HERALDRY.

- 395 A Catalogue of all the Nobility made since the Conquest down to the Reign of James the First, with the Effigies of the King drawn in Colours, and a manuscript Account of their Reigns, the Arms of the different Families painted in Water Colours, and written notices of each. This book belonged to Sir Wingfield Bodenham, and was bought at Dr. Stukeley's sale, 1766.

- 396 Twenty-seven Draughts, or the Effigies of the First Knights or Founders of the Order of the Garter; depicted, as appears by a Title in order to be sat up in the Church of Stamford, at the costs of Sir William Bruges (the first Garter King of Arms) who by his will gave several legacies to the Church of St. George in that town, and to the chapels of our Lady and of St. George within the said Church

In this manuscript the succession of the Knights in each stall is continued, which makes it very valuable, and probably there cannot be found any other book of this nature of that age and authority: this Bruges dyed before the 20th of March 1449, when his will was proved, so that the names of Knights elected after that time were added by another hand, as is evident from the difference of the ink, the writing, and drawing of the arms.

These ancient drawings are curiously painted in water colours, whole lengths in the habit of the order, with arms, &c. and the originals from which W. Hollar etched his prints in Ashmole's Order of the Garter, see manuscript account.
