- 169 A LATE FORM OF "TUCK" OR FOINING SWORD, with largely proportioned hilt, probably an Italian production of the third quarter of the 16th Century.

The hilt of this beautiful sword has been described by the Baron de Cosson as "the finest silver incrustated example known to him." The pommel is oviform, the quillons of great length, with a slight diagonal bend, completed with two counter-rings and a large pas d'ane. Like the swords of the same nature in the Musée d'Artillerie, Nos. J.95 and J.377, and the sword No. 675 in the Wallace Collection, the grip is not the original, it being far too short to serve the purpose for which the sword was intended. The incrustations of silver that constitute the hilt enrichment are formed as Amorini, foliage, tendrils, etc., accurately inlaid in that school of design often found on English-made hilts of a somewhat later date, but which enrichment, in the greater majority of cases, can be traced to an Italian origin. The blade— $37\frac{1}{4}$ in. long and $1\frac{1}{2}$ in. wide at the hilt—is of flattened diamond-shaped section. It presents the peculiarity of having its ricasso incrustated with silver, en suite with the hilt.

From the Kennedy Collection.

See illustration.

- 170 A "TOWN" SWORD OR RAPIER, doubtless Italian, about 1590. The pommel oviform with long straight quillons, knuckle guard, three bars and small shield, it is a familiar type, but as such is an extremely fine example, having rich incrustations of silver in the form of cherubs' heads, etc., inlaid on a field, once gilt. The blade, $39\frac{3}{4}$ in. long, exclusive of the ricasso, is of flattened octagonal section, doubly grooved, also pierced with apertures. It is inscribed: De Alonzo Perez en Toledo (?). As bladesmith's mark a crowned B is stamped on the ricasso, also the letters T.O.
