the family, and not only took wonderful care of the large household but also attended personally to the customers of their inn, which was called the 'Krug zum Rautenkranz'. ('The Tavern of the Wreath of Rue'). She was highly esteemed by all the guests staying in the house on account of her cheerful manner and sterling character. Always kindly towards the employees, she could also, if necessary, maintain her authority with sternness and energy.

The boy Paul obviously inherited many of his characteristics from his parents and his grandfather. He resembled the latter
