These works are very rarely found in full morocco bindings of the period, as they appeared at a troubled time when purchasers refrained from having them bound expensively. Normally copies are found in boards, or, at the best, in half-bindings; sometimes they were bound later in full morocco. This set is quite unique in that it is in an uniform French morocco binding of the date of publication.

Each work is on the best paper, and the plates in all of them are before all numbers and letters.

Fairfax Murray Catalogue of Early French Books, Vol. I., p. 333.

Printed on paper. The title is in red and black within a border of terminal figures, festoons, etc. On verso of title is the Almanack for 1543-1568, on a2 commences the Calendar, occupying 12 pages.

There are 14 fine large woodcuts, each of which, with its border (all on one block), fills a whole page.

1. St. John writing.
2. The Betrayal.
3. The Annunciation.
4. The Visitation.
5. The Nativity.
6. The Annunciation to the Shepherds.
7. The Adoration of the Magi.

13. David's Penitence.
14. The Raising of Lazarus.

One of the medallions in the border of the last cut contains what appears to be a portrait of François I. The kneeling Magus in the cut of the Adoration may also be intended to represent that monarch. In connection with this, Mrs. Jameson's remark is apposite. "It was not uncommon for pious votaries to have themselves painted in likeness of one of the adoring Kings," see "Legends of the Madonna," 1852, p. 235, where other examples are cited.

There are several styles of borders, some being in simple line with slight shading, others with a design of foliage in black, with white relieving lines, others, black 12mo, contemporary binding with coloured enamelled plaques on both sides and back, that on back being divided into three parts by narrow strips of brocade. The central figure on each side is signed J.L. (for Jacques Laudin, a Limoges artist who lived from 1644 to 1729).

Paris, Chez Pierre Herissant, 1700.

£500

Bindings of Limoges enamel are exceedingly rare, and this specimen is probably unique in the fact that it is signed by the artist. It may be compared with the Sèvres binding reproduced as the frontispiece to Vol. II of L. Gruel: "Manuel Historique et Bibliographique de l'Amateur des Reliures," Paris, 1905, where it is described as the only one of its kind which the author had ever seen. Our binding is superior to the Sèvres specimen in two respects:

- (1) That skilled workmanship has made it unnecessary for the threads to be apparent.
- (2) That its back is also in Limoges enamel, thus producing a homogeneous work of art; the Sèvres binding has only a morocco back.

"Molière brought comedy to nature, and made it a study of human life. His warfare was against all that is unreal and unnatural. He preached the worth of human happiness, good sense, moderation, humorous tolerance. He does not indulge in heroics, and yet there is heroism in his courageous outlook upon things. The disciple of Molière cannot idealise the world into a sense of fairyland; he will conceive man as far from perfect, perhaps as far from perfectible; but the world is our habitation; let us make it a cheerful one with the aid of a sane temper and an energetic will. As a writer, Molière is free from faults; but his defects of style are like the accidents which happen within the bounds of a wide empire. His stature is not diminished when he is placed among the greatest European figures. 'I read some pieces of Molière's every year,' said Goethe, 'just as from time to time I contemplate the engravings after the great Italian masters. For we little men are not able to retain the greatness of such things within ourselves.'"—(Dowden).

On the fly-leaf of the French Bible, bearing the title "La Sainte Bible, Cologne, 1739," are the words in the writing of the Earl of Leitrim "From Napoleon's Private Library at Malmaison."

We know that Napoleon had at Malmaison fifteen volumes under "Division I. Religion" on the 22nd June, 1815. In fact, we find that in the list of Napoleon's Books at Malmaison, which has been commended upon by Mouravitch in his "Napoléon Bibliophile" (p. 98), Napoleon's Bible at Malmaison is specially mentioned.

"On the subject of religion, Bonaparte's ideas were very vague. 'My reason,' said he, 'makes me incredulous respecting many things; but the impressions of my childhood and early youth throw me into uncertainty.' He was very fond of talking of religion. In Italy, in Egypt, and on board the Orient and the Muiron, I have known him to take part in very animated conversations on this subject. He readily yielded up all that was proved against religion as the work of men and time: but he would not hear of materialism. I recollect that, one fine night, when he was on deck with some persons who were arguing in favour of materialism, Bonaparte raised his hand to heaven, and, pointing to the stars, said, 'You may talk as long as you please, gentlemen, but who made all that?' The perpetuity of a name in the memory of man was to him the immortality of the soul. He was perfectly tolerant towards every variety of religious faith."—M. de Bourrienne's "Memoirs of Napoleon Bonaparte." p. 288.

"Fauchet's Recueil de l'origine de la langue et poesie françoise, which he published in 1581, though of no great extent, is a notable contribution to the subject. In the first book he discusses the origin of the French language, and shows himself so far superior to the general philological standard of his age that he recognises its Latin origin, though he still believes in the mixture of a Gallic element. The second and longer book is the more important, for here he gives a summary account with numerous extracts from their writings of a hundred and twenty-seven French poets who lived before the year 1300, a task which implies a very considerable study of manuscripts." (Tilley, Literature of the French Renaissance).

"The Roman Bourgeois of Antoine Furetière is a belated example of the group to which Francion belongs. The great event of its author's life was his exclusion from the Academy, of which he was a member, on the ground that he had appropriated for the advantage of his Dictionary, the results of his fellow-members' researches for the Dictionary, then in progress, of the learned company. His Roman is a remarkable study of certain types of middle-class Parisian life, often animated, exact, effective in its satire." (Dowden).

This work is composed of satires and anecdotes full of singularity and piquancy on the Parisian Manners of the reign of Louis XIV and caused great sensation at the time of its publication terminating in its being suppressed by the Police. In spite of its Privilège du Roi, it brought forth many complaints from those who imagined themselves abused in its text, and especially by the ladies who recognized themselves represented by the characters in the book. Certain people, to whom the book was displeasing, destroyed the copies, so that very few are in existence, and some of those remaining are damaged, especially at the bottom of the title-page where the address of the bookseller has been cut away.

FIRST EDITION. 4to, bound by Trautz-Bauzonnet in full crimson levant morocco, inside dentelles, g.e.

Paris, Chrestien Wechel, 1550.

£75

Printed in the new way which Meigret had suggested in 1542 in his "Traité touchant le commun usage de l'Escriture françoise." One chapter deals with the accents or tones of the syllables, with musical notation. This proposed reform caused a discussion to which two other tracts, in the same volume, bear witness. The first is La Reponse de Louis Meigret a l'Apologie de Jages Pelletier, Paris, Wechel, 1550. Pelletier had approved the idea of Meigret to write according to pronunciation, but this they could not arrange to do, one speaking with a Lyons accent, and the other with the accent of Le Mans.

Glaomalis de Vezelet, transformé en Gyllaome des Aotels. Paris, Wechel, 1551.
Guillaume des Autels defended the traditional spelling, affirming that the new spelling was impracticable owing to its various ways of pronunciation.

The Hypolite de Montcalm copy.

The Second Edition of the First Book published by Montaigne, with the special title and the privilege which was reprinted in 1581 for the copies, when Guillaume Chaudière republished it.

"The next event in his life was the death of his father on June 18th, 1568, by which he became master of a considerable fortune, including the château and estate of Montaigne. His first care was to complete a task which he had undertaken at his father's request, the translation of a Latin work entitled Theologia naturalis, by Raymond de Sebonde, the purport of which was to establish the truth of the Christian religion by nature and reason. The translation was indeed finished at the time of the elder Montaigne's death, but it had not been printed. It was now sent to the press, and it appeared, but without the translator's name." (Tilley, The Literature of the French Renaissance.)
