An Unique Mediæval Medical Manuscript.

Eleventh Century.

PHYSIOLOCUS. DE VIRTUTIBUS ANIMALIUM.

Manuscript on vellum. Ten leaves with 31 drawings in purple, red, green and yellow. Written in Austria about the year 1100. Small folio. Boards (285: 205 mm.)

The "Physiologus" is a most important source for history of medicine and natural science, especially zoology. It was created in the early Christian period, and was used as the only textbook of zoology during one thousand years until the foundation of modern zoology by Conrad Gesner.

Lot

In the XVth century, several editions of a smaller extract from it were printed (Hain Repertorium Bible, No. 15467-15475). The importance of the work may also be seen by the fact, that it had been translated in at least twelve languages up to the XIVth century.

The Physiologus contains the description of the qualities of animals whose number is different in the different editions. From this it derives its importance for the history of medicine, as many qualities of the animals, as described herein, influenced greatly the use of certain animal remedies.

This manuscript consists of ten leaves. The text is preceded by a leaf containing several alphabets, an alphabetum hebraicum, graecum, latinum, scythicum, marcomanum.

On leaf 2, begins the Physiologus. The lines are drawn with a dry pencil, the initials are painted in red, green or yellow; in the upper or lower margins, verses respecting the text written in a smaller ductus. Many of the single chapters are marked with a heading referring to the animal treated, with others these headings are missing. At the end of the manuscript is drawn, perhaps by a later hand, a labyrinth.

The number of the animals treated is 27. The majority of these animals are illustrated by drawings referring to the text; often there are several for one animal, for instance three for the lion, two for the sirens, the eagle, the pelican.

Illustrated are: lion, panther, unicorn, crocodile, sirens, centaur, hyena, wild ass, ape, elephant, antula, sawfish, snake, lizard, stag, ibex, fox, ant, hedgehog, eagle, pelican, night-raven, partridge, ostrich, sandpiper, phoenix and some others.

These illustrations are drawn in coloured line, variegated in purple, red, green and yellow. The delineation is sure and definite.

The contents of this manuscript agrees exactly with two other manuscripts in old high German from the XIIth century in Vienna, and Carinthia. There is no doubt, that these latter are translations of this manuscript.

As to the contents in the series of the more complete Physiologi, this manuscript ranks in the second place, and respecting the age, it follows immediately to the form given to it by the Holy Epiphanius in Greek language, but surpassing this by far by the extent of the description. The form of this manuscript is exactly that of the oldest in Latin language.

The manuscript is in best state of preservation and quite complete.

Florence Nightingale Relics.

Nightingale (Florence)—A Book of Golden Deeds, with full-length vignette engraving of Florence Nightingale on title, 12mo, cloth 1865

Presentation Copy, with inscription:—

“Mary Agnes Matthew from her father’s most sincere and respectful friend full of regard for his admirable memory Florence Nightingale, London 1866”

Autograph Letter (written in pencil), dated Aug. 28th, 1866, 2½ pages, 8vo.

Addressed to Mrs. Matthew and mentions the above book:—

“I have sent your little girl a book which perhaps, as she grows older, she may read with interest, as it is about other people than myself.”

Also refers to various photographs of herself, and the illustration on title page of above book.

Autograph Letter to Dr. Matthew, Army Medical Staff, Valletta, Malta, dated April 23rd, 1863, 6½ pages, 8vo, on mourning paper, with envelope marked “Private.”

“Surely I remember you and all about you and am proud that you should call me your ‘fellow worker.’ The results of your Hospital at the Castle, Balaclava and of your work there will not be easily forgotten . . .”

Continues at length and expresses herself forcibly regarding certain appointments at the Army Medical School. The letter concludes:—

“ . . . I am now quite shut up in my room and have been for the last two years—without any prospect of anything but greater suffering till the end, that I long it may not be far distant.”

Albeit the “Lady with the lamp” carried on her activities for another 47 years!

Authograph Letter to Mrs. Matthew, dated Jan. 11th, 1865, 4 pages, 8vo, on mourning paper. Expresses condolence at the death of Surgeon Major Matthew and continues:—

"But I am entirely a prisoner to my bed often, and especially now, suffering so much that I cannot even have my position altered, so as to have my bed made, for 48 hours at a time and overwhelmed with business. This may excuse my delay in answering yours . . ."

Refers to the Patriotic Fund for the Relief for the Sufferers in the Crimean War. Promises to exert her influence in Mrs. Matthew's interest.

Autograph Letter to Mrs. Matthew, dated July 4th, 1866, 4 pages, 8vo:—

" . . . I received the joyful news that the Patriotic Fund will be able now to give assistance to you for the support and education of your children . . ."
