kan vint and vintling

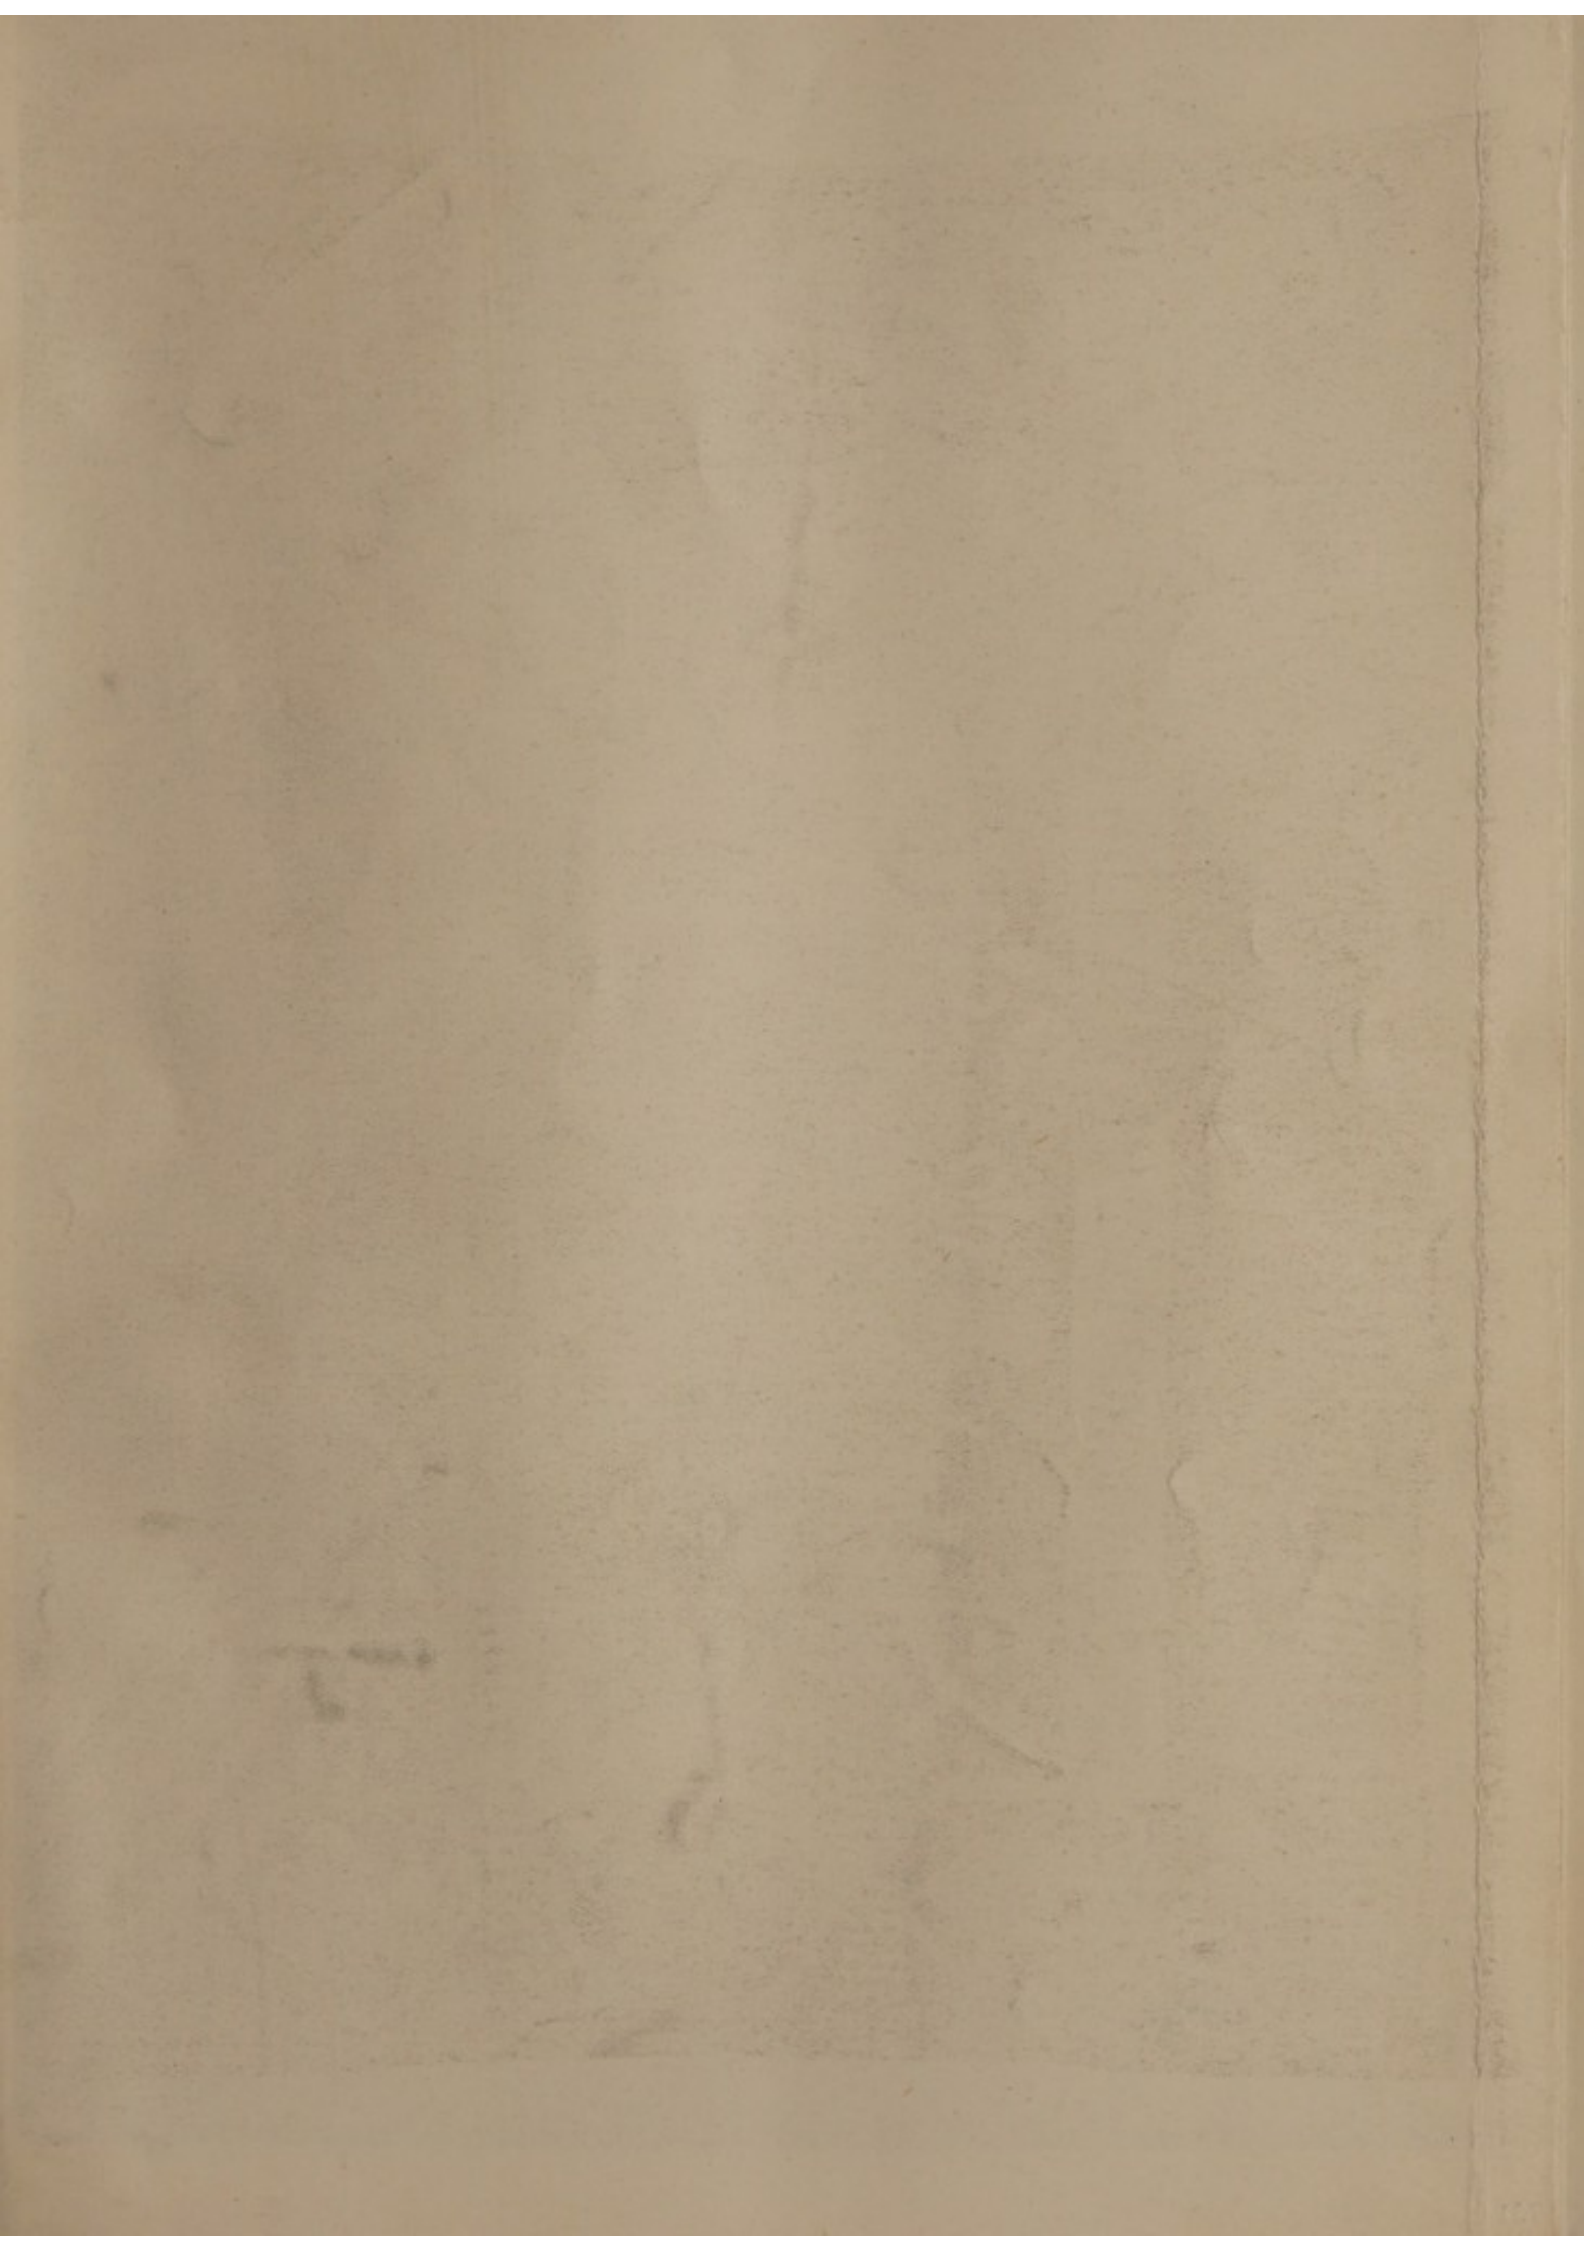

This detail from a medieval manuscript features a figure in a striped tunic and a decorative border with fleur-de-lis and the word 'Sanctus'.

This image shows a close-up of a traditional Japanese textile pattern, possibly a kimono or obi. The design is rendered in a dark, textured fabric with a lighter, possibly gold or silver, thread or dye. The pattern features stylized figures, likely deities or nobles, seated and surrounded by floral motifs, including what appears to be a large, stylized flower on the left and a smaller one on the right. The figures are depicted in a traditional, somewhat abstract manner, with visible facial features and flowing robes. The overall aesthetic is characteristic of Edo-period Japanese art.
