This work was shown to it about the year 1824 A.D. by William Balcan, brother of Nicholas, Governor of the East in 1820. In 1824 a manuscript, in Arabic, was the manuscript which he was to copy, but was prevented from doing it because of the high price asked. Some seven years later it had been obtained and placed in the Imperial Library in Vienna. It has since been made accessible to students in all parts of the world by publication in German.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE MANUSCRIPT

The text is largely derived from Bionardi's, but some parts are from the work of the Swiss historian Huettenlocher (18th century A.D.) and others from the less important works of the 19th century A.D.

It is believed that the American artist copied the illustrations from other sources, and that many of the scenes originated with Huettenlocher. Certain of the illustrations show a curious lack of interest in the details that occurred in nature.
