To the WORSHIPFUL

Dr. John Bateman,

Prefident of the Royal College of Phyficians in London.

SIR.

S Ì cannot think my felf fingular in remarking the growing Bolds nels of Quacks and Empirics, nor of the daily Mifchief thereby accruing to many of his Majefty's good Subjects, fo I dare fay, I have at leaft the tacit Confent and Approbation of every Member of our renowned College A 2 to

to my honest Endeavours for reforming their Abuses.

The Defign then, most learned Prefident, of the following Pages, is in all well-meaning [and a plainnefs of Stile fuited to their Understandings] to set before Mens Eyes, the great Danger they incur by meddling with any Medicines [let their Titles be never fo specious] fold in divers Parts of this City at Tradefmens Shops, and which are indeed no other than fo many Baits laid to defraud them of their Money, if not to cheat them of their Lives, which [as I have made appear] too many of them have done; and farther, that no great or powerful Medicine can be prepar'd, but that if taken in this way of publick Advertisement in News-Papers, or distributed by Bills, either given into their Hands, or pasted upon Posts, altho' the nicest Directions

Directions that can be, are deliver'd therewith, yet will the fame be liable to do more Harm than Good.

Thefe, Sir, with fome few of the Knavish Practices of our Modern Cheats and Physical Impostors, are drawn up in as short a Compass as I could, that our common People [being apprifed of the Danger] might the more easily avoid the Snare.

The common People did I fay? I might, I think, have included all Orders and Degrees of Men, fince we find oftentimes those of great Fortunes, and as great a Share of Understanding in other Matters, have been this way impos'd on as much as others.

Such, indeed, is the Unconcernednefs of most Men about Physical and Anatomical Subjects, and fo wild their Ideas of the Parts of their own Bodies, and the manner of A_3 any any Medicine working its Effects therein, that even the greateft Miftakes, both in the Theory as well as Practice, are fwallowed by them without Hefitation.

If it were not fo, with what Face could we believe some of our villainous Pretenders of this fort, upon fight of their Water, should confidently tell them [as I have had it from the Perfons Mouths that were fo beguil'd] their Livers being displaced were fallen upon their Lungs, occasioning thereby great straitness of their Breath, or that these latter were entirely wasted; that their Spleen and their Heart were grown together, giving rife to Melancholy, Wind, and Vapours, and flopping the Course of their Blood ; that their Kidneys were fallen quite down into their Bladders, and stop'd their Urine, with twenty the like Abfurdities; all which, which, however, by their Skill and Remedies, they undertake to help and rectify. In few Words, have we not, by common Conversation with them, great Reason to think that the Generality have little other Notion of their Stomach and Bowels, than the one meerly as a Bason to receive, the other as a Pipe or Pipes only to convey off what is left of the Contents, the reft being diftributed they know not where nor how; and thus if any Remora or Stop happens to the first, a lusty Vomit will Pump all up again, or a strong Horse-drench forcing down the Plug, clear the offending Matter lying in the way, and together carry all before it: Thus both the Lungs and Stomach, which they think [many of them] to have the fame common Funnel or Paffage, are sufficiently provided for; or if the Offence be got farther into the Blood, the A 4 the next work is to roaft the Patient with some burning Cordial or Spirits, or by some Theriacal Composition, stifling him in his Bed, to force an intempestive Sweat : Now he that can answer these three supposed Indications, is dubb'd [at least in his own Conceit] a famous Doctor ; and who can be long to feek for fomewhat that will Vomit, Purge, or Sweat, that can but purchafe either Culpeper or Salmon, I need not, I am fure, acquaint you; nor yet how fatally all three have been Experimented by fome impudent Intruders on the Medicinal Province.

The Cafe now ftanding thus, and a long Experience having made it manifeft, that a fimple Detection of the Fraud, without Coercion upon the Delinquent, is infufficient to rectify the Diforder, and fecure the People from being thus, as it were, facrificed facrificed by unskilful Pretenders to Phyfick. Unto whom is it we can apply for Redrefs, unlefs to you the learned Prefident of that Faculty, who together with the Cenfors, have full Power invefted in you by the Legiflature, conferr'd by Kings and Queens, his Majefty's Predeceffors, and confirm'd by the declar'd Opinions of the beft and greateft Judges and chief Juffices of their feveral Reigns.

This Power, I fay, you have to punifh all fuch dangerous Intermeddlers in Medicine with Fines and Imprifonment; and the fame being executed in fome latter Reigns, many Scores of these Empirical People were thereby fupprefs'd, to the great Advantage of the Publick, on whom many of them had most egregiously impofed: And furely, we of this prefent, have as much Reason as our Ancestors

Ancestors to complain of their Male-Practice : So Epidemical is this Plague become, and fo notorioully impudent the Venefici, that not content to Poison us in private, they have now their Magazines or Store-houfes in fundry Parts of the Town, where their Trumpery is deliver'd out, and when a Miscarriage [as often will] falls out; we are so far from having Redress, as to find it very difficult sometimes to know the Authors of our Ruin; yet these I must, notwithstanding, account the modefter Sort of our Modern Manslayers, whilft others more bare-faced, bid open Defiance to the Laws, some of them affuming the Title of Graduates of our own Universities; nay, one of them, not long fince, in a publick Bill, had Affurance to stile himself a regular Phyfician, as would appear by his Diploma from the College;

lege; when upon tracing his Original, I was told he had been a few Years before a Scrivener's Apprentice, and running away from his Mafter, the next News that was heard of him in the Family was this of his fetting up for a Doctor; but understanding there was an Order for his being Profecuted by the College, we have heard no more of this College Diploma, tho' ftill with his wonted Impudence and Effrontery he goes on to Practice, to the undoing of many unhappy Perfons falling into the Snare he is as continually laying for them. There are two others of the fame metall'd Fronts, have, I am inform'd, by fome Means or other [I must leave your honourable Board to enquire what] procur'd a University Seal, I think from Scotland, with which, the better to cloak their Knavery, they Vaunt

Vaunt and Strut, as if the M. D. would screen them from your Difpleasure, and justify their Pretenfions, which are fo trivially founded, that whenever it shall please you to send forth your Citation, or convene them, you will find them entirely ignorant of the Fundamenta Medicinæ; and tho' one of them in publick Bills undertakes to cure all, yet is he unable truly to define any one Diftemper. The rest of these stroling Vagrants being ask'd by what Authority they thus take upon them to meddle in Phyfick, will immediately produce their Patents, their Graces the A-B-'s, at least fome other their L-'s Licences for fo doing.

Now as it would be too harfh an Expression to let fall, or even to surmife, that these noble Personages should grant Licences to destroy deftroy Mankind, yet is it, tho' not intentionally their L—s Aim [far be fuch a Thought from us] certain however, fuch Mifchiefs have rifen thereby; and we are not wanting of Proof, that thefe Privileges have been employ'd to the depriving certain Perfons of their Lives, as furely [it may be not fo fuddenly] as if the fame had been taken away by the Sword or Piftol.

Once again then let us Requeft you, most worthy Prefident, no longer to stand by as an unconcern'd Spectator of these growing Mischiefs, but by the Aid of the learned Censors, to call for some, at least, of the most notorious Transgressors of your Statutes and the Laws of the Land; suppress these intolerable Licences, and vacate their surreptitious Diploma's, inflicting condign Punishment upon the the feveral Offenders; without which, in few Years time, the Subject will be at a Lofs where to apply for Help, and fall into the Hand of an ignorant Quack, whillt he thinks himfelf applying to an understanding Physician.

'Tis for you Gentlemen to Cure, whilft we can but difcover and lay open the Evil; and I dare fay, were but half a Score only made to feel your juft Indignation, the reft, like Owls, would fhun the Light, or betake themfelves to their firft and more proper Occupations; than which, certainly a more acceptable Piece of Service never was, nor can be done for a Commonwealth.

So fenfible hereof was the Government in that peaceable Reign of King James I. that [as your Predeceffor Dr. Goodall recites in his Hiftory of the College] a Warrant

Warrant was fent down from the Council to all Magistrates in the City of London, to take up all reputed Empirics and Quacks, with other Offenders of this Nature, and to bring them before the Cenfors, to fee how they were qualified to be trufted either with the Subjects Limbs or Lives. Some Years after which, the King himself sent his Letters, both to the Prefident, as well as to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, of the like Import, viz. to take Care that the Citizens of London, might not, by any Wiles or Snares [as now a-days] laid for them by broken Tradesmen, or other Impostors, calling themselves Doctors, fall a Prey to their Ignorance; but that the Prefident should punish them, according to the Power and Authority he himfelf had granted them; which Power, till it shall please you to exert for the the just Chastisement of some notorious Offenders [all I can do more towards the reforming the Grievance] it may not be amiss that I should here transcribe, that those who have never seen your Charters, nor the Acts by which the Royal Conceffions therein granted, have been made and eftablish'd as so many Statute Laws, may have no Cause to plead Ignorance, either of the Necessity of your Seal to a Licence [if they are upon Examination found qualify'd for] or the Penalty they incur of Practifing without the fame.

To this Purpole then, among many other Privileges and Immunities granted to the Royal College of Phylicians in London, lefs material to enumerate in this Place, I find these following, more particularly relating to the Subject in hand, Enacted.

1. That

1. That no Perfon prefume to practife Physic within the City of London, and seven Miles adjacent, without License from the College, under the Penalty of Forfeiture of ten Pounds per Month, during the Time of such Practice, with Imprisonment till such Sum or Sums are paid as aforesaid.

2. That no Person presume to practise in any part of the Kingdom, except Graduates of Oxford or Cambridge, under Penalty of five Pounds per Month, with Imprisonment still as before.

3. That whoever shall administer any dangerous Drug or Medicine, whereby Life may be endanger'd, shall likewise forfeit ten Pounds, and be imprisoned fourteen Days, or after, till such Fine is satisfy'd.

These you know, Sir, are some of the Privileges which have been granted to this illustrious Body; and when some refractory Persons [as I a find find there have been many] have ftood the Conteft with them, the College I perceive have ftill juftified their Power, and caft their Adverfaries, the Lord Chief Juftice giving Judgment on this wife, (viz.)

That the College have a sufficient Authority to Fine and Imprison, and that he himself could not Bail or Deliver their Prisoner.

That no Licence, whether from Arch-Bishop or Bishop, or other Personage whatever, is valid in Law, or can justify the Person practising, who has not the College Seal; and therefore [so little Pretence has any common Empiric to this Privilege] that no Graduate, even of our own Universities, however Learned a Physician or Doctor, may practise in London, or within seven Miles, without suff being examin'd by the College, and obtaining of their Licence.

This

This laft, however fufficiently determined [as one might have thought] by former Recoveries, has not wanted a late Dispute, and a like Verdict in the College favour; but paffing that which in all likelihood may never be any more difputed, I shall crave your Patience, whilft for the farther Information of these bold Intruders upon the Phyficians Office, I give them to understand what is, or has been imply'd by Practice, and the feveral forts of Offenders, that heretofore were punish'd for the same.

In this number, befides those, who openly acknowledg'd their giving of Medicines, I find feveral pretending to beal by Charms, and other fuch like Fooleries; thus in King Edward the VIth's Reign, one Grig, a Poulterer in Surry, being hereof Convicted, and having after this manner imposed on several People, was by an Ora 2 der der of Council, set on a Scaffold in the Town of Croydon, with a Paper on his Breast, denoting his Crime of Cheating by means of these hypocritical Actions; after that, he was set on a Pillory in the Fair-time in Southwark, when the Lord Mayor and Aldermen riding through, the said Impostor ask'd publick Forgivenes.

Others under the Pretence of being feventh Sons, either falle, or truly fo; and thus in the Reign of King Charles I. an Order was fent from above to the College, to take into their Examination one Leveret a Gardiner, who under this Pretence had abused several ignorant Persons, some of them altho' of good Condition, and to punish him according to his Deserts; likewise one Blank, Chandler, and Burton, for Offences of the fame or the like Nature.

Others, under the Guise of Fortune-telling, Art Magick, belping to stolen stolen Goods, Gc. and thus one Lamb setting up for a Doctor [a bold and notorious Empiric] baving procur'd large Sums of Money of Persons of great Worth and Quality; showing them Delusions with a Chrystal; what Husbands or Wives they were to have; killing also divers People with bis dangerous Medicines, was at last so ingenious as to acknowledge be knew nothing at all of Physic, but to colour. bis Cheats, gave any thing he had read, or had been told of; when upon promise of Pardon, be confess'd as to his Supposed Magick and Conjuration, what he did were mere Tricks, Trifles and Fooleries, to gull the fimple, get Money, and make Gentlemen merry. One Read and Woodhouse were punish'd also for the like Practices.

Others again, for affuming to give Judgment upon Urine, or to find out all Diseases meerly by sight a 3 thereof; thereof; and thus one Jenkins was punish'd for cheating People after this manner; and a very remarkable Piece of Justice [I wish our Urine-Casters would take Notice of it] I find in Stow, executed upon one of these Offenders, who was set on Horseback, his Face to the Horse Tail, which he was to hold in his Hand instead of a Bridle; he had a Collar of Urinals about his Neck, a Whetstone on his Breast, and so being led in a mock Triumph through the City, was aster Banish'd.

Lastly, [that I may not detain you longer] feveral others for posting up Bills, and giving them about Streets, wherein they undertook to Cure one or more Distempers: Likewife for writing over their Doors, or putting out Advertisements, that at Juch Places such or such Medicines were to be fold for such or such Distempers; thus one Fairfax was fined and and imprison'd for doing great Damage to several People, mith what he call'd bis Aqua Cœlestis. One Anthony, mith his Aurum-potabile. One Foster, for selling a Powder for the Green Sickness. Arthur Dee, for advertising Medicines, with which he pretended the People might cure themselves of all Diseases. One Tenant a Urine-caster, for selling his Pills at fix Pounds a Pill, and other Medicines as extravagant, with which he had destroy'd several, and bubbled others out of large Sums of Money. One Aires for selling his purging Lozenges or Sugar-plumbs. One Hunt for setting up Bills at the Corners of the Streets for the cure of divers Diseases. One Phillips a Distiller, for selling bis Strong-waters with Notes of Directions what they were good for, and how. the People should take them.

These, with a large Catalogue of the like Offenders [both Men a 4 and

and Women] having kill'd fome with their improper and dangerous Medicines, and cheated others of their Money; fome to their utter undoing, were fin'd and imprison'd according to their Crimes, and all of them interdicted Practifing for the future. In a word, fo careful were these Guardians of the Subjects Welfare, as well as of their own Immunities, that strict Orders were sent to all the Seller's of physical Ales, to examine and see that no unwholfome or dangerous Drug was put therein, whereby the People might receive Prejudice, the Receipts being brought before them for their Approbation. Farthermore, I observe, that by the occasion of one Cromwell having poison'd his Master with Ratsbane convey'd into a Bolus, which was sent bim by the Apothecary; the College most bumbly intreated, that for the publick Safety, his Majesty would would isse out his Royal Proclamation, strictly forbidding all Grocers, Druggists, Apothecaries and Chymists, to sell any Arsenic, Quickfilver, Sublimate, Precipitate, Opium, Coloquintida, Scammony, Hellebore, or other dangerous Medicaments, to all Strangers or others who would not give in their Names, the places of their Abode, and the Occasions for which they wanted such fort of Drugs.

I have inferted thefe out of an hundred Examples I could produce, that all fuch kind of Offenders may be render'd inexcufable, whenever it fhall pleafe you to cite them to appear; and in thus doing, I have done no other than my bounden Duty, being fworn to make Prefentation of all illegal and dangerous Practitioners, in the Difcharge of which, I had once Thoughts of prefenting Nominatim fuch and fuch, but I think the Offenders themfelves felves have fpar'd me that trouble; the most impudent of the Crew [harden'd by your long forbearance] defying, as it were, your Statutes, and the Laws of the Land; presenting, as I may fay, themfelves, and in their printed Bills or daily Advertisements, publishing their Names, their Places of Habitation, and the Difeases they undertake to Cure ; nor, certainly, among the great Numbers, half ruin'd or quite undone, by some of them; can you want sufficient Evidence, in order to Conviction whenever it shall please your honourable Board to set about a Medicinal Reformation, which that you would be so pleased to do, is [as far as I have inform d my felf] the Defire of the Professors of that Faculty, in general, as much as SIR, in particular of, Your humble Servant.

Have faid so much in the foregoing Dedication, as to My present Undertain, as to there is less need of enlarging here; only it may be necessary I (bould remove one Objection

I conceive may be raised; that is, that professing my self a Physician, I may write out of prejudice to those who have intrench'd upon that Profession; or that finding my own particular Interest thereby lessen'd, I am readier to complain; to which I think a few Words may serve, and their Veracity must be left at the Readers Mercy. First then, I say, that none but a Physician can be Judge of the present Subject; 'lis not usual for People of Sense, at least, to chase a Scrivener to make their Cloaths, a Taylor their Will, or a Shoemaker for their Spiritual Guide; and how bow it happens that all three are often trusted. with your Bodies, is hard to account for. You will reply, perhaps, that either of them may be Masters of some valuable Re-ceipt, which has been found to do much Good in some particular Cases: Now the cheif Design of publishing this Treatise is to prove, that the most useful and noble Remedy, in the Hands of the unlearned, is always found to be the most dangerous, and that none but the Physician can judge rightly in what cases, and at what times of the Disease the same can be administer'd with Safety or Advantage. As for those, who in spight of all Reason or Demonstration, have let in an Opinion that the Art it self is a Cheat, and its Professors Men of ill Designs, I leave them to suffer under the Mi-Stake, and to Smart by some old Woman's Management, till they have purchas'd enough Experience to convince them of their Error; tho' I defire not that any should fall a Prey to their Ignorance : And that there are some such in the World, one might be induced to believe, by a late Advertisement I have seen divers times in Print, from an inconsiderate Pretender, who calls himself Gentleman but no Physician; as if for that owning he was never bred to Physic, he was the fitter Person to be entrusted with Men's Lives, and to undertake to Cure them of any Distempers. But,

To the READER.

But, Secondly, as to Interest, altho' I am of Opinion that the Interest of Physicians in general, and of my own in particular, is rather promoted than lessen'd by the Toleration of Quacks and Empirics, yet, I am satisfied; their Credit and Reputation is much injur'd thereby, the common People seldom applying themselves till the Case becomes desperate, and that they have been harrass'd to Death, as well by the improper Drenches given them by these fort of People, as by the Disease it self; when now they expect Miracles should be wrought for them: I do not fay that all of you are thus imposed on or misguided; but I can say upon a full assurance of the Truth, that many hundreds of Lives are yearly lost by the too late calling in of a Phylician, and some by the too early dismissing his Attendance before the Danger was over: Nor is it less true, however it may appear more strange, that we find many People in some lingring Distempers, trying the utmost of a Quack's Skill for more Months, than Weeks that they will be govern'd by the Judgment of the most learned Phylician; and in Acute, or Shorter Sicknesses the Case is still worse, for here the Mismanagement of the first Day or two is frequently irretrievable, and the Over-fight, or good Husbandry in saving of a Fee, or trying first of all some old Wife's Receipt, has cost many a poor Miser [what next to his Money

To the READER.

Money is of the dearest value to him, I mean] his Life.

And, Lastly, as to Prejudice, the Author folemnly declares he has none against the Perfon of any one of the accused; and that nothing but the Mischief redounding to his Fellow Citizens [the daily Consequence of their ignorant and evil Practices] with the Repute of the honourable Profession of Physic ingeneral, so much eclips'd thereby, have been the Motives to this Publication; for as to the pitiful or vain Hope, it might be thought he had taken up, of rendering himsfelf popular by so plain a Performance, the same he thinks sufficiently removed, by his Desire and Endeavour to remain, in this particular;

PART. I.

The ARGUMENT.

That there can be no Safety in relying upon any Remedy left up and down the Town to fell at Tradesmen's Shops, and publish'd by Bills dispersed for that Purpose, or Advertifements in the Prints; the same being ulually made up by ignorant People, who them (elves know not their real Use; or by profess'd Quacks, who for base and lordid Lucre only, expose and set the same to Sale.

S the Medicinal Profession upon Account of the Subject about which it is employ'd, has been at all times reckon'd the most useful; fo, by reason of the profound Judgment, as particularly by the Diffection of Humane Bodies, to be 10-inform'd throughly of the exact Scituation, the Nature and Uses of the several Parts, with as diligent an Enquiry into the feveral Properties and Vertues, as well of fimple as compounded Medicaments, also the Manner of their Operation when taken into our Bodies : For these Reasons, I say, it has been thought too the most difficult of all others to be acquir'd ; and therefore the great Proficients therein, have, by the Learned, been ufually, and defervedly, above all others, highly honour'd and efteem'd, even deify'd by fome of the Antients. Yet notwithstanding all this, if we furvey the Qualifications of fome pretending to this noble Profession, a Man would be apt to think it the easiest of all others; or that little else was thereto wanting but the Name of a Disease, without its Definition, and the turning over some Receipt-Book to find something there enter'd, as a Remedy for the fame.

That this is now the Foundation of fome Peoples Knowledge who ftile themfelves Phyficians, and are vulgarly alfo call'd Doctors, is no very difficult Matter to make appear; from whence I think the Confequence is as eafy, That there can be no Safety in taking fuch Remedies dies which they fet thus to Sale, as other forts of Merchandize or Trading Commodities.

Having made it my Business to get the best Intelligence I could, of the Authors of these Medicines, as well as of the Medicines themselves, I found some of them were profess'd Quacks, or forry Chymists, both alike ignorant in the Practice of Phyfick. Others fimple Tradefmen, and foolish but bold Women. Others again from fome Family Receipt, many Years toge-ther handed down as fome Sacred Relique, by way of Tradition, and kept within their own Walls, as they will tell you, for many Ages, till at length falling to the Share of one unwilling the mighty Treafure should be longer conceal'd, or rather for turning the Penny [which is termed the publick Good] the fame is expos'd, with fome hard Name, and a large Catalogue of its admirable Virtues. Others, lattly, transfer'd from some Physical Prescript on the Apothecary's File, or borrowed directly from the Dispensatory, with a Foreign Title, that [like other Things, far fetch'd and dearly paid for] it may pleafe the better. This Charge will be still farther made appear, when I come prefently to enquire into the Nature of these Remedies; in the mean time, I will appeal to all B 2 all Persons of a common Capacity, whether it be reasonable to venture their Lives [as too many of them do] upon so desperate and weak a Bottom.

If an idle Mechanick, or other Tradefman, having run out his Substance, and not caring to Work at his proper Occupation, procuring a Dispensatory, or some other Phylick Book in his Mother Tongue, shall thereby understand, that Gamboge, as it is called, and Elaterium, or the Juice of the Wild Cucumber, are the most powerful Remedies to cure a Dropsy; that the Root of Bryony will do the fame; that Hellebore is good for Melancholy, or Mad-People; Mountain-Flax for the Gout and Rheumatism; that Coloquintida, or the Bitter Apple will do mighty Feats for young Women; that Mercury will cure the French Pox; Opium give Ease; and the Glas of Antimony [fo call'd] will Vomit, and the like of fundry others dispers'd up and down in Phyfick Books: If, I fay, fuch a Perfon as this shall fet about [as perhaps the fame Book may instruct him] the making of Extracts or Electuaries, Pills, Tinctures, or Elixirs, giving each of them fome cramp Name, much more if he shall deliver them out as he buys them at the Druggists Shop, what is it that he may not accomplish! I would iay, fay, What Mischief is he not qualified to perpetrate? when, perhaps, the overpoise of the Scale is sufficient to do Execution upon some, and a Dose improportionate, to kill the stoutest Man in the Kingdom. At the best, if any Good can be done [as it may sometimes happen] it is like ten or twenty People's falling down a Precipice, where one or two only have the Luck to escape, and that not by their own Skill or Foresight, so much as some unforeseen Incident in their Favour.

If it be here objected, that you do not hear of many fuch Mischiefs befalling those who have bought these Remedies? I will readily allow the one half of them to be of fuch a Nature, as to do you neither Harm nor Good; and these seem only levell'd at your Pockets; whilft others are often found more dangerous to the Experimenters thereof. Thus, I obferve, among the Delinquents formerly call'd to an Account, and punish'd for such like Crimes, one John Not, and divers others, were Fin'd and Imprison'd for having kill'd sundry Persons, with one or other of the before-mention'd dangerous Medicines. Thomasine Scarlet, with other Women, for tampering with Mercurial and Antimonial Remedies, by which others were miserably tormented, and many destroy'd. William Forrefter, B 3 rester, a Priest, Simon Foreman, a pretended Astrologer, and one Trig a Shoemaker, but desperate bold Empiric, for the like Evil and fatal Practices with some Chimical Preparations. Another for giving Coloquintida, another Elaterium, by which some Persons were murther'd as it were upon the Spot. Another Priest, one Evans by Name, was Profecuted and Imprison'd, for that it was proved, instead of preaching the Gospel, he had run out of his Province and kill'd several Persons with his Antimonial Cup; and least you should think our prefent Medicine-makers more honeft, a late Author has inform'd us upon his own Knowledge, That a great Parcel of the courfest and foulest Horse-Aloes were even seen, and had been refused by several Farriers for fear of mischiefing their Beasts, was bought up by one of these wretched People, and made into Pills, left to sell at several Places for the most useful Purge, and suited to all Diseases and Constitutions: Under the fatal Operation of fome of which, I have feen my felf three feveral Perfons destroy'd miserably, and many more, with the utmost hazard of their Lives, escaping.

Indeed, were the Phyficians Province fo very eafy as thefe Empirics would induce the People to believe, and that there was nothing more neceffary than to find find a Name for their Diftempers, a Remedy [no matter what] call'd now adays a Specifick, is always ready at hand; for which, inftead of applying to Phyficians, we need but look into the News-Papers, and there we have plenty of all forts, let the Grievance be where it will, even from the falling of the Hair on the Top of the Head, to the Corns upon the Soles of our Feet or Toes.

And thus for the Difeases of the Head and Brain, we have Cephalick Tinctures and Head Pills of divers kinds : Apoplectick Spirits and Balsams; Vapour Drops, and Drops for the Palfy and Convultions; for the Eyes, we have Salves and Waters without Number, some of them as far fetch'd as Jerusalem, tho' they never travell'd perhaps a Mile from the Exchange ; not forgetting Goody Cater the Oyster-Woman's most excellent Oyntment, reveal'd to her Husband's great Grand-father in a Dream; for the Ears we have Drops for Deafnels; for the Tooth-ach, Tinctures, Sc. and to whiten them Dentifrices, or Powders from Morocco, China, and Japan; for the Mouth, Gargles and Washes, many; for the whole Face and Hands, Chymical Washballs, befides Pearls, Cream Balls, White-Pots, and Custards, some from Rome and Italy, others from Venice. You see how far these B 4 good good People travel even for Remedies to remove Freckles and clean our Faces. Come we now to the Break, and here we have Lozenges in every Corner for our Coughs and Colds, Tinctures and Elixirs for the Lungs; Tinctures likewife to fweeten the Breath, and for the Phthisick, and Afthma; Cordials of all forts for the Heart, and Rectificators of our Vitals, which if we believe the Quack Authors Account, will fupply the Place of all other Remedies whatever, being Specifical to the whole Body as well as particular Parts, Shall we defcend lower, and view the Difeafes of the Stomach, Spleen, Liver, Womb, Kidneys and Bladder? and here we have the Elixir Mag. Stom. with feveral Refiners thereupon; Pills, Powders and Tin-Etures, great Variety, for all forts of Obstructions; to drive away Melancholy from the Spleen, we have the Hypo-Drops; for the Stone, whether in the Reins or Bladder, we have Powders, Tinctures, Distill'd Waters, Volatile Cleansers, and Dissolution Salts; for Cholick and Gripes, Spirits, Tin-Etures, Waters, Pills, Elixirs, and what nor, some to ease us in a quarter of an Hour, others in half a Quarter ; but why fhould we stay fo long, when others will do the Feat in a Minute, especially if taken with a good round Dofe of Geneva 10 or of Lovage, called otherwise their Gripe-Water; for Worms we have Purging Tablets, or to tempt the poor Infant oftentimes to its Destruction, the Purging Sugar Plumbs: And to compleat this Mystery of Iniquity, if we want Heirs to our Estates, there are Vivisying Drops for Barrenness, not to mention some other peculiar Remedies suited to the Weaknesses or Infirmities of one kind or other, belonging to the Fair Sex.

But farther, if we take a view of other Diforders, more generally fupposed to have their Refidence in our Blood and Humours, we are here likewife amply furnish'd. In Acute Distempers we have Remedies for Fevers of other kinds, as well as for the Measles and Small-Pox. For Chronical, or more tedious ones, as the Scorvy Twhich, by the way is a Name we use for almost all Distempers that we know not what to make of] there are Elixirs, Spirits, Waters, Electuaries, and some others; for the Gout [that Difgrace to Phyficians] we have a Loal-heaver's Decoction, an Old-Woman's Plaister and Oyntment, a Tarpaulin's East India Oyl, besides the Atyla of a Quacking Surgeon, and twenty of the fame Goodnefs, i. e. good for nothing but to cheat Men, some of their Money, and others of their Lives; for the the Leprofy, a late Chymical Spirit, first Cofin to King Atyla aforefaid; for the Itch, Washes, Oyntments, Girdles, all very fafe, and harmless as the rankest Poylon, which too many, without any Preparation of their Bodies, running upon Headlong, have wofully experienc'd. But to proceed; we have Confumptions of all forts pluck'd up by the Roots : we have the King's-Evil cur'd by that eminent Phylico-Chyrurgical Parson, the Chast, Honest, and Pious Mr. V_____s the C____y.M_n, who has told you at least once a Week for these eight or ten Years [least you should forget him] that he lives in S-----1----; lastly, to bring up the Rear of this Rascally Regiment, you have Mother Bedlicot's Drink for the Dropsy and Jaundice; she, good Woman, used to open the Pews at St. Sepulchres, when she could spare time from visiting her Patients, and always took care that upon her Demife, the Secret should descend lineally to the next Heir, who I am told has the noble Legacy now in Possession.

It would be almost endless to enumerate the Remedies these honest Folks have invented to ease us, I should say to pick our Pockets, and therefore I shall quit my Hands of them for the present, after I have acquainted you with what is very necesfary fary [being a principal part of the Bait] that at the Head of each of thefe Remedies, I find fome very inviting Term, fuch as Angelical, Royal, Incomparable, Odoriferous, [tho' that implies no more than a Sir______ce] Specifick, [which is now become the univerfal Epithet, if it were but for a Remedy for broken-winded or founder'd Horfes; fo that in a little time we fhall doubtlefs have Specificks to kill Rats and Mice (about which their Time and Medicines would be better employ'd) as there are already for Lice and Fleas] and moft of them Admirable, Infallible, or Never-failing.

Upon fumming up this Bill of Fare, I found I had left out one of the moft material Difhes ferv'd up at this Phyfical Banquet, I mean the All-Sovereign or moft Famous Anodyne Necklace for Childrens Teeth, [you fee the Generofity of thefe good People extends even to our Infants as well as our felves] prepar'd out of St. Hugh's Bones. Now you muft know, this St. Hugh [miftake me not, I do not mean that St. Hugh that lies neglected up and down in the Coblers-Stalls] was a great Lover of young Children, used to dandle them in his Lap, Imack his Fingers and fing to them; and finding them pain'd in their Teeth, he would dip his Finger in Holy Holy Water, and so going gently over their Gums nine times, upon removing his faid Finger the last time, presently popt out the Tooth; he had, moreover, great Virtue in the same Finger in crossing the Forehead three times [for you must know there lies great ftress upon an odd Number] to drive away the Head-ach, and the like upon the Bellies of Women in Labour to forward their Delivery. Upon all which Confiderations, after his Decease, the good Man being Sainted, the Women came far and near to worship at his Tomb, with their Children when in danger from their Teeth; the great Belly'd for an easy Travel; and the Barren [for they had no Vivifying Drops in those Days] that they might conceive.

"Now it happen'd, that a young Lady having been long Married to an ancient "Knight [we mult not tell their Names] and without Children, fitting penfively one Summer Evening in her Garden, this St. Hugh appears, tells her who he was, that he knew her Wants, and that if fhe came to Chapel the fame Evening, and Vespers being over, conceal'd herfelf in fuch a part thereof till the People were all gone out, he would again appear to affift her; but, by the way, fome fay it was a Roguish Fryar that " laid

That fome of you who fcarce have Bread to feed them, or Cloaths to hide their Nakedness, should yet find Money to purchase these Baubles, these most absurd and ridiculous Trifles; that you should, I fay, be perswaded, a piece of a dry Stick, or other Vegetable, a Stone or a Bone [no matter which or what] should be able to Send forth such Salutiferous Emanations, or Steems into the Air, which roving up and down in quest of some proper Object on which to settle, but finding none elsewhere, at length return, and entering the Mouth or Nostrils, or some more fecret Passages of the Body, whirl about therein with the Blood, find out their Fellows, call a Council, and mustering up their Forces, strait hasten to relieve the beleaguer'd Gum; here some of them with their Pickaxes break Ground and sap the same; others lay the Train; others blow up the Fortress and make way for the imprison'd Tooth; or if this Allegory be thought too Foreign, some of them must rarefy or attenuate, others relax and mollify : others of them delate; and lastly, others must incide or Cut, by which, immediate Passage is 18070 now granted for the Eruption. This being the Story, I must say, Quis credat? credat Judaus, Papista credat.

Some doubtlefs, and perhaps juftly too, may think I have fpent too much of my Reader's Time in this Burlesque, and that there was no need of fo much Drollery? To which I shall only reply, that Fooleries of any kind are sometimes best answer'd in the Drolling Way, especially where the Argument will not suffer a very serious handling.

To fuch however as have ferious Scruples about this Affair, and fhall retort Matters of Fact, as they call them, and alledge the publick Teftimonies in Advertifements, which give an Account of the great Virtue experienced in thefe Beads; and the Numbers of Children recover'd by wearing of the fame; Women eafed in their Labours; others cured of Head-aths, Cramps, Convulfions, and the like; to thefe I fay I will now ferioufly make anfwer, and doubt not in the least to prove them no other than direct Frauds, and grofs Impofitions upon Ignorant and Credulous Perfons.

First then I fay, confidering the many thousands of these Toys that are fold, the Number is exceeding small, that we hear, of of those who have pretended any ways to Benefit thereby; as one perhaps in one hundred. And, Secondly, among thefe, we find the greater part of them misrepresented ; it being Customary for the Cheat, or his Accomplice, to draw up the Teftimonial, and the People [fuch as can] are to fign or fet their Mark, fometimes to they know not what, as I have had it from their own Mouths. Others have given Commissions at large to the Scout, or Meffenger, fent out to pick up Informations; and yet the Advertisement has come forth as if unknown to the Necklace-Merchant, by way of return of Thanks, or rather for a return of their Money, very likely with Interest, upon Condition of this Liberty of putting what they pleased into the News-Paper, with a Promife of vouching it, should there be any occasion. But, Thirdly, I find these Informations have been generally obtain'd, one way or other, among the Meaner, and some of them Necessitous Persons; or if of better Fashion, from Families where the Mother is much addicted to Superstition and old Wives Fables, and the Father about as Wife, if he knows any thing of the Matter. Fourthly, It is plain Argument of the great Want of New and almost Dayly Advertisements, rof С

[of which they could not ftand in need, if the Thing it felf were not in the Vulgar Phrafe, a Bite] for that once in a Month, fometimes after three or four, we find an old Story trumpt up, as if just then fallen out; among fome of which, finding my felf concern'd, I shall here deliver the Cafe truly.

A poor Woman brought her Child to me, then labouring under what we call a Symptomatic Fever; looking into its Mouth, I found two of the upper Gums full spread, highly inflam'd, and the Teeth just ready to break through ; however, by reafon of the Fever and great Fluxion, I prefcrib'd, among other Remedies, Bleeding, Bliftering, and above all, that they would fend for a Surgeon, to cut into the affected Gums, and fet at Liberty the Teeth, which gave rife to this Fever, as I had reafon thus to conjecture: But the foolifhly fond Mother being afraid of the Lancet [the best and fpeedielt Remedy at fuch times] neglects this latter part of the Advice, and whether the reft was purfued I know not; but few Days after, I heard in the Neighbourhood, that fne had with the fimple Multitude, purchas'd the famous Anodyne Necklace, which had not been worn long, before one of the Teeth Ljust coming out 10 as

as I observ'd but now] did cut, soon after the other, and the Child grew easier, as was to be expected.

This Tale, by a Scout, was prefently got hold of, brought in, and dreft up with all the Formality of a wonderful Recovery, partly true, and partly falfe; true in that the Teeth came out [and fo they had if the Necklace had never been heard of]; falfe, in that they had taken Advice of the whole College of Physicians, of whom none but my felf was ever confulted, and mine [as you have heard, in the most material Point, if in any one] not follow'd; and all this to magnify the great Virtue in St. Hugh's Bones; but observe now the Sequel of this Story.

When this Tale had been often told, and worn as it were Thread-bare [by which I suppose their Advertisements thereof, were well paid for, in bringing more Fools to their Market] it happen'd fome Months after, as if Old Nick owing them a spight was now minded as we fay to pay them; fome new Teeth coming out, the Child was again brought very low and weak, and trufting to the Famous Anodyne Necklace, they fought for no other Help, till it was too late; when at length, behold, the very Day the old Story was advertis'd, and drest up to all the Advantage imaginable, C 2 with ENDOW1 with the Parents return of Thanks, unknown to the Author, and fuch like fulfome Lies, the poor Infant expires with the Miraculous Beads about its Neck; and certainly, unless they had not quite abandon'd all Modesty, as well as common Honesty, they would have prudently suppress'd this particular Advertisement for the future ; yet fo shameless and scandalous do I find them, as to continue this very Relation with an additional Piece of fine Wire-drawing, viz. That the faid Child, by means of the Necklace, is fo recover'd of all his Weaknefs, that he is grown a very fine Boy ['twas much their Hands being in, they had not made a Man of him] and can run alone; whereas, had themselves sent to enquire, they must have known he had been Dead [and of his Teeth as I have told you] feveral Months past.

Many the like Examples I have heard of, from Perfons of the greateft Credit; fome of them having curs'd their Credulity, in fuffering themfelves to be imposed on, and thrown the Popifb Trumpery [as they now call it] into the Fire. But, Laftly, granting all of them to be Facts, there needs not many Words to prove them of no Force for the End proposed; it being certain, that most Children between tween feven and twelve Months old, fooner or later, must cut some of their Teeth; if now when a Child is indifpos'd thereby, a Necklace, or any other Toy, is put on at the time of its breaking forth, or perhaps two or three Days before, this Tooth, I fay, had inevitably broke thro', whether the Beads, or other Toy, had been left on or off; and if the Parent had written Hocus Pocus, adsis Dens? on a piece of Paper, in the stead of the Necklace, take my Word, it would have done every jot as much Service, in bringing forth the Tooth.

If they would have the Argument prove any thing, they should prove, that no Child, [at least the greater Number] ever wore it but with some Advantage; whereas, on the contrary, there are fome Scores I have feen with it for feveral Months, pining and languishing to no purpose, till a Lancet has been admitted, and then fome of them have recover'd. Others meerly by Strength of Nature, not by any Efficacy of these Childish Amusements, have at last weather'd the Point, whilft great Numbers die dayly, in fpight of St. Hugh's Toes, or his Teeth either; but if the few having it on, shall happen to cut their Teeth, no Matter, fays the Impostor, for the thousands that die with it it on, for you are never fent of this Errand to the Parents of the Dead.

You will fay, perhaps, the Author has fhow'd himfelf a learned Man, and a great Philofopher, proving alfo that many ftrange Feats may be done by Sympathy, or by means of invisible Atoms, Miasms, Aporrbaas, Effluvias, Emanations, Exhalations, with abundance of hard Words; and that Paracelsus, Van Helmont and Sir Kenelm Dygby were of the fame Opinion; and, lastly, that he has appeal'd to the Royal Society.

To all which I fhall answer as fhortly as I can; That I take him, indeed, to be a very fhrewd Man, and that he has thrown out as good a Bait for Fools as perhaps was ever known in London, and profecutes as likely a Method to carry on his Defign, which yet is not supported but on very large Expense; for no longer than he is Piping with his Advertisements, will the Fish come to the Bait.

He has likewife given us a great many hard Names, and told us fome wonderful Stories, fome True, which prove Little; others Falfe, which prove Nothing, unlefs that the Author telling them as Truths, is not to be credited in any thing he fays. Paracel/us and Helmont were both Quacks, as himfelf, yet of much larger Talents in the Phyfical Science; the former, however ever a mad Extravagant, the latter a whimfical Enthusiast, each, notwithstanding, of a fingular and great Genius; and I dare believe in Principle, both Honefter than himself. Sir Kenelm, a most renown'd Personage, a very great Naturalist, but no Physician; nor has his Sympathetick Cure of Wounds any ways vacated or fuperseded the Practice of Surgery, [I know where it has forty times made Work for that Profession] any more than this ridiculous Bead-roll is like to do that of Phyfic; they having both of them been fufficiently prov'd Fallacious and idle Dreams; the one however, of an honeft and wellmeaning Nobleman, the other [as it is credibly reported] of a knavish and defigning Prieft.

But ftill you may farther argue, if the Project was no better than a Cheat, how comes it that Dr. Paul Chamberlen of the College of Physicians, should fuffer his Name to be set, as a kind of Sanction thereunto? To this last raised Objection I shall answer as tenderly as I can. Dr. P. C. [who, by the way, was not a Member of the College] is now gone to his Place, and can't answer for himself: nor can I for him, any better than that there were more Reasons than every body knew, why his Name was used to give C 4 Credit,

Credit, and support this piece of R----y; fome of them have been already guest at in Print, and his Executors, I dare fay, can tell yet more. I have already told you he is gone, and can fay nothing to me, and therefore all I shall fay more of him is this, that when a learned Phylician of my Acquaintance took him to Task upon this Matter, and endeavoured to make him fenfible of the Scandal to himfelf as well as to the whole Faculty of Phylic; he put off the Discourse with a Smile, faying, The Thing was harmless, and suited to the People's Humours; and that if the Children, for want of it, could not benefit in their Teeth, the Mothers, by the force of Fancy, might be eased in their Deliveries; and that lastly, it had as much Virtue as any other external Remedy of this Nature, which the People seem'd extremely fond of ; which was [what all the fenfible part of Mankind knew before] just none at all; nor I dare fay [if you will not take my Word for it] can you find one Gentleman of the Royal Society, that will not readily acknowledge as much as all I have faid amounts 10. 10 000

PART II.

The ARGUMENT.

That Supposing some of these Remedies were at first directed by the most learned Physician, and afterwards compounded or prepar'd by an honest Artist, yet in this way of their Administration, it cannot otherwise fall out, but that many more must be injur'd [at least if they are good for any thing] than can be benefited thereby.

His 2d general Proposition, I ground, 1. Upon the similitude or likeness of one Disease with another ; by which, Physicians themselves, who have had all Opportunities by a View of the Patient, and strict Enquiry into all Circumstances, have, notwithstanding, been sometimes unhappily mistaken. 2. Upon the differing Constitutions, as well as differing Circumstances of some others, labouring under the same Distemper, requiring still a divers Method of Healing. 3. From the Same Disease, differently circumstantiated one Day, perhaps an Hour from what it is the next, and quite altering the first Intention. 4. From divers Causes giving Rife to the same Distemper, and which are always to be respected carefully by every good Physician. 5. And laftly, lastly, From particular Idiosyncrasy's, a hard Word I must confess for a common Reader to understand, and which I know not how to express otherwise, than its implying something in our Natures, by which one Man naturally abhors, or loaths, what another is pleased with, and so contrarily.

From some one or more of these [which are not all I could enumerate, but enough I think to my Purpose] I shall here, I say, undertake to evince that you run exceeding Hazards, by medling with any Medicine, however good in its kind, recommended in this way of Advertisement, notwithstanding the best printed Directions that can be given therewith.

And for the clearer Reprefentation of this Affair, I shall, by way of Demonstration, give at least one Example [my intended Brevity not allowing more] under each of the foregoing Heads; and I will begin with that very common Difease the Cholick: Now this you all know, is a Name by which we are apt to fignify any Pain, whether fix'd or moving, in the Stomach or Bowels. It is indeed a Word of Latitude, and contains several Species [if I may be allowed the Expression here] under one common Genus; and thus there is a Cholick [the most frequent of any other] arising from Wind pent up in some part part of the Stomach or Guts. There is a Cholick from Cold, Phlegmatic Humours alfo heap'd up and obstructing the fame Parts. There is a Cholick from what Phyficians properly enough call Bile or yellow Choler, hence nam'd a Bilious Cholick, arifing from this Humour fermenting with fome others in these Parts alfo, and exciting the most cruel Torments. Again, there is a Cholick proceeding from an Inflammation of these Parts, attended with very cruel, and often fatal Symptoms, as Gangrene and Mortification. Farther, there is a Cholick from a Hurry and Confusion of the Spirits, rushing as it were impetuoully upon the Bowels, and producing exquisite Pains in the Stomach or Guts, with Vomiting fometimes, as in a true Cholick : At other times the Pain is feated on the Kidneys and Neck of the Bladder, which in confult with that excellent Phyfician Dr. Mead, I was once a Witness of, occasioning a total Suppression of Urine, and putting on the exact likeness of a Cholick from the Stone or Gravel; and this we call an Hysterick Cholick. There is, lastly, a Cholick from the faid Gravel, which we call the Stone Cholick, and which by Confent of Parts, in many Symptoms, refembles alfo the common Cholick. . . .

You may object, that albeit there may be many Causes of these Cholicks, yet if the fame Remedy will remove the Complaint, no matter whether he who fells it, can rightly diftinguish these several Causes; and indeed, if this could be made out, I would grant due weight to the Objection; but the contrary is most notorious, and by this Mistake, abundance of Patients have miscarry'd; for tho' many of the Species have fome common Accident or Symptom, fuch as Pain, Vomiting, Costiveness, with fmall or no Fever; others great Heat, Thirst, with Fever attending; others, as we faid just now, with Strangury or stoppage of Urine; yet these arising from very differing Caufes, and producing alfo differing Consequences, must be treated therefore in a quite differing Method. 'Tis own'd they all agree in one common Symptom, I mean Pain, implying, as it might therefore feem, one common Remedy, viz. some Opiat to take off the fame. But he who first goes to take off this Symptom in fome of them, without having an Eye to remove the Caufe, fixes the fame deeper, and fometimes thereby puts it out of the Power of the most suitable Remedy afterwards to relieve the Sick who had been thus ignorantly treated.

To

To explain this Matter a little farther : He, who in the Inflammatory, or Bilious Cholick, fends for any of the common Cholick Waters, [as they are mischievously termed] whether the famous $\mathcal{J}-M-rs$, the never failing G - s, which is nothing elfe but Louage Water, the common, and now well known Remedy of Daffy; or, in a word, a Quartern of Geneva [which alone has deftroy'd more than our thirty Years War, and will do the Business as well as the beft of them] not forgetting the burnt Brandy prepar'd at home; he, I fay, who takes this Method, at this time, is little wifer than one who claps the Muzzle of the Piftol into the Patient's Fundament, and lets fly, in hopes to clear the Way of all Obstructions : Pardon the Comparison, but I can assure you, the one is likely near upon with the other, to deftroy the Difeafed and the Difease together. Again, he who shall attempt, and give one of the strong Glysters, much more the Purges at this time, which are customary in the Cold, Phlegmatick, or Vitreous Cholick, will act as wildly; the fame will have the like evil Tendency in the Hylterick Cholick, where the chief Inrention is by fome of the Fætid or Hysterick Remedies, so called, mix'd with Opiates, to take off the Hurry, and bridle the exorbitant orbitant Outrage of the Spirits. Farther, He likewife who purfues this Courfe with hot inflaming Spirits, and hot Purges, in expectation of eafing the Stone-Cholick, where foft, glib, flippery and oyly Medicines, lenient Glyfters, and cooling Purgatives, with Opiates, especially in the Fit, are indicated, will be as much difappointed. On the contrary, He who directs cold Water, Milk and Water, Barley Water, Almond Milks, and the like, in the Cold Phlegmatick Cholick, [howbeit well fuited to the Bilious and Hot] where the hotter Carminative Compositions, warm Glyfters, and brisk Purges, bridled however with some Opiate, are requisite, will shoot also as wide of the Mark.

Hence I think it will appear felf-evident, that whoever trufts to any of these Anticholical Remedies, fo denominated and fold about the Town, must expect to rifque his Health, if not his Life, fince the Chance is fo great of its doing more Hurt than Good; and if the best Physicians are fometimes puzzled, who attend at the Bed-fide of the Patient, and inform themfelves all they can, yet find, by a peculiar Symptom, or accidental Appearance afterwards, that they had gone before upon a wrong Notion of the Cafe, which being by this new Difcovery let into, they quickly orbitant quickly after can relieve the Sick Perfon; if this be fo, as frequently falls out, how, I fay, is it to be expected, that any fingle Medicament, made up by a Quack who knows nothing of thefe Diffinctions [or if he did, could in this way provide for the fame] can anfwer the Expectation. You fee it must be Hot, and it must be Cold; it most Purge strongly, weakly, and it must not Purge at all; it must cause Rest, and must prevent Sleep, with feveral other very opposite Qualities, which are contradictory in the very Terms, and therefore both imposfible and impracticable in this publick way.

The fecond Objection I raifed against these Quack-Remedies fold at the Shops, was founded on the differing Conftitutions, and divers Circumstances otherways attending upon the fame Patient; and I will here instance in another popular Difeafe, the Scorvy, which together with that of the Worms, father many more Diftempers than they have a just right to, and by the mistaken Conceptions whereof, many adult Perfons have fuffer'd by the one, as thoufands of Children have done by the other. I deny not but they are both common Diseases, yet I would have no one take a Remedy for either, till by the Judgment of fome able Phyfician, they are dizod. 10-inform'd what Ground they go upon; but I haften to my Business.

The Scorvy has been ufually, by all good Modern Writers, divided into a Salino Sulphureous, and a Sulphureo Saline; but thefe being Words not at all intelligible to common Readers, for which this is defigned chiefly, we fhall diftinguifh it only as Acid and Salt, or, if you pleafe, a cold and a hot Scorvy; and indeed without regard to this fimple Divifion, it is impoffible either to conceive a true Notion of the Difeafe, or to adapt Remedies for the Cure: Some have made a middle Species, and truly with refpect to fome Temperaments, lying betwixt the two Extremes, not improperly.

Now as the Acid or Cold Scorvy will difpenfe with fome of the hot and biting Plants, fuch as Horfe-radifb, Arfmart, Scorvy-grafs, Wormwood, Aron-Roots, Winters-Bark, Orange-Peel, and the like; with diftill'd Waters, Tinctures, Wines, Spirits, extracted thence; fo contrarily, the Sulphureo Saline, or the Hot Scorvy, requires the more cold or temperate; fuch are Endive, Dandalyon, Plantane, Fumitory, Cichory, Sorrel, and fuch like; either in Decoctions, Infusions, or the fimple Juices clarified, which exceed all other Forms. The middle fort may have them chosen out of both both the foregoing, as may belt fuit the Patient's Temperament or Conftitution, without regard to which, it will be impossible any one afflicted with this Diftemper, can ever receive the Advantage that otherwise he might, and no wonder that in over-looking thereof, fo many People fall under worfe Circumstances than before, much heighthening the very Symptoms, of which they thought themfelves purfuing the Cure; and here I think I have a fair Opportunity to acquaint you, that those very common Rea medies, with which more efpecially the Town is flock'd by Quarks and Empiricks; I mean the Spirits of Scorvy-grass [to thous fands of whom each has prov'd a very fcurvy Spirit] whether plain or purging, have been fome of the molt pernicious and destructive Remedies that were ever advertis'd in Publick, especially to the hot, faline, squalid, and emaciated Habits, whose Blood has been thereby fired to that degree, and the Difeate fo aggravated, that I have feen hundreds of them broke out with Blotches and Boils, who were clear before the taking thereof; others have become as it were Leprous; others drove into Hecticks and Confumptions, and the Spots or Eruptions growing ten times worse under the expected Remedy. Nor Water, 18 1) is it likely it should happen otherwise, where no regard is had, as I faid before, to these three different States, Temperaments, or Habits of Body, but led away with the empty Name of Spirits of Scorvygrass, giving the same promiscuously to all of them.

From these Spirits I might pass to others, tho' not of the like Nature, yet of the fame Form; particularly the two late ones fet up for Sale by fome of the fame People, I mean the Spirit of Ground-Ivy, and the Spirit of Bohea-Tea, as to which my time will not allow me to make farther Remarks, than that they feem all of them to contain much more of the Artificial Productions of the Element, made use of to extract them, than the simple or natural Ones of the Plant they are drawn from; or, [as an excellent Phyfician has well observ'd of some others] that they are rather Creatures of the Fire, than real or inherent Qualities exifting before therein; and that notwithstanding they may be well enough fuited to some few Cases, where the hot and fpirituous Regimen [as Physicians call it] is allowable, yet, generally speaking, they are much more hurtful than beneficial; and whoever will be at the Pains of infufing or steeping the well-dry'd Plant in hot Water,

Water, as the common Tea is prepar'd, or taking the clarify'd Juice from the Green one, when the Seafon will admit, will have a Remedy infinitely preferable to these fiery Spirits.

As to the Teas, peculiarly fo termed, a foolish Custom has now brought them into fuch Request among People of all forts, that to go about the crying them down were to little purpose; nor indeed till we know what better Amusement to introduce [for there is, it feems, no Converfation that can be upheld without fome tipling of one kind or other] in their room, would it be expedient. The prefent have many powerful Advocates on their fide, any one of which might endanger the over-fetting a fingle Adverfary; for first of all, if these Liquors were difus'd, the Crown would be robb'd of a confiderable Revenue; the E. I. C. put to their Trumps to fend abroad fo much of our Silver, which they barter away for these dry Leaves, and some other Toys and Trifles, especially the Earthen Ware that comes along with them; [but fure it is no more than right, that those who furnish the Regalio, should fend us likewife the Utenfils with which it is dish'd out]; and lastly, to name no more, the Grocer would be at as great a lofs to D 2 get Wanced get off his Loaf-Sugar; fo that upon all these Confiderations, we will leave it where we found it, with this farther Admonition to all those who have a value for their Gums and Teeth, if nothing elfe, that they would leave off thus perpetually Codling or Parboyling of them, unless they intend them, at long run, to be ferved up at the fame Table for a fecond Course. In a word, I can't think any of these scalding hot Infusions, fit for any other than a Physical use ; but if they must take place, methinks 'tis great pity we are oblig'd to fend fo far for fomewhat, whose Place were we minded to make the Enquiry] might be as well, if not much better, supply'd at Home, it being a certain Truth, that no Man walks a Mile from the Town's end, but treads upon many a more useful Plant than this; but to return to our Subject, the Scorvy.

There is, farthermore, fcarce any thing fo common, as to find this Difeate complicated with fome others, requiring variety of Prefcriptions and Compositions fuited to the prefent Indication, that is, fuch other peculiar Ingredients in the Antifcorbutick Mixture, as may beft anfwer the variety of Symptoms, which are fo various at fometimes, that the higheft Prudence, and great Judgment, is often wanted wanted to trace out the Original, and to know certainly, whether the fame are Symptoms only of the Scorvy, or primary and original Diseases of themselves : thus to instance, In the Head, we have often Giddiness and great Pain, like a common Head-ach; rotten or putrid Gums in the Mouth like the Canker, as the good old Women call it; in the Breast, Palpitation of the Heart and Swooning : Shortness of the Breath, as in the Afthma; in the Belly, Cholicks and Bloody Fluxes, as from other Causes; with wandering and flying Pains in the Limbs like the Rheumatism; together with fundry other intricate Symptoms, which in adapting our Remedies to the Difease in general, are always most heedfully to be respected; and for which therefore, none of these Quack Remedies, how carefully foever compounded, can make a neceffary Provision.

My third Exception against these Empirical Medicines publish'd in this way, was taken from the Confideration of the fame Disease circumstantiated differently one Day, perhaps one Hour, from what it was in that before, or may be the following, and requiring also a quite differing Method in the Cure: And here I shall give Example in that most terrible, but common Distemper, the Gravel and Stone, which Dz which in the Fit requires one Remedy; out of it, another; or if too big to pass [here also the learned Phyfician can only judge] one Intention; if passing, a second; and if passed into the Bladder, a third : And here, I fay, the Prefence of an experienc'd Phyfician is as much wanted as any where, and a Miftake herein has often coft the poor tormented Patient his Life; tormented, I fay, by his Difease, and still farther tormented by a Quack Remedy he had, rashly taken ; but farther to enlarge upon this Subject by way of Explanation. When the Stone then is fix'd in the Kidney, and too big to pass [known only as above by the Scrutiny of an able or experienc'd Phyfician] all we can do here, is rationally to blunt the Pain with Anodyne or Opiate Medicines fuited thereunto; whilst in the mean time we try to sheath the Acrimony of the Humours by proper Emulfions, Almond-Milks, and other foft or Mucilaginous Medicines, as Phylicians call them, having regard also to the bloody Water that is fometimes made, when the Stone shall happen to shift its Place, and with its Points or Angles wound fome of the tender Veffels.

When the Stone [being passable] is moved down into the Ureter [the Passage from the Kidney to the Bladder, so named, about about the bigness of a small Goose quill, long, and somewhat distorted like the Letter [] we are then, by fome oyly, glib, foft, smooth, or flippery Medicines, as before obferved, Turpentine Clisters, also emollient Oyls and Baths externally, to attempt the dilating of these narrow Pipes, and make way for its descent or passing on; in the mean time, directing alfo [as a forefaid] proper Anodynes to appeale the Pain, or blunt the exquisite Sensation thereof; and believe me, whoever shall give or take at this Jun-Aure, either Tipping's Liquor, the Volatile Cleanser, Rogers's Powder, or any other, even Honorato Fornello, Gent. and no Phylician, his Diffolution Salt, will run great danger of encreasing their Torture, plugging up the obstructing Stone, and miferably destroying you; the mildest Diuretic, or Urine-forcer, doing, at fuch times, incredible Mischief: And altho' some of them may be after useful, together with diluting Liquors, to cleanfe the Paffages, and wash the Kidneys; yet the Continuance of them unseasonably, has sometimes both weaken'd the Urinary Parts, and brought more of this fabulous or gravelly Matter, together with fome concreting Salts out of the Blood, than might otherwife have fallen down; fo that upon all these Confiderations, you must furely be D 4 ap-apprized how dangerous it will be for you to rely upon any of these, however celebrated Remedies, sold up and down the Town by Quacks, or ignorant Persons; not one of which either ever was, or can be so contriv'd, as to answer all the proper Intentions, how specifically soever they are compounded: Of which farther prefently, when we enquire into their Nature.

My fourth Reafon for diffwading you against these Medicines, was taken from the vafily differing Caufes, giving Rife to the same Distemper, and which are always carefully to be respected, in our Physical Prescriptions for the same. And here I shall set before you, one of the most common Tand which through tampering first of all with Quack Remedies, and old Wives Receipts, at least for want of timely Application to the learned Phyfician, makes one of the most considerable Numbers in our Bills of Mortality] that is a Confumption, of which, befides the general diffinction of Original and Symptomatical, we have from one of the best Writers of this Diffemper [and who knew as well as any other how to cure it] the following particular ones reckon'd up; as a Confumpti n from great Loss of Blood, or other Evacuations, as from Olcers, Eistula's or

or Apostems; from giving Suck, a Looseness, Diabetes, Sweats, Salivations; likewise, Consumptions from a Dropsy, the Kings-Evil, Scorvy, Asthma, Melancholy, Stones in the Lungs, the French Pox: Again, there are Consumptions from the Green-sickness, Intermitting Fevers or Agues, Pleurisies, Jaundice; from the Gout, Rheumatism, with certain others too tedious and unnecessary farther to take notice of.

Now altho' in each of these we have one general Aim, viz. the recruiting the decay'd Habit ; yet not only the Symptoms, fuch as the Cough, Loofenefs, Sweats, &c. afford divers Indications, and a different Management, but in each of them, very fingular regard is to be had to the original Disease, of which these Symptoms are only Confequents: Thus for Example, if we think to cure a Consumption from the Evil, with the fame Remedies we fet upon another from a Dropfy; or if we undertake to cure another from bleeding at the Nose, or other parts of the Body, with those we direct for the Cure of one from an Afthma, Scorvy, or Jaun, dice, we shall find our felves very much out of the way of obtaining our defired Ends: No wifer is he, who enterprizes the Cure of a Pocky Hectic with Antifcorbuticks, requir'd in the Cure of a Confump-3189 tion

tion from the Scorvy; nay, if he mix not the Counter-poison, I mean fome Mercurial Preparation, with his Pectoral or Antiphthisical Remedies, at least orders them not between whiles, he will find he is doing fomewhat worfe than washing the Æthiopian White, that is losing his Labour only, but is acceffary alfo to the poor Man's Death, which, in all probability, had been prevented by the Care of a more understanding and expert Physician. In a word, he who fancies he can cure any one of these Confumptions we have already recounted, with the fame Regimen, that may be truly useful for fome other of them, is upon the fame level of Understanding with the Undertaker, to fit all Bodies with the fame Suit of Apparel; fince it is manifeftly apparent, that in each of them, the Method muft be in fome Particulars varied, and confequently many of them thus differing, even radically one from the other, there can be no radical Cure [according to the vain Pretence of one of our prefent Receipt Quacks] by any fingle Remedy whatever, even that very common Symptom attending almost all of them, especially towards the Conclusion, I mean the Cough, requires the utmost of our Caution and Circumspection, in endeavouring to eafe 100

eafe the Sick herein; for tho' many of them bear Opiates well, and that we can do little or nothing without them, as in the Melancholy particularly, and feveral others with a thin Catarrh, or with a dry Convulfive Tickling, and a tolerable good Breathing; yet in fome others, as the Scorbutic with a tough Phlegm, difficult Expectoration, and short Breath; in the Hydropic, and especially the Asthmatic, half a Grain of Laudanum, given by some Quack or Empiric, has sent many of these People to their long Home; the Authors of whofe untimely Ends [had Justice taken Place] ought, from the Gallows, to have been fent after them.

I come now to my last Objection against these Medicines, which I took from the fingular and unaccountable Antipathies of particular Persons, against some particular Ingredients in a Composition; which, how mean foever it may appear to be raifed here, has always had great Regard in Phylic; and the want of Forefight or Pre-confideration thereof, has been exceedingly pernicious to fome Patients, and has also disgraced the Physician. To instance in one or two Examples : Some few Hysteric Women there are, who receive a very singular Relief by a full Dose of Musk or Civet, whereas a Grain of either, to the greater greater Number of that Sex, is exceedingly displeasing, and to some of them has been almost fatal. Again, There are some of both Sexes who can bear Opium well, and sleep quietly therewith; whilft others are confounded, and almost distracted, till the Effects of it are worn off. The least quantity of Honey will purge and swell up some as if they were Poison'd : Hence Diascordium, Venice-Treacle, and Mithridate, not only upon this Account, but sometimes also upon some other Secret, or, as we say, natural Antipathy or Aversion, instead of being Antidotes, are like Poison it self to some particular Constitutions. Mint-Water to one I know, is the most certain Vomit, tho' it stops that Complaint in almost all others. Saffron, a Cordial to the generality, I have also obferved by the like Secret, Antipathy, has caused others to faint away, either by the Smell ar Taste. It were too tedious to reckon up more of this kind, which the prudent Phyfician, by converse with his Patient, and Enquiries of this Nature, can eafily obviate and provide against; but of which, in this publick way of purchasing Quack Remedies [I with I could fay that were all] you must run the Hazard.

I have given only a fingle Instance under each Head of these Objections, that I might not fwell this little Tract beyond 112 618

its intended Bounds; and indeed to have fingled out each Disease, and commented thereon, would have been to have writ a kind of Phyfical Hiftory for the use of Phyficians, who know, perhaps, already [at leaft many of them] more than my felf, instead of fome short Hints and Inftructions, for the use of others, and for whom this prefent Disquisition is only intended; for there is no Diftemper with which we are afflicted, but in unfolding after the fame manner, I could eafily make it appear, and I hope alfo, convince you, that no Remedy for any of them, this way recommended, can be fecurely rely'd on; that it may poffibly afford fome Benefit, but much more probably do you a Mifchief; or in other Words, that in about twenty, there is one Chance for, to nineteen, against you. Who then that has his Senfes would thus act in the Dark in an Affair fo valuable as their Health? Or who thus throw the Dyes as it were, upon the Drum-head, for their Life, if they could avoid it ?

Can you now believe it possible, in so great variety of Symptoms, appearing under the same Disease, some of them so contradictory to each other in their Indications or Intentions of Healing; so great Affinity or Likeness of one Disease with another in some common Symp.

Symptoms, yet requiring, as you see, a va-rious Method, the Mistakes in which have been of the highest Consequences; such diversity of Habits or Constitutions likewise to be carefully respected; also the sudden Changes and Alterations; the different Appearances one Hour of the same Distemper, from what it was the Hour before, or may be next, and calling for a quite different Prescription; the Sympathies and Antipathies natural to some certain Persons likewise to be observed : I fay, if you can believe all these are to be provided for by any fimple Quack Remedy whatever, left to fell at a Tradesman's Shop, you must believe at the fame time, that a Taylor, Shoemaker, nay, that any Old Woman who can neither read nor write, nor yet fpeak intelligibly, knows as much of Medicine as the best of us all; or that one who never look'd into a Humane Body, may be as well acquainted with all the minutest Parts therein, their Scituation and Use, as the greatest Master of Anatomy. But I must believe better of the Generality of my Readers, most of which, I dare think, have been thus imposed on for want of having the Truth fet in a clear Light, and in a Way fuited to their Understandings.

PART III.

The ARGUMENT.

An Enquiry into the Nature of some of these Medicines [by which their Insufficiency of answering their proposed Intentions, will farther appear manifest] their twofold general Division, with the Consequences attending some of them in this publick way of their Recommendation.

I Shall now make a brief Enquiry into the Nature of these Remedies, such of them, I mean, as by one way or other have come to light; for I pretend not to be thoroughly acquainted, unless with very few, nor would I give one Farthing to be Master of them all; and these I shall divide into two forts, 1. Such as some way alter; 2. Such as empty our Bodies of fome particular Humours.

I shall begin with the Alterative, the principal of which are the Stomach Medicines, as supposed to strike at the Root of Difeases, and promoting the first Digestion; among which, the Bitters are the most famed, and of which we have great Plenty. The Royal Bitter Tincture; the Glorious or Golden Elissir; the Great Stomach Stomach Elixir, &c. thefe are all of them prepar'd of one or other, fewer or more, of the following Simples; Gentian, Galingal, Zadoary Roots; Tops of Centaury and Wormwood; Otange-Peel [which is the chief of the Great Elixir] Seeds of Cardemome and Coriander, to which fome add the Aromatics or Spices, fuch are Nutmegs, Cloves, Mace, &c. thefe fhould be infus'd cold for fome Days in Wine, or in good French Brandy; but are generally [for a Worldly Reafon] fleep'd in a flinking, nafty Malt-Spirit, or at the beft, a Moloffes.

In remarking these, when duly prepared as aforefaid, I am far from undervaluing what all Phyficians frequently direct as they see occasion ; but the prepofterous Use, or the taking them without Advice, has render'd them rather Mifchievous than Beneficial; a fad Inftance of this we have in our common Whetters, as they are called: Now these People, it is certain, in some of our Taverns about the Exchange, meet with a much wholfomer Bitter than molt of the toregoing Spirits; but their constant Recourse to it, their doubling and redoubling their Gills, or half Pint Ours, instead of strengthening, foon destroys the lone of their Stomachs, entirely exanguishing their natural Hear, parparboyling in a manner its Coats, after unbending or relaxing the Fibres thereof, and laying alleep its Stimalus or Esurine Ferment [call'd fo by fome Phyficians] or rather drowning the fame; fo that inftead of exciting or raising what they aim at, when they come to the best furnish'd Table the very fight of the Food fatiates, and the Steams make them rife up fometimes and run away from the fame : They streight grow pall'd and faint, and having no way to recruit their Spirits, are forced to return, if not to their Bitters, perhaps to the Brandy Bottle, at least they take Sanctuary in the Tavern, where the Cook is confulted to put fome Cheat upon their Stomachs, and humour their Appetites, with the Wing of a Pheafant, or a Partridge, tho' that of a Lark is oft as much as they can compass : till the Night far spent, top full of their beloved Liquors, they come reeling Home : After their first Sleep, the Fumes flying off which had imprifon'd their Senfes, they fall to retching; then rife again when that is over, and return to Whet. Thus in a very little time fome hundreds of brave Conftitutions have been broke, and the most promising of our Citizens [at their first setting out] in a very few Years hurry'd into their Graves.

It may be here, [and that reasonably] reply'd, that it is the Abuse only of these Remedies that does the Harm, which I can readily grant; but the Extolling of them in all cafes of decay'd and loft Appetites, has first of all led many People into this Abuse: And thus I have seen abundance, some too of good Rank and Fashion, that having accustom'd themfelves at first to a few Drops, quickly after rofe to Spoonfuls, and at last full Glasses of these Tinctures and Elixirs, which in fhort time, has as effectually deftroy'd them, as that Hellish Liquor the Geneva does the common or poor People; for 'tis not the Bitters, how good or useful foever, will defend the Stomach from being prey'd on by the fiery Spirits they are infus'd in; nor indeed will any the most noble Spices [which rather help farther to inflame] the richeft Cordials, the Citron, and the Cinamon brought from abroad, have any better effect ; nor in few Words, to be plain, will there appear other difference in this kind of Suicide, or Self-Murther, betwixt a Basket-Woman and a Lady of the first Quality, were a Jury to be impannel'd for fuch Enquiry, than that the former had deftroy'd herfelf with a Spirit of Nine Pence a Quart, the latter with one of Forty Shillings.

Again,

Again, here is a farther Mischief accrues by these Stomach Tinctures, that being thus [as we have already observed] celebrated for weak and decay'd Appetites, we have divers Hectical and Confumptive People, others in Fevers; Women alfo labouring under immoderate Fluxes of Blood; fome with a hot, bilious, and acrid Serum therein, that by these Remedies fuffer unspeakable Damage. Three I have lately feen, whofe Ruin might have been fairly imputed to thefe hot and burning Elixirs. One bleeding to Death at Nofe, had a Bottle of one of them, which feem'd a fort of Elixir Proprietatis, at his Beds Head, of which he had drank for a Month before in Wine, according to fome Quack's Advice, and which I am fatisfy'd had contributed mightily to the poor Man's Death: The contrary Regimen to which, I mean the Barley-Water, Milk and Water, Affes-Milk, or the like, had been much fitter for him, and very probably had refcued him from this fatal Symptom that put an end to his Days. But having, I fay, loft his Stomach by hard Drinking, for which, especially, these kind of Remedies are extoll'd, this had been recommended as a never failing one.

Now in fome of these, or other Cafes circumstantiated thereunto, where they E 2

have

have been found necessary or thought proper: but particularly in Intermitting Fevers, in cold Habits, in Retching, Sicknefs or Loathing, and fundry others, Phyficians have always preferr'd the Infusions of some of these Bitters in fair Water, to the rectify'd Spirits or Wines either, unless in some peculiar Cases, and to much better purpose, adding, as they find occasion, three or four Ounces of a steeled Wine, or perhaps two or three of the compound Wormwood Water, to a Pint of the faid Infusion; but farther to convince you of the Infufficiency of these Remedies for the Ends they have been recommended, I could give you a very late instance in a Gentleman of good Note in this City, who by too much good Fellowship, having whetted away his Stomach, fell into violent Vomitings, grew feverish and thirsty, with other Symptoms of an approaching Confumption, fuch as Cough, Loofeness, and Morning Sweats: He had, for a Month past, drank several Bottles of the Great Elixir, with other famous Bitters or Stomach Tinctures, that by fome of his Companions, from printed Advertisements, had been recommended to him, but still growing weaker, he was prevail'd on at last to take farther Advice, which he had from me, and which was [after

[after taking off the Violence of his Retching with a little Juice of Lemon, Salt of Wormwood, and Syrup of Quinces, with half a Grain of Laudanum] that he should only Sup a little simple Mint-Water, Scalding hot, three or four times a Day, with as simple a Chicken Broth as warm, betwixt whiles, which Method, when he had strictly follow'd for about a Week, he found himfelf better, even beyond Expectation, and in lefs than a Month [by other proper Prefcriptions] recover'd gradually his Appetite and Strength alfo. I have recited. this Cafe, to show you, how easily Perfons of Worth and good Senfe too, are led into a Snare, by the fpecious shew and large Character of some Quack Medicine, for the best are no other, when rashly advised to a Person the Author never see in his Life, nor can be therefore appriz'd what particular Symptoms or Conditions may happen to render fuch Remedy much more injurious than beneficial, how valuable foever the fame might have been, if the Case were differently circumstanced, or directed by the Judgment of a Physician thereinto enquiring, without which [if you dare credit one who pretends to know, at least, somewhat of the Matter] your fafest way will be to meddle with none of them; or if you must be making the E 3

54 the Experiment, you will find any Apothecary in your Neighbourhood, will fit you with a more fuitable Stomach Bitter, from some Physicians Prescript on his File, and at an easier Price also than you can purchase some of these destructive Spirits. The next of the Alterative Remedies I shall observe, shall be those which they call their Cordials [whether deftill'd Waters or Spirits] a pleafant Word indeed, the very Name reviving us. In this Class we are presented with Cordials Angelical, Royal, Golden, Imperial, and I know not how many others; belides the Rectifyers of all our Vitals formerly obferved ; together with the Spirits and Drops, as Angel-like alfo, and as Infallible, without Number.

Now to all these I have the fame Objection as against those last mention'd, when taken thus unadvisedly : Moreover, some of them I find scented sin hopes to pleafe the better] confequently prejudicial io a great many, and molt of them prepar'd with a foul English Spirit, and fo in like manner with the former, hurtful to all. And, indeed, tho' Cuftom has apply'd this Word Cordial, in a manner wholly to some hot and spirituous Liquors, or distill'd, if not rectify'd Spirits; yet it oftentimes falls out, that a Draught of cold Water

Water with Vinegar, is a nobler Cordial in fome of the Womens Hysteric or Vapour Fits, or a few Drops of Spirits of Hartshorn in a large Draught of Spring-Water, than the richeft Cordial Spirits or diftill'd Waters you can come by : Nay, in fome fanguine Conftitutions, these Outrages of the Spirits will be encreased frequently by these last, and the Fits much lengthen'd, which are presently taken off by the first.

But farther, this promiscuous use of Cordials, thus fold to you at the Shops, makes no Provision for particular Cases; for altho' the Composition were to confift of half a hundred the most precious fingle Ingredients, yet still the Spirit with which they are drawn off, or in which they are infufed, is exceedingly pernicious to many infirm or weakly Conftitutions, where the common People are ready to furmife they are most wanted. And truly, every Remedy of this kind ought to be fuited to the Patient's Circumstances, as to habit of Body and other Conditions, or as the prefent Symptoms indicate; of which, none but the Phyfician, upon Sight or Enquiry into the Cafe, can be a proper Judge: And thus he will find the Cold and Phlegmatic can dispense with the warmer; the Hot, Dry, and Hectical will want the most temperate; and certainly these, unless E 4 less in great languishing or loss of Spirits from their profuse Sweats, will scarce bear those of the milder fort; with which alfo fuch particular Waters, or other Ingredients, whether Pearl, Coral, or fine Chalk [as good as either for this Use] must always be added, as have refpect unto the faid feverish Ferment, and this proneness to fuch Sweats; and in plain Truth, generally speaking, a Milk-water, a Snailwater, Milk and Barley-water, or Jas before observ'd] the Asses Milk, are the best Refloratives or Cordials for fuch Patients, and have recover'd great Numbers which would inevitably have been destroy'd, had they trusted to these Angelical, Imperial, Royal, Galden Rectificators, or other pretended Cordials of like kind. However, if Matters are come to that pafs, that you cannot live without a Dram, let the middling Folks fend to any Coffeehouse, and there they will find Brandy, Rum, Rack, Ufquebaugh, Ratifia, Alkermes, or Golden Cordial, and fuch like. The Rich, at fome of the fame Places, may hear of Citron and Barbadoes or Jamaica Cinnamon Waters ; whilft the pooreft fort must be content with Royal Gin, which alike will do the fame Execution : Or if you would go a little more advisedly to work, be your Circumstances what they will,

will, if either unable or unwilling to pay for better Advice, confult your Apothecary, who, as I told you but now, concerning the Stomach Remedies, will affift you with a Cordial much fitter for you, as well as in likelyhood, cheaper than you purchase fomething in the other Way; but whether a Disease or a Remedy, is uncertain; the one happening as commonly as the other. As to the Volatile Spirits and Drops, you have little need to pay half a Crown for half an Ounce, fince every Chymift will furnish you with Volatile Oyly Salt, Spirit of Hartsborn, Salt Armoniac, Castor, Lavender, with forty others for your Fits of any kind, or other Difeases of the Brain or Nerves, at a quarter the Price; and at the same time, some of them instruct you better in their Use, and which may be most fafely ventur'd on, or do you the least Injury, than the Quack who keeps, as we fay behind the Curtain, and fo as he can but get your Money by telling you fome fine Story in his printed Bills or Advertisements, cares not one Half-penny whether he Kills or Cures.

To thefe we will joyn the Anodyne, Paineafing, or composing Mixtures, called likewife Cordials, tho' many of them much fitter to be termed Poysons : in which, the prime of the Composition or Foundation is is Opium, or fome Preparation thereof; which, notwithstanding, granted by all Physicians to be the most ferviceable Drug in Physick, prefcrib'd with Judgment; yet taken thus inadvertently, and without respect to the just Symptoms and particular Circumstances calling for, or forbidding it, the most dangerous and destructive of all others, and by one half Grain of which, in the folid Form, or a few Drops in the liquid, fome People have forfeited their Lives to the Ignorance of a knavish and unskilful Director thereof.

I have here a large Theme to dwell on, but an intended Brevity at first, will not allow a great many Reflections at this Time; to hasten therefore, 'tis with fome of these Compositions that I have known the most ignorant Quacks, even an Old Woman, that have raifed to themfelves a wonderful Reputation; for what would not the Person in Pain give to have a little Ease? How can they do less than extol a Medicine that was the Caufe of it? Hence I fay, this fort of Remedy is one of the most likely, with which a Physical Desperado can set up ; for if in great Extremity the Empiric Reps in and throws the Dye, that is, pours down the Dole, admit the Chance should come up right, and the Sick recover, how is he now cry'd up as the

the most famous Doctor, thus curing as it were by Enchantment? Suppose he dies, tho' perhaps the Relations or Friends may, yet is the Patient himfelf fecur'd from, telling Tales, or reviling him any way; belides, if it was a trading Medicine, it will be difficult to find the Author. The Shop-keeper who fold it, will only tell you, You have made some Mistake, you gave too much, or you repeated it too foon; and there's the utmost of your Satisfaction. And how, indeed, should it often happen otherwife, where neither the Sick nor the By-ftanders are Judges whether the Cafe requir'd it, nor the original Murtherer, having got the Money, and keeping out of fight [as fome do] regarding whether it did or not. And thus I have feen within these seven Years past, at least half a Dozen of Men, Women, and Children, fent out of the World on this fleepy Errand, when Vomits, Sharp Clysters, Cupping, Blistering, and all other helps, were either too late call'd in, or too weak to overcome the flupefactive Dofe : Of these, some were the Quack M---'s, others Mr. W--'s, others H--'s, others D-'s, and others G-y's; the two last, among their ignorant Admirers, being reputed for the most understanding Phyficians. If divers others have efcaped, 11

it has been rather the Effect of a strong Habit of Body, or a vigorous Constitution of Spirits, than the Medicine-Maker's Mercy: Or if others again have not prefently received Injury thereby, yet being ill fuited, or ill timed in fome other refpects, it has been accompany'd with very unhappy Confequences of a divers Nature : And how, as I faid before, should it otherwise fall out, when a Remedy of this Nature is taken by one who knows nothing of fuch Confequence like to enfue, and deliver'd by another little or nothing wifer. For preventing then, what I can, these Mischiefs till fuch dangerous Medicines, especially, are withheld from you, and the Authors of them, as they ought, condignly punish'd, I will here fet down some tew of those particular and more obvious Cafes, wherein these Stupifying or Composing, these Anodyne or Pain easing, or Quieting Cordials, as they are called, are abfolutely hurtful, and forbidden by Phyficians.

1. Without preparing the Body, at leaft, when Costive, emptying the Bowels by Clysters, they are scarce ever to be given at all. 2. All such as are reduced by long Sickness, and brought very low, with a weak and trembling Pulse, must never meddle with them; thus in Consumptions far advanced; as also in Drop-

Dropfies they are dangerous and fatal. 3. In Malignant Fevers, also in Pleurisies, unless some urgent Symptom, as a Loosnes, requires, you must avoid them; and indeed in all Fevers till the Height, which Physicians call a Crifis, is over, they are better forborn, unless indicated, as before, by the Symptoms. 4. In Childrens Fevers, or those of grown Persons; at the Instant of the coming out of the Measles or Small-pox, they are hazardous. 5. In some Inflammatory Cholicks, as I have hinted formerly, there is danger of fixing the Pain, rendring the Caufe more permanent, and bringing on a Gangrene upon the Bowels thereby. 6. In Phrenzies or violent Headachs, accompany'd with a Fever, they are doubtful, and often pernicious or destructive Remedies. 7. There are some Persons, I have told you, who cannot bear them at all, but with great Detriment. 8. To Women in Labour-Pains, they are forbidden; and, indeed, in all others, if the same be tolerable, where such Pain is tending to a Crisis, and Nature overcoming the Difease is throwing the same out of the Blood, as in Abscesses, called otherwife Apostems. 9. To Virgins and Women at some certain times they are likewise mischievous and prejudicial. 10. And lastly, To instance in no more, In the Disease called an Humoral Asthma, or where there is a Catarrh, or great Defluxion of Rheum attending, e-Specially

Specially that which is thick and troublesome to be hawk'd up; here, I say, a Dose of one of these Sleep procuring, or resting Cordials, as some name them [and for good Reason, since by the taking of them, some Persons have been so quiet as never to wake more] is, whatever you may think on't, much the same thing as tying the Sick streight about the Neck with a Halter; and several, I can assure you, I have seen upon such a like unfortunate Accident, as hard labouring for Breath when I have been sent for to them, and as black in the Face, as if in reality that Experiment, by the Hand of the publick Executioner, some private Russian, or themselves, [supplying that Place] had been made upon them.

By these few short Remarks, I have endeavour'd to convince you what great Hazard you run in taking these Quack Remedies, particularly above the reft, with which none of these Material Cautions above-mention'd are deliver'd, or indeed any other Directions, than to take fo much, and repeat it so often, whether to your Health or Undoing is much alike to the Cheat, who has nothing more in view than to enrich himfelf upon your Spoils. Believe me then once more, there is nothing can require fo much of your utmost Heed and diligent Regard, as the taking these, and all such like Medicines, upon a fimple fimple Advertisement, without better Advice than you can gather from them, or than the base designing Authors themfelves of such Advertisements [could you come at them] are qualify'd to give you.

Having thus run over fome of the Remedies I call Alterative [for it was a Task I never fet my felf to fpeak of all] I shall now touch upon fome of those which Empty; and among these, more particularly of fuch as work by Stool and Urine. Of the first fort, I have already acquaint. ed you, we have Elixirs, Tinctures, Electuaries, but especially Pills in great plenty; and each fo unhappily, as I may fay, fet out in the Catalogue of their Virtues, as being good almost for every Thing, that even some People themselves, fmelling out the Defign, are fometimes apt to retort the common Saying, of their being for that Reafon, very probably, good for Nothing, unlefs, being Well, to make them Sick, or a little out of Order, to make them much Worfe.

The Ground of these are usually Jalap-Root, Aloes, Scammony, as those of Dr. B----s, and some others; or Coloquintida, in De-laun's, called the Scotch Pill; Antimony, as in Lockyers; very few of them have Rheubarb, the safest of all others, and indeed the fittest to be this way way intrusted; some with, others without Mercury; and sometimes each of these, with twenty others of the like Nature, are jumbled together injudiciously, and as indifferently corrected : Witness the horrid Gripes and Tortures, the over-purging, or the not passing at all, that have very often attended. Of the Liquors, one of the safest, and now generally known, has Sena for its Basis, corrected with Seeds, Licorish and Raisons, however, infused, like the rest, in none of the most wholfome Spirits, I mean Daffy's Elissir Salutis.

But admit we should grant all these very good and proper in their Kinds, yet is it furely the highest Folly and Rashness we can be guilty of, to meddle with any of them upon these Peoples Recommendation; who, tho' they know [and as I have intimated already, fo does the poor Patient often to his Sorrow] that they will Purge those who take them, yet when Purging is necessary, they know not; nor yet what particular Purge will best suit the sick Perfons Cafe, the Habit of Body, and divers other Circumstances, which ought to be known and duly weighed before such Medicines are prescrib'd; and for want of which, many troubled with the Piles, and other Diforders contra-indicating such particular Purges, have been thereby almost destroy'd. How many many poor Women under Weakneffes of another kind, have been as nearly ruined by the like ill fuited and ill timed Purges? How many over-purged? How many torn to pieces with violent Cholicks, or kill'd outright with Bloody Fluxes thereby occasion'd ? How many have had their Blood and Humours as it were set on Fire, by some of these devilish [for I can call them no better] Compositions? How many Hectic and other Fevers thereby kindled; with a sad Train of other Consequences, in the end fatal, as I formerly observ'd to you, I had sometimes known? And, therefore it is the ftanding and well-eftablish'd Maxim among the wifest of the Faculty, never to prescribe a purging Medicine, without enquiry into the Patient's Circumstances, not only whither for a Man, a Woman, or a Child, but what fort of Man; what Habit of Body; how used to purging Remedies, and how the same have formerly work'd upon him; since 'tis plain; that a seemingly strong Man is often moved with a much less Dose, and may happen there= fore to require a differing Medicine also from another seemingly weaker, who can yet bear the stronger Remedy. Nor is the Difficulty at all leffen'd by faying, the harder to work on may take more, the weaker less, of the same purging Medicine, be their Habits or other Circumstances as they F

they will: For if you go this way to work, you may fooner Deftroy fome People than Purge them at all; there being some Bodies so constituted, as that Cassia Fas it is called] Lenitive Electuary, a Bit of fresh Butter, three or four Spoonfuls of fweet Oyl, the common purging Mineral Waters, or fuch like cooling and mollifying Medicines, will give feveral Stools, when the strongest of the other Purgatives shall scarce stir them; and thus, altho' with some of the Cold and Phlegmatic, we go as high as Scammony and Colocynth, yet must we not exceed Sena or Rhubarb, with fome others that are Hot and Dry; the want of which Pre-confideration, has render'd these publick Remedies, not only uncertain but unfafe also. One Person takes them, they fcour him lustily; he fancies therefore they have done him good, and fo commends them to his Friend : He tries the Experiment, and they neither work at all, only make him desperately Sick, Vomit, Gripe him, and throw him almost into Convulsions, and perhaps it is fome Days [Nature at length furmounting the Difficulty] before he gets over it and recovers; when fometimes the Purge is curfed; others [fo unhappily mistaken are the greater Number, that] to excuse the Quack, and the churliff churlish Operation of his Medicine, they will take the Blame upon themfelves; it was only the foulness of their Stomachs; their Guts had not been clean'd for long time past, so that much Filth being now heap'd up, less wonder that the Medicine met with so much difficulty to remove the Obstructions, or unstop the Dam; but having now at last made ways the next Dose is to accomplish the Work with much more Ease. [How easily are some People cheated of their Health, if not of Life it felf?] The fecond Dofe is ventur'd on perhaps, and with no better Success; when now upon this double Tryal, the reft, very probably, [if there were any left] are thrown out of Doors; and what cares the Quack for that ; you cannot spread his Dishonour far; or should you cry them down, another who escaped better shall commend them, and fend more Fools to Marker, especially if it be the Spring or Autumn, for then some People readily entertain a Notion [strengthen'd by the Empirics Invitation thereunto] that they must Purge right or wrong, for fear they fhould be Sick. But I have already enlarged farther upon this Point than I intended, that I might the better convince you, no Purging Remedy [how highly foever extoll'd by the Quack Author for its rare Virtues, or how infallible foever F 2 for often for any one, or all Distempers] can, after this manner be taken with Safety; fince fome Bodies, we have formerly observed, will fcarce bear any, even the mildest Purge at all, as Hysterical Women, Weak and Consumptive Persons, at all times, and upon all occasions, subject to Fluxes; and many fuch I have known, whole Deaths have been much haften'd meerly thereby. Others require always fomewhat peculiar in a Purge, as Cassia, Manna, Tamarinds, Myrobalans, but especially Rhubarb [tho' not Electively, yet by the Texture of Parts thereto adapted] for the Choleric. Agaric, Turbith, Hermodacts, Carthamus Seeds, &c. for the Phlegmatic. Sena, Polypody, Epithimum, Ellebore [but with good Advice and Caution this last] for Melancholy. Jalap, Elder-Bark, Flower-de-luce, Gamboge, Elaterium [these two last, especially the last of them, with the highest Prudence and Circumfpection alfo] for Watry Humours.

Thefe, indeed, may be thought much out of the way of common Readers, as being hard Names, and with which it may be fuppofed they can be little acquainted; and I have inftanced them, only to fhow the Neceffity that there is of prefcribing Purges, where fuch are neceffary [and that I can affure you is not fo often often as these Pill and Elixir Merchants, for their own Ends would perfwade you] out of divers simple Ingredients, best fuited to particular Humours, Habits and Difeases, with their fundry Symptoms, which these dextrous People will tell you they have contrived for you, and lodged in the fame Pill; and if you refolve thus to be impos'd on, it will be no Fault of mine, who am endeavouring to convince you of fo grofs and dangerous an Error you may be led into by defigning Empirics : But if, notwithstanding all I can fay, you refolve to run thus inadvertently upon fuch Remedies, you may for Six-pence, nay, I know for Three-pence [the pooreft of you] have a better and much fafer purging Pill, at any one of your Neighbour Apothecaries, than you must perhaps give a Shilling or Eighteen pence for, to some of these vile ignorant People.

Before I quit this Head of Purging Re. medies, I may well, I think, subjoin a few Words relating to the purging Powders, Lozenges, and Sugar Plumbs, particularly fold for the Worms; which Name, as I faid of the Scorvy, is now in like manner become a Subterfuge of Ignorance for every lefs apparent Diftemper, or the more hidden Symptoms of the Difeafes, especially of Children, and some grown F 3 Per-

Perfons; of which, rather than affign no Caufe at all, we prefently fay, the great People have got the Scorwy; and the little Ones the Worms, and accordingly fet upon the Encounter, either by Spirits of Scorvygrass or Worm-powder Purges; and undoubtedly, many under this dangerous Miltake of both forts, are lamentably harrafs'd, alfo Scores of little Infants yearly deftroy'd, by the very Remedies the unhappy Parents were prevailed on to administer, in order to destroy these fupposed Worms. 'Tis chiefly for these poor Infants and young Children, these Comfits or Confects have been prepar'd, which under a sweet Cover, contain frequently a conceal'd Poison; and instead of being a Bait for the Vermine, they fometimes have proved the Child's Bane. Tis not that I think the Mercary fometimes put in, as fuch directly, which [notwithstanding the Quack M----r's Remarks] is by the ableft Physicians daily order'd and allow'd to be the most noble of all others, provided the fame is rightly prepared, duly dosed, cautionsly prescribed, and overlook'd in its Operation, to obviate some Accidents that may happen to arise; tis not, I say, for that in it self the Medicine is improper, but when taken, as they fay, Hand over Head, or rashly upon every every fimple Perfons Advice, being mix'd up, as it is usually, with the Refine of Jalap or Scammony [two brisk Purgatives fo called] and no Cautions or proper Directions, as ought to be therewith given, it is utterly to be rejected; as are most, if not every one, of these Compositions: For admit you go upon a wrong Suppofition, you certainly encrease the Hectic Fever, the Cough, Cholick, or Belly-ach, the Loosness, Sweats, and all the Tribe of threatning Symptoms of perhaps an already far advanc'd Consumption ; and throw your Child very probably into those very Convulsions you were hoping to prevent or cure.

'Tis not, I fay, sufficient, because your Neighbour tells you her Child was just like yours, his Nose itch'd, or he rubb'd his B-h, and she gave him some of Mr. M-r's Powder, which brought away a Worm, and the Child grew well; or for that another's Breath smelt strong like yours; his Belly ach'd, and he was thus recover'd : A third grated his Teeth exactly like your Child; be started in his Sleep; slept with the White of his Eyes discover'd or half open; lay stupid; was sometimes Bound, at others Loofe, and had the like Success upon taking the purging Sugar Plumbs; for altho' thefe and fome others are common Symptoms of the Diftemper F4 we

we now speak of, yet may they also attend upon others, as they do particularly some of them, upon Fevers preceeding those two very common ones, the Measles and Small-pox; and if, whilst Nature is preparing these for breaking forth, you should be forcing down the fatal Dose [as it has happen'd at some times] what unspeakable Concern must it be to a tender Parent to have been thus accessary to a Child's Death, I will leave such Parent to consider,

Let not then, I fay, the long Catalogue of Cures in an half Sheet Advertisement, any longer amuse you; for it is, I have told you, the Cultom of these cheating Empirics and knavish Quacks, to furnish you with these kind of Registers, the easier to deceive you; and if One only out of a Score have chanced to receive Benefit [and I may well justify the Word, the odds being much larger against you] you hear not a Word of the Nineteen, who either received none at all, if they were not injur'd ; but that One shall furnish a Tale for them to tell a quarter of a Year after; and I know they have been fo diligent to get Intelligence of the Succefs, that there are Perfons employ'd by them for that purpose ; tho' I deny not but such an acceptable piece of News may be

73 be sent them, for Joy that the poor Child was thus [as they call it] miraculously deliver'd of a large Worm, of such or such a Size, to be fure always the largest, tho' that is little material. This strait alarms the whole Neighbourhood, and every fick Child in the Parish [some, tho' never fo well by way of Prevention] is deem'd immediately full of Worms, when away presently to Powders, Lozenges, or Sugar-Plambs.

Upon fuch a fimple Hint as this, a worthy Citizen was infnar'd to give four of his Children fome of thefe Worm Medicines; in the Operation whereof, one of them having voided a Worm, the reft [who were well before] were forced to go to Pot, but with no better Event, than that the youngest dy'd in the working of the Medicine repeated the fecond Day [because the Worms it seems would not appear upon the first Summons] two others, being formed of better Clay, escaped; and as if the Devil had ow'd the Comfit maker a Shame, the Scout returning Home in a fort of Triumph, with the great Success of the first Operation, minuting down the Size of the Worm, and other Circumstances, to drefs up a Relation; and coming again fome Days after to hear more good News, upon BOIG CA 112 enter-entering the Threshold of the Door, and finding the Family all in Tears, went away, as the People fay, prefently, like a Dog that had burnt his Tail. In few Words, Can you believe it any thing wonderful, that forty or fifty of these faccessful Cases should be muster'd up to ferve a Turn, when more than one thoufand, I may fay truly two or three, have taken the fame Medicines, fome to very little Advantage, others to none, and the larger Number to their great Detriment or Hurt? And certainly were every Phyfician, Surgeon, or Apothecary, to give out printed Lists of those who have recover'd of fundry Distempers, even this in particular, under their Hands, you may affure your felves, there is not one that has much Business, but might inform you after the fame way, of twenty to one that these forry People are able to produce; and what they do, 'tis plain, must be at a hap hazard, for 'tis rare they ever fee the Patient, or enquire into any Circumstances, that might forbid, as well as encourage the giving fuch Remedies; or if they did, would it [through their Ignorance of the fame] fare better with them; but fend your Money and the Medicine is deliver'd right or wrong; if it cures, it will be cry'd up; if otherwife, you are to blame -19109 blame your own Credulity, and there ends the Difpute. I cannot better shut up this Paragraph, than I did one of the last; that if you will take these forts of Medicines rashly, of your own, or without better Advice, there are other, and much better Apothecaries than Mr. M-r[of late called it feems Dr. M_r] who can furnish you either with these purging Lozenges or Powders, which were stolen at first from a Dispensatory; or even the faid M-r's black Powder alfo, upon eafier Terms than he will part with it, and with this farther Advantage, that if any Accident should happen, the former will not difdain to call in better Advice, while the Quack will fooner let you die [if it were in his Power to prevent] than to fuffer a Physician to come to your Affistance, for fear his Roguery being detected, he should be called to account for the fame.

The next, and laft kind of Medicines of this fort, of which I shall take a view, are those that evacuate or empty by Urine; and these commonly are intended for the Gravel and Stone; in speaking to which Distemper, I said, I think, so much as might convince any reasonable Person, that most of them are extremely hazardous, and all of them in general unfit to be

be taken from the Hand of a Quack, or indeed any other than the learned Phyfician, seeing the Sick upon the Spot, and examining the Cafe, how circumstanc'd in every Respect, what particular kind of Remedies his present Complaint requires; for he that does otherwise, or is drawn in like the rest, by Histories of Recoveries, great Stones voided upon the Use of such or such famous Quack Remedies and Specificks, fences quite in the Dark, or in another as common a Phrase, tosses up like the Boys, Heads or Tails, whether he shall be kill'd or cur'd; for I can make it appear at any time, that for one having the good hap to be reliev'd, ten, who have fallen under my own Obfervation, have been endanger'd, and two of them, I might fay, directly murder'd. But I proceed :

Among the Chief of thefe Remedies, is the famous Tipping's Liquor [he too, forfooth, I fhould have called Doctor] diftill'd from fome of the common Plants, called by Phyficians Diaretics, that is, fuch as are remark'd for their fingular Property in caufing us to make Water. A Remedy, of which I can only fay thus much in its behalf, that I believe it to have done as little hurt to the Body, and as much to the Pocket, as most that have been this way wended; and I think has lefs to recommend mend it fo univerfally, for that the late Difpofers thereof have been meer Tradefmen, pretending [and in that respect I confess fo much the Honester] to know nothing of the Matter, farther than that by a fort of Tradition it was handed to, or bequeathed them as a Legacy [and a good one too it has been if I am rightly inform'd] and farther, that the first Proprietor had obferv'd it to do great Service in Cafes of the Stone and Gravel; notwithstanding which, if a List had been taken of all who have try'd it [I infer only from my own Knowledge of it] if five out of five and twenty have been any ways helped, it would be the highest Number would arife upon the Calculation.

Rogers his Powder is another of them, and a fuitable Medicine too at fome times, or duly administer'd, that is, when a proper Judge is by to give the Direction, I mean the learned Physician, who knows of twenty better than either of these two, whose Compositions you may find in Dr. Groenvelt [one of the best Judges of this Subject we ever had in England] his compleat Treatife of the Stone and Gravel, and see how dearly [confidering prime Cost] you pay for these Remedies, which much oftner injure than any way help you, you, unlefs off with your Money. From thence alfo you would clearly fee, were you vers'd in Phyfick, that neither one nor t' other can anfwer all the Intentions requir'd, to affilt a Perfon labouring under this cruel Diftemper. If the Proprietors fhall tell us thefe Receipts are not genuine, I will not difpute it with them, being certain there are those in Company with them, that every jot will ferve as well, and with whose Affiftance [if you can believe there is nothing farther requifite thereto than to know what will make a Man pifs] you may fet up for as famous a Stone-breaker as any of them all.

There are abundance more of these Remedies both Altering and Purging, fome of which I find have been borrow'd from the Dispensatory of Dr. Bates, such as the Lozenges for the Piles, called Trochifci Hamorrhoidales, but by their first Author, Tabulæ Divinæ; the Heart-burn Lozenges, named Tabula Cordialgica; the Worm Confetts, or Tabula Infantium, and the Tabula Vermifuge; the Ague Stomach Plaister, or Emplastrum Febrifugum Magnum, which the Romancing Translator of that Book tells you in a hundred Examples, it has not failed once, tho' I my felf who have prescrib'd it about as many times, cannot fay it has answer'd in little more than a tenth VOU.

tenth part; but it is natural to a Quack to fet forth any Remedy a twentieth beyond its Merits, by which the Reader of fuch Treatifes is often milguided, and drawn into an Error, fometimes of dangerous Confequence.

Thefe, with others I could mention, difguis'd under borrow'd Names, have been [as I faid just now] stolen out of a Dispensatory; and for which, some of these ignorant Pretenders setting up for Doctors, are much beholden to Williams Salmon, Ring-leader, or King of the Quacks, who by profaning, as it were, this most excellent Science, fo far as lay in his Power, was for teaching every one to turn Empiric, at least to be his own Phyfician; with what Success the many fatal Miscarriages by means of one Drug taken for another [four stout young Fellows in one Day thus lately destroy'd] the many Scores who have lost their Lives by Mistakes of another fort, that is, taking one Distemper for another; the many hundreds, more especially of the young ones, carry'd off in the Measles' and Small-pox by their skilful Nurfes [as they are called] Sack and Saffron, with their Treacle, but rather treacherous and plaguing Waters, together with the Worm Medicines; the thousands of old ones in common Fevers, as much butcher'd by the large Doses of Venice nice Treacle and Mithridate, Snake-root and Brandy, or the like, given indiscreetly right or wrong to make them Sweat; and the ten thousands of all scrts, under the Notion of Restoratives or rich Cordials [barbaroufly fo denominated] dry'd up with Hectics, or elfe drown'd with Dropfies. Thefe, I fay, with divers others, do fufficiently inform us, what have been the dire Effects of teaching ignorant, but bold Men, to be tampering out of their Sphere, or meddling with Medicines, and of instructing the good Women to diffil Strong-waters. Happy, doubtless, had it been for hundreds of great and good Families in this Kingdom, if neither the Man nor Woman therein, had dipp'd into an Affair of this weighty Confequence, but continu'd in their fafer Ignorance of these Matters; and happier still, had they not been feduced or drawn away by the fair Promifes of fome villainous Pretender to this Knowledge : Than which, indeed, it might be allow'd nothing was easier to be attain'd, if nothing were required thereto but knowing what would move by Vomit, purge by Stool, force Urine, or make us Sweat; or, on the contrary, what will stop or restrain these several Evacuations. If Phyfick terminated here, What need of turning over large Volumes? Of attend-82429 ing ing upon Diffections? Of torturing or racking our Brains about Phylical Difquifitions? Since one Hour's converse with Culpeper, or his Brother Salmon, would sufficiently instruct us in those Matters. But doubtlefs, many of you, however foreign the Subject is to your common Study and Conversation, will not, after what has been already faid thereon, need Arguments to convince you, that to know when these several Intentions of evacuating or emptying either way, must be answer'd, when suffer'd at all, how far to run on, and when to be taken up, so as may best conduce. to the Sick Man's Profit, and re-establish lost or impaired Health, are still greater and farther Requisites to this difficult Profession ; and that this Knowledge is not to be obtain'd but by great Learning, profound Meditation, diligent Study, constant Enquiries into the secret Recessof Nature, a thorough Knowledge of the Parts [even the minutest] of our Bodies, as well in their States of Sickness as of Health; without which, the latter can be but lamely set to rights; laitly, multiply'd Experience, and faithful Registers of Practice, are absolutely n'eceffary to a Phyfician ; whilft as profound an Ignorance of all these, provided there be a large Stock of Alfurance, called otherwife undaunted daunted Impudence, is all that is necessary to the Sellers of these Remedies, or to set up a Quack.

CONTAINING,

A Display of the present Set of Pretenders to Clap-curing, giving Judgment upon Urine, &c. with their Frauds and Abuses: Rules also to know, and Cantions against them.

A Mong many others, I think fcarce any Difease has given greater Encouragement to Quacks and Empirics, than this called the French-Pox; which detested and loathsome Distemper has this Peculiar [as if Heaven, to show a more than common Displeasure thereat, had so appointed it] that even in this Life the sick Person should be doubly punish'd, first of all with his Disease, and after by the ignorant and knavish Management of some fome Quacking Pretender to the Cure thereof.

What has chiefly given Opportunity to these People, I mean the faid Pretenders, has been the Difgrace and Infamy, with which [not without Reafon] the modelt and fober Part of the World have entertain'd it : And hence the poor Sinner takes Sanctuary any where rather than among his Friends and Acquaintance; and being told by one of Satan's Emiffaries, thefe Sons of Belial, in a Bill deliver'd him as he walks the Streets; or perhaps looking up at some of their Letters Patents stuck upon a Post where he is making Water, that at such a Place, the Golden Head or Ball, a Light at the Door in the Even, and good Shelter to bolt in, or some Back-door into such an Alley, left open for that purpose; that here, I say, with a three half Crowns Bolus, two or three of them at most; a half Crown Box of Pills, or a five Shilling Pot of Electuary up one Pair of Stairs, &c. or if they are minded to go higher [for there are Medicines of all Prices as well as Mistresses] one Guinea for a Specifick Gallys pot, with another for a little Bottle of three or four Spoonfuls of Hodge-podge, they may presently be put in order : By these Means, I fay, the poor unfortunate Patient is decoy'd, and being once enter'd [especially G 2 with with some of them] must not only content himself to accept oftentimes of a Pox in the room of his Clap, but at fome times also, that he may purchase his Liberty to apply fomewhere elfe, must compound upon what Terms the Undertaker pleafes; at the best, when his Pocket has been drain'd perhaps of fifty instead of one half Crown, of threescore for three, or of four or five Guineas in the place of one [for here, tho' they begin high, they have fooner done, the Quack playing at Hide and Seek, and not daring to own himfelf] they may, I fay, [and glad they come off fo] withdraw in much worfe, at best in the fame Plight they came. And thus I have known some of these miserable Patients run up and down the Town, from one Quack to another, in hopes of finding more Skill and Honefty, till they have been half ruined, fome of them quite undone; and had not fome charitable Phyfician, or compassionate Surgeon stept in, an Hospital must have been their last Refuge; where, tho' very many are yearly recover'd, yet do great Numbers perish under this Distemper, now grown too powerful for Art, and fall as Victims to the Ignorance, first of all, of some Empirical Pretender.

You

You will fay probably, that some of these People who put out Bills, and print Advertisements, must surely be able Men, for that they publish Books concerning the Distemper, and apply solely or chiefly to the Study thereof : I grant they do indeed put up for Authors, and fet forth Books, but were your felves Judges of the Subject they debate, you would need no greater Evidence of their Ignorance, as well as evil Defign; for tho' they have fome tolerable good Books to Steal from or Plunder, yet fo wretchedly unskill'd are they in both Terms of Art and Method, that they have only jumbled up a heap of incoherent Matter, interlarded with falfe Latin, flat Nonfense, or Sense insipid, which is only fit to amuse poor ignorant People, who are ready to take for granted, that he who can write a Book, must, as the Objection implies, be some great Scholar; and having touched upon this Subject of Book-writing, fo ingenious in their Confeffions have fome of them been in this Point, that being ask'd the Question by fome of their particular Acquaintance of more Knowledge, How they could publish fuch Impertinencies to the learned World! they have answer'd with their Predecessor Saffold, They writ only to amuse the unlearned; if Scholars laugh'd they valued G 3

lued not, there being Fools enough to ferve their Ends therein. And indeed to be plain, they have never printed any thing upon this Topick, unless foolish Descriptions of the Diftemper in general, and as ridiculous Notes [the greatest part] by which you are to know your felves infected; such as when you have a Heat or Pricking of your Urine, with a Running of some Matter from your private Parts, or Sores about the same, after you have been deserving for it, it is a shroud sign you have got the Disease, which the most Ignorant can now tell as well as themfelves, and amounts to no more, than that when you are Clapt, you are Clapt. To these are added, some which have no more Relation to this, than to fome other Diftem. pers; but truly their main Defign is not only to make it appear you are Clapt, but if you ever were fo, and have been however well cur'd, that you now are Poxt, as the Author of the Syphilis [I don't mean the Modern one, for that's as much a Trick upon you as the reft] has well obferv'd; and now it shall escape them hard, if taking Advantage of your Weaknefs, or your own natural Fear and Jealoufy, they Dofe you not again; nay well for you, if you can avoid one of their Salivations, by which, were you to know how how many unhappy Creatures [kill'd under this Courfe through meer Unskilfulnefs,] were carry'd out of their Houfes at Midnight, [fome, their Friends not knowing at the fame time what was become of them] into a Church-yard which tells no Tales, it would make you much more fhy of coming under thefe Peoples Roofs, than at Noon-day you were of fneaking into the Brothel, where the firft Scene was laid for the enfuing Tragedy.

In fhort, there are none of these Books have other Meaning than one of their Bills deliver'd about the Streets ; for you may find, as they are continually difperfing one, so are they, in some News-Paper, as conftantly Advertifing the other, [for few People would come to these prick'd and vappid Wines, if a new Bufb were not constantly to be hung out] and the Advertifing of these Books, is much more expensive to them than the whole Impreffion was at first, which, without this way of Trumpeting to gather a Crowd and get them off, must either be fold to the Chandlers Shops at two Pence per Pound, or lie upon their Hands. The true Defign, as I have told you, is only to promote the Sale of their Quack Remedies, which you are therein acquainted they have to difpose of; and altho' one of their Chiefs has lately told you in a doughty Performance of this kind, that he publisheth the Same for the Common Good, as he Prints his Bills to prevent your being imposed on by Pretenders [of which Number he himself is one]; or as another tells you in his, the Story of the wonderful Virtues of his Bolus, may sound like a Quack Romance [as in Truth it is]; nevertheless, I fay, there is no one [unless they be Fools or Children] but may eafily fee they mean the direct contrary, or instead of the Publick Good, their own Private Interest : And truly what better is it that you can expect from fuch People, not one of which was ever bred up either to Physic or Chirurgery, but were originally Weavers, Taylors, Merry Andrews or Jack Puddings to fome Mountebank of the like or the same Extraction. The Rife of the present Set [when R-s, they say, fall out, Truth comes to Light] we have from one of their own Gang; thus one of them has told us in Print also, That Spink, who had got an M. D. in the Title Page of his Pamphlets, and had Impudence enough to dedicate the last he writ to the Company of Surgeons, was a Taylor; that the famous Dr. Rivers [as he stiles himself] was a Foot-boy, and used to deliver out his Maßer Camm's Quack Bills : Camm himself tells us, He knows more chan all of them, for

for that he liv'd a Year or two with a Country Apothecary; and having learnt to wipe the Counter on a Market Day against the Cuftomers came in, as well as the Pots and Glasses, by a fort of Inspiration, he was gifted with the Knowledge of the Virtues of their Contents; and for fome Reafon or other [best known to himfelf7 being tir'd with the Servitude, he stroles to London [the best Quack-Market in the Kingdom] falls to conning of his Books, where he prefently found Mercurius Dulcis, mix'd up with any Purging Pill, would cleanse off the Matter of a Clap; that Salt Peter would remove the Heat of Urine, and Turpentine heal up the Breach. With this fmall ftock of Understanding, but much greater of what the World calls Cunning, he opens Shop, that is, falls to publishing Quack Bills; and now at last he fays he has procur'd [that is for his Money purchas'd] an University or College Cap, tho' in likelihood it is no better, if it be other, than a Scotch Pedler's Bonnet. The third of them, I mean the noted Dr. Wright [I have been told by one who had it from his Fellow Clerk] was put out to a Scrivener, fo that his Knowledge also in this part of Medicine, came by Infusion; and, indeed, if all be true he fays, he has perform'd greater Wonders

ders with his Medicaments than all the reft; for he tells us, they will discharge the Pox Urinally, i.e. by the way, or under the shape of a Urinal, or in plainer Terms, that they will make you pifs Urinals, for this furely is the true Construction of this learned Doctor's Phrase; being a concise Man, he was unwilling to add another Syllable for fear of spoiling the found of the Word. But leaving the Education of fome, I will now let you into the villainous Practices of others of them, by which you may be inform'd, they have more ways to get Money than by felling of a Box of Pills; which is by means of their Setting Dog, or Servant fo call'd. Thus if they fee a Perfon in good Habit, one of these who is placed for that purpose hard by, in the Close of the Evening [the usual Time of Business] watches his coming out, dogs him Home, and brings back Intelligence, who, or what he is; of which Knowledge the Quack is now to make his Advantage; for some Days after, as if passing accidentally by, he looks into the Shop, if a Tradefman, and feeing the Master behind the Counter, or perhaps at his Door, he makes a Nod and fo goes on ; or if a private House, the next time he comes, he gives him to understand, that the Day before, his Business calling ling him to such a Place, he durst have sworn he see him go into such a House; but no matter, for he was always tender of a Gentleman's Reputation. By this the poor Gentleman finding himfelf discover'd, must now buy his Peace as well as he can ; that is, he must either take more Doses to as little purpose as before, for which he paid his Money as he had them ; or the Quack telling him his Cafe is uncommon, a Pox of the worst sort, and he must be Salivated : In order to which he offers him the best Chamber and Bed in his House, provides every thing for him, telling him farther, that now knowing him to be an honest Gentleman, and a Man of Worth, he will have nothing more of him till he is well. Under this Dilemma, the unhappy Patient must comply, or if he leaves him, compound for Secrecy, and lie at a Knave's Mercy.

To confirm this, I fhall make a fhort Recital of a Cafe I had from the Gentleman's Mouth who was concern'd. A Perfon of good Subftance and Figure alfo in his own Country, coming up to London upon fome Suit in Law, in feeking for Pleasure [give me leave for once to quote one of the Quack Bills] met with a Clap, and one of the like Bills being a few Days after put into his Hands, as he was a Stranger to the Town, and taking all for Gofpel

Gospel he read in Print, especially finding the Doctor was one of our before-mentioned Licensed Physicians, he trudges away in the Evening, and by the help of the Light in the Lanthorn over the Door, presently gets under Covert in the Passage, knocks at the inward one, when being admitted, the Servant rings a Bell, and down comes the D-l of a Doctor, in his Velvet Cap, Silk Gown and Slippers, where the Bargain was quickly struck; instead of an eighteen Penny Box of Pills, five Guineas were paid down, and [it being found in the usual Cant, a hot and fiery, or dry corroding Pox, at the first of the Infection] upon Difmiffion five more; for which, this modest Undertaker, seeing him appear like an honest Gentleman, would credit him upon Honour: But to go on with our Story; when he had purg'd him pretty well, a Swelling fell down upon his private Parts, at which, the Patient [as alfo the Doctor] was alarm'd, not knowing, doubtlefs, what Method to take with it; however, he gives him fome Ointment, and goes to work with his Turpentine Pills, as the Gentleman by their Smell apprehended them to be, and as they after appear'd to a better Judge: The Swelling still encreasing, and the poor Man in great Mifery, he acquaints his his Landlord, the Inn-keeper, with his Misfortune, and was by him perfwaded to fend away prefently for a reputable Surgeon in the Neighbourhood, who in few Days unftopp'd the Dam, that is, removed the Obstruction of, and finish'd his Cure. The Patient having conceal'd, as he thought, both who he was, as well as where he lodg'd, took no farther Notice of his Quack Doctor, thinking the five Guineas he had already paid him fufficient for the Work done, especially fo incompleat; but a Setting Dog long before had brought Intelligence of his Name and Place of Refidence, as well here in Town as in the Country; and he was no fooner got Home, but a Letter came after him to demand the other five Guineas, or that he must expect by the next to hear farther. Upon which, the Gentleman, for fear his Repute might fuffer by fuch a Story taking Air, writes immediately to his Hoft in Town, and orders him, for Peace fake, togo and pay the five Guineas, and take a Receipt for the fame as he should think fit, which was accordingly done; and Matters lay now quiet for about three Months, when a fecond Letter was fent down to let him know, that being in great want of Money, he was obliged to fend him Word, that there were were still twenty Guineas due to him, and which he expected in a few Days, or elfe he might see cause to repent perhaps that he had not complied with the Contents. Hereupon the frighten'd Gentleman rides Post to London, and in Company with his Landlord [having the Receipt with him] hastens to the Quack's House, expostulates the Cafe, fhows the Receipt, and defires to know what he meant. The other tells him, he should not make many Words, for that would be to little Purpose; it was true, he had received the ten Guineas as were contracted for first of all, but he must have twenty more for keeping Council, or elfe both Town and Country (bould know he had been a Whoring, as they would if he pretended to stand Tryal. Here, in short, was the Conclusion, either to prepare for putting in Bail, or to pay the Money, and take a Penal Bond of what Forfeiture he pleafed, if any farther Trouble was given upon this Account, for which the next Day was allow'd to confider. His Landlord advis'd him by all means to ftand the Risque, offering readily to be his Bail, and told him he was fure the Rogue would be Hang'd, before he would go forward with a Suit, in which he must appear fo notorious a Villain. But the Country Gentleman was faint hearted, and [as he told 95 told me after] would fooner have paid five hundred than have appear'd in Court, or had his Name to have been only mention'd upon this Score; and fo for his own Ease, through this foolish Timorousness, the Matter was compremis'd, as it were next Day betwixt themfelves, the Innkeeper knowing nothing of the Matter, and he thought he came off tolerably well, confidering what Hands he was got into, by the Abatement of five Guineas; fo here were twenty five Guineas, of which fifteen were paid for Secrecy, and ten for a pretended Cure. The fame Fellow [as I heard it whisper'd some years ago] demanded one hundred Pound for keeping Council [call'd Husb-Money] of a wealthy Citizen he had first Dog'd or Set, to know who he was; upon which a Suit of Law commenc'd, but was flifled, as the other, before the Tryal came on, by a Composition; the Defendant being partly fearful of being expos'd, and affur'd that the Plaintiff was already a Prifoner; fo that by fuing this Beggar after for Cost and Damage, he should only meet with a Beggar's Portion, and be made a Town Talk into the Bargain.

Thefe, I can assure our Reader, are Matters of Fact; and tho' I cannot fay all of them are arriv'd to this Height of Villainy ; lainy; I will fay this, and juftify it too, that the moft knowing of them are not able to do you half the Service [notwithftanding the ten, fifteen, twenty, or thirty Years Experience they daily boaft of] as one of the meaneft Surgeons about the Town, I might fay an Apprentice of three Years ftanding, whofe Mafter is converfant in that way of Bufinefs, and with whom alfo you are much fafer as to Reputation, and keeping of your Council [as they call it] thofe great Motives to your engaging first of all among thefe Back-door People, with their Lamps and Lanthorns, fome of them very dark ones too; but therein fuited to their dark Defigns.

As to an Objection that may be raifed, that if fome of thefe People did not anfwer the Patient's Expectation, or were not cured by them, their Trade muft foon be at an end, and no Body would come near them? This, I fay, is eafily remov'd, by what many of them, over their Liquor have acknowledg'd, viz. that they never expect the fame Perfon, in the common way of asking for a Box of Pills, a Pot of Electuary, or a Bolus, to come twice; if they will be fo civil, they are welcome, but unexpected; there are new Faces enough to fupply the old ones Places,

Places, who, as I have told you, run from one of these Folks to another, till they have not one Penny left in their Pockets; when at length having no Friends neither to affift them, St. Bartholomen and St. Thomas are the Patron Saints they pray unto for Relief; and if fuch Prayers are heard, I would fay, are regarded, they are fome of them fent thence to King fland; others to the Lock in Southwark. But yes admitting fome have the good, I might fay rather the bad Hap, to remove your prefent Complaint, yet it is generally by the way of Exchange, stopping your Running at any Rate, as fome Books they have direct them, and damming up the Poifon: when, if after you complain, they tell you that you are cur'd, but you have now either the Scorbatic Itch [if you are broke out] or the Rheumatism [if pain'd in your Limbs] when still if you go from them to others of their Brethren in Iniquity; were it really no other, you are now told you have a thorough Pox; however, altho? you are truly in bad Condition, if you can Spare three half Growns, you may have a Bolus will drive it out of your Flesh, nay your Bones themselves, back again [whence is came last] into your Blood; raise him but three more, the second shall whisk it all thence into the Skin; and being come thus fata H far, methinks 'tis great pity [tho' you borrow the Money of three feveral Friends] you should not carry this honest Man the three last, that scoures your Hide of all the Pocky Filth, and is to make you cleaner [at least in your Pocket] than a Penny.

It would be too tedious, should I pretend to acquaint you with all the Wiles and Stratagems, made use of by these fcandalous and most ignorant People, to beguile you of your Money, and if that were the worft, among the Wealthier fort, the Abuse might be the easier put up; but here lies your Misfortune, in that having a falfe Ground Work laid among them for Cure, whilft you are over-purg'd by fome, nor fufficiently by others, and with fome ill fuited Purgatives by all, at least such as are less fit for your particular Cafe in some respect or other, the Distemper infinuates farther; and then you mult after undergo a harder Penance, perhaps to the utmost Prejudice of your Affairs in the World, being now ftrictly kept up to clear you of some inveterate Ulcers, sinking Noses, lost Palates, rotten Skulls and Shin-bones, pocky Confumptions, with other the lamentable Offspring of this cruel Distemper, first of all ill treated by these designing Men. of Das ; and Sair othis sound?

Let me but appeal to your own Reafon; how can you think it possible, a poor forry Taylor, a Rascally pretending Fortuneteller or knavish Astrologer, an ignorant Foot-man, a mad runnagade Scrivener, a poor Country Apothecaries Boy [however now enrich'd by your Spoils] should be more able to help you, than the great Number of learned, experienc'd, judicious and honest Physicians and Surgeons with which this City does every where abound; to whom you may apply, and with whom you have no need to fear these Impositions upon you, and taking all together, for much less Expence you are often at [thus running from one Quack to another, under this cover of Secrecy being more expos'd] you might have a well-grounded, and confequently a found Cure; and 'tis indeed to these you must have recourse very frequently at long run, when the former have done all they can [under pretence of Cure] to spoil and beggar you.

Be not then any longer beguil'd of drawn in, to expect Relief from these specious, but vain and empty Promises by a fingle Bolus, a Box of Pills, a Pot of Electuary, or the like; for they know in their own Consciences [if they know any thing of the Matter] that forty of them in many of your Cases, will do no Service; H 2 nor, nor, if they can fix you by their Setters, at your first coming, will you find that you can get off fo; or admit you do, to what purpose do you throw away a half Crown for a Box of Pills? five Shillings for a Pot of Electuary? a Guinea for another not worth one half of the former? three half Crowns for three Penny worth of Turpeth. Minerale [a Chymical Preparation of that Name] another Guinea for two Pennyworth of nafty Spirits, impregnated with some Virtue of one fort or other, but even the Author knows not rightly what, from a few dry Chips? But indeed, as I have faid already, 'tis not only fo much Money flung away, but running from one of these Ignorants to another, the Opportunity loft of a substantial Cure, whilst your Disease was recent; whereas the fame may be now probably fo fix'd upon you, that nothing lefs than a Salivation will throw it off.

From these Guinea Packets, called otherwife the Specific Electuary and Elixir, I think it neceffary to deliver a few Words, before I leave this part of my Subject, because I perceive they have made more Noise than any of the rest.

These two are, I think, the same honest Man's [if they are not a Club of K—s] who is the Author of the samous mous Anodyne Necklace, and feveral other Curioficies, left, as we fay, if his Knave of Spades won't do to win the Game, he may be ready to play Pam, and together with his Partner Dr. C----n, to fnack all the Money was laid down; whether the first was the Inventer, and the last only to Hand or Midwive it into the World, is uncertain; but fure enough that P-C-n's Name was thought very expedient to fet off the Goods, and promote their Sale; and by which 'tis as evident, many hundreds have been enfnar'd; for the unfortunate and heedlefs Patient, being inform'd daily by fome Advertisement, that a little Gally-pot of a new discover'd Remedy will restore him, after so many others he had taken ineffectually; fending now for one of the learned Doctor's, or the Prieft's Books, and finding here the nice Divisions, with the Phylosophical Descriptions of the Causes, Signs and various Symptoms of this Distemper, he cannot now think otherwife, but that doubtlefs he must be fase, and as fecret as he pleases, because he need but step into a Tavern, and tip the Drawer a Tefter for himfelf, with a Guinea [the purchase Money] to fetch him the Sovereign all-healing Specifick, which having fwallow'd by little Morfels, according to the Direction, and finding him-H 3 himself no better than from his Pill-acoshee [as he calls it] he had bought of the Apothecary for lefs than a twentieth part of the Price, but rather that he is growing still worfe; however, looking again over the bewitching Treatife, he there finds the Author fo honeft a Man as to tell him, there are different Poxes, according as there are differing Habits, and therefore [just Man] he does not, nor cannot warrant that one Pot shall cure all; some need but half one [the Remainder may be fav'd for the next Clap, and fo you may cheat the Quack Priest if you can] some a whole one, some two [oh rare Bite] and some probably, but they must be exceedingly unlucky, may require three. Now our Patient aforefaid, believing himfelf one of thefe, the fecond Pot is fent for to as little Advantage, and then the third in like manner; when perceiving himfelf bubbled, he has his Choice, either to keep his own Counfel and fay nothing of the Matter; or if minded to be recorded for a Fool or a Whore-monger, to take the Spesifick feller before a Magistrate [for the Money now will not be return'd otherwise] at least to tell who he is, and make Oath, or declare he might as well have taken the Contents of the three Gally-pots and thrown them into the Privy at the first hand, hand, as he had at the second, for any Benefit he had receiv'd thereby. Now who, I fay, thinks fit to do this, among the many hundreds who have been thus impos'd on? No, no, the Junto knew this too well, for even the pooreft Sinner that has perhaps borrow'd the Money [as feveral I know have done who have been thus abused] if but a menial Servant, is afraid to be seen upon this Errant, much more the Man of Note, the eminent Citizen, or the little-fuspected Merchant. I have, I own, as I thought it a piece of Justice, advised forty of these cheated and deluded People, to go and demand their Money: To fome who ventur'd, it was refus'd, and there was no Remedy but by a Warrant to have them before my Lord Mayor, or fome other Justice of the Peace; when rather than go thus far, they have chose to fit down, as we fay, by their Lofs, curfing the Quack and his Accomplices, who for very good Reason play leaft in fight.

I have had, within ten Days of the Whiting of this, two Examples of this kind, the one a poor Woman abused by her Husband, finding herself out of Order, and having cause to suspect the Matter, applies with the deluded Multitude to the Specifick Remedy, which not answering the end, she H 4 was was told she should have bought the Elixir, fold at the same Place; when having pawn'd her Cloaths to advance another Guinea, this likewise was purchas'd, but as ineffectually as the former, and fo would fifty more, if fhe had laid them out at the fame Market. Taking Pity of this honest, but miserably poor Creature, I prefcrib'd what I thought her Cafe requir'd to the Apothecary, and coming about a Fortnight after to thank me, fhe told me she had now her Cure; the Apothecary taking her Word for feven Shillings to foon as the could pay him : The fecond a poor Errand Boy at a Tavern, had borrow'd the Guinea of three of his Acquaintance, which, tho? he had little reason for it, he might as well have thrown into the Thames, as the infignificant Electuary down his Throat, for any Relief he was like to have by it.

I have now by me a Lift of forty odd of these deluded Patients; some of the better fort being cur'd afterwards by my own Prescriptions to their Apothecary; others drein'd of their Money before-hand by these Means, and now Objects of the publick Charity, were recommended to the Hospitals. A Woman of the Town, whilst I was Writing this, applying for Advice on the like occasion, during my visiting her under a Salivation, told me of her own accord, that that more than a Score of her Acquaintance of both Sexes, had been cheated by these Books and Medicines; and tho' some of them were enough scandalous, according to her Account of their Conversation in this Nature, yet none of them had Assurance enough to make their personal Appearance and demand their Money, as the Pamphleteer infinuates they may do, yet under some certain Restrictions, if they are so minded.

It remains that I take off one mighty Objection raised in their behalf, That fo many People coming in, and that voluntarily, as the Advertifers make us, at least, believe, to return their publick Thanks for signal Recoveries, Juch Cures, as [if still you can believe them] have been look'd on by the most eminent Physicians as incurable; left off as such by others; broke out in five hundred Places; some the Evil, some the Scorvy, some the Pox, and some again the Rheumatism : But stay, I think we have another Specifick for this last, and the Gout; and the Bait being readily swallow'd, doubt you not but you will quickly have either these already invented, to perform every thing; or fome others, after like manner trump'd upon you, to make the Bed-ridden start up and cut Capers, and every old Man or Woman as blith and bonny bonny as their Grand Children: But hastening to my Argument, I fay it may be objected, if there were not fomething in this Medicine extraordinary, how comes it these mighty Feats are thus perform'd, as the Certificates here imply? To which the fame Answer, or much like, will ferve that was made before to those Bedrolls of Recoveries, some true, some false, or Catalogues of Cures by Worm-Powders, and other Quack Remedies dispers'd in publick, or after the same way.

That the Medicine may be good in many respects, tho' not so good as you may have from any legal Practitioner [where you have clearer Directions by Word of Mouth, and your Cafe rightly imparted, are upon lefs hazardous Grounds, than going thus hit or miss to work] for an eighth part of the Expence. That many People have had Sores dry'd up by using it, which have made great Appearance, and are never lessen'd, you may be fure, in the Certificates, that some in particular Scorbutic Breakings out; others with Evil ones, fo call'd; others, lastly, with Venereal ones may bave found Relief; all this I acknowledge poffible: And yet at the fame time can fee nothing more than our common Calomelanos Tthe Name of a Mercurial Preparation, and the Basis most likely of theirs] incorbonny incorporated with other Medicines, and prudently administer'd [which these Peoples, I can affure you, are not, for they neither know who the Patient is, nor what particular or direct repugnant Indication he or she may labour under] will perform; and it would be very strange, if they could not cull out one or two in a Month to flouriss who, durst they appear, especially in Cases of the Foul Disease, are at the same time cursing them in their Hearts, for picking their Pockets, and doing them no manner of Service.

But farther, as in those of the other kind, if you observe, you will find the Generality of their Scenes are laid amongst none of the most Creditable, or Perfons of almost any Repute, even in Distempers where it were no Scandal to have it known, but ufually with poor, filly, yet fome of them perhaps well-meaning Perfons. Of some I have enquir'd my self, and found so little of the Miracle, that the Difease never had any thing in it formidable or difficult of Cure, under the Inspection of an Artift; but having, very likely, baffled some ignorant Barber, or stroling Empirical Pretender, which they have oftentimes the Folly [to give it the mildest Name I can] to call the most learned Physicians or Surgeons; nay, nay, I have known twenty times, when three fuch Quacks have been called the whole College of Physicians, or if, supposing they had once given Attendance here, and taken but one fingle Dose of Physick by their Directions Etho' more probably they might only go for Advice, as many of them come to us daily, and go back again without any Prescription, only hearing what we have to fay to them] they here, I fay, make bold with this venerable Name, as if that learned Body were unable to accomplish the Work that had been now done: Some others I found wavering in their Stories, disowning many things of Moment also in the Certificate, and which [having had a view of their particular Circumstances before; tho' no otherwise concern'd than by advising some of them to the Hospital, being very poor] I knew to be so: Others, again, being confessedly corrupted or brib'd thereto, had given Liberty to the Advertiser to put in what he pleas'd, promising if there should be Enquiry [yet many times there is none, some People taking all upon Trust, as believing no Person could so falsify] they would vouch all, if they feat them first a Copy of such Advertisement, that they might be prepar'd for the Work.

Upon these, and the like fandy Foundations, is the wretched Superstructure laid, and by these Wiles the unthinking Mul-

Multitude enfnar'd, great Numbers of indigent or necefficous People to their utter Undoing; and a reasonably good Medicine [if this were to be allow'd as fuch] given thus at random, might very likely have no better Success; for none can act beyond the proper Sphere of its Activity, and a much better than this is, I can affure you, deliver'd out this way, where the Patient only can judge for himfelf, or has no other Encouragement than that it has done such a Person good, who was, as he is told, just in his Condition, [tho' in reality it might essentially be diversify'd] and therefore why should it not cure him. The best Re-medy, I say, on Earth, thus only commended by one unskilful Perfon, and taken by another still more ignorant of the Cafe in all its Cirumstances; for one that receives Benefit, nine shall be no whit the better, and five of this Number, not improbably prejudiced by its particular Impropriety one way or other, to their as particular or fingular Habits, or fome other unheeded Circumstances not to be provided for in this way of Administration; and I am ready to think, did the People who go to buy either this Electuary which may have fome, or the Elixir which has not one good Property, for each of which they are to lay down a Guinea

Guinea, did they believe, I fay, it were nine to one that it would hit their Cafe. they would doubtless confider farther of it; and I am fully fatisfy'd I have made the modesteft Computation the fame will bear; for were it possible to discover the Truth, by the Touchstone of every fingle Testimony of those who have try'd it, I would lay these odds my felf of one hundred Guineas to ten, that not fo much as one in ten were one Pin the better for either of them: But no Matter, whilst the Latin Proverb implies, That the Smell of Gain, even from any thing, is to some People in the World, exceeding sweet and grateful.

Before I bid adieu to this Remedy, I must let you know, that a Surgeon of my Acquaintance, perfonating the Patient, applied himself to Dr. C----n, feigning very great Complaints, especially of Nocturnal Pains in his Head, Shoulders and Shins, arifing from a pretended Infection gotten some Years before, and therefore he defired he would be fo candid as to let him have his real Thoughts whether or no he might depend on the Specific Remedy, fo much recommended, for this Cure, or what other Courfe he must take to obtain the same, for he was minded to put himself under his Direction; Guinea to to whom the Doctor, believing doubtlefs he should make better Earnings than in fnacking part of the Profit of a Gainea Gally-pot, Sir, Jays he, the Specific is a very pretty Composition in some Infections, but to deal plainly with you, it will not reach your Cafe; nor will any other Remedy [if there were a better than the Specific] than a Salivation. Truly, Doctor, fays the Surgeon, now making himself known, I am of your Mind, yet cannot chuse but wonder that you, who know much better, should fuffer your Name to be used to countenance that Roguish Cheat that is carry'd on to the great Detriment of fo many poor People, feveral of whom I have had under my own Care, when you and your Accomplices have got all the Money they had from them. Upon this more Words arifing, great Threats also following on both fides, the Contest ended, and the Surgeon left him to do what he thought fit, which was to take all in good part, and put up the Affront, least more Noise might have been, attended with fome other Difadvantage. icaping, yet.

I cannot fee there will need farther Arguments to convince any Man, who is not, as they fay, wilfully deaf to all; that there is no Security in a Dependance upon any one of these Empirical or Quack Reme-

Remedies; or to prove, that the Authors of them have any more in view, than to raife their own Fortunes upon the Ruins of some poor People, and tricking others by their plausible Tales and Inventions out of their Money; and that confequently, whoever is at first able to raise five or ten Pounds for feeing a Phylician, or to fatisfy an able Surgeon, will not only lay out his Money better, but find himself also at less Expence [all things confider'd] by the one half; chiefly in that he will much fooner have a good and fubstantial Cure, and be set out of danger of a Relapse; for what, alas! will it avail, if you should be patch'd up a little by one Quack's Box of Pills, a fecond's Bolus, or a third's Electuary; throwing away, fourthly, two or three Guineas for the Specific Bottles and Gally-pots, lofing feveral Weeks, if not as many Months of your Time; fifthly, lumping it with another for the Sum I at first mention'd; hence worse than ever taken in by a fixth to be Salivated, there rifquing your Life, or if efcaping, yet [for want of Skill in this nice Point of Practice, for there is more in it, believe me, than knowing what will make you Spit] some time after relapsing and growing worfe than ever; fpoil'd thus, at length a larger Sum may be requir'd, and C. and well-deferved too, by the judicious Arrift, if poffible to recover you : Befides, we have already told you, that this Method of thus retailing their Remedies by the half Crown, five Shillings, three half Crowns, ten Shillings, or the Guinea and thirty or forty Shilling Packets [for fuch also there are fold by the Generous and Charitable Quacks, under the Titles of Phyficians and Surgeons] is but to draw you in; and being once enter'd, you must still repeat where you began, or begin again with a fecond, third, fourth, Grc. as aforefaid ; when, cafting up your Sum total, it is a Chance if you don't find that before you are got half way to your Journies end, it has colt you more Pounds than you were told in their lying Balls and Books, it would do Shillings. To how many [finding who they are] have they, not under Pretext of Credit, made themselves, as it were, Penfioners for some Years, receiving by the Week, the Month, or Quarter, so much Money, what they please now to demand? How many have been forced to pawn their Watches, their Cloaths; nay, the Beds they lay upon, to make Satisfaction, rather than be exposed to the World, or lose fome forry lives lybood by the Loss of their Reputation, now lying at these Peoples Mercy? by which the meaners tapa-

If thefe or the like Relations, grounded upon real Facts, and many fad Inftances of which are Weekly brought into our Hofpitals, having firft been ftripp'd of all by fuch like Methods; if thefe, I fay, are not fufficient to open your Eyes, and let you fee where you are going, when you apply your felves to thefe most ignorant, and basely defigning People, what will, unless your own dear bought, and now perhaps too late, Experience thereof?

I know it is the fettled, not only Saying, but real Opinion, of some, If the People will be deceiv'd, let the People be deceiv'd; but I think the Expression harsh and utterly Uncharitable; nor can I believe any of you would willingly be thus impos'd on : but that it is always through fome kind of Ignorance of the Subject, wherein a Cheat is difficultly discover'd; or an over Credulity, by taking Falfhood for the Truth [a Snare being fo cunningly laid in your way, and the fame fo artfully difguifed] that you suffer your felves to be thus abused. From all which, that I may farther refcue you, and fet you out of the Power [if you perfift not in the fame Credulity or Easiness of Belief] of these Destroyers both of your Health and Wealth, I shall here [according to my Promise] lay down fome Rules, by which the meaneft Capacity, city, may be able to diftinguish between an Able and Honest Physician or Surgeon, and an Ignorant and Knavish Empiric or Impostor.

First then, if you happen to meet with any Phylick Book, how learnedly foever the Author may feem to you to handle his Argument ; yet if you find him talking of any Secret, of which he is Master, or way of Cure peculiar to himself, which for very particular Reasons he is not to divulge; and more especially, if in any part of the said Treatise he boasts of his own Remedies, enters their Names with great Encomiums of their Virtues, but tells you not express what they are, as well as what they will do, or in short fignifies, that you can purchase them of him only, you may depend upon it, the Author, let him be who he will, is no other than a Quack, and the very Defign of publishing fuch Book, means nothing more than a Quack Bill : If you observe, you will find the fame as often Advertis'd in the News Papers [fometimes the Title Page alfo of the Book fluck upon Pofts] as his own, or others Bills are given about the Streets, by which he finds his Account [drawing in the unwary] fo great, as to think it worth while to be at twice the Charge perhaps in Advertifing, as the whole Im. preffion of his Pamphlet coft at first.

I have already told you, if a Man can but write a Book, that is, very commonly transcribe great part at least, [as the Modern Syphilis has done] Word for Word out of another, and give it a new Name, especially if the People see M. D. at the Bottom, he is reckon'd, by a fort of Consequence, some famous Doctor: But let none of these poor Shifts or Slights deceive you, mark but this Hint I have given you, and you will quickly fee the Drift of fuch Publication, was only to fell off fome Packets of Quack Remedies, and hedge you into his Clutches, where 'tis odds but he will Pinch, if he does not Gripe you to Death.

I have been the longer upon this peculiar Sign, because I find almost all of them have, of late, taken up this Trade of writing Books. Thus one comes out to eatch you with his Venus deceiv'd; a fecond, his Tomb of Venus; a third, his true and succinct Account of the Venereal Difease; a fourth, A short Account of the same [mind here the Bait] publish'd for the Common Good, and with this farther Infinuation Joh monstrous Impudence, mix'd with as great Ignorance] that if you apply to him, be will direct you next time you pick up a W-re, how you may escape being Clapt; a fifth, with his Modern Syphilis [in Oppolition polition to the Honest Syphilis printed just before] who tho' he is fo Modest as not to boaft of his Nostrums, is as much a Plagiary [called otl erwife a Theif] as any of the reft; and who, left you should not fmell out his Design, gives you to underftand that he is Mr. M--'s Partner [fie upon him] in Venereal Practices; a fixth. has had the Confidence to write a Hiftory of Quackery, a London's Medicinal Informer, yet himself as errant an Empiric as ever the Town bred : So that you fee by thefe Wolves appearing in the Cloathing of the Sheep, it behoves you to stand upon your Guard, lest [as I told you before] these pretended Angels of Light, but in reality more nearly [by their base Actions] related to the D-l, should happen to infnare you.

Secondly, should it chance at any Time some printed Piece of Paper or Bill, should be thrust into your Hand, or thrown in at your Shop Window, containing a long Scroll of pretended or real Cures, perform'd by fuch or fuch Medicines, fold at fuch particular Places; or fome Capital Letters at the Top, importing, that at fuch or fuch an Houfe [whether Golden Heads or Balls, or whatever other Signal is hung out, as Lamps and Lanthorns over the Doors] you may have certain, safe 13 and and speedy Cure for the Grand Pox or Clap, with all their Attendants, know for certain this is a Trap laid for you and other credulous People; and as you value your Health, or Comfort of your Lives, despise and contemn their treacherous Invitations, with an avoid Satan, get thee behind me; at least, put the same in your Pockets till you may use it there upon a fitter Occasion.

I have already told you who are their Authors, with their Qualifications, and that as fure as you listen to them, or are drawn in by them, you will repent you had not taken this Advice.

The like Warning I must give you against Advertisements in the News-Papers, or other publick Prints, to put off Medicines of any kind; but I think I need not fay much upon this Subject, becaufe I have already made it appear, that no Remedy, how valuable foever in it felf [much less these Tradesmens Traffick, with fair out-fides, fine Bottles, Pots, and famous Coats of Arms, to prevent what they call Counterfeits, and yet are nothing more themselves] can be so order'd, but that fome particular Circumstance in the Sick of one kind or other, will inevitably render them more hurtful than helpful; or that for one who can receive Benefit, many will be injur'd. This, I fay, will hold true true of the best Medicine, but there are few or none we are now speaking of, that are fit for much better purpose than to load a Dung-Cart, and as fuch to be buried in some Laystall at the Town's end. Nor let [as abovefaid] any of their Tales of wonderful Cures wrought by them, of which very probably you may have a new one in two or three Months, but every Day fome old one, fome too of a twelvemonth, and frequently fix Months standing, drest up as if of yesterday, on purpose to deceive you: Nay, you will find the whole Lift of perhaps their ten or fifteen Years fetting up for Doctors [which fome of them distribute once a Year] does not amount to more than fuch a Number, when, if the Truth could be come at, it would appear they had most grofly cheated many hundreds in half the Time : Let not these, I say, have any weight with you, for were it not that the deluded People are asham'd the World should know how they have been bubbled by these Stories, for one in their behalf, you would fee fifty Advertifing that they had been cheated, or that they had flung away half a Crown, a Crown, ten Shillings, a Guinea [not to mention the many Pounds they had the fame way confounded] to buy more Wit.

I am told there is an honeft and wor. thy Gentleman, a Practitioner [whether for his own private Satisfaction, or for some other Use hereafter intended to be made thereof, is not the Question here] has made it his Bufinefs to get Intelligence of this kind; and fix Months paft, his Lift of these abused by the Scheme Merchants, under colour of curing the Pox, and the Childrens Teeth, amounted to upwards of two hundred; of those imposed on by M---- r in A_c---- L--, to one hundred and odd; those cheated by Dr. W-t the S-r, near one hundred ; fomewhat about the fame Number by the quondam Country Apothecaries Boy in B-C----; and not many lefs by his Footman in the F----t; belides, great Numbers by others pretending to Knowledge in fome parts of Phyfick or Surgery, fuch as Cancer and King's Evil Quacks; Occulifts both ordinary and extraordinary, with the like.

The Method of collecting this Intelligence, has been from Phyficians, Surgeons and Apothecaries, as well in the Town as in the Country, to whofe Care these deluded, and many of them utterly ruin'd Patients, happen'd tobe committed, when they had tried ineffectually these Empirical Remedies, or been abandon'd by some Quack Un.

Undertaker, after the Payment of a good round Sum in hand, which is all thefe People aim at, well knowing they have no title by their Articles to what's behind. Confider now, that it is fcarce poffible any more than one in ten of these Relations, has yet come to Light; fince 'tis little more, I am inform'd, of whom the Queftion has been ask'd to communicate what they know of this Affair ; fo that if this well deferving Perfon goes on, and the Gentlemen of the Profeffions aforefaid will affift him, especially those belonging to our Hofpitals, with what they know concerning the fame, his Account must still vastly increase; and for one Recovery, with which these People can prefent you, this Gentleman, if he pleafes, will furnish you with twenty [upon the indisputable Testimony of Men of the greatest Learning, Judgment and Probity in the Kingdom] who have been no ways better'd, but most of them prejudiced exceedingly by the fame Hand.

So fond indeed of Novelties, of almost any fort, are our English People more especially, that any Pretence to a new Method of Healing, or fome new Remedy [at least an old one with a new Name] is greedily entertain'd by them; of which, great Advantage is made by defigning figning Men, who, when the old Cheat will take no longer, are put upon some new Invention. Thus the Quack M-n in H— G—, when he first set up this Trade, began with Book-writing, at least printing Title Pages thereof instead of Bills, and posting of them up in all parts of the Town : scarce the Trunk of an old Tree in Moorfields but could eccho forth the Praise of his new Discovery to cure the Pox. This being worn threadbare, the famous Atyla comes forth; now, by the way, my Dictionary tells me, this Atyla was a famous Warlike Scythian Prince, who kill'd himfelf with a Debauch, whether by Wine or Women is not mention'd, either of them might bring him to the Gout, and that put him upon Enquiry after a Remedy, which having discover'd, and our Doctor lighting upon his Original Manuscript, where this Prince had enter'd it with his own Hand, very happily tound out the fame.

This Game being play'd a little while, not without the Lofs of fome Lives, as the Town talks, there next appears a Powder to fupply the Rafcally Jefuits Bark [whofe very Name has been enough to frighten many People away from it, and confequently to make them defirous of any thing to iupply its Place] which, however gather'd under under the most fortunate Planet [as it was furmised] would not take at all. I had forgot to tell you, that long before this, we had a Grand Stericton [who this Stericton was I know not, but take him to be a Foreigner, very probably related to King Atyla aforefaid] an Elixir Exonerans; and now, lately, we have a Chymical English Spirit [I wilh it may cure the Itch for Novelties] to overcome the Leprofy, Itch, and all the Tribe of Cutaneous Difeafes; and I dare believe, if he were to drefs up a dry Post, and christen it Pantagogon, or by fome other uncouth Appellation, fetting forth its admirable Virtues, for this or the other Distemper, there would not want fome short-sighted, or unthinking Customers to enquire after it.

Before I país on farther, I think it here expedient to obferve, that a late Quack has taken great Advantage to juftify his Empirical Method of scribling over Books, but especially giving Bills about the Streets, by instancing the like Practice in Dr. Pechey, of the College of Physicians, and Dr. Salmon [as he calls him] likewife in Mr. Needham the Surgeon; he might have also added his Brother Martin, and Mr. Moor among the Apothecaries. For the first of these, I can only fay I am forry that any Man of a liberal Education, should have thus thus difhonour'd his Profession ; I am fure he has been reprehended by the College for fo doing; and if each of the learned Members thereof do number him therefore among Quacks and Empirics, he must blame no body but himfelf; as for Salmon, he never was any other his whole Lifetime; the best that can be faid of him is this, that he was a good Chymist, but like them, Empirical, Immethodical, and entirely unacquainted with Rules of Art; he was neither Surgeon nor Apothecary, nor would either of those Corporations ever admit him a Member of their Societies, much less the Royal College of Physicians, altho' he pretended to be a great Proficient in all three ; he was, indeed, a great Friend to the Paper Manufacture, large quantities of which he wasted in his Collections and Transcripts from other Writers; nor can it be faid truly, that he was ever the real Author of one good Book, tho' he spoiled a great Number by his foolish Translations, Alterations, Additions, Comments, Explanations, or Annotations, together with the extravagant Characters of his Medicines, by which he has made his Readers pay five Shillings instead of one, and taught every one to be as much a Quack as himself, which he call'd their Birth-right, that is, a Right to run

run from their own honeft Mechanic Employments, and fet up, under pretence of Doctors and Surgeons, to play with Peos ples Lives. He might very well have left out Needham, who never was of any Repute among the Surgeons, nor knew as little of the Art they profess ; but having rashly deftroy'd some of his Neighbours at one part of the Town, by throwing them into Salivations, which was his Cure for almost all Difeases, he was forced to fly into another, where he skulk'd [as I have heard] up and down, till having entirely forfeited the little Reputation he ever was Master of, he set up for Quack, giving Bills about Town to cure the Foul Difease : But furely after all this, admitting the Phylicians have had a Pechey; the Surgeons a Needham and a Martin; and the Apothecaries a Moor [take Salmon who pleases] this I fay, certainly, is a very pitiful Plea for this kind of Practice, fince every of these have been justly reprehended and condemned by their feveral Bodies or Societies, and treated alfo [as they have deferved] no otherwife than with Scorn, Ignominy or Contempt. To proceed now : Dyd anath I toyle y a strol

Thirdly, Whoever hangs out a Pifs-pot for his Standard, i. e. the Sign of a Urinal, or pretends, upon fight of your Water, to tell tell your Infirmities, and direct Medicines without feeing the Sick Perfon, or other Scrutiny, by asking the Patient or his Friends, such proper Questions as may let them into fome better Knowledge than is commonly to be had thereby, believe them not, they are Cheats, and intend to pick your Pocket not only of fix Pence or a Shilling for what they call casting your Urine [which they deferve much better should be cast in their Faces] but by drawing you in with fome fearful Story or other of your Danger, to take a Packet with you of their Mundungus, their Stuff, as one of them himfelf very well names it, that may recover you from this imminent Danger they fee [with both their Eyes] very plainly in your Urine, you labour under.

There are many Perfons fo bewitch'd with thefe Fooleries, or drawn in by thefe Water-flingers, conceiving it fo eafy a way of coming at the Knowledge of their Diftempers [fome to know whether they are with Child, without the neceffity of appearing in the Cafe themfelves; others, whether they fball recover of the Sicknefs they labour under, with fuch like]; that one of thefe Fellows, a Weaver I think by Trade, and a French Man, fome where about Spittlefields, falling upon this Method of deceiving the People, under pretence of finding their their Diseases in their Water, has acquir'd [as I am inform'd by fome who know him] fome thousands of Pounds; having now raifed his Price, and altho' fo very illiterate as that he can fcarce Read or Write intelligibly, has fuch Crowds of People flocking to him of all forts to be eafed of their Money, and know their Doom from this infamous and lying Oracle, that his Door, they fay, is feldom free from one or other of these simple People, who taking their Turns, one at a time as they first came; he puts on his Conjuring Cap, lifts up the Urinal, shakes his Head, and begins very gravely his Speech, Dis Person very bad; Yes, indeed Doctor replies the old Woman, fo he is : Hence he gathers it is a Man's Water, and goes on ; Dis be de Man's Water, good Woman, is it not? Yes, Sir, answers the Messenger. Then very demurely looking thereon again, he runs over his common Catalogue us'd at all times, as thus: Here be much Pain in de Head, then looking wishfully in the Woman's Face, to fee if the contradicts him, if she say, not much, Sir, in the Head, then here be great Pain in de Breast : Very much indeed, Sir, replies old Nurse : Me see here be very great Diforder in de Breast, and also in de Stumaach. Yes, truly, Sir, fays she, he has not eat grannes sta the areas ma Bic a Bit of Victuals these ten Days. Then Monsieur goes on ; here be de greatest Pain in de Stumaach and de Bowels, de Liver be decay, de Spleen half rotten; and that, Sir, fays the old Nurfe, is, I suppose, the Reafon makes him cry out of his Back, does it not, Sir? Hold, hold, fays the Doctor, you do no well to interrupt what me going to tell you : Here he looks again, and taking hold of this new Advantage fhe had. given him; Dis Man's Kidney be de worft me seen dis Morning; he be Olcer in de Kidney; great Pain, oh very great Pain, poor Man. Truly, Sir, fays Nurfe, making a low Courtefy at every turn, fo great Pain he cannot fleep Night nor Day : Dis poor Man be likewife fallen away in de Body and all his Limbs; and who can suppose less from a Hint of his great Pain, and want of Nourishment, by way of Recruit, for fo many Days past; in short, the Doctor being also in haste to dispatch the rest of the Fools, waiting to be call'd for, concludes thus; Dis Man be very bad indeed, he will fall into de Consumetion if you no take great Care; but if he take me Stuff; it will by God's Bleffing [this facred Name is ever used to give a Sanction to their Villainy] do him great Good; me purging Elixir and me Gally-pot of Stuff, me Wife can give you; for your Money; for you see dare. be many oders (tay mie comings This

This Harangue finish'd, here is first a Shilling for casting the Water, and four or five if she has so much about her [if not she must haste Home and fetch it; for who would let a poor Man die for want of this good Stuff] to pay for the Medicines.

After this manner has this French Monkey imposed upon ten thousand simple People, and fent them Home also with not fo good as a hit or miss Remedy, yet full Satisfaction of his great Abilities in the Piss-prediction, or casting of Urine, as they word it; because having huddled over [as is his way] all parts of the Body [for the Distemper must be somewhere] and taking fome Advantage of a filly Woman's Ignorance, getting hold of some Hint as above-mention'd, he at length goes over again in a more particular Manner with his Gibberish, and now fixes the Main of the Diforder in those Parts he gather'd from fuch Hints, excufing himself, if he sees occasion, by faying, that notwithstanding the Sick do not immediately take Notice as yet of those Parts [where he happen'd to be out at his random Guess] yet these are beginning to be touch'd with the Difease, and if care be not taken, that is, if he will not take some Stuff, it will soon discover it self by K DOULS by these Complaints also, and endanger his Life.

'Tis not above a Month paft from the fetting down this Relation, fince a notable shrewd Country Man brought up his Son's Urine to this French Man, whofe Fame had occasion'd his Journey of ten Miles: The Country Man being exceedingly referv'd, and expecting the Conjurer could find every thing out in the Pifs; it happen'd that the Doctor going over his Lift of de Head, de Breaft, de Belly, de Stumaach, de Liver, de Spleen, de Kidney, Oc. and finding the Country Man made not one Word reply, but feem'd to fmile ; Pray, Sir, fays the Doctor, How long has your Wife [for he reckon'd of Courfe, the Husband had brought his Wife's Water] been Sick? The Country Man stands mute a little while, and the Doctor looking again upon the Water, cries out [as finding the Country Man would be too many for him] Dis be de strange Vater me ever see: Surely dis be no Christens Vater; Are you fure dis be de Christens Vater? Me no know what to make of dis Vater. Here the Country Man discovering the Doctor's gross Igno-rance, told him it was his Son's Urine; but he perceiv'd him utterly out in all he had faid of his Diftemper. Upon this he pours pours out the Water, and fays, Are you Jure dis be your Son's Vater? Yes, fays the old Man, I fee him make it, and put it up my felf this Morning. Then, fays the Doctor, Me forry for you, your Son got de Grand Pox. Upon this, the Country Man, in great Paffion, was ready to fail upon him, calls him [as he deferved] an ignorant Rascal; and told him, had his Wife been there, she would have pull'd off his Conjuring Cap, if not his Eyes out. Upon a little softening, the Doctor pray'd him not to be fo warm, feem'd to recant, and defir'd him to let him know what uncommon Difease it was that had thus puzzled him ? Hereupon, the honeft Country Man tells him, he believ'd he knew all Difeafes alike by feeing their Urine, that was as much as came to nothing; that the Country People faid his Son was under an ill Tongue, which he now found true, in that he had thus fcandalized a virtuous and fober Youth, with faying he had got the Foul Difeafe. Others faid the Diftemper was Lunacy, and that his Son was in danger of going Mad. Upon which, the Doctor thinking he had now some Hole to creep out at, replies prefently, Me thought it was some very strange Disease; Me cure all Diseases, but me no pretend to de cure of mad Folks; you must go to K 2 de de Mad Doctor. Truly, fays the Country Man, I am furely right then, for 'tis plain if you are not a Mad Doctor, you are either Fool or Knave; and, I think, I was either Mad or Bewitch'd my felf, to take a Journey of ten Miles, to hear a Fellow talk ten times more foolifhly than our Country Apothecary, who will have him under an Ill-Tongue. Thus ended the Parley; the Doctor infifted upon his Shilling [for there was no room for his Stuff] but the Country Man raifing a Stir about the Door, they were glad to get rid of him without. From this famons Urine-Caster, the Water [being put up again in the Bottle] was brought straight to my House; upon fight whereof, I told the Country Man I could tell him nothing to his Purpofe, for it was all Cheat and Roguery in the Pretence: Truly, Sir, fayshe, I am now convinc'd that it is fo; but is there nothing indeed, continues he, to be drawn thence? Yes, I told him there was, but not fufficient to direct a Phyfician of it felf in his prefcribing for the Sick ; however, finding the Country Man more than ordinarily inquisitive after the Certainty of these Matters, I told him all I could infer from the Water he now brought [which appearing exceeding crude and pale, as in some Nervous Ditempers it always is, as allo also in some kinds of Obstructions] was, that it might possibly be his Wife's Water, troubled with Vapours; his Daughters in the Green Sicknes; his own, or his Son's under Hypochondriac Melancholy: Ah, Sir, fays he, there you have hit it; your Chondrack I know nothing of, but the Melancholy is my Son's Case. Upon this he told me all that had pass'd just before with his French Doctor, and seem'd now well pleased that he had taken his Journey, if only for the Satisfaction he had receiv'd in the Affair of Water-Casting.

There have been, perhaps, as many Tricks put upon this Monsieur the Pis-Prophet, as all others about the Town befides. Thus fome for their Diversion, have fent him Cows-pils, others Horlepifs; when the Doctor going over his Catalogue as customary; the Messenger, when he had done, told him, fhe was fent only to know whither the Gentlewoman fhe came from was with Child? and if he could difcover, by his great Skill in Waters, if it was like to be a Son or Daughter? Hereupon he calls for a clean Glass, pours the Water back and forwards feven times, then lets it fettle a Minute; then again putting on his Spe-Atacles, more narrowly examining the fame at the Window, he returns, Tell your K 3 Miftres, Mistres, very gravely fays the Conjurer, she be with Shild, it be so small me over-look it at first, me pretty sure it be de Man Shild [that being generally the most acceptable News to the good Woman] but de Shild be so weak that it no live; she miscarry if she have not me Stuff to prevent it; so paying her Shilling, and promising to come again for the Stuff; she returns and makes the Company laugh heartily who fent her.

Almost infinite are the Blunders this Man commits daily, and when some Gentlemen tell him that they had sent him such and such Tryals of his Skill, as now related, perhaps abuse him too, and call him ignorant Fellow, he is still ready to take all in good part, and seldom retorts otherwise than with a Jest, as, What care me, me win your Money, me let you laugh.

Another of this Tribe, has exercis'd more cunning, and got an Effate alfo by the knavifh way of infpecting the Urinal; by whom, more than all others, the common People have been encourag'd to run about with their Pifs-Bottles, and even to bring them to Phyficians themfelves; not one of which, 'tis certain, could ever this way, give them half the Satisfaction; for at the firft fight, He discovers the Sex, the Age, whether Married or a Virgin, how long they

they have been Sick to half a quarter of an Hour, as well as of what Distemper, together with divers other Circumstances you would think impoffible; infomuch that fome of them have reported him to be a good Man, and has these Matters supernaturally reveal'd to him; others, that he uses Magic, which they call the Black Art, and deals with the Devil, and therefore they are almost afraid of him, flinging down their Money, as I have heard fome have done, and running out of the House, have look'd back to see whether any evil Damon was not purfuing them.

This Urine-Prophet's Cuftom, as I heard it at the fecond hand, from one who had it from his Servant, who had liv'd in the House some time, and tho' fworn to Secrecy, it feems by the Mafter, did, upon a Squabble betwixt them [after quitting the Place] difcover this Piece of Roguish Confederacy, I am to relate.

The Contrivance was this Ta Cheat I find practis'd many Ages past] he had always an old Woman [fometimes two or three, when Business was very flush] whom he named his Decoys, dreft up in the Habit of a Nurfe, with an old Ridinghood and a Bottle of Pifs under it, whofe Bufiness it was from nine to twelve Tthe

Tthe Hours he gave out he would be fpoke with] to attend in the common Waiting Room, and as any fresh Customer came in, she was to sift them, first telling her own Errand, that she had brought a Man's, Woman's, or Child's Urine, who had been Sick fo long, of fuch or fuch an Illness; then enquiring after theirs [if they did not open of their own acccords, tho' ufually this way, the good Women, and tatling Nurses especially, are very communicative, and want little preffing upon them for a Discovery]. The one lets her know the was come about her Daughter; a second, her Husband; a third, her Son; a fourth, her Mistress; a fifth, Mr. such an one's Wife, Husband or Child, each having lain fo long, of this or that Disease; describing presently the several Symptoms. All this while the Doctor being planted on the other fide the Partirion, banister'd a Top, whereby the Sound has easy Admittance, and his Peep-hole conveniently besides so order'd, that he can both hear the Voice, and fee each particular Habit or Drefs, at least enough to know them presently; here he enters the Heads of each Complaint in his Minute Book kept for that Purpofe.

When Matters are thus prepar'd, the Doctor already drefs'd, steals out at his Back

Back-door, comes round, and [as if juft return'd from some of his Patients] knocks at the Fore-door, where the poor Fools through the Glass can plainly fee him. Being let in, he asks, perhaps, which of them was in the greatest haste, or had come foonest? When now the Decoy, to prevent still any Jealousy in the rest, excufes herfelf, as a very poor Woman who had often troubled his Worship, and had Advice sometimes for nothing, she was not in so much haste, but could stay till he was at Leisure. The Reft entering the Parlour on the other fide, one after the other as they were difpatch'd: So foon as one of them comes in, he retires [after viewing her for a Minute] to his Study at the end of the Room; and looking on his Minutes to find the Story belonging to this particular Habit, he returns, takes the Water and steps to the Window, where he recounts fuch particular Circumstances of the Cafe, that the poor filly Creature ftands amaz'd, and cries out, Indeed, Sir, if you had been within him [or her as it happens] you could never more truly have difcover'd the Cafe. Well then, good Woman, fays his Worship, the Disease being found out, the Cure will be easier to be perform'd also; fit you down, and my Servant shall give you fome Remedies prefently.

Here

Here to show yet more Cunning, and farther to spread his Fame, he calls for another, and, as before, stepping back to his Minutes to fee that no Mistake was committed, and to know what Heads of them she belongs to, he just takes the Water into his Hand, and strait returns it : faying, Mistress, what do you bring me this Water for, your Daughter can't recover without much difficulty; She has, I find it at the Top of the Water, a defect from her Birth which can't be remedy'd; she is crooked and bunch'd out in her Breast, has a great Cough and Pain in her Side; she must be purged, for she has not had a Stool these five Days; her Pain is under her left Breast; and it seems by the Water [which he now takes up again] to [boot quite through to her Back. All this while the poor Woman stands as one confounded; at last, when he has defcrib'd all to a tittle, she cries, God bless your Worship, I am sure by what you say, if any Man can cure her it must be your self: Pray good Doctor let me have some of your Medicines, for tho' I am a Working Woman, I shall think nothing too much for my Daughter's good.

I have given you only a Taste of these Peoples villainous Practices to amuse and cheat you; for it were, doubtless, both uneasy to my Reader, as well as tiresome to

to my felf, to repeat more of the fame kind.

Somewhat related to this Gang, was our late Conjuring Fortune-teller as well as Water-Cafter Dr. T-r in M-r-f-s, who had formerly carried a Yoke with Tubs from a Brew-house, and afterward kept a little Tippling House on the Roadfide: A Fellow fo wretchedly Ignorant as not to know his Letters, yet boafted, that by fuch Pranks as thefe, he laid up two hundred Pounds a Year, and fpent twice as much. I shall only relate one pleafant Tale of him, which I have been inform'd, was the Foundation of his fetting up for a Conjurer, a Fortune-teller, a Helper of People to their stolen Goods; Ladies [and fuch I can affure you came frequently incognito in Hackney Coaches] to confult him who were to be their Husbands? and whether the Match in hand already was like to prove prosperous? what Land was best to live in for those who were bent upon leaving their own? the Sick also, whether for Life or Death? with twenty Queftions of this Nature, which none but Fools ask after, and none but forry ignorant Knaves pretend to refolve. The Tale is this :

A young Gentleman [as it fhould feem better flock'd with Money than fomewhat elfe] riding very frequently by this Conjuring jaring Ale-feller's Door, would fometimes stop and call for Drink; being pleas'd with the Fellows way of Talk, and having always at his Horfe Heels, a fporting Dog he much efteemed : Now it happen'd some time after, this Dog was either lost or stoln, when our Fortune-teller in his Rambles out of Town, looking accidentally through the Iron Pallisades, efpies the Dog following a Servant about the Court-yard of a Gentleman's Houfe; upon which, taking no Notice now to any Body whatever : The next time the Mafter rode by, T - r ask'd him if he had heard any News of his Dog? the Gentleman told him he had not, but would willingly give any one two Guineas, that could give him any Notice of him: Master, replies the Knave, I will puzzle my Brains for you till I find him: I have holpen many to their Goods stoln by my Skill in Aftrology; and I will erect a Scheme against you come again, whereby I doubt not but to get Intelligence. The Week following, the young Gentleman very ferioufly comes to T----r to know what he could find by his Scheme; to whom this Arch-Cheat replies, Sir, I am got thus far for certain, that either he is carry'd away and fold to some Gentleman that lives seven Miles East, or Jeven Miles West. Upon 44141819 this this Encouragement, the Spark prefently difmounts his Footman, as the Story is the Peregrination; when to colour the Ro-guery the better, he carries the Gentleman first of all the wrong Circuit, which was the Eastern, looking, as they rode along, one on the Right-fide, the other on the Left, the Master still whistling and calling his dear Dog by his Name; but Quixot and Sancho like, returned difappointed in this first Adventure; the third Day after was appointed for the Western Circuit, when riding as before, and calling at every Gentleman's Door they came at, but without Success; fo foon as they came within a Mile of the Place, Sir, fays the Knave, be not discourag'd, my Life for yours we have the Dog home with us this Night. Then taking out his Scheme, and looking very earnestly, he mumbles over what came next, Saturn in the fixth, in Opposition to Jupiter in the fourth House, Mercury in Irine, but Mars has still the Ascendant : Master, fays he, we are right, your Dog I am sure is not a Mile from this Cross-way; do you ride gently on whistling and calling out for him, whilst I ride down here a quarter of a Mile, to yonder House, and do the same. In short, the poor deluded 'Squire taking each House in his way ; way; at last looking through the Pallifades afore-mention'd, fets up his wonted Call and Whiftle, when immediately at the Sound of the Master's Voice, out comes the Dog from the Houfe to the Rails, ready to fly over them : The Gentleman over-joy'd, knocks boldly at the Door, and demands his Dog, and whilft he was parlying with fome of the Family, the Conjurer, as if knowing no. thing of the Matter, rides up, fwears heartily he knew the Dog to be the Gentleman's; and after fome high Words, he was let at Liberty from his Confinement, giving every one fufficient Evidence, by his frisking, jumping, and running after the Horse he was used to follow, that he was got to his proper Owner. And thus, in great Joy they both ride Home, the Gentleman for having got his Dog, and T—r as well pleafed, not only for that he had out-witted the 'Squire, and fo eafily earned his two Guineas, but that hence forward, among ignorant People, he should be deem'd [as he was indeed ever after to the Day of his Death, when by these Cheats of Fortune-telling, Watercasting, and the like, he left upwards of two thousand Pounds] a very Conjurer.

But leaving these Stories, into which I have been led, as it were, unawares, by the

the Contrivances of one kind or other, of these Knavish People, to impose upon the unwary : It may be ask'd by fome, fince the Practice is fo common, not with Quack's only, but some Physicians also, to have the fame brought to them for Inspection, if I believe no Knowledge more than I have before hinted in the late Story of the Country Man, can be taken from the Sick Perfon's Urine? I anfwer, in fome Cafes, very little; in others, more ; in others, none at all ; and in none, fuch fufficient Intimations as [without farther Enquiry before also remark'd, feeing the Patient, examining his Pulfe, and taking the State of his Cafe in feveral other Interrogatories, from his own Mouth] should induce a prudent Practitioner, to order any Remedy for the fame; for it is apparent, fo very uncertain is this Guide, that oftentimes a Person in perfect Health, unless perhaps some little Cold upon him, as 'tis called, yet Eating, Drinking, and Sleeping well, shall make a turbid or foul Urine; whilft others labouring under some dangerous Sickness, or perhaps nigh the Point of Death, shall make, to all Appearance, one much better; and, truly, in some Malignant Fevers [which, of all others, are the most fatal] the Urine will frequently appear like to that that in the Time of Health; the Difease being here feated rather in the Spirits, than the groffer Humours of the Blood. A high colour'd Urine flews commonly fome great Inflammation therein ; but whether the Complaint be in the Head, the Breast, Belly, or universally all over the Body, is uncertain; and no Man can fay [but by meer Guess] that the Person who made the fame, has an Inflammation on the Membranes, particularly of the Brain, or a Pleurisy, a Cholick, or a Rheumatism. A very pale Water on the other hand, is often made in Fevers also, portending great danger, by the Matter taking to the Head, and threatening Convulsions; yet the fame, or like Water is made, as I have observ'd before, by Hysterical Women, and some obstructed Virgins, also after drinking French, White, and Rhenish Wines; fo that it would be the Height of Rashness, to ground our Judgment solely upon this wavering and uncertain Bottom; or to direct Medicines by a Speculation of Colours, or Confistencies either in the Patient's Urine; which may be fo many ways diversify'd, and have to many little Accidents, unforeseen by the nicest Judgment, concurring to their Production. 'Tis allow'd, that a bloody Water thows commonly the Kidney to be affected, espe-3563 especially if in great quantity, the Bladder seldom furnishing but little; yet it is, not impossible for other Causes, out of the Blood, to fupply the like Appearance; so that without farther Enquiry; it would be rash to fay positively, such a Perfon has therein [I mean his Kidney] either Stone or Gravel. A Water with Corruption, or which Phyficians call purulent, indicates some Ulcer ; a wheyilb, flimy one; and fometimes branny Scales, a Stone therewith; yet even here an Enquiry after the Seat of the Pain, whether in the Loyns or bottom of the Belly, alfo after the way of rendering the Urine, the Course of Life, Diet, and several other Queries; are necessary to give us a farther and more certain Infight. A large Meal-like Settling; gives Notice of an inward Decay or Walting, and confequently threatens a Con-fumption; yet there are fome [and more especially the Female Sex, whose Water is feldom fo well constituted this way as the Man's] who lead an unactive Lifes Feeding and Sleeping much, that fcarce ever make any other, yet seem not to lose their Flesh [at least do not at present] but rather grow still more Corpulent and Unweildy. One also, under a Fit of the Cholick [especially the same going off] fhall make a high-colour'd lixivial Utine; and

and in small quantity too, as does another in the Dropfy. He who has taken Rhubarb, shall be deem'd the fame Day, upon only seeing his Urine, to have the Jaundice; and every body knows, that a common bliftering Plaister apply'd to the Neck, shall give most exquisite Pains in the Bladder, occasioning Strangury, bloody Water, Slime and Skins, like those from an Ulcer or Stone in the faid part. But why do I. spend time upon a Subject, about which none of you are proper Judges, or of which you have scarce any, at least no right Idea's ? The Artist knows all this to be strictly true, and he who tells you otherwise [or that by his particular Knowledge this way, he can find out all your Distempers; the Several Parts affected; whether it be a Man's, Woman's, or Child's Water; whether a Woman be with Child; nay still farther [as you see some have done] whether of a Boy or Girl; with twenty other lying Stories and Fooleries of another kind] intends only to cheat you at belt of your Money, and'tis odds [if trufting farther to his Judgment] he bereave you not of Life.

Fourthly and Lastly, Having spoken so much of other Matters in somewise thereunto related, I hope there will be need now of the less Caution, if any, that you take care you are not drawn in by a Fool or or Merry-Andrew, as he is called by you, upon a Mountebank's Stage, where you are in double danger of having your Pocket pick'd, either by the leffer Knave and much honefter Craftsman below in the Crowd, whilst you are gaping at the Tumbler, or listening to the Fool's Dialogue; or by the Greater above in the Laced Coat or Cloak, who tells you not one Word of Truth in his fulfomely repeated Story of the great Virtues of each particular Medicine in his Budget, which if you rightly understood, you would not [in the common Phrase] give unto the Dog you had any regard to; nor has he truly any other Defign at the Bottom, than by his gawdy Tinfel Appearance, like the stroling Comedians, to amuse your outward Senfes, whilst with his poor dull Rhetorick, he is flourishing you out of your inward, I mean your Intellects, in order to put off a Parcel of most unwholfome Trash, made up into Packets, which tho' in Truth and Reality good for nothing, unless to make you Sick or Lame, and fo confequently more Work for the Phyfician or Surgeon, he would have you believe will cure you all of Sickness or Lameness, and fave you the Charge of both. 'By naming the Comedian, 1 was put in Mind of a Set of those People I have L 2 have heard of, who making no Earnings of their Play, alter'd their Farce, and being drefs'd for the Work, [the Doctor in his fine laced Cloak, another like a Jack-Pudding, others in Liveries, perfonating his Worship's Servants] at another Country Market they had a Stage built up, and fold as many Packets the first Hour or two of their Entrance upon this new Contrivance, as they expected they must have been a whole Day in putting off. These Remedies were only three feveral Powders in one Packet, the first a little Chalk, call'd their White; the fecond, a Brickbat finely fifted, called their Red; and the third, a piece of Charcoal, finely powder'd after the fame manner, call'd the Æthiopian or black Powder, which were all to have their feveral Shares in curing their dear Countrymen [who flood in much more need of worming or cutting out their Eye-Teeth] of all their Diftempers; and after which, the fimple Multitude ran a Madding in fuch manner, that no one reckon'd himself now fafe who had not perhaps half a Dozen Packets in Poffeffion, his Worship giving out, he was going the Week following to attend upon fome great Prince who had fent for him Abroad; fo that now or never was the Time to come into Possession of this invaluable Treasure.

To the fame Purpofe is the Story of our Mad E — of R — r, who [to fhow the Eafinefs of our common People to be taken by thefe Guiles] himfelf in one of his Frolicks, putting on his Velvet Jacket [much ufed in those Days by the Mountebanks] ascends the Stage, and being Master of a smooth Tongue, could in this way have taken what Money he pleas'd, and fold off a common Tincture of Saffron for an Aurum potabile [prepar'd for the Good still of the Publick] at a good round Price,

To this Gang belongs the middle Form of these Physic-Pedlers, those who ride about our Streets on Horfeback, and the lowest, the poor Rogues on Foot, with their Trumpeters to gather the Crowd, to whom they fell a little Pitch and Rofin daubed over a brown Paper for their outward Maladies of all forts, and a Horfe Purge, as I have remark'd before, for all their inward. Upon these, I say [the very Dregs of Mankind] I shall not enlarge, there being tew, I hope, fo weak, to be taken in this Snare, comparatively with the reft; and to conclude, if what I have already deliver'd to them in the foregoing Pages, will not fuffice to forewarn them of the Danger, I shall, however, have this Satisfaction to my felf, that the Con-

Confequence will not reft at my Door, who never pretended to find them better Understandings, only plain Arguments to work on those they have already. Yet farther to take away all Obstacles of this Nature, and to fhow them where they may be fafe in their feveral Diffreffes, and not be imposed on by some empty Show or vain Pretention, I thall here fas I first promis'd] infert an exact List of the feveral Members of the Royal College of Phylicians in London, as I find them upon the last printed Catalogue, by Order of the Worshipful Prefident and the Learned Cenfors, with the feveral Places of their Residence or Habitations, which was perfectly unnecessary as to Apothecaries and Surgeons, the former keeping open Shops in all parts of the Town; the latter, tho' more private, having Signs with their Names, by which they are commonly as well known to all those who stand in need of their Affistance.

POSTSCRIPT.

UPon supervising the foregoing Treatife, I find, through some Occasion or other, in almost every Page, I have been obliged to make use of the Words Quack and Empiric [for I take them promiscuously miscuously the one for the other] so that fome Persons might reasonably have expected, I should first of all have laid down my own particular Definition thereof; to comply with which, altho' the same happen'd to be postpon'd, I have here in my own way, enter'd such Explication.

First then, strictly speaking, I call him a Quark, who having been bred up to a Mechanic Employment, or it may be to none at all, does after, with some Receipt, left to, or given him, or taken out of a Book of Physick, set up for a Doctor or Surgeon, printing of Bills, and pretending therein to the Cure of any one or more Difeases.

Secondly, in a fomewhat larger Senfe I call him a Quack, who altho' possibly he may have liv'd a Year, two, or three, with one or other of the Profession, yet after quits the same, at least lies by, till finding no other way of fublifting, with this pitiful Stock of Knowledge, he amuses some ignorant People whom he preys on; but being fully confcious of his own Infufficiency to pass Muster, declines the qualifying himself according to the Rules of that Body of Men, of which at first he was intended a Member, endeavouring to fcreen himfelf by fome B---'s or A-B-'s Licenfe, from their Re-Thirdly, fentments.

Thirdly, in a yet larger, I count him no better, who having been legally bred up, does after, upon some fraudulent, felfish, or other sinister Prospect, so far dishonour his Profession, as, Quack-like, to fet forth Advertisements for felling of some particular Medicines; nay, in Truth, of all the reft he is the most inexcufable, fince he knows [at leastwife should] that no Remedy this way distributed, without farther Knowledge of the Patient, or Enquiry into his Condition, can be fo order'd, but that in the main, it will do abundantly more Harm than Good; whereas the other, through direct Ignorance of Human Bodies, and the manner of the Operation of Medicines therein, are little or nothing apprised of this Truth.

Fourthly and Lastly, Cosin-German to a Quack is every Man, who being brought up to any fingle Branch of the Profession, whether Physick, properly so denominated, Pharmacy or Chirurgery, intermeddles in all three, to the Prejudice of some of the rest, and to the Scandal in general of the honess Practice of Physick; for altho' in the Beginning or Infancy thereof, it was cultomary for the same Person to preside over the whole as a single Province, yet fince Mankind were so multiplied, and especially in large Cities and Towns, the Work

Work was found too much for one or the fame Practitioner, to drefs Wounds, fet broken Bones, make up Medicines, confult with, and direct for the Sick, and therefore with great Wildom have our Anceftors made a Tripple or Threefold Division thereof; and our Kings and Princes granted unto each their feveral Charters for their better Government, with fuch Privileges and Immunities alfo unto each Society, as they have thought fit or meet; fo that each Tranfgreffor thereof may be now look'd on as a kind of falfe Brother by the reft, and [fetting aside the Skirts of the Town, with all Country Villages, where no better or other Help is at hand, and where each fets up for an Ambi or [if I might coyn a Word] a Tri-dexter] a Trespasser also on the Law of Nature, i. e. doing as he would not willingly be done unto.
