, or where they were most conver-
"sant for the Space of three Years, and there to "be maintained: And likewise that all Persons
"wandering about as Beggars, and being whole
"and strong in Body, and able to work, having
"no Lands or other Means to get their Living,
"should be taken as Rogues and Vagabonds;
"and if any impotent Person, being provided
"for, were in the Parish where he was born,
"or had been conversant by the Space afore-
"said, and should without Licence wander a-
"broad out of the same, he should be whipt,
"and returned again to his Parish; and if he "should oftentimes offend, then to be punished as "a Rogue.

"And for that also in this Time of Parlia"ment Order hath been taken by a Collection
"of certain Sums of Money, that all such as "were found in and about the City of London,
"having been maimed and sore hurt in her
"Majesty's Service, should have a convenient
"Relief in Money paid to the County where Council.

"they were born, with Passports for that Purpose, (which hath been accordingly performed) and there to be maintained with weekly Portions of Money for the Space of twenty Weeks: Before the End whereof, it was provided by an Act of Parliament made in this last Session, that such maimed Soldiers were to have a continual weekly Payment in Places of the Countries where they were born.

"For this Purpose, all Officers, to whom the Execution of these Statutes do belong, within the Cities of London and Westminster, and in all other Places within three Miles of the City, shall forthwith cause Inquisition to be made of all Kind of Persons wandering up and down, as Beggars; and, being aged and impotent, to compel them to depart, and repair to the Places where they were born, or were more conversant by the Space of three Years past, with convenient Passports, there to be maintained according to the Laws, and to forbear from their further begging in any other Place. And such other as wander abroad as Beggars, being able to work, and having no lawful Means whereby to live, to be taken and punished as Rogues, according to the Laws in that Behalf provided.

"And further, to suffer no Soldier that pretendeth to have been hurt and maimed in her Majesty's Service, to whom Relief hath been given as aforesaid, or any other pretending himself to have been a Soldier, and not thought worthy to be Partaker of the Relief lately given, to continue near or about the Cities of London or Westminster, the Borough of Southwark, or in any other Place within three Miles of the said Cities or Borough, but to be compelled likewise to depart to the Countries where they were born, there to receive convenient Maintenance.

"And these Ordinances, conformable to the Laws of the Realm, the Lord-Mayor of the City of London, and all other Officers to whom it shall belong, within the Limits aforesaid, are to see duly and speedily executed, and the Offenders punished, as they will answer to the contrary at their Peril. William Rowe, Mayor.

On the 15th of July, the Lord-Mayor and Common Council of this City, in obedience to her Majesty's Desire, agreed to fit out at their own Expence six Ships of War, and two Pinaces or Frigates, and to store the same with Provisions and Ammunition for three Months; and, on the 17th of the same Month, they likewise resolved to raise four hundred and fifty Soldiers for her Majesty's Service, and to maintain them at their own Charge; for which a Fifteenth was granted and raised among the Citizens.

About the same Time, for the better supplying the City with Thames Water, a large Horse-Engine of four Pumps was erected at Broken-Wharf in Thames-Street, by Bevis Bulmar; for the Convenience of the Inhabitants in the western Parts; which Engine has been laid aside, on account of the great Charge of working it, whereby the Proprietors were rendered unable to furnish their Tenants at so easy a Rate as other Companies did. On the 18th of October following, the aforesaid Engineer presented the Lord-Mayor, for the Use of the City, a very large Silver Cup and Cover, weighing one hundred and thirty-seven Ounces, which he had extracted from English Ore.

By the great Rains that fell in the Spring and Autumn of this Year, a great Scarcity and Dearth of Corn ensued; however, by the Industry of the Merchants, a Famine was prevented, who imported great Quantities from divers Countries; which occasioned the Lord-Mayor strictly to enjoin those Companies, who had neglected to lay in their Proportions of Corn according to the Constitutions of the City, now to supply themselves, for preventing a Scarcity before the Coming of new Corn.

In the Interim, Sir John Hawkins, one of her Majesty's Admirals, demanded of the Mayor the Use of the Bridge-House, then the common Granary of the City; which he intended not only to make use of as a Store-house for the Royal Navy, but likewise the Bake-houses and Ovens therein (which were erected by the City for supplying the poorer Sort of Citizens, in Case of a Dearth, with Bread at a low Price) for baking of Biskets for the Use of the Fleet. Upon this unseasonable and unreasonable Demand, Sir John Spencer, the Mayor, complained thereof to the great Patron of the City, the worthy Lord Treasurer Burleigh, by the following Remonstrance:

"That, according to the Care that his Place required at his Entrance therein, by his Means, it was ordered, that the several Companies of the City should presently make Provision, and furnish themselves of Wheat and Rye brought from foreign Parts, according to the several Portions allotted to them; wherein they had not been so forward as they ought to have been, and were yet unprovided of the greatest Part thereof. That he had therefore ten Days past enjoined them to furnish their Wants of these, that were then brought in from foreign Parts, and to have the same laid up in the Bridge-house, in their several Garners (Granaries) and before the 8th of January next coming.

"But that hereupon Sir John Hawkins, by his Men desired, or rather commanded, Room in the Bridge-house to lay in Wheat, and also the Ovens for Baking; but that he answered, that they could with no Convenience spare the same, alledging truly to him, that if the same should be yielded unto, that the Companies would thereby take Occasion to neglect their Provision,

"Provision, and alledge that they could not do the same, for that he had lent away their Garners: And that so thereby the City, which in that Time of Dearth was furnished only from foreign Parts, should be unprovided, and the Fault wholly laid upon him. And that then, either that which should be brought for the Provision of the City, of force must have been tolerated to be brought up by the Badgers, and carried from the City, as it had been; or else the Merchants discouraged from bringing any more. The which he hoped his Lordship would well consider.

"And that for the Ovens, it was told them, the same were used for baking Bread for the Poor, that they might have the more for their Money; and that therefore they could not be spared. And also, that he was informed her Majesty had Garners about Tower-Hill and Whitehall, and Westminster; and also, that, if they would not serve, her Majesty had in her Hands Winchester-House, wherein great Quantities might be laid."

Ibid. This Proceeding of the Mayor's being by some greatly disliked, he was told, "That he should hear more to his further Dislike. And he told them, that if they did procure any Letters for the same, he doubted not but to answer them to their Lordships (of the Privy Council) good Acceptance. And that now, having received Letters for the same from some of the Council, he humbly prayed the Lord Treasurer's good Favour, that the same Garners, being the City's, might be employed for the Use of the same; that there might be no Want or Outcry of the Poor for Bread; or else, that if there fell out a greater Want and Dearth of Grain than yet there was, and that the City were unprovided, his Lordship would be pleased to hold him excused; and so most humbly submitted himself to his Honour's good Pleasure."

A Riot between the Tower Warders and City Apprentices
On Sunday the 29th of June, a Difference happened between certain Warders of the Tower of London and some of the City Apprentices; who imagining themselves highly injured in being reprimanded by the said Warders, to revenge themselves for so great an Affront, with Volleys of Stones they obliged their Enemies to seek for Safety in a precipitate Flight: Which the Lord-Mayor was no sooner advised of, than he repaired thither, attended by his Officers and many of the Citizens on Horseback, to suppress the Tumult: But, being arrived on Tower-Hill, he was, by divers of the Warders and others belonging to the Tower (who were returned in a formidable Condition) in a very rude and insolent Manner told, that his Sword ought not in that Place to be carried erect, and, seizing upon the same, endeavoured to wrench it out of the Hands of the Bearer; whereupon a smart Scuffle ensued, wherein the Sword-Bearer and divers others were wounded; yet nevertheless, the Lord-Mayor, by his good Conduct, not only appeased the Fray, but likewise dispersed the Populace.

Sword-Bearer, &c. wounded.

In the Year 1595, the Common Council granted a Levy of two Fifteenths upon the Citizens for the Reparation of the Town-Ditch: But only a small Part of it, viz. between Bishopsgate and Moorgate, was cleaned, and made somewhat broader than it was before; yet, filling again very fast by over-raising the adjoining Ground, it was nothing the better for this Repair.

City Rec. Guildhall.
Town-Ditch repaired by a Tax of two Fifteenths.

About this Time Insurrections being very frequent, they were chiefly occasioned by a Number of incorrigible Rogues, who, artfully drawing in the City Apprentices to join them, were come to such a Pitch of Insolence, that the Mayor was of Opinion, that there was no other Way of quelling them but by Martial Law, and the Masters of the said Apprentices to be exemplarily punished for suffering them to go abroad, contrary to his several Injunctions; which, in a Letter to the Lord Treasurer, he set forth at large; and which soon after occasioned the publishing a Proclamation of the following Purport:

Stow. Ser. Frequent Insurrections, how occasioned and quelled.

"That the Queen was informed of sundry great Disorders committed in and about her City of London, by unlawful great Assemblies of Multitudes of a popular Sort, of base Condition, whereof some were Apprentices and Servants to Artificers, and to such-like as are not able, or not disposed, to rule their Servants as they ought to do. And some attempting to rescue out of the Hands of publick Officers such as have been lawfully arrested, whereby her Majesty's Peace hath been of late notably broken, to the Dishonour of her Majesty's Government; and chiefly for Lack of due Correction in Time of such manifest Offenders, by the Officers of her City, and others in Places round about it.

Ibid.
Queen's Proclamation for that Purpose.

"For Reformation whereof, she had Conference with her Council, of the most ready Means for their Punishment, and for the Stay of the like. And for that Purpose straightly charged all her Officers, both in the City and Places near it, in the Counties of Middlesex, Kent, Surrey, and Essex, that had Authority to preserve the Peace, and to punish Offenders, that they should more diligently, to the best of their Powers, see to the Suppression of all such Offenders, and especially of all such unlawful Assemblies.

"And because such Assemblies and Routs were compounded of sundry Sorts of base People; some known Apprentices, such as were of base manual Occupations; some others, wandering idle Persons, of Condition, Rogues, and Vagabonds; and some colouring their wandering by the Name of Soldiers returning from the Wars, &c. therefore she had notified her Pleasure to her Council, to prescribe certain Orders to be published in and about the said City, which she would have straightly observed; and, for that Purpose, that she meant to have a Provost-Marshal, with sufficient Authority to apprehend all such as should not be readily reformed and corrected by the ordinary Officers of Justice, and them without Delay to execute upon the Gallows by Order of Martial Law.

The Queen's Proceeding in regard to the Choice of a Recorder.

The City's Suspicion and Behaviour on this Occasion.

The Queen, by the Lord Keeper, acquainted the Citizens of London of her having preferred their Recorder; therefore desired the Lord-Mayor (not with a Design, as was said, of encroaching upon the City Liberties) to send her the Names of such Persons as they intended to put in Nomination for that Office. The Citizens, alarmed at this extraordinary Proceeding, became very uneasy, and began to suspect that their Liberties were struck at; which, if not vigorously opposed, they imagined might terminate in the Destruction of their Rights and Privileges; wherefore, instead of nominating a Plurality of Persons to that Office, they only pitched upon one, for the Preservation of their Rights and Immunities, as will appear by Sir John Spencer the Mayor's Letter to the Lord Treasurer:

"Right honourable and my very good Lord, albeit I presume, &c. I have thought good also to let your Lordship know, that upon Saturday Morning last I was informed by Sir John Harte, that he understood from the right honourable my Lord Keeper, that her most excellent Majesty had taken our Recorder from us into her Highness's Service; and that her Majesty's Pleasure was, that we should deliver to my Lord Keeper the Names of such as we would put in Election anew, to the End that her Majesty might please to consider of their Aptness for the Place; but notwithstanding that, her Highness would please to leave us to our own free Election therein: Howbeit, I have spared hitherto to make any Proceedings, partly in respect that I understand not by the Recorder himself of his Remove, and chiefly for that the last Term there was the like Rumour, and yet suddenly it dyed again; in which Respect I thought it Discretion to have some sufficient Warrant or Note, cyther from my Lord Keeper himself, or some other of your Honours, or from the Recorder, before I proceeded to any new Election; lest otherwise I should do the Gentleman Wrong who holdeth the Place, and seem myself more hasty than there may be Cause.

"But, my good Lord, while I have Pause herein, until I had more certain Advertisement, the grave Commoners of the City of London hearing a common Bruit, that a new Recorder was speedily to be chosen, at a Common Council held at Guildhall on Tuesday last for other Causes, one of them in that Behalf made very earnest Suite, because in all our Councils and Consultations, (which are almost daily for one Cause or other) the Recorder hath of auncient Tyme bene present as a principal Man, both for Advice in Law and other Direction; and now of late those which have had, have been for the most Part absent; that therefore myself and the Aldermen would take Care, that hereafter we choose no Sergeant nor other Stranger, but only some one that is resident and dwelling among us, and acquainted with our Customs, and to make Choice of ourselves as we have bene wont, without sending any Names, as hath bene mentioned; and therefore very urgent Suite was made in Common Council on the Behalf of the Commoners; whereof I have thought it my Duty to advertize your Lordship, most humbly desiring you to be a Means, that wee may herein have our own free Election, according to our auncient Custome; for that albeit we have lately had most worthy Men, yet we have found their long and much Absence a great Maihem unto us.

"And, for mine own Opinion, my good Lord, as also of many others, we have one born and dwelling among us, whom we have great Experience of, and think very able to do us Service in this Behalf: His Name is Mr. James "Albam,

The Lord-Mayor and Aldermen of this City

a Meſſage from the Queen, commanding them forthwith to raiſe a certain Number of able-bodied Men in the City, fit for immediate Service;
wherefore having inſtantly left the Church, they ſet ſo heartily about the Work, that before Eight at Night they had preſſed a thouſand Men; which being the Number required, they were with an unparalleled Expedition completely fitted with all martial Accoutrements before the next Morning, and ready to march to Dover, and from thence to aſſiſt the French in Defence of Calais; but unexpectedly, in the Afternoon, they received Orders to return to their reſpective Habitations; ſo that this petty Army, Phantom-like, no ſooner ap-

In Auguſt this Year, the Harveſt failing by the vaſt Quantity of Rain that fell in England, there enſued ſuch an exceſſive Dearth, that Wheat was fold in this City for four Pounds the Quarter, Rye at two Pounds eight Shillings, and Oatmeal

Elizabeth, being apprehenſive of an impending Storm, which, if not timely diſſipated, might terminate in her Deſtruction; but from what Quarter, the Publick were intirely ignorant;
however, to prepare them for the Burden they were ſoon to be loaded with, 'twas artfully given out, that the Spaniards intended a ſecond Expedition againſt England, (whereas, in truth, it was the Earl of Essex's Coming from Ireland, without her Majeſty's Permiſſion, with a formidable Army to ſuppreſs his Enemies at Court) which fire-ing the People with Reſentment, they reſolved to part with any thing to baffle the Attempts of their implacable Enemies. This ſoon after appeared to be one of the greateſt Preparations that ever was made in England: For on that Occaſion the Quota of the City of London was ſix thouſand Soldiers and ſixteen Ships of War; a Moiety of which Troops were to take the Field, and the other, compoſed of eminent Citizens, to attend the Queen as her Body Guard, at their own and the City's Expence. During this Time of publick Danger, by the Queen's ſpecial Command, ſtrong Guards were kept in all Quarters of the City, the Chains at the Ends of all Streets and Lanes nightly drawn acroſs, and a Candle and Lanthorn hung out at every Door, upon Pain of Death.

of November following, the Lord-Mayor, Alder-

Engl. The Earl of Essex, only accompanied by a few of his Friends from Ireland, arrived at his House in the Strand, and Neighbourhood of this City; where he had not long continued, before the Government was apprehensive of some Intrigues carrying on by him; wherefore Orders were sent to the Lord-Mayor of this City, to have a strict Regard toward the Peace of the same. The Earl, in the mean Time, assured by some of his Followers, that, upon his entering London, the Citizens, as one Man, would declare in his Favour; which he too easily giving into, occasioned his going thither soon after, attended by two hundred of his Followers, who on the Way being joined by the Earl of Bedford and Lord Cromwell, advanced toward the City, where being entered, he with an audible Voice, cried For the Queen, for the Queen, my Life is in Danger; which he often repeated, as he rode along; and being come to Fenchurch-Street, repaired to the House of Thomas Smith, one of the Sheriffs, who he was made believe would join him with a thousand Men at his Approach. But Smith, instead of answering his Expectation, no sooner observed him approaching, than he withdrew out at a Back Door.

Is disappointed.

Ibid. The Earl, to his great Mortification, finding himself by his Credulity thus unhappily imposed upon, and being encompassed by a vast Number of Citizens, whose Curiosity had led them thither to see the Event of that Affair; those he earnestly solicited to assume Arms in his Defence: However, not one Person offered to join him. In the mean Time he received Advice, that the Lord Burleigh, assisted by Detbick, King at Arms, had in Cheap-side proclaimed him and all his Adherents Traitors, as had likewise been done in other Parts of the City by the Earl of Cumberland and Sir Thomas Gerrard.

Proclaimed Traitor.

This News struck Essex with a Panick, which made him cry out, that England was sold to the Infanta of Spain; he therefore exhorted the Citizens to arm in Defence of their Rights and Privileges; but, instead of being joined by any of those his imaginary Friends, he found himself deserted by many of his perfidious Adulators; and receiving Intelligence of the Earl of Nottingham's marching against him with a considerable Body of Troops, he became desperate, and resolved to return home, in hopes of obtaining Favour of the Queen thro' the Intercession of the Lord Keeper.

Greatly dejected.

Stopped at Ludgate.

The Earl, on his Return to Ludgate, was denied Passage by a Body of Men raised and posted there by the Bishop of London, under the Command of Sir Thomas Levison; which so highly enraged him, that he ordered Sir Christopher Blunt, one of his Followers, to force a Passage, which he resolutely undertook, by killing the first that resisted him; but, being wounded and taken Prisoner, his Party was repulsed, with the Loss of five or six Men on both Sides, and Essex himself shot thro' the Hat; and he being deserted by most of his Company, repaired to Queenhithe, where he took Boat, and returned by Water to his House (now Essex-Street in the Strand) which he began to fortify with the utmost Expedition, in order to defend himself to the last Extremity. But the House being immediately invested by Nottingham, he, by Favour of a Battery, soon became Master of the Garden, and having all Things ready for a general Assault, summoned Essex to surrender; which, by reason of his being denied Terms, he rejected.

Is deserted, and flies by Water to his own House.

Refuses to surrender.

But Nottingham, being moved by the hideous Shrieks and doleful Cries of the Ladies within, not only allowed them Liberty to depart, but likewise, on their Account, an Hour's Time to Essex to re-fortify the Place they were to pass thro': In the mean time Essex, despairing of all Hopes of Mercy, had Thoughts of fighting his Way thro', to which he was greatly encouraged by the Lord Sands, who frequently inculcated to him, that it was much more honourable to die by the Sword, than either Ax or Halter: Yet nevertheless, he surrendered the same Night at ten o'Clock, on Discretion. Whereupon he was carried Prisoner to Lambeth Palace, whence he was soon after removed to the Tower of London, and not long after lost his Head in the Tower, which he might have kept on longer, had he not been betrayed by the Lady Walsingham; to whom, after the Sentence of Condemnation, he sent a Ring, which the Queen had given him, as a Token that she would stick to him in any Danger. The Lady delivered not the Ring; and being a little after upon her Death-bed, she desired to speak with the Queen, and having disburthened a great Weight, which lay upon her Conscience for that Act, the Queen flung away in a Fury, and never enjoyed herself perfectly after that Time; but she would break out often into Passion, and wring her Hands, crying, O Essex! Essex! And this Earl was the last who was executed within the Walls of the Tower.

Is beheaded.

The Queen was so highly satisfied with the dutiful Behaviour of the Citizens of London on this Occasion, that the Day after she sent one of her principal Officers into the City, to declare to the Mayor and Citizens, in the most obliging Terms, her most grateful Acknowledgments for their late Demonstrations of Love and Duty to her Person; at the same time exhorting them always to have a tender Regard to the Publick Tranquillity.

City's Conduct agreeable to the Queen.

About the same Time the Coasts of England were greatly pestered by Spanish Privateers; wherefore the Queen, to prevent such Depredations for the future, commanded a certain Number of Ships of War to be built; for the Defraying of which Charge, no less than five Fifteenths were raised upon the Citizens of London; and, for the Manning of the said Ships, all Debtors in the several Prisons of this City, who were willing to enter themselves on Board the same, were

by Proclamation discharged from all the Demands of their several Creditors.

Ibid. On the Christmas Eve at Noon, in the same Year, an Earthquake happened in this City, without much Damage.

A.D. 1602 At this Time, foreign Hawkers, Pedlers, and Hucksters, were become so very numerous in the City, that by keeping a great Number of Stalls in every Street, and hawking all over the City, the Streets were thereby so greatly incumbered, that they were not only rendered almost useless for Carriages, but the Trade of the Shopkeepers was thereby so reduced, that many of them were necessitated to employ those People to sell Goods for them, to raise Money for purchasing the common Necessaries of Life. For redressing this Grievance, it was by the Common Council enacted, "That no Citizen, or other Inhabitant of London, for the future, should, upon any Pretence whatsoever, presume to let before his, her, or their House, any Stall, Stand, or Purpresture, upon the Penalty of twenty Shillings: And that all Hawkers and Stall-keepers, offending against the Tenor of this Act, not only to forfeit all their Goods so offered to Sale, but likewise pay a Fine of twenty Shillings for every such Offence."

Ad Cem. Counc. Sir Leonard Haliday Mayor, against Hawkers, &c.

A.D. 1603, the Citizens of London, by Command of the Queen, fitted out for her Service two Ships of War and a Tender, which they maintained at the Expence of six thousand Pounds per Annum. By this and former Exactions it appears, that the Citizens of London were never so intolerably fleeced as in this Reign; for upon all Emergencies, they were in an arbitrary Manner commanded to raise such a Number of Men, fit out so many Ships, or advance such Sums of Money, as the Ministry thought proper.

Arraignment and Execution of Sir Walter Raleigh.

In the Year 1603, Sir Walter Raleigh was arraigned, and condemned, but kept Prisoner in the Tower, (where he wrote his History of the World) until the Year 1617; when he was by King James I. allowed (upon his earnest Desire) to fetch Gold from a certain Mine in Guiana in the West-Indies, wherein he miscarried. After which King James gave Way to have the Sentence of Death executed upon him, having first been brought to the King's-Bench Bar the twenty-seventh of October, 1618, and there hearing the Sentence confirmed. From whence he was sent to the Gatehouse, and from thence next Morning to the Palace-Yard, where a Scaffold was erected, and there he was beheaded, after fourteen Years Reprieve; which the World thought very hard of, having been a Person of such uncommon Merit.

The King offers the City certain Advantages in the Province of Ulster in Ireland, and Proceedings thereon. Encouragement of Archers. The New-River Water. Smithfield Paved. PURSUANT to the Last Will and Declaration of Queen Elizabeth, the Privy Council, assisted by the Lord-Mayor of London, having acknowledged James, King of Scotland, the right and lawful Successor to the Crown of England; he was proclaimed King in this City on the twenty-fourth of March, with the greatest Demonstrations of Joy, which on that Occasion were so extraordinary both by the Magistrates and Commonalty, as gave evident Proofs of their sincere Attachment to his Majesty and Family. Whereof the King was so highly sensible, that it occasioned his honouring the City with the following Letter to the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen:

His Reception into London.

The King, on his Approach to London, was met at Waltham by John Swinnerton, one of the Sheriffs of the City (his Colleague being then indisposed) attended by sixty Servants in rich Liveries; when the Sheriff in a handsome Speech, in the Name of the Citizens, congratulated his Majesty upon his safe Arrival in their Neighbourhood; and, thence continuing his Journey, was on Stamford-Hill received by the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen in their Scarlet Robes, accompanied by five hundred of the most eminent Citizens on Horseback, sumptuously apparelled in Velvet, with Chains of Gold about their Necks. By whom James was conducted to the Charter-House in the Suburbs of London, where he was magnificently entertained by Lord Howard for four Days successively. In the Interim, the Citizens of London were incessantly employed in erecting magnificent triumphal Arches and stately Pageants against the publick Entry; but the Construction of those pompous Structures was by the Citizens for some Time laid aside, on account of a dreadful Plague then raging in the City, which within the Year swept away thirty thousand five hundred and seventy-eight Persons.

His Coronation.

On the twenty-fifth of July, the Lord-Mayor in a Robe of Crimson Velvet, accompanied by the Aldermen and twelve of the principal Citizens, went in the City Barge to Westminster, to assist at the Coronation; which being over, the Mayor returned to the City, with the usual Fee of a golden Cup and Ewer: And the next Day, the Aldermen of London, in Obedience to his Majesty's Command, repaired to Westminster; where he was graciously pleased to confer the Honour of Knighthood upon all such as were not previously dignified.

The

The Plague continuing to rage in London, Bartholomew Fair was, by Proclamation, forbid to be held this Year; as were all other Fairs within fifty Miles of the City.

The Suburbs of London at this Time were so exceedingly encreased both in Number of Houses and Inhabitants, that it was thought proper by the Government to put a Stop to the same by a Proclamation, whereby all Persons were strictly prohibited from building upon new Foundations; and for the more effectually enforcing the said Precept, the Proclamation enjoined, that all Houses erected contrary to the Tenor thereof should be demolished.

The publick Entry of the King and Royal Family.

The Plague being happily ceased, the Citizens set about finishing the abovementioned Works; and on the fifteenth of March, the King, Queen, and Prince Henry, from the Tower of London, made their publick Entry into the City, which on this Occasion was embellished with seven magnificent triumphal Arches, numerous Pageants, and other pompous Decorations proper for the Solemnity. And the Streets, thro' which the Cavalcade passed, were adorned with the richest Silks and Carpets; and the several Corporations in their Formalities and Stands, with their Flags and Bands of Music, lined them on each Side.

In the first Parliament of this Reign, the governing Part of the City observing the many Difficulties that attended the due Execution of their laudable Act of Common Council for establishing a Court of Conscience, from the designing, covetous, mercenary and cruel Part of their Fellow-Citizens, who, rather than to seek for their Debts in this summary Way, chose to ruin their poor Debtors by the extraordinary Costs of superior Courts, applied to the Legislature for a Confirmation of their Court of Requests; who passed an Act for the strengthening and establishing thereof. But, as this confined the Process to such Debtors only as were Citizens and Freemen of London, inhabiting London, or the Liberties thereof, divers Persons, intending to subvert the good and charitable Intent of the same, took hold of some ambiguous and doubtful Words therein, and endeavoured to render the Jurisdiction of the said Court entirely useless: Wherefore in the third Year of this Reign we find there passed the following Act for the taking away all Objections, &c.

A Remedy for Recovery of small Debts, and for the Relieving of the poorer Sort in London.

Stat. Larg.

The Establishment of the Court of Conscience in London
by Act of Parliament.

"Whereas, by virtue of divers Acts of Common Council made within the City of London,
the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen of the same City, for the Relief of poor Debtors dwelling within the said City, have accustomed monthly to assign two Aldermen and twelve discreet Commoners to be Commissioners, and sit in the Court of Requests, commonly called the Court of Conscience, in the Guild-Hall of the same City, there to hear and determine all Matters of Debt not amounting to the Sum of 40 s. to be brought before them: And whereas at the Session of Parliament holden at Westminster the nineteenth Day of March, in the first Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord the King's Majesty that now is, for the further Relief of such poor Debtors, and more perfect Establishing of the said Court, there was made and provided an Act, intituled An Act for Recovery of small Debts, and relieving of poor Debtors in London: And whereas, since the making of the said Act, divers Persons, intending to subvert the good and charitable Intent of the same, and taking hold of some doubtful and ambiguous Words therein, do wrest the same for their own Lucre and Gain,
to the avoiding the Jurisdiction of the said Court, contrary to the godly Meaning of the said Act:

"For the Remedy whereof, and to the Intent that some more full and ample Provision may be made for the Relief of such poor Debtors, Be it enacted by Authority of this present Parliament, That every Citizen and Freeman of the City of London, and every other Person and Persons inhabiting, or that shall inhabit within the said City or the Liberties thereof, being a Tradesman, Victualler, or a Labouring Man, which now have, or hereafter shall have any Debt or Debts owing unto him or them, not amounting to forty Shillings, by any Citizen, or by any other Person or Persons, being a Victualler, Tradesman, or Labouring Man, inhabiting, or that shall inhabit within the said City or the Liberties thereof, shall or may cause such Debtor or Debtors to be warned or summoned by the Beadle or Officer of the said Court of Requests for the Time being, by Writing to be left at the Dwelling-

 " House of such Debtor or Debtors, or by other " reasonable Warning or Notice to be given to " the said Debtor or Debtors, to appear before
 " the Commissioners of the said Court of Re" quests, holden in the Guild-Hall of the said
 " City: And that the said Commissioners, or any
 " three of them, or more, shall have Power and " Authority by the Virtue of this Act, from " Time to Time, to set down such Order or
 " Orders between such Party or Parties Plaintiff,
 " and his or their such Debtor or Debtors Defen" dants, touching such Debts, not amounting " to the Value of forty Shillings, in question be" fore them, as they shall find to stand with " Equity and good Conscience. All such their " Order or Orders to be registered in a Book,
 " as they have been accustomed, and as well the " Party Plaintiff, as the Debtor Defendant, to " observe, perform, and keep the same in all " Points.

" And that, for the more due proceeding
 " herein, it shall be lawful for the same Commis" sioners, or any three or more of them, to " minister an Oath to the Plaintiff or Defendant,
 " and also to such Witnesses as shall be produced
 " on each Party, if the same Commissioners,
 " or any three of them, or more, shall so think it
 " meet.

" And be it further enacted by the Authority
 " aforesaid, That if any Action of Debt, or " Action upon the Case upon an Assumpsit for
 " the Recovery of any Debt, to be sued or pro" secuted against any the Person or Persons afore-
 " said, in any of the King's Courts at Westminster,
 " or elsewhere out of the said Court of Re" quests, it shall appear to the Judge or Judges
 " of the Court, where such Action shall be sued
 " or prosecuted, that the Debt to be recovered
 " by the Plaintiff in such Action doth not " amount to the Sum of forty Shillings, and the " Defendant in such Action shall duly prove,
 " either by sufficient Testimony, or by his own
 " Oath, to be allowed by any the Judge or
 " Judges of the said Court where such Action
 " shall depend, that at the Time of the commenc" ing of such Action, such Defendant was in" habiting and resident in the City of London, or
 " the Liberties thereof, as above; that in such " Case the said Judge or Judges shall not allow
 " to the said Plaintiff any Costs of Suit, but " shall award that the same Plaintiff shall pay so " much ordinary Costs to the Party Defendant,
 " as such Defendant shall justly prove before
 " the said Judge or Judges it hath truly cost
 " him in Defence of the said Suit.

" And be it further enacted, That, if any such
 " Plaintiff or Creditor, Defendant or Debtor,
 " after Warning given him or them, in Manner
 " and Form before in this Act mentioned, by the " said Officer of the said Court of Requests, shall
 " without some just or reasonable Cause of Ex" cuse, refuse to appear in the said Court before
 " the said Commissioners, or shall not perform
 " such Order, as the said Commissioners, or any
 " three or more of them shall set down, for or " concerning such Debts as aforesaid; that then
 " it shall be lawful for the said Officer of the " said Court, or any other of the Serjeants at

" Mace of the said City, by Order of the said
 " Commissioners, or any three or more of them,
 " to commit such Party or Parties to Prison,
 " into one of the Counters of the said City,
 " there to remain until he or they shall perform
 " the Order of the said Commissioners in that " Behalf.

" Provided always, That this Act, or any thing
 " therein contained, shall not extend to any
 " Debt for any Rent upon any Lease of Lands
 " or Tenements, or any other real Contracts,
 " nor to any other Debt that shall arise by rea" son of any Cause concerning Testament or
 " Matrimony, or any thing concerning or pro" perly belonging to the Ecclesiastical Court, albeit
 " the same shall be under forty Shillings; any " thing before contained to the contrary in any
 " wise notwithstanding.

" And be it enacted by the Authority aforesaid,
 " That the said Act, made in the first Year of " the King's Majesties Reign, be from the End " of this Session of Parliament, for and concern" ing any Order to be made in the said Court of " Requests, after the End of this Session of Par" liament utterly repealed."

In the Month of September, the King demand-
 " ed of the City a Loan of a certain Sum of Mo" ney; which being readily granted, 'twill after" wards appear to have been sixty thousand Pounds.

In the Month of October, James was proclaimed
 " in Cheapside King of Great Britain, France and
 " Ireland, by one of the Kings at Arms, assisted by
 " the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen in their Formali-
 " ties.

Whilst the Parliament were employed in enqui-
 " ring into the Gun-Powder-Plot, a Rumour was " spread, that the King was stabbed at Ockingham
 " with an invenomed Knife. This Report not only
 " threw the Court at Whitehall, and both Houses
 " of Parliament, into the greatest Consternation,
 " but likewise the City into the utmost Confusion
 " and Distraction, for this was regarded as the Ef" fect of a new Conspiracy: Wherefore the Lord-
 " Mayor caused the City Gates forthwith to be " shut, and issued his Precept for the immediate " assembling of the Trained Bands, and took such " other Measures to put the City into such a Po" sition of Defence, as to be able to baffle all the " Attempts that should be made against it. But,
 " in the Height of this general Distraction, joyful
 " News arrived of the King's Safety; which soon
 " had an happy Effect, by dispelling the dismal
 " Gloom, which overspread the Hearts and Minds " of the People.

In the third Year, the King granted the Citi" zens of London the following Charter of Confir" mation:

" James, by the Grace of God, of England,
 " Scotland, France and Ireland King, Defender of " the Faith, &c. to all to whom our present Let" ters shall come, Greeting.

" Whereas our beloved the Mayor, and Com-
 " monalty, and Citizens of our City of London,
 " Time out of Mind, have had, exercised, and

"And whereas the said Mayor, and Commonalty, and Citizens, from all the Time afore said, have had and exercised the Office of Measuring, and Measuring of all Coals, and Grain of whatsoever Kind; and also of all Kind of Salt, and all Kind of Apples, Pears, Plumbs, and other Fruit whatsoever; and also all Kind of Roots eatable of what Kind soever, and of Onions, and of all other Merchandizes, Wares, and Things whatsoever measurable, and the Measuring of every of them, in, or unto the said Port of London, coming, carried, or brought upon the said Water, in whatsoever Ship, Boat, Barge or Vessel, floating, laden, and being on whatsoever Part of the said Water of Thames, or upon whatsoever Bank, Shore, or Wharf of the same Water of Thames, which shall come to, arrive, abide, be delivered or laid down, from the said Bridge of the said Town of Staines Westward, to the said Bridge of London, and from thence to the said Place called Yendale, otherwise Tenlect, towards the Sea, and East, and in Medway, and in the said Port of the City of London afore said; to exercise and occupy the same Office, by the Mayor of the said City for the Time, during the Time of his Mayoralty, or by his sufficient Deputies; and also, for all the said Time they have had and taken, and ought to have and take to their proper Use, by the Mayor of the said City for the Time being, during his Mayoralty, or by his sufficient Deputies, all Wages, Rewards, Fees, and Profits to the same Office belonging.

"And, notwithstanding they the Mayor, and Commonalty, and Citizens, of late Times, thereof have been disquieted, and in some Measuring afore said unjustly hindered, and especially in the said Office of Measuring Coals, supposing that Office to the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens antiently not to appertain, neither by any lawful Grant, or Prescription, as yet to appertain or belong; whereas in Truth it doth manifestly and plainly appear, that the same Offices, and all other Premises to them of old Time appertaining, and do now of Right appertain, and that they lawfully received and enjoyed, and ought to have, take,

and enjoy the Wages and Rewards, Fees and Perquisites thereof. We therefore, to take away all Controversies, and remove all Doubt in this behalf, and to the Intent that the said Mayor, and Commonalty, and Citizens, may securely, freely, and quietly use, have, exercise and enjoy the Offices afore said, and every of them, and the Measuring afore said, and the Fees, Wages, Rewards and Profits to the said Office and Measuring belonging, and all and singular other the Premises, to them and their Successors for ever, without the Contradiction, Molestation, or Hindrance any way of Us, our Heirs or Successors, Admirals of England, Justices, Escheators, Sheriffs, Bailiffs, or other our Officers or Ministers whatsoever. And because it is well-pleasing to us to shew Favour in this behalf to the same Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens, and rather encrease, strengthen, and enlarge, than diminish the Liberties, Franchises, Jurisdictions, Privileges, and free Customs of the City of London afore said; of our special Grace, and from our certain Knowledge, and meer Motion, we do by these Presents approve, allow, ratify and confirm, for Us, our Heirs and Successors, all and singular the Offices and Measuring afore said, and other recited Premises, and the Wages, Rewards, Fees, and Profits belonging or appertaining thereto, and the Uses and Customs afore said, to the said Mayor, and Commonalty, and Citizens of the said City afore said, and their Successors.

"And further, of our special Grace and certain Knowledge, and meer Motion, we have granted, and by these Presents, for Us, our Heirs, and Successors, do grant to the said Mayor, and Commonalty, and Citizens, and their Successors, that they may exercise and execute the said Office of Bailiff and Conservation of the Water of Thames, by the Mayor of the same City for the Time being, during the Time of his Mayoralty, or his sufficient Deputies, from Time to Time, for ever, in, upon, or about the same Water of Thames; (that is to say) from the Bridge of Staines to the Bridge of London, and from thence to a certain Place called Yenland, otherwise Tenlect, towards the Sea, and towards the East and Medway, and in the Port of the City of London afore said, and upon whatsoever Bank, Shore and Wharf of the same Water of Thames, within the Limits and Bounds afore said, in, upon, and about every one of the same, and to have, receive, and collect and enjoy all and singular Wages, Rewards, Fees and Profits to the same Office of Bailiff pertaining, to the proper Use of the said Mayor, and Commonalty, and Citizens, by the Mayor of the same City for the Time being, during the Time of his Mayoralty, or by his sufficient Deputies.

"And also, of our more ample Grace, and from our certain Knowledge and meer Motion, we have given, and by these Presents for Us, our Heirs and Successors, do grant to the said Mayor, and Commonalty, and Citizens, and their Successors, that they may peaceably and quietly, from Time to Time, for ever, execute and exercise the afore said Office of Measurer

Frequent Disputes having arisen between the Mayor and Citizens of London, and the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, about the Right of Metage of Coals, &c. for the Removing of this, and Preventing all Contests for the future, the Citizens received the aforesaid Charter, which effectually confirms to them the Metage of Coals, Grain, Salt, Apples, Pears, Plumbs, and other Fruits.

Christian, King of Denmark, Brother-in-Law to the King, being arrived in England to visit
James, he landed from Greenwich at the Tower of London on the last of July, accompanied by the King and Prince Henry, attended by the British and Danish Nobility; and was received on Tower-Hill
by the Lord-Mayor in his Crimson Velvet Robes; who, uncovered, bore a golden Sceptre before their Majesties thro' London to Temple-Bar: On which Occasion the City being embellished after the same pompous Manner as at the publick Entries of her Kings; I shall therefore only observe, that at the upper End of Cheapside, by a sumptuous Pageant, sat the venerable Senators of the City in their Scarlet Robes; in whose Name the Recorder, in an eloquent Latin Oration, congratulated his Danish Majesty on his happy Arrival, and, as an Evidence of the City's great Respect to Christian, presented him with a large Cup of Gold.

This is the last Year in which we meet with any Orders for cleaning the Town-Ditches; in which they and the Common-Sewers were well cleansed, and Flood-Gates were made in Helborn-Ditch and Fleet-Ditch; except that Order in 1666, after the Fire of London, when the Mayor and Aldermen directed that Part of it, called Fleet-Ditch, to be cleansed, enlarged, and made deep enough for Barges to come up as far as Helborn-Bridge,

Bridge, by the Help of the Tides. The Sides were built of Free-Stone, with Warehouses on each Side, which ran under the Street, designed to be used for laying in of Coals and such-like Commodities, which would have proved an Advantage to the City, from the Revenue arising thereby; but that Project did not take. This Ditch was built and made by Sir Thomas Fitch, Bricklayer, who contracted with the City for a considerable Sum, and enriched himself thereby.

Disputes about Pre-cedency
among the Aldermen.

Soon after, a Controversy arose between the Knights Aldermen and Knights Commoners of the City about Precedence, the latter alledging it was due to the Seniority of Knighthood; but the former not only insisted upon its being due to an Alderman, tho' a junior Knight; but likewise, tho' not a Knight, it was due to an Alderman, as a Governor of the City, who, by the Immunities thereof, had a Power of calling a Wardmote; therefore the Knights Commoners, in his Ward, must be inferior to him, because they, according to the Constitutions of the City, are obliged to obey his Summons as Head of the Ward. But Disputes continuing to increase, occasioned by the Knights Commoners Ladies, who imagined it to be highly derogatory to their Honour, to give Place to the Ladies of junior Knights, even though of Aldermen; this inflamed Matters to such a Degree, that the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen judged it necessary, by a Petition of the following Tenor, humbly to beseech the King, that the Affair in Dispute might be referred to the Determination of the Lords Commissioners of the Marshal's Office:

The King petitioned concerning the same.

To the KING's Most Excellent MAJESTY,

The humble Petition of the Mayor, Knights, and Aldermen of your Honourable City and Chamber of London,

SHEWING,

City Rec.

"That, whereas it hath pleased your most excellent Majesty, of your princely Favour, both at your Majesty's Coronation, and since, to dignify your Suppliants with the Degree of Knighthood, as also certain Commoners, yet keeping Shops, and continuing their Trades within this City: And forasmuch as some of those Knights Commoners do pretend a Priority before some of your Suppliants later knighted, and stand with them in Contention for Place and Superiority in Precedency at publick Meetings, even in their own Wards and Jurisdiction, contrary to the most seemly and beautiful Order of the said City.

"Your Suppliants most humbly beseech, that your Majesty will be pleased to recommend the judicial Hearing and Determination of this Difference to the Right Honourable the Lords in Commission for the Office of Earl Marshal of England; to the End, that the antient Magistracy, which is derived and held from your Majesty's supreme Authority, together with their antient Customs and Privileges, being rightly understood, their Lordships may take such Order therein, as your Highness be no further troubled herewith, nor the settled Order of the City's quiet Government hereafter prejudiced nor disturbed."

This was accordingly referred to the Court Marshal; for, under the Petition, it was thus writ:

At the Court at Newmarket, 12 Mar. 1607.

"His Majesty, having a gracious Respect to the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen of his Highness's City of London, is pleased to refer the Consideration of this Petition to the Lords Commissioners for the Office of Earl Marshal of England; to the End that such Order may be set down in the Differences mentioned in this Petition touching Precedency, as shall be convenient for the Preservation of the Credit of such as, under his Highness, have Authority in the Government of this City."

Signed, Daniel Dyon.

Vera Copia, Rob. Treswell.
Somerset.

When the Case was heard before the Court Marshal, the City assigned these Reasons for their Knights Aldermen to take Precedency of any Knights Bachelors else; nay, and for Aldermen, though not of the Degree of Knights, to do the same.

The City of London, they argued, was a Corporation privileged from much of the ordinary Course held throughout the Kingdom; and endued with many Liberties and Immunities, first granted through special Favour of the Kings of this Realm, and afterwards confirmed by divers Acts of Parliament, as aiming at the Benefit and Honour of the State; which the Industry and Loyalty of the Inhabitants has so well answered, that the Place has thereby gained the Name of the King's Chamber.

That the Government of this City depended chiefly upon the Mayor, as the King's Lieutenant; and secondly, upon the Aldermen, as subordinate Magistrates, to govern the several Divisions or Wards of the same; whereof, by like Authority, granted from Sovereign Majesties, they were made Keepers; and to these Aldermen was left the Rule of the Inhabitants residing in the same, which were known by the Name of the Commons of the City.

That the Body of the Commons was divided into Guilds or Companies, which were antiently ranked in Degrees of Priority or Precedency, according to the Worthiness of their Trades or Mysteries; and the Brethren of every Guild had their Places in the Company, either according to their Seniority, or as they held Offices in the same; moreover, every Citizen knew his Place, not only in his Company, but also, ceteris paribus, in Respect of such as were of other Companies, which was not the least Part of the Policy of this City.

That the Question now was, Whether a Commoner dignified with Knighthood, without any other Advantage of Honour by Employment or otherwise, and using Trade and keeping Shop in the City, should take Place of an Alderman Knight within the same City, contrary to this beautified Order, of antient Time settled and confirmed, with such Charters and Grants from his Majesty; or whether any other Bachelor Knight shall take Place of any Alderman within this City?

That

That in the Negative may be thus argued: Honour is given to assist Government, not to derogate from it, or to diminish it; but, if a Commoner Knight have Precedency of an Alderman in the Place of his Authority, it doth in some Manner shadow and eclipse his Authority and Government. He that has Power upon just Occasion to command, hath Precedency of him that is subject to that Command, in the same Place where he commands; but an Alderman has Power, upon just Occasion, to convent the Commoner within his Ward, notwithstanding his Knighthood; ergo, he has Precedency before him in that Place.

A less Good in the State is not admitted to prejudice a greater Good; but, if a private Knight shall take Place of an Alderman, and consequently prejudice Magistracy, and diminish the Honour of the City, a less Good does hinder a greater Good; ergo,

That in the Court of Pleas of Law holden in Guildhall, pro Domino Rege, the Aldermen are Judges, and, in that Regard, they wear their scarlet Robes: But Judges have Precedence of others within their Circuit; ergo,

Neither hath it in former Times been questioned, Whether an Alderman shall take Place of a Commoner Knight? for it appeared by antient Journals, or Repertories of the City, (wherein every Man is registered according to his Place of Precedence) that an Alderman knighted took his Place according to his Seniority among the Aldermen, and not as he was a Knight; ergo a fortiori, a Commoner Knight is not to take Place of an Alderman within the City; for the Record stands thus:

"Commune Concilium tent. undecimo die Julij, Anno Regni Regis Edwardi Sexti, Dei gratia, Angliæ, &c. tertio, coram Henrico Armocotes, Mil' Majore, Rob. Brook, Recordatore, Armigero, Rad. Warren, Wil. Haxton, Martin Bowes, Joh. Gresham, Milite, Joh. Wilford, Andr. Judd, Geor. Barnes, Ricardo Jervis, Tho. White, Augustino Hinde, Ricardo Turke, Henrico Goodyer, Johan. Lyon, Johan. Lamberd, Will. Gerrard, Stephen. Kirton, ac Will. Lock, Milite, Aldermannis, Vicecom. ac majore parte Communitariorum de Communi Concilio Civitat. prædict. existent."

And, for their Place without the City, the Record of primo Hen. VIII. Jennings Mayor, concerning the Funeral of Hen. VII. is extant, in this Manner:

"And, upon the next Day then following, the Mayor and Aldermen, with all such Persons as have been afore appointed to ride in Black, shall go by Water in Barges to Westminster, there to be present at Mass and Offering. The Mayor, with his Mace in his Hand, offered next after the Lord Chamberlain. The Aldermen Barons, and representing Barons Estate, which have been Mayors, offered next to the Knights of the Garter, and before all the Knights of the Body. Next after those Knights, all the Aldermen that have not been Mayors."

This was the Aldermens Plea: But those on the other Side, in the Behalf of Sir Baptiste Hicks, whose Lady was the chief Cause of this Dispute, urged, that this Difference about Precedency had been started by the Pride of the Citizens and their Wives; for before, whatsoever was pretended, a Knight took Place by Antienty of Dubbing: And so the Heralds directed. And Sir Baptiste Hicks, in a Letter to his Brother Sir Michael Hicks of the Court, written upon this Occasion, tells him, That, after he was knighted, he presently went to the chieft of the Heralds, to be informed by him, what his Place of Precedency was, in Case he should meet with some Aldermen later knighted than himself in London; and then he had it under that Herald's Hands, that he was to take Place of them according to the Antienty of Knighthood. He writes likewise in the same Letter, That before that Time never any Alderman made Question to take Place of a Knight; and that he well remembered, that [in Queen Elizabeth's Reign] Sir Rowland Hayward, who was (as he said) a stout Alderman, would never take Place of a Bachelor Knight, knighted before him; and that Sir Thomas Pullifon, Sir Richard Martin, and, before them, Sir Thomas Gresham, Bachelor Knights, took and take Place according to the Antienty of their Knighthood: And that there were many Knights that took Place of Aldermen Knights, and who had and did give them Place in London, by Reason of the Antienty of Knighthood: And that therefore the contrary was an Infringing of the Dignity of Knighthood.

The Earl of Dunbar seemed also to be of the same Judgment, and promised Sir Baptiste, that he would speak himself to the Earl of Northampton, one of the chieft Commissioners for Earl Marshal, that his Right should receive no Blemish nor Disgrace. For this Knight, with Sir — Herrick, another Commoner, maintained this chargeable Suit against the whole Court of Aldermen; till at last, after divers Years, they let the Business fall; and the Lords Commissioners of the Earl Marshal's Court, the Court of Aldermen still persisting in the Suit, made this Decree, That the Knights Aldermen should have Precedence in the City. And these are the very Words of the Order, as it was transcribed out of the Herald's Books, and humanely communicated by Sir Henry St. George, Kt. Garter:

At a MARSHAL'S COURT holden at Whitehall, on Wednesday Morning the 19th of February, 1611.

"Whereas, upon the humble Petition of the Mayor, Knights, and Aldermen of the City of London, exhibited to the King's most excellent Majesty, complaining, that divers Citizens and Commoners of the said City, being knighted, did challenge Precedency of Place before the Aldermen at publick Meetings within the City; it pleased his Majesty, for the upholding of the antient and seemly Orders of the said City, to refer the Consideration of that Difference unto the said Lords Commissioners, to the End such Order might be set down, as might stand with the Preservation of the Credit and Reputation of such as, under his Highness, had Authority in the Government of the said City: And whereas the said Lords Commissioners, having

"prefixed

"prefixed and appointed two several Days to both Parties, for the hearing and ending of the said Difference, at both which Days the said Knights Commoners made Default; their Lordships did thereupon appoint the 19th Day of November then following, and now last past, to both the said Parties peremptorily, to attend with their Council at Whitehall, to receive such absolute and final Determination in the Cause, as to Justice should appertain; and that either of the said Parties failing, or making Default, should be adjudged to have thereby concluded themselves, for questioning the said Difference any more thereafter: Forasmuch as the said Knights Commoners did then also make Default, and alledging, That they would no longer stand in Opposition to the Premises; their Lordships have thereupon ordered, that the said Aldermen should have and take Place and Superiority, in Precedency within the City, before the said Knights Commoners, which now are Freemen or Citizens of the said City, and such other Citizens or Commoners as hereafter shall be made Bachelor Knights; until we, the said Lords Commissioners, upon full Hearing of the Cause, and the Proofs and Allegations on both Parts, shall see good Cause to order and adjudge the contrary.

H. Northampton, T. Suffolk,
Lenox, E. Worcester.
Nottingham,

The Knights Bachelors of the City may also take Notice of this Rule for their Precedencies: That their Seniority of Knighthood doth not always give them a Right to Precedency; for sometimes a junior Knight, upon some signal Honour done him, shall take Place of a senior: For which an Order at a Court Marshal, March 19, 1609, may be taken Notice of, viz.

"Some Question arose between Sir Thomas Smith, lately employed by his Majesty Ambassador to the Emperor of Russia, and certain Knights Bachelors of the City of London, more antient than he, according to the Grounds of Honour, as well as the Precedents of former Times: By Virtue of that Power and Authority which we have from his Majesty, by Strength of his Commission, to decide Doubts and Questions of like Nature, We do resolve and judge, that the Precedency is due to him, in Respect of the Honour which he hath had to stand covered in the Presence of a King: And do further decree, that the same Right be yielded hereafter unto others that, upon like Reason, shall pretend the like Privilege.

Northampton, Nottingham,
E. Worcester, T. Suffolk."

On the 12th of June following, the King was magnificently entertained in Clothworkers Hall by the Lord-Mayor, who, after Dinner, presented him with a Purse of Gold; which James accepted of, as a sure Evidence of the sincere Love and hearty Affections of the Citizens towards him and his Family; wherefore he assured them of his paternal Love and Care for the Interest of the City. Whereupon the Mayor humbly entreated, that he would be graciously pleased to accept of the Freedom of their Company; which his Majesty accepting of, he called for Sir John Stone, the Master, whom he took by the Hand, and said, Now are we Brethren Clothworkers: And being presented by the Earls of Shrewsbury and Cumberland with Bread and Wine, he took the Cup, and drank Prosperity to the Society; and, as a farther Proof of his Affection toward the Company, gave them yearly for ever two Brace of Bucks, to regale themselves on the anniversary Election of Master and Wardens.

On the 3d of July, the King paid the Sum of sixty thousand Pounds advanced by the City to Queen Elizabeth; and, on the 15th of the same Month, his Majesty, accompanied by Prince Henry, and attended by a great Number of the Nobility, came into the City, and repaired to Merchant-Tailors Hall, where he was splendidly entertained at Dinner; which was no sooner over, than the Master and Wardens, accompanied by the Recorder and divers of the Aldermen of the City, in the Name of the Company, returned humble and hearty Thanks for the great Honour he had done the Fraternity, and presented him with a Purse of Gold. Whereupon the Company's Clerk shewed his Majesty a Roll, which contained the Names of seven Kings, one Queen, seventeen Princes and Dukes, two Duchesses, one Archbishop, thirty Earls, five Countesses, one Viscount, fourteen Bishops, sixty-six Barons, two Ladies, seven Abbots, seven Priors, and one Sub-Prior, besides a great Number of Knights and Esquires, who had been Members of their Company.

The King, having read this Roll, with great Pleasure declared, that he was free of another Company; but, to honour theirs, the Prince his eldest Son should become one of their Members, and himself honour the Ceremony with his Presence; which was no sooner performed, than the Master of the Company presented his Royal Highness with a Purse of Gold; and the Clerk shewing him the above-mentioned Roll, he was so highly delighted therewith, that he sent one of his Officers to require of all the Nobility then present, (who were not free of other Companies) that if they had any Affection for him, to accept of their Freedom in his Company. Whereupon they all, with humble Acknowledgments to his Royal Highness, readily accepted the same.

Soon after it appeared, that all the Proclamations hitherto published, to prevent building in this City and Neighbourhood upon new Foundations, had proved ineffectual; therefore a new Proclamation was published, strictly forbidding all Persons whatsoever to increase the Number of Houses within the City, and one Mile of the same. But, this being no more regarded than the former, many Persons were censured in the Court of Star-Chamber, for not regulating themselves according to the Royal Precepts. And, in consideration of the great Decay of Wood, all Persons were enjoined to build the Fronts of their Houses either with Stone or Brick; whereby the great Consumption of Wood would not only be spared, but likewise the City thereby

Hawkers,
&c.*

At the same Time, the City was again greatly pestered with foreign Hawkers, Pedlars, and Stall-keepers; for the removing of whom, and preventing the like pernicious Practices for the future, it was by the Lord-Mayor and Common Council enacted, That thenceforth no Foreigner whatsoever should presume to vend his, her, or their Goods in the City, by Connivance or otherwise, either in House, Shop, Stall, or Street, upon the Penalty of five Pounds for every Offence. But all Persons bringing Provisions to the City were exempt from this Penalty.

frozen.*

On the 22d of December a great Frost began, whereby the River Thames in a few Days was so hard frozen over, that it not only became as a publick Fair, for Sale of all Sorts of Commodities, but also a Theatre for all Sorts of Diversions.

A preternatural Tide.

On the 19th of February a very extraordinary Tide happened in the River Thames; for, when at London-Bridge it should have been Low-Water, it was, contrary to its natural Course, High-Water; the Cause of which Prodigy I have elsewhere endeavoured to account for. This preternatural Tide, after having ebbed about half an Hour, returned with such Impetuosity, that it arose two Feet higher than at first, and, then gradually subsiding, flowed again for some Time; and, ebbing again, returned to its natural Course.

63000l.*

In the Month of May the King, having Occasion for Money, applied to the Citizens for a Loan; who, considering his good Payment, readily advanced him the Sum of sixty-three thousand Pounds.

Some Time after, the King, out of his great Love and Respect to the City of London, granted the Citizens the following advantageous Charter:

King
James I's
second Charter.*

"James, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. To all to whom these present Letters shall come, greeting.

"Whereas very many of our Progenitors, some times Kings of England, of their special Grace, and for free, laudable, multiplied and continued Service done and expended in Times past by the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of the City of London, and their Predecessors; and also for divers other urgent Causes and Considerations, them thereunto especially moving, have given, granted, and confirmed to the Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the said City of London, and their Successors, divers Liberties, Jurisdictions, Privileges, Franchises, Immunities, Authorities, Ordinances, Customs, and Quittances, as by the several Letters Patents of our Progenitors and Predecessors, some times Kings of England, more fully and manifestly is and appeareth.

"We also, for and in Consideration of the high Fidelity, Constancy, and ready and laudable Service, by the said Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of our said City of London, to us in the Beginning of our Reign, and continually ever since manifested, faithfully done,

"and expended, we have ratified and allowed, and for us, our Heirs and Successors, as much as in us is, do accept of and approve all and singular the Letters Patents, Charters, and Confirmations of our most famous Progenitors and Ancestors, to the same Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the said City of London, and their Predecessors, by whatsoever Name of Incorporation before these Times made, granted, or confirmed; and all and singular Gifts, Grants, Confirmations, Restitutions, Customs, Ordinances, Explanations, and all other Things whatsoever, in whatsoever Letters Patents, or Charters of our Predecessors, Progenitors or Ancestors, Kings of England; and also all and singular Things in the said Letters Patents, Charters, Grants, Confirmations, or any of them, contained, recited, confirmed, or explained; and all and singular Jurisdictions, Authorities, Privileges, Acquittances, and free Customs and Hereditaments whatsoever, which the said Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the said City of London, or their Predecessors, by the Name of the Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the City of London, or by the Name of the Mayor and Aldermen of the City of London, or by the Name of the Mayor, Citizens, and Commonalty of the City of London, or by the Name of the Mayor and Commonalty of the City of London, or by the Name of the Citizens of the City of London, or by the Name of the Barons of London, or by the Name of the Barons of the City of London, or by any other Name whatsoever, by Reason or Force of any Letters Patents, Charters, or Confirmations of any of our Progenitors, Kings of England, which in any Time or Times they had reasonably used or exercised, and them all and singular, to the said Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the said City of London, and their Successors, do ratify and confirm, to have and hold, enjoy and exercise, all and singular the Premises to the said Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the said City of London, and their Successors for ever, so fully, clearly, and entirely, and in as ample Manner and Form, as if they were, or had been, severally, particularly, and by Name in these Presents expressed and declared.

"And further, we will, and of our special Grace, for us, our Heirs and Successors, do grant, that the said Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens, and their Successors, be restored to all and singular their Authorities, Jurisdictions, Liberties, Franchises, Privileges, Acquittances, Immunities, and free Customs; and we do restore the same to them and their Successors by these Presents, as fully, and freely, and entirely, as they or their Predecessors, in any Time of our Progenitors or Predecessors, Kings of England, used or enjoyed, or ought to have, use, and enjoy the same.

"And we will also, and by these Presents, for us, our Heirs and Successors, of our special Grace, do grant, that although the same Mayor and Commonalty of the Citizens of the City

"the City aforesaid, without the Circuits and Limits of the said late House or Priory called the Black-Friars and the White-Friars, respectively executed and exercised. Nevertheless, we will, that all Freemen of the City aforesaid, for the Time being, inhabiting, or who shall inhabit within the said Liberties and Franchises of the said late House or Priory of Black-Friars, and White-Friars, shall be chargeable and eligible unto all Offices and Charges, as well Mayor, as Sheriffs and Aldermen of the said City, as of the Company within the said City of London, of which they are or shall be free, as other Freemen of the said City are.

"And furthermore, for the better and common Profit of our City of London, and for the Accommodation and Supportation of the Charges and Expences of the said City, for us, our Heirs and Successors, we will and grant to the same Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the said City, and to their Successors, that from henceforth all and singular Persons, though they be not free of the same City, who now are, or hereafter shall be dwelling within the said City, the Liberties or Precincts of the same (except the Inhabitants within the Liberties and Franchises of the aforesaid several late Houses or Priories of the late Friars, called the Black-Friars and the White-Friars) in whatsoever Aids, Tallages, Grants, and other Contributions whatsoever, to the Use and Service of us, our Heirs and Successors, or to the Use of the said City, for maintaining the State, Good, or Benefit of the said City, howsoever to be assessed, shall reasonably be taxed and contribute.

"And the same Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the City aforesaid, may and can levy the said Aids, Tallages, Grants, and other Contributions (except before excepted) by their own Officers and Ministers, by Distress of the Goods and Chattels of such Persons, who, from Time to Time, shall be charged with the Payment of such Aids, Tallages, Grants, and other Contributions, or any of them; and so levied, they can and may have, hold, and enjoy, to the Use and behoof aforesaid: Provided always, nevertheless, that such Residents and Dwellers in any Houses within the aforesaid City, who are not, nor shall be Freemen of the aforesaid City, shall be taxed to such Aids, Tallages, Grants, and other Contributions, from Time to Time, only for the Houses in which they shall inhabit or reside, or are dwelling within the same City of London, Liberties, or Precincts of the same, according to the Custom of the said City, shall be assessed and taxed, and not otherwise: Provided also, that if any one, or any of the said Inhabitants, Residents, or Dwellers, who are not, or shall not be a Freeman, or Freeman of the said City, shall think himself, by Reason of the said Aids, Tallages, Grants, or Contributions, unjustly grieved, that then, and in such Case, the Chancellor of England, of us, our Heirs and Successors, for the Time being, upon the Complaint of any Person or Persons so grieved, shall moderate and qualify such Aids, Tallages, Grants, and Contributions,

"as to him in that Behalf shall be thought fit, which Moderation shall stand, and be of Force.

"And furthermore we will, and by these Presents, for us, our Heirs and Successors, do grant to the aforesaid Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens, and their Successors, that the Mayor and Recorder of the said City, which now are, and every Mayor and Recorder of the same City, who hereafter for the Time being shall be, as well those Aldermen of the said City, as those Aldermen who shall for the Time to come bear the Charge of Mayoralty of the same City, after that they have ceased, or be moved from the Office of Mayoralty of the same City, and so long as they shall continue Aldermen of our City of London aforesaid, for ever be, and shall be our Justices, and of our Heirs and Successors, and every one of them be, and shall be Justices and Keepers of us, our Heirs and Successors, to keep and make to be kept the Peace of us, our Heirs and Successors, in and through all and singular Circuits, Precincts, Liberties, Franchises, and Places aforesaid, commonly called the Black-Friars, the White-Friars, the Duke's Place, otherwise Creed-Church-Street, Great St. Bartholomew's, Little St. Bartholomew's, and Cold Harborough aforesaid, and every of them, and to keep, or cause to be kept and executed, all Ordinances and Statutes of this our Realm, made for the Good of our Peace, and the quiet Rule and Government of our People, in all their Articles, according to the Force, Form, and Effect of the same; and to chastise and punish those, who, contrary to the Form and Effect of those Ordinances or Statutes, or any of them, within the Limits, Franchises, and Places aforesaid, are found to offend, as ought to be done, according to the Form of the said Ordinances and Statutes; and to make to come before them all those who threaten any of the People of us, our Heirs or Successors, concerning their Bodies, or burning their Houses, to find sufficient Security of the Peace or good Behaviour towards us, our Heirs or Successors; and, if they refuse to find such Security, them to cause to be safely kept in Prison, until they shall find such Security.

"And further, we will and grant for us, our Heirs and Successors, to the same Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens, and their Successors, that the Mayor of the said City for the Time being, and the Recorder of the same now being, and who for the Time to come shall be, and every Alderman as aforesaid, who has been or hereafter shall be Mayor of the said City, after they shall cease or be removed from the Office of Mayoralty of the said City, and so long as the Aldermen of the said City shall continue, or any four or more of the same, Mayor, Recorder, and Aldermen (whereof the Mayor and Recorder of the same City for the Time being we will to be two) from henceforth for ever, may be Justices of us, our Heirs and Successors; to enquire of all and all Manner of Felonies, Witchcrafts, Inchantments, Sorceries, Magick Art, Trepasses, Forefallers, Regraters, Ingrossers, and Extor-

By this valuable Charter, all the ancient Rights, Liberties, and Immunities of the Citizens are not only in the most ample Manner confirmed, but likewise are added to the Bounds of the City, and Jurisdiction thereof, the Pre-

King James, for the more effectual preventing Rebellion in Ireland, was graciously pleased to make a Tender of the Province of Ulster, in the North Part of that Kingdom, to the Lord-Mayor and Citizens of London, for their settling an English Colony therein: Which generous and advantageous Offer being deliberated upon, the Citizens unanimously resolved to send over four Persons duly qualified to survey the said Province; and who being accordingly appointed, they were accompanied thither and assisted by Sir Thomas Philips, the King's Surveyor; and, having executed their Commission, returned, and made Report to the Lord-Mayor and Common Council of their several Transactions and Observations in that Country; by which the Citizens were made sensible of the great Advantages that would result from such an Undertaking: They gratefully accepted of his Majesty's gracious and bounteous Offer; and having, by Virtue of an Act of Common Council, raised the Sum of twenty thousand Pounds for carrying on the Enterprize, they, for the Government thereof, appointed a Committee to be annually chosen, consisting of six Aldermen and eighteen Commoners; two whereof to be Governor and Deputy.

whereof, according to my Author, was, that the King looked upon the great Increase of Buildings in and about London, as a rickety Distemper in the Head of the Kingdom, which occasioned a Flux of Humours and Diseases to approach the Court; and, being apprehensive that the Plague would soon be in the Neighbourhood of Whitehall, if an effectual Stop was not put to such Proceedings, by the Advice of his Council, he strictly prohibited the erecting of Buildings upon new Foundations within two Miles of the City, upon Penalty of having the same destroyed as soon as finished.

Ibid.

This Proclamation was as little regarded as the former; for the Builders continued to work with the greatest Assiduity, in which they were encouraged to proceed, by the Government's winking thereat for the Space of seven Years; but about the Expiration of that Term, a great Number of Houses being erected contrary to the Tenor of the said Proclamation, and vast Sums of Money expended thereon, the said Builders were either obliged to re-purchase their Houses at an extravagant Rate, or else demolish the same.

Prince
Henry created Prince of Wales.

On the last of May, Prince Henry was created Prince of Wales; on which Occasion the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen, in the City Barge, attended by fifty-four of the City Corporations, in their respective Barges, richly decorated, repaired by Water to Chelsea, where they attended the Return of the Prince from Richmond; whence he arrived at four o'Clock, and, continuing his Voyage to Whitehall, was, by the Citizens, entertained with the Diversions of divers sumptuous Pageants; for which he returned Thanks; and, taking Leave of them, they returned to the City, where they sumptuously regaled themselves in their several Halls upon that joyful Occasion.

The King's Commission in Behalf of the Archers.

King James I. in the eighth of his Reign, granted a Commission to a great many Persons of Quality, in Behalf of the Archers; mentioning divers good Statutes, Ordinances, Provisions and Proclamations made by Kings on their Behalf. This Commission was to stop a Practice then began to be used, of enclosing the Ground formerly used for this Exercise, by making of Banks and Hedges in such Fields and Closets, as Time out of Mind were allowed to be shot in, and by plucking up the old Marks of antient Standing in the said Closets, or where the Banks and Hedges being of indifferent Height, the Ditches were made so broad and deep, that, wanting Bridges, the Archers were much hindered thereby. The Commissioners therefore were empowered to go upon these Places, and to view and survey in such Grounds, next adjoining to the City of London, and the Suburbs, within two Miles Compass; and the same to reduce into such Order and State for the Archers, as they were in the Beginning of the Reign of King Henry VIII. and to cause the Banks, Ditches, and Quicksets to be made plain and reformed.

Ibid.

The Inhabitants of this City and Suburbs being exceedingly increased, 'twas dreaded that such a Multitude would occasion a Famine: For the obviating of so great a Misfortune, the Mayor and Citizens prudently resolved to increase the Number of publick Granaries; to which End they caused twelve new ones to be erected at Bridewell, capacious enough to contain six thousand Quarters of Corn.

A Marriage being concluded between Frederick the Elector Palatine, and the Princess Elizabeth, only Daughter to King James; for the solemnizing of whose Nuptials, the Elector, on the 16th of October, arrived in this City; and on the 29th of the same Month, being the Lord-Mayor's Day, he honoured the new Mayor with his Company at Dinner in Guildhall; where he, with his Attendants, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Duke of Lenox, Bishop of London, and many other Lords, were entertained in a very sumptuous Manner; after which, the Lord-Mayor, in the Name of the Citizens, presented his Electoral Highness with a very large Basin and Ewer, and two large Pots or Flagons of Silver richly gilt, on each of which were engraven the Words Civitas London: And, upon the Wedding-Day, the Lord-Mayor presented the Electoral Bride with a Necklace of Oriental Pearl, of above two thousand Pounds in Value.

Electo Palatine, &c.

The King being informed of the dilatory Proceedings of the Citizens of London in settling the Province of Ulster in Ireland, lately conferred upon them, and also of the many scandalous Practices and Abuses in the Prosecution of that Undertaking; he therefore commanded the Governor and Committee of Direction in that Affair to attend him at Greenwich, where he upbraided them with their Neglect, and careless Management in the Execution of so valuable and laudable a Work. This Reprimand occasioned the calling of a Common Council at their Return; wherein Henry Montague, one of the King's Serjeants, laid home to the Lord-Mayor and Citizens their several Faults and Omissions in the Prosecution of so beneficial an Enterprize, and acquainted them, that it was his Majesty's Pleasure they should immediately send over a Deputation from the Common Council to superintend the Work of Plantation, for the more effectual carrying on of the same.

for neglecting the Colony of Ulster.

The Common Council, highly approving of this Proposition, chose an Alderman and a Commoner for their Deputies; to whom were added, by the Governor and Committee of Direction, three Gentlemen of great Knowledge and Experience, as Assistants; who, arriving in Ireland, carefully surveyed every Thing relating to the Undertaking, and what was found amiss they rectified, and Things defective immediately supplied: And, having settled every Thing belonging to the Colony upon the best Foundation, they returned, and reported their Proceedings to the Common Council; which, to their great Honour, were unanimously approved of.

that Affair.

At Michaelmas this Year, Sir Hugh Middleton completed that most useful and expensive Scheme of supplying this City with sweet and wholesome Water by means of the New River.

Queen Elizabeth, by an Act of Parliament, granted a Liberty to the Citizens of London, to cut and convey a River from any Part of Middlesex, or Hertfordshire, to the City of London, with a Limitation of ten Years Time for the Performance thereof: King James I. also granted the like

Act,

Act, but without any limited Time, for the same Purpose: And when all else refused, Mr. (afterwards Sir Hugh) Middleton undertook to bring his intended River from Chadwell and Amwell, near Ware in Hertfordshire, to the North Side of London, near Islington, where he built a large Cistern to receive it.

The Work began on the 20th of February, 1608, and in five Years Space was fully accomplished, after great Art, Pains, and Industry had been bestowed in the Passage of it, on Account of the Grounds not being all of the like Nature, some being owzy and very muddy, others again stiff, craggy, and stony.

The Depth of the Trench, in some Places, was full thirty Feet, if not more; whereas, in others, it required great Art to mount it over a Valley in a Trough, between two Hills, and the Trough all the while borne up by wooden Arches; some of them fixed in the Ground very deep, and rising above twenty-three Feet in Height. The Channel is narrow, but runs, in a winding Course, sixty Miles before it reaches this City, and has eight hundred Bridges over it.

Being brought to the intended Cistern, but the Water not yet let into it, on Michmas-Day, Anno 1613, the Day on which Sir Thomas Middleton, Knight, Brother to Mr. Hugh Middleton, was chosen Lord-Mayor for the Year ensuing; Sir John Swinnerton, the Lord-Mayor at that Time, accompanied by the Lord-Mayor elect, Sir Henry Mountague, Recorder of London, and many of the worthy Aldermen, rode to see the Cistern, and the first Issuing of the River thereinto; which was performed in the Manner related in Book V. of this Work.

Smithfield, the publick Market-place for Cattle, being as yet unpaved, 'twas frequently, by Rain, and the vast Number of Beasts brought thither for Sale, rendered almost unpassable: For the remedying of which, the King, by his Letter, enjoined the Lord-Mayor to pave the same, thereby to remove the Scandal the City was obnoxious to on account of its ruinous and dangerous Condition; whereby, instead of being a Service, 'twas rendered a common Nuisance to the City.

This Letter had so good an Effect, that the Mayor and Citizens immediately set about the Work, and, in the Space of six Months, accomplished the same, at the Expence of sixteen hundred Pounds, to the Honour of the City, and great Convenience of the Market-People.

Soon after, the King appointed a general Muster of all the Militia of the Kingdom, both Horse and Foot: On which Occasion this City mustered six thousand of her Citizens completely armed; who, by their frequent Exercises, performed their several Evolutions with such an admirable Dexterity, that it gained them the Applause of all the Spectators; which their Children endeavouring to emulate, chose them Officers, and, forming themselves into Companies, with flying Colours and Beat of Drum, often marched into the Fields, where, by frequent Practice, they became very expert in Military Exercises.

Some Time after, the King granted the Citizens of London the following Charter:

"James, by the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. to all to whom these our present Letters shall come, greeting.

The Preamble.

"So great is the Force of our Love towards our City of London, our Royal Chamber, as whatsoever is in us, that we shall see necessary or profitable to the Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the same our City, that we have been ready freely to give from our Soul to the said Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of our said City; and it pleases us well, that all Grants made by our Predecessors in Times past to our City of London be not only confirmed, but also enlarged. Therefore, whereas, amongst other Things, it appears, that the said Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of London, from all Time whereof the Memory of Man is not to the contrary, have had and lawfully exercised the Office of Measuring all Coals, of what Kind or Sort soever, in any Port of the same City, coming, brought, or carried upon the Water of Thames, in any Ship, Boat, Barge, or other Vessel whatsoever, floating or being upon what Part soever of the said Water of Thames, or on what Bank, Shore, or Wharf soever, of the same Water of Thames, from the Bridge in the Town of Staines in the County of Middlesex, and to the Bridge of London, and from thence to a certain Place called Yendale, or Yenland, or Yenleet, toward the Sea, and East, also in Medway, and in the Port of the City of London. Nevertheless a Question is risen, whether the Weighing of Coals brought within the Limits aforesaid, together with the Measuring of Coals, doth belong to the Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the said City.

Measuring and Weighing of Coals
in the Port of London
from *Yen-

"We therefore, to take away all Controversies in this Part, as well for the present as for the Time to come, and to remove all Doubt, and to the Intent the said Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the said City, may use, have,
and enjoy, as well the Weighing as Measuring;
and each, as the Wages, Rewards, Fees, and Profits used for the same, of our special Grace, have given, granted, and confirmed, and by these Presents, for us, and our Heirs and Successors, do give, grant, and confirm to our beloved the Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of our said City of London, and to their Successors, the Weighing of all Coals called Stone-Coals, Pit-Coals, Earth-Coals, and all other Coals weighable, of what Kind or Sort soever, in or at the said Port of London, coming or brought up the said Water of Thames, in any Ship, Boat, or Barge, or other Vessel whatsoever, floating, or being in any Port of the same Water of Thames, and upon whatsoever Bank, Shore, or Wharf of the same Water of Thames, from the said Bridge of Staines to the said Bridge of London, and from thence to the said Place called Yendale towards the Sea;
and also in Medway, and in the Port of *Lon-also all Fees, Wages, Rewards, Profits, and Advantages used, or to that Time belonging,

" Coals in and at the Port of the said City brought from the Water of Thames aforesaid, such Coals are made more dear, to the great Loss and Prejudice as well of Us as of our Subjects:

" And whereas divers ill-disposed Persons, more affecting their own private Gain and Profit, than the general and publick Good and Benefit of our said City, little weighing the Conservation of the said River, of late and at the present do daily and usually sell Coals and other Things by Retail, in less Quantity, in Boats, commonly called Lighters, and other Vessels, floating and being on the Water of Thames aforesaid, after such Coals have been unladen from the Ships and other Vessels which first brought them within the Limits aforesaid, which Persons make the same Boats or Lighters as their common Shops and Warehouses, and in them do daily hold upon the said Water of Thames a common Market for selling such Coals, and other Things, having one, two, three, and sometimes more Boats or Lighters lying together, and fastened one to the other in the River of Thames aforesaid, by which forestalling, ingrossing and regrating aforesaid, to the great Cozenage, Damage and Oppression, as well of the Poor as the Rich, daily increases and augments, and the Price of Coals and other Things is made dearer:

" And for that by the frequent Importation, Unlading and Measuring of such Coals, and such-like Things, in and from the said Boats or Lighters, very many of the same Coals and other Dirt often fall and are cast into the River of Thames, to the great Harm and choaking up the Stream of the same River, and the said Boats so placed do greatly hinder the Stream of the said River, and the Passage of Passengers upon the Water of the said River:

" We therefore, thinking it fit that such an Evil ought not to be permitted to continue, do command, and for Us, our Heirs and Successors, prohibit all Persons whatsoever, that they, nor any of them, from henceforth, sell or presume to sell any Coals, of what Kind soever, upon the Water of Thames, in any Boat, Lighter or other Vessel whatsoever, except only in such Ships or other Vessels which at first brought the same Coals within the Port of the said City, and the Limits aforesaid, unless upon some Port, Key or Wharf, near the said River; upon Pain of Contempt of our Royal Mandate, and incurring such Pains and Punishments, which may be inflicted by the Laws and Statutes of this our Kingdom upon such Contemners and Neglecters.

" And because it is our Intent, that the same Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the City aforesaid, and their Successors, shall fully enjoy the Premises; We therefore by these Presents declare and signify, and for Us, our Heirs and Successors, do grant and covenant to and with the said Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the said City, and their Successors, that they may safely, freely and quietly have, use and enjoy, all and singular the Premises for ever, without the Hindrance of Us, our Heirs or Successors, or any Officers or Ministers of Us, our Heirs or Successors.

" And if any Doubt in Time to come shall be found in these Presents, or any Default, Scruple or Question concerning the Premises shall happen to arise, We, our Heirs and Successors shall vouchsafe to make and grant other Letters Patents under the Great Seal of England, of our Heirs or Successors, to the same Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the said City, and their Successors, for the better giving, granting and confirming, and for the safer enjoying of the Premises, when it shall be desired by the same Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the said City, and their Successors, for that the express Mention of the true yearly Value, or of the Certainty of the Premises, or of other Gifts and Grants by Us, or by any of our Ancestors made in Times past to the said Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the said City, is not made, or being in these Presents, or any other Statute, Act, Ordinance, Proclamation or Restriction to the contrary heretofore made, ordained or published, or any other Matter or Thing whatsoever in any wise notwithstanding.

" In Witness whereof, we have caused these our Letters to be made Patents. Witness Myself at Westminster, the fifteenth of September, in the twelfth Year of our Reign of England, France and Ireland, and of Scotland the forty-eighth."

At this Time, the Sides of the Streets of this City being paved with Pebble-stones, Walking was thereby rendered very troublesome; wherefore the Inhabitants of the principal Streets set about paving their several Doors with broad Free-stones.

In the same Year Sir Thomas Overbury was poisoned in the Tower; for which the Earl of Somerset, and his Lady, were condemned, but most surprizingly pardoned; when the meaner Instruments made use of in that Murther, Sir Gervase Elwes, then Lieutenant of the Tower, Mrs. Turner, and divers others were executed for it.

Soon after, Sir Peter Proby, an Alderman of this City, and Governor of the Colony of Ulster in Ireland, by a special Commission from the King and City of London, repaired thither, attended by divers of the most eminent Citizens, for regulating certain Affairs belonging to the Plantation, taking along with him two rich Swords of State as a Present from the City, to be carried before the Mayors of Londonderry and Colerain; the former whereof being by the King some Time before erected into a City, and the latter into a Mayor-Town.

In September following, the King, at his Return from Scotland, by way of Windfor, was met at Hide-Park by the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, Recorder and Sheriffs in their Formalities, attended by four hundred of the principal Citizens richly dressed, with Chains of Gold about their Necks; where the Mayor presented his Majesty with a Purse of five hundred Broad Pieces of Gold; for which Favour the Recorder received the Honour of Knighthood.

On Easter-Monday, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Lord-Keeper, Lord-Chamberlain, Earl of Worcester, Lord Carew, Bishop of London, and divers other Persons of Distinction, in an unaccustomed Manner, honoured the Lord-Mayor with their Company at the Spital Sermon; whence they accompanied him on Horseback to his House near Billingsgate, where they were most sumptuously regaled, with all their Attendants.

At this Time divers of the Bishops applied to the King for a Liberty for the People to divert themselves on the Sabbath-Day. The King, willing to indulge the Prelates in their Request, as well as the People in their Pleasures, caused certain Rules to be drawn up and published, under the Royal Sanction, intitled, The Book of Sports; with a positive Injunction to the several parochial Incumbents to read the same in their respective Churches, upon Pain of the King's Displeasure; but, many of them proving refractory, they were by the High Commission Court suspended and imprisoned; and the Lord-Mayor of London, in spite of the said Licence, caused the King's Carriages to be stopped, as they were passing through the City on a Sunday in the Time of Divine Service: This Proceeding occasioned the Officers attending the same to return to Court in the utmost Fury, bitterly inveighing against the Mayor for his rude Deportment in this Affair; which the King was no sooner acquainted with, than in a great Rage he swore, "He thought there had been no more Kings in England but himself." Yet, after the allaying of his Passion, he sent a Warrant to the Mayor, commanding him to let them pass; which he obeyed, with this Declarative, "While 'it was in my Power, I did my Duty; but that 'being taken away by a higher Power, it is my 'Duty to obey:" Which the King afterwards, upon Reflection, took well, and thanked him for it.

On Sunday the twenty-sixth of March, the King, accompanied by the Prince of Wales and many of the chief Nobility, came from Whitehall in great State to the City: He was received at Temple-Bar by the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, Recorder and Sheriffs in their Formalities, and presented with the City Sword and a Purse of Gold; the former of which being returned, 'twas carried by the Mayor on Horseback before his Majesty to St. Paul's Church (the Streets, thro' which the Cavalcade passed, were on both Sides lined by the City Companies in their Formalities) where the King alighting at the West Door, he repaired to a brazen Pillar, and, kneeling down, invoked the Almighty for a Blessing upon his present Design; thence he proceeded to the Choir, where having heard an Anthem, he repaired to St. Paul's Cross to Sermon; whence he went to the Bishop's Palace, to concert Measures for the more effectual repairing St. Paul's Cathedral; which in its proper Place shall be fully treated of.

About the same Time, the King, being in great Want of Money for the Support of his Son-in-law, the Elector Palatine, had recourse to a Method formerly practised upon the like Emergencies, of raising Money by way of Benevolence, and to which End he issued out his Letter, a Copy whereof was sent to most of the Nobility and Bishops, as was also one to the Lord-Mayor of London; and tho' no Sum was therein specified, yet a Demand was made upon the said Mayor and Citizens of the Sum of twenty thousand Pounds, which they upon Deliberation imagining to be too exorbitant, agreed to the Payment of one Moiety thereof, which was raised by the several Companies.

The Winter following a very great Frost happened, whereby the River Thames was so strongly frozen, that Streets of Booths were erected thereon, wherein were sold all Sorts of Goods as in a publick Fair; as were likewise all Sorts of Diversions practised as well as on Land.

In the Year 1621, Sir Francis Bacon, Lord Verulam, Lord Chancellor of England, was for Bribery displaced and committed to the Tower; but after some Days enlarged.

The several Treaties that were negotiating between the King, the Emperor, and King of Spain, gave great Uneasiness to the Citizens of London, inasmuch that they assaulted Gondomar, the Spanish Ambassador, as he was passing along the Streets: This so highly enraged the King, that he came to Guildhall, and severely reprimanded the Lord-Mayor and others the City Magistrates for the Insolence of the Populace, threatening to restrain them by a military Power from committing any such intolerable Abuses upon the Persons of Ambassadors for the future; and at the same time strictly commanded the Recorder diligently to enquire after the Authors of that villainous Attempt, in order to punish the Aggressors in an exemplary Manner. Pursuant to this Order, a Fellow was apprehended for reflecting upon the said Ambassador, and, tho' no otherwise guilty, he was the next Day, by the arbitrary Command of the King, cruelly whipped from Aldgate to Temple-Bar.

Some Time after, a preternatural Tide happened in the River Thames, which flowed and ebbed four Times in the Space of four Hours.

On the twenty-fourth of October, a very melancholy Accident happened in the House of the French Ambassador in Black-Friars; where one Drury, a Jesuit, preaching in the Chapel (a large upper Room) to an Auditory of above three hundred Persons, the Floor giving way, it fell with the Congregation, and broke down a lower; whereby the Preacher and near a hundred of his Hearers were killed, and about the same Number miserably mangled, some whereof continued for some Time under the Ruins, with hideous Groans and lamentable Cries for Help.

In the twenty-second Year of James, Warrants were issued for the immediate raising of ten thousand Men, for the Assistance of the Elector Palatine, the King's Son-in-law; on which Occasion the City of London, to shew her hearty Zeal for the Interest of that Protestant Prince, immediately raised two thousand Men for his Relief.

On the twelfth of June, in the Afternoon, a great Hurricane happened, attended by a violent Storm of Thunder, Lightning, Rain and Hail, whereby the Church-yard Walls of St. Andrew's Holborn and St. Botolph's Bishopsgate were blown down, and many Corps, who had died of the Plague, exposed, to the great Danger of the City: But, by a speedy Reparation, the bad Effects thereof were happily prevented.

Just after, an extraordinary Phenomenon happened in the River Thames, where, by a violent Agitation of the Water, arose a dense circular Vapour of a considerable Magnitude, which diffused itself in the Air, like a Smoke emitted from a Furnace, and, after some Duration, gradually ascended 'till it disappeared, to the great Admiration of all the Spectators. This uncommon Appearance I take to have been what is usually called a Water-spout, an Exhalation common in hot Climates, and well known to our Mariners.

A War having broke out between England and France, and the King not being able to obtain an Aid of the Parliament, he dissolved it, and set about raising Money by way of Loan; to which End he sent to the City of London, to advance him the Sum of one hundred thousand Pounds; but the Citizens, not judging it convenient to lend Money at that critical Juncture, endeavoured to excuse themselves before the Privy Council; but, their Excuses being deemed frivolous and insignificant, a positive Command was sent to the Mayor and Aldermen to comply with his Majesty's pressing Necessities, or otherwise risk the Consequences of an obstinate Refusal: However, neither this Sum, nor that imposed upon the other Parts of the Kingdom, were ever raised, as will presently appear.

Soon after another Precept was sent from Court to the City, for the immediate Fitting out of twenty of the best Ships in the River, well manned, and stored with Ammunition and Provisions for three Months. Whereupon the Mayor and Common Council petitioned for an Abatement, and that, on account of their (pretended) Inability, his Majesty would be graciously pleased to accept of ten Ships and two Pinnaces: Whereunto Answer was made, that the Number demanded were necessary for the Preservation of the State, and that the Charge imposed was so moderate, as not to exceed the Value of some (one) of their Estates; and that all Petitions and Excuses to the Command were to be rejected, as tending to the manifest Danger of the Publick; and that, as the said Command was not only directed to the Generality of the City, but likewise to the several Members, his Majesty would therefore require an Account of every Citizen in particular. And as no Abatement could be obtained, the Citizens fitted out the said twenty Ships, which did good Service against the French, who just before had seized above one hundred of our Ships in their own Harbours.

The King, perceiving that the People were not to be brought to a Submission by such arbitrary Proceedings, caused an Order of Council to be made, and Warrants issued and sent into all Parts, to release the Gentlemen confined on account of the Loan: At which time Orders were sent to the Lord-Mayor of this City to proceed moderately in demanding the said Loan-Money of the Citizens.

Dr. Lamb, a Creature of the Duke of Buckingham, as such, was not only hated by the Populace, but likewise on the account of his being reputed a Conjuror; whereby he was rendered so very obnoxious to the People, that on the eighteenth of June he was insulted in the City by a few Boys, who soon after being increased by the acceding Multitude, they surrounded him with bitter Invectives, which obliged him to seek Refuge in a Tavern in the Old Jewry; but the Tumult continuing to increase, the Vintner, for his own Safety, judged it proper to turn him out of his House; whereupon the Mob renewed their Exclamations against him, with the Appellations of Wizard, Conjuror and Devil: But at last, perceiving the Approach of a Guard, sent by the Lord-Mayor to his Rescue, they fell upon and beat the Doctor in such a cruel and barbarous Manner, that he was by the said Guard taken up for dead, and carried to the Compter, where he soon after expired. But the Author of a Treatise, intitled, The Forfeiture of the City Charters, gives a different Account of this Affair, and, fixing the Scene of this Tragedy on the fourteenth of July, writes, that as the Doctor passed thro' Cheapside, he was attacked as above-mentioned, which forced him to seek a Retreat down Wood-Street, and that he was there screened from the Fury of the Mob in a House, till they had broken all the Windows, and forced the Door; and then, no Help coming to the Relief of the Doctor, the Housekeeper was obliged to deliver him up to save the Spoiling of his Goods.

The Murder of Dr.
Lamb.

When the Rabble had got him into their Hands, some took him by the Legs, and others by the Arms, and so dragging him along the Streets, cried, Lamb, Lamb, the Conjuror, the Conjuror; every one kicking and striking him that were nearest.

Whilst this Tumult lasted, and the City was in an Uproar, the News of what had passed came to the King's Ear; who immediately ordered his Guard to make ready, and, taking some of the chief Nobility, he came in Person to appease the Tumult: In St. Paul's Church-yard he met the inhumane Villains dragging the Doctor along; and after the Knight-Marshal had proclaimed Silence, who was but ill-obeyed, the King, like a good Prince, mildly exhorted and persuaded them to keep his Peace, and deliver up the Doctor to be tried according to Law; and that, if his Offence, which they charged him with, should appear, he should be punished accordingly; commanding them to disperse and depart every one to his own Home: But the insolent

Varlets answered, That they had judged him already; and thereupon pulled him Limb from Limb; or, at least, so dislocated his Joints, that he instantly died.

The King seeing no Good was to be done with such people, and wanting Forces sufficient at that Time to chastize their Insolence, he returned to his Palace, and in a while after the Privy Council sent the following Letter to the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen and Sheriffs:

"Whereas we are given to understand, that by the Fury and Outrage of divers dissolute and disorderly Persons assembled together in great Numbers, without any Resistance made, or Course taken to suppress them (by the Magistrates to whom it appertained) one Lamb was, in a barbarous Manner, slain and murdered; wherewith his Majesty having been likewise made acquainted, as he is very sensible of the Scandal that may hereafter be cast upon the Peace and Government of the Realm in general, when the chief City thereof, and where his own Person is resident, should, by the Remissness and Neglect of Magistrates in the Execution of his Laws, suffer a Fact and Misdemeanor of so high a Nature to be committed, and to pass unpunished; so he is very highly displeased thereat, and hath therefore commanded us in his Name hereby straightly to charge and require your Lordship, &c. that with all Care and Diligence you do forthwith enquire out the principal Actors and Abettors therein, and to cause them to be apprehended and committed to Prison, and to be proceeded with, and punished in the severest Manner, that by the Laws of the Realm is provided against Offenders of so high a Nature. And so, &c."

By this Letter it evidently appears, that the Magistrates of the City had neglected their Duty in the Suppressing of this Riot, whatever has been said of this Affair, to cast an Odium upon the Prince then reigning, by making him by his Council assert a positive Falsity, in order to find an Opportunity to squeeze a large Sum of Money out of the Citizens: And it is exactly conformable to the Account transmitted by the last-cited Author, who was a Cotemporary with the Fact. Besides, we don't find that the Mayor, &c. attempted to acquit themselves of the Accusation; for all that is recorded in their Favour amounts to no more, than that the Lord-Mayor, in Obedience to the above-mentioned Letter, caused a strict Search to be made for detecting the Persons chiefly concerned in Lamb's Murder; but, not being able to discover any of them, the Mayor and Aldermen were commanded to attend the Council, where, after Examination, they were threatened, that, if they did not deliver up the principal Actors in the late Murder, their Charter should be confiscated; but even then there appeared no Intention to deliver up the Aggressors and Murderers: And the Report being made, that they could not be found, the City was amerced in a Fine of 6000 l. and on the sixteenth of the same Instant several were committed Prisoners that were present at the Riot; nor could the City appease the King's Anger, 'till such Time as they submitted themselves, and con-confessed their Sorrow for what had happened : Tho' Mr. Kennet was of Opinion, That in this whole Proceeding of the Privy Council the principal Thing intended was the Imposition of a Fine of six thousand Pounds upon the Citizens for their pretended Neglect ; which it seems was afterwards reduced to fifteen hundred Marks.

Soon after, three worthy Patriots, Samuel Vassal, Richard Chambers, and John Rolles, Merchants of this City, did vigorously oppose the new Impositions upon sundry sorts of Merchandize, by the arbitrary Command of the King, without the Consent of Parliament ; for which the Effects of the said Gentlemen were seized, and condemned to pay the Duties demanded ; and the Person of the first committed to Prison.

Ibid. Sir Richard Deane, the Lord-Mayor of this City, having seriously considered the general Prophanation of the Sabbath, he published the following Order for redressing the same :

“ Whereas I am credibly informed, that notwithstanding divers good Laws provided for the keeping of the Sabbath-day holy, according to the express Commandment of Almighty God, divers Inhabitants and other Persons of this City, and other Places, having no Respect of Duty towards God, and his Majesty, or his Laws, but in Contempt of them all, do commonly and of Custom greatly prophane the Sabbath-day, in buying, selling, uttering and vending their Wares and Commodities upon that Day for their private Gain : Also Innholders suffering Markets to be kept by Carriers, in most rude and prophane Manner, in selling Victuals to Hucksters, Chandlers, and all other Corners : Also Carriers, Carmen, Cloth-workers, Water-bearers, and Porters carrying of Burthens, and Watermen plying their Fares ; and divers others working in their ordinary Callings : And likewise, that I am further informed, that Vintners, Alehouse-keepers, Tobacco and Strong-water Sellers, greatly prophane the Sabbath-day, by suffering Company to sit drinking and bibbing in their Houses on that Day ; and likewise divers by Cursing and Swearing and such-like Behaviour, contrary to the express Commandment of Almighty God, his Majesty's Laws in that behalf, and all good Government : For the Reformation whereof, I do hereby require, and in his Majesty's Name straitly command all his Majesty's loving Subjects whatsoever, and also all Constables, Head-boroughs, Beadles, and all other Officers whatsoever, to be aiding and assisting to J. S. the Bearer hereof, in finding out and apprehending all and every such Person and Persons, as shall be found to offend in any of these Kinds ; and them and every of them to bring before me, or some other of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace, to answer to all such Matters as shall be objected against them, and to put in good Security for their good Behaviour. Whereof fail you not, as you or any of you will answer at your Peril. April 20, 1629.”

On the twenty-sixth of the same Month, eleven of the Nobility, Knights-Companions of the most noble Order of the Garter, richly apparelled each attended by fifty Servants in rich Liveries, came into the City, and honoured Sir James NUMB. XXVI.

Cambell, the Lord-Mayor, with their Company at Supper ; by whom they were sumptuously entertained.

At this Time the City greatly abounded in Riches and Splendor, such as former Ages were unacquainted with : Then it was beautiful to behold the glorious Appearance of Goldsmiths Shops in the South Row of Cheapside, which in a continued Course reached from the Old-Change to Bucklersbury, exclusive of four Shops only of other Trades in all that Space ; which occasioned the Privy Council, on the eighteenth of November, to make the following Order :

“ Forasmuch as his Majesty hath received Information of the Unseemliness and Deformity appearing in Cheapside, by reason that divers Men of mean Trades have Shops amongst the Goldsmiths ; which Disorder it is his Majesty's express Pleasure to have reformed ; whereas by Occasion that Sir Henry Finch, Knight, and some Aldermen, did this Day attend the Board upon other Business, there was the same Time also Mention made of the aforesaid Deformity.

“ It was thereupon thought fit, and accordingly ordered, that the two Lord Chief Justices, with such other Judges as they shall think meet to call unto them, shall consider what Statutes or Laws there are to enforce the Goldsmiths to plant themselves for the Use of their Trade in Cheapside and Lombard-Street, and the Parts adjacent, and thereupon return Certificate to the Board in Writing, with all convenient Expedition : Of which Order the said Lord Chief Justices are hereby prayed and required to take Notice, and to perform the same accordingly.”

Some of the Sheriffs Officers having arrested a Person in Fleet-Street, the Populace in a very riotous and tumultuous Manner attempted his Rescue ; but being strongly opposed by Constables, Watchmen and others, that were come to the Officers Assistance, a desperate Scuffle ensued ; wherein divers Persons were killed, and a great Number dangerously wounded. In the Interim, the Lord-Mayor, with an admirable Celerity, assembled a Party of the Trained-Bands, and marched thither, to suppress that dangerous Commotion ; but, being strongly resisted by the Populace, Proclamation was made for apprehending the Ring-leaders of the Sedition, and particularly Captain Vaughan, Henry Stamford, and one Ward, an Ensign ; divers whereof being apprehended, they were indicted and convicted of Murder, and Stamford, one of the chief Rioters, executed.

Notwithstanding the numerous Laws made for restraining People from incumbering the principal Streets of this City with Stalls and Stands ; yet at this Time they were more pestered than ever, by Bakers, Butchers, Poulterers, Chandlers, Fruiterers, Semplers, Grocers, Oyster, Herb, and Tripe-Women ; whereby many of the Inhabitants were obliged to remove elsewhere, to their great Damage : Wherefore, to remove all such Nuisances, and prevent such Practices for the future, 'twas by the Lord-Mayor and Common Council enacted, That no Inhabitant of the City whatsoever should presume to sell any thing in the Streets or Lanes of the City, upon Pain of forfeiting for the Ordinance of Star-Chamber for redressing Abuses of Vintners,

Bakers, &c.

Many great Abuses being committed by Vintners, Bakers, Chandlers, &c. in and about the City; for the redressing these Enormities, a Decree was made in the High Court of Star-Chamber, ordaining,

1. That, after Publication of the said Ordinance in the City of London, no Person whatsoever should presume to ingross any Sort of Provisions; and in particular, Chandlers were forbid to buy Corn, Grain, Meal, or Flour, to sell again at Market or elsewhere.

2. Considering the exorbitant Prices demanded by Vintners for dressing and selling Provisions, it was decreed, that for the future no Vintner shall sell any thing but Bread and Wine; nor shall permit any Flesh, or other Sorts of Provisions, to be brought into his House, to be there eaten by any of his Guests.

3. It being notorious, that many Frauds have been committed by Bakers, in selling sixteen Loaves to the Dozen, to those who retail the same, to the great Oppression of the Poor; it is therefore appointed, that thereafter no Baker shall sell Bread at any other Rate, than twelve, or at most thirteen to the Dozen.

4. Whereas the Keepers of Victualling-houses have greatly enhanced the Prices of their Ordinaries; therefore they are hereby strictly enjoined to take no more of each Guest for a Meal than two Shillings, including Wine and Beer; and of each Servant eight Pence. Which Regulation plainly evinces, that Provisions of all Sorts must then have been very dear.

5. All Victuallers and Vintners were likewise enjoined not to suffer in any of their Houses the Use of Cards, Dice, Tables, or other unlawful Games; nor to depend upon any Licence granted them upon that Account by the Groom-Porter; for all such are by this Decree declared null and void.

6. To prevent all Impositions by Inn-keepers, 'tis commanded, that no Inn-holder within the Cities of London or Westminster, or ten Miles of the same, shall take above six Pence in twenty-four Hours for Hay for one Horse, nor more than six Pence for a Peck of Oats: Which manifestly shews, that both Hay and Oats must then have been very dear.

7. It being apprehended, that great Inconveniencies would arise from the great Numbers of Livery-Stables lately set up in London, Westminster, and Southwark; it was ordained, that after the said Stable-keepers had consumed their Stocks of Hay and Oats, they should not presume to make any further Provision, but lay the Business entirely aside.

The King being returned from his Progress into Scotland, the Gentlemen of the four Inns of Court resolved to entertain their Majesties with a pompous Masquerade; which for Curiosity of Fancy, Excellency of Performance, and dazzling Splendor, far excelled every thing of the Kind that had ever been seen in England; the Charge whereof (according to a celebrated Author, who was one of the Committee appointed for the Preparation of that magnificent Shew) amounted to above twenty-one thousand Pounds. 'Tis not to be doubted but this enormous Sum (which, without a Peradventure, may justly be reckoned the greatest that ever was expended in this Kingdom on any Occasion, other than that of a Coronation) will whet the Desire of the Curious, to have the said magnificent, pompous, and incomparable Masquerade described; therefore, without regarding its Prolivity, I shall, for the Satisfaction of all such, insert an Account thereof, as published by the learned and ingenious Whitelocke, one of the above-mentioned Committee, and the Author of the celebrated Memorials:

"On Candlemas-Day in the Afternoon, the Masquers, Horsemen, Musicians, Dancers, and all that were Actors in this Business, according to Order, met at Ely-House in Holborn: There the grand Committee sat all Day, to order all Affairs; and when the Evening was come, all Things being in full Readiness, they began to set forth in this Order down Chancery-Lane to Whitball.

"The first that marched were twenty Footmen in scarlet Liveries with Silver Lace, each one having his Sword by his Side, a Baton in his Hand, and a Torch lighted in the other Hand; these were the Marshal's Men, who cleared the Streets, made way, and were all about the Marshal, waiting his Commands. After them, and sometimes in the midst of them, came the Marshal, then Mr. Darrel, afterwards knighted by the King; he was of Lincoln's-Inn, an extraordinary handsome, proper Gentleman; he was mounted upon one of the King's best Horses, and richest Saddles, and his own Habit was exceeding rich and glorious, his Horsemanship very gallant; and besides his Marshal's-Men; he had two Lacquies, who carried Torches by him, and a Page in Livery that went by him, carrying his Cloak.

"After him followed one hundred Gentlemen of the Inns of Court, twenty-five chosen out of each House, of the most proper and handsome young Gentlemen of the Societies; every one of them was gallantly mounted on the best Horses, and with the best Furniture, that the King's Stable and the Stables of all the Noblemen in Town would afford; and they were forward on this Occasion to lend them to the Inns of Court.

"Every one of these hundred Gentlemen were in very rich Cloaths, scarce any thing but Gold and Silver Lace to be seen of them; and each Gentleman had a Page and two Lacquies waiting on him in his Livery by his Horse's Side: The Lacquies carried Torches, and the Page his Master's Cloak. The Richness of their Apparel and Furniture glittering by the Light of a Multitude of Torches attending on them, with the Motion and Stirring of their mettled Horses, and the many and various gay Liveries of their Servants, but especially the personal Beauty and Gallantry of the handsome young Gentlemen, made the most glorious and splendid Appearance that ever was beheld in England.

"After the Horsemen, came the Antimasquers: And as the Horsemen had their Musick, about

"about a dozen of the best Trumpeters proper
"for them, and in their Livery, sounding before "them; so the first Antimasque, being of Crip"ples and Beggars on Horseback, had their
"Musick of Keys and Tongs, and the like,
"snapping, and yet playing in a Concert before
"them.

"These Beggars were also mounted, but
"on the poorest, leanest Jades that could be "gotten out of the Dirt-Carts, or elsewhere;
"and the Variety and Change from such no"ble Musick and gallant Horses as went be"fore them, unto their proper Musick and
"pitiful Horses, made both of them the more "pleasing.

"The Habits and Properties of these Crip-
"ples and Beggars were most ingeniously fitted
"(as of all the rest) by the Commissioners
"Direction; wherein (as in the whole Business)
"Mr. Attorney Ney, Sir John Finch, Sir Ed"ward Herbert, and Mr. Selden, those great and "eminent Persons, as all the rest of the "Committee, had often Meetings, and took "extraordinary Care and Pains in the ordering
"of this Business, and it seemed a Pleasure to
"them.

"After the Beggars Antimasque came Men
"on Horseback, playing upon Pipes, Whistles,
"and Instruments, sounding Notes like those of "Birds of all Sorts, and in excellent Concert,
"and were followed by the Antimasque of Birds:
"This was an Owl in an Ivy-Bush, with many
"several Sorts of other Birds, in a Cluster about
"the Owl, gazing, as it were, upon her. These "were little Boys put in Covers of the Shapes
"of those Birds, rarely fitted, and sitting on "small Horses, with Footmen going by them,
"with Torches in their Hands; and here
"were some besides to look unto the Chil"dren; and this was very pleasant to the Be-
"holders.

"After this Antimasque came other Musi"cians on Horseback, playing upon Bagpipes,
"Hornpipes, and such Kind of Northern Mu-
"sick, speaking the following Antimasque of "Projectors to be of the Scotch and North"ern Quarters; and these, as all the rest,
"had many Footmen with Torches waiting on
"them.

"First in this Antimasque rode a Fellow
"upon a little Horse, with a great Bit in his "Mouth, and upon the Man's Head was a "Bit, with Headstall and Reins fastened, and "signified a Projector, who begged a Patent,
"that none in the Kingdom might ride their "Horses, but with such Bits as they should buy
"of him.

"Then came another Fellow with a Bunch
"of Carrots upon his Head, and a Capon
"upon his Fift, describing a Projector who "begged a Patent of Monopoly, as the first "Inventor of the Art to feed Capons fat with "Carrots; and that none but himself should "make use of that Invention, and have the Pri"vilege for fourteen Years, according to the "Statute.

"Several other Projectors were in like Manner
"perforated in this Antimasque; and it pleased
"the Spectators the more, because by it an Information was covertly given to the King of "the Unfitness and Ridiculousness of these Pro"jects against the Law; and the Attorney Ney,

"who had most Knowledge of them, had a "great Hand in this Antimasque of the Pro"jectors.

"After this, and the rest of the Antimasques
"were past, all which are not here remembered,
"there came six of the chief Musicians on Horse"back upon Foot-Cloths, and in the Habits of "Heathen Priests, and Footmen carrying of "Torches by them.

"After these Musicians followed a large, open
"Chariot, drawn with six brave Horses, with "large Plumes of Feathers on their Heads and "Buttocks; the Coachman and Postillion in rich
"antique Liveries. In the Chariot were about a "dozen Persons, in several Habits of Gods and "Goddesses, and by them many Footmen on all "Sides bearing Torches.

"After this Chariot followed six more of the "Musicians on Horseback, with Foot-cloths, ha-
"bited, and attended with Torches, as the former
"were.

"After them came another large open Chariot
"like the former, drawn with six gallant Horses,
"with Feathers, Liveries, and Torches, as the "other had.

"These Chariots were made purposely for this "Occasion; and in this latter Chariot were about "a dozen Musicians in like Habit (but all with "some Variety and Distinction) as those in the "first Chariot.

"These going immediately before the Grand
"Masquers Chariots, played upon excellent and
"loud Musick all the Way as they went.

"After this Chariot came six more Musicians
"on Foot-Cloth Horses, habited and attended as
"the other.

"Then came the first Chariot of the Grand
"Masquers, which was not so large as those
"that went before, but most curiously framed,
"carved, and painted with exquisite Art, and "purposely for this Service and Occasion. The "Form of it was after that of the Roman Tri"umphant Chariots, as near as could be ga"thered by some old Prints and Pictures extant
"of them. The Seats in it were made of an oval "Form in the back End of the Chariot, so "that there was no Precedence in them, and
"the Faces of all that sat in it might be seen
"together.

"The Colours of the first Chariot were Silver
"and Crimson, given by the Lot to Gray's-Inn,
"as I remember. The Chariot was all over "painted richly with these Colours, even the "Wheels of it most artificially laid on; and the "carved Work of it was as curious for that Art,
"and it made a stately Show. It was drawn by "four Horses all on Breast, and they were co"vered to their Heels all over with Cloth of "Tissue, of the Colours of Crimson and Silver,
"huge Plumes of red and white Feathers on "their Heads and Buttocks. The Coachman's "Cap and Feather, his long Coat, and his
