- 109 Owen (R.) MR. OWEN'S PROPOSED ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE DISTRESSED WORKING CLASSES, Shown to be Consistant with Sound Principles of Political Economy: in Three Letters Addressed to Arthur Ricardo, 102 pages, sm. 8vo, R. and A. Taylor, 1819 £40
 Not in Sabin.
 Owen's plans included self-support for the unemployed and industrious poor, the advantageous employment of capital, a gradual increase of the comforts of the poor, etc., through villages of unity and co-operation; he was also largely instrumental in bringing about the Factory Act of 1819. Includes ten pages of extracts of a letter from Mr. Courtauld who had visited the settlement of Harmony, originally established in Pennsylvania, but recently removed and now in a flourishing condition in Indiana. This German co-operative settlement had been formed by a German Minister, George Rabb, who had brought with him some hundreds of labourers from Germany. Includes also a long account of the success of Mrs. Elizabeth Fry in reforming the female prisoners in Newgate.
 There is a 16-page account of the work of David Dale, the industrialist and philanthropist who had started cotton mills at New Lanark and who employed five hundred children mainly from the workhouses and charities of Edinburgh. He housed, fed, clothed and educated these children.

This is a success story in more ways than one. From a little factory staffed by twelve men Joseph Rowntree's business expanded, in the space of fifty-five years, into a concern which employed over seven thousand people. But the true nature of this achievement cannot be measured by statistics. He was a pioneer in a world where dark shadows lingered, and where an "unbridled scramble for the good things of life" was still the policy of many employers of labour. In the uncompromising atmosphere of the nineteenth century factory he upheld certain traditions inherited from an older and simpler commercial system, and at the same time he anticipated the needs of the future with startling accuracy.

"The Corporation of Trinity House of Deptford Strand" is an ancient foundation whose charter, granted by Henry VIII dates back to 1514. Today its headquarters are in the Trinity House of Tower Hill in the City of London.
The Corporation's broad objectives are still the same as they have always been, the advancement of navigation, the welfare of seamen and their families. This book shows how these aims are realised by examining the complex organisation which lies behind the fine service given by pilots, lighthouse and lightship men all round our shores. With appendices of List of Lighthouses and Light Vessels, and some notes on Uniforms.

- 729 Lewis (Michael) ENGLAND'S SEA-OFFICERS, the Story of the Naval Profession, frontispiece and illusts., 1948 (Published at 15s) Offered at 7s 6d
England's Sea Officers is the story of the Naval Profession, its origins, and its growth from the earliest times to the present day. Its heroes are not individuals like Nelson and Blake, but the Admiral, the Captain and the Lieutenant, the Engineer, the Surgeon, the Chaplain, the Paymaster, etc. It reveals the whole English process of creation in all its fascinating illogicality. We see the machine being built up cog by cog, as the ranks and branches, even the Admiralty itself, develop through the centuries, not on any preconceived plan, but simply to meet the Nation's and Service's needs as they arose; and our peculiar genius "muddles through" as usual, to acquire a product which is admittedly the finest of its kind in the world—the modern Naval Officer.

- 867 Bremner (Frederick) TYPES OF THE INDIAN ARMY, 64 photographic plates reproduced in collotype, large oblong 4to, khaki cloth, September, 1964 £5 5s
This album was originally issued in a very limited number by Bremner at Quetta, 1897, and owing to climate and time few complete sets still exist. We have been unable to trace the sale of a set for many years. These plates were original photographs specially posed to show the various details of uniform. They are one of the few sources of information about the uniform as actually worn, as opposed to the more fanciful work of artists, that appear in some other books on this subject. Only a limited number of this reprint are to be issued and orders should be booked now.

- 986 Majdalany (F.) CASSINO, PORTRAIT OF A BATTLE, 13 plates 8 maps and a panoramic view of the battle area, 1957 (Published at £1 5s) Offered at 10s 6d
- Few battles of the second world war—or any war—compare with Cassino for epic grandeur, prolonged agony, and almost classical sense of tragedy. The gallantry of both sides during the long winter of heroic deadlock, the appalling natural difficulties that had to be endured, the historical significance of the ancient Benedictine Abbey which was unwittingly the battle's centrepiece, the storm of controversy over the Allies' reluctant decision to bomb it. The controversies that Cassino provoked are discussed in this book with frankness—but to the detachment of the historian Majdalany has added the insight of the artist, and the knowledge and understanding of the battle that could only come from participation in the events he describes.

Offered at 10s 6d

In this book Basil Collier shows that Wilson was not only one of the most selfless of public men but by far the ablest British soldier of his day—a brilliant military thinker whose tactical insight as a youngish brigade major in South Africa came near to averting the disaster of Spion Kop, and whose skill and judgement might, fourteen years later, have transformed the French Army's dream of beating the Germans into a reality had his advice been followed.

IMPORTANT REPRINT

Bremner (Frederick) TYPES OF THE INDIAN ARMY, 64 photographic plates reproduced in collotype, large oblong 4to, khaki cloth, September, 1964 £5 5s

This album was originally issued in a very limited number by Bremner in Quetta, 1897, and owing to climate and time few complete sets still exist. We have been unable to trace the sale of a set for many years.

These plates were original photographs specially posed to show the various details of uniform. They are one of the few sources of information about the uniform as actually worn, as opposed to the more fanciful work of artists, that appear in some other books on this subject.

Only a limited number of this reprint is to be issued and orders should be booked now.
