Foreword

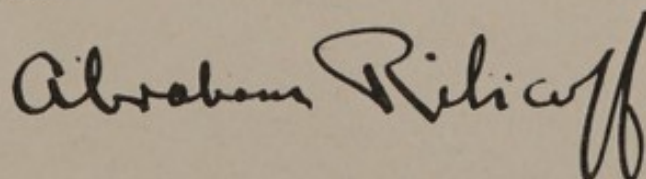

Abraham Lincoln once said, the legitimate object of Government is "to do for the people what needs to be done, but which they cannot, by individual effort, do at all, or do so well, for themselves."

For a long time the Federal Government has been doing things for the people through the device known as "grants-in-aid". Grants-in-aid may be defined as financial assistance in the initiation of a new activity or in the performance of one already established but requiring expansion or reinforcement. Primarily it has been a mechanism to promote the inauguration or the performance of a service on a nationwide scale, normally through the existing State governmental machinery.

Although Federal aid may be traced back to the land grants of 1785, the true grants-in-aid with which we are here concerned may be said to have begun with the first Morrill Act in 1862 relating to the endowment, support, and maintenance of State agricultural (land-grant) colleges.

The annual outlay of the Federal Government for the few existing grant programs at the turn of the century was about $7 million. In contrast, today there are in the areas of health, education, and welfare alone more than 50 programs with total annual expenditures exceeding $2.75 billion. These programs directly or indirectly, affect every man, woman and child in this country.

Increased study, research, and legislative activity in the need, use, administration, and control of the grants-in-aid have resulted in an ever-growing body of literature on the subject. It is hoped that this compilation of selected references will aid the social scientist, the administrator, the legislator, the historian, the teacher, the student, and all who are interested in this field.

Preface

Prepared for the many persons in government agencies, universities, associations, foundations, and other institutions, who are working with or are interested in Federal grants-in-aid in the subject areas related to the programs of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, the present compilation covers a selection of what are considered the most pertinent and important references from 1861 through 1960 and replaces the former modest 1948 edition which was much more limited in scope and covered only a 10-year period.

The contents are divided into the references found in generally available books and periodicals and those pertaining primarily to Federal legislative actions. To facilitate use the general section is arranged by broad subjects, the legislative section chronologically by Congress with a subject index. It is not intended as a complete list of all items published but rather those which are authoritative and which show the historical development. It is further limited to domestic publications, no foreign items being included.

The catalogs of the Department Library, the Library of Congress, the Bureau of the Census Library, and the Bureau of the Budget Library, as well as all standard bibliographical sources in the pertinent subject fields, were examined in the preparation of the references.

Initially compiled in the Department Library by Ruth K. Bray, additions have been made and the whole has been edited by Dorothy M. Jones with the aid of other Department Library staff members. Experts in various fields of activity throughout the Department provided information and counsel.
