Duncombe, 19 Little Queen-Street, Holborn, 1832—the three items bound together in one vol, sq. 8vo., binders' cloth, 1832 ($26) £6/10/-
- Of these three periodicals, "Punch in London" is the rarest example of early charivari being the predecessor of "Punch," the modern journal, which made its first appearance over nine years later.
- The contrast between this early "Punch" of the time of the Reform Bill and the journal which has amused and delighted the world for the past hundred years is very great. While there are many witty and humorous paragraphs, a good deal of "Punch in London" is bitter and scurrilous. It is certain that few complete and perfect sets exist.
- The compiler of the "Times Handlist of English and Welsh Newspapers, Magazines and Reviews" was not aware that there were more than 17 numbers of "The Cab," or more than 19 numbers of "The True Halfpenny Magazine."
