SPENCER'S ALBUMENIZED PAPER.

The demand for this paper, the excellence and uniformity of which is now well-known, has rendered an enlargement of Premises for its manufacture absolutely necessary. Mr. SPENCER has therefore recently added the adjoining house to his Establishment, and has, where practicable, adapted Machinery to take the place of hand-labour—a step that has materially improved the quality of the Paper.

It is made with perfectly fresh and pure Albumen, and is therefore especially suited for Toning in a Neutral or slightly Alkaline Gold Bath.

PREFACE.

In the Great Exhibition of 1851, Photography had not sufficiently advanced to be placed in a separate Class,—Photographs, and the apparatus used in producing them, were included among Philosophical Instruments. It has now a class of itself (XIV). The Art was, in 1851, represented by a large number of Daguerreotypes, some Talbottypes, or Sun Pictures, as they were then frequently termed, and by a few specimens of the Albumen process on glass. The Collodion process, to which is due the enormous development which has taken place since 1851, was not known previously to the opening of the Exhibition in that year. Photographers were anxiously looking for some material which should be free from the defects of the paper on which the Talbotype negatives were taken. Albumen on glass had been tried with some success. Archer turned his attention to the use of a film of Collodion, and was experimenting upon it previous to the opening of the Exhibition, and Dr. Diamond, in company with him, took a portrait with some Collodion given him by that gentleman, as early as September, 1850. A Collodion portrait, taken by Mr. Archer, assisted by Messrs. Fry and Horne, early in May, 1851, and what is termed a positive picture,† was placed in Messrs. Horne and Thornthwaite's case in the Exhibition, with their Daguerreotype and Talbotype apparatus. Towards the end of June in that year, Mr. Rippingham, by permission, placed in this case some prints from negative Collodion plates, the Collodion for the purpose having been given him by Mr. Archer. The description of the process was published by Archer, in March, 1851, when it appeared in "The Chemist." In the Jury report, no other notice is taken of these pictures than that "Rippingham has exhibited several Talbottypes, being a series of untouched positives from Collodion negatives on plate-glass." No medal was given—indeed no one could have then foreseen the influence which these experiments were to exercise on the Photographic Art—and the Jury may well be pardoned for passing them over. In a short time, however, the simplicity of the process and the beauty of the results caused its almost universal adoption, though numerous improvements had, in the mean time, been made in the negative paper processes, more especially that known as the Wax Paper process, invented by Le Gray.

The Photographs in the present collection are, with some few exceptions, all produced by the Collodion process. The exceptions are noted in the Catalogue, and they consist of a few Daguerreotypes (Nos. 900 to 905) Views of the International Exhibition of 1851, Talbottypes (Nos. 101, 423, 436 to 444), pictures from Albumen negatives on glass (Nos. 7, 8, 9, 10, 101), and from Wax Paper negatives (Nos. 134, 174*, 180, 181, 184 to 195, 199, 200, 203 to 206, 564 to 566), the others being modifications of the Collodion process, known as dry or preservative processes, the object being to set the operator free from the encumbrance of tents or other contrivances necessary when working with Collodion away from home. Nos. 16*, 29, 88, 91, 103, 104, 105, 113 to 118, 124 to 126, 133, 139, 143 to 145, 296, 297, 308, 333, 347, 369, 388, 390, 428, 461, 465, 479, 480, 502*, 651, 652, 688, 705 to 707, 725, 729 to 731, 746 to 749, 751 to 753, refer to specimens produced by such processes.

The early positive prints on paper were produced by the Nitrate of Silver process, still in use, but were untuned and of a reddish colour, and were liable to fade. The toning process first adopted gave more agreeable tints to the pictures, but rendered them even more liable to fade than before, though, with very careful manipulation and good washing, there are pictures which, under favourable conditions, have resisted change. Photographers and Chemists have endeavoured to investigate the causes of this change, and the alkaline gold toning process now in use produces pictures which, if not absolutely permanent under every possible condition, are, with ordinary care, sufficiently so for all practical purposes. Many experiments have been made to use other materials for printing than nitrate of silver; a series of such experiments is shown in Nos. 778 to 783, 785 to 788, and 794 to 797. The silver process, however, is that universally adopted by Photographers. Many attempts have been made, with more or less success, to print from the negative in carbon, the basis of printer's ink, or other indestructible materials, and thus give the Photograph the permanence of a print from an engraved plate. This has been sought to be accomplished either by producing photographically an engraved metal plate or prepared lithographic stone, from which prints may be taken in the ordinary way with printer's ink, or by so treating the paper chemically that when submitted to the action of light under a positive or negative print, as the case may be, carbon or some other finely-divided material shall adhere only where required to form the picture. Fox Talbot shows photographic etchings, both on copper and steel, entirely produced by Photography, and etching, but untouched by the graver (Nos. 507 to 532). Paul Pretsch calls to the aid of Photography the electrotype process, and shows specimens obtained by these processes combined. He produces not only the engraved plate, but also blocks for surface printing, capable of being used with letter-press; his specimens are numbered 39 to 42, 45 to 48, 161, 162, 505, 506, and 539 to 544.† Sir Henry James, the Director-General of the Ordnance Survey, also shows a process which he terms Photozincography, by which the Photograph becomes transferred to a zinc plate, and can thus be multiplied in printing ink. This process is used by the Government in the Ordnance Survey for the production of maps, plans, etc., enlarged or reduced in the camera, and great economy both in time and money is effected by it. Specimens of it, including a modification termed Photopyrography, as well as of Photolithography, and showing its adaptation to the reproduction of engravings, printed matter, and MSS., whether old or modern, are seen in Nos. 69 to 77. Pouncey (No. 44), Cecil Walker and Son (No. 547), and Joubert (on the table at the east end of room, under the name of Phototypes), exhibit specimens of direct printing in carbon from the photograph, without the intervention of any metallic plate or stone. The basis of all these processes is the peculiar action which light causes upon a mixture of gelatine and bichromate of potash. Contencin (No. 62), Field (78), and Ramage (504), show specimens of Photolithography, the image being impressed photographically on the stone. Field's process is based on the special action of light on a surface of bitumen of Judea covering the stone, an action investigated in the early days of Photography by Daguerre, who subsequently abandoned it for that process which now goes by his name.

† Very few pictures of this character are shown in the present Exhibition, though the process is that by which the cheap portraits, so common now-a-days, are taken. Some may be seen in frame No. 43.

The printing of positive transparent pictures on glass was, for a long time, exclusively practised in France; it is now done in England, and specimens are shown on the tables of Mr. Breeze and of Messrs. Negretti and Zambra. A statue in one of Mr. Breeze's pictures is taken by moonlight. Mr. Joubert, on a table at the east end of the room, shows specimens of photographs in vitrifiable colours burnt in on glass, both monochrome and polychrome. Microscopic Photography, i.e., microscopic objects enlarged, is shown by Nos. 545, 546, and 548 to 563, whilst Nos. 17, 18, 22*, and 927, refer to microscopic photographs, or photographs which require the aid of the microscope to inspect them. Enlargements by the solar camera are represented in Nos. 166, 277, 278, 282, 283, 288, 294, 295, 645, 646, 650, 657, and 658; whilst Warner (102, 106, 123, and 127) shows architectural and other views printed from enlarged negatives.

On the south wall and on tables are exhibited the painted and coloured photographs and stereoscopic Daguerreotypes.

† Some of these are entirely untouched with the graver, and some have been so assisted. They are distinguished by labels on the specimens.

EXHIBITED IN CLASS 14, No. 3,166.

Model Drawing-room Stereoscope.

Among the many favourable notices of

SWAN'S CLAIRVOYANT STEREOSCOPE.

Are included the following:—

"Decidedly the best that have yet been manufactured."—Photographic Notes.
 "This instrument has the following advantages over those in common use,—it suits equally for examining opaques and transparencies, paper and glass impressions; it can be used to cover plates bound in books; it adapts itself to all angles of sight and focal lengths; it is easy to hold in the hand, and admits of light with perfect freedom; it is pretty, compact, and can be put away out of sight."—Athenaeum.
 "This will probably, for all ordinary purposes, supersede the less handy forms which are now in use."—Morning Star.

Prices, in highly-finished walnut, and lined with rich silk velvet, £1 10s. complete, or plain-finished, £1 1s., including handsome lock-and-key case, capable of containing the Stereoscope and 100 Stereoscopic Slides, in less than one half the space usually required.

Whiting's Photochemical Cameras (Registered.)

W. WHITING and SONS can, with the utmost confidence, recommend these PORTABLE CAMERAS to the notice of Tourists, Amateurs, and Professional Photographers, as by their use first-class Pictures (either positive or negative) can be taken in the field or elsewhere, on wet Collodion Plates, and developed and examined in the open light, without the inconvenience and absurdity of being shut up in a dark room, smothered in a tent, or of having to put your head in a bag; and with the especial advantage to the Tourist, that if on examination the negative is found to be imperfect, others can be then and there taken, until a satisfactory one is obtained, thereby enabling the operator to insure a good Picture before leaving the spot, which, be it observed, can never be the case with the Dry Plate Photographer, who is unable to discover an error until he has left the field, and consequently too late to correct it.

At the last meeting of the London Photographic Society, presided over by Peter Le Neve Foster, Esq., it was suggested by Mr. Vernon Heath, that "the future of Landscape Photography would lie in taking small pictures, for the purpose of after enlargement." Now, if this be true, and there are many arguments in its favour, an inspection of these PHOTOCHEMICAL CAMERAS will show that nothing could be better adapted for the purpose.

To be obtained, with full instructions for use, only of

J. H. DALLMEYER, OPTICIAN,

(SON-IN-LAW AND PUPIL OF THE LATE ANDREW ROSS.)

Respectfully begs to call the attention of Photographers and the Public to his several New and Improved Photographic Lenses, as described in the various Photographic Journals.

DALLMEYER'S NEW TRIPLE ACHROMATIC LENS,

(INTRODUCED AUGUST, 1860).

Is acknowledged to be the most perfect Lens for Architectural Views, Copying, &c. It reproduces straight marginal lines, gives perfect definition at the centre and margin of the picture, and includes a large angle of view.

"In Lenses, the Year has been marked by the introduction of Mr. Dallmeyer's Triple Combination. The definition afforded by this Lens in Copying is unexceptionable, and the lines are perfectly free from distortion."—See Annual Report of the Manchester Photographic Society (British Journal of Photography, Oct. 15, 1861).

For its LANDSCAPE capabilities, reference need only be made to the various favourable notices of Mr. Wilson's pictures, taken with the No. 1 Triple Achromatic Lens of  $7\frac{3}{4}$  in. (equivalent) focus length. The Instantaneous Views, taken with the same Lens, full aperture, on the same size plate, viz.,  $7 \times 4\frac{1}{2}$ , prove its rapidity of action.

DALLMEYER'S NEW STEREOSCOPIC LENS,

(Introduced May, 1860), constructed for INSTANTANEOUS Views, Stereoscopic Portraits, Interiors, &c. (free from Distortion). Focal length,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  in. ( $4\frac{4}{16}$  equivalent). The front Combination can be used alone as an ordinary view lens, in the same mounting.

The Instantaneous Views, exhibited in the French Exhibition by MM. Ferrier and Soulier, were taken with the above Lens.—See Le Moniteur or Photographic News, May 24. Also some Instantaneous Views of Paris, by Mr. England, may be seen at 19, Bloomsbury-street.

DALLMEYER'S INSTANTANEOUS SHUTTER

Is described in the Photographic Journal, January 15, 1860. Also, another New Shutter, in the same paper, November 15, 1861.

DALLMEYER'S QUICK-ACTING PORTRAIT LENSES,

(See Catalogue.)

Among which may be mentioned No. 1 B, diameter of combinations, 2 in.; back focus,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  in.; and No. 2 B, diameter of combination  $2\frac{3}{4}$  in., back focus, 6 in., especially constructed for

CARTES DE VISITE PORTRAITS,

"We have seen these (Carte de Visite) pictures taken almost instantaneously by a small Lens, made by Mr. Dallmeyer, we believe, specially for this kind of work.—Photographic Journal, August 15, 1861.

AN IMPROVED BINOCULAR CAMERA,

WITH RACK AND PINION, OR ENDLESS-SCREW MOVEMENTS.

Capable of focusing from  $3\frac{1}{2}$  to 7 inches. This Camera is very portable, and having a (moveable) central partition, can be used either for Stereoscopic Views, Cartes de Visite, or, when furnished with No. 1 Triple Achromatic Lens, focus 7 in., for Single Pictures on the full-sized plate, viz.,  $7\frac{1}{4} \times 4\frac{1}{2}$ . J. H. D. is indebted to Mr. Wilson for the suggestion

Astronomical Telescopes,

(See "Trophy.")

MICROSCOPES AND MICROSCOPIC OBJECT GLASSES, &c., &c.

(See Class XIV.)

VOIGTLÄNDER'S LENSES.

The Reduction of the Import Duty in 1860, combined with the great economy of labour effected by the erection of improved machinery, has enabled Messrs. VOIGTLÄNDER and SON to offer their New Lenses (with the Visual and Chemical Foci coincident) at prices considerably lower than any of the best English makers, thus securing to Photographers the most perfect Instrument (every Lens being guaranteed) at the cost of a common one.

VOIGTLÄNDER'S NEW CARTE DE VISITE LENS

Is immeasurably superior to all others for its great light and sharpness. Its Pictures, samples of which will be sent on application) are really perfect specimens of the Photographic Art. It is also the best Lens for taking Portraits of Children.
